

A BOOK OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

~~SELECTED AND EDITED~~

BY

FRANKLYN BLISS SNYDER, PH.D.

PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH IN NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

AND

ROBERT GRANT MARTIN, PH.D.

ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH IN NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

~~New York~~

~~THE~~ MACMILLAN COMPANY

1924

COPYRIGHT, 1916 and 1924,
By THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

Set up and electrotyped. Published February, 1916.
Revised and enlarged edition, published April, 1924.

PREFACE

IN preparing this volume the editors have given to the most important men a representation more adequate than has been accorded them in other works of the kind, and so comprehensive, that whoever uses the book will find a considerable range of possible selection. In addition, the editors have included enough work by men of secondary importance to fill the gaps between the larger figures, and to make this text adequate for any survey of English literature, from "Beowulf" to Galsworthy, save in the fields of drama and fiction. Fiction was omitted for obvious reasons; the drama would have been excluded entirely had it not been for the fact that many teachers welcome the inclusion of a specimen miracle play. The biographical appendix will be of assistance, particularly to those who care to use the volume without an accompanying history.

In certain respects the texts here presented have been standardized. Punctuation has been modernized; the spelling in -or instead of -our, for such words as labor, honor, has been adopted; except in a few obvious instances the full form of the weak past participle in -ed has been used throughout the volume.

The debt of the editors to such standard works as, say, Skeat's Chaucer, will be recognized by all who use the book. In addition to many such general obligations the editors gladly recognize certain more definite ones, especially to the holders of copyrights who have made it possible to include much that must otherwise have been omitted. In this connection the thanks of the editors are due to:

Professor R. E. Neil Dodge, and Houghton Mifflin Company, for selections from the Cambridge text of Spenser.

President W. A. Neilson and Professor K. G. T. Webster, and Houghton Mifflin Company, for parts of Professor Webster's translation of "Gawain and the Green Knight."

The late Professor F. B. Gummere, for his translations of "Beowulf" and "Deor's Lament."

Cambridge University Press, and W. R. Sorley, Esq., for "All the Hills and Vales Along," by C. H. Sorley.

Dodd, Mead & Co., for "Wordsworth's Grave," by Sir William Watson; "Lepanto," and "Pope and the Art of Satire" (from Varied Types), by G. K. Chesterton; "Day that I have Loved," "The Great Lover," "The Dead," and "The Soldier," by Rupert Brooke.

George H. Doran Company, for selections from Arnold Bennett's Literary Taste.

Doubleday, Page and Co., for "Rulers of East and West," by Joseph Conrad.

E. P. Dutton and Co., for "The Spires of Oxford," by Winifred Letts; "A Clergyman," by Max Beerbohm; "To Victory," "The Kiss," and "A Working Party," by Siegfried Sassoon.

The Fortnightly Review, for "The First Battle of Ypres," by Margaret L. Woods.

The Harrovian, for "A Harrow Grave in Flanders," by The Marquess of Crewe.

Alfred A. Knopf, for "It's a Queer Time," by Robert Graves.

The Macmillan Company, for all selections from Hardy, Morley, Yeats, "A. E.," Masfield, Gibson, and Wells.

The Oxford University Press, for "I Love all Beauteous Things," and "Winter Nightfall," by Robert Bridges.

The Proprietors of Punch, for "Guns of Verdun," by Patrick R. Chalmers.

G. P. Putnam's Sons, for "In Flanders Fields," by Lt. Col. John McRae.

Charles Scribner's Sons, for "American and Briton" (from Addresses in America), by John Galsworthy.

Sidgwick & Jackson, Ltd., for "The Volunteer," by Herbert Asquith, and "Form Fours," by Frank Sidgwick.

Frederick A. Stokes Company, for "The Day's March," and "The Assault," by Robert Nichols; "Forty Singing Seamen," "The Highwayman," and "Victory," by Alfred Noyes.

The Times (London), for "Into Battle," by Julian Grenfell, and "The Old Way," by Ronald A. Hopwood.

President William A. Neilson and Professor Ashley H. Thorndike, for the literary map of England, prepared for their A History of English Literature (The Macmillan Company).

Finally, the editors are under a heavy debt of gratitude to those contemporary men of letters who have expressed a cordial willingness for their work to be represented in this volume.

F. B. S.

R. G. M.

CONTENTS

THE EARLIEST PERIOD

See page xxii of Table of Contents, under Appendix, for selections from Old and Middle English Prose and Verse.

THE END OF THE MIDDLE AGES

GEOFFREY CHAUCER	PAGE
The Prologue	I
The Nun's Priest's Tale	II
The Pardoner's Tale	19
Balade de Bon Conseyl	25
Chaucer's Complaint to His Purse	25
ANONYMOUS
Piers the Plowman	26
ANONYMOUS
The Chester Miracle Play of Noah's Flood	27
ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH POPULAR BALLADS
Edward	32
Kemp Owyne	33
Sir Patrick Spens	34
The Wife of Usher's Well	34
Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne	35
Robin Hood's Death and Burial	38
The Hunting of the Cheviot	39
Bonnie George Campbell	43
THOMAS MALORY
Le Morte Darthur: Caxton's Preface	44
Book XXI	45

THE ELIZABETHAN AGE

EDMUND SPENSER
The Faerie Queene: Letter to Raleigh	49
Book I, Canto i	51
Canto iii	56
Canto xi	57
Prothalamion	66
ELIZABETHAN SONNETEERS
SIR THOMAS WYATT
The Lover Compareth His State	69
HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY
Description of Spring	69
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
Astrophel and Stella: Nos. 1, 31, 39, 41	69
EDMUND SPENSER
Amoretti: Nos. 24, 34, 63, 70, 75, 79	71
SAMUEL DANIEL
Care-Charmer Sleep	72
MICHAEL DRAYTON
Since There's no Help	72
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
Sonnets: Nos. 18, 29, 30, 33, 64, 65, 66, 71, 73, 98, 106, 116, 146	72

ELIZABETHAN SONG WRITERS

	PAGE
ANONYMOUS
Back and Side, Go Bare, Go Bare	75
SIR EDWARD DYER
My Mind to Me a Kingdom Is	76
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
Love Is Dead	76
JOHN LYLY
Cupid and Campaspe	77
Spring's Welcome	77
GEORGE PEELE
Cupid's Curse	77
ROBERT GREENE
Sweet Are the Thoughts	77
Sephestia's Song to Her Child	78
THOMAS LODGE
Rosalind's Madrigal	78
CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE
The Passionate Shepherd to His Love	78
THOMAS NASH
Litany in Time of Plague	79
SIR WALTER RALEIGH
His Pilgrimage	79
The Conclusion	80
ROBERT SOUTHWELL
The Burning Babe	80
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
Songs from Plays
When Icicles Hang by the Wall.	80
Who Is Silvia?	81
Over Hill, Over Dale	81
Tell Me Where Is Fancy Bred	81
Under the Greenwood Tree	81
Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind	81
It Was a Lover and His Lass	82
O Mistress Mine, Where Are You Roaming?	82
Take, O Take Those Lips Away	82
Come, Thou Monarch of the Vine	82
Hark, Hark! the Lark	82
Fear no More the Heat o' the Sun	82
Come unto These Yellow Sands	82
Full Fathom Five Thy Father Lies	83
Where the Bee Sucks	83
ANONYMOUS
Hey Nonny No!	83
EDMUND CAMPION
Of Corinna's Singing	83
When Thou Must Home	83
Come, Cheerful Day	83
Now Winter Nights Enlarge	84
Cherry-Ripe	84
Chance and Change	84

	PAGE
Lullaby	85
MICHAEL DRAYTON
Agincourt	85
BEN JONSON
Hymn to Diana	86
Song to Celia	86
The Triumph of Charis	87
To the Memory of Shakespeare	87
A Pindaric Ode	88
An Epitaph on Salathiel Pavy	88
JOHN DONNE
Go and Catch a Falling Star	88
Love's Deity	89
Sweetest Love, I Do not Go	89
Death, Be not Proud	90
FRANCIS BEAUMONT
Even Such Is Man	90
On the Tombs in Westminster Abbey	90
JOHN FLETCHER
Sweetest Melancholy	90
Care-Charming Sleep	91
Song to Bacchus	91
JOHN WEBSTER
A Dirge	91
Hark, Now Everything Is Still	91
WILLIAM BROWNE
On the Countess Dowager of Pembroke	91
ELIZABETHAN PROSE
SIR THOMAS NORTH
The Death of Cæsar	91
JOHN LYLY
Queen Elizabeth	97
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
The Defence of Poesy	100
SIR WALTER RALEIGH
The Last Fight of the Revenge	103
FRANCIS BACON
Essays: Of Truth	107
Of Adversity	108
Of Marriage and Single Life	109
Of Great Place	109
Of Wisdom for a Man's Self	111
Of Youth and Age	112
Of Gardens	112
Of Studies	114

PURITANS AND CAVALIERS

CAROLINE SONG WRITERS

GEORGE WITHER

Shall I, Wasting in Despair	115
---------------------------------------	-----

THOMAS CAREW	PAGE
Ask Me no More Where Jove Bestows	115
He That Loves a Rosy Cheek	115
SIR JOHN SUCKLING
Constancy	116
Why so Pale and Wan, Fond Lover?	116
RICHARD LOVELACE
To Lucasta, on Going to the Wars	116
To Althea, from Prison	116
JAMES SHIRLEY
A Dirge	117
ROBERT HERRICK
The Argument of His Book	117
Upon the Loss of His Mistresses	117
Corinna's Going A-Maying	117
To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time	118
How Roses Came Red	118
To Daffodils	119
Night Piece, to Julia	119
Upon Julia's Clothes	119
An Ode for Ben Jonson	119
Grace for a Child	119
To Keep a True Lent	119
GEORGE HERBERT
Virtue	120
The Collar	120
The Quip	120
The Pulley	121
RICHARD CRASHAW
In the Holy Nativity of Our Lord God	121
HENRY VAUGHAN
The Retreat	123
Peace	123
The World	123
EDMUND WALLER
On a Girdle	124
Go, Lovely Rose!	124
ANDREW MARVELL
An Horatian Ode	124
ABRAHAM COWLEY
The Change	126
The Wish	126
The Swallow	127
The Thief	127
CHARLES SACKVILLE, EARL OF DORSET
Song: To All You Ladies now at Land	127

JEREMY TAYLOR	PAGE
Holy Dying	142
JOHN MILTON
L'Allegro	145
Il Penseroso	147
Lycidas	148
On His Having Arrived at the Age of Twenty-Three	151
On Shakespeare	152
To the Lord General Cromwell	152
On His Blindness	152
On the Late Massacre in Piedmont	152
To Cyriack Skinner	153
On His Deceased Wife	153
Paradise Lost: Book I	153
Book II	165
Book XII	180
Areopagitica	181
SAMUEL PEPYS
The Diary	187
LOYALIST STALL BALLADS
To Make Charles a Great King	191
The Humble Petition of the House of Commons	192
The Character of a Roundhead	192
Come, Drawer, Some Wine	192
The Protecting Brewer	193
The Lawyers' Lamentation	193

THE AGE OF CLASSICISM

JOHN DRYDEN
Absalom and Achitophel	195
Mac Flecknoe	204
The Hind and the Panther	207
A Song for St. Cecilia's Day	208
Alexander's Feast	209
Lines Under the Portrait of Milton	211
An Essay of Dramatic Poesy	211
Preface to the Fables	213
DANIEL DEFOE
The True-Born Englishman	214
The Shortest Way with the Dissenters	216
The Apparition of Mrs. Veal	221
JONATHAN SWIFT
A Tale of a Tub	226
A Modest Proposal	231
The Journal to Stella	236
JOSEPH ADDISON
The Campaign	239
The Spacious Firmament on High	240
JOSEPH ADDISON and RICHARD STEELE
The Tatler
Prospectus	240
Duelling	241
Ned Softly	242

	PAGE
Frozen Words	244
The Spectator
Mr. Spectator	246
The Club	248
Westminster Abbey	251
Sir Roger at Church	253
Sir Roger at the Assizes	254
The Vision of Mirza	256
A Coquette's Heart	258
ALEXANDER POPE
Windsor Forest	260
An Essay on Criticism	262
The Rape of the Lock	264
An Essay on Man	276
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot	278
The Universal Prayer	279
OLIVER GOLDSMITH
The Deserted Village	279
The Retaliation	286
The Citizen of the World
Beau Tibbs at Home	287
A Visit to a Silk-Merchant	289
SAMUEL JOHNSON
The Rambler, No. 121	290
Letter to the Earl of Chesterfield	293
Letter to James Macpherson	294
Lives of the English Poets
Milton	294
Dryden	297
Addison	298
Pope	299
Gray	300
JAMES BOSWELL
The Life of Samuel Johnson: The Year 1763	301
EDMUND BURKE
Address to the Electors of Bristol	322
The Impeachment of Warren Hastings	326
Reflections on the Revolution in France	329
THE PRECURSORS OF ROMANTICISM
ALLAN RAMSAY
Peggy	332
The Lass with a Lump of Land	332
JAMES THOMSON
The Seasons	333
The Castle of Indolence	335
Rule, Britannia	336
EDWARD YOUNG
Night Thoughts	336

	PAGE
How Sleep the Brave	339
Ode to Evening	339
The Passions	340
THOMAS GRAY
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College	342
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard	343
The Progress of Poesy	345
The Bard	347
The Fatal Sisters	349
Sketch of His Own Character	350
Letters	350
JAMES MACPHERSON
Cath-Loda	352
The Songs of Selma	353
Carthon	353
ROBERT FERGUSSON
The Daft Days	353
THOMAS CHATTERTON
Bristowe Tragedie	354
Song from Ælla	359
WILLIAM COWPER
Walking with God	360
The Loss of the Royal George	360
The Task	361
On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture	362
Sonnet to Mrs. Unwin	364
To Mary	364
The Castaway	365
ROBERT BURNS
Lines to John Lapraik	366
The Holy Fair	366
To a Mouse	369
To a Daisy	369
The Cotter's Saturday Night	370
Address to the Unco Guid	373
Tam O'Shanter	374
Scots Wha Hae	377
Songs
Mary Morison	377
Green Grow the Rashes	377
Auld Lang Syne	378
Of A' the Airts	378
Tam Glen	378
My Heart's in the Highlands	379
Gō Fetch to Me a Pint of Wine	379
John Anderson	379
Willie Brewed a Peck o' Maut	379
Sweet Afton	380
Bonnie Doon	380
Ae Fond Kiss	380
Highland Mary	381
Duncan Gray	381
See, the Smoking Bowl before Us	382

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Contented wi' Little	382
A Man's a Man for A' That	382
O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast	383
WILLIAM BLAKE
Songs of Innocence
Introduction	385
The Lamb	383
Cradle Song	384
The Little Black Boy	384
Songs of Experience
The Clod and the Pebble	384
The Sick Rose	385
The Tiger	385
The Sunflower	385
Auguries of Innocence	385
Milton	385
GEORGE CRABBE
The Village	385
The Borough	387
WILLIAM LISLE BOWLES
Time	387
Hope	388
To the River Tweed	388
Bamborough Castle	388
Written at Tynemouth after a Tempestuous Voyage	388

THE AGE OF ROMANTICISM

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Preface to the Lyrical Ballads	389
Lines Written in Early Spring	392
Expostulation and Reply	392
The Tables Turned	392
Tintern Abbey	393
Lucy Gray	395
She Dwelt among the Untrodden Ways	396
Three Years She Grew	396
A Slumber Did My Spirit Seal	396
The Prelude	396
Michael	399
My Heart Leaps Up	406
Resolution and Independence	406
Yew Trees	408
At the Grave of Burns	409
The Solitary Reaper	409
To the Cuckoo	410
She Was a Phantom of Delight	410
I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud	411
Ode to Duty	411
Character of the Happy Warrior	411
Ode: Intimations of Immortality	413
To a Sky-Lark	415

XV

	PAGE
On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic	415
London, 1802	416
Westminster Bridge	416
On the Sea-Shore near Calais	416
The World Is too Much with Us	416
To Toussaint L'Ouverture	417
SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
France: An Ode	417
Kubla Khan	419
The Rime of the Ancient Mariner	419
Frost at Midnight	430
Hymn before Sunrise in the Vale of Chamouni	431
Dejection: An Ode	433
Youth and Age	435
Work without Hope	436
Biographia Literaria	436
ROBERT SOUTHEY
The Inchcape Rock	440
My Days among the Dead Are Passed	441
SIR WALTER SCOTT
Lochinvar	441
Soldier, Rest!	442
Boat Song	442
Coronach	443
Harp of the North	443
Jock of Hazeldean	444
Brignall Banks	444
County Guy	445
Bonny Dundee	445
GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
When We Two Parted	446
Know Ye the Land	446
She Walks in Beauty	447
The Destruction of Sennacherib	447
Stanzas for Music	447
So We'll Go no More A-Roving	448
My Boat Is on the Shore	448
Sonnet on Chillon	448
The Prisoner of Chillon	448
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage: Canto III	452
Canto IV	456
Don Juan: Dedication	460
Canto III	460
Canto IV	463
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
Hymn to Intellectual Beauty	471
Ozymandias	472
Ode to the West Wind	472
The Indian Serenade	474
The Cloud	474
To a Skylark	475
To ——— (Music, When Soft Voices Die)	476
Stanzas Written in Dejection	476

	PAGE
The World's Wanderers	477
Time	477
To Night	477
To — (One Word Is Too Often Profaned)	478
Lyrics from Prometheus Unbound	478
Adonais	479
Final Chorus from Hellas	488
When the Lamp Is Shattered	488
With a Guitar, to Jane	489
JOHN KEATS
Sleep and Poetry	490
Endymion	490
La Belle Dame sans Merci	491
Ode to a Nightingale	492
Ode on a Grecian Urn	493
Ode on Melancholy	494
To Autumn	494
Lines on the Mermaid Tavern	495
Robin Hood	495
The Eve of St. Agnes	496
Hyperion: Book I	502
On First Looking into Chapman's Homer	507
When I Have Fears	507
Bright Star	508
THOMAS CAMPBELL
Ye Mariners of England	508
THOMAS MOORE
The Time I've Lost in Wooing	508
Oft in the Stilly Night	509
The Harp That Once through Tara's Halls	509
Oh, Breathe not His Name	509
CHARLES WOLFE
The Burial of Sir John Moore	509
THOMAS HOOD
The Bridge of Sighs	510
The Song of the Shirt	511
CHARLES LAMB
Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago	512
Dream Children	519
The Praise of Chimney-Sweepers	521
A Dissertation upon Roast Pig	525
The Superannuated Man	529
WILLIAM HAZLITT
The Fight	533
On Going a Journey	542
On Familiar Style	548
THOMAS DE QUINCEY
Confessions of an Opium-Eater	551
On the Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth	559
Levana and Our Ladies of Sorrow	561

THE VICTORIAN AGE

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR	PAGE
Rose Aylmer	566
The Death of Artemidora	566
Sappho to Hesperus	566
One Year Ago	566
To Robert Browning	566
On the Hellenics	567
Iphigeneia and Agamemnon	567
To Youth	568
To Age	568
On His Seventy-Fifth Birthday	568
To My Ninth Decade	568
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON
The Lady of Shalott	568
Enone	570
The Lotos-Eaters	574
A Dream of Fair Women	575
You Ask Me Why	579
Morte D'Arthur	579
Ulysses	583
Locksley Hall	584
Break, Break, Break	589
Songs from the Princess: Bugle Song	589
Tears, Idle Tears	589
Home They Brought Her Warrior Dead	590
In Memoriam	590
The Eagle	592
Maud	592
The Charge of the Light Brigade	594
The Northern Farmer—Old Style	594
The Higher Pantheism	596
Flower in the Crannied Wall	596
The Revenge	597
Rizpah	599
By an Evolutionist	601
Merlin and the Gleam	601
Crossing the Bar	603
ROBERT BROWNING
Song from Pippa Passes	603
Cavalier Tunes	603
The Lost Leader	604
How They Brought the Good News	605
Meeting at Night	606
Parting at Morning	606
Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister	606
Home-Thoughts, from Abroad	607
Home-Thoughts, from the Sea	607
Saul	607
Love among the Ruins	614
Memorabilia	615
My Last Duchess	615

	PAGE
In a Gondola	616
A Grammarian's Funeral	619
The Bishop Orders His Tomb	621
Andrea Del Sarto	623
Prospice	627
Abt Vogler	627
Rabbi Ben Ezra	629
Epilogue to Asolando	632
ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING
Sonnets from the Portuguese	632
The Cry of the Children	633
A Musical Instrument	636
EDWARD FITZGERALD
Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám	636
THOMAS CARLYLE
Sartor Resartus	644
Past and Present	648
Cromwell's Letters and Speeches	655
JOHN RUSKIN
✓Modern Painters: Sunrise and Sunset in the Alps	657
The Two Boyhoods	658
The Stones of Venice: St. Mark's	664
Time and Tide: Letter xv	669
✓The Relation of Art to Morals	671
THOMAS BABINGTON, LORD MACAULAY
Oliver Goldsmith	675
ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
Qua Cursum Ventus	683
Where Lies the Land	684
All Is Well	684
Life Is Struggle	684
Ite Domum Saturæ	684
Say not the Struggle Nought Availeth	685
MATTHEW ARNOLD
Shakespeare	685
The Forsaken Merman	686
Philomela	687
Requiescat	688
The Scholar-Gipsy	688
Sohrab and Rustum	692
The Austerity of Poetry	706
Rugby Chapel	706
Doyer Beach	709
The Last Word	709
✓Literature and Science	709
THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY
On the Advisableness of Improving Natural Knowledge	720
FRY HENRY, CARDINAL NEWMAN
✓The Idea of a University	728
Apologia pro Vita Sua	739

	PAGE
The House of Life: The Sonnet	745
Lovesight	745
Silent Noon	745
A Superscription	745
WILLIAM MORRIS
The Earthly Paradise: An Apology	746
Prologue	746
Atalanta's Race	747
The Haystack in the Floods	758
WALTER HORATIO PATER
Style	760
Wordsworth	772
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
Æs Triplex	780
ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
The Garden of Proserpine	784
Atalanta in Calydon: Choruses	785
A Match	787
To Walt Whitman in America	787
After Sunset	789
On the Deaths of Thomas Carlyle and George Eliot	789
Christopher Marlowe	789
Ben Jonson	790
GEORGE MEREDITH
Love in the Valley	790
Juggling Jerry	794
Lucifer in Starlight	795
THOMAS HARDY
She, to Him	796
Nature's Questioning	796
God-forgotten	796
The Church-builder	797
For Life I Had Néver Cared Greatly	798
Men Who March Away	798
Afterwards	799
FRANCIS THOMPSON
The Hound of Heaven	799
SIR WILLIAM WATSON
Wordsworth's Grave	802
WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY
Before	802
Apparition	802
O, Gather Me the Rose	803
Invictus	803
To A. D.	803
I. M.: Margaritæ Sorori	803
ROBERT BRIDGES
I Love All Beauteous Things	804
Winter Nightfall	804
JOHN MORLEY, VISCOUNT BLACKBURN
Wordsworth	804
Byron	809

RECENT AND CONTEMPORARY POETRY

	PAGE
RUDYARD KIPLING
The Ballad of East and West	812
Danny Deever	814
Fuzzy-Wuzzzy	814
Gunga Din	815
Mandalay	816
The Galley-Slave	817
Recessional	818
ALFRED EDWARD HOUSMAN
Loveliest of Trees	818
Reveille	819
To an Athlete Dying Young	819
Bredon Hill	819
White in the Moon	820
Far in a Western Brookland	820
With Rue My Heart Is Laden	820
WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS
The Stolen Child	820
The Fiddler of Dooney	821
The Lake Isle of Innisfree	821
The Song of the Old Mother	821
Song from The Land of Heart's Desire	822
Into the Twilight	822
Red Hanrahan's Song about Ireland	822
"A. E." (GEORGE WILLIAM RUSSELL)
The Hermit	822
Dawn	823
The Earth Breath	823
Natural Magic	823
Carrowmore	824
Gods of War	824
When	825
GILBERT KEITH CHESTERTON
Lepanto	825
JOHN MASEFIELD
A Consecration	827
Cargoes	828
The West Wind	828
Roadways	829
Ignorance	829
Beauty	829
The Wild Duck	829
Sea-Fever	830
On Growing Old	830
WILFRID WILSON GIBSON
The Shop	831
The Snow	834
Before Action	837
The Question	837
The Fear	837
Comrades	837

	PAGE
The Quiet	838
Oblivion	838
ALFRED NOYES
Forty Singing Seamen	838
The Highwayman	840
Victory	842
RUPERT BROOKE
Day That I Have Loved	842
The Great Lover	843
The Dead	844
The Soldier	844
POEMS OF THE GREAT WAR
HERBERT ASQUITH
The Volunteer	845
PATRICK R. CHALMERS
Guns of Verdun	845
ROBERT GRAVES
It's a Queer Time	845
JULIAN GRENFELL
Into Battle	846
WINIFRED LETTS
The Spires of Oxford	847
JOHN MCRAE
In Flanders Fields	847
ROBERT NICHOLS
The Day's March	847
The Assault	848
SIEGFRIED SASSOON
To Victory	849
The Kiss	849
A Working Party	849
CHARLES HAMILTON SORLEY
All the Hills and Vales Along	850
RONALD A. HOPWOOD
The Old Way	851
MARGARET L. WOODS
The First Battle of Ypres	852
THE MARQUESS OF CREWE
A Harrow Grave in Flanders	854
FRANK SIDGWICK
Form Fours	854

RECENT AND CONTEMPORARY PROSE

GILBERT KEITH CHESTERTON
Pope and the Art of Satire	856
ARNOLD BENNETT
From Literary Taste	859
JOSEPH CONRAD
Rulers of East and West	863
HERBERT GEORGE WELLS
From The Outline of History	872

MAX BEERBOHM	PAGE
A Clergyman	877
JOHN GALSWORTHY
American and Briton	880

APPENDIX

THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN, I. 1-14	891
ANGLO SAXON PROSE AND VERSE
Beowulf	892
Deor's Lament	908
Bede's Ecclesiastical History	908
EARLY MIDDLE ENGLISH PROSE AND VERSE
The Peterborough Chronicle	910
Layamon's Brut	911
The English Proclamation of Henry III	912
Lyrics
Sumer is Icumen in	913
Of on that is so Fayr and Bright	913
Alysoun	913
A Song of Lawrence Minot	914
Sir Gawain and the Green Knight	914
BIOGRAPHICAL APPENDIX	923
NOTES	959
INDEX OF AUTHORS	1013
INDEX OF TITLES	1015

A BOOK OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

A BOOK OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

THE END OF THE MIDDLE AGES

GEOFFREY CHAUCER (1340-1400)

THE PROLOGUE

Whan that Aprille with his shoures sote
The droghte of Marche hath perced to the rote,

And bathed every veyne in swich licour,
Of which vertu engendred is the flour;
Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth 5
Inspired hath in every holt¹ and heeth
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the Ram his halfe cours y-ronne,
And smale fowles maken melodye,
That slepen al the night with open yē, 10
(So priketh hem nature in hir corages²):
Than longen folk to goon on pilgrimages (And palmers for to seken straunge strondes)

To ferne³ halwes,⁴ couthe⁵ in sondry lon-des;

And specially, from every shires ende 15
Of Engelond, to Caunterbury they wende,
The holy blisful martir for to seke,
That hem hath holpen, whan that they were seke.

Bifel that, in that seson on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay 20
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Caunterbury with ful devout corage,
At night was come in-to that hostelrye
Wel nyne and twenty in a companye,
Of sondry folk, by aventure⁶ y-falle⁷ 25
In felawshipe, and pilgrims were they alle,

That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde;
The chambres and the stables weren wyde,
And wel we weren esed atte beste.⁸
And shortly, whan the sonne was to reste,
So hadde I spoken with hem everichon, 31
That I was of hir felawshipe anon,
And made forward⁹ erly for to ryse,
To take our wey, ther as I yow devyse.

But natheles, whyl I have tyme and space, 35

¹ wood. ² hearts. ³ distant. ⁴ shrines ⁵ known.
⁶ chance. ⁷ fallen. ⁸ "entertained in the best manner."
⁹ agreement.

Er that I ferther in this tale pace,
Me thinketh it acordaunt to resoun,
To telle yow al the condicioun
Of ech of hem, so as it semed me,
And whiche they weren, and of what degree; 40
And eek in what array that they were inne:

And at a knight than wol I first biginne.
A KNIGHT ther was, and that a worthy
man,

That fro the tyme that he first bigan
To ryden out, he loved chivalrye, 45
Trouthe and honour, fredom and cur-teisye.

Ful worthy was he in his lordes werre,¹⁰
And therto hadde he riden (no man ferre¹¹)
As wel in Cristendom as hethenesse,
And ever honoured for his worthinesse. 50
At Alisaundre he was, whan it was wonne; Ful ofte tyme he hadde the bord bi-gonne¹²

Aboven alle naciouns in Pruce.
In Lettow hadde he reysed¹³ and in Ruce,
No Cristen man so ofte of his degree. 55
In Gernade at the sege eek hadde he be
Of Algezir, and riden in Belmarye.
At Lyeys was he, and at Satalye,
Whan they were wonne; and in the Grete
See

At many a noble aryve¹⁴ hadde he be. 60
At mortal batailles hadde he been fiftene,
And foughten for our feith at Tramissene
In listes thryes, and ay slayn his foo.

This ilke worthy knight hadde been also Somtyme with the lord of Palatye, 65
Ageyn another hethen in Turkye:
And evermore he hadde a sovereyn
prys.¹⁵

And though that he were worthy, he was wys,

And of his port as meke as is a mayde.
He never yet no vileinye ne sayde 70
In al his lyf, un-to no maner wight.¹⁶
He was a verray parfit gentil knight.

¹⁰ war.

¹¹ farther

¹² "he had been placed at the head of the table."

¹³ gone on an expedition.

¹⁵ reputation.

¹⁴ disembarkation.

¹⁶ no sort of person.

But for to tellen yow of his array,
His hors¹ were goode, but he was nat gay.
Of fustian he wered a gipoun² 75
Al bismotered³ with his habergeoun;⁴
For he was late y-come from his viage,⁵
And wente for to doon his pilgrimage.

With him ther was his sone, a yong
SQUYER,
A lovyere, and a lusty bachelor, 80
With lokkes crulle,⁶ as they were leyd in presse.

Of twenty yeer of age he was, I gesse.
Of his stature he was of evene lengthe,⁷
And wonderly deliver,⁸ and greet of strenghthe.

And he had been somtyme in chivachye,⁹
In Flaundres, in Artoys, and Picardye, 86
And born him wel, as of so litel space,¹⁰
In hope to stonden in his lady¹¹ grace.
Embrouded¹² was he, as it were a mede¹³
Al ful of fresshe floures, whyte and rede. 90
Singinge he was, or floytinge,¹⁴ al the day;
He was as fresh as is the month of May.
Short was his goune, with sleeves longe and wyde.

Wel coude he sitte on hors, and faire ryde.
He coude songes make and wel endyte, 95
Luste¹⁵ and eek daunce, and wel purtreye¹⁶ and wryte.

So hote¹⁷ he lovede, that by nightertale¹⁸
He sleep namore than dooth a nightingale.

Curteys he was, lowly, and servisable,
And carf biforn his fader at the table. 100

A YEMAN hadde he, and servaunts namo
At that tyme, for him liste¹⁹ ryde so;
And he was clad in cote and hood of grene;
A sheef of peacock-arwes brighte and kene
Under his belt he bar ful thriftily, 105 (Wel coude he dresse his takel²⁰ yemanly:
His arwes drouped noght with fetheres lowe),

And in his hand he bar a mighty bowe.
A not-heed²¹ hadde he, with a broun visage.

Of wode-craft wel coude he al the usage. 110
Upon his arm he bar a gay bracer,²²
And by his syde a swerd and a bokeler,
And on that other syde a gay daggere,

¹ horses (plural). ² doublet. ³ spotted.
⁴ coat of mail. ⁵ voyage. ⁶ curly.
⁷ ordinary height. ⁸ active. ⁹ military expedition.
¹⁰ "considering the short time he had served."
¹¹ lady's. ¹² adorned. ¹³ meadow. ¹⁴ fluting.
¹⁵ joust. ¹⁶ draw. ¹⁷ bothy. ¹⁸ in the night-time.
¹⁹ it pleased him. ²⁰ take care of his weapons.
²¹ cropped head. ²² guard.

Harneised²³ wel, and sharp as point of spere;

A Cristofre²⁴ on his brest of silver shene. 115
An horn he bar, the bawdrik²⁵ was of grene;
A forster²⁶ was he, soothly, as I gesse.

Ther was also a Nonne, a PRIORESSE, That of hir smyling was ful simple and coy; 119

Hir gretteste ooth was but by sēynt Loy,
And she was cleped²⁷ madame Eglentyne.
Ful wel she song the service divyne,
Entuned in hir nose ful semely;

And Frensh she spak ful faire and fetisly,²⁸
After the scole of Stratford atte Bowe, 125
For Frensh of Paris was to hir unknowe.

At mete wel y-taught was she with-alle;
She leet no morsel from hir lippes falle,
Ne wette hir fingres in hir sauce depe.
Wel coude she carie a morsel, and wel
kepe, 130

That no drope ne fille up-on hir brest.
In curteisye was set ful moche hir lest.²⁹
Hir over lippe wyped she so clene,
That in hir coppe was no ferthing sene
Of grece, whan she dronken hadde hir draughte. 135

Ful semely after hir mete she raughte,³⁰
And sikerly³¹ she was of greet disport,³²
And full plesaunt, and amiāble of port,³³
And peyned hir³⁴ to countrefete chere³⁵
Of court, and been estatlich³⁶ of manere, 140
And to ben holden digne³⁷ of reverence.

But, for to speken of hir conscience,³⁸
She was so charitable and so pitous,
She wolde wepe, if that she sawe a mous Caught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde. 145

Of smale houndes had she, that she fedde
With rosted flesh, or milk and wastel breed.³⁹

But sore weep she if oon of hem were deed,
Or if men smoot it with a yerde smerte:
And al was conscience and tendre herte. 150
Ful semely hir wimpel pinched⁴⁰ was;
Hir nose tretys;⁴¹ hir eyen greye as glas; Hir mouth ful smal, and ther-to softe and
reed;

But sikerly she hadde a fair forheed;
It was almost a spanne brood, I trowe; 155

²³ equipped.
²⁴ "figure of St. Christopher used as a brooch."
²⁵ belt. ²⁶ forester. ²⁷ named. ²⁸ elegantly.
²⁹ pleasure. ³⁰ reached. ³¹ truly. ³² fond of pleasure.
³³ behavior. ³⁴ tried hard. ³⁵ deportment.
³⁶ dignified. ³⁷ worthy. ³⁸ tenderness of heart.
³⁹ fine bread. ⁴⁰ pleated. ⁴¹ well proportioned.

For, hardily, she was nat undergrowe.
 Ful fetis¹ was hir cloke, as I was war.
 Of smal coral aboute hir arm she bar
 A peire² of bedes, gauded al with grene;
 And ther-on heng a broche of gold ful
 shene, 160
 On which ther was first write a crowned A,
 And after, Amor vincit omnia.

Another NONNE with hir hadde she,
 That was hir chapeleyne, and PREESTES thre.

A MONK ther was, a fair for the maistrye,³ 165

An out-rydere, that lovede venerye,⁴
 A manly man, to been an abbot able.
 Ful many a deyntee hors hadde he in stable:

And, whan he rood, men mighte his brydel
 here

Ginglen in a whistling wind as clere, 170
 And eek as loude as dooth the chapel-belle,
 Ther as this lord was keper of the celle.
 The reule of seint Maure or of seint Beneit,
 By-cause that it was old and som-del
 streit,⁵ 174

This ilke⁶ monk leet olde thinges pace,⁷
 And held after the newe world the space.
 He yaf⁸ nat of that text a pulled hen,
 That seith, that hunters been nat holy
 men;

Ne that a monk, whan he is cloisterlees,
 Is lykned til a fish that is waterlees; 180
 This is to seyn, a monk out of his cloistre.
 But thilke text held he nat worth an oistre.
 And I seyde, his opinioun was good.
 What sholde he studie, and make himselven wood,⁹

Upon a book in cloistre alwey to poure, 185
 Or swinken¹⁰ with his handes, and laboure, As Austin bit? How shal the world be served?

Lat Austin have his swink to him reserved.
 Therefore he was a pricasour¹¹ aright; Grehoundes he hadde, as swifte as fowel
 in flight; 190

Of priking¹² and of hunting for the hare
 Was al his lust, for no cost wolde he spare.
 I seigh his sleeves purfiled¹³ at the hond
 With grys,¹⁴ and that the fyneste of a
 lond;

And, for to festne his hood under his chin,

¹ handsome.

⁴ hunting.

³ cared.

¹² riding.

² string

⁵ somewhat strict

⁹ mad.

¹⁰ work.

¹³ trimmed.

³ a superior sort of fellow

⁶ same

⁷ go.

¹¹ hard rider.

¹⁴ gray fur.

He hadde of gold y-wrought a curious pin:
 A love-knotte in the gretter ende ther was.
 His heed was balled, that shoon as any glas, 198

And eek his face, as he had been anoint.
 He was a lord ful fat and in good point;¹⁵
 His eyen stepe,¹⁶ and rollinge in his heed,
 That stemed¹⁷ as a forneys of a leed;¹⁸
 His botes souple, his hors in greet estat.
 Now certainly he was a fair prelat;
 He was nat pale as a for-pyned¹⁹ goost. 205
 A fat swan loved he best of any roost.
 His palfrey was as broun as is a berye.

A FRERE there was, a wantown and a merye,

A limitour,²⁰ a ful solempne²¹ man.
 In alle the ordres foure is noon that can²²
 So moche of daliaunce and fair langage.²¹¹
 He hadde maad ful many a mariage
 Of yonge wommen, at his owne cost.
 Un-to his ordre he was a noble post.
 Ful wel biloved and famulier was he 215
 With frankleyns²³ over-al in his contree, And eek with worthy wommen of the
 toun:

For he had power of confessioun,
 As seyde him-self, more than a curat,
 For of his ordre he was licentiat.²⁴ 220

Ful swetely herde he confessioun,
 And plesaunt was his absolucioun;
 He was an esy man to yeve²⁵ penaunce
 Ther-as he wiste to han a good pitaunce;
 For unto a povre order for to yive 225
 Is signe that a man is wel y-shrive.

For if he yaf, he dorste make avaunt,²⁶
 He wiste that a man was repentaunt.
 For many a man so hard is of his herte,
 He may nat wepe al-thogh him sore
 smerte. 230

Therefore, in stede of weping and preyeres,
 Men moot yeve silver to the povre freres.
 His tipet was ay farsed²⁷ full of knyves
 And pinnes, for to yeven faire wyves.

And certainly he hadde a mery note; 235
 Wel coude he synge and pleyen on a rote.²⁸
 Of yeddinges²⁹ he bar utterly the prys.

His nekke whyt was as the flour-de-lys;
 Ther-to he strong was as a champioun.
 He knew the tavernes well in every
 toun, 240

¹⁵ in good condition
¹⁸ fire under a cauldron.

²⁰ licensed beggar

²³ country gentlemen.

²⁶ give.

²⁸ a sort of fiddle.

¹⁶ glittering.

¹⁹ wasted away.

²¹ important.

²⁴ licensed to hear confessions.

²⁶ boast.

²⁷ stuffed.

²⁹ songs.

And everich hostiler and tappestere¹
 Bet² than a lazar³ or a beggestere;⁴
 For unto swich a worthy man as he Acorded nat, as by his facultee,⁵
 To have with seke lazars aqueyntaunce.²⁴⁵
 It is nat honest, it may nat avaunce⁶
 For to delen with no swich poraille,⁷
 But al with riche and sellers of vitaille.
 And over-al, ther as profit sholde aryse,
 Curteys he was, and lowly of servyse, ²⁵⁰
 Ther nas⁸ no man nowher so vertuou.
 He was the beste beggere in his hous;
 For thogh a widwe hadde noght a sho,
 So plesaunt was his In principio,⁹
 Yet wolde he have a ferthing, er he wente.
 His purchas¹⁰ was wel bettre than his rente.¹¹ ²⁵⁵
 And rage he coude as it were right a whelpe.

In love-dayes ther coude he mochel helpe.
 For ther he was nat lyk a cloisterer,
 With a thredbar cope, as is a povre scoler,
 But he was lyk a maister or a pope. ²⁶¹
 Of double worsted was his semi-cope,
 That rounded as a belle out of the presse.
 Somwhat he lipped, for his wantownesse,
 To make his English swete up-on his tonge; ²⁶⁵
 And in his harping, whan that he had songe,

His eyen twinkled in his heed aright,
 As doon the sterres in the frosty night.
 This worthy limitour was cleped Huberd.

A MERCHANT was ther with a forked
 berd, ²⁷⁰

In mottelee, and hye on horse he sat,
 Up-on his heed a Flaundrish bever hat;
 His botes clasped faire and fetisly.
 His resons he spak ful solempnely,
 Souninge¹² alway thencrees of his winning.
 He wolde the see were kept¹³ for any thing ²⁷⁶

Bitwixe Middelburgh and Orewelle.
 Wel coude he in eschaunge sheeldes¹⁴ selle.
 This worthy man ful wel his wit bisette;¹⁵
 Ther wiste no wight that he was in dette,
 So estatly was he of his governaunce,¹⁶ ²⁸¹
 With his bargaynes, and with his chev-isaunce.¹⁷

¹ barmaid. ² better. ³ leper. ⁴ beggar woman.
⁵ considering his ability. ⁶ profit. ⁷ poor people.

⁸ was not.

⁹ the beginning of the Latin Gospel of St. John

¹⁰ proceeds of his begging.

¹¹ tending towards.

¹² shields, French coins.

¹³ management.

¹⁴ regular income.

¹⁵ guarded.

¹⁶ employed.

¹⁷ dealings.

For sothe he was a worthy man with-alle,
 But sooth to seyn, I noot¹⁸ how men him calle.

A CLERK ther was of Oxenford also, ²⁸⁵
 That un-to logik hadde longe y-go.
 As lene was his hors as is a rake,
 And he nas nat right fat, I undertake;
 But loked holwe, and ther-to soberly.
 Ful thredbar was his overest courtepy;¹⁹ ²⁹⁰
 For he had geten him yet no benefyce,
 Ne was so worldly for to have offyce.
 For him was lever have at his beddes heed
 Twenty bokes, clad in blak or reed,
 Of Aristotle and his philosophye, ²⁹⁵
 Than robes riche, or fithele,²⁰ or gay sautrye.²¹

But al be that he was a philosophre,
 Yet hadde he but litel gold in cofre;
 But al that he mighte of his freendes hente,²²

On bokes and on lerninge he it spente, ³⁰⁰
 And bisily gan for the soules preye
 Of hem that yaf him wher-with to scoleye.
 Of studie took he mo²³ cure and most hede.

Noght o word spak he more than was nede,
 And that was seyde in forme and reverence,²⁴ ³⁰⁵

And short and quik, and ful of hy sentence.²⁵

Souninge²⁶ in moral vertu was his speche,
 And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly tech.

A SERGEANT OF THE LAWE, war²⁶ and wys,
 That often hadde been at the parvys,²⁷ ³¹⁰
 Ther was also, ful riche of excellence.

Discreet he was, and of greet reverence:
 He semed swich, his wordes weren so wyse.
 Iustyce he was ful often in assyse,
 By patente, and by pleyn commissioun;³¹⁵
 For²⁸ his science, and for his heigh r²⁹noun.
 Of fees and robes hadde he many oon.

So greet a purchasour²⁹ was nowher noon.
 Al was fee simple to him in effect,
 His purchasing mighte nat been infect. ³²⁰
 Nowher so bisy a man as he ther nas,
 And yet he semed bisier than he was.

In termes hadde he caas³⁰ and domes³¹ alle,
 That from the tyme of king William were falle.

¹⁸ know not.

¹⁹ get.

²⁰ meaning.

²¹ church-porch.

²² cases.

²³ outer coat. ²⁴ fiddle. ²⁵ psaltery.

²⁶ "with propriety and modesty."

²⁷ conducting to.

²⁸ because of.

²⁹ conveyancer.

³⁰ judgments.

Therto he coude endyte, and make a thing, Ther coude no wight pinche¹ at his wryting; 326

And every statut coude he pleyn by rote.
He rood but hoomly in a medlee² cote Girt with a ceint³ of silk, with barres smale;

Of his array telle I no lenger tale. 330

A FRANKLEYN was in his companye;
Whyt was his berd, as is the dayesye.
Of his complexioun he was sangwyn.⁴ Wel loved he by the morwe⁵ a sop⁶ in wyn.⁶

To liven in delyt was ever his wone,⁷ 335

For he was Epicurus owne sone,
That heeld opinioun that pleyn delyt⁸
Was verrailly felicittee parfyt.

An housholdere, and that a greet, was he;
Seynt Iulian he was in his contree. 340

His breed, his ale, was alwey after oon,⁹

A better envyned¹⁰ man was no-where noon.

With-oute bake mete was never his hous,

Of fish and flesh, and that so plenteuous,

It snwed in his hous of mete and drinke,

Of alle deyntees that men coude thinke. 346

After the sondry sesons of the year,

So chaunged he his mete and his soper.

Ful many a fat partrich hadde he in mewe,¹¹

And many a breem¹² and many a luce¹³ in stewe.¹⁴ 350

Wo was his cook, but-if his sauce were

Poynant and sharp, and redy al his gere.

His table dormant¹⁵ in his halle alway

Stood redy covered al the longe day.

At session ther was he lord and sire. 355

Ful ofte tyme he was knight of the shire.

An anlas¹⁶ and a gipser¹⁷ al of silk

Heng at his girdel, whyt as morne milk.

A shirreve hadde he been, and a countour,¹⁸

Was no-where such a worthy vavasour.¹⁹ 360

An HABERDASSHER and a CARPENTER,

A WEBBE,²⁰ a DYERE, and a TAPICER,²¹

Were with us eek, clothed in o²² liveree,

Of a solempne and greet fraternitee.

Ful fresh and newe hir gere apyked²³ was;

Hir knyves were y-chaped²⁴ noght with bras, 366

¹ find fault with ² of mixed colors. ³ girdle.

⁴ ruddy ⁵ in the morning.

⁶ wine with bread in it ⁷ custom

⁸ joy. ⁹ of one quality ¹⁰ stored with wine.

¹¹ coop ¹² a sort of fish ¹³ pike.

¹⁴ fish-pond ¹⁵ permanent side table ¹⁶ short dagger.

¹⁷ purse. ¹⁸ auditor ¹⁹ landed gentleman.

²⁰ weaver ²¹ upholsterer. ²² one.

²³ trimmed. ²⁴ capped.

But al with silver, wroght ful clene and weel,

Hir girdles and hir pouches every-deel.

Wel semed ech of hem a fair burgeys,

To sitten in a yeldhalle²⁵ on a deys. 370

Everich, for the wisdom that he can,

Was shaply for to been an alderman.

For catel²⁶ hadde they y-nogh and rente,

And eek hir wyves wolde it wel assente;

And elles certein were they to blame. 375

It is ful fair to been y-clept "ma dame",

And goon to vigilyës al bifore,

And have a mantel royalliche y-bore.

A Cook they hadde with hem for the nones,²⁷

To boille the chiknes with the mary-bones,

And poudre-marchant tart,²⁸ and galingale.²⁹ 381

Wel coude he knowe a draughte of London ale.

He coude roste, and sethe,³⁰ and broille,

and frye,

Maken mortreux,³¹ and wel bake a pye.

But greet harm was it, as it thoughte
me, 385

That on his shine a mormal³² hadde he;

For blankmanger,³³ that made he with the beste.

A SHIPMAN was ther, woning fer by weste:

For aught I woot, he was of Dertemouthe.

He rood up-on a rouncey,³⁴ as he couthe,³⁵

In a gowne of falding³⁶ to the knee. 391

A daggere hanging on a laas³⁷ hadde he

Aboute his nekke under his arm adoun.

The hote somer had maad his hewe al
broun;

And, certainly, he was a good felawe. 395

Ful many a draughte of wyn had he y-drawe

From Burdeux-ward, whyl that the chapman³⁸ sleep.

Of nyce conscience took he no keep.³⁹

If that he faught, and hadde the hyer
hond,

By water⁴⁰ he sente hem hoom⁴⁰ to every
lond. 400

But of his craft⁴¹ to rekene wel his tydes,

His stremes⁴² and his daungers him bisydes,

²⁵ guild-hall ²⁶ property. ²⁷ for the occasion.

²⁸ a sharp sort of flavoring ²⁹ sweet cyperus.

³⁰ boil. ³¹ pottages. ³² sore.

³³ a sort of chicken compote. ³⁴ hackney.

³⁵ as well as he could. ³⁶ coarse cloth

³⁷ string. ³⁸ super-cargo ³⁹ cared nothing at all.

⁴⁰ he made the losers "walk the plank."

⁴¹ skill. ⁴² currents.

His herberwe¹ and his mone,² his lodemenage,³ Ther nas noon swich from Hulle to Cartage.

Hardy he was, and wys to undertake; 405
With many a tempest hadde his berd been shake.

He knew wel alle the havenes, as they were,

From Gootlond to the cape of Finistere,
And every cryke in Britayne and in Spayne; 409

His barge y-cleped was the Maudelayne.

With us ther was a DOCTOUR OF PHISYK,
In al this world ne was ther noon him lyk
To speke of phisik and of surgerye;
For he was grounden in astronomye.

He kepte⁴ his pacient a ful greet del 415
In houres,⁴ by his magik naturel.

Wel coude he fortunen⁵ the ascendent
Of his images for his pacient.

He knew the cause of everich maladye,
Were it of hoot or cold, or moiste, or drye, 420

And where engendred, and of what humour;

He was a verrey parfit practisour.

The cause y-knowe, and of his harm the rote,⁶

Anon he yaf the seke man his bote.⁷

Ful redy hadde he his apothecaries, 425

To sende him drogges, and his letuaries,⁸

For ech of hem made other for to winne;

Hir frendschipe nas nat newe to biginne.

Wel knew he the olde Esculapius,

And Deiscorides, and eek Rufus; 430

Old Ypocras, Haly, and Galien;

Serapion, Razis, and Avicen;

Averrois, Damascien, and Constantyn;

Bernard, and Gatesden, and Gilbertyn.

Of his diete mesurable⁹ was he, 435

For it was of no superfluitee,

But of greet norissing and digestible.

His studie was but litel on the Bible.

In sangwin¹⁰ and in pers¹¹ he clad was al,

Lyned with taffata and with sendal,¹² 440

And yet he was but esy of dispenche,¹³

He kepte that he wan in pestilence.

For gold in phisik is a cordial,

Therefore he lovede gold in special.

A good WYF was ther of bisyde BATHE, But she was som-del deel, and that was scathe.¹⁴ 446

Of clooth-making she hadde swiche an haunt,¹⁵

She passed hem of Ypres and of Gaunt.

In al the parisshe wyf ne was ther noon

That to the offering bifore hir sholde goon;

And if ther dide, certeyn, so wrooth was
she, 451

That she was out of alle charitee.

Hir coverchiefs¹⁶ ful fyne were of ground;¹⁷

I dorste swere they weyeden ten pound

That on a Sonday were upon hir heed. 455

Hir hosen weren of fyn scarlet reed,

Ful streite y-teyd, and shoes ful moiste¹⁸ and newe.

Bold was hir face, and fair, and reed of hewe.

She was a worthy womman al hir lyve;

Housbondes at chirche-dore she hadde
fyve, 460

Withouten other companye in youthe;

But therof nedeth nat to speke as nouthe.¹⁹

And thryes hadde she been at Ierusalem;

She hadde passed many a straunge streem;

At Rome she hadde been, and at Boloigne,

In Galice at saint Iame, and at Coloigne.

She coude muche of wandring by the weye. 467

Gat-tothed²⁰ was she, soothly for to seye.

Up-on an amblere esily she sat,

Y-wimpled²¹ wel, and on hir heed an hat 470

As brood as is a bokeler or a targe;

A foot-mantel²² aboute hir hippe large,

And on hir feet a paire of spores sharpe.

In felaweschip wel coude she laughe and carpe.²³ 474

Of remedies of love she knew per-chaunce,

For she coude of that art the olde daunce.

A good man was ther of religioun,

And was a povre PERSOUN²⁴ of a toun;

But riche he was of holy thought and werk.

He was also a lerned man, a clerk, 480

That Cristes gospel trewely wolde preche;

His parissshens devoutly wolde he teche.

Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,

And in adversitee ful pacient; 484

And swich he was y-preved²⁵ ofte sythes.²⁶

Ful looth were him to cursen for his tythes,

¹ harbor.

² position of the moon.

³ pilotage.

⁴ watched for his patient's favorable star.

⁵ On the five following lines consult the notes.

⁶ root, origin.

⁷ remedy.

⁸ remedies.

⁹ temperate.

¹⁰ red cloth.

¹¹ blue cloth.

¹² thin silk.

¹³ expenditure.

¹⁴ a pity

¹⁵ skill.

¹⁶ head-dresses

¹⁷ texture.

¹⁸ supple

¹⁹ at present.

²⁰ with teeth far apart.

²¹ her head well covered with a wimple

²² cloth to protect the skirt

²³ talk.

²⁴ parish priest.

²⁵ proved.

²⁶ many a time.

But rather wolde he yeven, out of doute,
Un-to his povre parisshe aboute
Of his offering, and eek of his substaunce.
He coude in litel thing han suffisaunce. 490
Wyd was his parisshe, and houses fer

a-sonder,
But he ne lafte¹ nat for reyn ne thonder,
In siknes nor in meschief to visyte
The ferreste in his parisshe, muche² and lyte,³

Up-on his feet, and in his hand a staf. 495
This noble ensample to his sheep he yaf,
That first he wroghte, and afterward he taughte;

Out of the gospel he tho wordes caughte;
And this figure he added eek ther-to,
That if gold ruste, what shal iren do? 500
For if a preest be foul, on whom we truste,
No wonder is a lewed⁴ man to ruste;

And shame it is, if a preest take keep,⁵
A [spotted] shepherde and a clene sheep.
Wel oghte a preest ensample for to yive, 505
By his clenness, how that his sheep shold
live.

He sette nat his benefice to hyre,
And leet his sheep encombred in the myre,

And ran to London, un-to seynt Poules,
To seken him a chaunterie for soules, 510
Or with a bretherhed to been withholde;⁶
But dwelte at hoom, and kepte wel his folde,

So that the wolf ne made it nat miscarie;
He was a shepherde and no mercenarie.
And though he holy were, and vertuous, 515
He was to sinful man nat despitous,⁷
Ne of his speche daungerous⁸ ne digne,⁹
But in his teching discreet and benigne.

To drawn folk to heven by fairnesse
By good ensample, this was his businesse:
But it were any persone obstinat, 521
What so he were, of heigh or lowe estat, Him wolde he snibben¹⁰ sharply for the nones.

A better preest I trowe that nowher noon
is.

He wayted after no pompe and reverence,
Ne maked him a spyced¹¹ conscience, 526
But Cristes lore, and his apostles twelve,
He taughte, and first he folwed it himselfe.

¹ ceased not² high³ low⁴ ignorant⁵ pay attention to it.⁶ confined⁷ merciless⁸ disdainful.⁹ scornful.¹⁰ reprove¹¹ over-scrupulous.

With him ther was a PLOWMAN, was his brother,
That hadde y-lad¹² of dong ful many a fother;¹³ 530

A trewe swinkere¹⁴ and a good was he,
Livinge in pees and parfit charitee.

God loved he best with al his hole herte
At alle tymes, thogh him gamed¹⁵ or smerte,¹⁶

And thanne his neighebour right as him-
selfe. 535

He wolde thresshe, and ther-to dyke¹⁷ and delve,

For Cristes sake, for every povre wight, Withouten hyre, if it lay in his might.

His tythes payed he ful faire and wel,
Bothe of his propre swink¹⁸ and his catel.¹⁹
In a tabard²⁰ he rood upon a mere. 541

Ther was also a Reve²¹ and a Millere,
A Somnour²² and a Pardoner also,
A Maunciple,²³ and my-self; ther were namo.

The MILLER was a stout carl, for the
nones, 545

Ful big he was of braun, and eek of bones;
That proved wel, for over-al ther he cam,
At wrastling he wolde have alwey the ram.²⁴

He was short-sholdred, brood, a thikke
knarre,²⁵

Ther nas no dore that he nolde²⁶ heve of harre,²⁶ 550

Or breke it, at a renning, with his heed.
His berd as any sowe or fox was reed,
And ther-to brood, as though it were a spade.

Up-on the cop²⁷ right of his nose he hade
A werte, and ther-on stood a tuft of heres,
Reed as the bristles of a sowes eres; 556

His nose-thirles²⁸ blake were and wyde.
A swerd and bokeler bar he by his syde;

His mouth as greet was as a greet forneys.
He was a Iangler²⁹ and a goliardeys,³⁰ 560

And that was most of sinne and harlotryes.
Wel coude he stelen corn, and tollen
thryes;

And yet he hadde a thombe of gold,
pardee.

A whyt cote and a blew hood wered he.

¹² carried in a cart.¹³ load¹⁴ laborer.¹⁵ it pleased.¹⁶ pained.¹⁷ dig.¹⁸ labor.¹⁹ property.²⁰ loose coat.²¹ ballif.²² summoner for an ecclesiastical court.²³ steward of a college²⁴ win the prize, a ram.²⁵ a sturdy fellow²⁶ could not lift off its hinges.²⁷ top.²⁸ nostrils.²⁹ talker³⁰ buffoon.

A baggepype wel coude he blowe and sowne, 565
And therewithal he broghte us out of towne.

A gentil MAUNCIPLE was ther of a temple,
Of which achatours¹ mighte take exemple
For to be wyse in bying of vitaille.
For whether that he payde, or took by taille,² 570

Algate³ he wayted⁴ so in his achat,⁵
That he was ay biforn and in good stat.
Now is nat that of God a ful fair grace,
That swich a lewed⁶ mannes wit shal pace
The wisdom of an heap of lerned men? 575
Of maistres hadde he mo than thryes ten,
That were of lawe expert and curious;
Of which ther were a doseyn in that hous,
Worthy to been stiwardes of rente and
lond

Of any lord that is in Engeland, 580
To make him live by his propre good,
In honour dettelees,⁷ but he were wood,⁸
Or live as scarsly as him list desire;
And able for to helpen al a shire
In any cas that mighte falle or happe; 585
And yit this maunciple sette⁹ hir aller cappe.⁹

The REVE was a sclendre colerik man,
His berd was shave as ny as ever he can.

His heer was by his eres round y-shorn.
His top was dokked lyk a preest biforn. 590
Ful longe were his legges, and ful lene,
Y-lyk a staf, ther was no calf y-sene.
Wel coude he kepe a gerner¹⁰ and a binne;
Ther was noon auditour coude on him winne.

Wel wiste he, by the droghte, and by the reyn, 595
The yelding of his seed, and of his greyn.
His lordes sheep, his neet,¹¹ his dayerye,
His swyn, his hors, his stoor,¹² and his pultrye,

Was hoolly in this reves governing,
And by his covenant yaf the rekening, 600
Sin that his lord was twenty yeer of age;
Ther coude no man bringe him in arrerage.
Ther nas baillif, ne herde, ne other hyne,¹³
That he ne knew his sleighte¹⁴ and his covyne,¹⁵ 604

¹ caterers. ² on credit. ³ always. ⁴ took precautions.
⁵ buying. ⁶ ignorant. ⁷ free from debt.
⁸ mad. ⁹ over-reached them all. ¹⁰ granary.
¹¹ cattle. ¹² stock. ¹³ servant. ¹⁴ trickery. ¹⁵ deceit.

They were adrad of him, as of the deeth.
His woning¹⁶ was ful fair up-on an heeth,
With grene treës shadwed was his place.
He coude bettre than his lord purchace.
Ful riche he was astored prively,
His lord wel coude he plesen subtilly, 610
To yeve and lene¹⁷ him of his owne good,
And have a thank, and yet a cote and
hood.

In youthe he lerned hadde a good mister;¹⁸
He was a wel good wrighte, a carpenter.
This reve sat up-on a ful good stot,¹⁹ 615
That was al pomely²⁰ grey, and highte Scot.
A long surcote of pers²¹ up-on he hade,
And by his syde he bar a rusty blade.
Of Northfolk was this reve, of which I telle,
Bisyde a toun men clepen Baldeswelle. 620
Tukked²² he was, as is a frere, aboute,
And evere he rood the hindreste of our route.

A SOMNOUR was ther with us in that
place,

That hadde a fyr-reed cherubinnes face,

Wel loved he garleek, * oynons, and eek
lekes,

And for to drynken strong wyn, reed as
blood. 635

Thanne wolde he speke, and crye as he were wood.

And whan that he wel dronken hadde the
wyn,

Than wolde he speke no word but Latyn.

A fewe termes hadde he, two or three,

That he had lerned out of som decree; 640

No wonder is, he herde it al the day;

And eek ye knowen wel, how that a Iay

Can clepen "Watte,"²³ as well as can the pope.

But who-so coude in other thing him
groke,²⁴

Thanne hadde he spent al his philosophye;

Ay "Questio quid iuris" wolde he crye. 646

He was a gentil harlot²⁵ and a kynde;

A bettre felawe sholde men noght fynde.

He wolde suffice for a quart of wyn

A good felawe to have his [wikked sin] 650

A twelf-month, and excuse him atte fulle:

And prively a finch eek coude he pulle.

And if he fond owher²⁶ a good felawe,

He wolde techen him to have non awe,

¹⁶ house. ¹⁷ lend. ¹⁸ trade. ¹⁹ horse.
²⁰ dappled. ²¹ blue cloth. ²² tucked
²³ jay can cry "Wat." ²⁴ test him in any other point.
²⁵ rogue. ²⁶ anywhere.

In swich cas, of the erchedeknes curs, 655
 But-if¹ a mannes soule were in his purs;
 For in his purs he sholde y-punisshe be.
 "Purs is the erchedeknes helle," seyde he.
 But wel I woot he lyed right in dede;
 Of cursing oghte ech gilti man him drede—
 For curs wol slee, right as assoilling²
 saveth— 661

And also war him³ of a significavit.
 In daunger⁴ hadde he at his owne gyse⁵
 The yonge girles⁶ of the diocyse,
 And knew hir counseil, and was al hir reed.⁷ 665

A gerland hadde he set up-on his heed,
 As greet as it were for an ale-stake;
 A bokeler hadde he maad him of a cake.

With him ther rood a gentil PARDONER
 Of Rouncival, his freend and his compeer,
 That streight was comen fro the court of Rome. 671

Ful loude he song, "Com hider, love, to
 me."

This somnour bar to him a stif burdoun,
 Was never trompe of half so greet a soun.
 This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wax,
 But smothe it heng, as doth a strike⁸ of flex; 676

By ounces⁹ henge his lokkes that he hadde,
 And ther-with he his shuldres over-spradde;

But thinne it lay, by colpons¹⁰ oon and oon;

But hood, for Iolitee, ne wered he noon, 680
 For it was trussed up in his walet.

Him thoughte,¹¹ he rood al of the newe
 Iet;¹²

Dischevele, save his cappe, he rood al bare.
 Swiche glaringe eyen hadde he as an hare.
 A vernicle hadde he sowed on his cappe. 685
 His walet lay biforn him in his lappe,
 Bret-ful¹³ of pardoun come from Rome al hoot.

A voys he hadde as smal as hath a goot.
 No berd hadde he, ne never sholde have,
 As smothe it was as it were late y-shave; 690

* * * * *

But of his craft, fro Berwik into Ware,
 Ne was ther swich another pardoner.
 For in his male¹⁴ he hadde a pilwe-beer,¹⁵

¹ unless. ² absolution. ³ let him beware of.
⁴ in his jurisdiction. ⁵ way. ⁶ people.
⁷ adviser. ⁸ hank of flax. ⁹ small portions.
¹⁰ shreds. ¹¹ it seemed to him. ¹² fashion.
¹³ brim-full. ¹⁴ wallet. ¹⁵ pillow-case.

Which that, he seyde, was our lady veyl.¹⁶
 He seyde, he hadde a gobet¹⁷ of the seyl 696
 That seynt Peter hadde, whan that he wente

Up-on the see, til Iesu Crist him hente.¹⁸
 He hadde a croys of latoun,¹⁹ ful of stones,
 And in a glas he hadde pigges bones. 700
 But with thise reliques, whan that he fond
 A povre person dwelling up-on lond,²⁰
 Up-on a day he gat him more moneye
 Than that the person got in monthes
 tweye.

And thus with feyned flaterye and lapes,²¹
 He made the person and the peple his apes.
 But trewely to tellen, atte laste, 707
 He was in chirche a noble ecclesiaste.

Wel coude he rede a lessoun or a storie,
 But alderbest²² he song an offertorie; 710
 For wel he wiste, whan that song was songe,

He moste preche, and wel affyle²³ his tonge,
 To winne silver, as he ful wel coude;
 Therefore he song so meriely and loude.

Now have I told you shortly, in a clause, Thestat,²⁴ tharray, the nombre, and eek
 the cause 716

Why that assembled was this companye
 In Southwerk, at this gentil hostelrye,
 That highte the Tabard, faste by the Belle.

But now is tyme to yow for to telle 720

How that we baren us that ilke night,
 Whan we were in that hostelrye alight.

And after wol I telle of our viage,
 And al the remenaunt of our pilgrimage.

But first I pray yow, of your curteisye, 725
 That ye narette²⁵ it nat my vileinye,²⁵

Thogh that I pleynly speke in this matere,
 To telle yow hir wordes and hir chere,²⁶

Ne thogh I speke hir wordes properly.²⁷
 For this ye knownen al-so wel as I, 730

Who-so shal telle a tale after a man,
 He moot reherce, as ny as ever he can,

Everich a²⁸ word, if it be in his charge,
 Al speke he²⁹ never so rudeliche and large;³⁰

Or elles he moot telle his tale untrewe, 735
 Or feyne thing, or fynde wordes newe.

He may nat spare, al-though he were his brother;

He moot as wel seye o word as another.

¹⁶ the Virgin Mary's veil ¹⁷ piece ¹⁸ took ¹⁹ brass. ²⁰ in the country.
²¹ tricks ²² best of all ²³ sharpen. ²⁴ the estate.
²⁵ "ascribe it not to my ill breeding."
²⁶ literally. ²⁷ every. ²⁸ behavior.
²⁹ although he speak. ³⁰ freely.

Crist spak him-self ful brode in holy writ,
And wel ye woot, no vileinye is it. 740
Eek Plato seith, who-so that can him rede,
The wordes mote be cosin to the dede.

Also I prey yow to foryeve it me,
Al have I nat set folk in hir degree¹
Here in this tale, as that they sholde stonde; 745

My wit is short, ye may wel understonde.
Greet chere made our hoste us everichon,
And to the soper sette he us anon;
And served us with vitaille at the beste.
Strong was the wyn, and wel to drinke us leste.² 750

A semely man our hoste was with-alle
For to han been a marshal in an halle;
A large man he was with eyen stepe,³
A fairer burgeys is ther noon in Chepe:
Bold of his speche, and wys, and wel
y-taught, 755

And of manhod him lakkede right naught.
Eek therto he was right a mery man,
And after soper pleyen⁴ he bigan,
And spak of mirthe amonges othere
thinges, 759

Whan that we hadde maad our rekeninges;
And seyde thus: "Now, lordinges, trewely
Ye been to me right welcome hertely:
For by my trouthe, if that I shal nat lye,
I ne saugh⁵ this yeer so mery a companye
At ones⁶ in this herberwe⁷ as is now. 765 Fayn wolde I doon yow mirthe, wiste I how.

And of a mirthe, I am right now bithoght,
To doon yow ese,⁸ and it shal coste noght.

Ye goon to Caunterbury; God yow
spede,

The blisful martir quyte yow your mede.⁹
And wel I woot, as ye goon by the weye, 771
Ye shapen yow to talen¹⁰ and to pleye;
For trewely, confort ne mirthe is noon
To ryde by the weye dounb as a stoon;
And therefore wol I maken yow disport, 775
As I seyde erst, and doon yow som confort.
And if yow lyketh alle, by oon assent,
Now for to stonden at my Iugement,
And for to werken as I shal yow seye,
To-morwe, whan ye ryden by the weye, 780
Now, by my fader soule, that is deed,
But ye be merye, I wol yeve yow myn heed.

¹ proper rank.

⁴ make merry.

⁷ inn.

⁹ reward you duly.

² it pleased us

⁵ have not seen.

⁸ entertain you.

¹⁰ plan to talk.

³ glittering.

⁶ one time.

Hold up your hond, withoute more speche."

Our counseil was nat longe for to seche;
Us thoughte it was noght worth to make it wys,¹¹ 785

And graunted him with-uten more avys,¹²
And bad him seye his verdit, as him leste.

"Lordinges," quod he, "now herkneth for the beste;

But tak it not, I prey yow, in desdeyn;
This is the poynt, to speken short and pleyn, 790

That ech of yow, to shorte with your weye,¹³

In this viage, shal telle tales tweye,
To Caunterbury-ward, I mene it so,
And hom-ward he shal tellen othere two,
Of adventures that whylom¹⁴ han bifalle. 795
And which of yow that bereth him best of
alle,

That is to seyn, that telleth in this cas
Tales of best sentence¹⁵ and most solas,¹⁶
Shal han a soper at our aller cost¹⁷

Here in this place, sitting by this post, 800
Whan that we come agayn fro Caunter-bury.

And for to make yow the more mery,
I wol my-selven gladly with yow ryde,
Right at myn owne cost, and be your gyde.
And who-so wol my Iugement withseye 805
Shal paye al that we spenden by the weye.
And if ye vouche-sauf that it be so,
Tel me anon, with-uten wordes mo,
And I wol erly shape me¹⁸ therfore."

This thing was graunted, and our othes swore 810

With ful glad herte, and preyden him also
That he wold vouche-sauf for to do so,
And that he wolde been our governour,
And of our tales Iuge and reportour,
And sette a soper at a certeyn prys; 815
And we wold reuled been at his devys,¹⁹
In heigh and lowe; and thus, by oon assent,
We been accorded to his Iugement.

And ther-up-on the wyn was fet²⁰ anon;
We dronken, and to reste wente echon, 820
With-uten any lenger taryinge.

A-morwe, whan that day bigan to
springe,

Up roos our host, and was our aller cok,²¹
And gadrede us togidre, alle in a flok,

¹¹ deliberate about it

¹² make the journey short.

¹³ meaning

¹⁴ the expense of us all

¹⁵ according to his decision.

¹⁶ cock of us all.

¹⁷ consideration.

¹⁸ formerly

¹⁹ amusement.

²⁰ get myself ready.

²¹ brought.

And forth we riden, a litel more than pas,¹ 825

Un-to the watering of seint Thomas.

And there our host bigan his hors areste,²
And seyde; "Lordinges, herkneth if yow leste.

Ye woot your forward,³ and I it yow recorde.⁴

If even-song and morwe-song acorde, 830

Lat se now who shal telle the firste tale.

As ever mote I drinke wyn or ale,

Who-so be rebel to my Iugement Shal paye for al that by the weye is spent.

Now draweth cut, er that we ferrer⁵
twinne,⁶ 835

He which that hath the shortest shal beginne.

Sire knight," quod he, "my maister and
my lord,

Now draweth cut, for that is myn acord.⁷

Cometh neer," quod he, "my lady prior-
esse;

And ye, sir clerk, lat be your shamfast-nesse,⁸ 840

Ne studieth noght; ley hond to, every
man."

Anon to drawn every wight bigan,

And shortly for to tellen, as it was,

Were it by aventure,⁹ or sort,¹⁰ or cas,¹¹

The sothe¹² is this, the cut fil to the knight,
Of which ful blythe and glad was every
wight; 846

And telle he moste his tale, as was resoun,

By forward and by composicioun,¹³

As ye han herd; what nedeth wordes mo?

And whan this goode man saugh it was so,

As he that wys was and obedient 851

To kepe his forward by his free assent,

He seyde: "Sin¹⁴ I shal beginne the game,

What, welcome be the cut, a¹⁵ Goddes
name!

Now lat us ryde, and herkneth what I
seye." 855

And with that word we riden forth our
weye;

And he bigan with right a mery chere¹⁶

His tale anon, and seyde in this manere.

THE NUN'S PRIEST'S TALE

Here biginneth the Nonne Preestes Tale of the Cok and Hen, Chauntecleer and Pertelote.

A povre widwe somdel stope¹⁷ in age,
Was whylom dwelling in a narwe cotage,
Bisyde a grove, stondyng in a dale.

This widwe, of which I telle yow my tale,

Sin thilke¹⁸ day that she was last a wyf, 5

In pacience ladde a ful simple lyf,

For litel was hir catel¹⁹ and hir rente,²⁰

By housbondrye, of such as God hir sente,

She fond²¹ hir-self, and eek hir doghtren
two.

Three large sowes hadde she, and namo, 10

Three kyn, and eek a sheep that highte Malle.

Ful sooty was hir bour,²² and eek hir halle,

In which she eet ful many a splendre meel.

Of poynaunt sauce hir neded never a deel.

No deyntee morsel passed thurgh hir throte; 15

Hir dyete was accordant to²³ hir cote.

Repleccioun²⁴ ne made hir never syk;

Attempree²⁵ dyete was al hir phisyk,

And exercyse, and hertes suffisaunce.²⁶

The goute lette²⁷ hir no-thing for to daunce, 20

Napoplexye²⁸ shente²⁹ nat hir heed;

No wyn ne drank she, neither whyt ne
reed;

Hir bord was served most with whyt and blak,

Milk and broun breed, in which she fond no lak,

Seynd³⁰ bacoun, and somtyme an ey³¹ or
tweye, 25

For she was as it were a maner deye.³²

A yerd she hadde, enclosed al aboute

With stikkes, and a drye dich with-oute,

In which she hadde a cok, hight Chaunte-
cleer,

In al the land of crowing nas³³ his peer. 30

His vois was merier than the mery organ

On messe-dayes that in the chirche gon;

Wel sikerer³⁴ was his crowing in his logge,³⁵

Than is a klokke, or an abbey orlogge.³⁶

By nature knew he ech ascensioun 35

Of equinoxial in thilke toun;

¹ a little faster than a walk.

² agreement.

³ farther.

⁴ modesty.

⁵ chance.

⁶ since.

⁷ depart.

⁸ accident.

⁹ truth.

¹⁰ in.

¹¹ stop.

¹² remind you of it.

¹³ judgment.

¹⁴ destiny.

¹⁵ compact.

¹⁶ countenance.

¹⁷ advanced

¹⁸ that.

¹⁹ chattels

²⁰ income.

²¹ provided for.

²² bed-chamber.

²³ in keeping with.

²⁴ over-eating.

²⁵ a temperate.

²⁶ contentment.

²⁷ hindered.

²⁸ nor apoplexy.

²⁹ injured

³⁰ sort of dairymaid.

³¹ egg.

³² more certain.

³³ lodge.

³⁴ clock.

For whan degrees fiftene were ascended, Thanne crew he, that it mighte nat ben amended.¹

His comb was redder than the fyn coral,
And batailed,² as it were a castel-wal. 40
His bile³ was blak, and as the Iet⁴ it shoon;

Lyk asur were his legges, and his toon;⁵
His nayles whytter than the lillie flour,
And lyk the burned gold was his colour.
This gentil cok hadde in his governaunce 45
Sevene hennies, for to doon al his plesaunce, Whiche were his sustres and his para-mours,

And wonder lyk to him, as of colours.
Of whiche the faireste hewed on hir
throthe

Was cleped⁶ faire damoysele Pertelote. 50
Curteys she was, discreet, and debonaire,
And compaignable, and bar himself so faire,

Syn thilke day that she was seven night
old,

That trewely she hath the herte in hold⁷
Of Chauntecleer loken⁸ in every lith;⁹ 55
He loved hir so, that wel was him ther-with.

But such a Ioye was it to here hem singe, Whan that the brighte sonne gan to
springe,

In swete accord, "My lief is faren¹⁰ in londe."

For thilke tyme, as I have understonde, 60
Bestes and briddes coude speke and singe.

And so bifel, that in a daweninge,¹¹
As Chauntecleer among his wyves alle
Sat on his perche, that was in the halle,
And next him sat this faire Pertelote, 65
This Chauntecleer gan gronen in his throthe,
As man that in his dreem is drecched¹²
sore.

And whan that Pertelote thus herde him
rore,

She was agast, and seyde, "O herte dere,
What eyleth yow, to grone in this manere?
Ye been a verray¹³ sleper, fy for shame!" 71
And he answerde and seyde thus, "madame,

I pray yow, that ye take it nat agrief:
By god, me mette¹⁴ I was in swich mes-chief

Right now, that yet myn herte is sore afright. 75

Now god," quod he, "my sweven¹⁵ rede¹⁶
aright,

And keep my body out of foul prisoun!
Me mette, how that I romed up and doun Withinne our yerde, wher as I saugh a
beste,

Was lyk an hound, and wolde han maad
areste 80

Upon my body, and wolde han had me
deed.

His colour was bitwixe yelwe and reed;
And tipped was his tail, and bothe his eres,
With blak, unlyk the remenant of his heres;

His snowte smal, with glowinge eyen
tweye. 85

Yet of his look for fere almost I deye;
This caused me my groning, doutelees."

"Avoy!" quod she, "fy on yow, hertelees!

Allas!" quod she, "for, by that god above,
Now han ye lost myn herte and al my love;
I can nat love a coward, by my feith. 91

For certes, what so any womman seith,
We alle desyren, if it mighte be,

To han housbondes hardy, wyse, and free, 17
And secree, and no nigard, ne no fool, 95

Ne him that is agast of every tool,¹⁸
Ne noon avauntour,¹⁹ by that god above!

How dorste ye seyn for shame unto your
love,

That any thing mighte make yow aferd?
Have ye no mannes herte, and han a berd?

Allas! and conne ye been agast of swevenis?
No-thing, god wot, but vanitee, in sweven
is. 102

Swevenes engendren of²⁰ replecciouns,
And ofte of fume,²¹ and of complecciouns,²²

Whan humours been to habundant in a
wight. 105

Certes this dreem, which ye han met to-
night,

Cometh of the grete superfluitee
Of youre rede²³ colera,²⁴ pardee,
Which causeth folk to dreden in here
dremes

Of arwes,²⁵ and of fyr with rede lemes, 110
Of grete bestes, that they wol hem byte,

Of contek,²⁷ and of whelpes grete and lyte;

¹ improved. ² indented

³ toes.

⁴ locked.

⁵ troubled.

⁶ named.

⁷ limb.

⁸ true.

⁹ bill

¹⁰ possession, safe-keeping.

¹¹ gone

¹² I dreamed.

¹³ jet.

¹⁴ dawn.

¹⁵ dream

¹⁶ boaster.

¹⁷ temperaments.

¹⁸ arrows.

¹⁹ explain.

²⁰ are caused by.

²¹ red

²² flames.

²³ generous.

²⁴ vapor.

²⁵ cholera.

²⁶ strife.

Right as the humour of malencolye
 Causeth ful many a man, in sleep, to crye,
 For fere of blake beres,¹ or boles² blake,
 Or elles, blake develes wole hem take. 116
 Of othere humours coude I telle also,
 That werken many a man in sleep ful wo;
 But I wol passe as lightly as I can.

Lo Catoun, which that was so wys a
 man, 120
 Seyde he nat thus, ne do no fors of³
 dremes?

Now, sire," quod she, "whan we flee fro
 the bemes,

For Goddes love, as tak som laxatyf;
 Up peril of my soule,⁴ and of my lyf,
 I counseille yow the beste, I wol nat
 lye, 125

That both of colere, and of malencolye
 Ye purge yow; and for ye shul nat tarie,
 Though in this toun is noon apotecarie,
 I shal my-self to herbes techen yow,
 That shul ben for your hele,⁵ and for your prow;⁶ 130

And in our yerd tho herbes shal I finde,
 The whiche han of here propretee, by kinde,⁷

To purgen yow binethe, and eek above.
 Forget not this, for goddes owene love!
 Ye been ful colerik of compleccioun. 135
 Ware⁸ the sonne in his ascencioun
 Ne fynde yow nat repleet of humours
 hote;

And if it do, I dar wel leye a grote,
 That ye shul have a fevere terciane,
 Or an agu, that may be youre bane.⁹ 140
 A day or two ye shul have digestyves
 Of wormes, er ye take your laxatyves,
 Of lauriol, centaure, and fumetere,
 Or elles of ellebor, that groweth there,
 Of catapuce, or of gaytres beryis,¹⁰ 145
 Of erbe yve,¹¹ growing in our yerd, that mery is;

Pekke hem up right as they growe, and ete hem in.

Be mery, housbond, for your fader kin!
 Dredeth no dreem; I can say yow namore."

"Madame," quod he, "graunt mercy of your lore. 150

But natheles, as touching daun¹² Catoun,
 That hath of wisdom such a greet renoun,

Though that he bad no dremes for to
 drede,

By god, men may in olde bokes rede
 Of many a man, more of auctoritee 155
 Than ever Catoun was, so moot I thee,¹³

That al the revers seyn of his sentence,
 And han wel founden by experience,
 That drèmes ben significaciouns,
 As wel of Ioye as tribulaciouns 160

That folk enduren in this lyf present.
 Ther nedeth make of this noon argument;
 The verray preve¹⁴ sheweth it in dede.

Oon of the grettest auctours that men
 rede

Seith thus, that whylom two felawes¹⁵
 wente 165

On pilgrimage, in a full good intente;
 And happed so, they come into a toun,
 Wher as ther was swich congregacioun
 Of peple, and eek so streit¹⁶ of herber-gage,¹⁷ 169

That they ne founde as muche as o¹⁸ cotage,
 In which they bothe mighte y-logged be.
 Wherfor thay mosten, of necessitee,

As for that night, departen compaignye;
 And ech of hem goth to his hostelrye,
 And took his logging as it wolde falle. 175

That oon of hem was logged in a stalle,
 Fer in a yerd, with oxen of the plough;
 That other man was logged wel y-nough.
 As was his aventure,¹⁹ or his fortune,
 That us governeth alle as in commune.²⁰ 180

And so bifel, that, long er it were day,
 This man mette²¹ in his bed, ther-as he
 lay,

How that his felawe gan up-on him calle,
 And seyde, 'allas! for in an oxes stalle
 This night I shal be mordred ther²² I lye.
 Now help me, dere brother, er I dye; 186
 In alle haste com to me,' he sayde.

This man out of his sleep for fere abrayde;²³
 But whan that he was wakned of his sleep,
 He turned him, and took of this no keep;²⁴
 Him thoughte his dreem nas but a vanitee.

Thus twyes in his sleping dremed he. 192
 And atte thridde tyme yet his felawe Cam, as him thoughte, and seide 'I am now slawe;²⁵

Bihold my bloody woundes, depe and wyde! 195

Arys up erly in the morwe-tyde,

¹ bears. ² bulls ³ pay no attention to.
⁴ by my soul. ⁵ healing. ⁶ profit
⁷ nature. ⁸ take care lest. ⁹ death.
¹⁰ berries of the gay-tree. ¹¹ ground ivy.
¹² dominus, lord

¹³ may I prosper. ¹⁴ proof. ¹⁵ companions. ¹⁶ little.
¹⁷ lodging. ¹⁸ one. ¹⁹ chance.
²⁰ commonly. ²¹ dreamed. ²² where.
²³ started. ²⁴ thought, care. ²⁵ slain.

And at the west gate of the toun,' quod
 he,
 'A carte ful of donge ther shaltow¹ see,
 In which my body is hid ful prively;
 Do thilke carte aresten boldely. 200
 My gold caused my mordre, sooth to sayn;'
 And tolde hym every poynt how he was
 slayn,
 With a ful pitous face, pale of hewe.
 And truste wel, his dreem he fond ful
 trewe;
 For on the morwe, as sone as it was day, 205
 To his felawes in² he took the way;
 And whan that he cam to this oxes stalle,
 After his felawe he bigan to calle.
 The hostiler answered hym anon,
 And seyde, 'sire, your felawe is agon, 210
 As sone as day he wente out of the toun.'
 This man gan fallen in suspecion,
 Remembring on his dremes that he mette,
 And forth he goth, no lenger wolde he lette,³
 Unto the west gate of the toun, and fond
 A dong-carte, as it were to donge lond, 216
 That was arrayed in that same wyse
 As ye han herd the dede man devyse;
 And with an hardy herte he gan to crye
 Vengeaunce and Iustice of this felonye:—
 'My felawe mordred is this same night, 221
 And in this carte he lyth gapinge upright.⁴
 I crye out on the ministres,' quod he,
 'That sholden kepe and reulen this citee;
 Harrow! allas! her lyth my felawe slayn!'
 What sholde I more unto this tale sayn? 226
 The peple out-sterre, and cast the cart to grounde,
 And in the middel of the dong they founde
 The dede man that mordred was al newe.
 O blisful god, that art so Iust and trewe!
 Lo, how that thou biwreyst⁵ mordre
 alway! 231
 Mordre wol out, that se we day by day.
 Mordre is so wlatom⁶ and abhominable
 To god, that is so Iust and resonable,
 That he ne wol nat suffre it heled⁷ be; 235
 Though it abyde a yeer, or two, or three,
 Mordre wol out, this⁸ my conclusioun.
 And right anon, ministres of that toun
 Han hent the carter, and so sore him pyned,⁹
 And eek the hostiler so sore engyned,¹⁰ 240

¹ shalt thou.² revealst.³ scorned.⁴ inn.⁵ heinous.⁶ delay⁷ concealed.⁸ this is.⁹ racked.¹⁰ on his back.

That thay biknewe¹¹ hir wikkednesse
 anon,

And were an-hanged by the nekke-boon.
 Here may men seen that dremes been to drede.

And certes, in the same book I rede,
 Right in the nexte chapitre after this, 245
 (I gabbe¹² nat, so have I loye or blis),
 Two men that wolde han passed over
 see,

For certeyn cause, in-to a fer contree,
 If that the wind ne hadde been contrarie,
 That made hem in a citee for to tarie, 250
 That stood ful mery upon an haven-syde.
 But on a day, agayn¹³ the even-tyde,
 The wind gan chaunge, and blew right as hem leste.

Iolif and glad they wente un-to hir reste,
 And casten hem¹⁴ ful erly for to saille; 255
 But to that oo¹⁵ man fel a greet mervaille.

That oon of hem, in sleping as he lay,
 Him mette a wonder dreem, agayn the
 day;

Him thoughte a man stood by his beddes
 syde,

And him comaunded, that he sholde
 abyde, 260

And seyde him thus, 'if thou to-morwe
 wende,

Thou shalt be dreynt;¹⁶ my tale is at an ende.'

He wook, and tolde his felawe what he mette,

And preyde him his viage for to lette;¹⁷
 As for that day, he preyde him to abyde.

His felawe, that lay by his beddes syde, 266
 Gan for to laughe, and scorned him ful faste.

'No dreem,' quod he, 'may so myn herte
 agaste,¹⁸

That I wol lette for to do my thinges.¹⁹
 I sette na straw by thy dreminges, 270

For swevenes been but vanitees and lapes.²⁰

Men dreme al-day of owles or of apes,
 And eke of many a mase²¹ therewithal;

Men dreme of thing that nevere was ne
 shal.

But sith²² I see that thou wolt heer abyde,
 And thus for-sleuthen²³ wilfully thy tyde,

¹¹ acknowledged.¹² one.¹³ terrify.¹⁴ bewilderment.¹⁵ lie.¹⁶ drowned.¹⁷ business¹⁸ since.¹⁹ towards.²⁰ planned.²¹ delay²² jests.²³ waste.

God wot it reweth me;¹ and have good day.²⁷⁷

And thus he took his leve, and wente his way.

But er that he hadde halfe his cours y-seyled,

Noot I nat why, ne what mischaunce it eyled,²⁸⁰

But casuelly² the shippes botme rente, And ship and man under the water wente

In sighte of othere shippes it byside, That with hem seyed at the same tyde.

And therfor, faire Pertelote so dere,²⁸⁵ By swiche ensamples olde maistow³ lere⁴

That no man sholde been to recchelees⁵ Of dremes, for I sey thee, doutelees,

That many a dreem ful sore is for to drede. Lo, in the lyf of saint Kenelm, I rede,²⁹⁰

That was Kenulphus sone, the noble king Of Mercenrike,⁶ how Kenelm mette a thing;

A lyte⁷ er he was mordred, on a day, His mordre in his avisioun he say.⁸

His norice⁹ him expounded every del²⁹⁵ His sweven, and bad him for to kepe him wel

For¹⁰ traisoun; but he nas but seven yeer old,

And therfore litel tale¹¹ hath he told¹² Of any dreem, so holy was his herte.

By god, I hadde lever¹³ than my sherte³⁰⁰ That ye had rad his legende, as have I.

Dame Pertelote, I sey yow trewely, Macrobeus, that writ the avisioun

In Affrike of the worthy Cipioun, Affermeth dremes, and seith that they been³⁰⁵ Warning of things that men after seen.

And forther-more, I pray yow loketh wel In the olde testament, of Daniel,

If he held dremes any vanitee. Reed eek of Ioseph, and ther shul ye see³¹⁰

Wher¹⁴ dremes ben somtyme (I sey nat alle)

Warning of things that shul after falle. Loke of Egipt the king, daun Pharao,

His bakere and his boteler also,³¹⁴ Wher they ne felte noon effect in dremes.

Who so wol seken actes¹⁵ of sondry remes¹⁶ May rede of dremes many a wondry thing.

¹ I am sorry.

² accidentally.

³ mayest thou.

⁴ learn.

⁵ careless.

⁶ Mercia.

⁷ little.

⁸ saw.

⁹ nurse.

¹⁰ for fear of.

¹¹ importance.

¹² placed.

¹³ rather.

¹⁴ whether.

¹⁵ realms.

¹⁶ records.

Lo Cresus, which that was of Lyde¹⁷ king, Mette he nat that he sat upon a tree,

Which signified he sholde anhangd be?³²⁰ Lo heer Andromacha, Ectores wyf,

That day that Ector sholde lese¹⁸ his lyf, She dremed on the same night biforn,

How that the lyf of Ector sholde be lorn,¹⁹ If thilke day he wente in-to bataille;³²⁵

She warned him, but it mighte nat availle; He wente for to fighte nathelees,

But he was slayn anoon of Achilles. But thilke tale is al to long to telle,

And eek it is ny²⁰ day, I may nat dwelle.³³⁰ Shortly I seye, as for conclusioun,

That I shal han of this avisioun Adversitee; and I seye forther-more,

That I ne telle of laxatyves no store,²¹ For they ben venimous, I woot it wel;³³⁵

I hem defye, I love hem never a del.²² Now let us speke of mirthe, and stinte²³

al this; Madame Pertelote, so have I blis,²⁴

Of o thing God hath sent me large grace;²⁵ For whan I see the beautee of your face,³⁴⁰

Ye ben so scarlet-reed about your yën,²⁶ It maketh al my drede for to dyen;

For, also siker²⁷ as In principio, Mulier est hominis confusio;

Madame, the sentence²⁸ of this Latin is— Womman is mannes Ioye and al his blis;³⁴⁶

* * * * *

I am so ful of Ioye and of solas³⁵⁰ That I defye bothe sweven and dreem."

And with that word he fley²⁹ down fro the beem,

For it was day, and eek his hennes alle; And with a chuk he gan hem for to calle,

For he had founde a corn, lay in the yerd. Royal he was, he was namore aferd;³⁵⁶

* * * * *

He loketh as it were a grim leoun; And on his toos he rometh up and doun,³⁶⁰

Him deynd not to sette his foot to grounde.

He chukketh, whan he hath a corn y-founde,

And to him rennen thanne his wyve; alle.

Thus royal, as a prince is in his halle,

¹⁷ Lydia.

¹⁸ lose.

¹⁹ lost.

²⁰ almost.

²¹ take no faith in.

²² never a bit.

²³ cease.

²⁴ as I hope for heaven.

²⁵ favor.

²⁶ eyes.

²⁷ as surely as.

²⁸ meaning.

²⁹ flew.

Leve I this Chauntecleer in his pasture;³⁶⁵
And after wol I telle his aventure.

Whan that the month in which the world bigan,
That highte March, whan god first maked
man,

Was complet, and y-passed were also,
Sin March bigan, thritty dayes and two,
Bifel that Chauntecleer, in al his pryde,³⁷¹
His seven wyves walking by his syde,
Caste up his eyen to the brighte sonne,
That in the signe of Taurus hadde y-ronne Twenty degrees and oon, and somewhat more;³⁷⁵

And knew by kynde,¹ and by noon other lore,²

That it was pryde,³ and crew with blisful
stevene.⁴

"The sonne," he sayde, "is clomben up on hevene

Fourty degrees and oon, and more, y-wis.⁵
Madame Pertelote, my worldes blis, ³⁸⁰ Herkneth thise blisful briddes how they
sing,

And see the fresshe floures how they
springe;

Ful is myn hert of revel and solas."
But sodeinly him fil a sorweful cas;⁶

For ever the latter ende of Ioye is wo. ³⁸⁵
God woot that worldly Ioye is sone ago;⁷

And if a rethor⁸ coude faire endyte,
He in a chronique sauffy⁹ mighte it write,
As for a sovereyn notabiltee.¹⁰

Now every wys man, lat him herkne me;
This storie is al-so trewe, I undertake, ³⁹¹
As is the book of Launcelot de Lake,
That wommen holde in ful gret reverence.
Now wol I torne agayn to my sentence.

A col-fox,¹¹ ful of sly iniquitee, ³⁹⁵
That in the grove hadde woned¹² yeres
three,

By heigh imaginacioun forncast,¹³
The same night thurgh-out the hegges¹⁴ brast¹⁵.

Into the yerd, ther Chauntecleer the faire
Was wont, and eek his wyves, to repaire;
And in a bed of wortes¹⁶ stille he lay, ⁴⁰¹
Til it was passed undern¹⁷ of the day,

Wayting his tyme on Chauntecleer to falle,
As gladly doon thise homicydes alle,

That in awayt ligen¹⁸ to mordre men. ⁴⁰⁵
O false morderer, lurking in thy den!

O newe Scariot, newe Genilon!
False dissimilour,¹⁹ O Greek Sinon,
That broghtest Troye al outrelly²⁰ to sorwe!
O Chauntecleer, acursed be that morwe,⁴¹⁰ That thou into that yerd flough fro the bemes!

Thou were ful wel y-warned by thy dremes,
That thilke day was perilous to thee.
But what that god forwot²¹ mot nedes²²
be,

After the opinioun of certeyn clerkis. ⁴¹⁵
Witnesse on him²³ that any perfit clerk is,
That in scole is gret altercacioun
In this matere, and greet disputisoun,
And hath ben of an hundred thousand
men.

But I ne can not bulte it to the bren,²⁴ ⁴²⁰
As can the holy doctour Augustyn,
Or Boece, or the bishop Bradwardyn,
Whether that goddes worthy forwiting Streyneth²⁵ me nedely²⁶ for to doon a thing,

(Nedely clepe I simple necessitee); ⁴²⁵
Or elles, if free choys be graunted me
To do that same thing, or do it noght, Though god forwot it, er that it was wroght;

Or if his witing streyneth nevere a del
But by necessitee condicionel. ⁴³⁰

I wol not han to do of swich matere;
My tale is of a cok, as ye may here,
That took his counsel of his wyf, with sorwe,

To walken in the yerd upon that morwe
That he had met the dreem, that I yow tolde. ⁴³⁵

Wommennes counseils been ful ofte
colde;²⁷

Wommannes conseil broghte us first to wo,

And made Adam fro paradys to go,
Ther as he was ful mery, and wel at ese.

But for I noot, to whom it mighte displese,
If I counsel of wommen wolde blame, ⁴⁴¹
Passe over, for I seyde it in my game.²⁸

Rede auctours,²⁹ wher they trete of swich matere,

And what thay seyn of wommen ye may here.

¹ nature.

² teaching.

³ nine o'clock A. M.

⁴ voice.

⁵ certainly.

⁶ a sad accident befell him

⁷ gone.

⁸ rhetorician.

⁹ safely ¹⁰ wonder.

¹¹ black fox.

¹² lived.

¹³ premeditated. ¹⁴ hedges

¹⁵ burst.

¹⁶ herbs.

¹⁷ the middle of the forenoon.

¹⁸ lie. ¹⁹ dissembler

²⁰ absolutely. ²¹ foresees.

²² necessarily.

²³ let him witness it.

²⁴ sift the matter.

²⁵ constrains.

²⁶ necessarily. ²⁷ baneful.

²⁸ in sport. ²⁹ authors.

Thise been the cokkes wordes, and nat
 myne; 445
 I can noon harm of no womman divyne.¹
 Faire in the sond,² to bathe hir merily, Lyth Pertelote, and alle hir sustres by,
 Agayn the sonne; and Chauntecleer so
 free
 Song merier than the mermayde in the
 see;
 For Phisiologus seith sikerly, 451
 How that they singen wel and merily.
 And so bifel, that as he caste his yē,
 Among the wortes,³ on a boterflye,
 He was war of this fox that lay ful lowe: 455
 No-thing ne liste him thanne for to crowe,
 But cryde anon, "cok, cok," and up he sterte,
 As man that was affrayed in his herte.
 For naturelly a beest desyareth flee
 Fro his contrarie, if he may it see, 460
 Though he never erst⁴ had seyn it with his yē.
 This Chauntecleer, whan he gan him
 espye,
 He wolde han fled, but that the fox anon Seyde, "Gentil sire, allas! wher wol ye gon?
 Be ye affrayed of me that am your freend?
 Now certes, I were worse than a feend, 466
 If I to yow wolde harm or vileinye.
 I am nat come your counseil⁵ for tespye;⁶
 But trewely, the cause of my cominge
 Was only for to herkne how that ye singe.
 For trewely ye have as mery a stevene,⁷ 471
 As eny aungel hath, that is in hevене;
 Therwith ye han in musik more felinge
 Than hadde Boece, or any that can singe.
 My lord your fader (god his soule blesse!)
 And eek your moder, of hir gentillesse, 476
 Han in myn hous y-been, to my gret ese,⁸
 And certes, sire, ful fayn wolde I yow plesse.
 But for men speke of singing, I wol saye,
 So mote I brouke⁹ wel myn eyen¹⁰ tweye, 480
 Save yow, I herde never man so singe,
 As dide your fader in the morweninge;
 Certes, it was of herte, al that he song.
 And for to make his voys the more strong,
 He wolde so payne him,¹¹ that with both his yēn¹⁰ 485
 He moste¹² winke, so loude he wolde
 cryen,

¹ declare. ² sand. ³ herbs. ⁴ before.
⁵ secrets. ⁶ to spy out. ⁷ voice. ⁸ pleasure.
⁹ have the use of. ¹⁰ eyes. ¹¹ take such pains.
¹² needed to

And stonden on his tiptoon¹³ therwithal
 And strecche forth his nekke long and smal.
 And eek he was of swich discrecioun,
 That ther nas no man in no regioun 490
 That him in song or wisdom mighte passe.
 I have weel rad in daun Burnel the Asse,
 Among his vers, how that ther was a cok,
 For that a preestes sone yaf him a knok
 Upon his leg, whyl he was yong and nyce,
 He made him for to lese¹⁴ his benefyce. 496
 But certeyn, ther nis no comparisoun
 Bitwix the wisdom and discrecioun
 Of youre fader, and of his subtiltee.
 Now singeth, sire, for seinte¹⁵ charitee, 500
 Let see, conne ye your fader countre-fete?"¹⁶
 This Chauntecleer his winges gan to bete,¹⁷
 As man that coude his tresoun nat espye,
 So was he ravished with his flaterye.
 Allas! ye lordes, many a fals flatour¹⁸ 505
 Is in your courtes, and many a losengeour,¹⁹
 That plesen yow wel more, by my feith,
 Than he that soothfastnesse²⁰ unto yow
 seith.
 Redeth Ecclesiaste of flaterye;
 Beth²¹ war,²² ye lordes, of hir trecherye. 510
 This Chauntecleer stood hye up-on his toos,
 Strecching his nekke, and heeld his eyen
 cloos,
 And gan to crowe loude for the nones;
 And daun Russel the fox sterte up at ones,²³
 And by the gargat²⁴ hente²⁵ Chauntecleer,
 And on his bak toward the wode him
 beer,²⁶ 516
 For yet ne was ther no man that him sewed.²⁷
 O destinee, that mayst nat ben eschewed!²⁸ Allas, that Chauntecleer fleigh fro the bemes!
 Allas, his wyf ne roghte²⁹ nat of dremes! 520
 And on a Friday fil al this meschaunce.
 O Venus, that art goddesse of plesaunce,³⁰
 Sin that thy servant was this Chauntecleer,
 And in thy service dide al his poweer,
 More for delyt, than world to multiplie, Why woldestow³¹ suffre him on thy day to dye? 526

¹³ tip-toes. ¹⁴ lose. ¹⁵ holy. ¹⁶ imitate. ¹⁷ flap.
¹⁸ flatterer. ¹⁹ deceiver ²⁰ truth. ²¹ be.
²² wary. ²³ at once. ²⁴ throat. ²⁵ seized.
²⁶ bore ²⁷ followed. ²⁸ avoided. ²⁹ wouldst thou.
³⁰ cared. ³¹ delight.

O Gaufred, dere mayster soverayn,
 That, whan thy worthy king Richard was slayn
 With shot, compleynedest his deth so sore, Why ne hadde I¹ now thy sentence² and thy lore,³ 530
 The Friday for to chide, as diden ye?
 (For on a Friday soothly slayn was he.) Than wolde I shewe yow how that I coude pleyne⁴
 For Chauntecleres drede,⁵ and for his peyne.⁶ Certes, swich⁷ cry ne lamentacioun 535
 Was never of ladies maad, whan Ilioun
 Was wonne, and Pirrus with his streite⁸
 swerd, Whan he hadde hent⁹ king Priam by the berd,
 And slayn him (as saith us Eneydos),
 As maden alle the hennes in the clos,¹⁰ 540 Whan they had seyn of Chauntecleer the sighte.
 But sovereynly dame Pertelote shrighthe,
 Ful louder than dide Hasdrubales wyf,
 Whan that hir housbond hadde lost his lyf,
 And that the Romayns hadde brend¹¹
 Cartage. 545
 She was so ful of torment and of rage,
 That wilfully into the fyr she sterte,¹²
 And brende hir-selven with a stedfast herte.
 O woful hennes, right so cryden ye,
 As, whan that Nero brende the citee 550
 Of Rome, cryden senatoures wyves,
 For that hir housbondes losten alle hir
 lyves;
 Withouten gilt this Nero hath hem slayn.
 Now wol I torne to my tale agayn.
 This sely¹³ widwe, and eek hir doghtres
 two, 555
 Herden thise hennes crye and maken wo,
 And out at dores sterten thay anon,
 And syen¹⁴ the fox toward the grove goon,
 And bar upon his bak the cok away; 559
 And cryden, "Out! harrow! and weylaway!
 Ha, ha, the fox!" and after him they ran,
 And eek with staves many another man;
 Ran Colle our dogge, and Talbot, and Gerland,
 And Malkin, with a distaf in hir hand;

¹ had I not.⁴ lament.⁷ such.¹⁰ enclosure.¹³ simple.² learning.⁶ fear.⁸ drawn.¹¹ burned³ knowledge.⁶ grief.⁹ seized¹² leaped.¹⁴ saw.

Ran cow and calf, and eek the verray hogges, 565
 So were they fered for¹⁵ berking of the dogges
 And shouting of the men and wimmen eke,
 They ronne so, hem thoughte hir herte breke.
 They yelleden as feendes doon¹⁶ in helle;
 The dokes cryden as¹⁷ men wolde hem
 quelle;¹⁸ 570
 The gees for fere flowen over the trees;
 Out of the hyve cam the swarm of bees;
 So hidous was the noyse, a! benedicite!
 Certes, he lakke Straw, and his meynee,¹⁹
 Ne maden²⁰ never shoutes half so shrille,
 Whan that they wolden any Fleming kille,
 As thilke day was maad upon the fox. 577
 Of bras thay broghten bemes,²¹ and of box,²²
 Of horn, of boon, in whiche they blewe and pouped,²³
 And therewithal they shryked and they houped;²⁴ 580
 It semed as that heven sholde falle.
 Now, gode men, I pray yow herkneth
 alle!
 Lo, how fortune turneth sodeinly
 The hope and pryde eek of hir enemy!
 This cok, that lay upon the foxes bak, 585
 In al his drede, un-to the fox he spak,
 And seyde, "sire, if that I were as ye,
 Yet sholde I seyn (as wis²⁵ god helpe me),
 'Turneth agayn, ye proude charles alle!
 A verray pestilence up-on yow falle! 590
 Now am I come un-to this wodes syde, Maugree your heed,²⁶ the cok shal heer
 abyde;
 I wol him ete in feith, and that anon.'"
 The fox answerde, "in feith, it shal be don,"—
 And as he spak that word, al sodeinly 595
 This cok brak²⁷ from his mouth deliverly,²⁸
 And heighe²⁹ up-on a tree he fleigh anon.
 And whan the fox saugh that he was
 y-gon,
 "Allas!" quod he, "O Chauntecleer, alas!
 I have to yow," quod he, "y-doon trespas,
 In-as-muche as I maked yow aferd, 601 Whan I yow hente, and broghte out of the yerd;

¹⁵ frightened by.²⁰ did not make.²³ puffed.²⁶ in spite of your head; in²⁷ broke.¹⁶ do²¹ trumpets.²⁴ whooped²⁵ as if²⁸ surely.¹⁷ as if²¹ trumpets.²⁴ whooped²⁵ as if²⁸ surely.¹⁹ company.²² box-wood.²³ surely.²⁶ in spite of all you can do²⁷ high.

But, sire, I dide it in no wikke¹ entente;
 Com doun, and I shal telle yow what I mente.
 I shal seye sooth to yow, god help me so."
 "Nay than," quod he, "I shrewe² us bothe
 two, 606
 And first I shrewe my-self, bothe blood and bones,
 If thou bigyle me offer than ones.
 Thou shalt namore, thurgh thy flaterye
 Do me to³ singe and winke with myn
 yē. 610
 For he that winketh, whan he sholde see,
 Al wilfully, god lat him never thee!"⁴
 "Nay," quod the fox, "but god yeve⁵ him meschaunce,⁶
 That is so undiscreet of governaunce,⁷ That iangleth⁸ whan he sholde holde his pees." 615
 Lo, swich it is for to be recchelees,⁹
 And negliget, and truste on flaterye.
 But ye that holden this tale a folye,¹⁰
 As of a fox, or of a cok and hen,
 Taketh the moralitee, good men. 620
 For seint Paul seith, that al that writen is,
 To¹¹ our doctryne¹² it is y-write, y-wis.
 Taketh the fruyt, and lat the chaf be stille.
 Now, gode god, if that it be thy wille,
 As seith my lord, so make us alle good men;
 And bringe us to his heighe blisse. Amen.

THE PARDONER'S TALE

Heere bigynneth the Pardoners Tale

In Flaundes whylom was a companye
 Of yonge folk, that haunteden¹³ folye, 136
 As ryot, hasard,¹⁴ stewes,¹⁵ and tavernes,
 Wher-as, with harpes, lutes, and giternes,¹⁶
 They daunce and pleye at dees bothe day
 and night,
 And ete also and drinken over hir might,
 Thurgh which they doon the devel sacrificyse 141
 With-in that develes temple, in cursed wyse,
 By superfluitee abhominable;
 Hir othes been so gret and so dampnable,
 That it is grisly for to here hem swere; 145
 Our blissed lordes body they to-tere;¹⁷

¹ wicked. ² curse. ³ make me. ⁴ prosper.
⁵ give. ⁶ bad luck. ⁷ self-control. ⁸ prattles.
⁹ careless. ¹⁰ silly thing. ¹¹ for. ¹² prattles.
¹³ teaching. ¹⁴ practised. ¹⁵ gambling. ¹⁶ tear in pieces
¹⁷ brotels. ¹⁸ guitars.

Hem thoughte¹⁸ Iewes rente him noght ynough;
 And ech of hem at otheres sinne lough.
 And right anon than comen tombesteres¹⁹
 Fetys²⁰ and smale, and yonge fruyteteres,²¹
 Singers with harpes [eek, and] wafereres,²²
 Whiche been the verray develes officeres
 To kindle and blowe the fyr of [luxurye],
 That is annexed un-to glotonye;
 The holy writ take I to my witnesse, 155
 That luxurie is in wyn and dronkenesse.

* * * * *

Herodes (who so wel the stories soughte)
 Whan he of wyn was replet at his feste, 161
 Ryght at his owene table he yaf his heste²³
 To sleen the Baptist John ful gyltelees.
 Senek²⁴ seith eek a good word doutelees;
 He seith, he can no difference finde 165
 Bitwix a man that is out of his minde
 And a man which that is dronkelewe,²⁵
 But that woodnesse,²⁶ yfallen in a shrewe,²⁷
 Persevereth lenger than doth dronken-
 esse.

O glotonye, ful of cursednesse, 170
 O cause first of our confusioun,
 O original of our dampnacioun,
 Til Crist had boght us with his blood agayn!

Lo, how dere, shortly for to sayn,
 Aboght²⁸ was thilke cursed vileinye; 175
 Corrupt was al this world for glotonye!

Adam our fader, and his wyf also,
 Fro Paradys to labour and to wo
 Were driven for that vyce, it is no drede;²⁹
 For whyl that Adam fasted, as I rede, 180
 He was in Paradys; and whan that he Eet of the fruyt defended³⁰ on the tree,
 Anon he was out-cast to wo and peyne.
 O glotonye, on thee wel oghte us pleyne!³¹
 O, wiste a man how many maladyes 185
 Folwen of excesse and of glotonies,
 He wolde been the more mesurable³²
 Of his diete, sittinge at his table.

Allas! the shorte throte, the tendre mouth, Maketh that, Est and West, and North and South, 190
 In erthe, in eir, in water men to-swinke³³
 To gete a glotoun deyntee mete and drinke!

¹⁸ it seemed to them. ¹⁹ dancing girls. ²⁰ graceful.
²¹ fruit sellers. ²² confectioners. ²³ command.
²⁴ Seneca. ²⁵ a drunkard. ²⁶ madness.
²⁷ wretch. ²⁸ bought. ²⁹ without doubt. ³⁰ forbidden.
³¹ complain. ³² temperate. ³³ labor hard.

Of this matere, O Paul, wel canstow trete,
 "Mete un-to wombe,¹ and wombe eek
 un-to mete,
 Shal god destroyen bothe," as Paulus
 seith. 195

Allas! a foul thing is it, by my feith,
 To seye this word, and fouler is the dede, Whan man so drinketh of the whyte and
 rede.

That of his throte he maketh his privee,
 Thurgh thilke cursed superfluitee. 200

The apostel weping seith ful pitously,
 "Ther walken many of whiche yow told
 have I,

I seye it now weping with pitous voys,
 That they been enemys of Cristes croys,²
 Of whiche the ende is deeth, wombe¹ is her god." 205

* * * * *

How gret labour and cost is thee to fynde!³

These cokes, how they stampe, and streyne,⁴ and grinde, 210

And turnen substaunce in-to accident,
 To fulfille al thy likerous⁵ talent!⁶

Out of the harde bones knocke they
 The mary,⁷ for they caste noght a-wey

That may go thurgh the golet softe and swote;⁸ 215

Of spicerye, of leef, and bark, and rote⁹
 Shal been his sauce ymaked by delyt,

To make him yet a newer appetyt.
 But certes, he that haunteth swich
 delyces¹⁰

Is deed, whyl that he liveth in tho vyces.
 A [cursed] thing is wyn, and dronken-
 esse 221

Is ful of stryving¹¹ and of wrecchednesse.
 O dronke man, disfigured is thy face,

Sour is thy breeth, foul artow to embrace,
 And thurgh thy dronke nose semeth the soun¹² 225

As though thou seydest ay "Sampsoun, Sampsoun,"

And yet, god wot, Sampsoun drank never no wyn.

Thou fallest, as it were a stiked swyn;
 Thy tonge is lost, and al thyn honest cure;¹³

For dronkenesse is verray sepulture 230

¹ belly.

² cross.

³ maintain

⁴ labor

⁵ dainty.

⁶ appetite.

⁷ marrow.

⁸ sweetly

⁹ root.

¹⁰ pleasures.

¹¹ strife.

¹² sound.

¹³ care for honorable reputation.

Of mannes wit and his discrecioun.

In whom that drinke hath dominacioun,
 He can no conseil kepe, it is no drede.

Now kepe yow fro the whyte and fro the
 rede,

And namely fro the whyte wyn of Lepe,²³⁵
 That is to selle in Fishstrete or in Chepe.

This wyn of Spayne crepeth subtilly

In othere wyne, growing faste by,

Of which ther ryseth swich fumositee,¹⁴

That whan a man hath dronken draughtes
 three, 240

And weneth¹⁵ that he be at hoom in Chepe,
 He is in Spayne, right at the toun of Lepe,

Nat at the Rochel, ne at Burdeux toun;
 And thanne wol he seye, "Sampsoun, Sampsoun."

But herkneht, lordings, o word, I yow
 preye, 245

That alle the sovereyn actes, dar I seye,

Of victories in the olde testament,

Thurgh verray¹⁶ god, that is omnipotent,
 Were doon in abstinence and in preyere;

Loketh the Bible, and ther ye may it lere.
 Loke, Attila, the grete conquerour, 251

Deyde¹⁷ in his sleep, with shame and dishonour,

Bleding ay at his nose in dronkenesse;
 A capitayn shoulde live in sobernesse.

And over al this, avyseth yow¹⁸ right wel 255
 What was comaunded un-to Lamuel—

Nat Samuel, but Lamuel, seye I—

Redeth the Bible, and finde it expresly

Of wyn-yeving¹⁹ to hem that han lustyse;
 Namore of this, for it may wel suffyse. 260

And now that I have spoke of glotonye,
 Now wol I yow defenden²⁰ hasardrye.²¹

Hasard is verray moder of lesinges,²²

And of deceite, and cursed forsweringes,²³ Blaspheme of Crist, manslaughter, and wast²⁴ also 265

Of catel²⁵ and of tyme; and forthermo,

It is repreve²⁶ and contrarie of honour

For to ben holde²⁷ a commune hasardour.
 And ever the hyer he is of estaat,

The more is he holden desolaat.²⁸ 270

If that a prince useth hasardrye,

In alle governaunce and policye

He is, as by commune opinoun,

Yholde the lasse in reputacioun.

¹⁴ confusing fumes.

¹⁵ died.

¹⁶ consider.

¹⁷ giving.

¹⁸ the true.

¹⁹ gambling.

²⁰ lies.

²¹ perjury.

²² waste.

²³ wealth.

²⁴ a reproach.

²⁵ known as.

²⁶ shunned.

Stilbon, that was a wys embassadour,²⁷⁵
Was sent to Corinthe, in ful greet honour,
Fro Lacidomie, to make hir alliaunce.

And whan he cam, him happede, par
chaunce,
That alle the grettest that were of that
lond,

Pleyinge atte hasard he hem fond. 280
For which, as sone as it mighte be,
He stal¹ him hoom¹ agayn to his contree,
And seyde, "Ther wol I nat lese² my
name;

Ne I wol nat take on me so greet defame,³
Yow for to allye un-to none hasardours. 285
Sendeth othere wyse embassadours;
For, by my trouthe, me were lever⁴ dye,
Than I yow sholde to hasardours allye.
For ye that been so glorious in honours
Shul nat allyen yow with hasardours 290
As by my wil, ne as by my trettee."

This wyse philosophre thus seyde he.

Loke eek that to the king Demetrius
The king of Parthes, as the book seith
us,

Sente him a paire of dees⁵ of gold in scorn,
For he hadde used hasard ther-biforn; 296
For which he heeld his glorie or his renoun
At no value or reputacioun.

Lordes may fynden other maner pley
Honeste ynough to dryve the day away. 300

Now wol I speke of othes false and grete
A word or two, as olde bokes trete.

Gret swering is a thing abhominable,
And fals swering is yet more reprevable.
The heighe god forbad swering at al, 305

Witnesse on Mathew; but in special
Of swering seith the holy Ieremye, "Thou shalt seye sooth⁶ thyn othes, and nat lye,

And swere in dome,⁷ and eek in rightwisnesse;"

But ydel swering is a cursednesse. 310
Bihold and see, that in the firste table

Of heighe goddes hestes⁸ honourable,
How that the seconde heste of him is
this—

"Tak nat my name in ydel⁹ or amis."

Lo, rather he forbedeth swich swering 315
Than homicyde or many a cursed thing;
I seye that, as by ordre, thus it stondeth;
This knowen, that¹⁰ his hestes under-stondeth,

¹ returned. ² lose. ³ dishonor. ⁴ I would rather.
⁵ dice. ⁶ truthfully. ⁷ judgment.
⁸ commandments. ⁹ in vain. ¹⁰ those who.

How that the second heste of god is that.
And forther over, I wol thee telle al plat,¹¹ That vengeance shal nat parten¹² from his hous, 321

That of his othes is to outrageous.

"By goddes precious herte, and by his nayles,

And by the blode of Crist, that it is in Hayles,

Seven is my chaunce, and thyn is cink¹³
and treye;¹⁴ 325

By goddes armes, if thou falsly pleye,
This dagger shal thurgh-out thyn herte
go"—

This fruyt cometh of the bicched¹⁵ bones
two,

Forswering, ire, falsnesse, homicyde.

Now, for the love of Crist that for us dyde,
Leveth your othes, bothe grete and smale;
But, sirs, now wol I telle forth my tale. 332

Thisse ryotoures three, of whiche I telle, Longe erst er pryme¹⁶ rong of any belle,
Were set hem in a taverne for to drinke; 335
And as they satte, they herde a belle clinke
Biforn a cors, was caried to his grave;

That oon of hem gan callen to his knave,
"Go bet,"¹⁷ quod he, "and axe redily,

What cors is this that passeth heer forby;
And look that thou reporte his name
wel." 341

"Sir," quod this boy, "it nedeth
neveradel.¹⁸

It was me told, er ye cam heer, two houres;
He was, pardee, an old felawe¹⁹ of youres;
And sodeynly he was yslayn to-night, 345

For-dronke,²⁰ as he sat on his bench upright;

Ther cam a privee theef, men clepeth²¹
Deeth,

That in this contree al the peple sleeth,
And with his spere he smoot his herte
atwo, 349

And wente his wey with-outen wordes mo.
He hath a thousand slayn this pestilence:

And, maister, er ye come in his presence,
Me thinketh that it were necessarie
For to be war of swich an adversarie:

Beth redy for to mete him evermore. 355
Thus taughte me my dame, I sey namore."

"By seinte Marie," seyde this taverner,
"The child seith sooth,²² for he hath slayn
this yeer,

¹¹ plainly. ¹² depart. ¹³ five. ¹⁴ three. ¹⁵ cursed.
¹⁶ nine o'clock A. M. ¹⁷ quickly. ¹⁸ there is no need of it.
¹⁹ companion. ²⁰ dead drunk. ²¹ name. ²² truth.

Henne¹ over a myle, with-in a greet village,
Both man and womman, child and hyne,² and page. 360

I trowe his habitacioun be there;
To been avysed³ greet wisdom it were,
Er that he dide a man a dishonour."

"Ye, goddes armes," quod this ryotour,
"Is it swich peril with him for to mete? 365
I shal him seke by wey and eek by strete,
I make a vow to goddes digne⁴ bones!
Herkeneth, felawes, we three been al ones;⁵
Lat ech of us holde up his hond til other,
And ech of us bicomene otheres brother, 370
And we wol sleen this false traytour Deeth;
He shal be slayn, which that so many sleeth,

By goddes dignitee, er it be night."

Togidres han thise three her trouthes plight,

To live and dyen ech of hem for other, 375
As though he were his owene yboren⁶
brother.

And up they sterte al dronken, in this rage,
And forth they goon towards that village,
Of which the taverner had spoke biforn,
And many a grisly ooth than han they sworn, 380

And Cristes blessed body they to-rente—
"Deeth shal be deed, if that they may him hente."⁷

Whan they han goon nat fully half a
myle,

Right as they wolde han troden over a
style,

An old man and a povre with hem mette.
This olde man ful mekely hem grette, 386
And seyde thus, "now, lordes, god yow see!"⁸

The proudest of thise ryoutoures three Answerde agayn, "what? carl,⁹ with sory grace,¹⁰

Why artow¹¹ al forwrapped¹² save thy face?
Why lyvestow so longe in so greet age?"³⁹¹

This olde man gan loke¹³ in his visage,
And seyde thus, "for I ne can nat finde
A man, though that I walked in-to Inde,
Neither in citee nor in no village, 395
That wolde chaunge his youthe for myn
age;

And therefore moot¹⁴ I han myn age stille,
As longe time as it is goddes wille.

¹ hence. ² servant. ³ forewarned ⁴ honorable
⁵ of one mind. ⁶ born. ⁷ seize.
⁸ protect. ⁹ churl. ¹⁰ bad luck to you.
¹¹ art thou. ¹² wrapped up. ¹³ looked. ¹⁴ must.

Ne deeth, allas! ne wol nat han my lyf;
Thus walke I, lyk a resteleees caityf, 400
And on the ground, which is my modres
gate,

I knokke with my staf, bothe erly and late,
And seye, 'leve¹⁵ moder, leet me in!
Lo, how I vanish, flesh, and blood, and skin!

Allas! whan shul my bones been at reste?
Moder, with yow wolde I chaunge my cheste, 406
That in my chambre longe tyme hath be,
Ye! for an heyre clowt¹⁶ to wrappe me!
But yet to me she wol nat do that grace,
For which ful pale and welked¹⁷ is my
face. 410

But, sirs, to yow it is no curteisye
To speken to an old man vileinye, But¹⁸ he trespasse in worde, or elles in dede.

In holy writ ye may your-self wel rede, 414
'Agayns¹⁹ an old man, hoor upon his heed,
Ye sholde aryse, wherfor I yeve yow reed,²⁰
Ne dooth un-to an old man noon harm
now,

Namore than ye wolde men dide to yow
In age, if that ye so longe abyde;
And god be with yow, wher²¹ ye go²² or ryde. 420

I moot go thider as I have to go."

"Nay, olde cherl, by god, thou shalt nat
so,"

Seyde this other hasardour anon,
"Thou partest nat so lightly, by seint Iohn!

Thou spak right now of thilke traitour
Deeth, 425

That in this contree alle our frendes sleeth.
Have heer my trouthe, as thou art his aspye,²³

Tel wher he is, or thou shalt it abyde,²⁴

By god, and by the holy sacrament!
For soothly thou art oon of his assent,²⁵ 430
To sleen us yonge folk, thou false thief!"

"Now, sirs," quod he, "if that yow be so leef²⁶

To finde Deeth, turne up this croked wey,
For in that grove I lafte him, by my fey,
Under a tree, and ther he wol abyde; 435
Nat for²⁷ your boost²⁸ he wol him no-thing hyde.

¹⁵ dear. ¹⁶ hair cloth. ¹⁷ withered ¹⁸ unless.
¹⁹ before. ²⁰ advice. ²¹ whether ²² walk.
²³ spy. ²⁴ rue. ²⁵ conspiracy. ²⁶ eager.
²⁷ on account of. ²⁸ boasting.

See ye that ook? right ther ye shul him finde.

God save yow, that boghte agayn mankinde,

And yow amende!"—thus seyde this olde
man.

And everich of thise ryoutoures ran, 440
Til he cam to that tree, and ther they founde

Of florins fyne of golde ycoyned rounde Wel ny an eighte¹ bussheles, as hem thoughte.

No lenger thanne after Deeth they soughte,
But ech of hem so glad was of that sighte,
For that the florins been so faire and bryghte, 446

That doun they sette hem by this precious hord.

The worste of hem he spak the firste word.
"Brethren," quod he, "tak kepe² what I seye;

My wit is greet, though that I bourde³ and pleye. 450

This tresor hath fortune un-to us yiven,
In mirthe and Iolitee our lyf to liver,
And lightly as it comth, so wol we spende.
Ey! goddes precious dignitee! who wende⁴
To-day, that we sholde han so faire a
grace? 455

But mighte this gold be caried fro this
place

Hoom to myn hous, or elles un-to youres—
For wel ye woot that al this gold is oures—
Than were we in heigh felicitee.

But trewely, by daye it may nat be; 460
Men wolde seyn that we were theves
stronge,

And for our owene tresor doon us honge.⁵
This tresor moste ycaried be by nighte
As wysly and as slyly as it mighte. 464
Wherfore I rede that cut among us alle
Be drawe, and lat se wher the cut wol falle;
And he that hath the cut with herte blythe Shal renne to the toun, and that ful swythe,⁶

And bringe us breed and wyn, ful prively.
And two of us shul kepen subtilly 470
This tresor wel; and, if he wol nat tarie,
Whan it is night, we wol this tresor carie
By oon assent, wher-as us thinketh⁷ best."
That oon of hem the cut broughte in his fest,⁸

And bad hem drawe, and loke wher it wol falle; 475

And it fil on the youngest of hem alle;

And forth toward the toun he wente anon.

And al-so sone as that he was gon,

That oon of hem spak thus un-to that other:

"Thou knowest wel thou art my sworne
brother, 480

Thy profit wol I telle thee anon.

Thou woost wel that our felawe is agon;

And heer is gold, and that ful greet plentee,

That shal departed been among us three.

But natheles, if I can shape it so 485

That it departed were among us two,

Hadde I nat doon a frendes torn to thee?"

That other answerde, "I noot⁹ how that may be;

He woot¹⁰ how that the gold is with us
tweye;

What shal we doon, what shal we to him
seye?" 490

"Shal it be conseil?"¹¹ seyde the firste
shrewe,¹²

"And I shal tellen thee, in wordes fewe,
What we shal doon, and bringe it wel aboute."

"I graunte," quod that other, "out of doute,

That, by my trouthe, I wol thee nat
biwrewe."¹³ 495

"Now," quod the firste, "thou woost
wel we be tweye,

And two of us shul strenger be than oon.

Look whan that he is set, and right anon

Arys, as though thou woldest with him
pleye;

And I shal ryve him thurgh the sydes
tweye 500

Whyl that thou strogelest with him as in game,

And with thy dagger look thou do the same;

And than shal al this gold departed be,
My dere freend, bitwixen me and thee;

Than may we bothe our lustes al fulfille,⁵⁰⁵
And pleye at dees right at our owene wille."

And thus acorded¹⁴ been thise shrewes
tweye

To sleen the thridde, as ye han herd me
seye.

¹ eight.

² note of.

³ jest.

⁴ thought.

⁵ have us hanged.

⁶ quickly.

⁷ it seems best.

⁸ fist.

⁹ know not.

¹² scoundrel.

¹⁰ knows.

¹³ betray.

¹¹ a secret.

¹⁴ agreed.

This yongest, which that wente un-to the toun,
Ful ofte in herte he rolleth up and doun ⁵¹⁰
The beautee of thise florins newe and bryghte.
"O lord!" quod he, "if so were that I mighte
Have al this tresor to my-self allone, Ther is no man that liveth under the trone¹
Of god, that sholde live so mery as I!" ⁵¹⁵
And atte laste the feend, our enemy, Putte in his thought that he shold poyson
beye,²
With which he mighte sleen his felawes
tweye;
For why³ the feend fond him in swich
lyvinge,
That he had leve⁴ him to sorwe bringe, ⁵²⁰
For this was outrelly⁵ his ful entente
To sleen hem bothe, and never to repente.
And forth he gooth, no lenger wolde he tarie,
Into the toun, un-to a pothecarie,
And preyed him, that he him wolde
selle ⁵²⁵
Som poyson, that he mighte his rattes quelle,⁶
And eek ther was a polcat in his hawe,⁷
That, as he seyde, his capouns hadde
yslawe,
And fayn he wolde wreke⁸ him, if he
mighte,
On vermin, that destroyed him by nighte.
The pothecarie answerde, "and thou shalt have ⁵³¹
A thing that, al-so god my soule save,
In al this world ther nis no creature,
That ete or dronke hath of this confiture⁹ Noght but the mountance¹⁰ of a corn of whete, ⁵³⁵
That he ne shal his lyf anon forlete,¹¹
Ye, sterve¹² he shal, and that in lasse whyle
Than thou wolt goon a paas¹³ nat but a
myle;
This poyson is so strong and violent."
This cursed man hath in his hond
yhent¹⁴ ⁵⁴⁰
This poyson in a box, and sith he ran
In-to the nexte strete, un-to a man,
And borwed of him large botels three;
And in the two his poyson poured he;

¹ throne ² buy. ³ because. ⁴ permission. ⁵ entirely.
⁶ kill. ⁷ yard. ⁸ avenge. ⁹ mixture. ¹⁰ amount.
¹¹ lose. ¹² die. ¹³ at a foot pace. ¹⁴ seized.

The thridde he kepte clene for his drinke.
For all the night he shoop him¹⁵ for to swinke¹⁶ ⁵⁴⁶
In caryinge of the gold out of that place.
And whan this ryotour, with sory grace,
Had filled with wyn his grete botels three,
To his felawes agayn repaireth he. ⁵⁵⁰
What nedeth it to sermone¹⁷ of it more?
For right as they had cast his deeth bifore, Right so they han him slayn, and that
anon.
And whan that this was doon, thus spak
that oon,
"Now lat us sitte and drinke, and make us
merie, ⁵⁵⁵
And afterward we wol his body berie." And with that word it happed him, par cas,¹⁸
To take the botel ther the poyson was,
And drank, and yaf his felawe drinke
also,
For which anon they storven¹⁹ bothe two.
But, certes, I suppose that Avicen ⁵⁶¹
Wroot never in no canon,²⁰ ne in no fen,²⁰
Mo²¹ wonder²² signes of empoisoning
Than hadde thise wrecches two, er hir ending.
Thus ended been thise homicydes two, ⁵⁶⁵
And eek the false empoysoner also.

O cursed sinne, ful of cursednesse!
O traytours homicyde, o wikkednesse!
O glotonye, luxurie, and hasardrye!
Thou blasphemour of Crist with vileinye
And othes grete, of usage²³ and of pryde!⁵⁷¹
Allas! mankynde, how may it bityde,
That to thy creatour which that thee
wroghte,
And with his precious herte-blood thee
boghte,
Thou art so fals and so unkinde, allas! ⁵⁷⁵
Now, goode men, god forgeve yow your trespas,
And ware yow²⁴ fro the sinne of avaryce.
Myn holy pardoun may yow alle waryce,²⁵
So that ye offre nobles or sterlinges,
Or elles silver broches, spones, ringes. ⁵⁸⁰
Boweth your heed under this holy bulle!
Cometh up, ye wyves, offreth of your wolle!²⁶
Your name I entre heer in my rolle anon;
In-to the blisse of hevene shul ye gon;

¹⁵ planned. ¹⁶ labor. ¹⁷ speak. ¹⁸ by chance.
¹⁹ died. ²⁰ See notes. ²¹ more. ²² wonderful.
²³ habit. ²⁴ keep you ²⁵ cure ²⁶ wool.

I yow assoile, by myn heigh power, 585
Yow that wol offre, as clene and eek as cleer

As ye were born; and, lo, sirs, thus I preche.

And Iesu Crist, that is our soules leche,
So graunte yow his pardon to receyve;
For that is best; I wol yow nat deceyve. 590

But sirs, o word forgat I in my tale;
I have reliks and pardon in my male,¹
As faire as any man in Engelond, Whiche were me yeven by the popes
hond.

If any of yow wol, of devocioun, 595
Offren, and han myn absolucioun, Cometh forth anon, and kneleth heer
adoun,

And mekely receyveth my pardoun:
Or elles, taketh pardon as ye wende,
Al newe and fresh, at every tounes ende,
So that ye offren alwey newe and newe 601
Nobles and pens, which that be gode and trewe.

It is an honour to everich that is heer,
That ye mowe have a suffisant pardoneer
Tassoille² yow, in contree as ye ryde, 605
For aventures which that may bityde.
Peraventure ther may falle oon or two Doun of his hors, and breke his nekke
atwo.

Look which a seuretee is it to yow alle
That I am in your felawship yfalle, 610
That may assoille yow, both more³ and lasse,⁴

Whan that the soule shal fro the body passe.

I rede⁵ that our host heer shal biginne,
For he is most enveloped in sinne. 614
Com forth, sir hoste, and offre first anon,
And thou shalt kisse the reliks everichon,⁶
Ye, for a grote! unbokel anon thy purs.

BALADE DE BON CONSEYL

Fle fro the prees,⁷ and dwelle with soth-fastnesse;⁸

Suffyce unto thy good, though hit be smal;
For hord hath hate, and clymbing tikel-nesse,⁹

Prees hath envye, and wele¹⁰ blent¹¹ overal;
Savour¹² no more than thee bihove shal; 5

¹ wallet ² to absolve. ³ high ⁴ low
⁵ advise. ⁶ each one ⁷ the crowd ⁸ truth
⁹ uncertainty. ¹⁰ wealth. ¹¹ blinds. ¹² have relish for.

Werk wel thy-self, that other folk canst
rede;¹³

And trouthe shal deliverc, hit is no drede.

Tempest thee noght al croked to redresse,
In trust of hir that turneth as a bal;

Gret reste¹¹ stant¹⁵ in litel besinesse, 10
And eek be war to sporne¹⁶ ageyn an al; Stryve noght, as doth the crokke with the wal.

Daunte¹⁷ thyself, that dauntest otheres
dede;

And trouthe shal deliverc, hit is no drede.

That thee is sent, receyve in buxumnesse,¹⁵
The wrastling for this world axeth¹⁸ a fal.
Her nis non hom, her nis but wildernesse;
Forth, pilgrim, forth! Forth, beste, out of thy stal!

Know thy countree; lok up, thank God of al;

Hold the hye-way, and lat thy gost¹⁹ thee
lede! 20

And trouthe shal deliverc, hit is no drede.

ENVOY

Therefore, thou Vache, leve²⁰ thyn old wrecchednesse;

Unto the world leve now to be thral;
Crye Him mercy that of His hy goodnesse
Made thee of noght, and in especial 25
Draw unto Him, and pray in general
For thee, and eek for other, hevenlich mede.²¹

And trouthe shal deliverc, hit is no drede.

THE COMPLAINT OF CHAUCER TO HIS EMPTY PURSE

To you, my purse, and to non other wight²²
Compleyne I, for ye be my lady dere!

I am so sory, now that ye be light;

For certes, but²³ ye make me hevye chere,²⁴

Me were as leef be leyd up-on my bere; 5

For whiche un-to your mercy thus I crye:

Beth²⁵ hevye ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Now voucheth sauf this day, or²⁶ hit be
night,

That I of you the blisful soun may here,
Or see your colour lyk the sonne bright, 10

¹³ advise ¹⁴ peace ¹⁵ resides ¹⁶ kick.
¹⁷ subdue ¹⁸ asks. ¹⁹ spirit ²⁰ cease
²¹ reward. ²² person ²³ unless ²⁴ appearance.
²⁵ be. ²⁶ before.

That of yelownesse hadde never pere.
Ye be my lyf, ye be myn hertes stere,¹ Queene of comfort and of good companye:
Beth hevy ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Now purs, that be to me my lyves light, ¹⁵
And saveour, as doun² in this worlde here,
Out of this tounne help me through your
might,
Sin that ye wole nat been my tresorere;
For I am shave as nye³ as any frere.⁴
But yit I pray un-to your curtesye: ²⁰
Beth hevy ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

LENVOY DE CHAUCER

O conquerour of Brutes Albioun!
Which that by lyne and free eleccioun
Ben⁵ verray king, this song to you I sende;
And ye, that mowen⁶ al myn harm
amende, ²⁵
Have mynde up-on my supplicacioun!

ANONYMOUS

PIERS THE PLOWMAN

From the PROLOGUE

In a somer sesun · whon softe was the sonne,
I schop⁷ me in-to a schroud⁸ · a scheep⁹
as I were;
In habite of an hermite · unholy of werkes, Wende¹⁰ I wyde in this world · wondres to
here.
Bote on a May mornynge · on Malverne hulles¹¹ ⁵
Me bi-fel¹² a ferly¹³ · of fairy,¹⁴ me thoughte.
I was wery, forwandred,¹⁵ and went me to reste
Under a brod banke · bi a bourne¹⁶ syde,
And as I lay and leonede¹⁷ · and lokede on the watres,
I slumberde in a slepyng · hit sownede¹⁸ so murie.¹⁹ ¹⁰
Thenne gon²⁰ I meeten²¹ · a mervelous
swevene,²²
That I was in a wilderness · wuste²³ I never where;
And as I beheold into the est · an heigh²⁴
to the sonne,

¹ guide. ² down. ³ close. ⁴ friar. ⁵ art.
⁶ have power to. ⁷ clothed. ⁸ garment. ⁹ hills.
¹⁰ shepherd. ¹¹ went. ¹² wonder. ¹³ enchantment.
¹⁴ happened. ¹⁵ wonder. ¹⁶ learned. ¹⁷ did.
¹⁸ tired with wandering. ¹⁹ brook. ²⁰ dream.
²¹ sounded. ²² merry. ²³ on high.
²⁴ knew.

I sauh²⁵ a tour on a toft²⁶ · trielich²⁷
ymaked;²⁸
A deop dale bineothe · a dongeon ther-inne,
With deop dich and derk · and dredful of siht.²⁹ ¹⁶
A feir feld ful of folk · fond I ther bitwene, Of alle maner of men · the mene³⁰ and the riche,
Worthinge³¹ and wandringe · as the world
asketh.³²
Summe putten hem³³ to the plow · and pleiden³⁴ ful selde;³⁵ ²⁰
In settinge³⁶ and in sowyng · swonken³⁷
ful harde,
And wonnen that theos³⁸ wasturs³⁹ · in glotonye distruten.⁴⁰
And summe putten hem to pruide⁴¹ · apparayld⁴² hem ther-after,
In continuaunce⁴³ of clothinge · comen disgised.
To preyere⁴⁴ and to penaunce · putten
hem monye.⁴⁵ ²⁵
For love of ur⁴⁶ lorde · lyveden⁴⁷ ful streite,
In hope for to have · hevenriche⁴⁸ blisse;
As ancre⁴⁹ and hermytes · that holdeth
hem⁵⁰ in heore⁵¹ celles,
Coveyte not in cuntre⁵² · to cairen⁵³ aboute,
For non likerous⁵⁴ lyfode⁵⁵ · heore licam⁵⁶ to plesse.
And summe chosen chaffare⁵⁷ · to chesven⁵⁸
the better,
As hit semeth to owre siht · that suche
men thryveth;
And summe murthes⁵⁹ to maken · as mun-strals cunne,⁶⁰
And get gold with here gle⁶¹ · giltles I trowe.
Bote japers⁶² and jangelers,⁶³ · Iudas children, ³⁵
Founden⁶⁴ hem fantasyes⁶⁵ · and fooles
hem maaden,
And habbeth wit at heor wille⁶⁶ · to worchen⁶⁷ gif hem luste; That⁶⁸ Poul precheth of hem · I dar not preoven⁶⁹ heere;

²⁵ saw. ²⁶ cleared space. ²⁷ choicely.
²⁸ made. ²⁹ sight. ³⁰ poor.
³¹ working. ³² requires. ³³ gave themselves.
³⁴ played. ³⁵ seldom. ³⁶ planting.
³⁷ labored. ³⁸ these. ³⁹ wasters.
⁴⁰ destroy. ⁴¹ pride. ⁴² clothed.
⁴³ outward appearance. ⁴⁴ prayer.
⁴⁵ many. ⁴⁶ our. ⁴⁷ lived.
⁴⁸ happiness of the kingdom of heaven.
⁴⁹ nuns. ⁵⁰ keep themselves. ⁵¹ their. ⁵² country.
⁵³ wander. ⁵⁴ luxurious. ⁵⁵ diet. ⁵⁶ body.
⁵⁷ trade. ⁵⁸ prosper. ⁵⁹ amusements.
⁶⁰ know how. ⁶¹ glee. ⁶² fools.
⁶³ buffoons. ⁶⁴ feigned. ⁶⁵ tricks.
⁶⁶ at command. ⁶⁷ work if it pleased them.
⁶⁸ what. ⁶⁹ prove, explain.

Qui loquitur turpiloquium · is Luciferes hyne.

Bidders¹ and beggers · faste aboute eoden,² Til heor bagges and heor belies · weren bretful ycrammed;³ 41

Feyneden hem⁴ for heore foode · foughten
atte⁵ ale;

In glotonye, God wot, · gon heo⁶ to bedde,

And ryseth up with ribaudye⁷ · this roberdes⁸ knaves;

Sleep and sleuthe · suweth⁹ hem evere. 45
Pilgrimes and palmers · plihten¹⁰ hem
togederes

For to seche¹¹ Seint Jame · and seintes at Roome;

Wenten forth in heore wey · with mony
wyse tales,

And hadden leve to lyen · al heore lyf aftir.

* * * * *

I fond there freres · all the foure ordres, 55
Prechinge the peple · for profyt of heore wombes,¹²

Glosynge¹³ the Gospel · as hem¹⁴ good liketh,¹⁴

For covetyse¹⁵ of copes · construeth¹⁶ hit ille;

For monye¹⁷ of this maistres · mowen¹⁸
clothen hem at lyking,¹⁹

For moneye²⁰ and heore marchaundie²¹ ·
meeten oft togedere. 60

* * * * *

Ther prechede a pardonere · as²² he a prest were, 65

And brought forthe a bulle · with bisschopes seles,

And seide that himself mighte · asoylen²³
hem alle

Of falsnesse and fastinge · and of vowes
y-broken.

The lewede²⁴ men leved²⁵ him wel · and
lyked his wordes,

And comen up knelynge · and cussedden²⁶
his bulle; 70

He bonchede²⁷ hem with his brevet²⁸ · and blered heore eiyen,²⁹

¹ beggars ² went. ³ crammed. ⁴ shammed.

⁵ at the. ⁶ they. ⁷ ribaldry

⁸ these robber. ⁹ follow. ¹⁰ plighted.

¹¹ seek. ¹² bellies. ¹³ interpreting

¹⁴ as it pleased them. ¹⁵ covetousness. ¹⁶ construes.

¹⁷ many. ¹⁸ may. ¹⁹ as they please

²⁰ money. ²¹ merchandise. ²² as if. ²³ shrive

²⁴ ignorant. ²⁵ believed. ²⁶ kissed.

²⁷ banged. ²⁸ letter of indulgence. ²⁹ eyes.

And rauhte³⁰ with his ragemon³¹ · ringes and broches.

Thus ye giveth oure³² gold · glotonye to helpen,

And leveth hit to losels³³ · that lecherie
haunten.³⁴

Weore the bisschop y-blessed · and worth bothe his eres,³⁵ 75

His seel shulde not be sent · to deceyve the peple.

Ac³⁷ hit is not bi³⁶ the bisschop · that the boye precheth;

Bote³⁷ the parisch prest and he · parten
the selver

That the poraille³⁸ of the parisch · schold have yif thei nere.³⁹

ANONYMOUS

NOAH'S FLOOD

THE WATERLEADERS AND DRAWERS OF DEE

First God, sitting in some high place, or in clouds, if it can be done, speaks to Noah, standing with all his family outside the ark.

GOD. I, God, that all the world have
wrought,

Heaven and earth, and all of nought,
I see my people in deed and thought

Are foully set in sin.

My spirit shall not remain in any man 5
That through fleshly liking is my fone,⁴⁰

But till six score years be gone,
To look if they will blynne.⁴¹

Man that I made I will destroy, 10
Beast, man, and fowl that fly,

For on earth they do me annoy,
The folk that are thereon;

It harms me so hurtfully,
The malice now that does multiply,

That sore it grieveth me inwardly 15
That ever I made man.

Therefore, Noah, my servant free,
That righteous man art, as I see,

A ship soon thou shalt make thee
Of trees dry and light; 20

³⁰ reached, got ³¹ bull ³² your

³³ rascals. ³⁴ practise ³⁵ ears.

³⁶ all the fault of. ³⁷ but.

³⁸ poor people. ³⁹ if it were not for them.

⁴⁰ foe. ⁴¹ cease.

Little chambers therein do thou make,
And binding pitch also do thou take:
Within and without do thou not slake¹
To anoint it with all thy might.

Three hundred cubits it shall be long, 25
And fifty of breadth, to make it strong,
Of height fifty, the measure do thou fonge:²

Thus measure it about.
One window work by thy wit,
One cubit of length and breadth make it; 30
Upon the side a door shall sit,
For to come in and out.

Eating places do thou make also,
Three roofed chambers, one or two,
For with water I think to flow³ 35
Man that I did make;
Destroyed all the world shall be,
Save thou, thy wife, thy sons three,
And all their wives also with thee,
Shall saved be for their sake. 40

NOAH. Ah, Lord, I thank thee loud and still,
That to me art in such will,
And sparest me and my house to spill,⁴
As now I soothly find;
Thy bidding, Lord, I shall fulfil, 45
And never more thee grieve nor grill,⁵
That such grace hast sent me till,
Among all mankind.

Have done, you men and women all!
Help, for aught that may befall, 50
To make this ship, chamber and hall,
As God hath bidden us do.
SHEM. Father, I am already bowne:⁶
An axe I have, by my crown,
As sharp as any in all this town, 55
For to go thereto.

HAM. I have a hatchet wonder keen
To bite well, as may be seen;
A better ground, as I ween,
Is not in all this town. 60
JAPHET. And I can well make a pin,
And with this hammer knock it in;
Go and work without more din,
And I am ready bowne.

NOAH'S WIFE. And we shall bring timber too, 65

For we may nothing else do:
Women be weak to undergo Any great travail.

SHEM'S WIFE. Here is a good hackstock,⁷
On this you may hew and knock; 70
Shall none be idle in this flock,
Nor now may no man fail.

HAM'S WIFE. And I will go to gather slich⁸

The ship for to clean and pitch:
Anointed it must be every stitch,⁹ 75
Board, tree and pin.

JAPHET'S WIFE. And I will gather chips
here

To make a fire for you in fere,¹⁰
And for to dight¹¹ your dinner 80
Against you come in.

Then they make signs as though they were working with various implements.

NOAH. Now in the name of God I will begin

To make the ship that we shall go in,
That we be ready for to swim
At the coming of the flood:
These boards I join here together 85
To keep us safe from the weather,
That we may row both hither and thither,
And safe be from this flood.

Of this tree will I make the mast,
Tied with cables that will last, 90
With a sailyard for each blast,
And each thing in their kind;
With topcastle and bowsprit,
With cords and ropes I have all meet
To sail forth at the next weete:¹² 95
This ship is at an end.

Then Noah and all his family again make signs of working with various implements.

Wife, in this castle we shall be kept;
My children and thou I would in leapt.

NOAH'S WIFE. In faith, Noah, I had as lief thou slept.

For all thy frankish fare, 100

¹ be not slack.

⁴ destroy.

² take.

⁵ vex.

³ flood.

⁶ prepared.

⁷ chopping-block

¹⁰ all together.

⁸ pitch.

¹¹ prepare.

⁹ stick.

¹² wet weather.

I will not do after thy rede.¹

NOAH. Good wife, do now as I thee bid.

NOAH'S WIFE. By Christ! not ere I see more need,
Though thou stand all the day and stare.

NOAH. Lord, that women be crabbed aye,
And never are meek, that dare I say; 106
This is well seen by me today

In witness of you each one.
Good wife, let be all this bere²
That thou makest in this place here, 110
For all they ween thou art master—
And so thou art, by St. John!

GOD. Noah, take thou thy company,
And in the ship hie that you be,
For none so righteous man to me 115
Is now on earth living.

Of clean beasts do thou with thee take
Seven and seven, ere thou slake,
He and she, make to make,³
Quickly in do thou bring. 120

Of beasts unclean, two and two,
Male and female, without mo;⁴
Of clean fowls seven also,
The he and she together;
Of fowls unclean, two and no more, 125
As I of beasts said before,
That shall be saved through my lore,
Against I send the weather.

Of all meats that must be eaten
Into the ship look there be gotten, 130
For that no way may be forgotten,
And do all this bydene,⁵
To sustain man and beast therein,
Aye till this water cease and blyne.
This world is filled full of sin, 135
And that is now well seen.

Seven days be yet coming,
You shall have space them in to bring;
After that is my liking
Mankind for to annoy: 140
Forty days and forty nights
Rain shall fall for their unrights,
And what I have made through my mights,
Now think I to destroy.

¹ counsel.
⁴ more.

² noise.

³ mate.
⁵ quickly.

NOAH. Lord, at your bidding I am bayne;⁶
Since none other your grace will gain, 146
It will I fulfil fain,
For gracious I thee find.

A hundred winters and twenty
This ship making tarried have I, 150
If through amendment any mercy
Would fall unto mankind.

Have done, you men and women all!
Hie you, lest this water fall.
That each beast were in his stall, 155
And into the ship brought!
Of clean beasts seven shall be,
Of unclean two, this God bade me.
This flood is nigh, well may we see;
Therefore tarry you not. 160

*Then Noah shall enter the ark, and his family shall exhibit and name all the animals depicted on sheets of parchment, and after each one has spoken his part, he shall go into the ark, except Noah's wife. The animals depicted ought to correspond to the descriptions;
and thus let the first son begin.*

SHEM. Sir, here are lions, leopards in,
Horses, mares, oxen, and swine,
Goats, calves, sheep, and kine,
Here sitting thou mayst see.
HAM. Camels, asses, men may find, 165
Buck, doe, hart, and hind,
And beasts of all manner of kind
Here be, as thinks me.

JAPHET. Take here cats, and dogs too,
Otter, fox, fulmart⁷ also, 170
Hares hopping gaily can go,
Have cowle here for to eat.

NOAH'S WIFE. And here are bears, wolves set,
Apes, owls, marmoset,
Weasels, squirrels, and ferret; 175
Here they eat their meat.

SHEM'S WIFE. Yet more beasts are in this house:
Here cats make it full crowse,⁸
Here a rat, here a mouse,
They stand nigh together. 180

⁶ ready.

⁷ skunk.

⁸ jolly.

HAM'S WIFE. And here are fowls, less and more:

Hérons, cranes, and bittour,¹ Swans, peacocks; and them before
Meat for this weather.

JAPHET'S WIFE. Here are cocks, kites, crows, 185
Rooks, ravens, many rows;
Ducks, curlews: whoever knows
Each one in his kind?
And here are doves, ducks, drakes,
Redshanks, running through the lakes; 190
And each fowl that language makes
In this ship men may find.

NOAH. Wife, come in! why standest thou here?

Thou art ever froward, that dare I swear.
Come in, on God's half!² time it were, 195
For fear lest that we drown.

NOAH'S WIFE. Yea, sir, set up your sail,
And row forth with evil hail!
For without any fail
I will not out of this town. 200

Unless I have my gossips every one
One foot further I will not gone;³
They shall not drown, by St. John!
If I may save their life!
They loved me full well, by Christ! 205
Unless thou wilt let them in thy chest,
Row forth, Noah, whither thou list,
And get thee a new wife.

NOAH. Shem, son, lo! thy mother is wraw:⁴

Forsooth, such another I do not know! 210 SHEM. Father, I shall fetch her in, I
trow,
Without any fail.

Mother, my father after thee sent,
And bids thee into yonder ship wend.
Look up and see the wind, 215
For we be ready to sail.

NOAH'S WIFE. Son, go again to him and say

I will not come therein today.

NOAH. Come in, wife, in twenty devils' way!

Or else stand there without. 220

HAM. Shall we all fetch her in?

NOAH. Yea, sons, in Christ's blessing and mine!

I would you hied you betime,
For of this flood I am in doubt.⁵

THE GOOD GOSSIPS. [They sing.]

The flood comes in full fleeting fast, 225
On every side it spreadeth full far;
For fear of drowning I am aghast,
Good gossip, let us draw near.
And let us drink ere we depart,
For oftentimes we have done so; 230
For at a draught thou drink'st a quart,
And so will I do, ere I go.

JAPHET. Mother, we pray you altogether,
For we are here, your own children,
Come into the ship for fear of the weather,
For his love that you bought. 236

NOAH'S WIFE. That will I not for all your call,

Unless I have my gossips all.

SHEM. In faith, mother, yet you shall,
Whether you will or not! 240
[Then she will go.]

NOAH. Welcome, wife, into this boat!

NOAH'S WIFE. And have thou that for thy mote!⁶

[She deals Noah a blow.]

NOAH. Aha, marry, this is hot!

It is good to be still.

Ah, children, methinks my boat removes!
Our tarrying here hugely me grieves; 246
Over the land the water spreads—
God do as he will!

Ah, great God that art so good,
He that works not thy will is wood⁷. 250
Now all this world is in a flood,

As I see well in sight;
This window I will shut anon,
And into my chamber will I gone,
Till this water, so great one, 255
Be slakèd through thy might.

Then let Noah shut the window of the ark, and let them, remaining within for a short time, sing the psalm "Save me, O God;" then let Noah open the window and look around.

¹ bittorn.
² go—an infinitive.

³ for God's sake
⁴ angry.

⁵ fear.

⁶ chatter.

⁷ mad.

Now forty days are fully gone.
Send a raven I will anon,
To see if anywhere, earth, tree, or stone.
Be dry in any place; 260
And if this fowl come not again,
It is a sign, sooth to sayne,¹
That dry it is on hill or plain,
And God hath done some grace.

Then let him send out the raven, and taking a dove in his hands, let him speak.

Ah, Lord, wherever this raven be, 265
Somewhere is dry, well I see.
But yet a dove, by my loyalty,
After I will send.
Thou wilt turn again to me,
* * * * *
For of all fowls that may fly, 270
Thou art most meek and hend.²

Then he shall put forth the dove, and there shall be on the ship another dove bearing an olive branch in her mouth, which someone shall let down from the mast by a cord into Noah's hand, and afterwards let Noah speak.

Ah, Lord, blessed be thou aye,
That me hast comforted thus today!
By this sight I may well say
This flood begins to cease: 275
My sweet dove to me brought has
A branch of olive from some place;
This betokeneth God has done us some
grace,
And is a sign of peace.

Ah, Lord, honored may thou be! 280
All earth dries now, I see,
But yet till thou commandest me,
Hence will I not hie.
All this water is away;
Therefore as soon as I may, 285
Sacrifice I shall do in fay³
To thee devoutly.

GOD. Noah, take thy wife anon,
And thy children every one;
Out of the ship thou shalt gone 290
And they all with thee;

Beasts and all that can fly
Out anon they shall hie,
On earth to grow and multiply;
I will that it so be. 295

NOAH. Lord, I thank thee, through thy
might,
Thy bidding shall be done in hight,⁴
And as fast as I may dight
I will do thee honor,
And to thee offer sacrifice. 300
Therefore comes in all wise,
For of these beasts that be his Offer I will this store.

Then coming out of the ark with all his family Noah shall take his animals and fowls and make an offering, and sacrifice.

Lord God in majesty,
That such grace hast granted me 305
Where all was lost, safe to be,
Therefore now I am bowne,
My wife, my children, my company,
With sacrifice to honor thee,
With beasts, fowls, as thou mayst see, 310
Which I offer here right soon.

GOD. Noah, to me thou art full able,⁵
And thy sacrifice acceptable,
For I have found thee true and stable;
On thee must I now mind.⁶ 315
Curse earth will I no more
For man's sin that grieves me sore,
For of youth man full yore
Has been inclined to sin.

You shall now grow and multiply, 320
And earth again you shall edify;
Each beast and fowl that may fly
Shall be afraid of you;
And fish in sea that may flytte⁷
Shall sustain you, I you behite,⁸ 325
To eat of them do not let,⁹
That clean be you may know.

Whereas you have eaten before
Grass and roots since you were born,
Of clean beasts, less and more, 330
I give you leave to eat;

¹ say.² gentle.³ faith.⁴ haste.
⁷ swim.⁵ pleasing.
⁸ promise.⁶ think.
⁹ hesitate.

Save blood and flesh both in fere¹
Of wrong dead carrion that is here:
Eat not of that in no manner,
For that aye shall you let.² 335

Manslaughter also you shall flee,
For that is not pleasant to me.
That sheds blood, he or she,
Anywhere amongst mankind,
That blood foully shed shall be, 340
And vengeance have that men shall see.
Therefore beware now all ye,
You fall not in that sin.

A foreword³ now with thee I make,
And all thy seed for thy sake, 345
From such vengeance for to slake,
For now I have my will;
Here I promise thee a hest:⁴
That man, woman, fowl nor beast
With water, while the world shall last, 350
I will no more spill.⁵

My bow between you and me
In the firmament shall be,
For very token that you may see
That such vengeance shall cease; 355
That man nor woman shall never more
Be wasted by water, as before;
But for sin, that grieveth me sore,
Therefore this vengeance was.

Where clouds in the welkin been⁶ 360
That same bow shall be seen,
In token that my wrath and teen⁷
Shall never thus wreaked be;
The string is turned toward you,
And toward me is bent the bow, 365
That such weather shall never show,
And this promise I thee.

My blessing now I give thee here,
To thee, Noah, my servant dear,
For vengeance shall no more appear. 370
And now, farewell, my darling dear.

THE ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH POPULAR BALLADS

EDWARD

1. "Why dois your brand sae drap wi
bluid,

Edward, Edward.

¹ together.
² assurance

³ leave alone.
⁴ destroy.

⁵ be. ⁶ covenant.
⁷ anger.

Why dois your brand sae drap wi
bluid,

And why sae sad gang yee O?"

"O I hae killed my hauke sae guid,
Mither, mither,

O I hae killed my hauke sae guid,
And I had nae mair bot⁸ hee O."

2. "Your haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
Edward, Edward,

Your haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
My deir son I tell thee O."

"O I hae killed my reid-roan steid,
Mither, mither,

O I hae killed my reid-roan steid,
That erst was sae fair and frie O."

3. "Your steid was auld, and ye hae got mair,

Edward, Edward,
Your steid was auld, and ye hae got
mair,

Sum other dule⁹ ye drie¹⁰ O."

"O I hae killed my fadir deir,

Mither, mither,

O I hae killed my fadir deir,
Alas, and wae is mee O!"

4. "And whatten penance wul ye drie for that,

Edward, Edward,
And whatten penance will ye drie for
that?

My deir son, now tell me O."

"Ile set my feit in yonder boat,

Mither, mither,

Ile set my feit in yonder boat,

And Ile fare ovir the sea O."

5. "And what wul ye doe wi your towirs
and your ha,

Edward, Edward?
And what wul ye doe wi your towirs
and your ha,

That were sae fair to see O?"

"Ile let thame stand tul they down fa,
Mither, mither,

Ile let thame stand tul they down fa,
For here nevir mair maun¹¹ I bee O."

6. "And what wul ye leive to your bairns
and your wife,

Edward, Edward?

⁸ but.

⁹ grief.

¹⁰ suffer.

¹¹ must.

And what wul ye leive to your bairns
and your wife,
Whan ye gang ovir the sea O?"
"The warldis room, late them beg thrae¹ life,

Mither, mither,

The warldis room, late them beg thrae
life,
For thame nevir mair wul I see O."

7. "And what wul ye leive to your ain
mither deir,

Edward, Edward?

And what wul ye leive to your ain
mither deir?

My deir son, now tell me O."

"The curse of hell frae me sall ye beir,
Mither, mither,
The curse of hell frae me sall ye beir,
Sic counsels ye gave to me O."

KEMP OWYNE

1. Her mother died when she was young,
Which gave her cause to make great
moan;
Her father married the warst woman
That ever lived in Christendom.

2. She servèd her with foot and hand,
In every thing that she could dee,²
Till once, in an unlucky time,
She threw her in ower Craigy's sea.

3. Says, "Lie you there, dove Isabel,
And all my sorrows lie with thee;
Till Kemp Owyne come ower the sea,
And borrow³ you with kisses three.
Let all the warld do what they will,
Oh borrowed shall you never be!"

4. Her breath grew strang, her hair grew lang,
And twisted thrice about the tree,
And all the people, far and near,
Thought that a savage beast was
she.

5. These news did come to Kemp Owyne,
Where he lived, far beyond the sea;
He hasted him to Craigy's sea,
And on the savage beast lookd he.

¹ through.

² do.

³ rescue.

6. Her breath was strang, her hair was
lang,

And twisted was about the tree,
And with a swing she came about:
"Come to Craigy's sea, and kiss
with me.

7. "Here is a royal belt," she cried,
"That I have found in the green sea;
And while your body it is on,
Drawn shall your blood never be;
But if you touch me, tail or fin,
I vow my belt your death shall be."

8. He stepped in, gave her a kiss,
The royal belt he brought him wi;
Her breath was strang, her hair was
lang,
And twisted twice about the tree,
And with a swing she came about:
"Come to Craigy's sea, and kiss
with me.

9. "Here is a royal ring," she said,
"That I have found in the green sea;
And while your finger it is on,
Drawn shall your blood never be;
But if you touch me, tail or fin,
I swear my ring your death shall be."

10. He stepped in, gave her a kiss,
The royal ring he brought him wi;
Her breath was strang, her hair was
lang,
And twisted ance about the tree,
And with a swing she came about:
"Come to Craigy's sea, and kiss
with me.

11. "Here is a royal brand," she said,
"That I have found in the green sea;
And while your body it is on,
Drawn shall your blood never be;
But if you touch me, tail or fin,
I swear my brand your death shall
be."

12. He stepped in, gave her a kiss,
The royal brand he brought him wi;
Her breath was sweet, her hair grew short,
And twisted nane about the tree,
And smilingly she came about,
As fair a woman as fair could be.

SIR PATRICK SPENS

1. The king sits in Dumferling toune,
Drinking the blude-reid wine:
"O whar will I get guid sailor,
To sail this schip of mine?"
2. Up and spak an eldern knicht,
Sat at the kings richt kne:
"Sir Patrick Spence is the best sailor,
That sails upon the se."
3. The king has written a braid letter,
And signd it wi his hand,
And sent it to Sir Patrick Spence,
Was walking on the sand.
4. The first line that Sir Patrick red,
A loud lauch lauchèd he;
The next line that Sir Patrick red,
The teir blinded his ee.
5. "O wha is this has don this deid,
This ill deid don to me,
To send me out this time o' the yeir,
To sail upon the se!
6. "Mak hast, mak haste, my mirry men
all,
Our guid schip sails the morne:"
"O say na sae, my master deir,
For I feir a deadlie storme.
7. "Late, late yestreen I saw the new moone,
Wi the auld moone in hir arme,
And I feir, I feir, my deir master,
That we will cum to harme."
8. O our Scots nobles wer richt laith
To weet their cork-heild schoone;
Bot lang owre a' the play wer playd,
Thair hats they swam aboone.¹
9. O lang, lang may their ladies sit,
Wi thair fans into their hand,
Or eir² they se Sir Patrick Spence
Cum sailing to the land.
10. O lang, lang may the ladies stand,
Wi thair gold kems in their hair,
Waiting for thair ain deir lords,
For they'll se thame na mair.

¹ above.² before.

11. Haf owre, haf owre to Aberdour,
It's fiftie fadom deip,
And thair lies guid Sir Patrick Spence,
Wi the Scots lords at his feit.

THE WIFE OF USHER'S WELL

1. There lived a wife at Usher's Well,
And a wealthy wife was she;
She had three stout and stalwart sons,
And sent them oer the sea.
2. They hadna been a week from her,
A week but barely ane,
When word came to the carline³ wife
That her three sons were gane.
3. They hadna been a week from her,
A week but barely three,
When word came to the carlin wife
That her sons she'd never see.
4. "I wish the wind may never cease,
Nor fashes⁴ in the flood,
Till my three sons come hame to me,
In earthly flesh and blood."
5. It fell about the Martinmass,
When nights are lang and mirk,⁵
The carlin wife's three sons came hame,
And their hats were o the birk.⁶
6. It neither grew in syke⁷ nor ditch,
Nor yet in ony sheugh,⁸
But at the gates o Paradise,
That birk grew fair eneugh.
* * * * *
7. "Blow up the fire, my maidens,
Bring water from the well;
For a' my house shall feast this night
Since my three sons are well."
8. And she has made to them a bed,
She's made it large and wide,
And she's taen her mantle her about
Sat down at the bed-side.
* * * * *
9. Up then crew the red, red cock,
And up and crew the gray;
The eldest to the youngest said,
"Tis time we were away."

³ peasant. ⁴ storms. ⁵ dark. ⁶ birch. ⁷ trench ⁸ furrow.

10. The cock he hadna craw'd but once,
And clappd his wings at a',
When the youngest to the eldest said,
"Brother, we must awa.
11. "The cock doth crawl, the day doth daw,
The channerin¹ worm doth chide;
Gin² we be mist out o our place,
A sair pain we maun bide.
12. "Fare ye weel, my mother dear!
Fareweel to barn and byre!³
And fare ye weel, the bonny lass
That kindles my mother's fire!"

ROBIN HOOD AND GUY OF GIS-BORNE

1. When shawes⁴ beene sheene,⁵ and shradds⁶ full fayre,
And leeves both large and longe,
Itt is merry, walking in the fayre
fforrest,
To heare the small birds songe.
2. The woodweele⁷ sang, and wold not cease,
Amongst the leaves a lyne:⁸
And it is by two wight⁹ yeomen,
By deare God, that I mene.
- * * * * *
3. "Me thought they did mee beate and binde,
And tooke my bowe mee froe;
If I bee Robin alive in this lande,
I'll be wrocken¹⁰ on both them
towe."
4. "Sweavens¹¹ are swift, master," quoth
John,
"As the wind that blowes ore a hill;
Ffor if itt be never soe lowde this
night,
To-morrow it may be still."
5. "Buske¹² yee, bowne¹³ yee, my merry men all,
Ffor John shall goe with mee;
For I'll goe seeke yond wight yeomen
In greenwood where the¹⁴ bee."
6. The cast on their gowne of greene,
A shooting gone are they,
Untill they came to the merry green-
wood,
Where they had gladdest bee;
There were they ware of [a] wight yeoman,
His body leaned to a tree.
7. A sword and a dagger he wore by his
side,
Had beene many a man's bane,
And he was cladd in his capull-hyde,¹⁵
Topp, and tayle, and mayne.
8. "Stand you still, master," quoth
Litle John,
"Under this trusty tree,
And I will goe to yond wight yeoman,
To know his meaning trulye."
9. "A, John, by me thou setts noe store,
And that's a ffarley¹⁶ thinge;
How oft send I my men beffore,
And tarry my-selfe behinde?"
10. "It is noe cunning a knave to ken,
And a man but heare him speake;
And itt were not for bursting of my bowe,
John, I wold thy head breake."
11. But often words they breeden bale;¹⁷
That parted Robin and John;
John is gone to Barn[e]sdale,
The gates¹⁸ he knowes eche one.
12. And when hee came to Barnesdale,
Great heavynesse there hee hadd;
He ffound two of his fellowes
Were slaine both in a slade,¹⁹ 13. And Scarlett a-ffoote flyinge was,
Over stockes and stone,
For the sheriffe with seven score men
Fast after him is gone.
14. "Yett one shoote I'll shoote," sayes
Litle John,
"With Crist his might and mayne;
I'll make yond fellow that flyes soe
fast
To be both glad and ffaine."

¹ impatient.² if.³ stable⁴ thickets⁵ beautiful⁶ cosses⁷ woodlark.⁸ of the linden tree.⁹ sturdy.¹⁰ avenged.¹¹ dreams.¹² make ready.¹³ dress yourselves.¹⁴ they.¹⁵ horse-hide. ¹⁶ wonderful. ¹⁷ evil. ¹⁸ ways. ¹⁹ valley.

15. John bent up a good veiwe¹ bow,
And fletteled² him to shoote;
The bow was made of a tender boughe,
And fell downe to his foote.
16. "Woe worth thee, wicked wood," sayd
Litle John,
"That ere thou grew on a tree!
Ffor this day thou art my bale,
My boote³ when thou shold bee!"
17. This shoote it was but looselye shott,
The arrowe flew in vaine,
And it mett one of the sheriffes men;
Good William a Trent was slaine.
18. It had beene better for William a Trent
To hange upon a gallowe
Then for to lye in the greenwoode,
There slaine with an arrowe.
19. And it is sayd, when men be mett,
Six can doe more then three:
And they have tane Litle John,
And bound him ffast to a tree.
20. "Thou shalt be drawn by dale and downe," quoth the sheriffe,
"And hanged hye on a hill;"
"But thou may ffayle," quoth Litle
John,
"If itt be Christ's owne will."
21. Let us leave talking of Litle John,
For hee is bound fast to a tree,
And talke of Guy and Robin Hood
In the green woode where they bee.
22. How these two yeomen together they mett,
Under the leaves of lyne,
To see what marchandise⁴ they made
Even at that same time.
23. "Good morrow, good fellow," quoth
Sir Guy;
"Good morrow, good ffellow," quoth
hee;
"Methinkes by this bow thou beares
in thy hand,
A good archer thou seems to bee."
24. "I am wilfull of my way," quoth Sir
Guye,
"And of my morning tyde:"
"I'll lead thee through the wood,"
quoth Robin,
"Good ffellow, I'll be thy guide."
25. "I seeke an outlaw," quoth Sir Guye,
"Men call him Robin Hood;
I had rather meet with him upon a day
Than forty pound of golde."
26. "If you tow mett, itt wold be seene whether were better
Afore yee did part awaye;
Let us some other pastime find,
Good ffellow, I thee pray.
27. "Let us some other masteryes make,
And wee will walke in the woods
even;
Wee may chance mee[t] with Robin
Hooode
Att some unsett steven."⁵
28. They cutt them downe the summer shroggs⁶
Which grew both under a bryar,
And sett them three score rood in twinn,⁷
To shoote the prickes full neare.
29. "Leade on, good ffellow," sayd Sir
Guye,
"Lead on, I doe bidde thee:"
"Nay, by my faith," quoth Robin
Hood,
"The leader thou shalt bee."
30. The first good shoot that Robin ledd, Did not shoote an inch the pricke
ffroe;
Guy was an archer good enough,
But he cold neere shoote soe.
31. The second shoote Sir Guy shott,
He shott within the garlande;
But Robin Hooode shott it better than
hee,
For he clove the good prickewande.

¹ yew.² made ready.³ help.⁴ dealing.⁵ time not fixed.⁶ rods.⁷ apart.

32. "Gods blessing on thy heart!" sayes
Guye,
"Goode ffellow, thy shooting is goode;
For an thy hart be as good as thy
hands,
Thou were better than Robin Hood.
33. "Tell me thy name, good ffellow," quoth Guy,
"Under the leaves of lyne:"
"Nay, by my faith," quoth good
Robin,
"Till thou have told me thine."
34. "I dwell by dale and downe," quoth
Guye,
"And I have done many a curst
turne;
And he that calles me by my right
name,
Calles me Guye of good Gysborne."
35. "My dwelling is in the wood," sayes
Robin;
"By thee I set right nought;
My name is Robin Hood of Barnes-
dale,
A ffellow thou has long sought." 36. He that had neither beene a kithe nor kin
Might have seene a full fayre sight,
To see how together these yeomen
went,
With blades both browne and
bright;
37. To have seene how these yeomen together foug[ht]
Two howers of a summer's day;
Itt was neither Guy nor Robin Hood
That fettled¹ them to flye away.
38. Robin was reacheles on² a roote,
And stumbled at that tyde,
And Guy was quicke and nimble
with-all,
And hitt him ore the left side.
39. "Ah, deere Lady!" sayd Robin Hooede,
"Thou art both mother and may!³
I thinke it was never mans destinye
To dye before his day."
40. Robin thought on Our Lady deere,
And soone leapt up againe,
And thus he came with an awkwarde⁴
stroke;
Good Sir Guy hee has slayne.
41. He tooke Sir Guys head by the hayre,
And sticked itt on his bowes end:
"Thou hast beene traytor all thy liffe,
Which thing must have an ende."
42. Robin pulled forth an Irish kniffe,
And nicked Sir Guy in the fface,
That hee was never on a woman borne Cold tell who Sir Guye was.
43. Saies, "Lye there, lye there, good Sir
Guye,
And with me be not wrothe;
If thou have had the worse stroakes at my hand,
Thou shalt have the better cloathe."
44. Robin did off his gowne of greene,
Sir Guye hee did it throwe;
And hee put on that capull-hyde
That cladd him topp to toe.
45. "The bowe, the arrowes, and litle
horne,
And with me now I'le beare;
For now I will goe to Barne[s]dale,
To see how my men doe fiare."
46. Robin sette Guyes horne to his mouth,
A lowd blast in it he did blow;
That beheard the sheriffe of Nottingham,
As he leaned under a lowe.⁵
47. "Hearken! hearken!" sayd the sheriffe,
"I heard noe tydings but good;
For yonder I heare Sir Guyes horne
blowe,
For he hath slaine Robin Hooede.
48. "For yonder I heare Sir Guyes horne
blow,
Itt blowes soe well in tyde,
For yonder comes that wighty yeo-
man,
Cladd in his capull-hyde.

¹ prepared.² careless of.³ maid.⁴ backhand.⁵ hill.

49. "Come hither, thou good Sir Guy, Aske of mee what thou wilt have:"
"I'le none of thy gold," sayes Robin
Hood,
"Nor I'le none of itt have.
50. "But now I have slaine the master,"
he sayd,
"Let me goe strike the knave;
This is all the reward I aske, Nor noe other will I have."
51. "Thou art a madman," said the shiriffe,
"Thou sholdest have had a knights fee;
Seeing thy asking [hath] beene soe
badd,
Well granted it shall be."
52. But Litle John heard his master speake,
Well he knew that was his steven;¹
"Now shall I be loset," quoth Litle
John,
"With Christ's might in heaven."
53. But Robin hee hyed him towards Litle
John,
Hee thought hee wold loose him
belive;²
The sheriffe and all his companye
Fast after him did drive.
54. "Stand abacke! stand abacke!" sayd
Robin;
"Why draw you mee soe neere?
Itt was never the use in our countreye One's shrift another shold heere."
55. But Robin pulled forth an Irysh kniffe,
And losed John hand and floote,
And gave him Sir Guyes bow in his
hand,
And bade it be his boote.³ 56. But John tooke Guyes bow in his
hand—
His arrowes were rawstye⁴ by the roote;
The sherriffe saw Litle John draw a bow
And fettle him to shoote.

¹ voice.² quickly.³ help.⁴ soiled.

57. Towards his house in Nottingham
He fled ful fast away,
And soe did all his companye,
Not one behind did stay.
58. But he cold neither soe fast goe,
Nor away soe fast runn,
But Litle John, with an arrow broade,
Did cleave his heart in twinn.

ROBIN HOOD'S DEATH AND BURIAL

1. When Robin Hood and Little John
Down a down a down a down Went oer yon bank of broom
Said Robin Hood bold to Little
John,
"We have shot for many a pound."
Hey, etc.
2. "But I am not able to shoot one shot
more,
My broad arrows will not flee;
But I have a cousin lives down below,
Please God, she will bleed me."
3. Now Robin he is to fair Kirkly gone,
As fast as he can win;
But before he came there, as we do
hear,
He was taken very ill.
4. And when he came to fair Kirkly-hall,
He knockd all at the ring,
But none was so ready as his cousin herself
For to let bold Robin in.
5. "Will you please to sit down, cousin
Robin," she said,
"And drink some beer with me?"
"No, I will neither eat nor drink, Till I am blooded by thee."
6. "Well, I have a room, cousin Robin,"
she said,
"Which you did never see,
And if you please to walk therein,
You blooded by me shall be."
7. She took him by the lily-white hand,
And led him to a private room,
And there she blooded bold Robin
Hood,
While one drop of blood would run
down.

8. She blooded him in a vein of the arm,
And locked him up in the room;
Then did he bleed all the live-long day,
Until the next day at noon.

9. He then bethought him of a casement
there,
Thinking for to get down;
But was so weak he could not leap,
He could not get him down.

10. He then bethought him of his bugle-
horn,
Which hung low down to his knee;
He set his horn unto his mouth,
And blew out weak blasts three.

11. Then Little John, when hearing him,
As he sat under a tree,
"I fear my master is now near dead,
He blows so wearily."

12. Then Little John to fair Kirkly is gone,
As fast as he can dree;
But when he came to Kirkly-hall,
He broke locks two or three:

13. Until he came bold Robin to see,
Then he fell on his knee;
"A boon, a boon," cries Little John,
"Master, I beg of thee."

14. "What is that boon," said Robin
Hood,
"Little John, [thou] begs of me?"
"It is to burn fair Kirkly-hall,
And all their nunnery."

15. "Now nay, now nay," quoth Robin
Hood,
"That boon I'll not grant thee;
I never hurt woman in all my life,
Nor men in woman's company."

16. "I never hurt fair maid in all my time,
Nor at mine end shall it be;
But give me my bent bow in my hand,
And a broad arrow I'll let flee,
And where this arrow is taken up,
There shall my grave digged be."

17. "Lay me a green sod under my head,
And another at my feet;

And lay my bent bow by my side,
Which was my music sweet;
And make my grave of gravel and
green,
Which is most right and meet.

18. "Let me have length and breadth
enough,
With a green sod under my head;
That they may say, when I am dead,
Here lies bold Robin Hood."

19. These words they readily granted him,
Which did bold Robin please:
And there they buried bold Robin
Hood,
Within the fair Kirkleys.

THE HUNTING OF THE CHEVIOT

1. The Persë owt off Northombarlonde, and avowe to God mayd he
That he would hunte in the mown-tayns
off Chyviat within days thre,
In the magger of¹ doughtë Dogles,
and all that ever with him be.

2. The fattiste hartes in all Cheviat he sayd he wold kyll, and cary them
away:
"Be my feth," sayd the dougheti Doglas agayn,
"I wyll let² that hontyng yf that I
may."

3. Then the Persë owt off Banborowe cam,
with him a myghtee meany,³
With fifteen hondrith archares bold off blood and bone;
the⁴ wear chosen owt of shyars thre.

4. This begane on a Monday at morn, in Cheviat the hillys so he;⁵
The chylde may rue that ys unborn,
it wos the more pittë.

5. The dryvars thorowe the woodës went,
for to reas the dear;
Bomen byckarte⁶ uppone the bent⁷
with ther browd aros cleare.

¹ despite ⁵ high.

² hinder.
⁶ hunted.

³ crowd.
⁷ field.

⁴ they.

6. Then the wyld¹ thorowe the woodës went, on every syde shear;²
Grea hondës thorowe the grevis³
glent,⁴
for to kyll thear dear.
7. This begane in Chyviat the hyls abone,⁵ yerly on a Monnyn-day;
Be that⁶ it drew to the oware off none,⁷
a hondrith fat hartës ded ther lay.
8. The⁸ blewe a mort⁹ uppone the bent,
the semblyde¹⁰ on sydis¹¹ shear;
To the querry then the Persé went,
to se the bryttlynge¹² off the deare.
9. He sayd, "It was the Duglas promys, this day to met me hear;
But I wyste he wolde faylle, verament;"
a great oth the Persé swear.
10. At the laste a squyar off Northomber-
londe
lokyde at his hand full ny;
He was war a the doughetie Doglas commynge,
with him a myghttë meany.
11. Both with spear, bylle, and brande, yt was a myghtti sight to se;
Hardyar men, both off hart nor hande,
wear not in Cristiantë.
12. The wear twenti hondrith spear-men
good,
withoute any feale;
The wear borne along be the watter a Twyde,
yth¹³ bowndës of Tividale.
13. "Leave of the brytlyng of the dear,"
he sayd,
"and to your boys¹⁴ lock ye tayk
good hede;
For never sithe ye wear on your mothars borne had ye never so mickle nede." 14. The dougheti Dogglas on a stede, he rode alle his men beforne;
His armor glytteryde as dyd a glede;¹⁵
a boldar barne¹⁶ was never born.
15. "Tell me whos men ye ar," he says,
"or whos men that ye be:
Who gave youe leave to hunte in this Chyviat chays,
in the spyt of myn and of me." 16. The first mane that ever him an answear mayd,
yt was the good lord Persé:
"We wyll not tell the whoys men
we ar," he says,
"nor whos men that we be;
But we wyll hounte hear in this chays,
in the spyt of thyne and of the."
17. "The fattiste hartës in all Chyviat we have kyld, and cast to carry them away."
"Be my troth," sayd the doughetë Dogglas agay[n],
"therfor the ton¹⁷ of us shall de this
day."
18. Then sayd the doughtë Doglas unto the lord Persé:
"To kyll alle thes giltles men,
alas, it wear great pittë!
19. "But, Persé, thowe art a lord of lande,
I am a yerle callyd within my contrë;
Let all our men uppone a parti stande, and do the battell off the and of
me."
20. "Nowe Cristes cors on his crowne," sayd the lord Persé,
"who-so-ever ther-to says nay!
Be my troth, doughttë Doglas," he says,
"thow shalt never se that day,
21. "Nethar in Ynglonde, Skottlonde, nar
France,
nor for no man of a woman born,
But, and fortune be my chance,
I dar met him, ðn man for on."

¹ deer ² several. ³ groves. ⁴ darted. ⁵ above.
⁶ by the time that. ⁷ hour of noon. ⁸ they.
⁹ a blast of the horn announcing the deer's death.
¹⁰ met. ¹¹ hillsides. ¹² butchering. ¹³ in the. ¹⁴ bows.

¹⁵ coal of fire.

¹⁶ man.

¹⁷ one.

22. Then bespayke a squyar off Northom-barlonde,
Richard Wytharyngton was his nam:
"It shall never be told in Sothe-Ynglonde," he says,
"to Kyng Herry the Fourth for sham.
23. "I wat youe byn great lordës twaw,
I am a poor squyar of lande:
I wylle never se my captayne fyght on a fylde,
and stande my selffe and loocke on,
But whylle I may my weppone welde,
I wylle not [fayle] both hart and hande."
24. That day, that day, that dredfull day!
the first fit¹ here I fynde;
And youe wyll here any mor a the hountyng a the Chyviat,
yet ys ther mor behynde.
25. The Yngglyshe men hade ther bowys yebent,
ther hartes wer good yenoughe;
The first off arros that the shote off,
seven skore spear-men the sloughe.² 26. Yet byddys the yerle Doglas uppon the bent,
a captayne good yenoughe,
And that was sene verament, for he wrought hom both woo and wouche.³
27. The Dogglas partyd his ost in thre, lyk a cheffe cheften off pryde;
With suar⁴ spears off myghttë tre,
the cum in on every syde:
28. Thrughe our Yngglyshe archery gave many a wounde fulle wyde;
many a doughetë the garde⁵ to dy,
which ganyde them no pryde.
29. The Yngglyshe men let ther boÿs be,
and pulde owt brandes that wer
bryghte;
It was a hevvy syght to se
bryght swordes on basnites⁶ lyght.
30. Thorowe ryche male and myneyeple,⁷ many sterne⁸ the strocke done⁹
streght;
Many a freyke¹⁰ that was fulle fre,
ther undar foot dyd lyght.
31. At last the Duglas and the Persë met, lyk to captayns of myght and of mayne;
The swapte¹¹ togethar tylle the both swat,¹²
with swordes that wear of fyn myllan.¹³
32. Thes worthë freckys for to fyght, ther-to the wear fulle fayne, Tylle the bloode owte off thear basnetes sprete
as ever dyd heal¹⁴ or ra[y]n.
33. "Yelde the, Persë," sayde the Doglas,
"and i feth I shalle the brynge Wher thowe shalte have a yeris wagis of Jamy our Skottish kyng.
34. "Thou shalte have thy ransom fre,
I hight¹⁵ the hear this thinge;
For the manfullyste man yet art thowe that ever I conqueryd in filde fighttynge."
35. "Nay," sayd the lord Persë,
"I tolde it the beforne,
That I wolde never yeldyde be to no man of a woman born." 36. With that ther cam an arrowe hastely, forthe off a myghttë wane;¹⁶ Hit hathe strekene the yerle Duglas in at the brest-bane.
37. Thorowe lyvar¹⁷ and longës bathe¹
the sharpe arrowe ys gane,
That never after in all his lyffe-days
he spayke mo wordës but ane:
That was, "Fyghte ye, my myrry men, whylls ye may,
for my lyff-days ben gan." 38. The Persë leanyde on his brande, and sawe the Duglas de;
He tooke the dede mane by the hande,
and sayd, "Wo ys me for the!

¹ division of the story, chapter.
⁴ trusty.

² slew ³ harm.
⁵ made. ⁶ helmets.

⁷ gauntlet. ⁸ stern men. ⁹ down. ¹⁰ bold man.
¹¹ smote. ¹² sweated. ¹³ Milan steel. ¹⁴ hail.
¹⁵ bid ¹⁶ number ¹⁷ liver. ¹⁸ both.

39. "To have savyde thy lyffe, I wolde have partyde with my landes for years thre,
For a better man, of hart nare of
hande,
was nat in all the north contrë." 40. Off all that se a Skottishe knyght, was callyd Ser Hewe the Monggom-
byrry;
He sawe the Duglas to the deth was dyght,
he spendyd¹ a spear, a trusti tre.
41. He rod uppone a corsiare throughe a hondrith archery:
He never stynttyde,² nar never blane,³
tylle he cam to the good lord Persë.
42. He set uppone the lorde Persë
a dynte that was full soare;
With a suar spear of a myghttë tre clean thorow the body he the Persë ber,
43. A the tothar syde that a man myght se a large cloth-yard and mare:
Towe bettar captayns wear nat in Cristiantë
then that day slan wear ther.
44. An archar off Northomberlonde say⁴ sleane was the lord Persë;
He bar a bende bowe in his hand,
was made off trusti tre.
45. An arow, that a cloth-yarde was lang, to the harde stele halyde⁵ he;
A dynt that was both sad and soar
he sat⁶ on Ser Hewe the Monggom-byrry.
46. The dynt yt was both sad and sar, that he of Monggombyrry sete;
The swane-fethars that his arrowe bar with his hart-blood the wear wete.
47. Ther was never a freake wone⁷ foot wolde fle,
but still in stour⁸ dyd stand, Heawyng on yche othar, whylle the myghte dre,⁹
with many a halfull brande.
48. This battell begane in Chyviat an owar befor the none,
And when even-songe bell was rang,
the battell was nat half done.
49. The tocke . . . on ethar hande¹⁰ be the lyght off the mone;
Many hade no strenght for to stande,
in Chyviat the hillys abon.
50. Of fifteen hondrith archars of Ynglonde
went away but seventi and thre;
Of twenti hondrith spear-men of Skotlonde,
but even five and fifti.
51. But all wear slayne Cheviat within;
the hade no streng[th]e to stand on hy;
The chylde may rue that ys unborne,
it was the mor pittë.
52. Thear was slayne, withe the lord
Persë,
Sir Johan of Agerstone,
Ser Rogar, the hinde¹¹ Hartly,
Ser Wylliam, the bolde Hearone.
53. Ser Jorg, the worthë Loumle,
a knyghte of great renowen,
Ser Raff, the ryche Rugbe, with dyntes wear beaten dowene.
54. For Wetharryngton my harte was wo,
that ever he slayne shulde be;
For when both his leggis wear hewyne in to,¹²
yet he knyled and fought on hys
kny.
55. Ther was slayne, with the dougheti
Duglas,
Ser Hewe the Monggombyrry, Ser Davy Lwdale, that worthë was,
his sistars son was he.
56. Ser Charls a Murrë in that place, that never a foot wolde fle;
Ser Hewe Maxwelle, a lorde he was,
with the Doglas dyd he dey.

¹ placed in rest.⁴ saw.⁷ one.² stopped.⁵ drew.⁸ fight.³ hesitated.⁶ shot.⁹ hold out.¹⁰ The line is unintelligible.¹¹ courteous.¹² two.

57. So on the morrowe the mayde them byears
off birch and hasell so g[r]ay;
Many wedous, with wepyng tears,
cam to fache ther makys¹ away.
58. Tivydale may carpe² off care, Northombarlond may mayk great
mon,
For towe such captayns as slayne wear
thear,
on the March-parti³ shall never be non.
59. Word ys comen to Eddenburrowe, to Jamy the Skottische kyng, That dougheti Douglas, lyff-tenant of the Marches,
he lay sleane Chyviot within.
60. His handdës dyd he weal⁴ and wryng, he sayd, "Alas, and woe ys me!
Such an othar captayn Skotland within,"
he sayd, "ye-feth shuld never be."
61. Worde ys commyn to lovly Londone, till the fourth Harry our kyng,
That lord Persë, leyff-tenante of the Marchis,
he lay slayne Chyviat within.
62. "God have merci on his solle," sayde Kyng Harry,
"good Lord, yf thy will it be!
I have a hondrith captayns in Ynglonde," he sayd,
"as good as ever was he:
But, Persë, and I brook⁵ my lyffe, thy deth well quyte shall be."
63. As our noble kyng mayd his avowe, lyke a noble prince of renowen,
For the deth of the lord Persë
he dyde the battell of Hombyll-
down;
64. Wher syx and thrittë Skottische knyghtes
on a day wear beaten down:
Glendale glytteryde on ther armor bryght,
over castille, towar, and town.

¹ mates, husbands.
⁴ clench.

² talk.

³ the border-lands.
⁵ enjoy.

65. This was the hontynge off the Cheviat, that tear begane this spurn,⁶ Old men that knowen the grownde well yenoughe
call it the battell of Otterburn.
66. At Otterburn begane this spurne uppon a Monnynday;
Ther was the doughtë Douglas sleane,
the Persë never went away.
67. Ther was never a tym on the Marchepartës
sen the Douglas and the Persë met,
But yt ys mervle and the rede blude ronne not,
as the reane⁷ doys in the stret.
68. Jhesue Crist our balys⁸ bete!⁹ and to the blys us brynge!
Thus was the hountynge of the Chivyat:
God sent us alle good endying!

BONNIE GEORGE CAMPBELL

Hie upon Hielands
And low upon Tay
Bonnie George Campbell
Rade out on a day.
Saddled and bridled 5
And gallant rade he;
Hame came his gude horse,
But never cam he!

Out cam his auld mither
Greeting fu' sair,¹⁰ 10
And out cam his bonnie bride Rivin¹¹ her hair.
Saddled and bridled
And bootied rade he;
Toom¹² hame cam the saddle, 15
But never cam he!

"My meadow lies green,
And my corn is unshorn;
My barn is to big,¹³
And my babie's unborn." 20
Saddled and bridled
And bootied rade he;
Toom hame cam the saddle,
But never cam he!

⁶ This line is unintelligible.

⁹ relieve.

⁷ rain.

¹¹ tearing

¹² empty.

⁸ misfortunes.

¹⁰ weeping sorely.

¹³ to be built.

SIR THOMAS MALORY (1400?-1470)

From LE MORTE DARTHUR

PREFACE OF WILLIAM CANTON

After that I had accomplished and finished divers histories, as well of contemplation as of other historial and worldly acts of great conquerors and princes, and also certain books of ensamples and doctrine, many noble and divers gentlemen of this realm of England came and demanded me many and oftentimes, wherefore that I have not do made and imprint the noble history of the Saint Greal and of the [10] most renowned Christian king, first and chief of the three best Christian, and worthy, king Arthur, which ought most to be remembered among us Englishmen tofore all other Christian kings; for it is notoriously known through the universal world that there be nine worthy and the best that ever were, that is to wit three Paynims, three Jews, and three Christian men. ¶ As for the Paynims they were [20] tofore the Incarnation of Christ, which were named, the first Hector of Troy, of whom the history is come, both in ballad and in prose; the second Alexander the Great, and the third Julius Cæsar, Emperor of Rome, of whom the histories be well known and had. And as for the three Jews, which also were tofore the incarnation of our Lord, of whom the first was duke Joshua which brought the chil- [30] dren of Israel into the land of behest, the second David king of Jerusalem, and the third Judas Maccabæus. Of these three the Bible rehearseth all their noble histories and acts. And since the said incarnation have been three noble Christian men stilled and admitted through the universal world into the number of the nine best and worthy. Of whom was first the noble Arthur, whose noble acts I pur- [40] pose to write in this present book here following. The second was Charlemain, or Charles the Great, of whom the history is had in many places, both in French and in English. And the third and last was Godfrey of Boloine, of whose acts and life I made a book unto the excellent prince and king of noble memory, king Edward the Fourth. The said noble gentlemen instantly required me to imprint the his- [50] tory of the said noble king and conqueror king Arthur, and of his knights, with the history of the Saint Greal, and of the death and ending of the said Arthur, affirming that I ought rather to imprint his acts and noble feats, than of Godfrey of Boloine, or any of the other eight, considering that he was a man born within this realm, and king and emperor of the same; and that there be in French divers and [60] many noble volumes of his acts, and also of his knights. ¶ To whom I answered, that divers men hold opinion that there was no such Arthur, and that all such books as been made of him be feigned and fables, because that some chronicles make of him no mention, nor remember him nothing, nor of his knights. Whereto they answered, and one in special said, that in him that should say or think that there [70] was never such a king called Arthur, might well be aretted great folly and blindness. ¶ For he said that there were many evidences of the contrary. First ye may see his sepulchre in the monastery of Glastingbury. And also in Polichronicon, in the fifth book the sixth chapter, and in the seventh book the twenty-third chapter, where his body was buried, and after found, and translated into the [80] said monastery. Ye shall see also in the history of Bochas in his book De Casu Principum part of his noble acts, and also of his fall. Also Galfridus in his British book recounteth his life; and in divers places of England many remembrances be yet of him and shall remain perpetually, and also of his knights. First in the abbey of Westminster, at Saint Edward's shrine, remaineth the print of his seal in red [90] wax closed in beryl, in which is written Patricius Arthurus, Britannie, Gallie, Germanie, Dacie, Imperator. Item in the castle of Dover ye may see Gawaine's skull and Cradok's mantle: at Winchester the Round Table: in other places Launcelot's sword and many other things. Then all these things considered, there can no man reasonably gainsay but that there was a king of this land named Arthur. [100] For in all places, Christian and heathen, he is reputed and taken for one of the nine worthy, and the first of the three Christian men. And also he is more spoken of beyond the sea, more books made of his noble acts, than there be in England, as well in Dutch, Italian, Spanish, and Greekish, as in French. And yet of record remain in witness of him in Wales, in the town of Camelot, the great stones [110] and the marvelous works of iron lying under the ground, and royal vaults, which divers now living have seen. Wherefore it is a marvel why he is no more renowned in his own country, save only it accordeth to the Word of God, which saith that no man is accepted for a prophet in his own country.

Then all these things aforesaid alleged, I could not well deny but that there [120] was such a noble king named Arthur, and reputed one of the nine worthy, and first and chief of the Christian men. And many noble volumes be made of him and of his noble knights in French, which I have seen and read beyond the sea, which be not had in our maternal tongue. But in Welsh be many and also in French, and some in English, but nowhere nigh all. Wherefore, such as have late been [130] drawn out briefly into English I have after the simple conning that God hath sent to me, under the favor and correction of all noble lords and gentlemen, enprised to imprint a book of the noble histories of the said king Arthur, and of certain of his knights, after a copy unto me delivered, which copy Sir Thomas Malorye did take out of certain books of French, and reduced it into English. And I, accord- [140] ing to my copy, have done set it in print, to the intent that noble men may see and learn the noble acts of chivalry, the gentle and virtuous deeds that some knights used in those days, by which they came to honor, and how they that were vicious were punished and oft put to shame and rebuke; humbly beseeching all noble lords and ladies, with all other estates of what estate or degree they been of, that [150] shall see and read in this said book and work, that they take the good and honest acts in their remembrance, and to follow the same. Wherein they shall find many joyous and pleasant histories, and noble and renowned acts of humanity, gentleness, and chivalry. For herein may be seen noble chivalry, courtesy, humanity, friendliness, hardiness, love, friendship, cowardice, murder, hate, virtue, and [160] sin. Do after the good and leave the evil, and it shall bring you to good fame and renown. And for to pass the time this book shall be pleasant to read in; but for to give faith and belief that all is true that is contained herein, ye be at your liberty; but all is written for our doctrine, and for to beware that we fall not to vice nor sin, but to exercise and follow virtue, by the which we may come and at- [170] tain to good fame and renown in this life, and after this short and transitory life to come unto everlasting bliss in heaven; the which He grant us that reigneth in heaven, the blessed Trinity. Amen.

BOOK XXI

CHAPTER IV

HOW BY MISADVENTURE OF AN ADDER THE BATTLE BEGAN, WHERE MORDRED WAS SLAIN, AND ARTHUR HURT TO THE DEATH

Then were they condescended that king Arthur and Sir Mordred should meet betwixt both their hosts, and every each of them should bring fourteen persons. And they came with this word unto Arthur. Then said he, I am glad that this is done. And so he went into the field. And when Arthur should depart, he warned all his host that and they see any sword drawn, Look ye come on fiercely, and slay [10] that traitor, Sir Mordred, for I in no wise trust him. In like wise Sir Mordred warned his host that, And ye see any sword drawn, look that ye come on fiercely, and so slay all that ever before you standeth: for in no wise I will not trust for this treaty, for I know well my father will be avenged upon me. And so they met as their pointment was, and so they were agreed and accorded thoroughly; and [20] wine was fetched, and they drank. Right so came an adder out of a little heath bush, and it stung a knight on the foot. And when the knight felt him stungen, he looked down and saw the adder, and then he drew his sword to slay the adder, and thought of none other harm. And when the host on both parties saw that sword drawn, then they blew beames, trumpets, and horns, and shouted [30 grimly. And so both hosts dressed them together. And king Arthur took his horse, and said, Alas, this unhappy day, and so rode to his party; and Sir Mordred in like wise. And never was there seen a more dolefuller battle in no Christian land. For there was but rushing and riding, foining and striking, and many a grim word was there spoken either to other, and many a deadly stroke. But ever king Arthur [40 rode throughout the battle of Sir Mordred many times, and did full nobly as a noble king should, and at all times he fainted never. And Sir Mordred that day put him in devoir, and in great peril. And thus they fought all the long day, and never stinted, till the noble knights were laid to the cold ground, and ever they fought still, till it was near night, and by that time was there an hundred thousand laid [50 dead upon the down. Then was Arthur wroth out of measure, when he saw his people so slain from him.

Then the king looked about him, and then was he ware of all his host, and of all his good knights, were left no more on live but two knights, that was Sir Lucan the Butler, and his brother Sir Bedivere, and they were full sore wounded. Jesu mercy, said the king, where are all my [60 noble knights becomen? Alas, that ever I should see this doleful day. For now, said Arthur, I am come to mine end. But would to God that I wist where were that traitor Sir Mordred, that hath caused all this mischief. Then was king Arthur ware where Sir Mordred leaned upon his sword among a great heap of dead men. Now give me my spear, said Arthur unto Sir Lucan, for yonder I have espied the [70 traitor that all this woe hath wrought. Sir, let him be, said Sir Lucan, for he is unhappy; and if ye pass this unhappy day, ye shall be right well revenged upon him. Good lord, remember ye of your night's dream, and what the spirit of Sir Gawaine told you this night, yet God of his great goodness hath preserved you hitherto. Therefore, for God's sake, my lord, leave off by this. For, blessed be God, ye [80 have won the field, for here we be three on live, and with Sir Mordred is none on live. And if ye leave off now, this wicked day of destiny is past. Tide me death, betide me life, saith the king, now I see him yonder alone, he shall never escape mine hands, for at a better avail shall I never have him. God speed you well, said Sir Bedivere.

Then the king gat his spear in both [90 his hands, and ran toward Sir Mordred, crying, Traitor, now is thy death-day come. And when Sir Mordred heard Sir Arthur, he ran until him with his sword drawn in his hand. And then king Arthur smote Sir Mordred under the shield, with a foin of his spear throughout the body more than a fathom. And when Sir Mordred felt that he had his death's wound, he thrust himself, with the [100 might that he had, up to the bur of king Arthur's spear. And right so he smote his father Arthur with his sword holden in both his hands, on the side of the head, that the sword pierced the helmet and the brain-pan, and therewithal Sir Mordred fell stark dead to the earth. And the noble Arthur fell in a swoon to the earth, and there he swooned oft-times. And Sir Lucan the Butler, and Sir Bedivere, [110 oft-times heaved him up, and so weakly they led him betwixt them both, to a little chapel not far from the sea side. And when the king was there, he thought him well eased.

Then heard they people cry in the field. Now go, thou, Sir Lucan, said the king, and do me to wit what betokens that noise in the field. So Sir Lucan departed, for he was grievously wounded in [120 many places. And so as he went, he saw and hearkened by the moonlight, how the pillers and robbers were come into the field to pill and to rob many a full noble knight of brooches and beads, of many a good ring, and of many a rich jewel; and who that were not dead all out, there they slew them for their harness and their riches. When Sir Lucan understood this work, he came to the king as soon as [130 he might, and told him all what he had heard and seen. Therefore by mine advice, said Sir Lucan, it is best that we bring you to some town. I would it were so, said the king.

CHAPTER V

HOW KING ARTHUR COMMANDED TO CAST
HIS SWORD EXCALIBUR INTO THE WATER, AND HOW HE WAS DELIVERED TO LADIES IN A BARGE

But I may not stand, mine head works so. Ah, Sir Launcelot, said king Arthur, this day have I sore missed thee. Alas, that ever I was against thee, for now have I my death, whereof Sir Gawaine me warned in my dream. Then Sir Lucan took up the king the one part, and Sir Bedivere the other part, and in the lifting the king swooned, and Sir Lucan fell in a swoon with the lift, that the part of [10 his bowels fell out of his body, and therewith the noble knight's heart brast. And when king Arthur came to himself again, he beheld Sir Lucan, how he lay foaming at the mouth, and part of his bowels lay at his feet. Alas, said the king, this is unto me a full heavy sight, to see this noble duke so die for my sake, for he would have holpen me that had more need of help than I. Alas, he would not com- [20 plain him, his heart was so set to help me. Now Jesu have mercy upon his soul. Then Sir Bedivere wept for the death of his brother. Leave this mourning and weeping, said the king, for all this will not avail me; for, wit thou well, and I might live myself the death of Sir Lucan would grieve me evermore; but my time hieth fast, said the king. Therefore, said Arthur, take thou Excalibur, my good [30 sword, and go with it to yonder water side, and when thou comest there, I charge thee throw my sword in that water, and come again, and tell me what thou there seest. My lord, said Bedivere, your commandment shall be done, and lightly bring you word again.

So Sir Bedivere departed, and by the way he beheld that noble sword, that the pommel and the haft were all of pre- [40 cious stones; and then he said to himself, If I throw this rich sword in the water, thereof shall never come good, but harm and loss. And then Sir Bedivere hid Excalibur under a tree. And as soon as he might he came again unto the king, and said he had been at the water, and had thrown the sword into the water.

What sawest thou there? said the king. Sir, he said, I saw nothing but waves [50 and winds. That is untruly said of thee, said the king; therefore go thou lightly again, and do my command, as thou art to me lief and dear, spare not, but throw it in. Then Sir Bedivere returned again, and took the sword in his hand; and then him thought sin and shame to throw away that noble sword; and so eft he hid the sword, and returned again, and told to the king that he had been at the [60 water, and done his commandment. What saw thou there? said the king. Sir, he said, I saw nothing but the waters wap and the waves wan. Ah traitor, untrue, said king Arthur, now hast thou betrayed me twice. Who would have wend that thou that hast been to me so lief and dear, and thou art named a noble knight, and would betray me for the richness of the sword. But now go again [70 lightly, for thy long tarrying putteth me in great jeopardy of my life, for I have taken cold. And but if thou do now as I bid thee, if ever I may see thee, I shall slay thee with mine own hands, for thou wouldest for my rich sword see me dead.

Then Sir Bedivere departed, and went to the sword, and lightly took it up, and went to the water side; and there he bound the girdle about the hilts, and [80 then he threw the sword as far into the water as he might; and there came an arm and an hand above the water, and met it, and caught it, and so shook it thrice and brandished, and then vanished away the hand with the sword in the water. So Sir Bedivere came again to the king, and told him what he saw. Alas, said the king, help me hence, for I dread me I have tarried over long. Then Sir Bedivere [90 took the king upon his back, and so went with him to that water side. And when they were at the water side, even fast by the bank hove a little barge, with many fair ladies in it, and among them all was a queen, and all they had black hoods, and all they wept and shrieked when they saw king Arthur. Now put me into the barge, said the king; and so he did softly. And there received him three queens with [100 great mourning, and so they set him down, and in one of their laps king Arthur laid his head. And then that queen said, Ah, dear brother, why have ye tarried so long from me? Alas, this wound on your head hath caught over-much cold. And so then they rowed from the land, and Sir Bedivere beheld all those ladies go from him. Then Sir Bedivere cried, Ah, my lord Arthur, what shall become of [110 me, now ye go from me, and leave me here alone among mine enemies? Comfort thyself, said the king, and do as well as thou mayest, for in me is no trust for to trust in. For I will into the vale of Avilion to heal me of my grievous wound. And if thou hear never more of me, pray for my soul. But ever the queens and the ladies wept and shrieked, that it was pity to hear. And as soon as Sir Bedi- [120 vere had lost the sight of the barge, he wept and wailed, and so took the forest, and so he went all that night, and in the morning he was ware betwixt two holts hoar, of a chapel and an hermitage.

CHAPTER VI

HOW SIR BEDIVERE FOUND HIM ON THE MORROW DEAD IN AN HERMITAGE, AND HOW HE ABODE THERE WITH THE HERMIT

Then was Sir Bedivere glad, and thither he went; and when he came into the chapel, he saw where lay an hermit groveling on all four, there fast by a tomb was new graven. When the hermit saw Sir Bedivere he knew him well, for he was but little before bishop of Canterbury, that Sir Mordred banished. Sir, said Sir Bedivere, what man is there interred that ye pray so fast for? Fair son, [10 said the hermit, I wot not verily, but by deeming. But this night, at midnight, here came a number of ladies, and brought hither a dead corpse, and prayed me to bury him; and here they offered an hundred tapers, and gave me an hundred besants. Alas, said Sir Bedivere, that was my lord king Arthur, that here lieth buried in this chapel. Then Sir Bedivere swooned, and when he awoke he prayed [20 the hermit he might abide with him still there, to live with fasting and prayers. For from hence will I never go, said Sir Bedivere, by my will, but all the days of my life here to pray for my lord Arthur. Ye are welcome to me, said the hermit, for I know ye better than ye ween that I do. Ye are the bold Bedivere, and the full noble duke Sir Lucan the Butler was your brother. Then Sir Bedivere told [30 the hermit all as ye have heard tofore. So there bode Sir Bedivere with the hermit that was tofore bishop of Canterbury, and there Sir Bedivere put upon him poor clothes, and served the hermit full lowly in fasting and in prayers.

Thus of Arthur I find never more written in books that be authorized, nor more of the certainty of his death heard I never tell. [40

* * * * *

CHAPTER VII

OF THE OPINION OF SOME MEN OF THE DEATH OF KING ARTHUR; AND HOW QUEEN GUENEVER MADE HER A NUN IN ALMESBURY

Yet some men say in many parts of England that king Arthur is not dead, but had by the will of our Lord Jesu in another place. And men say that he shall come again, and he shall win the holy cross. I will not say it shall be so, but rather I will say, here in this world he changed his life. But many men say that there is written upon his tomb this verse: Hic jacet Arthurus, Rex quondam, Rex- [10 que futurus. Thus leave I here Sir Bedivere with the hermit, that dwelled that time in a chapel beside Glastonbury, and there was his hermitage. And so they lived in their prayers and fastings, and great abstinence.

And when queen Guenever understood that king Arthur was slain, and all the noble knights, Sir Mordred and all the remnant, then the queen stole away, [20 and five ladies with her, and so she went to Almesbury, and there she let make herself a nun, and wore white clothes and black, and great penance she took, as ever did sinful lady in this land, and never creature could make her merry, but lived in fasting, prayers, and alms-deeds, that all manner of people marveled how virtuously she was changed.

* * * * *

THE ELIZABETHAN AGE

EDMUND SPENSER (1552?-1599)

THE FAERIE QUEENE

A LETTER OF THE AUTHORS,

Expounding his whole intention in the course of this worke: which, for that it giveth great light to the reader, for the better understanding is hereunto annexed.

To the Right Noble and Valorous

SIR WALTER RALEIGH, KNIGHT;

Lord Wardein of the Stanneryes, and Her Maiesties Liefetenaunt of the County of Cornewayll.

Sir, knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this booke of mine, which I have entituled the Faery Queene, being a continued allegory, or darke conceit, I haue thought good, as well for avoyding of gealous opinions and misconstructions, as also for your better light in reading thereof, (being so by you commanded,) to discover unto you the general intention and meaning, which [10 in the whole course thereof I have fashioned, without expressing of any particular purposes, or by accidents therein occasioned. The generall end therefore of all the booke is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline: which for that I conceived shoulde be most plausible and pleasing, being coloured with an historicall fiction, the which the most part of men delight to [20 read, rather for variety of matter then for profite of the ensample, I chose the historye of King Arthure, as most fitte for the excellency of his person, being made famous by many men's former workes, and also furthest from the daunger of envy, and suspition of present time. In which I have followed all the antique Poets historicall: first Homere, who in the Persons of Agamemnon and Ulys- [30

ses hath ensampled a good governour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseis; then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Aeneas; after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando: and lately Tasso dis-severed them againe, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in Philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a private man, coloured in [40 his Rinaldo; the other named Politice in his Godfredo. By ensample of which excellent poets, I labour to pourtraict in Arthure, before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private morall vertues, as Aristotle hath devised; the which is the purpose of these first twelve bookes: which if I finde to be well accepted, I may be perhaps encouraged to frame the other part of politticke [50 vertues in his person, after that hee came to be king.

To some, I know, this methode will seeme displeasaunt, which had rather have good discipline delivered plainly in way of precepts, or sermoned at large, as they use, then thus clowdily enwrapped in Allegoricall devises. But such, me seeme, should be satisfide with the use of these dayes, seeing all things accounted by [60 their shoves, and nothing esteemed of, that is not delightfull and pleasing to commune sence. For this cause is Xenophon preferred before Plato, for that the one, in the exquisite depth of his judgement, formed a commune welth, such as it should be; but the other in the person of Cyrus, and the Persians, fashioned a governement, such as might best be: so much more profitable and gracious is [70 doctrine by ensample, then by rule. So haue I laboured to doe in the person of Arthure: whome I conceive, after his long education by Timon, to whom he was by Merlin delivered to be brought up, so soone as he was borne of the Lady Igrayne, to have seene in a dream or vision the Faery Queene, with whose excellent beauty ravished, he awaking resolved to seeke her out; and so being [80 by Merlin armed, and by Timon thoroughly instructed, he went to seeke her forth in Faerye land. In that Faery Queene I meane glory in my generall intencion, but in my particular I conceive the most excellent and glorious person of our soveraine the Queene, and her kingdome in Faery land. And yet, in some places els, I doe otherwise shadow her. For considering she beareth two persons, the [90 one of a most royall Queene or Empresse, the other of a most vertuous and beautifull Lady, this latter part in some places I doe expresse in Belphebe, fashioning her name according to your owne excellent concept of Cynthia, (Phoebe and Cynthia being both names of Diana.) So in the person of Prince Arthure I sette forth magnificence in particular, which vertue, for that (according to Aristotile and [100 the rest) it is the perfection of all the rest, and containeth in it them all, therefore in the whole course I mention the deedes of Arthure applyable to that vertue, which I write of in that booke. But of the xii. other vertues, I make xii. other knights the patrones, for the more variety of the history: of which these three bookes containe three. The first of the knight of the Redcrosse, in whome I expresse [110 holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whome I sette forth temperaunce: The third of Britomartis, a lady knight, in whome I picture chastity. But, because the beginning of the whole worke seemeth abrupte, and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that ye know the occasion of these three knights' severall adventures. For the methode of a poet historical is not such, as of an his- [120 toriographer. For an historiographer discourseth of affayres orderly as they were donne, accounting as well the times as the actions; but a poet thrusteth into the midst, even where it most concerneth him, and there recouring to the thinges forepast, and divining of thinges to come, maketh a pleasing analysis of all.

The beginning therefore of my history, if it were to be told by an historiog- [130 rapher, should be the twelfth booke, which is the last; where I devise that the Faery

Queene kept her annuall feaste xii. dayes; uppon which xii. severall dayes, the occasions of the xii. severall adventures hapned, which, being undertaken by xii. severall knights, are in these xii. books severally handled and discoursed. The first was this. In the beginning of the feast, there presented him selfe a tall clownishe [140 younge man, who, falling before the Queene of Faeries, desired a boone (as the manner then was) which during that feast she might not refuse: which was that hee might have the atchievement of any adventure, which during that feaste should happen: that being graunted, he rested him on the floore, unfitte through his rusticity for a better place. Soone after entred a faire ladye in mourning [150 weedes, riding on a white asse, with a dwarfe behind her leading a warlike steed, that bore the armes of a knight, and his speare in the dwarfes hand. Shee, falling before the Queene of Faeries, complained that her father and mother, an ancient king and queene, had bene by an huge dragon many years shut up in a brassen castle, who thence suffred them not to yssew; and therefore besought the [160 Faery Queene to assygne her some one of her knights to take on him that exployt. Presently that clownish person, upstarting, desired that adventure: whereat the Queene much wondering, and the lady much gainesaying, yet he earnestly importuned his desire. In the end the lady told him, that unlesse that armour which she brought, would serve him (that is, the armour of a Christian man speci- [170 fied by Saint Paul, vi. Ephes.) that he could not succeed in that enterprise: which being forthwith put upon him, with dewe furnitures thereunto, he seemed the goodliest man in al that company, and was well liked of the lady. And eftesoones taking on him knighthood, and mounting on that straunge courser, he went forth with her on that adventure: where be- ginneth the first booke, viz. [180

A gentle knight was pricking on the playne, etc.

The second day there came in a palmer, bearing an infant with bloody hands, whose parents he complained to have bene slayn by an enchaunteresse called Acrasia; and therefore craved of the Faery Queene, to appoint him some knight to performe that adventure; which being assigned to Sir Guyon, he presently went forth with that same palmer: [190 which is the beginning of the second booke, and the whole subject thereof. The third day there came in a groome, who complained before the Faery Queene, that a vile enchaunter, called Busirane, had in hand a most faire lady, called Amoretta, whom he kept in most grievous torment, because she would not yield him the pleasure of her body. Whereupon Sir Scudamour, the lover of that lady, [200 presently tooke on him that adventure. But being unable to performe it by reason of the hard enchauntments, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him, and reskewed his loue.

But by occasion hereof many other adventures are intermedled; but rather as accidents then intendments: as the love of Britomart, the overthrow of Marinell, [210 the misery of Florimell, the vertuousness of Belphebe, the lasciviousnes of Hellenora, and many the like.

Thus much, Sir, I have briefly overronne, to direct your understanding to the wel-head of the history, that from thence gathering the whole intention of the conceit ye may, as in a handfull, gripe al the discourse, which otherwise may happily seeme tedious and confused. So, humbly [220 craving the continuance of your honorable favour towards me, and th' eternall establishment of your happines, I humbly take leave.

23. January, 1589.

Yours most humbly affectionate,

ED. SPENSER.

From BOOK I, CANTO I

The patrone of true Holinesse
Foule Errour doth defeate:
Hypocrisie, him to entrappe,
Doth to his home entreate.

I

A gentle knight was pricking¹ on the plaine,
Ycladd in mightie armes and silver shielde,

¹ sparring, riding.

Wherein old dints of deepe woundes did remaiue,

The cruell markes of many a bloody felde;
Yet armes till that time did he never wield:

His angry steede did chide his foming
bitt,⁶

As much disdayning to the curbe to yield:

Full jolly² knight he seemd, and faire did
sitt,

As one for knightly giusts³ and fierce encounters fitt.

II

But on his brest a bloodie crosse he bore,¹⁰
The deare remembrance of his dying
Lord,

For whose sweete sake that glorious badge
he wore,
And dead as living ever him ador'd:

Upon his shield the like was also scor'd,
For soveraine hope, which in his helpe he had:¹⁵

Right faithfull true he was in deede and
word,

But of his cheere⁴ did seeme too solemne sad;

Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.⁵

III

Upon a great adventure he was bond,⁶

That greatest Gloriana to him gave,²⁰

That greatest glorious queene of Faery
Lond, .

To winne him worshippe, and her grace to have,

Which of all earthly thinges he most did
crave;

And ever as he rode his hart did earne⁷

To prove his puissance in battell brave²⁵

Upon his foe, and his new force to learne

Upon his foe, a dragon horrible and stearne.

IV

A lovely ladie rode him faire beside,

Upon a lowly asse more white then snow,
Yet she much whiter, but the same did hide

Under a vele, that wimpled⁸ was full low,³⁰

² gallant.

⁴ countenance, expression of his face.

⁶ bound.

⁷ yearn.

³ jousts.

⁵ dreaded.

⁸ pleated.

And over all a blacke stole shee did throw:
As one that inly mournd, so was she sad,
And hevie sate upon her palfrey slow:
Seemed in heart some hidden care she had;
And by her in a line a milkewhite lambe
she lad. 36

v

So pure and innocent, as that same lambe,
She was in life and every vertuous lore,
And by descent from royall lynage came
Of ancient kinges and queenes, that had of yore 40
Their scepters stretcht from east to west-
erne shore,
And all the world in their subjection held,
Till that infernall feend with foule uprore
Forwasted¹ all their land, and them expeld:
Whom to avenge, she had this knight from far compeld.² 45

vi

Behind her farre away a dwarfe did lag,
That lasie seemd, in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his backe. Thus as they past,
The day with cloudes was suddeine overcast, 50
And angry Jove an hideous storme of raine
Did poure into his lemans³ lap so fast,
That everie wight⁴ to shrowd⁵ it did con-
strain,
And this faire couple eke⁶ to shroud themselves were fain.

vii

Enforst to seeke some covert nigh at hand,
A shadie grove not farr away they spide, 56
That promist ayde the tempest to with-
stand:
Whose loftie trees, yclad with sommers
pride,
Did spred so broad, that heavens light did
hide,
Not perceable with power of any starr; 60
And all within were pathes and alleies
wide,
With footing worne, and leading inward
farr:
Faire harbour that them seemes, so in they

viii

And foorth they passe, with pleasure forward led,
Joying to heare the birdes sweete harmony, 65
Which, therein shrouded from the tempest
dred,
Seemed in their song to scorne the cruell
sky.
Much can⁷ they praise the trees so straight and hy,
The sayling⁸ pine, the cedar proud and tall,
The vine-propp elme, the poplar never dry, 70
The builder⁹ oake, sole king of forrests all,
The aspine good for staves, the cypresse
funerall,

ix

The laurell, meed of mightie conquerours
And poets sage, the firre that weepeth
still,
The willow worne of forlorne paramours,¹⁰
The eugh¹¹ obedient to the benders will, 76
The birch for shaftes, the sallow for the mill,
The mirrhe sweete bleeding in the bitter
wound,
The warlike beech, the ash for nothing ill,
The fruitfull olive, and the platane¹²
round, 80
The carver holme,¹³ the maple seeldom inward sound.

x

Led with delight, they thus beguile the
way,
Untill the blustering storme is overblowne;
When, weening to returne whence they did
stray,
They cannot finde that path, which first was showne, 85
But wander too and fro in waies un-knowne,
Furthest from end then, when they nearest weene,
That makes them doubt, their wits be not their owne:
So many pathes, so many turnings seene,
That which of them to take, in diverse doubt they been. 90

⁷ did.⁸ used for ship timber⁹ used for building.¹⁰ lovers. ¹¹ yew.¹² plane.¹³ a kind of oak, used for wood carvings

XI

At last resolving forward still to fare,
 Till that some end they finde, or in or out,
 That path they take, that beaten seemd
 most bare,
 And like to lead the labyrinth about;¹
 Which when by tract² they hunted had throughout, 95
 At length it brought them to a hollowe
 cave,
 Amid the thickest woods. The champion stout Eftsoones³ dismounted from his courser brave,
 And to the dwarfe a while his needlesse spere he gave.

XII

"Be well aware," quoth then that ladie milde, 100
 "Least suddaine mischiefe ye too rash provoke:
 The danger hid, the place unknowne and wilde, Breedes dreadfull doubts: oft fire is without smoke,
 And perill without show: therefore your
 stroke,
 Sir knight, with-hold, till further tryall
 made," 105
 "Ah, ladie," sayd he, "shame were to revoke
 The forward footing for an hidden shade:
 Vertue gives her selfe light, through darknesse for to wade."⁴

XIII

"Yea, but," quoth she, "the perill of this
 place
 I better wot then you; though nowe too
 late 110
 To wish you backe returne with foule dis-
 grace,
 Yet wisdome warnes, whilest foot is in the gate,⁵
 To stay the steppe, ere forced to retrate.
 This is the wandring wood,⁶ this Errours
 den,
 A monster vile, whom God and man does hate: 115

¹ out of.
⁴ way.

² trace.

³ forthwith. ⁴ walk, go.
⁶ wood of wandering.

Therefore I read⁷ beware." "Fly, fly!"
 quoth then
 The fearefull dwarfe: "this is no place for living men."

XIV

But full of fire and greedy hardiment,⁸
 The youthfull knight could not for ought be staide,
 But forth unto the darksom hole he went,
 And looked in: his glistring armor made 121
 A litle glooming light, much like a sha⁹de,
 By which he saw the ugly monster plaine,
 Halfe like a serpent horribly displaide,
 But th' other halfe did womans shape retaine, 125
 Most lothsom, filthie, foule, and full of vile disdaine.⁹

* * * * *

XXVII

His lady, seeing all that chaunst, from farre, 235
 Approcht in hast to greet his victorie,
 And saide, "Faire knight, borne under happie starre,
 Who see your vanquisht foes before you
 lye,
 Well worthie be you of that armory,¹⁰
 Wherein ye have great glory wonne this
 day, 240
 And proov'd your strength on a strong enimie,
 Your first adventure: many such I pray,
 And henceforth ever wish that like succeed it may."

XXVIII

Then mounted he upon his steede againe,
 And with the lady backward sought to wend; 245
 That path he kept which beaten was most
 plaine,
 Ne ever would to any by way bend,
 But still did follow one unto the end,
 The which at last out of the wood them
 brought.
 So forward on his way (with God to frend)
 He passed forth, and new adventure sought: 251
 Long way he traueiled, before he heard of ought.

⁷ advise
⁹ loathsomeness.

⁸ impetuous hardihood.
¹⁰ armor.

XXIX

At length they chaunst to meet upon the
way
An aged sire, in long blacke weedes¹
yclad,
His feete all bare, his beard all hoarie
gray,²⁵⁵
And by his belte his booke he hanging had,
Sober he seemde, and very sagely sad,
And to the ground his eyes were lowly
bent,
Simple in shew, and voide of malice bad,
And all the way he prayed as he went,²⁶⁰
And often knockt his brest, as one that did repent.

XXX

He faire the knight saluted, louting² low,
Who faire him quited,³ as that courteous
was;
And after asked him, if he did know
Of straunge adventures, which abroad did pas.²⁶⁵
"Ah! my dear sonne," quoth he, "how should, alas!
Silly⁴ old man, that lives in hidden cell,
Bidding⁵ his beades all day for his trespas,
Tydings of warre and worldly trouble tell?
With holy father sits⁶ not with such things to mell."²⁷⁰

XXXI

"But if of daunger, which hereby doth
dwell,
And homebredd evil ye desire to heare,
Of a straunge man I can you tidings tell,
That wasteth all his countrie farre and neare."
"Of such," saide he, "I chiefly doe inquere,²⁷⁵
And shall you well rewarde to shew the
place,
In which that wicked wight his dayes doth weare:
For to all knighthood it is foule disgrace,
That such a cursed creature lives so long a space."

XXXII

"Far hence," quoth he, "in wastfull wil-dernesse,²⁸⁰
His dwelling is, by which no living wight

¹ clothes.² bowing.³ requited⁴ telling, counting.⁵ befits.⁶ simple.⁷ meddle.

May ever passe, but thorough great distresse."

"Now," saide the ladie, "draweth toward
night,

And well I wote, that of your later fight

Ye all forwearied be: for what so strong,²⁸⁵

But, wanting rest, will also want of might?

The Sunne, that measures heaven all day
long,

At night doth baite⁸ his steedes the ocean waves emong.

XXXIII

"Then with the Sunne take, sir, your timely rest,

And with new day new worke at once begin:²⁹⁰

Untroubled night, they say, gives counsell
best."

"Right well, sir knight, ye have advised bin,"

Quoth then that aged man; "the way to win

Is wisely to advise:⁹ now day is spent;
Therefore with me ye may take up your in²⁹⁵

For this same night." The knight was well content:

So with that godly father to his home they went.

XXXIV

A litle lowly hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forests side,

Far from resort of people, that did pas³⁰⁰

In travaill to and froe: a litle wyde¹⁰

There was an holy chappell edifyde,¹¹

Wherein the hermite dewly wont to say
His holy things each morne and even-tyde:

Thereby a christall streame did gently play,³⁰⁵

Which from a sacred fountaine welled forth alway.

XXXV

Arrived there, the little house they fill, Ne looke for entertainment, where none
was:

Rest is their feast, and all things at their
will;

The noblest mind the best contentment has.³¹⁰

⁸ feed¹⁰ a little way off.⁹ take thought, consider.¹¹ built.

With faire discourse the evening so they pas:
 For that olde man of pleasing wordes had
 store,
 And well could file his tongue as smooth
 as glas:
 He told of saintes and popes, and ever-
 more
 He strowd an Ave-Mary after and before. 315

XXXVI

The drouping night thus creepeth on them
 fast,
 And the sad humor¹ loading their eye
 liddes,
 As messenger of Morpheus, on them cast
 Sweet slombring deaw, the which to sleep
 them biddes:
 Unto their lodgings then his guesates he riddes:² 320
 Where when all drownd in deadly sleepe
 he findes,
 He to his studie goes, and there amidde
 His magick bookes and artes of sundrie
 kindes,
 He seekes out mighty charmes, to trouble
 sleepey minds.

XXXVII

Then choosing out few words most horrible, 325
 (Let none them read) thereof did verses frame;
 With which and other spelles like terrible,
 He bad awake blacke Plutoes griesly dame,
 And cursed heven, and spake reprochful
 shame
 Of highest God, the Lord of life and
 light: 330
 A bold bad man, that dar'd to call by name
 Great Gorgon, prince of darknes and dead
 night,
 At which Cocytus quakes, and Styx is put to flight.

XXXVIII

And forth he cald out of deepe darknes
 dredd
 Legions of sprights, the which, like litle
 flies 335
 Fluttring about his ever damned hedde,
 Awaitte whereto their service he applies,

¹ heavy moisture.² sends off.

To aide his friendes, or fray³ his enimies:
 Of those he chose out two, the falsest twoo,
 And fittest for to forge true-seeming lyes; 340
 The one of them he gave a message too,
 The other by him selfe staide, other worke to doo.

XXXIX

He, making speedy way through spersed⁴
 ayre,
 And through the world of waters wide and
 deepe,
 To Morpheus house doth hastily repaire. 345
 Amid the bowels of the earth full steepe,
 And low, where dawning day doth never peepe,
 His dwelling is; there Tethys his wet bed
 Doth ever wash, and Cynthia still doth steepe
 In silver deaw his ever-drouping hed, 350
 Whiles sad Night over him her mantle black doth spred.

XL

Whose double gates he findeth locked fast,
 The one faire fram'd of burnisht yvory,
 The other all with silver overcast;
 And wakeful dogges before them farre doe
 lye, 355
 Watching to banish Care their enemy,
 Who oft is wont to trouble gentle Sleepe.
 By them the sprite doth passe in quietly,
 And unto Morpheus comes, whom drowned deepe
 In drowsie fit he findes: of nothing he takes keepe.⁵ 360

XLI

And more to lulle him in his slumber soft,
 A trickling streame from high rock tumbling downe,
 And ever drizling raine upon the loft,
 Mixt with a murmuring winde, much like the sowne
 Of swarming bees, did cast him in a swowne: 365
 No other noyse, nor peoples troublous
 cryes,
 As still⁶ are wont t'annoy the walled towne,

³ frighten.
⁵ heed.⁴ widely diffused.
⁶ ever.

And on the grasse her dainty limbs did lay,
In secrete shadow, far from all mens
sight:

From her fayre head her fillet she undight,
And layd her stole aside. Her angels face
As the great eye of heaven shyned bright,
And made a sunshine in the shady place;³⁵
Did never mortall eye behold such heavenly grace.

V

It fortun'd, out of the thickest wood
A ramping lyon rushed suddenly,
Hunting full greedy after salvage¹ blood.
Soone as the royall virgin he did spy, ⁴⁰
With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
To have attonce devourd her tender corse;²
But to the pray when as he drew more ny,
His bloody rage aswaged with remorse,
And, with the sight amazd, forgat his furious forse. ⁴⁵

VI

In stead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
And lickt her lilly hands with fawning
tong,
As he her wronged innocence did weet.³
O how can beautie maister the most strong,
And simple truth subdue avenging wrong!
Whose yielded pryde and proud submission, ⁵¹
Still dreading death, when she had marked
long,
Her hart gan meit in great compassion,
And drizling teares did shed for pure affection.

VII

"The lyon, lord of everie beast in field," ⁵⁵
Quoth she, "his princely puissance doth abate,
And mightie proud to humble weake does
yield,
Forgetfull of the hungry rage, which late
Him prickt, in pittie of my sad estate:
But he, my lyon, and my noble lord, ⁶⁰
How does he find in cruell hart to hate
Her that him lov'd and ever most adord
As the God of my life? why hath he me abhord?"

¹ savage.² body.³ know.

VIII

Redounding teares did choke th' end of her plaint,
Which softly ecchoed from the neighbour
wood; ⁶⁵
And sad to see her sorrowfull constraint,
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood;
With pittie calmd, downe fell his angry mood.

At last, in close hart shutting up her payne,
Arose the virgin borne of heavenly brood,
And to her snowy palfrey got agayne, ⁷¹
To seeke her strayed champion if she might attayne.

IX

The lyon would not leave her desolate,
But with her went along, as a strong gard
Of her chast person, and a faythfull mate;⁷⁵
Of her sad troubles and misfortunes hard:
Still, when she slept, he kept both watch and ward,
And when she wakt, he wayted diligent,
With humble service to her will prepar'd:
From her fayre eyes he tooke commandement, ⁸⁰
And ever by her lookes conceived her intent.

* * * * *

CANTO XI

The knight with that old Dragon fights
Two days incessantly:
The third him overthrowes, and gayns
Most glorious victory.

I

High time now gan it wex for Una fayre,
To thinke of those her captive parents
deare,
And their forwasted⁴ kingdom to repayre:
Whereto whenas they now approached
neare,
With hartie wordes her knight she gan to cheare, ⁵
And in her modest maner thus bespake:
"Deare knight, as deare as ever knight was
deare,
That all these sorrowes suffer for my sake,
High heven behold the tedious toyle ye for-me take!

⁴ ravaged.

II

"Now are we come unto my native soyle,¹⁰
 And to the place where all our perilles
 dwell;
 Here hauntes that feend, and does his dayly spoyle;
 Therefore henceforth bee at your keeping
 well,
 And ever ready for your foeman fell.
 The sparke of noble corage now awake, ¹⁵
 And strive your excellent selfe to excell:
 That shall ye evermore renowned make Above all knights on earth, that batteill undertake."

III

And pointing forth, "Lo! yonder is,"
 (said she)
 "The brasen towre, in which my parents
 deare ²⁰
 For dread of that huge feend emprisond
 be;
 Whom I from far see on the walles ap-peare,
 Whose sight my feeble soule doth greatly cheare:
 And on the top of all I do espye
 The watchman wayting tydings glad to heare; ²⁵
 That, O my Parents! might I happily Unto you bring, to ease you of your misery!"

IV

With that they heard a roaring hideous
 sownd,
 That all the ayre with terror filled wyde,
 And seemd uneath¹ to shake the stedfast ground. ³⁰ Eftsoones² that dreadful dragon they espyde,
 Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side
 Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill.
 But all so soone as he from far descryde
 Those glistring armes, that heaven with light did fill, ³⁵
 He rousd himselfe full blyth, and hastned them untill.

V

Then badd the knight his Lady yede³ aloof,
 And to an hill herselfe withdraw asyde,

¹ almost.² shortly.³ go.

From whence she might behold that bat-tailles proof,
 And eke be safe from daunger far descryde;
 She him obeyd, and turned a little wyde.⁴¹
 Now, O thou sacred Muse! most learned
 dame, Fayre ympe⁴ of Phœbus and his aged
 bryde,
 The nourse of time and everlasting fame,
 That warlike handes ennoblest with im-mortall name, ⁴⁵

VI

O gently come into my feeble brest;
 Come gently, but not with that mightie
 rage,
 Wherewith the martiall troupes thou doest
 infest,
 And hartes of great heroës doest enrage,
 That nought their kindled corage may aswage: ⁵⁰
 Soone as thy dreadfull trompe begins to
 sownd,
 The god of warre with his fiers equipage
 Thou doest awake, sleepe never he so
 sownd;
 And scared nations doest with horror
 sterne astownd.

VII

Fayre goddesse, lay that furious fitt
 asyde, ⁵⁵
 Till I of warres and bloody Mars doe sing,
 And Bryton fieldes with Sarazin blood
 bedyde,
 Twixt that great Faery Queene and Paynim King,
 That with their horror heven and earth
 did ring,
 A worke of labour long, and endlesse
 prayse: ⁶⁰
 But now a while lett downe that haughtie
 string,
 And to my tunes thy second tenor rayse,
 That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.

VIII

By this the dreadful Beast drew nigh to
 hand,
 Halfe flying and halfe footing in his haste,

⁴ child.

That with his largenesse measured much
land, 66
And made wide shadow under his huge
waste,
As mountaine doth the valley overcaste.
Approching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible, and vaste, 70
Which, to increase his wondrous greatnes
more,
Was swoln with wrath and poyson, and with bloody gore.

IX

And over all with brasen scales was armd,
Like plated cote of steele, so couched
neare
That nought mote perce; ne might his corse¹ bee harmd 75
With dint of swerd, nor push of pointed speare:
Which as an eagle, seeing pray appeare,
His aery plumes doth rouze, full rudely
dight,²
So shaked he, that horror was to heare:
For as the clashing of an armor bright, 80
Such noyse his rouzed scales did send unto the knight.

X

His flaggy winges, when forth he did display,
Were like two sayles, in which the hollow
wynd
Is gathered full, and worketh speedy
way:
And eke the pennies,³ that did his pineons
bynd, 85
Were like mayne-yardes with flying canvas lynd,
With which whenas him list the ayre to beat,
And there by force unwonted passage
fynd,
The cloudes before him fledd for terror great,
And all the hevens stood still, amazed with his threat. 90

XI

His huge long tayle, wovnd up in hundred foldes,
Does overspred his long bras-scaly back,

¹ body.² arrayed.³ quills.

Whose wreathed boughtes⁴ when ever he unfolds,
And thick entangled knots adown does slack, Bespotted as with shieldes of red and blacke, 95
It sweepeth all the land behind him farre,
And of three furlongs does but litle lacke;
And at the point two stinges in fixed arre,
Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steele
exceeden farre.

XII

But stinges and sharpest steele did far exceed 100
The sharpnesse of his cruel rending clawes:
Dead was it sure, as sure as death in deed,
What ever thing does touch his ravenous
pawes,
Or what within his reach he ever drawes.
But his most hideous head my tongue
to tell 105
Does tremble; for his deepe devouring jaws
Wyde gaped, like the griesly mouth of hell,
Through which into his darke abyse all ravin fell.

XIII

And, that more wondrous was, in either jaw
Three ranckes of yron teeth enraunged
were, 110
In which yett trickling blood and gobbets⁵ raw
Of late devoured bodies did appeare,
That sight thereof bredd cold congealed
feare:
Which to increase, and all atonce to kill,
A cloud of smothering smoke and sulphure seare⁶ 115
Out of his stinking gorge forth steemed
still,
That all the ayre about with smoke and stench did fill.

XIV

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shieldes,
Did burne with wrath, and sparkled living fyre;

⁴ coils.⁵ pieces.⁶ searing.

As two broad beacons, sett in open fieldes, Send forth their flames far off to every shyre, 121

And warning give that enimies conspyre
With fire and sword the region to invade:
So flam'd his eyne with rage and rancor-
ous yre;

But far within, as in a hollow glade, 125
Those glaring lampes were sett that made a dreadfull shade.

XV

So dreadfully he towards him did pas,
Forelitting up a-loft his speckled brest,
And often bounding on the brused gras,
As for great joyance of his newcome
guest. 130

Eftsoones he gan advaunce his haughty
crest,
As chauffed¹ bore his bristles doth up-
reare;
And shoke his scales to battaile ready
drest,
That made the Redcrosse Knight nigh
quake for feare,
As bidding bold defyaunce to his foeman
neare. 135

XVI

The knight gan fayrely couch his steady
speare,
And fiersely ran at him with rigorous
might:

The pointed steele, arriving rudely there,²
His harder hyde would nether perce nor bight,

But, glauncing by, foorth passed forward
right. 140

Yet sore amoved with so puissaunt push,
The wrathfull beast about him turned
light,

And him so rudely, passing by, did brush
With his long tayle, that horse and man to ground did rush.

XVII

Both horse and man up lightly rose
again, 145

And fresh encounter towards him addrest;
But, th' ydle stroke yet backe recoyld in vaine,

And found no place his deadly point to rest.

² there.

Exceeding rage enflam'd the furious beast,
To be avenged of so great despight; 150
For never felt his imperceable³ brest
So wondrous force from hand of living
wight;

Yet had he prov'd the powre of many a puissant knight.

XVIII

Then, with his waving wings displayed
wyde,

Himselfe up high he lifted from the
ground, 155

And with strong flight did forcibly divyde
The yielding ayre, which nigh too feeble
found

Her flitting parts, and element unsound,
To beare so great a weight: he, cutting
way

With his broad sayles, about him soared
round; 160

At last, low stouping with unweldy sway, Snatcht up both horse and man, to beare them quite away.

XIX

Long he them bore above the subject
plaine,

So far as ewghen⁴ bow a shaft may send,
Till struggling strong did him at last con-
straine 165

To let them downe⁵ before his flightes end:
As hagar⁶ hauke, presuming to contend
With hardy fowle, above his hable might,
His wearie pounces⁵ all in vaine doth spend

To trusse⁶ the pray too heavy for his flight; 170

Which, comming down to ground, does free it selfe by fight.

XX

He so disseized of his gryping grosse,
The knight his thrillant⁷ speare againe
assayd

In his bras-plated body to embosse,
And three mens strength unto the stroake
he layd; 175

Wherewith the stiffe beame quaked, as affrayd,⁸

³ impenetrable.⁴ hold.⁵ yew⁶ piercing.⁷ efforts, struggles.⁸ terrified.

And glauncing from his scaly necke did glyde
Close under his left wing, then broad displayd:
The percing steele there wrought a wound
full wyde,
That with the uncouth¹ smart the monster
lowdly cryde. 180

XXI

He cryde, as raging seas are wont to rore
When wintry storme his wrathful wreck does threat;
The rolling billowes beate the ragged
shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat;
And greedy gulfe does gape, as he would eat 185
His neighbour element in his revenge:
Then gin the blustering brethren boldly threat
To move the world from off his stedfast henge,²
And boystrous battaile make, each other to avenge.

XXII

The steely head stuck fast still in his flesh, 190
Till with his cruell clawes he snatcht the
wood,
And quite a sunder broke. Forth flowed fresh
A gushing river of blacke gory blood,
That drowned all the land whereon he stood:
The streame thereof would drive a water-
mill. 195
Trebly augmented was his furious mood
With bitter sence of his deepe rooted ill,
That flames of fire he threw forth from his large noethril.³

XXIII

His hideous tayle then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble
thyres 200
Of his froth-fomy steed, whose courage
stout
Striving to loose the knott that fast him
tyes,

¹ strange.² hinge; but here meaning base, or foundation.³ nostrils.

Himselfe in streighter bandes too rash implyes,⁴
That to the ground he is perforce constraynd
To throw his ryder; who can quickly ryse
From off the earth, with durty blood distaynd,⁵ 206
For that reprochfull fall right fowly he disdaynd.

XXIV

And fercely tooke his trenchand blade in
hand,
With which he stroke so furious and so fell,
That nothing seemd the puissaunce could withstand: 210
Upon his crest the hardned yron fell;
But his more hardned crest was armd so
well,
That deeper dint therein it would not make;
Yet so extremely did the buffe him quell,
That from thenceforth he shund the like to take, 215
But, when he saw them come, he did them still forsake.

XXV

The knight was wroth to see his stroke
beguyld,
And smot againe with more outrageous
might;
But backe againe the sparcling steele recoyld,
And left not any marke where it did
light, 220
As if in adamant rocke it had beene
pight.⁶
The beast, impatient of his smarting
wound,
And of so fierce and forcible despight,⁷ Thought with his winges to sty⁸e above
the ground;
But his late wounded wing unserviceable
found. 225

XXVI

Then, full of grieve and anguish vehement,
He lowdly brayd, that like was never
heard;
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that, flashing in his beard,
Him all amazd, and almost made afeard:

⁴ involves. ⁵ soiled. ⁶ struck. ⁷ anger.

The scorching flame sore swinged¹ all his
face, 231
And through his armour all his body seard,
That he could not endure so cruell cace,
But thought his armes to leave, and helmet to unlace.

XXVII

Not that great champion of the antique
world, 235
Whom famous poetes verse so much doth vaunt,
And hath for twelve huge labours high extold,
So many furies and sharpe fits did haunt,
When him the poysoned garment did en-chaunt,
When centaures blood and bloody verses charmd, 240
As did this knight twelve thousand
dolours daunt,
Whom fyrie steele now burnt, that erst
him armd;
That erst him goodly armd, now most of all him harmd.

XXVIII

Faynt, wearie, sore, emboyled,² grieved, brent,³
With heat, toyle, wounds, armes, smart, and inward fire, 245
That⁴ never man such mischiefes did tor-
ment;
Death better were, death did he oft desire,
But death will never come when needes require.
Whom so dismayd when that his foe beheld,
He cast⁴ to suffer him no more respire,⁵ 250
But gan his sturdy sterne⁶ about to weld,
And him so strongly stroke, that to the ground him feld.

XXIX

It fortun'd (as fayre it then befell, Behynd his backe, unweeting, where he
stood,
Of auncient time there was a springing
well, 255
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood,

¹ singed.
⁴ planned.

² boiled.
⁶ breathe.

³ burned.
⁵ tail.

Full of great vertues, and for med'cine
good.

Whylome, before that cursed dragon got
That happy land, and all with innocent
blood

Defyld those sacred waves, it rightly hot⁷ 260

The Well of Life, ne yet his⁸ vertues had forgot.

XXX

For unto life the dead it could restore,
And guilt of sinfull crimes cleane wash
away;

Those that with sicknesse were infected
sore

It could recure; and aged long decay 265

Renew, as one were borne that very day.

Both Silo this, and Jordan, did excell,

And th' English Bath, and eke the German Spau;

Ne can Cephise, nor Hebrus, match this
well:

Into the same the knight back overthrown fell. 270

XXXI

Now gan the golden Phoebus for to steepe
His fierie face in billowes of the west,

And his faint steedes watred in ocean
deepe,

Whiles from their journall labours they did rest,

When that infernall monster, having kest⁹

His wearie foe into that living well, 276

Gan high advaunce his broad discoloured brest

Above his wonted pitch, with countenance
fell,

And clapt his yron wings, as victor he did
dwell.

XXXII

Which when his pensive lady saw from farre, 280

Great woe and sorrow did her soule assay,¹⁰

As weening that the sad end of the warre,

And gan to highest God entirely pray

That feared chaunce from her to turne
away:

With folded hands, and knees full lowly

bent, 285

All night shee watcht, ne once adowne would lay

⁷ was called.

⁸ its.

⁹ cast.

¹⁰ afflict.

Her dainty limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.

XXXIII

The morrow next gan earely to appeare,
That Titan rose to runne his daily race;²⁹⁰
But earely, ere the morrow next gan reare
Out of the sea faire Titans deawy face,
Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy
Her loved knight to move his manly pace:
For she had great doubt of his safety, ²⁹⁶ Since late she saw him fall before his enimy.

XXXIV

At last she saw where he upstarted brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay:
As eagle, fresh out of the ocean wave, ³⁰⁰
Where he hath lefte his plumes all hory
gray,
And deckt himselfe with fethers youthly
gay,
Like eyas hauke up mounts unto the
skies,
His newly-budded pineons to assay,
And marveiles at himselfe stil as he flies:
So new this new-borne knight to battell
new did rise. ³⁰⁶

XXXV

Whom when the damned feend so fresh did spy
No wonder if he wondred at the sight,
And doubted whether his late enemy
It were, or other new supplied knight. ³¹⁰
He now, to prove his late-renewed might,
High brandishing his bright deaw-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it
made:
The deadly dint his dulled sences all dis-maid. ³¹⁵

XXXVI

I wote¹ not whether the revenging steele
Were hardned with that holy water dew
Wherein he fell, or sharper edge did feelee,
Or his baptized hands now greater grew,
Or other secret vertue did ensow;
Els never could the force of fleshly arme, ³²⁰
Ne molten mettall, in his blood embrew;²

¹ know.² stain itself.

For till that stownd³ could never wight him harme
By subtilty, nor slight, nor might, nor mighty charme.

XXXVII

The cruell wound enraged him so sore, ³²⁵
That loud he yelled for exceeding paine;
As hundred ramping lions seemd to rore,
Whom ravenous hunger did thereto con-
straine:
Then gan he tosse aloft his stretched traîne,
And therewith scourge the buxome⁴ aire so sore, ³³⁰
That to his force to yelden it was faine;
Ne ought his sturdy strokes might stand afore,
That high trees overthrew, and rocks in peesces tore.

XXXVIII

The same advauncing high above his
head,
With sharpe intended⁵ sting so rude him
smott,⁶ ³³⁵
That to the earth him drove, as stricken
dead;
Ne living wight would have him life behott:
The mortall sting his angry needle shott Quite through his shield, and in his shoulder seasd,⁷
Where fast it stucke, ne would thereout be gott: ³⁴⁰
The grieve thereof him wondrous sore
disead,
Ne might his rancling paine with patience be appeasd.

XXXIX

But yet, more mindfull of his honour
deare
Then of the grievous smart which him did wring,
From loathed soile he can him lightly
reare, ³⁴⁵
And strove to loose the far infixd sting:
Which when in vaine he tryde with strug-geling,

³ moment.⁶ smote.⁴ yielding.⁵ outstretched.⁷ fastened.

Inflam'd with wrath, his raging blade he hefte,¹
 And strooke so strongly, that the knotty
 string
 Of his huge taile he quite a sonder clefte;
 Five joints thereof he hewd, and but the stump him lefte. 351

XL

Hart cannot thinke what outrage and what cries,
 With fowle enfouldred² smoake and flashing fire,
 The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the
 skies, 354
 That all was covered with darknesse dire:
 Then, fraught³ with rancour and en-gorged yre,
 He cast⁴ at once him to avenge for all,
 And, gathering up himselfe out of the mire
 With his uneven wings, did fiercely fall
 Upon his sunne-bright shield, and grypt it fast withall. 360

XLI

Much was the man encombred with his hold,
 In feare to lose his weapon in his paw,
 Ne wist⁵ yett how his talaunts⁶ to unfold;
 Nor harder was from Cerberus greedy jaw
 To plucke a bone, then from his cruell claw 365
 To reave by strength the griped gage
 away:
 Thrise he assayd it from his foote to draw,
 And thrise in vaine to draw it did assay;
 It booted nought to thinke to robbe him of his pray.

XLII

Tho,⁷ when he saw no power might pre-vaile, 370
 His trusty sword he cald to his last aid,
 Wherewith he fiersly did his foe assaile,
 And double blowes about him stoutly laid,
 That glauncing fire out of the yron plaid,
 As sparkles from the andvile use to fly, 375
 When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid;
 Therewith at last he forst him to unty
 One of his grasping feete, him to defend thereby.

¹ raised.
⁴ planned.

² black as a thunderbolt.
⁶ knew. ⁶ talons

³ filled.
⁷ then.

XLIII

The other foote, fast fixed on his shield, Whenas no strength nor stroks mote⁸ him constraine 380
 To loose, ne yet the warlike pledge to yield,
 He smott thereat with all his might and maine,
 That nought so wondrous puissaunce
 might sustaine:
 Upon the joint the lucky steele did light,
 And made such way that hewd it quite-in twaine; 385
 The paw yett missed not his minisht⁹
 might,
 But hong still on the shield, as it at first was pight.¹⁰

XLIV

For grieve thereof and divelish despight,¹¹
 From his infernall founnace forth he threw Huge flames, that dimmed all the hevens
 light, 390
 Enrold in duskish smoke and brimstone
 blew;
 As burning Aetna from his boyling stew¹² Doth belch out flames, and rockes in peeces broke,
 And ragged ribs of mountaines molten
 new,
 Enwrapt in coleblacke clouds and filthy
 smoke, 395
 That al the land with stench, and heven with horror choke.

XLV

The heate whereof, and harmefull pestilence,
 So sore him noyd,¹³ that forst him to retire
 A little backward for his best defence,
 To save his body from the scorching
 fire, 400
 Which he from hellish entrailes did expire.
 It chaunst, (Eternall God that chaunce did guide)
 As he recoiled backward, in the mire
 His nigh foreweried¹⁴ feeble feet did slide,
 And downe he fell, with dread of shame sore terrifide. 405

⁸ might.

¹¹ anger.
¹² annoyed.

⁹ diminished.

¹⁰ placed.

¹³ hot room

¹⁴ wearied out.

XLVI

There grew a goodly tree him faire beside,
 Loaden with fruit and apples rosy redd,
 As they in pure vermilion had been dide, Whereof great vertues over all¹ were redd;²
 For happy life to all which thereon fedd,⁴¹⁰
 And life eke everlasting did befall:
 Great God it planted in that blessed stedd³
 With his Almighty hand, and did it call
 The Tree of Life, the crime of our first fathers fall.

XLVII

In all the world like was not to be fownd,
 Save in that soile, where all good things did grow,⁴¹⁶
 And freely sprong out of the fruitfull
 grownd,
 As incorrupted Nature did them sow,
 Till that dredd dragon all did overthrow.
 Another like faire tree eke grew thereby,⁴²⁰
 Whereof whoso did eat, eftsoones did know
 Both good and ill: O mournfull memory!
 That tree through one mans fault hath doen⁴ us all to dy.

XLVIII

From that first tree forth flowd, as from a well,
 A trickling streame of balme, most soveraine⁴²⁵
 And dainty deare, which on the ground still fell,
 And overflowed all the fertile plaine,
 As it had deawed bene with timely raine:
 Life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
 And deadly wounds could heale, and reare againe⁴³⁰
 The sencelesse corse appointed for the
 grave.
 Into that same he fell, which did from death him save.

XLIX

For nigh thereto the ever damned beast
 Durst not approch, for he was deadly
 made,
 And al that life preserved did detest;⁴³⁵
 Yet he it oft adventur'd to invade.

¹ everywhere. ² told. ³ place. ⁴ caused.

By this the drouping day-light gan to fade,
 And yield his rowme⁵ to sad succeeding
 night,
 Who with her sable mantle gan to shade
 The face of earth, and wayes of living wight,⁴⁴⁰
 And high her burning torch set up in heaven bright.

L

When gentle Una saw the second fall
 Of her deare knight, who, weary of long fight
 And faint through losse of blood, moov'd not at all,
 But lay, as in a dreame of deepe delight,⁴⁴⁵ Besmeard with pretious balme, whose vertuous⁶ might Did heale his woundes, and scorching heat alay,
 Againe she stricken was with sore affright,
 And for his safetie gan devoutly pray,
 And watch the noyous⁷ night, and wait for joyous day.⁴⁵⁰

LI

The joyous day gan early to appeare;
 And fayre Aurora from the deawy bed
 Of aged Tithone gan herselfe to reare
 With rosy cheekes, for shame as blushing
 red:
 Her golden locks for hast were loosely shed⁴⁵⁵
 About her eares, when Una her did marke
 Clymbe to her charet, all with flowers
 spred,
 From heven high to chace the chearelesse
 darke;
 With mery note her lowd salutes the mounting larke.

LII

Then freshly up arose the doughty knight,⁴⁶⁰
 All healed of his hurts and woundes wide,
 And did himselfe to battaile ready dight,⁸ Whose early foe awaiting him beside
 To have devourd, so soone as day he spyde,
 When now he saw himselfe so freshly reare,⁴⁶⁵
 As if late fight had nought him damnifyde,

⁵ place. ⁶ efficacious. ⁷ grievous. ⁸ make ready.

He woxe¹ dismaid, and gan his fate to
feare;
Nathlesse with wonted rage he him ad-vaunced neare.

LIII

And in his first encounter, gaping wyde,
He thought attonce² him to have swal-lowd quight,⁴⁷⁰
And rusht upon him with outrageous pryde;
Who him rencountring fierce, as hauke in
flight,
Perforce rebutted backe. The weapon
bright,
Taking advantage of his open jaw,
Ran through his mouth with so impor-
tune³ might,⁴⁷⁵
That deepe emperst⁴ his darksom hollow
maw,
And, back retyrd,⁵ his life blood forth with all did draw.

LIV

So downe he fell, and forth his life did
breath,
That vanisht into smoke and cloudes
swift;
So downe he fell, that th' earth him underneath⁴⁸⁰
Did grone, as feeble so great load to lift;
So downe he fell, as an huge rocky clift,
Whose false foundation waves have washt
away,
With dreadfull poyse⁶ is from the mayneland rift,⁷
And, rolling downe, great Neptune doth dismay;⁴⁸⁵
So downe he fell, and like an heaped mountaine lay.

LV

The knight him selfe even trembled at his fall,
So huge and horrible a masse it seemd;
And his deare Lady, that beheld it all,
Durst not approch for dread which she misdeemd;⁴⁹⁰
But yet at last, whenas the direfull feend

¹ grew.
⁴ pierced.
⁶ force.

² at once.

³ impetuous.
⁵ withdrawn.
⁷ broken.

She saw not stirre, off-shaking vaine af-fright
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous
end:
Then God she praysd, and thankt her faithfull knight.
That had atchievde so great a conquest by his might. 495

PROTHALAMION

Calme was the day, and through the trembling ayre
Sweete breathing Zephyrus did softly
play,
A gentle spirit, that lightly did delay
Hot Titans beames, which then did glyster
fayre:
When I, whom sulie in care,⁵ Through discontent of my long fruitlesse stay
In princes court, and expectation vayne
Of idle hopes, which still doe fly away,
Like empty shaddowes, did afflict my brayne,
Walkt forth to ease my payne¹⁰
Along the shoare of silver streaming Themmes;
Whose rutt⁸ bancke, the which his river
hemmes,
Was paynted all with variable flowers,
And all the meades adordd with daintie
gemmes,
Fit to decke maydens bowres,¹⁵
And crowne their paramours, Against the brydale day, which is not long:⁹
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I
end my song.

There, in a meadow, by the rivers side,
A flocke of nymphes I chaunced to espy,²⁰
All lovely daughters of the flood thereby,
With goodly greenish locks all loose un-
tyde,
As each had bene a bryde:
And each one had a little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs entrayled curiously,²⁵
In which they gathered flowers to fill their flasket;
And with fine fingers cropt full feateously¹⁰
The tender stalkes on hye.

⁸ rooty.

⁹ distant.

¹⁰ deftly.

Of every sort, which in that meadow grew,
They gathered some, the violet pallid
blew. 30

The little dazie, that at evening closes,
The virgin lillie, and the primrose trew,
With store of vermeil roses,
To decke their bridegromes posies Against the brydale day, which was not
long: 35
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I
end my song.

With that I saw two swannes of goodly
hewe Come softly swimming downe along the lee;¹

Two fairer birds I yet did never see:
The snow which doth the top of Pindus strew 40

Did never whiter shew, Nor Jove himselfe, when he a swan would
be

For love of Leda, whiter did appear:
Yet Leda was, they say, as white as he,
Yet not so white as these, nor nothing
neare: 45

So purely white they were,
That even the gentle streame, the which them bare,
Seem'd foule to them, and bad his bil-
lowes spare

To wet their silken feathers, least they
might Soyle their fayre plumes with water not so
fayre, 50

And marre their beauties bright,
That shone as heavens light,
Against their brydale day, which was not
long:

Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I
end my song.

Eftsoones the nymphes, which now had flowers their fill, 55

Ran all in haste to see that silver brood,
As they came floating on the cristal flood;
Whom when they sawe, they stood amazed
still,

Their wondring eyes to fill.

Them seem'd they never saw a sight so
fayre, 60

Of fowles so lovely, that they sure did deeme

¹ stream.

Them heavenly borne, or to be that same payre

Which through the skie draw Venus silver teeme:

For sure they did not seeme
To be begot of any earthly seede, 65

But rather angels or of angels breede:
Yet were they bred of Somers-heat, they
say,

In sweetest season, when each flower and weede

The earth did fresh aray;
So fresh they seem'd as day, 70

Even as their brydale day, which was not
long:

Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end
my song.

Then forth they all out of their baskets
drew

Great store of flowers, the honour of the field,

That to the sense did fragrant odours
yeild, 75

All which upon those goodly birds they threw,

And all the waves did strew,
That like old Pencus waters they did seeme,

When downe along by pleasant Tempes
shore,

Scattered with flowres, through Thessaly
they streeme, 80

That they appeare, through lillies plenteous store,

Like a brydes chamber flore.

Two of those nymphes, meane while, two garlands bound

Of freshest flowres which in that mead they found,

The which presenting all in trim array, 85
Their snowie foreheads therewithall they crownd,

Whil'st one did sing this lay,

Prepar'd against that day,

Against their brydale day, which was not
long:

Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end
my song. 90

"Ye gentle birdes, the worlds faire orna-
ment,

And heavens glorie, whom this happie
hower

Doth leade unto your lovers blissfull
 bower,
 Joy may you have and gentle hearts content
 Of your loves couplement: 95
 And let faire Venus, that is Queene of
 Love,
 With her heart-quelling sonne upon you
 smile,
 Whose smile, they say, hath vertue to remove
 All loves dislike, and friendships faultie
 guile
 For ever to assoile. 100
 Let endlesse peace your steadfast hearts accord,
 And blessed plentie wait upon your bord;
 And let your bed with pleasures chaste
 abound,
 That fruitfull issue may to you afford,
 Which may your foes confound, 105
 And make your joyes redound,
 Upon your brydale day, which is not long:
 Sweete Themmes, run softlie, till I end
 my song."

So ended she; and all the rest around
 To her redoubled that her undersong, 110
 Which said, their bridale daye should not be long.
 And gentle Eccho from the neighbour
 ground
 Their accents did resound.
 So forth those joyous birdes did passe
 along,
 Adowne the lee, that to them murmurde
 low, 115
 As he would speake, but that he lackt a
 tong,
 Yeat did by signes his glad affection show,
 Making his streame run slow.
 And all the foule which in his flood did
 dwell
 Gan flock about these twaine, that did ex-cell 120
 The rest so far as Cynthia doth shend¹
 The lesser starres. So they, enranged well,
 Did on those two attend,
 And their best service lend,
 Against their wedding day, which was not
 long: 125
 Sweete Themmes, run softly, till I end
 my song.

At length they all to mery London came,
 To mery London, my most kyndly nurse,
 That to me gave this lifes first native
 sourse:
 Though from another place I take my
 name, 130
 An house of auncient fame.
 There when they came, whereas those bricky towres,
 The which on Themmes brode aged backe
 doe ryde,
 Where now the studious lawyers have their
 bowers,
 There whylome wont the Templer Knights to byde, 135
 Till they decayd through pride:
 Next whereunto there standes a stately
 place,
 Where oft I gayned giftes and goodly
 grace
 Of that great lord which therein wont to
 dwell,
 Whose want too well now feeles my freendles case: 140
 But ah! here fits not well
 Olde woes, but joyes to tell,
 Against the bridale daye, which is not
 long:
 Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end
 my song.

Yet therein now doth lodge a noble
 peer, 145
 Great Englands glory and the worlds wide wonder,
 Whose dreadfull name late through all
 Spaine did thunder,
 And Hercules two pillors standing neere
 Did make to quake and feare.
 Faire branch of honor, flower of chevalrie,
 That fillest England with thy triumphes
 fame, 151
 Joy have thou of thy noble victorie,
 And endlesse happinesse of thine owne
 name
 That promiseth the same:
 That through thy prowesse and victorious
 armes 155
 Thy country may be freed from forraine
 harmes;
 And great Elisaes glorious name may ring
 Through al the world, fil'd with thy wide alarmes,

Which some brave Muse may sing
 To ages following, 160
 Upon the brydale day, which is not long:
 Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I
 end my song.

From those high towers this noble lord issuing,
 Like radiant Hesper when his golden hayre
 In th' ocean billows he hath bathed fayre,
 Descended to the rivers open vewing, 166
 With a great traine ensuing.
 Above the rest were goodly to bee seene
 Two gentle knights of lovely face and feature,
 Beseeming well the bower of anie queene,
 With gifts of wit and ornaments of nature, 171
 Fit for so goodly stature:
 That like the twins of Jove they seem'd in
 sight,
 Which decke the bauldricke of the heavens
 bright.
 They two, forth pacing to the rivers side,
 Received those two faire brides, their loves delight, 176
 Which, at th' appointed tyde,
 Each one did make his bryde,
 Against their brydale day, which is not
 long:
 Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end
 my song. 180

ELIZABETHAN SONNETEERS

SIR THOMAS WYATT (1503?-1542)

THE LOVER COMPARETH HIS STATE TO A SHIP IN PERILOUS STORM TOSSED ON THE SEA

My galley, chargèd with forgetfulness, Thorough sharp seas, in winter nights
 doth pass,
 'Tween rock and rock; and eke mine enemy, alas,
 That is my lord, steereth with cruelty;
 And every oar, a thought in readiness, 5
 As though that death were light in such a case;
 An endless wind doth tear the sail apace
 Of forcèd sighs and trusty fearfulness;

A rain of tears, a cloud of dark disdain,
 Hath done the wearied cords great hinderance; 10
 Wreathèd with error and eke with ignorance,
 The stars be hid that led me to this pain;
 Drowned is Reason, that should me comfort;
 And I remain, despairing of the port.

HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY (1517?-1547)

DESCRIPTION OF SPRING, WHERE- IN EACH THING RENEWS, SAVE ONLY THE LOVER

The soote¹ season that bud and bloom forth brings,
 With green hath clad the hill and eke the
 vale;
 The nightingale with feathers new she sings;
 The turtle to her make² hath told her tale:
 Summer is come, for every spray now
 springs; 5
 The hart hath hung his old head on the pale;
 The buck in brake his winter coat he
 flings;
 The fishes flete³ with new repaired scale:
 The adder all her slough away she slings:
 The swift swallow pursueth the flies smale;
 The busy bee her honey now she mings.⁴ 11
 Winter is worn, that was the flowers' bale:
 And thus I see among these pleasant
 things
 Each care decays, and yet my sorrow
 springs!

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY (1554-1586)

From ASTROPHEL AND STELLA

I

Loving in truth, and fain in verse my love
 to show,
 That she, dear she, might take some pleasure of my pain,—

¹ sweet.
³ float.

² mate.
⁴ mixes.

Pleasure might cause her read, reading
 might make her know, Knowledge might pity win, and pity grace obtain,—
 I sought fit words to paint the blackest face of woe, 5
 Studying inventions fine, her wits to entertain,
 Oft turning others' leaves, to see if thence would flow
 Some fresh and fruitful showers upon my sunburned brain.
 But words came halting forth, wanting Invention's stay;
 Invention, Nature's child, fled step-dame
 Study's blows; 10
 And others' feet still seemed but strangers in my way.
 Thus, great with child to speak, and helpless in my throes, Biting my truant pen, beating myself
 for spite;
 "Fool," said my Muse to me, "look in thy heart, and write!"

XXXI

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies!
 How silently, and with how wan a
 face!
 What, may it be that even in heavenly
 place
 That busy archer his sharp arrows tries!
 Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted
 eyes 5
 Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's
 case;
 I read it in thy looks: thy languished
 grace
 To me, that feel the like, thy state describes.
 Then, even of fellowship, O Moon, tell
 me
 Is constant love deemed there but want of wit? 10
 Are beauties there as proud as here they
 be?
 Do they above love to be loved, and
 yet
 Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
 Do they call virtue there ungratefulness?

XXXIX

Come, Sleep! O Sleep, the certain knot of
 peace,
 The baiting-place of wit, the balm of
 woe,
 The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
 Th' indifferent judge between the high and
 low;
 With shield of proof shield me from out
 the prease¹ 5
 Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw:
 O make in me those civil wars to cease;
 I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.
 Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest
 bed,
 A chamber deaf of noise and blind of
 light,
 A rosy garland and a weary head: 11
 And if these things, as being thine in
 right,
 Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt
 in me,
 Livelier than elsewhere, Stella's image
 see.

XLI

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance
 Guided so well that I obtained the prize,
 Both by the judgment of the English
 eyes
 And of some sent from that sweet enemy
 France;
 Horsemen my skill in horsemanship
 advance, 5
 Town folks my strength; a daintier judge applies
 His praise to sleight which from good use doth rise;
 Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;
 Others, because of both sides I do take My blood from them who did excel in
 this, 10
 Think Nature me a man-at-arms did
 make.
 How far they shot awry! the true cause
 is,
 Stella looked on, and from her heavenly
 face
 Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.

¹ press, throng.

EDMUND SPENSER (1552?-1599)

From AMORETTI

XXIV

When I behold that beauty's wonderment,
And rare perfection of each goodly part,
Of nature's skill the only complement,
I honor and admire the Maker's art.

But when I feel the bitter, baleful smart;
Which her fair eyes unware do work in
me,
That death out of their shiny beams do
dart,

I think that I a new Pandora see:
Whom all the gods in council did agree
Into this sinful world from heaven to send,
That she to wicked men a scourge should
be,
For all their faults with which they did offend.

But since ye are my scourge, I will intreat
That for my faults ye will me gently beat.

XXXIV

Like as a ship, that through the ocean wide
By conduct of some star doth make her
way,

Whenas a storm hath dimmed her trusty
guide,

Out of her course doth wander far astray;
So I, whose star, that wont with her bright
ray

Me to direct, with clouds is overcast,
Do wander now in darkness and dismay,
Through hidden perils round about me placed.

Yet hope I well, that when this storm is
past,

My Helicé, the lodestar of my life,
Will shine again, and look on me at last,
With lovely light to clear my cloudy grief;

Till then I wander careful, comfort-
less,

In secret sorrow and sad pensiveness.

LXIII

After long storms and tempests' sad assay,
Which hardly I endured heretofore,
In dread of death, and dangerous dis-
may,

With which my silly bark was tossed sore,
I do at length descry the happy shore,
In which I hope ere long for to arrive:
Fair soil it seems from far, and fraught with store

Of all that dear and dainty is alive.

Most happy he that can at last achieve
The joyous safety of so sweet a rest;
Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive Remembrance of all pains which him oppressed.

All pains are nothing in respect of this,
All sorrows short that gain eternal bliss.

LXX

Fresh Spring, the herald of love's mighty
king,

In whose coat-armor richly are displayed
All sorts of flowers the which on earth do
spring,

In goodly colors gloriously arrayed;
Go to my love, where she is careless laid,
Yet in her winter's bower not well awake;
Tell her the joyous time will not be stayed,
Unless she do him by the forelock take;
Bid her therefore herself soon ready make
To wait on Love amongst his lovely crew;

Where everyone that misseth then her make¹

Shall be by him amerced² with penance
due.

Make haste, therefore, sweet love, whilst it is prime;

For none can call again the passed
time.

LXXV

One day I wrote her name upon the strand,

But came the waves and washèd it away;
Again I wrote it with a second hand,

But came the tide and made my pains his prey.

"Vain man," said she, "that dost in vain
assay

A mortal thing so to immortalize:
For I myself shall like to this decay,

And eke my name be wiped out likewise."

"Not so," quoth I, "let baser things devise

¹ mate.² punished.

To die in dust, but you shall live by fame: ¹⁰

My verse your virtues rare shall eternize,
And in the heavens write your glorious
name.

Where, whenas death shall all the world subdue,

Our love shall live, and later life renew."

LXXIX

Men call you fair, and you do credit it,
For that yourself ye daily such do see;
But the true fair, that is the gentle wit
And virtuous mind, is much more praised of me:

For all the rest, however fair it be, ⁵
Shall turn to nought and lose that glorious hue;

But only that is permanent and free
From frail corruption that doth flesh ensue.
That is true beauty; that doth argue you
To be divine, and born of heavenly seed, ¹⁰ Derived from that fair Spirit from whom all true

And perfect beauty did at first proceed:

He only fair, and what he fair hath
made;

All other fair, like flowers, untimely fade.

SAMUEL DANIEL (1562-1619)

CARE-CHARMER SLEEP

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable
Night,

Brother to Death, in silent darkness born:
Relieve my languish, and restore the light;
With dark forgetting of my care, return!

And let the day be time enough to mourn
The shipwreck of my ill-adventured youth: ⁶

Let waking eyes suffice to wail their scorn,
Without the torment of the night's untruth.

Cease, dreams, the images of day-desires,
To model forth the passions of the morrow;

Never let rising sun approve you liars, ¹¹
To add more grief to aggravate my sorrow.

Still let me sleep, embracing clouds in
vain;

And never wake to feel the day's disdain.

MICHAEL DRAYTON (1563-1631)

SINCE THERE'S NO HELP

Since there's no help, come, let us kiss and
part!

Nay, I have done, you get no more of
me;

And I am glad, yea, glad, with all my
heart,

That thus so cleanly I myself can free.

Shake hands for ever, cancel all our vows; ⁵

And when we meet at any time again,

Be it not seen in either of our brows,

That we one jot of former love retain.

Now at the last gasp of Love's latest
breath,

When, his pulse failing, Passion speechless lies; ¹⁰

When Faith is kneeling by his bed of
death,

And Innocence is closing up his eyes,—

Now, if thou wouldst, when all have given him over,

From death to life thou might'st him
yet recover!

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE (1564-1616)

XVIII

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:

Rough winds do shake the darling buds of
May,

And summer's lease hath all too short a date;

Sometime too hot the eye of heaven
shines, ⁵

And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
And every fair¹ from fair sometime declines,

By chance or nature's changing course untrimmed;

But thy eternal summer shall not fade

Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st;² ¹⁰

Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,

When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st:

¹ beauty.² ownest.

So long as men can breathe or eyes can
see,
So long lives this and this gives life to thee.

XXIX

When, in disgrace with fortune and men's
eyes,
I all alone beweepe my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless
cries,
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in
hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends
possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising, Haply I think on thee, and then my
state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's
gate;
For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX

When to the sessions of sweet silent
thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's
waste:
Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow, 5
For precious friends hid in death's date-less night,
And weep afresh love's long-since cancelled woe,
And moan the expense¹ of many a vanished
sight:
Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er 10
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear
friend,
All losses are restored and sorrows end.

¹ loss.

XXXIII

Full many a glorious morning have I seen Flatter the mountain-tops with sovereign
eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows
green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy,
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride 5
With ugly rack² on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all-triumphant splendor on my
brow;
But out, alack! he was but one hour mine;
The region³ cloud hath masked him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit dis-
daineth;
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

LXIV

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see downrazed,
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain 5
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss and loss with
store;
When I have seen such interchange of
state,
Or state itself confounded to decay; 10
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate,
That Time will come and take my love
away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'er-sways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?

² broken masses of flying cloud.³ of the upper air.

O, how shall summer's honey breath hold
 out 5
 Against the wrackful siege of batt'ring
 days,
 When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
 Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
 O fearful meditation! where, alack,
 Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid? 10
 Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
 Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
 O, none, unless this miracle have might,
 That in black ink my love may still shine
 bright.

LXVI

Tired with all these, for restful death I
 cry:
 As, to behold desert a beggar born,
 And needy nothing trimmed in jollity,
 And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
 And gilded honor shamefully misplaced, 5
 And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
 And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
 And strength by limping sway disabled,
 And art made tongue-tied by authority,
 And folly, doctor-like, controlling skill, 10
 And simple truth miscalled simplicity,¹
 And captive good attending captain ill.
 Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
 Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXXI

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
 Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
 Give warning to the world that I am fled From this vile world, with vilest worms to
 dwell:
 Nay, if you read this line, remember not 5
 The hand that writ it; for I love you so That I in your sweet thoughts would be
 forgot
 If thinking on me then should make you
 woe.
 O, if, I say, you look upon this verse
 When I perhaps compounded am with clay, 10
 Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
 But let your love even with my life decay,

¹ folly.

Lest the wise world should look into your moan
 And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXIII

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
 When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against
 the cold,
 Bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
 In me thou see'st the twilight of such day 5
 As after sunset fadeth in the west;
 Which by and by black night doth take
 away,
 Death's second self, that seals up all in
 rest.
 In me thou see'st the glowing of such
 fire
 That on the ashes of his youth doth lie, 10
 As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
 Consumed with that which it was nourished by.
 This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
 To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

XCVIII

From you have I been absent in the spring,
 When proud-pied² April dressed in all his trim
 Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing,
 That heavy Saturn laughed and leaped with him.
 Yet nor the lays of birds nor the sweet smell 5
 Of different flowers in odor and in hue
 Could make me any summer's story tell,
 Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;
 Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
 Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
 They were but sweet, but figures of de-
 light, 11
 Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
 Yet seemed it winter still, and, you
 away,
 As with your shadow, I with these did
 play.

² gorgeously variegated.

CVI

When in the chronicle of wasted time
 I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
 And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
 In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights;
 Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's
 best, 5
 Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
 I see their antique pen would have expressed
 Even such a beauty as you master now.
 So all their praises are but prophecies
 Of this our time, all you prefiguring; 10
 And, for they looked but with divining
 eyes,
 They had not skill enough your worth to
 sing:
 For we, which now behold these present
 days,
 Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CXVI

Let me not to the marriage¹ of true minds
 Admit impediments. Love is not love
 Which alters when it alteration finds,
 Or bends with the remover to remove:
 O, no! it is an ever-fixèd mark 5
 That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
 It is the star to every wand'ring bark,
 Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
 Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
 Within his bending sickle's compass come; Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks, 11
 But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
 If this be error and upon me proved,
 I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

CXLVI

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
 Thrall to these rebel powers that thee
 array,
 Why dost thou pine within and suffer
 dearth,
 Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
 Why so large cost, having so short a lease, 5
 Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
 Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
 Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?

Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's
 loss,
 And let that pine to aggravate thy store; 10
 Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
 Within be fed, without be rich no more:
 So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds
 on men,
 And Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

ELIZABETHAN SONG WRITERS

ANONYMOUS

BACK AND SIDE GO BARE, GO
BARE

Back and side go bare, go bare,
 Both hand and foot go cold;
 But, belly, God send thee good ale
 enough,
 Whether it be new or old.

I cannot eat but little meat, 5
 My stomach is not good;
 But sure I think that I can drink
 With him that wears a hood.
 Though I go bare, take ye no care,
 I am nothing a-cold; 10
 I stuff my skin so full within
 Of jolly good ale and old.
 Back and side, etc.

I love no roast but a nutbrown toast,
 And a crab¹ laid in the fire; 15
 A little bread shall do me stead,
 Much bread I not desire.
 No frost nor snow, no wind, I trow,
 Can hurt me if it would,
 I am so wrapt and thoroughly lapt 20
 Of jolly good ale and old.
 Back and side, etc.

And Tib my wife, that as her life
 Loveth well good ale to seek,
 Full oft drinks she, till ye may see 25
 The tears run down her cheek;
 Then doth she trowl² to me the bowl
 Even as a maltworm³ should,
 And saith, "Sweetheart, I have take my
 part
 Of this jolly good ale and old." 30
 Back and side, etc.

¹ apple.² pass.³ a tippler.

Now let them drink till they nod and wink,

Even as good fellows should do;
They shall not miss to have the bliss
Good ale doth bring men to. 35

And all poor souls that have scoured¹ bowls,
Or have them lustily trowled, .

God save the lives of them and their wives,
Whether they be young or old.

Back and side, go bare, go bare, 40
Both hand and foot go cold;

But, belly, God send thee good ale
enough,

Whether it be new or old.

SIR EDWARD DYER (1550?-1607)

MY MIND TO ME A KINGDOM IS

My mind to me a kingdom is,
Such present joys therein I find
That it excels all other bliss

That earth affords or grows by kind:
Though much I want which most would
have, 5

Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

No princely pomp, no wealthy store,
No force to win the victory,

No wily wit to salve a sore, 10
No shape to feed a loving eye;
To none of these I yield as thrall:
For why? My mind doth serve for all.

I see how plenty [surfeits] oft,
And hasty climbers soon do fall;
I see that those which are aloft 15

Mishap doth threaten most of all;
They get with toil, they keep with fear:
Such cares my mind could never bear.

Content to live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice; 20

I press to bear no haughty sway;
Look, what I lack my mind supplies:

Lo, thus I triumph like a king,
Content with that my mind doth bring.

Some have too much, yet still do crave; 25
I little have, and seek no more.

They are but poor, though much they
have,

And I am rich with little store:
They poor, I rich; they beg, I give;
They lack, I leave; they pine, I live. 30

¹ emptied.

I laugh not at another's loss;
I grudge not at another's pain;
No worldly waves my mind can toss;
My state at one doth still remain:
I fear no foe, I fawn no friend; 35
I loathe not life, nor dread my end.

Some weigh their pleasure by their lust,
Their wisdom by their rage of will;
Their treasure is their only trust;
A cloakèd craft their store of skill: 40
But all the pleasure that I find
Is to maintain a quiet mind.

My wealth is health and perfect ease;
My conscience clear my chief defence;
I neither seek by bribes to please, 45
Nor by deceit to breed offence:
Thus do I live; thus will I die;
Would all did so as well as I!

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY (1554-1586)

LOVE IS DEAD

Ring out your bells, let mourning shows be spread;

For Love is dead:
All Love is dead, infected
With plague of deep disdain:
Worth, as nought worth, rejected, 5
And Faith fair scorn doth gain.
From so ungrateful fancy,
From such a female franzie,²
From them that use men thus,
Good Lord, deliver us! 10

Weep, neighbors, weep; do you not hear it
said

That Love is dead?
His death-bed, peacock's folly;
His winding-sheet is shame;
His will, false-seeming holy; 15
His sole exec'tor, blame.
From so ungrateful fancy,
From such a female franzie,
From them that use men thus,
Good Lord, deliver us! 20

Let dirge be sung, and trentals rightly read,
For Love is dead;

Sir Wrong his tomb ordaineth
My mistress' marble heart;
Which epitaph containeth, 25

² frenzy.

"Her eyes were once his dart."
 From so ungrateful fancy,
 From such a female franzie,
 From them that use men thus,
 Good Lord, deliver us! 30

Alas, I lie: rage hath this error bred;
 Love is not dead;
 Love is not dead, but sleepeth
 In her unmatched mind,
 Where she his counsel keepeth, 35
 Till due deserts she find.
 Therefore from so vile fancy,
 To call such wit a franzie,
 Who Love can temper thus,
 Good Lord, deliver us! 40

JOHN LYLY (1554?-1606)

CUPID AND CAMPASPE

Cupid and my Campaspe played
 At cards for kisses; Cupid paid.
 He stakes his quiver, bow, and arrows,
 His mother's doves and team of sparrows;
 Loses them too; then down he throws 5
 The coral of his lip, the rose Growing on's cheek (but none knows how);
 With these the crystal of his brow,
 And then the dimple of his chin;
 All these did my Campaspe win. 10
 At last he set¹ her both his eyes;
 She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
 O Love, has she done this to thee?
 What shall, alas! become of me?

SPRING'S WELCOME

What bird so sings, yet so does wail?
 O 'tis the ravished nightingale.
 "Jug, jug, jug, jug, tereu," she cries,
 And still her woes at midnight rise.
 Brave prick-song! who is't now we hear? 5
 None but the lark so shrill and clear;
 Now at heaven's gates she claps her wings,
 The morn not waking till she sings.
 Hark, hark, with what a pretty throat
 Poor robin redbreast tunes his note; 10
 Hark how the jolly cuckoos sing,
 Cuckoo, to welcome in the spring;
 Cuckoo, to welcome in the spring!

¹ wagered.

GEORGE PEELE (1558?-1597?)

CUPID'S CURSE

ÆNONE. Fair and fair, and twice so fair,
 As fair as any may be;
 The fairest shepherd on our
 green,
 A love for any lady.
 PARIS. Fair and fair, and twice so fair, 5
 As fair as any may be;
 Thy love is fair for thee alone,
 And for no other lady.
 ÆN. My love is fair, my love is gay,
 As fresh as bin² the flowers in
 May, 10
 And of my love my roundelay,
 My merry, merry roundelay,
 Concludes with Cupid's curse,— "They that do change old love for
 new,
 Pray gods they change for worsel!" 15
 AMBO SIMUL.³ They that do change, etc.
 ÆN. Fair and fair, etc.
 PAR. Fair and fair, etc.
 Thy love is fair, etc.
 ÆN. My love can pipe, my love can
 sing, 20
 My love can⁴ many a pretty thing,
 And of his lovely praises ring
 My merry, merry roundelays,
 Amen to Cupid's curse,—
 "They that do change," etc. 25
 PAR. They that do change, etc.
 AMBO. Fair and fair, etc.

ROBERT GREENE (1560?-1592)

SWEET ARE THE THOUGHTS

Sweet are the thoughts that savor of content;
 The quiet mind is richer than a crown,
 Sweet are the nights in careless slumber
 spent;
 The poor estate scorns fortune's angry
 frown:
 Such sweet content, such minds, such sleep, such bliss, 5
 Beggars enjoy, when princes oft do miss.

² are.

³ Both together.

⁴ knows how to do.

The homely house that harbors quiet rest;
 The cottage that affords no pride nor
 care;
 The mean that 'grees with country music
 best;
 The sweet consort¹ of mirth and music's
 fare; 10
 Obscured life sets down a type of bliss:
 A mind content both crown and kingdom
 is.

SEPHESTIA'S SONG TO HER CHILD

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
 When thou art old there's grief enough for
 thee.

Mother's wag, pretty boy,
 Father's sorrow, father's joy;
 When thy father first did see 5
 Such a boy by him and me,
 He was glad, I was woe;
 Fortune changed made him so,
 When he left his pretty boy,
 Last his sorrow, first his joy. 10

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
 When thou art old there's grief enough for
 thee.

Streaming tears that never stint,
 Like pearl drops from a flint,
 Fell by course from his eyes, 15
 That one another's place supplies;
 Thus he grieved in every part,
 Tears of blood fell from his heart,
 When he left his pretty boy,
 Father's sorrow, father's joy. 20

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
 When thou art old there's grief enough for
 thee.

The wanton smiled, father wept,
 Mother cried, baby leapt;
 More he crowed, more he cried, 25
 Nature could not sorrow hide:
 He must go, he must kiss
 Child and mother, baby bless,
 For he left his pretty boy,
 Father's sorrow, father's joy. 30

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
 When thou art old there's grief enough for
 thee.

THOMAS LODGE (1558?-1625)

ROSALIND'S MADRIGAL

Love in my bosom like a bee
 Doth suck his sweet;
 Now with his wings he plays with me,
 Now with his feet.
 Within mine eyes he makes his nest, 5
 His bed amidst my tender breast;
 My kisses are his daily feast,
 And yet he robs me of my rest.
 Ah, wanton, will ye?

And if I sleep, then percheth he, 10
 With pretty flight,
 And makes his pillow of my knee,
 The livelong night.
 Strike I my lute, he tunes the string;
 He music plays if so I sing; 15
 He lends me every lovely thing;
 Yet cruel he my heart doth sting.
 Whist,² wanton, still ye!

Else I with roses every day
 Will whip you hence, 20
 And bind you, when you long to play,
 For your offence.
 I'll shut my eyes to keep you in,
 I'll make you fast it for your sin,
 I'll count your power not worth a pin. 25
 Alas! what hereby shall I win
 If he gainsay me?

What if I beat the wanton boy
 With many a rod?
 He will repay me with annoy, 30
 Because a god.
 Then sit thou safely on my knee,
 And let thy bower my bosom be;
 Lurk in mine eyes, I like of thee.
 O Cupid, so thou pity me, 35
 Spare not, but play thee!

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE (1564-1593)

THE PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE

Come live with me and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasures prove,
 That valleys, groves, hills, and fields,
 Woods, or steepy mountains, yields.

² hush.

And we will sit upon the rocks, 5
 Seeing the shepherds feed their flocks,
 By shallow rivers, to whose falls
 Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses,
 And a thousand fragrant posies, 10
 A cap of flowers and a kirtle
 Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle:

A gown made of the finest wool,
 Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
 Fair lined slippers for the cold, 15
 With buckles of the purest gold;

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
 With coral clasps and amber studs;
 And if these pleasures may thee move,
 Come live with me and be my love 20

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
 For thy delights each May morning;
 If these delights thy mind may move,
 Then live with me and be my love.

THOMAS NASH (1567-1601)

LITANY IN TIME OF PLAGUE

Adieu, farewell, earth's bliss,
 This world uncertain is:
 Fond¹ are life's lustful joys,
 Death proves them all but toys.
 None from his darts can fly; 5
 I am sick, I must die.
 Lord, have mercy on us!

Rich men, trust not in wealth,
 Gold cannot buy you health;
 Physic himself must fade; 10
 All things to end are made;
 The plague full swift goes by;
 I am sick, I must die.
 Lord, have mercy on us!

Beauty is but a flower, 15
 Which wrinkles will devour:
 Brightness falls from the air;
 Queens have died young and fair;
 Dust hath closed Helen's eye;
 I am sick, I must die. 20
 Lord, have mercy on us!

¹ foolish.

Strength stoops unto the grave;
 Worms feed on Hector brave;
 Swords may not fight with fate;
 Earth still holds ope her gate; 25
 Come, come, the bells do cry;
 I am sick, I must die.
 Lord, have mercy on us!

Wit with his wantonness,
 Tasteth death's bitterness; 30
 Hell's executioner
 Hath no ears for to hear
 What vain art can reply;
 I am sick, I must die.
 Lord, have mercy on us! 35

Haste therefore each degree
 To welcome destiny:
 Heaven is our heritage,
 Earth but a player's stage;
 Mount we unto the sky; 40
 I am sick, I must die.
 Lord, have mercy on us!

SIR WALTER RALEIGH (1552?-1613)

HIS PILGRIMAGE

Give me my scallop-shell² of quiet,
 My staff of faith to walk upon,
 My scrip of joy, immortal diet,
 My bottle of salvation,
 My gown of glory, hope's true gage;³ 5
 And thus I'll take my pilgrimage.

Blood must be my body's balmer;
 No other balm will there be given;
 Whilst my soul, like a quiet palmer,
 Travelleth towards the land of heaven, 11
 Over the silver mountains,
 Where spring the nectar fountains.
 There will I kiss
 The bowl of bliss;
 And drink mine everlasting fill 15
 Upon every milken hill.
 My soul will be a-dry before;
 But, after, it will thirst no more.

Then by that happy blissful day
 More peaceful pilgrims I shall see, 20
 That have cast off their rags of clay,
 And walk apparelled fresh like me.

² badge of a pilgrim.

³ pledge.

I'll take them first,
To quench their thirst
And taste of nectar suckets¹ 25
At those clear wells
Where sweetness dwells,
Drawn up by saints in crystal buckets.

And when our bottles and all we Are filled with immortality, 30
Then the blessed paths we'll travel,
Strowed with rubies thick as gravel;
Ceilings of diamonds, sapphire floors,
High walls of coral, and pearly bowers.

From thence to Heaven's bribeless hall,
Where no corrupted voices brawl; 36
No conscience molten into gold;
No forged accuser bought or sold;
No cause deferred, no vain-spent journey,
For there Christ is the King's Attorney, 40
Who pleads for all, without degrees,
And he hath angels but no fees.

And when the grand twelve million jury
Of our sins, with direful fury,
Against our souls black verdicts give, 45
Christ pleads his death; and then we live.

Be Thou my speaker, taintless Pleader!
Unblotted Lawyer! true Proceeder!
Thou giv'st salvation, even for alms,
Not with a bribed lawyer's palms. 50

And this is mine eternal plea
To Him that made heaven and earth and
sea:
That, since my flesh must die so soon,
And want a head to dine next noon,
Just at the stroke, when my veins start and spread, 55
Set on my soul an everlasting head!

Then am I ready, like a palmer fit,
To tread those blest paths, which before I writ.

THE CONCLUSION

Even such is time, that takes in trust
Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
And pays us but with earth and dust;
Who in the dark and silent grave,

¹ sweets.

When we have wandered all our ways, 5
Shuts up the story of our days:
But from this earth, this grave, this dust,
My God shall raise me up, I trust.

ROBERT SOUTHWELL (1561?-1595)

THE BURNING BABE

As I in hoary winter's night stood shivering in the snow,
Surprised I was with sudden heat which made my heart to glow;
And lifting up a fearful eye to view what fire was near,
A pretty babe, all burning bright, did in the air appear,
Who, scorched with excessive heat, such floods of tears did shed, 5
As though his floods should quench his flames which with his tears were fed;
"Alas!" quoth he, "but newly born in fiery heats I fry,
Yet none approach to warm their hearts or feel my fire but I!
My faultless breast the furnace is, the fuel,
wounding thorns;
Love is the fire and sighs the smoke, the ashes, shame and scorns; 10
The fuel Justice layeth on, and Mercy
blows the coals;
The metal in this furnace wrought are men's defiled souls;
For which, as now on fire I am to work
them to their good,
So will I melt into a bath to wash them in my blood."
With this he vanished out of sight, and swiftly shrunk away, 15
And straight I called unto mind that it was Christmas-day.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE (1564-1616)

SONGS FROM THE PLAYS

From LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST

When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,

When blood is nipped and ways be foul, 5
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
 Tu-whit, to-who,
 A merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel¹ the pot.

When all aloud the wind doth blow, 10
 And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
 And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs² hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl, 15
 Tu-whit, to-who,
 A merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

From TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA

Who is Silvia? what is she,
 That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she;
 The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admirèd be. 5

Is she kind as she is fair?
 For beauty lives with kindness.
Love doth to her eyes repair
 To help him of his blindness,
And, being helped, inhabits there. 10

Then to Silvia let us sing
 That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing
 Upon the dull earth dwelling;
To her let us garlands bring. 15

From A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

Over hill, over dale,
Thorough bush, thorough brier,
Over park, over pale,
Thorough flood, thorough fire,
I do wander everywhere, 5
Swifter than the moon's sphere;
And I serve the fairy Queen,
To dew her orbs upon the green.
The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see: 10
Those be rubies, fairy favors,
In those freckles live their savors.
I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

¹ cool by stirring.

² apples.

From THE MERCHANT OF VENICE

Tell me where is fancy³ bred,
Or in the heart or in the head?
How begot, how nourishèd?
 Reply, reply.

It is engendered in the eyes, 5
With gazing fed; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies.
 Let us all ring fancy's knell;
 I'll begin it,—Ding-dong, bell.
Ding, dong, bell. 10

From AS YOU LIKE IT

Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither! 5
 Here shall he see
 No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Who doth ambition shun
And loves to live i' the sun, 10
Seeking the food he eats,
And pleased with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
 Here shall he see
 No enemy 15
But winter and rough weather.

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen, 5
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh ho! sing, heigh ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh ho, the holly!
This life is most jolly. 10

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!
That dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot;

³ love.

Though thou the waters warp,¹
Thy sting is not so sharp 15
As friend remembered not.

Heigh ho! sing, heigh ho! etc.

It was a lover and his lass
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass
In the spring time, the only pretty ring
time,
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding; 5
Sweet lovers love the spring.

Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In spring time, etc. 10

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that life was but a flower
In spring time, etc.

And therefore take the present time, 15
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crownèd with the prime
In spring time, etc.

From TWELFTH NIGHT

O Mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O, stay and hear, your true love's coming,
That can sing both high and low:
Trip no further, pretty sweeting,
Journeys end in lovers meeting, 5
Every wise man's son doth know.

What is love? 'Tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure:
In delay there lies no plenty; 10
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

From MEASURE FOR MEASURE

Take, O, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again, bring again; 5 Seals of love, but sealed in vain, sealed in vain.

¹ transform.

From ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus with pink eyne!²
In thy vats our cares be drowned,
With thy grapes our hairs be crownèd!
Cup us, till the world go round, 5
Cup us, till the world go round!

From CYMBELINE

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phœbus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chaliced³ flowers that lies;
And winking Mary-buds begin 5
To ope their golden eyes;
With every thing that pretty is,
My lady sweet, arise!
Arise, arise!

Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must, 5
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Fear no more the frown o' the great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak: 10
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;⁴
Fear not slander, censure rash; 15
Thou hast finished joy and moan:
All lovers young, all lovers must Consign to thee, and come to dust.

No exorciser harm thee!
Nor no witchcraft charm thee! 20
Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Nothing ill come near thee!
Quiet consummation have;
And renownèd be thy grave!

From THE TEMPEST

ARIEL'S SONGS

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curtsied when you have, and kissed
The wild waves whist,⁵

² eyes. ³ cup-shaped. ⁴ thunderbolt. ⁵ hushed.

Foot it feately¹ here and there, 5
 And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.
 Hark, hark!
 Bow-wow.
 The watch-dogs bark:
 Bow-wow. 10
 Hark, hark! I hear
 The strain of strutting chanticleer
 Cry, Cock-a-diddle-dow.

Full fathom five thy father lies:
 Of his bones are coral made;
 Those are pearls that were his eyes;
 Nothing of him that doth fade
 But doth suffer a sea-change 5
 Into something rich and strange.
 Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
 Ding-dong!
 Hark! now I hear them,—Ding-dong,
 bell!

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
 In a cowslip's bell I lie;
 There I couch when owls do cry;
 On the bat's back I do fly
 After summer merrily. 5
 Merrily, merrily shall I live now Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

ANONYMOUS

HEY NONNY NO!

Hey nonny no!
 Men are fools that wish to die!
 Is't not fine to dance and sing
 When the bells of death do ring?
 Is't not fine to swim in wine, 5
 And turn upon the toe,
 And sing hey nonny no,
 When the winds blow and the seas flow?
 Hey nonny no!

THOMAS CAMPION (1567-1620)

OF CORINNA'S SINGING

When to her lute Corinna sings,
 Her voice revives the leaden strings,
 And doth in highest notes appear
 As any challenged echo clear;
¹ neatly.

But when she doth of mourning speak, 5
 E'en with her sighs the strings do break.
 And as her lute doth live or die,
 Led by her passion, so must I:
 For when of pleasure she doth sing,
 My thoughts enjoy a sudden spring; 10
 But if she doth of sorrow speak,
 E'en from my heart the strings do break.

WHEN THOU MUST HOME

When thou must home to shades of under-
 ground,
 And there arrived, a new admirèd guest,
 The beauteous spirits do engirt thee
 round,
 White Iope, blithe Helen, and the rest,
 To hear the stories of thy finished love 5
 From that smooth tongue whose music hell can move;

Then wilt thou speak of banqueting delights,
 Of masques and revels which sweet youth
 did make,
 Of journeys and great challenges of knights,
 And all these triumphs for thy beauty's sake; 10
 When thou hast told these honors done to
 thee,
 Then tell, O tell, how thou didst murder
 me.

COME, CHEERFUL DAY

Come, cheerful day, part of my life to
 me;
 For while thou view'st me with thy fading light,
 Part of my life doth still depart with thee,
 And I still onward haste to my last
 night.
 Time's fatal wings do ever forward fly: 5
 So every day we live a day we die.

But O ye nights, ordained for barren
 rest,
 How are my days deprived of life in you
 When heavy sleep my soul hath dispossessed,
 By feignèd death life sweetly to re-
 new! 10
 Part of my life in that, you life deny:
 So every day we live, a day we die.

NOW WINTER NIGHTS ENLARGE

Now winter nights enlarge
 The number of their hours;
 And clouds their storms discharge
 Upon the airy towers.
 Let now the chimneys blaze, 5
 And cups o'erflow with wine,
 Let well-tuned words amaze
 With harmony divine.
 Now yellow waxen lights
 Shall wait on honey love; 10 While youthful revels, masques, and courtly sights,
 Sleep's leaden spells remove.

This time doth well dispense
 With lovers' long discourse;
 Much speech hath some defence, 15
 Though beauty no remorse.
 All do not all things well:
 Some measures comely tread,
 Some knotted riddles tell,
 Some poems smoothly read. 20
 The summer hath his joys,
 And winter his delights;
 Though love and all his pleasures are but toys,
 They shorten tedious nights.

CHERRY-RIPE

There is a garden in her face
 Where roses and white lilies grow;
 A heavenly paradise is that place,
 Wherein all pleasant fruits do flow:
 There cherries grow, which none may buy 5
 Till "Cherry-ripe" themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do enclose
 Of orient pearl a double row,
 Which when her lovely laughter shows, 9
 They look like rosebuds filled with snow;
 Yet them nor peer nor prince can buy
 Till "Cherry-ripe" themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
 Her brows like bended bows do stand,
 Threatening with piercing frowns to kill 15
 All that attempt, with eye or hand,
 Those sacred cherries to come nigh
 Till "Cherry-ripe" themselves do cry.

CHANCE AND CHANGE

What if a day, or a month, or a year,
 Crown thy delights, with a thousand sweet contentings?
 Cannot a chance of a night or an hour
 Cross thy desires with as many sad tormentings?
 Fortune, honor, beauty, youth, 5
 Are but blossoms dying;
 Wanton pleasure, doting love,
 Are but shadows flying;
 All our joys are but toys,
 Idle thoughts deceiving; 10
 None have power of an hour
 In their life's bereaving.

Earth's but a point to the world, and a
 man
 Is but a point to the world's comparèd centre; 14
 Shall then a point of a point be so vain
 As to triumph in a silly point's adventure?
 All is hazard that we have,
 There is nothing biding;
 Days of pleasure are like streams
 Through fair meadows gliding. 20
 Weal and woe, Time doth go,
 Time is never turning:
 Secret fates guide our states,
 Both in mirth and mourning.

THOMAS DEKKER (1572?-p. 1632)

O SWEET CONTENT

Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers?

O sweet content!

Art thou rich, yet is thy mind perplexed?

O punishment!

Dost thou laugh to see how fools are vexed
 To add to golden numbers golden numbers? 6

O sweet content! O sweet, O sweet content!

Work apace, apace, apace, apace;

Honest labor bears a lovely face,

Then hey nonny nonny, hey nonny nonny!

Canst drink the waters of the crisped¹
 spring? 11

O sweet content!

¹ rippling.

Swim'st thou in wealth, yet sink'st in thine own tears?
 O punishment!
 Then he that patiently want's burden
 bears 15
 No burden bears, but is a king, a king!
 O sweet content! O sweet, O sweet content!
 Work apace, apace, apace, apace;
 Honest labor bears a lovely face.
 Then hey nonny nonny, hey nonny nonny!

LULLABY

Golden slumbers kiss your eyes,
 Smiles awake you when you rise;
 Sleep, pretty wantons, do not cry,
 And I will sing a lullaby:
 Rock them, rock them, lullaby. 5

Care is heavy, therefore sleep you;
 You are care, and care must keep you;
 Sleep, pretty wantons, do not cry,
 And I will sing a lullaby:
 Rock them, rock them, lullaby. 10

MICHAEL DRAYTON (1563-1631)

AGINCOURT

Fair stood the wind for France,
 When we our sails advance,¹
 Nor now to prove our chance Longer will tarry;
 But putting to the main, 5
 At Caux, the mouth of Seine,
 With all his martial train Landed King Harry.

And taking many a fort,
 Furnished in warlike sort, 10
 Marcheth towards Agincourt
 In happy hour;
 Skirmishing, day by day,
 With those that stopped his way,
 Where the French general lay 15
 With all his power.

Which,² in his height of pride,
 King Henry to deride,
 His ransom to provide
 To the King sending; 20

¹ raise.² the French general.

Which³ he neglects the while,
 As from a nation vile,
 Yet with an angry smile,
 Their fall portending.

And turning to his men, 25
 Quoth our brave Henry then:
 "Though they to one be ten
 Be not amazed!
 Yet have we well begun:
 Battles so bravely won 30
 Have ever to the sun
 By fame been raisèd.

"And for myself," quoth he,
 "This my full rest⁴ shall be:
 England ne'er mourn for me, 35
 Nor more esteem me.
 Victor I will remain,
 Or on this earth lie slain;
 Never shall she sustain Loss to redeem me. 40

"Poitiers and Cressy tell,
 When most their pride did swell,
 Under our swords they fell;
 No less our skill is,
 Than when our grandsire great, 45
 Claiming the regal seat,
 By many a warlike feat
 Lopped the French lilies."

The Duke of York so dread
 The eager vaward⁵ led; 50
 With the main,⁶ Henry sped
 Amongst his henchmen:
 Exeter had the rear,
 A braver man not there!
 O Lord, how hot they were 55
 On the false Frenchmen!

They now to fight are gone:
 Armor on armor shone;
 Drum now to drum did groan,
 To hear, was wonder; 60
 That,⁷ with the cries they make,
 The very earth did shake;
 Trumpet to trumpet spake,
 Thunder to thunder.

Well it thine age became, 65
 O noble Erpingham,

³ the command to send a ransom⁵ advance guard.⁶ main host.⁴ resolution.⁷ so that.

Which didst the signal aim
To our hid forces;
When, from a meadow by,
Like a storm suddenly, 70
The English archery
Stuck the French horses,

With Spanish yew so strong,
Arrows a cloth-yard long,
That like to serpents stung, 75
Piercing the weather;
None from his fellow starts,
But, playing manly parts,
And like true English hearts,
Stuck close together. 80

When down their bows they threw,
And forth their bilbows drew,
And on the French they flew,
Not one was tardy:
Arms were from shoulders sent, 85
Scalps to the teeth were rent,
Down the French peasants went:
Our men were hardy.

This while our noble King,
His broad sword brandishing,
Down the French host did ding,¹ 90
As to o'erwhelm it;
And many a deep wound lent,
His arms with blood besprent,²
And many a cruel dent 95
Bruised his helmet.

Gloucester, that duke so good,
Next of the royal blood,
For famous England stood, 100
With his brave brother,
Clarence, in steel so bright;
Though but a maiden knight,
Yet in that furious fight
Scarce such another.

Warwick in blood did wade, 105
Oxford the foe invade,
And cruel slaughter made,
Still as they ran up;
Suffolk his axe did ply,
Beaumont and Willoughby 110
Bare them right doughtily, Ferrers and Fanhope.

Upon Saint Crispin's day
Fought was this noble fray;

* besprinkled.

Which fame did not delay 115
To England to carry.
O when shall English men
With such acts fill a pen?
Or England breed again
Such a King Harry? 120

BEN JONSON (1573?-1637)

HYMN TO DIANA

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair
State in wonted manner keep:
Hesperus entreats thy light, 5
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made Heaven to clear when day did close: 10
Bless us then with wished sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart
And thy crystal-shining quiver;
Give unto the flying hart 15
Space to breathe, how short soever:
Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright.

SONG TO CELIA

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
And I'll not look for wine.
The thirst that from the soul doth rise 5
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honoring thee 10
As giving it a hope, that there
It could not withered be.
But thou thereon didst only breathe,
And sent'st it back to me; 14
Since when it grows, and smells, I swear,
Not of itself, but thee.

THE TRIUMPH OF CHARIS

See the chariot at hand here of Love,
 Wherein my lady rideth!
 Each that draws is a swan or a dove,
 And well the car Love guideth.
 As she goes, all hearts do duty 5
 Unto her beauty;
 And enamored, do wish, so they might
 But enjoy such a sight,
 That they still were to run by her side,
 Through swords, through seas, whither she would ride. 10

Do but look on her eyes, they do light
 All that Love's world compriseth!
 Do but look on her hair, it is bright
 As Love's star when it riseth!
 Do but mark, her forehead's smother 15
 Than words that soothe her;
 And from her arched brows such a grace
 Sheds itself through the face,
 As alone there triumphs to the life
 All the gain, all the good, of the elements'
 strife. 20

Have you seen but a bright lily grow,
 Before rude hands have touched it?
 Have you marked but the fall o' the snow
 Before the soil hath smutched it?
 Have you felt the wool o' the beaver? 25
 Or swan's down ever?
 Or have smelt o' the bud o' the briar?
 Or the nard¹ i' the fire?
 Or have tasted the bag of the bee?
 O so white, O so soft, O so sweet is she! 30

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BELOVED, MASTER WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy
 name,
 Am I thus ample to thy book and fame;
 While I confess thy writings to be such As neither man nor muse can praise too much.
 'Tis true, and all men's suffrage. But these ways 5
 Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
 For silliest ignorance on these may light,
 Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes
 right;

Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
 The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance; 10
 Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
 And think to ruin, where it seemed to raise.
 These are, as some infamous bawd or whore
 Should praise a matron. What could hurt her more?
 But thou art proof against them, and, indeed, 15
 Above the ill fortune of them, or the need.
 I therefore will begin. Soul of the age,
 The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage,
 My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee
 by
 Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie 20
 A little further, to make thee a room:
 Thou art a monument without a tomb,
 And art alive still while thy book doth
 live,
 And we have wits to read and praise to give.
 That I not mix thee so my brain excuses—
 I mean with great, but disproportioned
 Muses; 26
 For if I thought my judgment were of
 years,
 I should commit² thee surely with thy peers,
 And tell how far thou didst our Lyly out-
 shine,
 Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty
 line. 30
 And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,
 From thence to honor thee, I would not seek
 For names, but call forth thundering
 Æschylus,
 Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
 Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead, 35
 To life again, to hear thy buskin tread,
 And shake a stage; or when thy socks were
 on,
 Leave thee alone for the comparison
 Of all that insolent Greece or haughty
 Rome
 Sent forth, or since did from their ashes
 come. 40

² compare.

Triumph, my Britain, thou hast one to show

To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When, like Apollo, he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm. 46
Nature herself was proud of his designs
And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines,
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit:
The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes, 51 Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not
please,

But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give Nature all; thy art, 55
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part:
For though the poet's matter nature be,
His art doth give the fashion; and that he¹
Who casts² to write a living line must sweat,
(Such as thine are) and strike the second heat 60

Upon the Muses' anvil, turn the same (And himself with it) that he thinks to frame,
Or, for the laurel, he may gain a scorn;
For a good poet's made, as well as born.
And such wert thou; look how the father's
face 65

Lives in his issue, even so the race
Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines

In his well turnèd and true filèd³ lines,
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
As brandished at the eyes of ignorance. 70
Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were
To see thee in our waters yet appear,
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,

That so did take⁴ Eliza⁵ and our James!
But stay, I see thee in the hemisphere 75
Advanced, and made a constellation there!
Shine forth, thou Star of poets, and with
rage

Or influence chide or cheer the drooping
stage.

Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned like night,
And despairs day, but for thy volume's
light.

¹ man.
⁴ captivate.

² plans.

³ polished.
⁵ Queen Elizabeth.

From A PINDARIC ODE

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make men better be;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred
year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sear:
A lily of a day 5
Is fairer far in May;
Although it fall and die that night,
It was the plant and flower of light.
In small proportions we just beauties see,
And in short measures life may perfect
be. 10

AN EPITAPH ON SALATHIEL PAVY

Weep with me all you that read
This little story;
And know, for whom a tear you shed
Death's self is sorry.
Twas a child that so did thrive 5
In grace and feature,
As heaven and nature seemed to strive
Which owned the creature.
Years he numbered scarce thirteen
When fates turned cruel, 10
Yet three filled zodiacs⁶ had he been
The stage's jewel;
And did act, what now we moan,
Old men so duly,
As, sooth, the Parcae⁷ thought him
one, 15
He played so truly.
So, by error, to his fate
They all consented,
But viewing him since, alas, too late!
They have repented; 20
And have sought, to give new birth,
In baths to steep him;
But being so much too good for earth,
Heaven vows to keep him.

JOHN DONNE (1573-1631)

GO AND CATCH A FALLING STAR

Go and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root,
Tell me where all past years are,
Or who cleft the Devil's foot;

⁶ years.

⁷ the Fates.

Teach me to hear mermaids singing, 5
Or to keep off envy's stinging,
And find
What wind
Serves to advance an honest mind.

If thou be'st born to strange sights, 10
Things invisible go see,
Ride ten thousand days and nights
Till Age snow white hairs on thee;
Thou, when thou return'st, wilt tell me
All strange wonders that befell thee, 15
And swear
No where
Lives a woman true and fair.

If thou find'st one, let me know;
Such a pilgrimage were sweet. 20
Yet do not; I would not go,
Though at next door we might meet.
Though she were true when you met her,
And last till you write your letter,
Yet she 25
Will be False, ere I come, to two or three.

LOVE'S DEITY

I long to talk with some old lover's ghost
Who died before the god of love was born.
I cannot think that he who then loved most Sunk so low as to love one which did
scorn.
But since this god produced a destiny, 5
And that vice-nature, custom, lets it be,
I must love her that loves not me.

Sure, they which made him god, meant not so much,
Nor he in his young godhead practiced it.
But when an even flame two hearts did touch, 10
His office was indulgently to fit
Actives to passives. Correspondency
Only his subject was; it cannot be Love, till I love her who loves me.

But every modern god will now extend 15
His vast prerogative as far as Jove:
To rage, to lust, to write to, to commend,
All is the purlieu of the god of love.

O! were we wakened by this tyranny
To ungod this child again, it could not
be 20
I should love her who loves not me.

Rebel and atheist too, why murmur I,
As though I felt the worst that love could do?
Love may make me leave loving, or might try
A deeper plague, to make her love me
too; 25
Which, since she loves before, I'm loth to
see.
Falsehood is worse than hate; and that must be,
If she whom I love should love me.

✓SWEETEST LOVE, I DO NOT GO

Sweetest love, I do not go
For weariness of thee,
Nor in hope the world can show
A fitter love for me;
But since that I 5
At the last must part, 'tis best
Thus to use myself in jest,
By feignèd deaths to die.

Yesternight the sun went hence,
And yet is here today; 10
He hath no desire nor sense,
Nor half so short a way;
Then fear not me,
But believe that I shall make Speedier journeys, since I take 15
More wings and spurs than he.

O how feeble is man's power,
That, if good fortune fall,
Cannot add another hour,
Nor a lost hour recall;
But come bad chance,
And we join to it our strength,
And we teach it art and length,
Itself o'er us to advance.

When thou sigh'st, thou sigh'st not wind,
But sigh'st my soul away; 26
When thou weep'st, unkindly kind,
My life's blood doth decay:
It cannot be

That thou lovest me as thou say'st, 30
If in thine my life thou waste,
That art the best of me.

Let not thy divining heart
Forethink me any ill;
Destiny may take thy part 35
And may thy fears fulfil.
But think that we
Are but turned aside to sleep:
They who one another keep Alive, ne'er parted be. 40

DEATH

Death, be not proud, though some have callèd thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so;
For those whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow Die not, poor Death; nor yet canst thou kill me.
From rest and sleep, which but thy picturè be, 5
Much pleasure, then from thee much more must flow;
And soonest our best men with thee do
go—
Rest of their bones and souls' delivery!
Thou'rt slave to Fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
And dost with poison, war, and sickness
dwell, 10
And poppy or charms can make us sleep as
well,
And better than thy stroke; why swell'st
thou then?
One short sleep past, we wake eternally,
And death shall be no more: Death, thou shalt die!

FRANCIS BEAUMONT (1584-1616)

EVEN SUCH IS MAN

Like to the falling of a star,
Or as the flights of eagles are,
Or like the fresh spring's gaudy hue,
Or silver drops of morning dew,
Or like a wind that chafes the flood, 5
Or bubbles which on water stood:

Even such is man, whose borrowed light
Is straight called in and paid to night.
The wind blows out, the bubble dies,
The spring intombed in autumn lies; 10
The dew's dried up, the star is shot,
The flight is past, and man forgot.

ON THE TOMBS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Mortality, behold and fear!
What a change of flesh is here!
Think how many royal bones
Sleep within this heap of stones;
Here they lie had realms and lands, 5
Who now want strength to stir their hands;
Where from their pulpits sealed with dust
They preach, "In greatness is no trust."
Here's an acre sown indeed
With the richest, royal'st seed 10
That the earth did e'er suck in Since the first man died for sin;
Here the bones of birth have cried,
"Though gods they were, as men they died."
Here are sands, ignoble things, 15
Dropt from the ruined sides of kings.
Here's a world of pomp and state
Buried in dust, once dead by fate.

JOHN FLETCHER (1579-1625)

SWEETEST MELANCHOLY

Hence, all you vain delights,
As short as are the nights
Wherein you spend your folly!
There's nought in this life sweet,
If man were wise to see't,
But only melancholy;
O sweetest melancholy!

Welcome, folded arms and fixèd eyes,
A sigh that piercing mortifies,
A look that's fastened to the ground, 10
A tongue chained up without a sound.
Fountain heads and pathless groves,
Places which pale Passion loves;
Moonlight walks, when all the fowls
Are warmly housed save bats and owls.

A midnight bell, a parting groan, 16
 These are the sounds we feed upon.
 Then stretch our bones in a still gloomy valley;
 Nothing's so dainty sweet as lovely melancholy.

CARE-CHARMING SLEEP

Care-charming Sleep, thou easer of all woes,
 Brother to Death, sweetly thyself dispose
 On this afflicted prince; fall like a cloud
 In gentle showers; give nothing that is loud
 Or painful to his slumbers; easy, sweet, 5
 And as a purling stream, thou son of Night,
 Pass by his troubled senses; sing his pain
 Like hollow murmuring wind or silver rain;
 Into this prince gently, oh, gently slide,
 And kiss him into slumbers like a bride. 10

SONG TO BACCHUS

God Lyæus, ever young,
 Ever honored, ever sung,
 Stained with blood of lusty grapes,
 In a thousand lusty shapes,
 Dance upon the mazer's¹ brim, 5
 In the crimson liquor swim;
 From thy plenteous hand divine
 Let a river run with wine;
 God of youth, let this day here
 Enter neither care nor fear! 10

JOHN WEBSTER (1580?-1625?)

A DIRGE

Call for the robin-redbreast and the wren,
 Since o'er shady groves they hover,
 And with leaves and flowers do cover
 The friendless bodies of unburied men.
 Call unto his funeral dole 5
 The ant, the field-mouse, and the mole,
 To rear him hillocks that shall keep him
 warm,
 And, when gay tombs are robbed, sustain
 no harm;
 But keep the wolf far thence, that's foe to
 men, 9
 For with his nails he'll dig them up again.
 And for his cap's sake, let him dig

HARK, NOW EVERYTHING IS STILL

Hark, now everything is still,
 The screech-owl and the whistler² shrill,
 Call upon our dame aloud,
 And bid her quickly don her shroud.
 Much you had of land and rent,— 5
 Your length in clay's now competent;
 A long war disturbed your mind,—
 Here your perfect peace is signed.
 Of what is't fools make such vain keeping?
 Sin their conception, their birth weeping, 10
 Their life a general mist of error,
 Their death a hideous storm of terror.
 Strew your hair with powders sweet,
 Don clean linen, bathe your feet,
 And—the foul fiend more to check— 15
 A crucifix let bless your neck.
 'Tis now full tide 'tween night and day;
 End your groan, and come away.

WILLIAM BROWNE (1591-1643?)

ON THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF PEMBROKE

Underneath this sable herse³
 Lies the subject of all verse:
 Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother:
 Death, ere thou hast slain another Fair and learn'd and good as she,
 Time shall throw a dart at thee.

ELIZABETHAN PROSE

SIR THOMAS NORTH (1535?-1601?)

THE DEATH OF CÆSAR

From THE LIFE OF JULIUS CÆSAR

The Romans inclining to Cæsar's prosperity, and taking the bit in the mouth, supposing that to be ruled by one man alone, it would be a good mean for them to take breath a little, after so many troubles and miseries as they had abidden in these civil wars, they chose him perpetual Dictator. This was a plain tyranny: for to this absolute power of Dictator they added this, never to be afraid to be deposed. Cicero propounded before the Senate that they should give him such honors as were meet for a man; howbeit others afterwards added to, honors beyond all reason. For, men striving who should most honor him, they made him hateful and troublesome to themselves that most favored him, by reason of the unmeasurable greatness and honors which they gave him. There- [20 upon it is reported that even they that most hated him were no less favorers and furtherers of his honors than they that most flattered him; because they might have greater occasions to rise, and that it might appear they had just cause and color to attempt that they did against him.

² plover.

And now for himself, after he had ended his civil wars he did so honor- [30 ably behave himself that there was no fault to be found in him; and therefore, methinks, amongst other honors they gave him, he rightly deserved this, that they should build him a temple of clemency, to thank him for his courtesy he had used unto them in his victory. For he pardoned many of them that had borne arms against him, and, furthermore, did prefer some of them to honor and [40 office in the commonwealth: as, amongst others, Cassius and Brutus, both the which were made Prætors. And where Pompey's images had been thrown down, he caused them to be set up again; whereupon Cicero said then, That Cæsar setting up Pompey's images again, he made his own to stand the surer. And when some of his friends did counsel him to have a guard for the safety of his person, and [50 some also did offer themselves to serve him, he would never consent to it, but said, It was better to die once, than always to be afraid of death.

* * * * *

But his enemies that envied his greatness did not stick to find fault withal. As Cicero the orator, when one said, Tomorrow the star Lyra will rise: Yea, said he, at the commandment of Cæsar, as if men were compelled to say and think by [60 Cæsar's edict. But the chiefest cause that made him mortally hated was the covetous desire he had to be called king: which first gave the people just cause, and next his secret enemies honest color, to bear him ill-will.

* * * * *

The people went straight unto Marcus Brutus, who from his father came of the first Brutus, and by his mother, of the house of the Servilians, a noble house [70 as any was in Rome, and was also nephew and son-in-law of Marcus Cato. Notwithstanding, the great honors and favors Cæsar showed unto him kept him back, that of himself alone he did not conspire nor consent to depose him of his kingdom. For Cæsar did not only save his life after the battle of Pharsalia when Pompey fled, and did at his request also save many more of his friends beside, but further- [80 more he put a marvellous confidence in him. For he had already preferred him to the Prætorship for that year, and furthermore was appointed to be Consul the fourth year after that, having through Cæsar's friendship obtained it before Cassius, who likewise made suit for the same; and Cæsar also, as it is reported, said in this contention, Indeed Cassius hath alleged best reason, but yet shall [90 he not be chosen before Brutus. Some one day accusing Brutus while he practised this conspiracy, Cæsar would not hear of it, but clapping his hand on his body, told them, Brutus will look for this skin: meaning thereby that Brutus for his virtue deserved to rule after him, but yet that for ambition's sake he would not show himself unthankful or dishonorable.

Now they that desired change, and [100 wished Brutus only their prince and governor above all other, they durst not come to him themselves to tell him what they would have him to do, but in the night did cast sundry papers into the Prætor's seat where he gave audience, and the most of them to this effect: Thou sleepest, Brutus, and art not Brutus indeed. Cassius, finding Brutus' ambition stirred up the more by these ambitious bills, did [110 prick him forward, and egg him on the more, for a private quarrel he had conceived against Cæsar, the circumstance whereof we have set down more at large in Brutus' life. Cæsar also had Cassius in great jealousy, and suspected him much; whereupon he said on a time to his friends, What will Cassius do, think ye? I like not his pale looks. Another time when Cæsar's friends complained unto [120 him of Antonius and Dolabella, that they pretended some mischief towards him, he answered them again, As for those fat men and smooth-combed heads, quoth he, I never reckon of them; but these pale-visaged and carrion lean people, I fear them most; meaning Brutus and Cassius.

Certainly, destiny may easier be foreseen than avoided, considering the strange and wonderful signs that were said [130 to be seen before Cæsar's death. For touching the fires in the element, and spirits running up and down in the night, and also the solitary birds to be seen at noondays sitting in the great marketplace, are not all these signs perhaps worth the noting, in such a wonderful chance as happened? But Strabo the Philosopher writeth that divers men were seen going up and down in fire; and furthermore [140 that there was a slave of the soldiers that did cast a marvellous burning flame out of his hand, insomuch as they that saw it thought he had been burnt, but when the fire was out it was found he had no hurt. Cæsar self also doing sacrifice unto the gods, found that one of the beasts which was sacrificed had no heart; and that was a strange thing in nature, how a beast could live without a heart. Further- [150 more, there was a certain soothsayer that had given Cæsar warning long time afore, to take heed of the day of the Ides of March (which is the fifteenth of the month), for on that day he should be in great danger. That day being come, Cæsar going unto the Senate-house, and speaking merrily unto the soothsayer, told him, The Ides of March be come; So be they, softly answered the sooth- [160 sayer, but yet are they not past. And the very day before Cæsar, supping with Marcus Lepidus, sealed certain letters as he was wont to do at the board; so talk falling out amongst them, reasoning what death was best, he, preventing their opinions, cried out aloud, Death unlooked for. Then going to bed the same night as his manner was, and lying with his wife Calpurnia, all the windows and [170 doors of his chamber flying open, the noise awoke him, and made him afraid when he saw such light; but more when he heard his wife Calpurnia, being fast asleep, weep and sigh, and put forth many fumbling, lamentable speeches. For she dreamed that Cæsar was slain, and that she had him in her arms. Others also do deny that she had any such dream, as, amongst other, Titus Livius writ- [180 eth that it was in this sort. The Senate having set upon the top of Cæsar's house, for an ornament and setting forth of the same, a certain pinnacle, Calpurnia dreamed that she saw it broken down, and that she thought she lamented and wept for it. Insomuch that Cæsar rising in the morning, she prayed him if it were possible not to go out of the doors that day, but to adjourn the session of [190 the Senate until another day. Thereby it seemed that Cæsar likewise did fear and suspect somewhat, because his wife Calpurnia until that time was never given to any fear or superstition; and then for that he saw her so troubled in mind with this dream she had. But much more afterwards, when the soothsayers, having sacrificed many beasts one after another, told him that none did like [200 them; then he determined to send Antonius to adjourn the session of the Senate.

* * * * *

But in the meantime came Decius Brutus, surnamed Albinus, in whom Cæsar put such confidence that in his last will and testament he had appointed him to be his next heir, and yet was of the conspiracy with Cassius and Brutus; he, fearing that if Cæsar did adjourn the [210 session that day the conspiracy would out, laughed the soothsayers to scorn and reproved Cæsar, saying that he gave the Senate occasion to dislike with him, and that they might think he mocked them, considering that by his commandment they were assembled, and that they were ready willingly to grant him all things, and to proclaim him king of all the provinces of the empire of Rome [220 out of Italy, and that he should wear his diadem in all other places both by sea

him such honors as were meet for a man; howbeit others afterwards added to, honors beyond all reason. For, men striving who should most honor him, they made him hateful and troublesome to themselves that most favored him, by reason of the unmeasurable greatness and honors which they gave him. There- [20] upon it is reported that even they that most hated him were no less favorers and furtherers of his honors than they that most flattered him; because they might have greater occasions to rise, and that it might appear they had just cause and color to attempt that they did against him.

And now for himself, after he had ended his civil wars he did so honor- [30] ably behave himself that there was no fault to be found in him; and therefore, methinks, amongst other honors they gave him, he rightly deserved this, that they should build him a temple of clemency, to thank him for his courtesy he had used unto them in his victory. For he pardoned many of them that had borne arms against him, and, furthermore, did prefer some of them to honor and [40] office in the commonwealth: as, amongst others, Cassius and Brutus, both the which were made Prætors. And where Pompey's images had been thrown down, he caused them to be set up again; whereupon Cicero said then, That Cæsar setting up Pompey's images again, he made his own to stand the surer. And when some of his friends did counsel him to have a guard for the safety of his person, and [50] some also did offer themselves to serve him, he would never consent to it, but said, It was better to die once, than always to be afraid of death.

* * * * *

But his enemies that envied his greatness did not stick to find fault withal. As Cicero the orator, when one said, Tomorrow the star Lyra will rise: Yea, said he, at the commandment of Cæsar, as if men were compelled to say and think by [60] Cæsar's edict. But the chiefest cause that made him mortally hated was the covetous desire he had to be called king: which first gave the people just cause, and next his secret enemies honest color, to bear him ill-will.

* * * * *

The people went straight unto Marcus Brutus, who from his father came of the first Brutus, and by his mother, of the house of the Servilians, a noble house [70] as any was in Rome, and was also nephew and son-in-law of Marcus Cato. Notwithstanding, the great honors and favors Cæsar showed unto him kept him back, that of himself alone he did not conspire nor consent to depose him of his kingdom. For Cæsar did not only save his life after the battle of Pharsalia when Pompey fled, and did at his request also save many more of his friends beside, but further- [80] more he put a marvellous confidence in him. For he had already preferred him to the Prætorship for that year, and furthermore was appointed to be Consul the fourth year after that, having through Cæsar's friendship obtained it before Cassius, who likewise made suit for the same; and Cæsar also, as it is reported, said in this contention, Indeed Cassius hath alleged best reason, but yet shall [90] he not be chosen before Brutus. Some one day accusing Brutus while he practised this conspiracy, Cæsar would not hear of it, but clapping his hand on his body, told them, Brutus will look for this skin: meaning thereby that Brutus for his virtue deserved to rule after him, but yet that for ambition's sake he would not show himself unthankful or dishonorable.

Now they that desired change, and [100] wished Brutus only their prince and governor above all other, they durst not come to him themselves to tell him what they would have him to do, but in the night did cast sundry papers into the Prætor's seat where he gave audience, and the most of them to this effect: Thou sleepest, Brutus, and art not Brutus indeed. Cassius, finding Brutus' ambition stirred up the more by these ambitious bills, did [110] prick him forward, and egg him on the more, for a private quarrel he had conceived against Cæsar, the circumstance whereof we have set down more at large in Brutus' life. Cæsar also had Cassius in great jealousy, and suspected him much; whereupon he said on a time to his friends, What will Cassius do, think ye? I like not his pale looks. Another time when Cæsar's friends complained unto [120 him of Antonius and Dolabella, that they pretended some mischief towards him, he answered them again, As for those fat men and smooth-combed heads, quoth he, I never reckon of them; but these pale-visaged and carrion lean people, I fear them most; meaning Brutus and Cassius.

Certainly, destiny may easier be foreseen than avoided, considering the strange and wonderful signs that were said [130 to be seen before Cæsar's death. For touching the fires in the element, and spirits running up and down in the night, and also the solitary birds to be seen at noondays sitting in the great marketplace, are not all these signs perhaps worth the noting, in such a wonderful chance as happened? But Strabo the Philosopher writeth that divers men were seen going up and down in fire; and furthermore [140 that there was a slave of the soldiers that did cast a marvellous burning flame out of his hand, insomuch as they that saw it thought he had been burnt, but when the fire was out it was found he had no hurt. Cæsar self also doing sacrifice unto the gods, found that one of the beasts which was sacrificed had no heart; and that was a strange thing in nature, how a beast could live without a heart. Further- [150 more, there was a certain soothsayer that had given Cæsar warning long time afore, to take heed of the day of the Ides of March (which is the fifteenth of the month), for on that day he should be in great danger. That day being come, Cæsar going unto the Senate-house, and speaking merrily unto the soothsayer, told him, The Ides of March be come; So be they, softly answered the sooth- [160 sayer, but yet are they not past. And the very day before Cæsar, supping with Marcus Lepidus, sealed certain letters as he was wont to do at the board; so talk falling out amongst them, reasoning what death was best, he, preventing their opinions, cried out aloud, Death unlooked for. Then going to bed the same night as his manner was, and lying with his wife Calpurnia, all the windows and [170 doors of his chamber flying open, the noise awoke him, and made him afraid when he saw such light; but more when he heard his wife Calpurnia, being fast asleep, weep and sigh, and put forth many fumbling, lamentable speeches. For she dreamed that Cæsar was slain, and that she had him in her arms. Others also do deny that she had any such dream, as, amongst other, Titus Livius writ- [180 eth that it was in this sort. The Senate having set upon the top of Cæsar's house, for an ornament and setting forth of the same, a certain pinnacle, Calpurnia dreamed that she saw it broken down, and that she thought she lamented and wept for it. Insomuch that Cæsar rising in the morning, she prayed him if it were possible not to go out of the doors that day, but to adjourn the session of [190 the Senate until another day. Thereby it seemed that Cæsar likewise did fear and suspect somewhat, because his wife Calpurnia until that time was never given to any fear or superstition; and then for that he saw her so troubled in mind with this dream she had. But much more afterwards, when the soothsayers, having sacrificed many beasts one after another, told him that none did like [200 them; then he determined to send Antonius to adjourn the session of the Senate.

* * * * *

But in the meantime came Decius Brutus, surnamed Albinus, in whom Cæsar put such confidence that in his last will and testament he had appointed him to be his next heir, and yet was of the conspiracy with Cassius and Brutus; he, fearing that if Cæsar did adjourn the [210 session that day the conspiracy would out, laughed the soothsayers to scorn and reproved Cæsar, saying that he gave the Senate occasion to dislike with him, and that they might think he mocked them, considering that by his commandment they were assembled, and that they were ready willingly to grant him all things, and to proclaim him king of all the provinces of the empire of Rome [220 out of Italy, and that he should wear his diadem in all other places both by sea

and land. And furthermore, that if any man should tell them from him they should depart for that present time, and return again when Calpurnia should have better dreams, what would his enemies and ill-willers say, and how could they like of his friend's words? And who could persuade them otherwise but that [230] they would think his dominion a slavery unto them and tyrannical in himself? And yet if it be so, said he, that you utterly dislike of this day, it is better that you go yourself in person, and, saluting the Senate, to dismiss them till another time. Therewithal he took Cæsar by the hand and led him out of his house.

Cæsar was not gone far from his house but a bondman, a stranger, did what [240] he could to speak with him; and when he saw he was put back by the great press and multitude of people that followed him, he went straight into his house and put himself into Calpurnia's hands to be kept till Cæsar came back again, telling her that he had great matters to impart unto him. And one Artemidorus also, born in the Isle of Gnidos, a doctor of rhetoric in the Greek tongue, who by [250] means of his profession was very familiar with certain of Brutus' confederates, and therefore knew the most part of all their practices against Cæsar, came and brought him a little bill written with his own hand, of all that he meant to tell him. He, marking how Cæsar received all the supplications that were offered him, and that he gave them straight to his men that were about him, pressed nearer to [260] him, and said: Cæsar, read this memorial to yourself, and that quickly, for they be matters of great weight, and touch you nearly. Cæsar took it of him but could never read it, though he many times attempted it, for the number of people that did salute him; but holding it still in his hand, keeping it to himself, went on withal into the Senate-house. Howbeit other are of opinion that it was some [270] man else that gave him that memorial, and not Artemidorus, who did what he could all the way as he went to give it Cæsar, but he was always repulsed by the people. For these things, they may seem to come by chance, but the place where the murder was prepared, and where the Senate were assembled, and where also there stood up an image of Pompey dedicated by himself amongst [280] other ornaments which he gave unto the theatre: all these were manifest proofs that it was the ordinance of some god that made this treason to be executed, specially in that very place. It is also reported that Cassius (although otherwise he did favor the doctrine of Epicurus), beholding the image of Pompey, before they entered into the action of their traitorous enterprise, he did softly [290] call upon it to aid him. But the instant danger of the present time, taking away his former reason, did suddenly put him into a furious passion, and made him like a man half beside himself.

Now Antonius, that was a faithful friend to Cæsar, and a valiant man besides of his hands, Decius Brutus Albinus entertained out of the Senate-house, having begun a long tale of set pur- [300] pose. So Cæsar coming into the house, all the Senate stood up on their feet to do him honor. Then part of Brutus' company and confederates stood round about Cæsar's chair, and part of them also came towards him, as though they made suit with Metellus Cimber to call home his brother again from banishment; and thus prosecuting still their suit, they followed Cæsar till he was set in his chair. [310] Who, denying their petitions, and being offended with them one after another, because the more they were denied the more they pressed upon him, and were the earnestest with him, Metellus, at length, taking his gown with both his hands, pulled it over his neck, which was the sign given the confederates to set upon him. Then Casca behind him strake him in the neck with his sword; [320] howbeit, the wound was not great nor mortal, because it seemed the fear of such a devilish attempt did amaze him and take his strength from him, that he killed him not at the first blow. But Cæsar turning straight unto him, caught hold of his sword and held it hard; and they both cried out, Cæsar in Latin, O vile traitor Casca, what doest thou? And Casca in Greek to his brother, Brother, [330] help me. At the beginning of this stir they that were present, not knowing of the conspiracy, were so amazed with the horrible sight they saw they had no power to fly, neither to help him, not so much as once to make any outcry. They on the other side that had conspired his death compassed him in on every side with their swords drawn in their hands, that Cæsar turned him nowhere but he was [340 stricken at by some, and still had naked swords in his face, and was hacked and mangled among them as a wild beast taken of hunters. For it was agreed among them that every man should give him a wound, because all their parts should be in this murder; and then Brutus himself gave him one wound. Men report also that Cæsar did still defend himself against the rest, running every way with his [350 body; but when he saw Brutus, with his sword drawn in his hand, then he pulled his gown over his head and made no more resistance, and was driven, either casually or purposely, by the counsel of the conspirators, against the base whereupon Pompey's image stood, which ran all of a gore-blood till he was slain. Thus it seemed that the image took just revenge of Pompey's enemy, being thrown [360 down on the ground at his feet, and yielding up his ghost there, for the number of wounds he had upon him. For it is reported that he had three-and-twenty wounds upon his body; and divers of the conspirators did hurt themselves, striking one body with so many blows.

When Cæsar was slain the Senate (though Brutus stood in the midst among them, as though he would have said [370 somewhat touching this fact) presently ran out of the house, and flying, filled all the city with marvellous fear and tumult. Insomuch as some did shut-to their doors, others forsook their shops and warehouses, and others ran to the place to see what the matter was; and others also, that had seen it, ran home to their houses again. But Antonius and Lepidus, which were two of Cæsar's chiefest friends, [380 secretly conveying themselves away, fled into other men's houses and forsook their own. Brutus and his confederates on the other side, being yet hot with this murder

they had committed, having their swords drawn in their hands, came all in a troop together out of the Senate and went into the market-place; not as men that made countenance to fly, but otherwise boldly holding up their heads like men of [390 courage, and called to the people to defend their liberty, and stayed to speak with every great personage whom they met in their way. Of them, some followed this troop, and went amongst them as if they had been of the conspiracy, and falsely challenged part of the honor with them; amongst them was Caius Octavius and Lentulus Spinther. But both of them were afterwards put to death for their [400 vain covetousness of honor by Antonius and Octavius Cæsar the younger, and yet had no part of that honor for the which they were put to death, nor did any man believe that they were any of the confederates or of counsel with them. For they that did put them to death took revenge rather of the will they had to offend than of any fact they had committed. [410

The next morning Brutus and his confederates came into the market-place to speak unto the people, who gave them such audience that it seemed they neither greatly reproved nor allowed the fact; for by their great silence they showed that they were sorry for Cæsar's death, and also that they did reverence Brutus. Now the Senate granted general pardon for all that was past, and to pacify [420 every man ordained besides that Cæsar's funerals should be honored as a god, and established all things that he had done; and gave certain provinces also and convenient honors unto Brutus and his confederates, whereby every man thought all things were brought to good peace and quietness again. But when they had opened Cæsar's testament and found a liberal legacy of money bequeathed [430 unto every citizen of Rome, and that they saw his body (which was brought into the market-place) all bemangled with gashes of swords, then there was no order to keep the multitude and common people quiet, but they plucked up forms, tables and stools, and laid them all about the body, and setting them afire, burnt the corpse. Then when the fire was well kindled, they took the firebrands and [440] went unto their houses that had slain Cæsar, to set them afire. Others also ran up and down the city to see if they could meet with any of them, to cut them in pieces; howbeit they could meet with never a man of them, because they had locked themselves up safely in their houses. There was one of Cæsar's friends called Cinna, that had a marvellous strange and terrible dream the night be- [450] fore. He dreamed that Cæsar bade him to supper, and that he refused and would not go; then that Cæsar took him by the hand and led him against his will. Now Cinna hearing at that time that they burnt Cæsar's body in the market-place, notwithstanding that he feared his dream and had an ague on him besides, he went into the market-place to honor his funerals. When he came thither one of [460] the mean sort asked him what his name was. He was straight called by his name. The first man told it to another, and that other unto another, so that it ran straight through them all, that he was one of them that murdered Cæsar (for indeed one of the traitors to Cæsar was also called Cinna, as himself); wherefore taking him for Cinna the murderer, they fell upon him with such fury that they presently [470] despatched him in the market-place. This stir and fury made Brutus and Cassius more afraid than of all that was past, and therefore within few days after they departed out of Rome; and touching their doings afterwards, and what calamity they suffered till their deaths, we have written it at large in the life of Brutus.

Cæsar died at six-and-fifty years of age, and Pompey also lived not passing [480] four years more than he. So he reaped no other fruit of all his reign and dominion, which he had so vehemently desired all his life and pursued with such extreme danger, but a vain name only, and a superficial glory that procured him the envy and hatred of his country. But his great prosperity and good fortune that favored him all his lifetime did continue afterwards in the revenge of his [490] death, pursuing the murderers both by sea and land till they had not left a man more to be executed of all them that were actors or counsellors in the conspiracy of his death. Furthermore, of all the chances that happen unto men upon the earth, that which came to Cassius above all other is most to be wondered at. For he being overcome in battle at the journey of Philippi, slew himself with the [500] same sword with the which he strake Cæsar. Again, of signs in the element, the great comet which seven nights together was seen very bright after Cæsar's death, the eighth night after was never seen more. Also the brightness of the sun was darkened, the which all that year through rose very pale and shined not out, whereby it gave but small heat; therefore the air, being very cloudy and dark [510] by the weakness of the heat that could not come forth, did cause the earth to bring forth but raw and unripe fruit, which rotted before it could ripe.

But above all, the ghost that appeared unto Brutus showed plainly that the gods were offended with the murder of Cæsar. The vision was thus. Brutus being ready to pass over his army from the city of Abydos to the other coast lying [520] directly against it, slept every night (as his manner was) in his tent, and being yet awake, thinking of his affairs (for by report he was as careful a captain, and lived with as little sleep, as ever man did), he thought he heard a noise at his tent door, and looking toward the light of the lamp that waxed very dim, he saw a horrible vision of a man of wonderful greatness and dreadful look, which at [530] the first made him marvellously afraid. But when he saw that it did him no hurt, but stood by his bedside and said nothing, at length he asked him what he was. The image answered him: I am thy ill angel, Brutus, and thou shalt see me by the city of Philippi. Then Brutus replied again, and said: Well, I shall see thee then. Therewithal, the spirit presently vanished from him. After that time [540] Brutus being in battle near unto the city of Philippi, against Antonius and Octavius Cæsar, at the first battle he won the victory, and overthrowing all them that withstood him, he drave them into young Cæsar's camp, which he took. The second battle being at hand, this spirit appeared again unto him, but spake never a word. Thereupon Brutus, knowing he should die, did put himself to all hazard [550 in battle, but yet fighting could not be slain. So seeing his men put to flight and overthrown, he ran unto a little rock not far off, and there setting his sword's point to his breast, fell upon it and slew himself, but yet as it is reported, with the help of his friend that despatched him.

JOHN LYLY (1554?-1606)

QUEEN ELIZABETH

From EUPHUES AND HIS ENGLAND

This queen being deceased, Elizabeth, being of the age of twenty-two years, of more beauty than honor, and yet of more honor than any earthly creature, was called from a prisoner to be a prince, from the castle to the crown, from the fear of losing her head, to be supreme head.

Touching the beauty of this prince, her countenance, her personage, her majesty, I cannot think that it may be sufficiently commended, when it cannot be too much marveled at; so that I am constrained to say as Praxiteles did, when he began to paint Venus and her son, who doubted whether the world could afford colors good enough for two such fair faces, and I, whether our tongue can yield words to blaze that beauty, the perfection whereof none can imagine; which seeing it is so, I must do like those that want [20 a clear sight, who, being not able to discern the sun in the sky, are enforced to behold it in the water. Zeuxis, having before him fifty fair virgins of Sparta whereby to draw one amiable Venus, said that fifty more fairer than those could not minister sufficient beauty to show the goddess of beauty; therefore, being in despair either by art to shadow her, or by imagination to comprehend her, he [30 drew in a table a fair temple, the gates open, and Venus going in so as nothing could be perceived but her back, wherein he used such cunning that Apelles himself, seeing this work, wished that Venus would turn her face, saying that if it were in all parts agreeable to the back, he would become apprentice to Zeuxis, and slave to Venus. In the like manner fareth it with me, for having all the ladies in Italy, [40 more than fifty hundred, whereby to color Elizabeth, I must say with Zeuxis that as many more will not suffice, and therefore in as great an agony paint her court with her back towards you, for that I cannot by art portray her beauty, wherein, though I want the skill to do it as Zeuxis did, yet viewing it narrowly, and comparing it wisely, you all will say that if her face be answerable to her back, you [50 will like my handicraft and become her handmaids. In the mean season, I leave you gazing until she turn her face, imagining her to be such a one as nature framed, to that end that no art should imitate, wherein she hath proved herself to be exquisite, and painters to be apes.

This beautiful mold when I beheld to be indued with chastity, temperance, mildness, and all other good gifts of nature [60 (as hereafter shall appear), when I saw her to surpass all in beauty, and yet a virgin, to excel all in piety, and yet a prince, to be inferior to none in all the lineaments of the body, and yet superior to every one in all gifts of the mind, I began thus to pray, that as she hath lived forty years a virgin in great majesty, so she may live four score years a mother with great joy, that as with her we have [70 long time had peace and plenty, so by her we may ever have quietness and abundance, wishing this even from the bottom of a heart that wisheth well to England, though feareth ill, that either the world may end before she die, or she live to see her children's children in the world; otherwise how tickle their state is that now triumph, upon what a twist they hang that now are in honor, [80 they that live shall see, which I to think on, sigh! But God for his mercy's sake, Christ for his merit's sake, the Holy Ghost for his name's sake, grant to that realm comfort without any ill chance, and the prince they have without any other change, that the longer she liveth the sweeter she may smell, like the bird Ibis, that she may be triumphant in victories like the palm tree, fruitful in her [90] age like the vine, in all ages prosperous, to all men gracious, in all places glorious, so that there be no end of her praise until the end of all flesh.

Thus did I often talk with myself, and wish with mine whole soul.

Why should I talk of her sharp wit, excellent wisdom, exquisite learning, and all other qualities of the mind, wherein she seemeth as far to excel those that have [100] been accounted singular, as the learned have surpassed those that have been thought simple.

In questioning, not inferior to Nicaulia, the queen of Saba, that did put so many hard doubts to Solomon; equal to Nicotratra in the Greek tongue, who was thought to give precepts for the better perfection; more learned in the Latin than Amalasunta; passing Aspasia in [110] philosophy, who taught Pericles; exceeding in judgment Themistoclea, who instructed Pythagoras. Add to these qualities, those that none of these had: the French tongue, the Spanish, the Italian, not mean in every one, but excellent in all; readier to correct escapes in those languages than to be controlled; fitter to teach others than learn of any; more able to add new rules than to err in the [120] old; insomuch as there is no ambassador that cometh into her court but she is willing and able both to understand his message and utter her mind; not like unto the kings of Assyria, who answer ambassadors by messengers, while they themselves either dally in sin or snort in sleep. Her godly zeal to learning, with her great skill, hath been so manifestly approved that I cannot tell whether she deserve [130] more honor for her knowledge, or admiration for her courtesy, who in great pomp hath twice directed her progress unto the universities with no less joy to the students than glory to her state. Where, after long and solemn disputations in law, physic, and divinity, not as one wearied with scholars' arguments, but wedded to their orations, when every one feared to offend in length, she [140] in her own person, with no less praise to her Majesty than delight to her subjects, with a wise and learned conclusion, both gave them thanks, and put herself to pains. O noble pattern of a princely mind, not like to the kings of Persia, who in their progresses did nothing else but cut sticks to drive away the time, nor like the delicate lives of the Sybarites, who would not admit any art to be exercised within their city that might make the least noise. Her wit so sharp, that if I should repeat the apt answers, the subtle questions, the fine speeches, the pithy sentences, which on the sudden she hath uttered, they would rather breed admiration than credit. But such are the gifts that the living God hath indued her withal, that look in what art or language, wit or learning, virtue or beauty [160] any one hath particularly excelled most, she only hath generally exceeded every one in all, insomuch that there is nothing to be added that either man would wish in a woman, or God doth give to a creature.

I let pass her skill in music, her knowledge in all the other sciences, whenas I fear lest by my simplicity I should make them less than they are, in seeking to [170] show how great they are, unless I were praising her in the gallery of Olympia, where giving forth one word, I might hear seven.

But all these graces, although they be to be wondered at, yet her politic government, her prudent counsel, her zeal to religion, her clemency to those that submit, her stoutness to those that threaten, so far exceed all other virtues that [180] they are more easy to be marveled at than imitated.

Two and twenty years hath she borne the sword with such justice, that neither offenders could complain of rigor, nor the innocent of wrong; yet so tempered with mercy as malefactors have been sometimes pardoned upon hope of grace, and the injured requited to ease their grief, insomuch that in the whole [190] course of her glorious reign, it could never be said that either the poor were oppressed without remedy, or the guilty repressed without cause, bearing this engraven in her noble heart, that justice without mercy were extreme injury, and pity without equity plain partiality, and that it is as great tyranny not to mitigate laws, as iniquity to break them.

Her care for the flourishing of the [200 Gospel hath well appeared, whenas neither the curses of the Pope (which are blessings to good people) nor the threatenings of kings (which are perilous to a prince) nor the persuasions of papists (which are honey to the mouth) could either fear her or allure her to violate the holy league contracted with Christ, or to maculate the blood of the ancient Lamb, which is Christ. But always constant [210 in the true faith, she hath to the exceeding joy of her subjects, to the unspeakable comfort of her soul, to the great glory of God, established that religion the maintenance whereof she rather seeketh to confirm by fortitude, than leave off for fear, knowing that there is nothing that smelleth sweeter to the Lord than a sound spirit, which neither the hosts of the ungodly nor the horror of death can [220 either remove or move.

This Gospel with invincible courage, with rare constancy, with hot zeal, she hath maintained in her own countries without change, and defended against all kingdoms that sought change, insomuch that all nations round about her, threatening alteration, shaking swords, throwing fire, menacing famine, murder, destruction, desolation, she only hath [230 stood like a lamp on the top of a hill, not fearing the blasts of the sharp winds, but trusting in His providence that rideth upon the wings of the four winds. Next followeth the love she beareth to her subjects, who no less tendereth them than the apple of her own eye, showing herself a mother to the afflicted, a physician to the sick a sovereign and mild governess to all. [240

Touching her magnanimity, her majesty, her estate royal, there was neither Alexander, nor Galba the Emperor, nor any, that might be compared with her.

This is she that, resembling the noble queen of Navarre, useth the marigold for her flower, which at the rising of the sun openeth her leaves, and at the setting shutteth them, referring all her actions and endeavors to him that ruleth the [250 sun. This is that Cæsar, that first bound the crocodile to the palm tree, bridling those that sought to rein her. This is that good pelican, that to feed her people spareth not to rend her own person. This is that mighty eagle, that hath thrown dust into the eyes of the hart that went about to work destruction to her subjects, into whose wings although the blind beetle would have crept, and [260 so being carried into her nest, destroyed her young ones, yet hath she with the virtue of her feathers, consumed that fly in his own fraud. She hath exiled the swallow that sought to spoil the grasshopper, and given bitter almonds to the ravenous wolves that endeavored to devour the silly lambs, burning even with the breath of her mouth like the princely stag, the serpents that were engendered by the breath of the huge elephant, so that now all her enemies are as whist as the bird Attagen, who never singeth any tune after she is taken,—nor they, being so overtaken.

But whither do I wade, ladies, as one forgetting himself; thinking to sound the depth of her virtues with a few fathoms, when there is no bottom; for I know not how it cometh to pass that, being [280 in this labyrinth, I may sooner lose myself than find the end.

Behold, ladies, in this glass a queen, a woman, a virgin, in all gifts of the body, in all graces of the mind, in all perfection of either, so far to excel all men, that I know not whether I may think the place too bad for her to dwell among men.

To talk of other things in that court were to bring eggs after apples, or [290 after the setting out of the sun, to tell a tale of a shadow.

But this I say, that all offices are looked to with great care, that virtue is embraced of all, vice hated, religion daily increased, manners reformed, that whose seeth the place there, will think it rather a church for divine service than a court for princes' delight.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY (1554-1586)

From THE DEFENCE OF POESY

Chaucer, undoubtedly, did excellently in his Troilus and Criseyde; of whom, truly, I know not whether to marvel more, either that he in that misty time could see so clearly, or that we in this clear age walk so stumblingly after him. Yet had he great wants, fit to be forgiven in so reverend antiquity. I account the Mirror of Magistrates meetly furnished of beautiful parts; and in the Earl of [10] Surrey's lyrics many things tasting of a noble birth, and worthy of a noble mind. The Shepherd's Calendar hath much poetry in his eclogues, indeed worthy the reading, if I be not deceived. That same framing of his style to an old rustic language I dare not allow, since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazzaro in Italian did affect it. Besides these, I do not remember to have [20] seen but few (to speak boldly) printed, that have poetical sinews in them. For proof whereof, let but most of the verses be put in prose, and then ask the meaning, and it will be found that one verse did but beget another, without ordering at the first what should be at the last, which becomes a confused mass of words, with a tinkling sound of rime, barely accompanied with reason. [30]

Our tragedies and comedies not without cause cried out against, observing rules neither of honest civility nor of skilful poetry, excepting Gorboduc,—again I say of those that I have seen. Which notwithstanding as it is full of stately speeches and well-sounding phrases, climbing to the height of Seneca's style, and as full of notable morality, which it doth most delightfully teach, and so obtain [40] the very end of poesy; yet in truth it is very defectious in the circumstances, which grieveth me, because it might not remain as an exact model of all tragedies. For it is faulty both in place and time, the two necessary companions of all corporal actions. For where the stage should always represent but one place, and the uttermost time presupposed in it should be, both by Aristotle's precept and [50] common reason, but one day; there is both many days and many places inartificially imagined.

But if it be so in Gorboduc, how much more in all the rest? where you shall have Asia of the one side, and Africa of the other, and so many other under-kingdoms, that the player, when he cometh in, must ever begin with telling where he is, or else the tale will not be [60] conceived. Now ye shall have three ladies walk to gather flowers, and then we must believe the stage to be a garden. By and by we hear news of shipwreck in the same place, and then we are to blame if we accept it not for a rock. Upon the back of that comes out a hideous monster with fire and smoke, and then the miserable beholders are bound to take it for a cave. While in the meantime two armies fly [70] in, represented with four swords and bucklers, and then what hard heart will not receive it for a pitched field?

Now of time they are much more liberal. For ordinary it is that two young princes fall in love; after many traverses she is got with child, delivered of a fair boy, he is lost, groweth a man, falleth in love, and is ready to get another child,—and all this in two hours' space; which [80] how absurd it is in sense even sense may imagine, and art hath taught, and all ancient examples justified, and at this day the ordinary players in Italy will not err in. Yet will some bring in an example of Eumuchus in Terence, that containeth matter of two days, yet far short of twenty years. True it is, and so was it to be played in two days, and so fitted to the time it set forth. And though [90] Plautus have in one place done amiss, let us hit with him, and not miss with him. But they will say, How then shall we set forth a story which containeth both many places and many times? And do they not know that a tragedy is tied to the laws of poesy, and not of history; not bound to follow the story, but having liberty either to feign a quite new matter, or to frame the history to [100] the most tragical conveniency? Again, many things may be told which cannot be showed,—if they know the difference betwixt reporting and representing. As for example I may speak, though I am here, of Peru, and in speech digress from that to the description of Calicut; but in action I cannot represent it without Pacolet's horse. And so was the manner the ancients took, by some Nuntius [110 to recount things done in former time or other place.

Lastly, if they will represent a history, they must not, as Horace saith, begin ab ovo, but they must come to the principal point of that one action which they will represent. By example this will be best expressed. I have a story of young Polydorus, delivered for safety's sake, with great riches, by his father [120 Priamus to Polymnestor, King of Thrace, in the Trojan war time. He, after some years, hearing the overthrow of Priamus, for to make the treasure his own, murdereth the child; the body of the child is taken up by Hecuba; she, the same day, findeth a sleight to be revenged most cruelly of the tyrant. Where now would one of our tragedy-writers begin, but with the delivery of the child? Then should [130 he sail over into Thrace, and so spend I know not how many years, and travel numbers of places. But where doth Euripides? Even with the finding of the body, leaving the rest to be told by the spirit of Polydorus. This needs no further to be enlarged; the dullest wit may conceive it.

But, besides these gross absurdities, how all their plays be neither right [140 tragedies nor right comedies, mingling kings and clowns, not because the matter so carrieth it, but thrust in clowns by head and shoulders to play a part in majestical matters, with neither decency nor discretion; so as neither the admiration and commiseration, nor the right sportfulness, is by their mongrel tragedy-comedy obtained. I know Apuleius did somewhat so, but that is a thing re- [150 counted with space of time, not represented in one moment: and I know the ancients have one or two examples of tragedy-comedies, as Plautus hath Amphitruo. But, if we mark them well, we shall find that they never, or very daintily, match hornpipes and funerals. So falleth it out that, having indeed no right comedy in that comical part of our tragedy, we have nothing but scurrility; unworthy [160 of any chaste ears, or some extreme show of doltishness, indeed fit to lift up a loud laughter, and nothing else; where the whole tract of a comedy should be full of delight, as the tragedy should be still maintained in a well-raised admiration.

* * * * *

But I have lavished out too many words of this play-matter. I do it, because as they are excelling parts of poesy, so is there none so much used in Eng- [170 land, and none can be more pitifully abused; which, like an unmannerly daughter, showing a bad education, causeth her mother Poesy's honesty to be called in question.

Other sorts of poetry almost have we none, but that lyrical kind of songs and sonnets, which, the Lord if he gave us so good minds, how well it might be employed, and with how heavenly fruits, [180 both private and public, in singing the praises of the immortal beauty, the immortal goodness of that God who giveth us hands to write, and wits to conceive; of which we might well want words, but never matter; of which we could turn our eyes to nothing, but we should ever have new-budding occasions.

But truly, many of such writings as come under the banner of irresistible [190 love, if I were a mistress would never persuade me they were in love; so coldly they apply fiery speeches, as men that had rather read lovers' writings, and so caught up certain swelling phrases—which hang together like a man which once told me the wind was at northwest and by south, because he would be sure to name winds enough—than that in truth they feel those passions, which easily, as I [200 think, may be bewrayed by that same forcibleness, or energia (as the Greeks call it), of the writer. But let this be a sufficient, though short note, that we miss the right use of the material point of poesy.

* * * * *

But what! methinks I deserve to be pounded for straying from poetry to oratory. But both have such an affinity in this wordish consideration, that I [210 think this digression will make my meaning receive the fuller understanding: which is not to take upon me to teach poets how they should do, but only, finding myself sick among the rest, to show some one or two spots of the common infection grown among the most part of writers; that, acknowledging ourselves somewhat awry, we may bend to the right use both of matter and manner: whereto our language giveth us great occasion, being, indeed, capable of any excellent exercising of it.

I know some will say it is a mingled language. And why not so much the better, taking the best of both the other? Another will say it wanteth grammar. Nay, truly, it hath that praise that it wanteth not grammar. For grammar it might have, but it needs it not; being [230 so easy in itself, and so void of those cumbersome differences of cases, genders, moods, and tenses, which, I think, was a piece of the Tower of Babylon's curse, that a man should be put to school to learn his mother-tongue. But for the uttering sweetly and properly the conceits of the mind, which is the end of speech, that hath it equally with any other tongue in the world; and is particularly happy in compositions of two or three words together, near the Greek, far beyond the Latin,—which is one of the greatest beauties can be in a language.

Now of versifying there are two sorts, the one ancient, the other modern. The ancient marked the quantity of each syllable, and according to that, framed his verse; the modern observing only number, with some regard of the accent, [250 the chief life of it standeth in that like sounding of the words, which we call rime. Whether of these be the more excellent, would bear many speeches; the ancient no doubt more fit for music, both words and tune observing quantity; and more fit lively to express divers passions, by the low and lofty sound of the well-weighed syllable. The latter likewise with his rime striketh a certain music [260 to the ear; and, in fine, since it doth delight, though by another way, it obtaineth

the same purpose; there being in either, sweetness, and wanting in neither, majesty. Truly the English, before any other vulgar language I know, is fit for both sorts. For, for the ancient, the Italian is so full of vowels that it must ever be cumbered with elisions; the Dutch so, of the other side, with consonants, that they cannot yield the sweet sliding fit for a verse. The French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable saving two, called antepenultima, and little more hath the Spanish; and therefore very gracelessly may they use dactyls. The English is subject to none of these defects.

Now for rime, though we do not [280 observe quantity, yet we observe the accent very precisely, which other languages either cannot do, or will not do so absolutely. That cæsura, or breathing-place in the midst of the verse, neither Italian nor Spanish have, the French and we never almost fail of. Lastly, even the very rime itself the Italian cannot put in the last syllable, by the French named the masculine rime, but still in the next [290 to the last, which the French call the female, or the next before that, which the Italians term sdrucchiola. The example of the former is buono, suono; of the sdrucchiola is femina, semina. The French, of the other side, hath both the male, as bon, son, and the female, as plaise, taise; but the sdrucchiola he hath not. Where the English hath all three, as due, true; father, rather; motion, potion; with [300 much more which might be said, but that I find already the triflingness of this discourse is much too much enlarged.

So that since the ever praiseworthy poesy is full of virtue-breeding delightfulness, and void of no gift that ought to be in the noble name of learning; since the blames laid against it are either false or feeble; since the cause why it is not esteemed in England is the fault of [310 poet-apes, not poets; since, lastly, our tongue is most fit to honor poesy, and to be honored by poesy; I conjure you all that have had the evil luck to read this ink-wasting toy of mine, even in the name of the Nine Muses, no more to scorn the sacred mysteries of poesy; no more to laugh at the name of poets, as though they were next inheritors to fools; no more to jest at the reverend title of a rimer; but [320 to believe, . . . with me, that there are many mysteries contained in poetry which of purpose were written darkly, lest by profane wits it should be abused; to believe, with Landin, that they are so beloved of the gods that whatsoever they write proceeds of a divine fury; lastly, to believe themselves, when they tell you they will make you immortal by their verses. [330

Thus doing, your name shall flourish in the printers' shops. Thus doing, you shall be of kin to many a poetical preface. Thus doing, you shall be most fair, most rich, most wise, most all: you shall dwell upon superlatives. Thus doing, though you be Libertino patre natus, you shall suddenly grow Herculeus proles,

Si quid mea carmina possunt.

Thus doing, your soul shall be placed [340 with Dante's Beatrice or Virgil's Anchises.

But if (fie of such a but!) you be born so near the dull-making cataract of Nilus, that you cannot hear the planet-like music of poetry; if you have so earth-creeping a mind, that it cannot lift itself up to look to the sky of poetry, or rather, by a certain rustical disdain, will become such a mome as to be a Momus of poetry; then, though I will not wish unto [350 you the ass's ears of Midas, nor to be driven by a poet's verses, as Bubonax was, to hang himself; nor to be rimed to death, as is said to be done in Ireland; yet thus much curse I must send you in the behalf of all poets: that while you live you live in love, and never get favor for lacking skill of a sonnet; and when you die, your memory die from the earth for want of an epitaph. [360

SIR WALTER RALEIGH (1552?-1618)

THE LAST FIGHT OF THE REVENGE

Because the rumors are diversely spread, as well in England as in the low countries and elsewhere, of this late encounter between her Majesty's ships and the Armada of Spain; and that the Spaniards, according to their usual manner, fill the world with their vain-glorious vaunts, making great appearance of victories, when on the contrary themselves are most commonly and shamefully beaten and dis- [10 honored, thereby hoping to possess the ignorant multitude by anticipating and forerunning false reports: it is agreeable with all good reason (for manifestation of the truth, to overcome falsehood and untruth), that the beginning, continuance, and success of this late honorable encounter of Sir Richard Grenville, and other her Majesty's captains, with the Armada of Spain, should be truly set [20 down and published without partiality or false imaginations. And it is no marvel that the Spaniards should seek by false and slanderous pamphlets, advisos, and letters, to cover their own loss, and to derogate from others their due honors (especially in this fight, being performed far off), seeing they were not ashamed in the year 1588, when they purposed the invasion of this land, to publish in [30 sundry languages, in print, great victories (in words) which they pleaded to have obtained against this realm, and spread the same in a most false sort over all parts of France, Italy, and elsewhere. . . .

The Lord Thomas Howard, with six of her Majesty's ships, six victuallers of London, the bark Raleigh, and two or three pinnaces, riding at anchor near unto Flores, one of the westerly islands of [40 the Azores, the last of August in the afternoon, had intelligence by one Captain Middleton, of the approach of the Spanish Armada. Which Middleton, being in a very good sailer, had kept them company three days before, of good purpose both to discover their forces the more, as also to give advice to my Lord Thomas of their approach.

He had no sooner delivered the news [50 but the fleet was in sight. Many of our ships' companies were on shore in the island, some providing ballast for their ships, others filling of water and refreshing themselves from the land with such things as they could either for money or by force recover. By reason whereof our ships being all pestered, and rummaging, every thing out of order, very light for want of ballast. And that which [60] was most to our disadvantage, the one half part of the men of every ship sick and utterly unserviceable. For in the Revenge there were ninety diseased; in the Bona-venture, not so many in health as could handle her mainsail. For had not twenty men been taken out of a bark of Sir George Cary's, his being commanded to be sunk, and those appointed to her, she had hardly ever recovered England. [70] The rest, for the most part, were in little better state.

The names of her Majesty's ships were these, as followeth: the Defiance, which was Admiral; the Revenge, Vice Admiral; the Bonaventure, commanded by Captain Crosse; the Lion, by George Fenner; the Foresight, by Thomas Vavisor; and the Crane, by Duffield. The Foresight and the Crane being but small ships only; [80] the other were of middle size. The rest, besides the bark Raleigh, commanded by Captain Thin, were victuallers, and of small force or none.

The Spanish fleet, having shrouded their approach by reason of the island, were now so soon at hand as our ships had scarce time to weigh their anchors, but some of them were driven to let slip their cables and set sail. Sir Richard Gren- [90] ville was the last weighed, to recover the men that were upon the island, which otherwise had been lost. The Lord Thomas with the rest very hardly recovered the wind, which Sir Richard Grenville not being able to do, was persuaded by the master and others to cut his mainsail and cast about, and to trust to the sailing of his ship: for the squadron of Seville were on his weather bow. But Sir Richard [100] utterly refused to turn from the enemy, alleging that he would rather choose to die, than to dishonor himself, his country, and her Majesty's ship; persuading his company that he would pass through the two squadrons in despite of them, and enforce those of Seville to give him way. Which he performed upon divers of the foremost, who, as the mariners term it, sprang their luff, and fell under the [110] lee of the Revenge. But the other course had been the better, and might right well have been answered in so great an impossibility of prevailing. Notwithstanding out of the greatness of his mind he could not be persuaded.

In the meanwhile, as he attended those which were nearest him, the great San Philip, being in the wind of him, and coming towards him, becalmed his [120] sails in such sort as the ship could neither way nor feel the helm: so huge and high carged was the Spanish ship, being of a thousand and five hundred tons; who after laid the Revenge aboard. When he was thus bereft of his sails, the ships that were under his lee, luffing up, also laid him aboard; of which the next was the admiral of the Biscayans, a very mighty and puissant ship commanded by [130] Brittan Dona. The said Philip carried three tier of ordinance on a side, and eleven pieces in every tier. She shot eight forthright out of her chase, besides those of her stern ports.

After the Revenge was entangled with this Philip, four other boarded her, two on her larboard, and two on her starboard. The fight thus beginning at three of the clock in the afternoon continued very [140] terrible all that evening. But the great San Philip, having received the lower tier of the Revenge, discharged with cross-barshot, shifted herself with all diligence from her sides, utterly misliking her first entertainment. Some say that the ship foundered, but we cannot report it for truth, unless we were assured.

The Spanish ships were filled with companies of soldiers, in some two hun- [150] dred besides the mariners, in some five, in others eight hundred. In ours there were none at all besides the mariners, but the servants of the commanders and some few voluntary gentlemen only. After many interchanged volleys of great ordinance and small shot, the Spaniards deliberated to enter the Revenge, and made divers attempts, hoping to force her by the multitudes of their armed soldiers [160] and musketeers, but were still repulsed again and again, and at all times beaten back into their own ships or into the seas. In the beginning of the fight, the George Noble of London, having received some shot through her by the armados, fell under the lee of the Revenge, and asked Sir Richard what he would command him, being but one of the victuallers and of small force. Sir Richard bade him [170 save himself, and leave him to his fortune.

After the fight had thus without intermission continued while the day lasted and some hours of the night, many of our men were slain and hurt, and one of the great galleons of the Armada and the Admiral of the Hulks both sunk, and in many other of the Spanish ships great slaughter was made. Some write that [180 Sir Richard was very dangerously hurt almost in the beginning of the fight, and lay speechless for a time ere he recovered. But two of the Revenge's own company brought home in a ship of Lime from the islands, examined by some of the Lords and others, affirmed that he was never so wounded as that he forsook the upper deck, till an hour before midnight; and then being shot into the [190 body with a musket, as he was a-dressing was again shot into the head, and withal his surgeon wounded to death. This agreeth also with an examination, taken by Sir Francis Godolphin, of four other mariners of the same ship being returned, which examination the said Sir Francis sent unto master William Killigrew, of her Majesty's Privy Chamber.

But to return to the fight, the Span- [200 ish ships which attempted to board the Revenge, as they were wounded and beaten off, so always others came in their places, she having never less than two mighty galleons by her sides and aboard her. So that ere the morning, from three of the clock the day before there had fifteen several armados assailed her; and all so ill approved their entertainment, as they were by the break of day far more willing to hearken to a composition than hastily to make any more assaults or entries. But as the day increased, so our men decreased; and as the light grew more and more, by so much more grew our discomforts. For none appeared in sight but enemies, saving one small ship called the Pilgrim, commanded by Jacob Whiddon, who hovered all night to see the success; but in the morning, bearing with the [220

Revenge, was hunted like a hare among many ravenous hounds, but escaped.

All the powder of the Revenge to the last barrel was now spent, all her pikes broken, forty of her best men slain, and the most part of the rest hurt. In the beginning of the fight she had but one hundred free from sickness, and fourscore and ten sick, laid in hold upon the ballast. A small troop to man such a ship, [230 and a weak garrison to resist so mighty an army! By those hundred all was sustained, the volleys, boardings, and enterings of fifteen ships of war, besides those which beat her at large. On the contrary the Spanish were always supplied with soldiers brought from every squadron, all manner of arms, and powder at will. Unto ours there remained no comfort at all, no hope, no supply either of [240 ships, men, or weapons; the masts all beaten overboard, all her tackle cut asunder, her upper work altogether razed; and, in effect, evened she was with the water, but the very foundation or bottom of a ship, nothing being left overhead either for flight or defence.

Sir Richard finding himself in this distress, and unable any longer to make resistance,—having endured in this fif- [250 teen hours' fight the assault of fifteen several armados, all by turns aboard him, and by estimation eight hundred shot of great artillery, besides many assaults and entries, and that himself and the ship must needs be possessed by the enemy, who were now cast in a ring round about him, the Revenge not able to move one way or other but as she was moved by the waves and billow of the sea,—com- [260 manded the master gunner, whom he knew to be a most resolute man, to split and sink the ship, that thereby nothing might remain of glory or victory to the Spaniards, seeing in so many hours' fight, and with so great a navy, they were not able to take her, having had fifteen hours' time, fifteen thousand men, and fifty and three sail of men-of-war to perform it withal; and persuaded the company, or as [270 many as he could induce, to yield themselves unto God, and to the mercy of none else, but, as they had, like valiant resolute men, repulsed so many enemies, they should not now shorten the honor of their nation by prolonging their own lives for a few hours or a few days.

The master gunner readily condescended, and divers others. But the Captain and the Master were of another [280] opinion and besought Sir Richard to have care of them, alleging that the Spaniard would be as ready to entertain a composition as they were willing to offer the same, and that there being divers sufficient and valiant men yet living, and whose wounds were not mortal, they might do their country and prince acceptable service hereafter. And (that where Sir Richard had alleged that [290] the Spaniards should never glory to have taken one ship of her Majesty's, seeing that they had so long and so notably defended themselves) they answered that the ship had six foot of water in hold, three shot under water which were so weakly stopped as, with the first working of the sea, she must needs sink, and was besides so crushed and bruised as she could never be removed out of the place. [300]

And as the matter was thus in dispute, and Sir Richard refusing to hearken to any of those reasons, the Master of the Revenge (while the Captain won unto him the greater party) was convoyed aboard the General Don Alfonso Bassan. Who finding none over hasty to enter the Revenge again, doubting lest Sir Richard would have blown them up and himself, and perceiving by the report of the [310] Master of the Revenge his dangerous disposition, yielded that all their lives should be saved, the company sent for England, and the better sort to pay such reasonable ransom as their estate would bear, and in the mean season to be free from galley or imprisonment. To this he so much the rather condescended, as well, as I have said, for fear of further loss and mischief to themselves, as also for the desire he [320] had to recover Sir Richard Grenville; whom for his notable valor he seemed greatly to honor and admire.

When this answer was returned, and that safety of life was promised, the common sort being now at the end of their peril, the most drew back from Sir Richard and the gunner, being no hard matter to dissuade men from death to life. The master gunner finding himself and Sir [330] Richard thus prevented and mastered by the greater number, would have slain himself with a sword had he not been by force withheld and locked into his cabin. Then the General sent many boats aboard the Revenge, and divers of our men, fearing Sir Richard's disposition, stole away aboard the General and other ships. Sir Richard, thus overmatched, was sent unto by Alfonso Bassan to remove [340] out of the Revenge, the ship being marvellous unsavory, filled with blood and bodies of dead and wounded men like a slaughter-house. Sir Richard answered that he might do with his body what he list, for he esteemed it not, and as he was carried out of the ship he swooned, and reviving again, desired the company to pray for him. The General used Sir Richard with all humanity, and left [350] nothing unattempted that tended to his recovery, highly commending his valor and worthiness, and greatly bewailed the danger wherein he was, being unto them a rare spectacle, and a resolution seldom approved, to see one ship turn toward so many enemies, to endure the charge and boarding of so many huge armados, and to resist and repel the assaults and entries of so many soldiers. All which, and [360] more, is confirmed by a Spanish captain of the same Armada, and a present actor in the fight, who, being severed from the rest in a storm, was by the Lion, of London, a small ship, taken, and is now prisoner in London.

The General Commander of the Armada was Don Alfonso Bassan, brother to the Marquis of Santa Cruce. The Admiral of the Biscayan squadron was Britan [370] Dona; of the squadron of Seville, Marquis of Arumburch. The Hulks and Fly-boats were commanded by Luis Cutino. There were slain and drowned in this fight well near two thousand of the enemies, and two especial Commanders, Don Luis de Sant John, and Don George de Prunaria de Malaga, as the Spanish Captain confesseth, besides divers others of special account, whereof as yet report is not made. [380]

The Admiral of the Hulks and the Ascension of Seville were both sunk by the side of the Revenge; one other recovered the road of Saint Michaels, and sunk also there; a fourth ran herself with the shore to save her men. Sir Richard died, as it is said, the second or third day aboard the General, and was by them greatly bewailed. What became of his body, whether it was buried in the sea [390 or on the land, we know not: the comfort that remaineth to his friends is, that he hath ended his life honorably in respect of the reputation won to his nation and country, and of the same to his posterity, and that, being dead, he hath not outlived his own honor. . . .

A few days after the fight was ended, and the English prisoners dispersed into the Spanish and Indian ships, there [400 arose so great a storm from the west and northwest that all the fleet was dispersed, as well the Indian fleet which were then come unto them, as the rest of the Armada which attended their arrival. Of which, fourteen sail, together with the Revenge (and in her two hundred Spaniards), were cast away upon the isle of St. Michaels. So it pleased them to honor the burial of that renowned ship the Revenge, not [410 suffering her to perish alone, for the great honor she achieved in her lifetime. . . .

To conclude, it hath ever to this day pleased God to prosper and defend her Majesty, to break the purposes of malicious enemies, of forsworn traitors, and of unjust practises and invasions. She hath ever been honored of the worthiest kings, served by faithful subjects, and shall by the favor of God resist, repel, and [420 confound all whatsoever attempts against her sacred person or kingdom. In the meantime, let the Spaniard and traitor vaunt of their success; and we, her true and obedient vassals, guided by the shining light of her virtues, shall always love her, serve her, and obey her to the end of our lives.

FRANCIS BACON (1561-1626)

From THE ESSAYS

ESSAY I.—OF TRUTH

What is truth? said jesting Pilate, and would not stay for an answer. Certainly there be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free-will in thinking, as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them as was in [10 those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labor which men take in finding out of truth, nor again that when it is found it imposeth upon men's thoughts, that doth bring lies in favor; but a natural though corrupt love of the lie itself. One of the later school of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand to think what should be in it, that men should love lies, where [20 neither they make for pleasure, as with poets, nor for advantage, as with the merchant, but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell: this same truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not show the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-lights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that showeth best by day; but it will not rise to the price [30 of a diamond or carbuncle, that showeth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt, that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to them- [40 selves? One of the Fathers, in great severity, called poesy vinum demonum, because it filleth the imagination, and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in and settleth in it, that doth the hurt, such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which [50 only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his sabbath work, ever since, is the illumination of [60 his Spirit. First he breathed light upon the face of the matter or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man, and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. The poet that beautified the sect that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea: a pleasure to stand in the window of a [70 castle, and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of Truth (a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene), and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below: so always that this prospect be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth, to have a man's [80 mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

To pass from theological and philosophical truth, to the truth of civil business: it will be acknowledged, even by those that practise it not, that clear and round dealing is the honor of man's nature: and that mixture of falsehood is like alloy in coin of gold and silver; which may make the metal work the better, but it em- [90 baseth it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious. And therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason, why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace and such an odious charge? Saith he, If it be [100 well weighed, to say that a man lieth, is as much to say as that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men. For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men; it being foretold, that when Christ cometh, he shall not [110 find faith upon the earth.

ESSAY V.—OF ADVERSITY

It was an high speech of Seneca (after the manner of the Stoics): That the good things which belong to prosperity are to be wished; but the good things that belong to adversity are to be admired. Bona rerum secundarum optabilia, adversarum mirabilia. Certainly if miracles be the command over nature, they appear most in adversity. It is yet a higher speech of his than the other (much too high for [10 a heathen): It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God. Vere magnum, habere fragilitatem hominis, securitatem Dei. This would have done better in poesy, where transcendences are more allowed. And the poets indeed have been busy with it; for it is in effect the thing which is figured in that strange fiction of the ancient poets, which seemeth not to be without mys- [20 tery: nay, and to have some approach to the state of a Christian: that Hercules, when he went to unbind Prometheus (by whom human nature is represented), sailed the length of the great ocean in an earthen pot or pitcher: lively describing Christian resolution, that saileth in the frail bark of the flesh through the waves of the world. But to speak in a mean. The virtue of prosperity is temperance, [30 the virtue of adversity is fortitude, which in morals is the more heroical virtue. Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New, which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favor. Yet even in the Old Testament, if you lisen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs as carols; and the pencil of the Holy Ghost hath [40 labored more in describing the afflictions of Job than the felicities of Salomon. Prosperity is not without many fears and distastes; and adversity is not without comforts and hopes. We see in needle-works and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a sad and solemn ground, than to have a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground: judge therefore of the pleasure of the [50 heart by the pleasure of the eye. Certainly virtue is like precious odors, most fragrant when they are incensed or crushed: for prosperity doth best discover vice; but adversity doth best discover virtue.

ESSAY VII.—OF MARRIAGE AND SINGLE LIFE

He that hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men, which both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason that those that have children should have [10] greatest care of future times; unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are, who though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences. Nay, there are some other that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay more, there are some foolish rich covetous men that take a pride in having no [20] children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk, Such an one is a great rich man, and another except o it, Yea, but he hath a great charge of children; as if it were an abatement to his riches. But the most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty; especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go [30] near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants; but not always best subjects: for they are light to run away; and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A single life doth well with churchmen, for charity will hardly water the ground where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates, for if they be [40] facile and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives put men in mind of their wives and children; and I think the despising of marriage amongst the Turks maketh the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity; and single men, though they be many times more [50] charitable, because their means are less exhaust, yet, on the other side, they are more cruel and hard-hearted (good to make severe inquisitors), because their tenderness is not so oft called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands; as was said of Ulysses, Vetulam suam prætulit immortalitati. Chaste women are often proud and froward, as pre- [60] suming upon the merit of their chastity. It is one of the best bonds both of chastity and obedience in the wife, if she think her husband wise; which she will never do if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses; companions for middle age; and old men's nurses. So as a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will. But yet he was reputed one of the wise men, that made answer to [70] the question, when a man should marry?—A young man not yet, an elder man not at all. It is often seen that bad husbands have very good wives; whether it be that it raiseth the price of their husband's kindness when it comes; or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be [80] sure to make good their own folly.

ESSAY XI.—OF GREAT PLACE

Men in great place are thrice servants: servants of the sovereign or state, servants of fame; and servants of business. So as they have no freedom, neither in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire, to seek power and to lose liberty; or to seek power over others and to lose power over a man's self. The rising unto place is laborious, and by pains men come to greater [10] pains; and it is sometimes base, and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery; and the regress is either a downfall, or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing. Cum non

sis qui fueris, non esse cur velis vivere. Nay, retire men cannot when they would; neither will they when it were reason; but are impatient of privateness, even in age and sickness, which require the [20 shadow: like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn. Certainly, great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions, to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it: but if they think with themselves what other men think of them, and that other men would fain be as they are, then they are [30 happy as it were by report, when perhaps they find the contrary within. For they are the first that find their own griefs, though they be the last that find their own faults. Certainly, men in great fortunes are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business they have no time to tend their health, either of body or mind. Illi mors gravis incubat, qui notus nimis omnibus, ignotus [40 moritur sibi. In place there is licence to do good and evil; whereof the latter is a curse: for in evil the best condition is not to will, the second not to can. But power to do good is the true and lawful end of aspiring. For good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power and place, as the vantage [50 and commanding ground. Merit and good works is the end of man's motion; and conscience of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest. For if a man can be partaker of God's theatre, he shall likewise be partaker of God's rest. Et conversus Deus, ut aspiceret opera quæ fecerunt manus suæ, vidit quod omnia essent bona nimis; and then the Sabbath. In the discharge of thy place, set before thee [60 the best examples; for imitation is a globe of precepts. And after a time set before thee thine own example; and examine thyself strictly, whether thou didst not best at first. Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Reform, therefore, without bravery or scandal of [70 former times and persons; but yet set it down to thyself as well to create good precedents as to follow them. Reduce things to the first institution, and observe wherein and how they have degenerate; but yet ask counsel of both times; of the ancient time, what is best; and of the latter time, what is fittest. Seek to make thy course regular, that men may know beforehand what they may expect; but [80 be not too positive and peremptory, and express thyself well when thou digress from thy rule. Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction: and rather assume thy right in silence and de facto, than voice it with claims and challenges. Preserve likewise the rights of inferior places; and think it more honor to direct in chief than to be busy in all. Embrace and invite [90 helps and advices touching the execution of thy place; and do not drive away such as bring thee information as meddlers, but accept of them in good part. The vices of authority are chiefly four: delays, corruption, roughness, and facility. For delays: give easy access; keep times appointed; go through with that which is in hand; and interlace not business but of necessity. For corruption: do not only [100 bind thine own hands or thy servants' hands from taking, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering. For integrity used doth the one; but integrity professed, and with a manifest detestation of bribery, doth the other. And avoid not only the fault, but the suspicion. Whosoever is found variable, and changeth manifestly without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption. Therefore always when [110 thou changest thine opinion or course, profess it plainly and declare it, together with the reasons that move thee to change; and do not think to steal it. A servant or a favorite, if he be inward, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. For roughness, it is a needless cause of discontent: severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. [120 Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting. As for facility, it is worse than bribery. For bribes come but now and then; but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without. As Salomon saith: To respect persons is not good; for such a man will transgress for a piece of bread. It is most true that was anciently spoken, A place showeth the man: and it sheweth some to [130 the better, and some to the worse. Omnium consensu capax imperii, nisi imperasset, saith Tacitus of Galba; but of Vespasian he saith, Solus imperantium Vespasianus mutatus in melius: though the one was meant of sufficiency, the other of manners and affection. It is an assured sign of a worthy and generous spirit, whom honor amends. For honor is, or should be, the place of virtue; and [140 as in nature things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. All rising to great place is by a winding stair; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst he is in the rising, and to balance himself when he is placed. Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly; for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure [150 be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to look to be called. Be not too sensible or too remembering of thy place in conversation and private answers to suitors; but let it rather be said, When he sits in place he is another man.

ESSAY XXIII.—OF WISDOM FOR A MAN'S SELF

An ant is a wise creature for itself, but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard or garden. And certainly men that are great lovers of themselves waste the public. Divide with reason between self-love and society; and be so true to thyself as thou be not false to others, specially to thy king and country. It is a poor centre of a man's actions, himself. It is right earth. For that only stands fast upon [10 his own centre; whereas all things that have affinity with the heavens move upon the centre of another, which they benefit. The referring of all to a man's self is more tolerable in a sovereign prince; because themselves are not only themselves, but their good and evil is at the peril of the public fortune. But it is a desperate evil in a servant to a prince, or a citizen in a republic. For whatsoever affairs pass [20 such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state. Therefore let princes, or states, choose such servants as have not this mark; except they mean their service should be made but the accessory. That which maketh the effect more pernicious is that all proportion is lost. It were disproportion enough for the servant's good [30 to be preferred before the master's; but yet it is a greater extreme, when a little good of the servant shall carry things against a great good of the master's. And yet that is the case of bad officers, treasurers, ambassadors, generals, and other false and corrupt servants; which set a bias upon their bowl, of their own petty ends and envies, to the overthrow of their master's great and important affairs. [40 And for the most part, the good such servants receive is after the model of their own fortune; but the hurt they sell for that good is after the model of their master's fortune. And certainly it is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs; and yet these men many times hold credit with their masters, because their study is but to please them [50 and profit themselves; and for either respect they will abandon the good of their affairs.

Wisdom for a man's self is, in many branches thereof, a depraved thing. It is the wisdom of rats, that will be sure to leave a house somewhat before it fall. It is the wisdom of the fox, that thrusts out the badger, who digged and made room for him. It is the wisdom of crocodiles, that shed tears when they would devour. But that which is specially to be noted is, that those which (as Cicero says of Pompey) are sui amantes sine rivali, are many times unfortunate. And whereas they have all their time sacrificed to themselves, they become in the end themselves sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned. [70

ESSAY XLII.—OF YOUTH AND AGE

A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time. But that happeneth rarely. Generally, youth is like the first cogitations, not so wise as the second. For there is a youth in thoughts as well as in ages. And yet the invention of young men is more lively than that of the old; and imaginations stream into their minds better, and, as it were, more divinely. Natures that [10 have much heat, and great and violent desires and perturbations, are not ripe for action till they have passed the meridian of their years: as it was with Julius Cæsar, and Septimius Severus. Of the latter of whom it is said, Juventutem egil erroribus, imo furoribus, plenam. And yet he was the ablest emperor, almost, of all the list. But reposed natures may do well in youth. As it is seen in Au- [20 gustus Cæsar, Cosmus, Duke of Florence, Gaston de Foix, and others. On the other side, heat and vivacity in age is an excellent composition for business. Young men are fitter to invent than to judge; fitter for execution than for counsel; and fitter for new projects than for settled business. For the experience of age, in things that fall within the compass of it, directeth them; but in new things, [30 abuseth them. The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold; stir more than they can quiet; fly to the end, without consideration of the means and degrees; pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon ab- [40 surdly; care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences; use extreme remedies at first; and, that which doubleth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Men of age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon, and seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a medioc- [50 rity of success. Certainly, it is good to compound employments of both; for that will be good for the present, because the virtues of either age may correct the defects of both; and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors; and, lastly, good for extern accidents, because authority followeth old men, and favor and popularity youth. But for the moral part, [60 perhaps youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politic. A certain rabbin, upon the text, Your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams, inferreth that young men are admitted nearer to God than old, because vision is a clearer revelation than a dream. And certainly, the more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather [70 in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. There be some have an over-early ripeness in their years, which fadeth betimes. These are, first, such as have brittle wits, the edge whereof is soon turned; such as was Hermogenes the rhetorician, whose books are exceeding subtile, who afterwards waxed stupid. A second sort is of those that have some natural disposi- [80 tions which have better grace in youth than in age; such as is a fluent and luxuriant speech, which becomes youth well, but not age: so Tully saith of Hortensius, Idem manebat, neque idem docebat. The third is of such as take too high a strain at the first, and are magnanimous more than tract of years can uphold. As was Scipio Africanus, of whom Livy saith in effect, Ultima primis cedebant. [90

ESSAY XLVI.—OF GARDENS

God Almighty first planted a garden. And indeed it is the purest of human pleasures. It is the greatest refreshment to the spirits of man; without which, buildings and palaces are but gross handi-works: and a man shall ever see that when ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. I do hold it, in the [10

royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year; in which, severally, things of beauty may be then in season. For December and January and the latter part of November, you must take such things as are green all winter: holly, ivy, bays, juniper, cypress-trees, yew, pine-apple-trees, fir-trees, rosemary, lavender, periwinkle,—the white, the purple, and the blue,— [20] germander, flags, orange-trees, lemon-trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved, and sweet marjoram, warm set. There followeth, for the latter part of January and February, the mezereon-tree, which then blossoms, crocus vernus, both the yellow and the gray, primroses, anemones, the early tulippa, hyacinthus orientalis, chamairis, fritillaria. For March, there come violets, specially the single blue, which [30] are the earliest, the yellow daffodil, the daisy, the almond-tree in blossom, the peach-tree in blossom, the cornelian-tree in blossom, sweet briar. In April follow the double white violet, the wall-flower, the stock-gillyflower, the cowslip, flower-delices and lilies of all natures, rosemary flowers, the tulippa, the double peony, the pale daffodil, the French honeysuckle, the cherry-tree in blossom, the dam- [40] masin and plum-trees in blossom, the white-thorn in leaf, the lilac-tree. In May and June come pinks of all sorts, specially the blush pink, roses of all kinds, except the musk, which comes later, honeysuckles, strawberries, bugloss, columbine, the French marygold, flos Africanus, cherry-tree in fruit, ribes, figs in fruit, rasps, vine flowers, lavender in flowers, the sweet satyrian, with the [50] white flower, herba muscaria, lilium convallium, the apple-tree in blossom. In July come gillyflowers of all varieties, musk-roses, the lime-tree in blossom, early pears and plums in fruit, ginnitings, quadlins. In August come plums of all sorts in fruit, pears, apricocks, barberries, filberts, musk-melons, monks-hoods of all colors. In September come grapes, apples, poppies of all colors, peaches, [60] melocotones, nectarines, cornelians, wardens, quinces. In October and the beginning of November come services, medlars, bullises, roses cut or removed to come late, hollyhocks, and such like. These particulars are for the climate of London; but my meaning is perceived, that you may have ver perpetuum, as the place affords.

And because the breath of flowers is [70] far sweeter in the air (where it comes and goes, like the warbling of music) than in the hand, therefore nothing is more fit for that delight, than to know what be the flowers and plants that do best perfume the air. Roses, damask and red, are fast flowers of their smells, so that you may walk by a whole row of them, and find nothing of their sweetness; yea, though it be in a morning's dew. Bays like- [80] wise yield no smell as they grow. Rosemary little; nor sweet marjoram. That which above all others yields the sweetest smell in the air, is the violet; specially the white double violet, which comes twice a year, about the middle of April, and about Bartholomewtide. Next to that is the musk-rose. Then the strawberry-leaves dying, which [yield] a most excellent cordial smell. Then the flower [90] of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster in the first coming forth. Then sweet briar. Then wall-flowers, which are very delightful to be set under a parlor or lower chamber window. Then pinks and gillyflowers, specially the matted pink and clove gillyflower. Then the flowers of the lime-tree. Then the honeysuckles, so they be somewhat afar [100] off. Of bean flowers I speak not, because they are field flowers. But those which perfume the air most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three: that is, burnet, wild thyme, and water-mints. Therefore you are to set whole alleys of them, to have the pleasure when you walk or tread.

* * * * *

For fountains, they are a great [110] beauty and refreshment; but pools mar all, and make the garden unwholesome and full of flies and frogs. Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one, that sprinkleth or spouteth water; the other, a fair receipt of water, of some thirty or forty foot square, but without fish, or slime, or mud. For the first, the ornaments of images gilt, or of marble, which are in use, do well: but the main [120 matter is, so to convey the water, as it never stay, either in the bowls or in the cistern; that the water be never by rest discolored, green or red or the like, or gather any mossiness or putrefaction. Besides that, it is to be cleansed every day by the hand. Also some steps up to it, and some fine pavement about it, doth well. As for the other kind of fountain, which we may call a bathing pool, it [130 may admit much curiosity and beauty, wherewith we will not trouble ourselves: as, that the bottom be finely paved, and with images; the sides likewise; and withal embellished with colored glass, and such things of lustre; encompassed also with fine rails of low statues. But the main point is the same which we mentioned in the former kind of fountain; which is, that the water be in perpetual motion, [140 fed by a water higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged away under ground, by some equality of bores, that it stay little. And for fine devices, of arching water without spilling, and making it rise in several forms (of feathers, drinking glasses, canopies, and the like), they be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health and sweetness. [150

* * * * *

ESSAY L.—OF STUDIES

Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To [10 spend too much time in studies is sloth; to use them too much for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at-large, except they be bounded in by experience. [20 Crafty men contemn studies; simple men admire them; and wise men use them: for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute; nor to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be [30 chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others; but that would be only in the less important arguments, and the meaner sort of books, else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. [40 Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets witty; the mathematics subtile; natural philosophy deep; moral, grave; [50 logic and rhetoric able to contend. Abeunt studia in mores. Nay, there is no stond or impediment in the wit, but may be wrought out by fit studies: like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises. Bowling is good for the stone and reins; shooting for the lungs and breast; gentle walking for the stomach; riding for the head; and the like. So if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the [60 mathematics; for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again: if his wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen; for they are cymini sectores: if he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers' cases: so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. [70

PURITANS AND CAVALIERS

CAROLINE SONG WRITERS

GEORGE WITHER (1588-1667)

SHALL I, WASTING IN DESPAIR

Shall I, wasting in despair,
Die, because a woman's fair?
Or make pale my cheeks with care,
'Cause another's rosy are?
Be she fairer than the day,
Or the flow'ry meads in May,
If she be not so to me,
What care I how fair she be?

Should my heart be grieved or pined,
'Cause I see a woman kind?
Or a well disposed nature
Joinèd with a lovely feature?
Be she meeker, kinder than Turtle dove, or pelican,
If she be not so to me,
What care I how kind she be?

Shall a woman's virtues move
Me to perish for her love?
Or her well deserving known,
Make me quite forget mine own?
Be she with that goodness blest
Which may gain her name of best,
If she be not such to me,
What care I how good she be?

'Cause her fortune seems too high,
Shall I play the fool and die?
Those that bear a noble mind,
Where they want of riches find,
Think, "What, with them, they would do
That, without them, dare to woo!"
And unless that mind I see,
What care I though great she be?

Great, or good, or kind, or fair,
I will ne'er the more despair!

If she love me (this believe!) 35
I will die, ere she shall grieve;
If she slight me when I woo,
I can scorn, and let her go;
For if she be not for me,
What care I for whom she be? 46

THOMAS CAREW (1598?-1639?)

ASK ME NO MORE WHERE JOVE BESTOWS

Ask me no more where Jove bestows,
When June is past, the fading rose;
For in your beauty's orient deep
These flowers, as in their causes, sleep.

Ask me no more whither do stray 5
The golden atoms of the day,
For, in pure love, heaven did prepare
Those powders to enrich your hair.

Ask me no more whither doth haste 15
The nightingale when May is past;
For in your sweet dividing throat
She winters, and keeps warm her note.

Ask me no more where those stars light 20
That downwards fall in dead of night,
For in your eyes they sit, and there 15
Fixèd become as in their sphere.

Ask me no more if east or west
The phoenix builds her spicy nest;
For unto you at last she flies, 20
And in your fragrant bosom dies.

HE THAT LOVES A ROSY CHEEK

He that loves a rosy cheek
Or a coral lip admires,
Or from star-like eyes doth seek Fuel to maintain his fires;
As old Time makes these decay, 5
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
 Gentle thoughts, and calm desires,
 Hearts with equal love combined,
 Kindle never-dying fires; 10
 Where these are not, I despise
 Lovely cheeks or lips or eyes.

No tears, Celia, now shall win
 My resolved heart to return;
 I have searched thy soul within 15
 And find naught but pride and scorn;
 I have learned thy arts, and now
 Can disdain as much as thou.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING (1609-1642)

CONSTANCY

Out upon it, I have loved
 Three whole days together!
 And am like to love three more,
 If it prove fair weather.

Time shall moult away his wings 5
 Ere he shall discover
 In the whole wide world again
 Such a constant lover.

But the spite on't is, no praise
 Is due at all to me: 10
 Love with me had made no stays,
 Had it any been but she.

Had it any been but she,
 And that very face,
 There had been at least ere this 15
 A dozen dozen in her place.

WHY SO PALE AND WAN, FOND LOVER?

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
 Prithee, why so pale?
 Will, when looking well can't move her,
 Looking ill prevail?
 Prithee, why so pale? 5

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
 Prithee, why so mute?
 Will, when speaking well can't win her,
 Saying nothing do 't?
 Prithee, why so mute? 10

Quit, quit for shame! This will not move,
 This cannot take her.
 If of herself she will not love,
 Nothing can make her:
 The devil take her! 15

RICHARD LOVELACE (1618-1658)

TO LUCASTA, ON GOING TO THE WARS

Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind,
 That from the nunnery
 Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind
 To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase, 5
 The first foe in the field;
 And with a stronger faith embrace
 A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
 As you too shall adore; 10
 I could not love thee, dear, so much,
 Loved I not honor more.

TO ALTHEA, FROM PRISON

When Love with unconfinèd wings
 Hovers within my gates,
 And my divine Althea brings
 To whisper at the grates;
 When I lie tangled in her hair 5
 And fettered to her eye,
 The gods that wanton in the air
 Know no such liberty.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
 With no allaying Thames, 10
 Our careless heads with roses bound,
 Our hearts with loyal flames,
 When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
 When healths and draughts go free,
 Fishes that tinkle in the deep 15
 Know no such liberty.

When, like committed¹ linnets, I
 With shriller throat shall sing
 The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
 And glories of my king; 20

¹ caged.

When I shall voice aloud how good
He is, how great should be,
Enlargèd winds, that curl the flood,
Know no such liberty.

Stone walls do not a prison make, 25
Nor iron bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage;
If I have freedom in my love,
And in my soul am free, 30
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty.

JAMES SHIRLEY (1596-1666)

A DIRGE

The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate;
Death lays his icy hand on kings:
Sceptre and crown 5
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill; 10
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still:
Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath
When they, pale captives, creep to death. 16

The garlands wither on your brow;
Then boast no more your mighty deeds;
Upon Death's purple altar now
See where the victor-victim bleeds: 20
Your heads must come
To the cold tomb;
Only the actions of the just Smell sweet, and blossom in their dust.

ROBERT HERRICK (1591-1674)

THE ARGUMENT OF HIS BOOK

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds and
bowers,
Of April, May, of June and July-flowers;

I sing of May-poles, hock-carts, wassails,
wakes,
Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal cakes;
I write of youth, of love, and have access 5
By these to sing of cleanly wantonness;
I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,
Of balm, of oil, of spice and ambergris;
I sing of times trans-shifting, and I write
How roses first came red and lilies white;
I write of groves, of twilights, and I sing 10
The court of Mab, and of the Fairy King
I write of hell; I sing (and ever shall)
Of heaven, and hope to have it after all.

UPON THE LOSS OF HIS MISTRESSES

I have lost, and lately, these Many dainty mistresses:
Stately Julia, prime of all;
Sapho next, a principal;
Smooth Anthea, for a skin 5
White and heaven-like crystalline;
Sweet Electra, and the choice
Myrha, for the lute and voice.
Next, Corinna, for her wit,
And the graceful use of it; 10
With Perilla: all are gone,
Only Herrick's left alone,
For to number sorrow by Their departures hence, and die.

CORINNA'S GOING A-MAYING

Get up, get up for shame, the blooming
morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.
See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colors through the air:
Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see 5
The dew bespangling herb and tree.
Each flower has wept and bowed toward the east
Above an hour since: yet you not dressed;
Nay! not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins said 10
And sung their thankful hymns, 'tis sin,
Nay, profanation, to keep in,
Whenas a thousand virgins on this day
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in
May.

Rise and put on your foliage, and be seen 15
 To come forth, like the spring-time, fresh and green,
 And sweet as Flora. Take no care
 For jewels for your gown or hair:
 Fear not; the leaves will strew
 Gems in abundance upon you: 20
 Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
 Against you come, some orient pearls unwept;
 Come and receive them while the light
 Hangs on the dew-locks of the night:
 And Titan¹ on the eastern hill 25
 Retires himself, or else stands still Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
 Few beads² are best when once we go a-Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come, and, coming,
 mark
 How each field turns a street, each street
 a park 30
 Made green and trimmed with trees;
 see how
 Devotion gives each house a bough
 Or branch: each porch, each door ere
 this
 An ark, a tabernacle is,
 Made up of white-thorn, neatly inter-wove; 35
 As if here were those cooler shades of love.
 Can such delights be in the street
 And open fields and we not see't?
 Come, we'll abroad; and let's obey
 The proclamation made for May: 40
 And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
 But, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

There's not a budding boy or girl this day
 But is got up, and gone to bring in May.
 A deal of youth, ere this, is come 45
 Back, and with white-thorn laden home.
 Some have despatched their cakes and cream
 Before that we have left to dream:
 And some have wept, and wooed, and plighted troth,
 And chose their priest, ere we can cast off
 sloth: 50
 Many a green-gown has been given;
 Many a kiss, both odd and even:

¹ the sun² prayers

Many a glance too has been sent
 From out the eye, love's firmament;
 Many a jest told of the keys betraying 55
 This night, and locks picked, yet we're not a-Maying.

Come, let us go while we are in our prime;
 And take the harmless folly of the time.
 We shall grow old apace, and die
 Before we know our liberty. 60
 Our life is short, and our days run
 As fast away as does the sun;
 And, as a vapor or a drop of rain,
 Once lost, can ne'er be found again,
 So when or you or I are made 65
 A fable, song, or fleeting shade,
 All love, all liking, all delight
 Lies drowned with us in endless night.
 Then while time serves, and we are but decaying.
 Come, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying. 70

TO THE VIRGINS, TO MAKE MUCH OF TIME

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
 Old Time is still a-flying;
 And this same flower that smiles to-day,
 To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun, 5
 The higher he's a-getting,
 The sooner will his race be run,
 And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
 When youth and blood are warmer; 10
 But being spent, the worse and worst Times still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time,
 And while ye may, go marry;
 For, having lost but once your prime, 15
 You may forever tarry.

HOW ROSES CAME RED

Roses at first were white,
 Till they could not agree,
 Whether my Sapho's breast
 Or they more white should be.

But being vanquished quite,
A blush their cheeks bespread;
Since which, believe the rest,
The roses first came red.

TO DAFFODILS

Fair daffodils, we weep to see
You haste away so soon;
As yet the early rising sun
Has not attained his noon.

Stay, stay,
Until the hasting day
Has run
But to the even-song;
And, having prayed together, we
Will go with you along.

We have short time to stay as you;
We have as short a spring;
As quick a growth to meet decay,
As you, or anything.

We die
As your hours do, and dry
Away,
Like to the summer's rain;
Or as the pearls of morning's dew,
Ne'er to be found again.

NIGHT-PIECE, TO JULIA

Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee,
The shooting stars attend thee;
And the elves also,
Whose little eyes glow
Like the sparks of fire, befriend thee.

No Will-o'-th'-Wisp mis-light thee,
Nor snake nor slow-worm bite thee;
But on, on thy way,
Not making a stay,
Since ghost there's none to affright thee.

Let not the dark thee cumber;
What though the moon does slumber?
The stars of the night
Will lend thee their light,
Like tapers clear without number.

Then, Julia, let me woo thee,
Thus, thus, to come unto me;
And when I shall meet Thy silvery feet
My soul I'll pour into thee.

UPON JULIA'S CLOTHES

Whenas in silks my Julia goes,
Then, then, methinks, how sweetly flows
The liquefaction of her clothes.

Next, when I cast mine eyes, and see
That brave vibration, each way free,
Oh, how that glittering taketh me!

AN ODE FOR BEN JONSON

Ah, Ben!
Say how or when Shall we, thy guests,
Meet at those lyric feasts,
Made at the Sun,
The Dog, the Triple Tun;
Where we such clusters had,
As made us nobly wild, not mad?
And yet each verse of thine
Out-did the meat out-did the frolic wine.

My Ben!
Or come again,
Or send to us
Thy wit's great overplus;
But teach us yet
Wisely to husband it,
Lest we that talent spend;
And having once brought to an end
That precious stock, the store
Of such a wit the world should have no
more.

GRACE FOR A CHILD

Here, a little child, I stand,
Heaving up my either hand:
Cold as paddocks though they be,
Here I lift them up to thee,
For a benison to fall
On our meat, and on us all. Amen.

TO KEEP A TRUE LENT

Is this a fast, to keep
The larder lean,
And clean
From fat of veals and sheep?

Then Money came, and chinking still,
 "What tune is this, poor man?" said he;
 "I heard in music you had skill;" 11
 But Thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then came brave Glory puffing by
 In silks that whistled, who but he!
 He scarce allowed me half an eye; 15
 But Thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then came quick Wit and Conversation,
 And he would needs a comfort be,
 And, to be short, make an oration:
 But Thou shalt answer, Lord, for me. 20

Yet when the hour of Thy design
 To answer these fine things shall come,
 Speak not at large; say, I am Thine,
 And then they have their answer home.

THE PULLEY

When God at first made man,
 Having a glass of blessings standing by;
 "Let us," said He, "pour on him all we can:
 Let the world's riches, which dispersèd
 lie,
 Contract into a span." 5

So Strength first made a way;
 Then Beauty flowed; then Wisdom, Honor,
 Pleasure.
 When almost all was out, God made a
 stay,
 Perceiving that alone, of all His treasure,
 Rest in the bottom lay. 10

"For if I should," said He,
 "Bestow this jewel also on My creature,
 He would adore My gifts instead of
 Me,
 And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature;
 So both should losers be. 15

"Yet let him keep the rest,
 But keep them with repining restless-
 ness;
 Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
 If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
 May toss him to My breast." 20

RICHARD CRASHAW (1613?-1649)

IN THE HOLY NATIVITY OF OUR LORD GOD

A HYMN SUNG AS BY THE SHEPHERDS

CHORUS

Come, we shepherds, whose blest sight
 Hath met Love's noon in Nature's night;
 Come, lift we up our loftier song
 And wake the sun that lies too long.

To all our world of well-stolen joy 5
 He slept, and dreamt of no such thing,
 While we found out heaven's fairer eye
 And kissed the cradle of our King.
 Tell him he rises now too late
 To show us aught worth looking at. 10

Tell him we now can show him more Than he e'er showed to mortal sight,
 Than he himself e'er saw before,
 Which to be seen needs not his light.
 Tell him, Tityrus, where th' hast been Tell him, Thyrsis, what th' hast seen. 16

TITYRUS. Gloomy night embraced the
 place
 Where the noble Infant lay.
 The Babe looked up and showed His
 face;
 In spite of darkness, it was day. 20
 It was Thy day, Sweet! and did rise
 Not from the east, but from Thine eyes.

CHORUS. It was Thy day, Sweet, etc.

THYRSIS. Winter chid aloud, and sent
 The angry North to wage his wars; 25
 The North forgot his fierce intent,
 And left perfumes instead of scars.
 By those sweet eyes' persuasive powers,
 Where he meant frost he scattered flowers.

CHO. By those sweet eyes, etc. 30

BOTH. We saw Thee in Thy balmy nest,
 Young dawn of our eternal Day;
 We saw Thine eyes break from their east
 And chase the trembling shades away.
 We saw Thee, and we blest the sight, 35
 We saw Thee by Thine own sweet light.

TIT. Poor world, said I, what wilt thou
do

To entertain this starry Stranger?

Is this the best thou canst bestow—
A cold, and not too cleanly, manger? 40

Contend, the powers of heaven and
earth,

To fit a bed for this huge birth!

CHO. Contend, the powers, etc.

THYR. Proud world, said I, cease your contest,

And let the mighty Babe alone; 45

The phoenix builds the phoenix' nest,
Love's architecture is his own;

The Babe whose birth embraces this
morn,

Made His own bed e'er He was born.

CHO. The Babe whose, etc. 50

TIT. I saw the curled drops, soft and slow,
Come hovering o'er the place's head,

Offering their whitest sheets of snow

To furnish the fair Infant's bed.

Forbear, said I; be not too bold; 55
Your fleece is white, but 'tis too cold.

CRO. Forbear, said I, etc.

THYR. I saw the obsequious seraphim

Their rosy fleece of fire bestow,

For well they now can spare their wing
Since Heaven itself lies here below. 61

Well done, said I; but are you sure
Your down so warm, will pass for pure?

CRO. Well done, said I, etc.

TIT. No, no, your King's not yet to seek 65
Where to repose His royal head;

See, see how soon His new-bloomed
cheek

'Twixt mother's breasts is gone to bed!

Sweet choice, said we; no way but so
Not to lie cold, yet sleep in snow. 70

CHO. Sweet choice, said we, etc.

BOTH. We saw Thee in Thy balmy nest,
Bright dawn of our eternal Day;

We saw Thine eyes break from their east

And chase the trembling shades away. 75
We saw Thee, and we blest the sight,
We saw Thee by Thine own sweet Light.

CHO. We saw Thee, etc.

FULL CHORUS

Welcome, all wonders in one sight!
Eternity shut in a span! 80

Summer in winter! day in night!

Heaven in earth! and God in man!

Great little one, whose all-embracing birth

Lifts earth to heaven, stoops heaven to
earth!

Welcome, though nor to gold nor silk, 85
To more than Caesar's birthright is;

Two sister-seas of virgin-milk

With many a rarely-tempered kiss,

That breathes at once both maid and mother,

Warms in the one, cools in the other. 90

She sings Thy tears asleep, and dips

Her kisses in Thy weeping eye;

She spreads the red leaves of Thy lips

That in their buds yet blushing lie;

She 'gainst those mother-diamonds tries
The points of her young eagle's eyes. 96

Welcome, though not to those gay flies
Gilded i' th' beams of earthly kings,

Slippery souls in smiling eyes—

But to poor shepherds, homespun things,
Whose wealth's their flock, whose wit,

to be 101

Well read in their simplicity.

Yet, when young April's husband
showers

Shall bless the fruitful Maia's bed,

We'll bring the first-born of her flowers

To kiss Thy feet and crown Thy head. 106

To Thee, dread Lamb! whose love must keep

The shepherds, more than they the sheep.

To Thee, meek Majesty, soft King

Of simple graces and sweet loves, 110

Each of us his lamb will bring,

Each his pair of silver doves;

Till burnt at last in fire of Thy fair eyes,
Ourselves become our own best sacrifice!

HENRY VAUGHAN (1622-1695)

THE RETREAT

Happy those early days, when I
 Shined in my angel-infancy;
 Before I understood this place
 Appointed for my second race,
 Or taught my soul to fancy ought 5
 But a white, celestial thought;
 When yet I had not walked above
 A mile or two from my first love,
 And looking back—at that short space—
 Could see a glimpse of His bright face; 10
 When on some gilded cloud or flower
 My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
 And in those weaker glories spy
 Some shadows of eternity;
 Before I taught my tongue to wound 15
 My conscience with a sinful sound,
 Or had the black art to dispense,
 A several sin to every sense,
 But felt through all this fleshly dress
 Bright shoots of everlastingness. 20
 O how I long to travel back,
 And tread again that ancient track!
 That I might once more reach that plain,
 Where first I left my glorious train;
 From whence the enlightened spirit sees 25
 That shady city of palm trees.
 But ah! my soul with too much stay
 Is drunk, and staggers in the way!
 Some men a forward motion love,
 But I by backward steps would move; 30
 And when this dust falls to the urn,
 In that state I came, return.

PEACE

My soul, there is a country
 Afar beyond the stars,
 Where stands a winged sentry
 All skilful in the wars.
 There, above noise and danger, 5
 Sweet Peace sits crowned with smiles,
 And one born in a manger
 Commands the beauteous files.
 He is thy gracious friend,
 And—O my soul, awake!— 10
 Did in pure love descend
 To die here for thy sake.

If thou canst get but thither,
 There grows the flower of peace,
 The rose that can not wither, 15
 Thy fortress and thy ease.
 Leave then thy foolish ranges,
 For none can thee secure
 But one who never changes,
 Thy God, thy life, thy cure. 20

THE WORLD

I saw Eternity the other night,
 Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
 All calm, as it was bright;
 And round beneath it, Time, in hours,
 days, years,
 Driv'n by the spheres 5
 Like a vast shadow moved; in which the
 world
 And all her train were hurled.
 The doting lover in his quaintest strain
 Did there complain; Near him, his lute, his fancy, and his flights, 10
 Wit's four delights,
 With gloves and knots, the silly snares of
 pleasure;
 Yet his dear treasure,
 All scattered lay, while he his eyes did pour
 Upon a flower. 15
 The darksome statesman, hung with weights and woe,
 Like a thick midnight-fog, moved there so
 slow,
 He did not stay nor go;
 Condemning thoughts, like sad eclipses, scowl
 Upon his soul, 20
 And clouds of crying witnesses without Pursued him with one shout;
 Yet digged the mole, and lest his ways be
 found,
 Worked under ground,
 Where he did clutch his prey. But one did see 25
 That policy:
 Churches and altars fed him; perjuries
 Were gnats and flies;
 It rained about him blood and tears, but he Drank them as free. 30

The fearful miser on a heap of rust
 Sat pining all his life there, did scarce trust
 His own hands with the dust, Yet would not place one piece above, but lives
 In fear of thieves. 35
 Thousands there were as frantic as himself,
 And hugged each one his pelf;
 The downright epicure placed heaven in sense,
 And scorned pretence;
 While others, slipped into a wide excess, 40
 Said little less;
 The weaker sort, slight, trivial wares en-slave,
 Who think them brave;
 And poor, despised Truth sat counting by Their victory. 45

 Yet some, who all this while did weep and
 sing,
 And sing and weep, soared up into the ring;
 But most would use no wing.
 O fools, said I, thus to prefer dark night
 Before true light! 50
 To live in grots and caves, and hate the
 day
 Because it shows the way,
 The way, which from this dead and dark abode
 Leads up to God;
 A way where you might tread the sun, and
 be 55
 More bright than he!
 But, as I did their madness so discuss,
 One whispered thus:
 "This ring the Bridegroom did for none provide
 But for his bride." 60

EDMUND WALLER (1606-1687)

ON A GIRDLE

That which her slender waist confined
 Shall now my joyful temples bind;
 No monarch but would give his crown,
 His arms might do what this has done.

It was my heaven's extremest sphere, 5
 The pale which held that lovely deer;
 My joy, my grief, my hope, my love,
 Did all within this circle move.

A narrow compass, and yet there
 Dwelt all that's good and all that's fair; 10
 Give me but what this ribband bound,
 Take all the rest the sun goes round!

GO, LOVELY ROSE!

Go, lovely rose!
 Tell her that wastes her time and me,
 That now she knows,
 When I resemble her to thee,
 How sweet and fair she seems to be. 5

Tell her that's young,
 And shuns to have her graces spied,
 That hadst thou sprung
 In deserts, where no men abide,
 Thou must have uncommended died. 10

Small is the worth
 Of beauty from the light retired;
 Bid her come forth,
 Suffer herself to be desired,
 And not blush so to be admired. 15

Then die! that she
 The common fate of all things rare
 May read in thee;
 How small a part of time they share
 That are so wondrous sweet and fair! 20

ANDREW MARVELL (1621-1678)

AN HORATIAN ODE UPON CROM- WELL'S RETURN FROM IRE- LAND

The forward youth that would appear
 Must now forsake his muses dear,
 Nor in the shadows sing
 His numbers languishing:

'Tis time to leave the books in dust, 5
 And oil the unused armor's rust,
 Removing from the wall
 The corselet of the hall.

So restless Cromwell would not cease In the inglorious arts of peace, But through adventurous war Urged his active star;	10	That thence the royal actor borne The tragic scaffold might adorn, While round the armed bands Did clap their bloody hands.	55
And, like the three-forked lightning, first Breaking the clouds where it was nursed, Did thorough his own side His fiery way divide;	15	He nothing common did, or mean, Upon that memorable scene, But with his keener eye The axe's edge did try;	60
For 'tis all one to courage high, The emulous, or enemy, And with such to inclose, Is more than to oppose.	20	Nor called the gods with vulgar spite To vindicate his helpless right, But bowed his comely head Down, as upon a bed.
Then burning through the air he went, And palaces and temples rent; And Cæsar's head at last Did through his laurels blast.		This was that memorable hour, Which first assured the forcèd power; So, when they did design The capitol's first line,	65
'Tis madness to resist or blame The face of angry heaven's flame; And if we would speak true, Much to the man is due,	25	A bleeding head, where they begun, Did fright the architects to run; And yet in that the state Foresaw its happy fate.	70
Who from his private gardens, where He lived reservèd and austere, As if his highest plot To plant the bergamot, ¹	30	And now the Irish are ashamed To see themselves in one year tamed; So much one man can do, That does both act and know.	75
Could by industrious valor climb To ruin the great work of Time, And cast the kingdoms old, Into another mould,	35	They can affirm his praises best, And have, though overcome, confessed How good he is, how just, And fit for highest trust;	80
Though Justice against Fate complain, And plead the ancient rights in vain; But those do hold or break, As men are strong or weak.	40	Nor yet grown stiffer with command, But still in the republic's hand, How fit he is to sway, That can so well obey!
Nature, that hateth emptiness, Allows of penetration less, And therefore must make room Where greater spirits come.		He to the Commons' feet presents A kingdom for his first year's rents; And, what he may, forbears His fame, to make it theirs;	85
What field of all the civil war, Where his were not the deepest scar? And Hampton shows what part He had of wiser art;	45	And has his sword and spoils ungirt, To lay them at the public's skirt: So when the falcon high Falls heavy from the sky,	90
Where, twining subtle fears with hope, He wove a net of such a scope That Charles himself might chase To Caresbrooke's narrow case,	50	She, having killed, no more doth search, But on the next green bough to perch; Where, when he first does lure, The falconer has her sure.	95

¹ a kind of pear.

What may not then our isle presume,
While victory his crest does plume?
What may not others fear,
If thus he crowns each year? 100

As Cæsar, he, ere long, to Gaul,
To Italy a Hannibal,
And to all states not free
Shall climacteric be.

The Pict¹ no shelter now shall find 105
Within his parti-colored mind,
But, from this valor sad,²
Shrink underneath the plaid;

Happy if in the tufted brake
The English hunter him mistake, 110
Nor lay his hounds in near
The Caledonian deer.

But thou, the war's and Fortune's son,
March undefatigably on;
And for the least effect, 115
Still keep the sword erect,

Besides the force it has to fright
The spirits of the shady night,
The same arts that did gain
A power, must it maintain. 120

ABRAHAM COWLEY (1618-1667)

THE CHANGE

Love in her sunny eyes does basking play;
Love walks the pleasant mazes of her
hair,
Love does on both her lips forever stray,
And sows and reaps a thousand kisses
there.
In all her outward parts Love's always
seen; 5
But oh! he never went within!

Within, Love's foes, his greatest foes,
abide:
Malice, Inconstancy, and Pride.
So the earth's face trees, herbs, and flowers do dress,
But with other beauties numberless; 10
But at the center darkness is, and hell,
There wicked spirits, and there the damned, dwell.

¹ Scot

² resolute

With me, alas, quite contrary it fares:
Darkness and Death lies in my waking
eyes,
Despair and Paleness in my face appears, 15
And Grief and Fear, Love's greatest enemies.
But, like the Persian tyrant, Love within Keeps his proud court, and ne'er is seen.
Oh take my heart, and by that means you'll prove Within, too, stored enough of Love; 20
Give me but yours, I'll by that change so thrive
That Love in all my parts shall live.
So powerful is this change it render can
My outside woman, and your inside,
man.

THE WISH

Well then! I now do plainly see
This busy world and I shall ne'er agree.
The very honey of all earthly joy
Does of all meats the soonest cloy;
And they, methinks, deserve my pity 5
Who for it can endure the stings,
The crowd and buzz and murmurings,
Of this great hive, the city.

Ah, yet, ere I descend to the grave
May I a small house and large garden
have, 10
And a few friends, and many books, both
true,
Both wise, and both delightful too!
And since love ne'er will from me flee,
A mistress moderately fair,
And good as guardian angels are, 15
Only beloved, and loving me.

O fountains! when in you shall I Myself, eased of unpeaceful thoughts, espy?
O fields! O woods! when, when shall I be
made
The happy tenant of your shade? 20
Here's the spring-head of pleasure's
flood:
Here's wealthy Nature's treasury,
Where all the riches lie that she Has coined and stamped for good.

Pride and ambition here 25
 Only in far-fetched metaphors appear;
 Here naught but winds can hurtful murmurs scatter,
 And naught but Echo flatter.
 The gods, when they descended, hither
 From heaven did always choose their way:
 And therefore we may boldly say 31
 That 'tis the way, too, thither.

How happy here should I
 And one dear She live, and embracing die!
 She who is all the world, and can exclude
 In deserts solitude. 36
 I should have then this only fear:
 Lest men, when they my pleasures see,
 Should hither throng to live like me,
 And so make a city here. 40

THE SWALLOW

Foolish Prater, what do'st thou
 So early at my window do
 With thy tuneless serenade?
 Well 't had been had Tereus made Thee as dumb as Philomel: 5
 There his knife had done but well.
 In thy undiscovered nest
 Thou dost all the winter rest,
 And dreamest o'er thy summer joys,
 Free from the stormy season's noise: 10
 Free from th' ill thou'st done to me;
 Who disturbs, or seeks out thee?
 Had'st thou all the charming notes
 Of the wood's poetic throats,
 All thy art could never pay 15
 What thou'st ta'en from me away;
 Cruel bird, thou'st ta'en away
 A dream out of my arms to-day,
 A dream that ne'er must equalled be
 By all that waking eyes may see. 20
 Thou this damage to repair,
 Nothing half so sweet or fair,
 Nothing half so good can'st bring,
 Though men say, "Thou bring'st the
 spring?"

THE THIEF

Thou robbest my days of business and delights,
 Of sleep thou robbest my nights;

Ah, lovely thief, what wilt thou do?
 What, rob me of Heaven too?
 Thou even my prayers dost steal from
 me, 5
 And I, with wild idolatry,
 Begin to God, and end them all to thee.

Is it a sin to love, that it should thus
 Like an ill conscience, torture us?
 Whate'er I do, where e'er I go, 10
 (None guiltless e'er was haunted so)
 Still, still, methinks thy face I view,
 And still thy shape does me pursue,
 As if not you me, but I had murdered you.

From books I strive some remedy to take,
 But thy name all the letters make; 16
 Whate'er 'tis writ, I find that there,
 Like points and commas everywhere.
 Me blest for this let no man hold;
 For I, as Midas did of old, 20
 Perish by turning everything to gold.

What do I seek, alas, or why do I Attempt in vain from thee to fly?
 For making thee my deity
 I give thee then ubiquity. 25
 My pains resemble hell in this:
 The divine presence there too is,
 But to torment men, not to give them
 bliss.

CHARLES SACKVILLE, EARL OF DORSET (1638-1706)

SONG

To all you ladies now at land
 We men at sea indite;
 But first would have you understand
 How hard it is to write:
 The Muses now, and Neptune too, 3
 We must implore to write to you—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

For though the Muses should prove kind,
 And fill our empty brain,
 Yet if rough Neptune rouse the wind 10
 To wave the azure main,
 Our paper, pen, and ink, and we,
 Roll up and down our ships at sea—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

Then if we write not by each post, 15
 Think not we are unkind;
 Nor yet conclude our ships are lost
 By Dutchmen or by wind:
 Our tears we'll send a speedier way,
 The tide shall bring them twice a day— 20
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

The King with wonder and surprise
 Will swear the seas grow bold,
 Because the tides will higher rise
 Than e'er they did of old; 25
 But let him know it is our tears
 Bring floods of grief to Whitchall stairs—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

Should foggy Opdam chance to know
 Our sad and dismal story, 30
 The Dutch would scorn so weak a foe,
 And quit their fort at Goree.
 For what resistance can they find From men who've left their hearts behind?—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la! 35

Let wind and weather do its worst,
 Be you to us but kind;
 Let Dutchmen vapor,¹ Spaniards curse,
 No sorrow we shall find;
 'Tis then no matter how things go, 40
 Or who's our friend, or who's our foe—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

To pass our tedious hours away
 We throw a merry main,
 Or else at serious ombre² play; 45
 But why should we in vain
 Each other's ruin thus pursue?
 We were undone when we left you—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

But now our fears tempestuous grow 50
 And cast our hopes away,
 Whilst you, regardless of our woe,
 Sit careless at a play,
 Perhaps permit some happier man
 To kiss your hand, or flirt your fan— 55
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

When any mournful tune you hear
 That dies in every note,
 As if it sighed with each man's care
 For being so remote, 60

¹ boast.² a game of cards

Think then how often love we've made
 To you, when all those tunes were played—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

In justice you cannot refuse
 To think of our distress, 65
 When we for hopes of honor lose
 Our certain happiness:
 All those designs are but to prove Ourselves more worthy of your love—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la! 70

And now we've told you all our loves,
 And likewise all our fears,
 In hopes this declaration moves
 Some pity for our tears:
 Let's hear of no inconstancy— 75
 We have too much of that at sea—
 With a fa, la, la, la, la!

CAROLINE PROSE

SIR THOMAS BROWNE (1605-1682)

From HYDRIOTAPHIA or URN BURIAL

Now since these dead bones have already outlasted the living ones of Me-thusaleh, and, in a yard under ground and there walls of clay, outworn all the strong and specious buildings above it;
 and quietly rested under the drums and tramlings of three conquests: what prince can promise such diuturnity unto his relics, or might not gladly say,

Sic ego componi versus in ossa velim? [10

Time, which antiquates antiquities, and hath an art to make dust of all things, hath yet spared these minor monuments.

In vain we hope to be known by open and visible conservatories, when to be unknown was the means of their continuation, and obscurity their protection. If they died by violent hands, and were thrust into their urns, these bones become considerable, and some old [20 philosophers would honor them, whose souls they conceived most pure, which were thus snatched from their bodies, and to retain a stronger propension unto them; whereas they weariedly left a languishing corpse, and with faint desires of reunion. If they fell by long and aged decay, yet wrapped up in the bundle of time, they fall into indistinction, and make but one blot with infants. If we begin to [30 die when we live, and long life be but a prolongation of death, our life is a sad composition; we live with death, and die not in a moment. How many pulses made up the life of Methuselah, were work for Archimedes: common counters sum up the life of Moses his man. Our days become considerable, like petty sums, by minute accumulations; where numerous fractions make up but small [40 round numbers; and our days of a span long, make not one little finger.

If the nearness of our last necessity brought a nearer conformity into it, there were a happiness in hoary hairs, and no calamity in half-senses. But the long habit of living indisposeth us for dying; when avarice makes us the sport of death, when even David grew politicly cruel, and Solomon could hardly be said to [50 be the wisest of men. But many are too early old, and before the date of age. Adversity stretcheth our days, misery makes Alcmena's nights, and time hath no wings unto it. But the most tedious being is that which can unwish itself, content to be nothing, or never to have been, which was beyond the malcontent of Job, who cursed not the day of his life, but his nativity; content to have so [60 far been, as to have title to future being, although he had lived here but in an hidden state of life, and as it were an abortion.

What song the Sirens sang, or what name Achilles assumed when he hid himself among women, though puzzling questions, are not beyond all conjecture. What time the persons of these ossuaries entered the famous nations of the [70 dead, and slept with princes and counsellors, might admit a wide solution. But who were the proprietaries of these bones, or what bodies these ashes made up, were a question above antiquarism; not to be resolved by man, nor easily perhaps by spirits, except we consult the provincial guardians, or tutelary observers. Had they made as good provision for their names as they have done for their [80 relics, they had not so grossly erred in the art of perpetuation. But to subsist in bones, and be but pyramidally extant, is a fallacy in duration. Vain ashes, which, in the oblivion of names, persons, times and sexes, have found unto themselves a fruitless continuation, and only arise unto late posterity as emblems of mortal vanities, antidotes against pride, vain-glory, and madding vices! Pagan vain- [90 glories, which thought the world might last forever, had encouragement for ambition; and finding no Atropos unto the immortality of their names, were never damped with the necessity of oblivion. Even old ambitions had the advantage of ours in the attempts of their vain-glories, who acting early, and before the probable meridian of time, have by this time found great accomplishment of their de- [100 signs, whereby the ancient heroes have already out-lasteth their monuments and mechanical preservations. But in this latter scene of time we cannot expect such mummies unto our memories, when ambition may fear the prophecy of Elias; and Charles the Fifth can never hope to live within two Methuselahs of Hector.

And therefore restless inquietude for the diuturnity of our memories unto [110 present considerations seems a vanity almost out of date, and superannuated piece of folly. We cannot hope to live so long in our names as some have done in their persons. One face of Janus holds no proportion to the other. 'Tis too late to be ambitious. The great mutations of the world are acted, or time may be too short for our designs. To extend our memories by monuments, whose death we [120 daily pray for, and whose duration we cannot hope without injury to our expectations in the advent of the last day, were a contradiction to our beliefs. We, whose generations are ordained in this setting part of time, are providentially taken off from such imaginations; and, being necessitated to eye the remaining particle of futurity, are naturally constituted unto thoughts of the next [130 world, and cannot excusably decline the consideration of that duration which maketh pyramids pillars of snow, and all that's past a moment.

Circles and right lines limit and close all bodies, and the mortal right-lined circle must conclude and shut up all. There is no antidote against the opium of time, which temporally considereth all things: our fathers find their graves [140 in our short memories, and sadly tell us how we may be buried in our survivors. Grave-stones tell truth scarce forty years. Generations pass while some trees stand, and old families last not three oaks. To be read by bare inscriptions, like many in Gruter, to hope for eternity by enigmatical epithets or first letters of our names, to be studied by antiquaries who we were, and have new names given [150 us like many of the mummies, are cold consolations unto the students of perpetuity, even by everlasting languages.

To be content that times to come should only know there was such a man, not caring whether they knew more of him, was a frigid ambition in Cardan, disparaging his horoscopol inclination and judgment of himself. Who cares to subsist like Hippocrates' patients, [160 or Achilles' horses in Homer, under naked nominations, without deserts and noble acts, which are the balsam of our memories, the entelechia and soul of our subsistences? To be nameless in worthy deeds exceeds an infamous history. The Canaanitish woman lives more happily without a name, than Herodias with one. And who had not rather have been the good thief, than Pilate? [170

But the iniquity of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy, and deals with the memory of men without distinction to merit of perpetuity. Who can but pity the founder of the pyramids? Herostratus lives that burnt the temple of Diana; he is almost lost that built it. Time hath spared the epitaph of Adrian's horse, confounded that of himself. In vain we compute our felicities by the advan- [180 tage of our good names, since bad have equal durations; and Thersites is like to live as long as Agamemnon. Who knows whether the best of men be known, or whether there be not more remarkable persons forgot, than any that stand remembered in the known account of time? Without the favor of the everlasting register the first man had been as unknown as the last, and Methuselah's [190 long life had been his only chronicle.

Oblivion is not to be hired. The greater part must be content to be as though they had not been, to be found in the register of God, not in the record of man. Twenty-seven names make up the first story before the flood, and the recorded names ever since contain not one living century. The number of the dead long exceedeth all that shall live. The night of time [200 far surpasseth the day, and who knows when was the equinox? Every hour adds unto that current arithmetic, which scarce stands one moment. And since death must be the Lucina of life, and even pagans could doubt whether thus to live were to die; since our longest sun sets at right descensions, and makes but winter arches, and therefore it cannot be long before we lie down in darkness, [210 and have our light in ashes; since the brother of death daily haunts us with dying mementos, and time, that grows old in itself, bids us hope no long duration: diuturnity is a dream and folly of expectation.

Darkness and light divide the course of time, and oblivion shares with memory a great part even of our living beings; we slightly remember our felicities, and [220 the smartest strokes of affliction leave but short smart upon us. Sense endureth no extremities, and sorrows destroy us or themselves. To weep into stones are fables. Afflictions induce callosities; miseries are slippery, or fall like snow upon us, which notwithstanding is no unhappy stupidity. To be ignorant of evils to come, and forgetful of evils past, is a merciful provision in nature, whereby [230 we digest the mixture of our few and evil days, and our delivered senses not relapsing into cutting remembrances, our sorrows are not kept raw by the edge of repetitions. A great part of antiquity contented their hopes of subsistency with a transmigration of their souls,—a good way to continue their memories; while having the advantage of plural successions, they could not but act some- [240 thing remarkable in such variety of beings, and enjoying the fame of their passed selves, make accumulation of glory unto their last durations. Others, rather than be lost in the uncomfortable night of nothing, were content to recede into the common being, and make one particle of the public soul of all things, which was no more than to return into their unknown and divine original again. Egyp- [250] tian ingenuity was more unsatisfied, contriving their bodies in sweet consistencies to attend the return of their souls. But all was vanity, feeding the wind, and folly. The Egyptian mummies, which Cambyses or time hath spared, avarice now consumeth. Mummy is become merchandise, Mizraim cures wounds, and Pharaoh is sold for balsams.

In vain do individuals hope for im- [260] mortality, or any patent from oblivion, in preservations below the moon; men have been deceived even in their flat-teries above the sun, and studied conceits to perpetuate their names in heaven. The various cosmography of that part hath already varied the names of contrived constellations; Nimrod is lost in Orion, and Osiris in the dog-star. While we look for incorruption in the heav- [270] ens, we find they are but like the earth; durable in their main bodies, alterable in their parts: whereof, beside comets and new stars, perspectives begin to tell tales; and the spots that wander about the sun, with Phæthon's favor, would make clear conviction.

There is nothing strictly immortal but immortality. Whatever hath no beginning may be confident of no end— [280] which is the peculiar of that necessary essence that cannot destroy itself—and the highest strain of omnipotency, to be so powerfully constituted, as not to suffer even from the power of itself. All others have a dependent being and within the reach of destruction. But the sufficiency of Christian immortality frustrates all earthly glory, and the quality of either state after death makes a folly of post- [290] humous memory. God, who can only destroy our souls, and hath assured our resurrection, either of our bodies or names hath directly promised no duration. Wherein there is so much of chance, that the boldest expectants have found unhappy frustration; and to hold long subsistence, seems but a scape in oblivion. But man is a noble animal, splendid in ashes, and pompous in the grave, [300] solemnizing nativities and deaths with equal lustre, nor omitting ceremonies of bravery in the infamy of his nature.

Life is a pure flame, and we live by an invisible sun within us. A small fire sufficeth for life; great flames seemed too little after death, while men vainly affected precious pyres, and to burn like Sardanapalus. But the wisdom of funeral laws found the folly of prodigal [310] blazes, and reduced undoing fires unto the rule of sober obsequies, wherein few could be so mean as not to provide wood, pitch, a mourner, and an urn.

Five languages secured not the epitaph of Gordianus. The man of God lives longer without a tomb than any by one, invisibly interred by angels, and adjudged to obscurity, though not without some marks directing human discovery. [320] Enoch and Elias, without either tomb or burial, in an anomalous state of being, are the great examples of perpetuity in their long and living memory, in strict account being still on this side death, and having a late part yet to act upon this stage of earth. If in the decretory term of the world we shall not all die, but be changed, according to received translation, the last day will make but few graves; [330] at least quick resurrections will anticipate lasting sepultures. Some graves will be opened before they be quite closed, and Lazarus be no wonder, when many that feared to die shall groan that they can die but once. The dismal state is the second and living death, when life puts despair on the damned; when men shall wish the coverings of mountains, not of monuments, and annihilations [340] shall be courted.

While some have studied monuments, others have studiously declined them, and some have been so vainly boisterous that they durst not acknowledge their graves; wherein Alaricus seems most subtle, who had a river turned to hide his bones at the bottom. Even Sylla, that thought himself safe in his urn, could not prevent revenging tongues, and stones thrown [350] at his monument. Happy are they whom privacy makes innocent, who deal so with men in this world, that they are not afraid to meet them in the next; who, when they die, make no commotion among the dead, and are not touched with that poetical taunt of Isaiah.

* * * * *

To subsist in lasting monuments, to live in their productions, to exist in their names and predicament of chimeras, [360 was large satisfaction unto old expectations, and made one part of their Elysiums. But all this is nothing in the metaphysics of true belief. To live indeed, is to be again ourselves, which being not only an hope, but an evidence in noble believers, 'tis all one to lie in St. Innocent's churchyard, as in the sands of Egypt. Ready to be anything, in the ecstasy of being ever, and as content with [370 six foot as the moles of Adrianus.

THOMAS FULLER (1608-1661)

THE GOOD SCHOOLMASTER

From THE HOLY STATE

There is scarce any profession in the commonwealth more necessary, which is so slightly performed. The reasons whereof I conceive to be these: First, young scholars make this calling their refuge; yea, perchance before they have taken any degree in the university, commence schoolmasters in the country, as if nothing else were required to set up this profession, but only a rod and a [10 ferula. Secondly, others, who are able, use it only as a passage to better preferment, to patch the rents in their present fortune till they can provide a new one, and betake themselves to some more gainful calling. Thirdly, they are disheartened from doing their best with the miserable reward which in some places they receive, being masters to their children and slaves to their parents. [20 Fourthly, being grown rich, they grow negligent, and scorn to touch the school but by the proxy of an usher. But see how well our schoolmaster behaves himself.

His genius inclines him with delight to his profession. Some men had as lief be schoolboys as schoolmasters, to be tied to the school, as Cooper's "Dictionary" and Scapula's "Lexicon" [30 are chained to the desk therein; and though great scholars, and skilful in other arts, are bunglers in this: but God of His goodness hath fitted several men for several callings, that the necessity of Church and State in all conditions may be provided for. So that he who beholds the fabric thereof may say, "God hewed out this stone, and appointed it to lie in this very place, for it would fit none [40 other so well, and here it doth most excellent." And thus God mouldeth some for a schoolmaster's life, undertaking it with desire and delight, and discharging it with dexterity and happy success.

He studieth his scholars' natures as carefully as they their books, and ranks their dispositions into several forms. And though it may seem difficult for him in a great school to descend to all par- [50 ticulars, yet experienced schoolmasters may quickly make a grammar of boys' natures, and reduce them all, saving some few exceptions, to these general rules:

1. Those that are ingenious and industrious. The conjunction of two such planets in a youth presages much good unto him. To such a lad a frown may be a whipping, and a whipping a death; yea, where their master whips them once, [60 shame whips them all the week after. Such natures he useth with all gentleness.

2. Those that are ingenious and idle. These think, with the hare in the fable, that running with snails (so they count the rest of their schoolfellows) they shall come soon enough to the post, though sleeping a good while before their starting. Oh, a good rod would finely take them napping! [70

3. Those that are dull and diligent. Wines, the stronger they be, the more lees they have when they are new. Many boys are muddy-headed till they be clarified with age, and such afterwards prove the best. Bristol diamonds are both bright and squared and pointed by nature, and yet are soft and worthless; whereas, orient ones in India are rough and rugged naturally. Hard, rugged, and dull [80] natures of youth acquit themselves afterwards the jewels of the country, and therefore their dullness at first is to be borne with, if they be diligent. That schoolmaster deserves to be beaten himself who beats nature in a boy for a fault. And I question whether all the whipping in the world can make their parts, which are naturally sluggish, rise one minute before the hour nature hath appointed. [90]

4. Those that are invincibly dull, and negligent also. Correction may reform the latter, not amend the former. All the whetting in the world can never set a razor's edge on that which hath no steel in it. Such boys he consigneth over to other professions. Shipwrights and boat-makers will choose those crooked pieces of timber which other carpenters refuse. Those may make excellent merchants [100] and mechanics who will not serve for scholars.

He is able, diligent, and methodical in his teaching; not leading them rather in a circle than forwards. He minces his precepts for children to swallow, hanging clogs on the nimbleness of his own soul, that his scholars may go along with him.

He is, and will be known to be, an absolute monarch in his school. If [110] cockering mothers proffer him money to purchase their sons an exemption from his rod (to live as it were in a peculiar, out of their master's jurisdiction), with disdain he refuseth it, and scorns the late custom in some places of commuting whipping into money, and ransoming boys from the rod at a set price. If he hath a stubborn youth, correction-proof, he debaseth not his authority by contesting [120] with him, but fairly, if he can, puts him away before his obstinacy hath infected others.

He is moderate in inflicting deserved correction. Many a schoolmaster better answereth the name παιδορπίβης than παιδαγωγός, rather tearing his scholars' flesh with whipping than giving them good education. No wonder if his scholars hate the Muses, being presented unto [130] them in the shapes of fiends and furies.

Junius complains de insolenti carnificina of his schoolmaster, by whom consciundebatur flagris septies aut oclies in dies singulos. Yea, hear the lamentable verses of poor Tusser in his own life:

"From Paul's I went, to Eton sent.
To learn straightways the Latin phrase,
Where fifty-three stripes given to me
At once I had. [140]

"For fault but small, or none at all,
It came to pass thus beat I was;
See Udall, see the mercy of thee
To me, poor lad."

Such an Orbilius mars more scholars than he makes: their tyranny hath caused many tongues to stammer, which spake plain by nature, and whose stuttering at first was nothing else but fears quavering on their speech at their master's [150] presence; and whose mauling them about their heads hath dulled those who, in quickness, exceeded their master.

He makes his school free to him who sues to him in forma pauperis. And surely learning is the greatest alms that can be given. But he is a beast who, because the poor scholar cannot pay him his wages, pays the scholar in his whipping. Rather are diligent lads to be encouraged [160] with all excitements to learning. This minds me of what I have heard concerning Mr. Bust, that worthy late schoolmaster of Eton, who would never suffer any wandering begging scholar (such as justly the statute hath ranked in the forefront of rogues) to come into his school, but would thrust him out with earnestness (however privately charitable unto him), lest his schoolboys should be dis- [170] heartened from their books by seeing some scholars, after their studying in the university, preferred to beggary.

He spoils not a good school to make thereof a bad college, therein to teach his scholars logic. For, besides that logic may have an action of trespass against grammar for encroaching on her liberties, syllogisms are solecisms taught in the school, and oftentimes they are forced [180] afterwards in the university to unlearn the fumbling skill they had before.

Out of his school he is no whit pedantical in carriage or discourse; contenting himself to be rich in Latin, though he doth not jingle with it in every company wherein he comes.

To conclude, let this amongst other motives make schoolmasters careful in their place, that the eminencies of [190] their scholars have commended the memories of their schoolmasters to posterity, who otherwise in obscurity had altogether been forgotten. Who had ever heard of R. Bond, in Lancashire, but for the breeding of learned Ascham, his scholar, or of Hartgrave, in Burnley school, in the same county, but because he was the first did teach worthy Dr. Whitaker? Nor do I honor the memory of Mulcaster for [200] anything so much as for his scholar, that gulf of learning, Bishop Andrews. This made the Athenians, the day before the great feast of Theseus, their founder, to sacrifice a ram to the memory of Conidas, his schoolmaster, that first instructed him.

THE LIFE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH

From THE HOLY STATE

We intermeddle not with her description, as she was a sovereign prince, too high for our pen, and performed by others already, though not by any done so fully but that still room is left for the endeavors of posterity to add thereunto. We consider her only as she was a worthy lady, her private virtues rendering her to the imitation, and her public to the admiration, of all. [10]

Her royal birth by her father's side doth comparatively make her mother-descent seem low, which otherwise, considered in itself, was very noble and honorable. As for the bundle of scandalous aspersions by some cast on her birth, they are best to be buried without once opening of them. For as the rascal will presume to miscall the best lord, when far enough out of his hearing, so slanderous tongues think they may run riot in railing on any, when once got out of the distance of time and reach of confutation. But majesty, which dieth not, will not suffer itself to be so abused, seeing the best assurance which living princes have that their memories shall be honorably continued is founded (next to their own deserts) in the maintaining of the unstained reputation of their predecessors. Yea, Divine Justice seems herein to be a compurgator of the parents of Queen Elizabeth, in that Nicholas Sanders, a Popish priest, the first raiser of these wicked reports, was accidentally famished as he roved up and down in Ireland; either because it was just he should be starved that formerly surfeited with lying, or because that island, out of a natural antipathy against poisonous [40] creatures, would not lend life to so venomous a slanderer.

Under the reign of her father, and brother King Edward VI (who commonly called her his "sister Temperance"), she lived in a princely fashion. But the case was altered with her when her sister Mary came to the crown, who ever looked upon her with a jealous and frowning face, chiefly because of the difference between them in religion. For though Queen Mary is said of herself not so much as to have barked, yet she had under her those who did more than bite; and rather her religion than disposition was guilty in countenancing their cruelty by her authority.

This antipathy against her sister Elizabeth was increased with the remembrance how Catherine dowager, Queen Mary's [60] mother, was justled out of the bed of Henry VIII by Anna Boleyn, mother to Queen Elizabeth; so that these two sisters were born, as I may say, not only in several, but opposite, horizons, so that the elevation and bright appearing of the one inferred the necessary obscurity and depression of the other; and still Queen Mary was troubled with this fit of the mother, which incensed her against [70] this her half-sister. To which two grand causes of opposition this third may also be added, because not so generally known, though in itself of lesser consequence: Queen Mary had released Edward Courtenay, Earl of Devonshire, out of the Tower, where long he had been detained prisoner, a gentleman of a beautiful body, sweet nature, and royal descent; intending him, as it was generally [80 conceived, to be a husband for herself. For when the said earl petitioned the queen for leave to travel, she advised him rather to marry, insuring him that no lady in the land, how high soever, would refuse him for a husband; and urging him to make his choice where he pleased, she pointed herself out unto him as plainly as might stand with the modesty of a maid and majesty of a queen. Here- [90 upon the young earl—whether because that his long durance had some influence on his brain, or that naturally his face was better than his head, or out of some private fancy and affection to the Lady Elizabeth, or out of loyal bashfulness, not presuming to climb higher, but expecting to be called up—is said to have requested the queen for leave to marry her sister Elizabeth, unhappy that [100 his choice either went so high or no higher. For who could have spoken worse treason against Mary, (though not against the queen), than to prefer her sister before her? And she, innocent lady, did afterwards dearly pay the score of this earl's indiscretion.

For these reasons Lady Elizabeth was closely kept and narrowly sifted all her sister's reign, Sir Henry Bedingfield, [110 her keeper, using more severity towards her than his place required, yea, more than a good man should—or a wise man would—have done. No doubt the least tripping of her foot should have cost her the losing of her head, if they could have caught her to be privy to any conspiracies.

This lady as well deserved the title of "Elizabeth the Confessor" as ever Edward, her ancient predecessor, did. [120 Mr. Ascham was a good schoolmaster to her, but affliction was a better; so that it is hard to say whether she was more happy in having a crown so soon, or in having it no sooner, till affliction had first laid in her a low—and therefore sure—foundation of humility for highness to be afterwards built thereupon.

We bring her now from the cross to the crown, and come we now to describe [130 the rare endowments of her mind; when, behold, her virtues almost stifle my pen, they crowd in so fast upon it.

She was an excellent scholar, understanding the Greek, and perfectly speaking the Latin: witness her extempore speech in answer to the Polish ambassador, and another at Cambridge, Et si fæminalis iste meus pudor (for so it began), elegantly making the word fæminalis; [140 and well might she mint one new word who did refine so much new gold and silver. Good skill she had in the French and Italian, using interpreters not for need, but state. She was a good poet in English, and fluently made verses. In her time of persecution, when a Popish priest pressed her very hardly to declare her opinion concerning the presence of Christ in the sacrament, she truly and [150 warily presented her judgment in these verses:

"'Twas God the Word that spake it,
He took the bread and brake it;
And what the Word did make it,
That I believe, and take it."

And though perchance some may say, "This was but the best of shifts and the worst of answers, because the distinct manner of the presence must be be- [160 lieved," yet none can deny it to have been a wise return to an adversary who lay at wait for all advantages. Nor was her poetic vein less happy in Latin. When, a little before the Spanish invasion in eighty-eight, the Spanish ambassador, after a larger representation of his master's demands, had summed up the effect thereof in a tetrastich, she instantly in one verse rejoined her answer. We [170 will presume to English both, though confessing the Latin loseth lustre by the translation.

*Te veto ne pergas bello defendere Belgas;
Quæ Dracus eripuit nunc restituantur oportet;*

*Quas pater evertit jubeo te condere cellas;
Religio Papæ fac restitatur ad unguem.*

"These to you are our commands:
Send no help to the Netherlands;
Of the treasure took by Drake, [180
Restitution you must make;

And those abbeys build anew,
Which your father overthrew;
If for any peace you hope,
In all points restore the Pope."

THE QUEEN'S EXTEMPORE RETURN

Ad Græcas, bone rex, fient mandata, Calendas.

"Worthy King, know this your will
At latter Lammas we'll fulfil."

Her piety to God was exemplary: none more constant or devout in private [190] prayers; very attentive also at sermons, wherein she was better affected with soundness of matter than quaintness of expression. She could not well digest the affected over-elegancy of such as prayed for her by the title of "Defendress of the Faith," and not the "Defender," it being no false construction to apply a masculine word to so heroic a spirit. She was very devout in returning thanks [200] to God for her constant and continual preservations: for one traitor's stab was scarce put by before another took aim at her. But as if the poisons of treason by custom were turned natural to her, by God's protection they did her no harm. In any design of consequence she loved to be long and well advised; but where her resolutions once seized, she would never let go her hold, according to her [210] motto, Semper eadem.

By her temperance she improved that stock of health which nature bestowed on her, using little wine and less physic. Her continence from pleasures was admirable, and she the paragon of spotless chastity, whatever some Popish priests (who count all virginity hid under a nun's veil) have feigned to the contrary. The best is, their words are no slander whose words [220] are all slander, so given to railing that they must be dumb if they do not blaspheme magistrates. One Jesuit made this false anagram on her name Elizabeth, JESABEL: false both in matter and manner. For allow it the abatement of H, (as all anagrams must sue in chancery for moderate favor), yet was it both unequal and ominous that T, a solid letter, should be omitted—the presage of the gallows [230]

whereon this anagrammatist was afterwards justly executed. Yea, let the testimony of Pope Sixtus V himself be believed, who professed that amongst all the princes in Christendom he found but two who were worthy to bear command, had they not been stained with heresy: namely, Henry IV, King of France, and Elizabeth, Queen of England. And we may presume that the Pope, if commending his enemy, is [240] therein infallible.

We come to her death, the discourse whereof was more welcome to her from the mouth of her private confessor than from a public preacher; and she loved rather to tell herself than to be told of her mortality, because the open mention thereof made, as she conceived, her subjects divide their loyalty betwixt the present and the future prince. We need [250] look into no other cause of her sickness than old age, being seventy years old (David's age), to which no king of England since the Conquest did attain. Her weakness was increased by her removal from London to Richmond in a cold winter day, sharp enough to pierce through those who were armed with health and youth. Also melancholy (the worst natural parasite—whosoever [260] feeds him shall never be rid of his company) much afflicted her, being given over to sadness and silence.

Then prepared she herself for another world, being more constant in prayer and pious exercises than ever before. Yet spake she very little to any, sighing out more than she said, and making still music to God in her heart. And as the red rose, though outwardly not so fra- [270] grant, is inwardly far more cordial than the damask, being more thrifty of its sweetness and reserving it in itself, so the religion of this dying queen was most turned inward, in soliloquies betwixt God and her own soul, though she wanted not outward expressions thereof. When her speech failed her, she spake with her heart, tears, eyes, hands, and other signs, so commending herself to God, the [280] best Interpreter, who understands what his saints desire to say. Thus died Queen Elizabeth: whilst living, the first maid on earth, and when dead, the second in heaven. Surely the kingdom had died with their queen had not the fainting spirits thereof been refreshed by the coming-in of gracious King James.

She was of person, tall; of hair and complexion, fair, well-favored, but [290 high-nosed; of limbs and feature, neat; of a stately and majestic deportment. She had a piercing eye, wherewith she used to touch what mettle strangers were made of who came into her presence. But as she counted it a pleasant conquest with her majestic look to dash strangers out of countenance, so she was merciful in pursuing those whom she overcame; and afterwards would cherish and comfort [300 them with her smiles, if perceiving towardliness and an ingenuous modesty in them. She much affected rich and costly apparel; and if ever jewels had just cause to be proud, it was with her wearing them.

IZAAK WALTON (1593-1683)

From THE COMPLETE ANGLER

CHAPTER IV

OBSERVATIONS OF THE NATURE AND BREEDING OF THE TROUT, AND HOW TO FISH FOR HIM.

PISCATOR. The trout is a fish highly valued, both in this and foreign nations. He may be justly said, as the old poet said of wine, and we English say of venison, to be a generous fish: a fish that is so like the buck that he also has his seasons; for it is observed that he comes in and goes out of season with the stag and buck. Gesner says his name is of a German offspring, and says he is a fish that [10 feeds clean and purely, in the swiftest streams, and on the hardest gravel; and that he may justly contend with all freshwater fish, as the mullet may with all sea-fish, for precedency and daintiness of taste; and that being in right season, the most dainty palates have allowed precedency to him.

And before I go farther in my discourse, let me tell you, that you are to [20 observe, that as there be some barren does that are good in summer, so there be some barren trouts that are good in winter; but there are not many that are so, for usually they be in their perfection in the month of May, and decline with the buck. Now you are to take notice that in several countries, as in Germany and in other parts, compared to ours, fish do differ much in their bigness [30 and shape, and other ways, and so do trouts: it is well known that in the Lake Lemman, the Lake of Geneva, there are trouts taken of three cubits long, as is affirmed by Gesner, a writer of good credit; and Mercator says the trouts that are taken in the Lake of Geneva are a great part of the merchandise of that famous city. And you are further to know that there be certain waters that [40 breed trouts remarkable both for their number and smallness. I know a little brook in Kent that breeds them to a number incredible, and you may take them twenty or forty in an hour, but none greater than about the size of a gudgeon. There are also in divers rivers, especially that relate to or be near to the sea, as Winchester, or the Thames about Windsor, a little trout called a [50 samlet or skegger trout, in both which places I have caught twenty or forty at a standing, that will bite as fast and as freely as minnows: these be by some taken to be young salmon; but in those waters they never grow to be bigger than a herring.

There is also in Kent, near to Canterbury, a trout called there a Fordidge trout, a trout that bears the name of the [60 town where it is usually caught, that is accounted the rarest of fish: many of them near the bigness of salmon, but known by their different color; and in their best season they cut very white; and none of these have been known to be caught with an angle, unless it were one that was caught by Sir George Hastings, an excellent angler, and now with God: and he hath told me, he thought [70 that trout bit not for hunger but wantonness; and it is rather to be believed, because both he then, and many others before him, have been curious to search into their bellies, what the food was by which they lived, and have found out nothing by which they might satisfy their curiosity.

Concerning which you are to take notice that it is reported by good authors that grasshoppers and some fish have no mouths, but are nourished and take breath by the porousness of their gills, man knows not how: and this may be believed, if we consider that when the raven hath hatched her eggs, she takes no further care, but leaves her young ones to the care of the God of nature, who is said, in the Psalms, "to feed the young ravens that call upon him." [90 And they be kept alive and fed by a dew, or worms that breed in their nests, or some other ways that we mortals know not. And this may be believed of the Fordidge trout, which, as it is said of the stork that "he knows his season," so he knows his times, I think almost his day of coming into that river out of the sea, where he lives, and, it is like, feeds, nine months of the year, and fasts three [100 in the river of Fordidge. And you are to note, that those townsmen are very punctual in observing the time of beginning to fish for them, and boast much that their river affords a trout that exceeds all others. And just so does Sussex boast of several fish: as namely, a Shelsey cockle, a Chichester lobster, an Arundel mullet, and an Amerly trout.

And now for some confirmation of [110 the Fordidge trout: you are to know that this trout is thought to eat nothing in the fresh water; and it may be the better believed, because it is well known that swallows, and bats, and wagtails, which are called half-year birds, and not seen to fly in England for six months in the year, but about Michaelmas leave us for a hotter climate, yet some of them that have been left behind their fellows, [120 have been found, many thousands at a time, in hollow trees, or clay caves, where they have been observed to live and sleep out the whole winter without meat. And so Albertus observes, that there is one kind of frog that hath her mouth naturally shut up about the end of August, and that she lives so all the winter; and though it be strange to some, yet it is known to too many among us to be [130 doubted.

And so much for these Fordidge trouts, which never afford an angler sport, but either live their time of being in the fresh water, by their meat formerly got in the sea, not unlike the swallow or frog, or by the virtue of the fresh water only; or, as the birds of Paradise and the chameleon are said to live by the sun and the air.

There is also in Northumberland a [140 trout called a bull trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in the southern parts. And there are, in many rivers that relate to the sea, salmon trouts, as much different from others, both in shape and in their spots, as we see sheep in some countries differ one from another in their shape and bigness, and in the fineness of their wool. And certainly, as some pastures breed larger sheep, so do [150 some rivers, by reason of the ground over which they run, breed larger trouts.

Now the next thing that I will commend to your consideration is that the trout is of a more sudden growth than other fish. Concerning which, you are also to take notice that he lives not so long as the perch and divers other fishes do, as Sir Francis Bacon hath observed in his History of Life and Death. [160

And next you are to take notice that he is not like the crocodile, which if he lives never so long, yet always thrives till his death: but 'tis not so with the trout; for after he is come to his full growth, he declines in his body, and keeps his bigness or thrives only in his head till his death. And you are to know that he will about, especially before, the time of his spawning, get almost [170 miraculously through weirs and flood-gates against the stream; even through such high and swift places as is almost incredible. Next, that the trout usually spawns about October or November, but in some rivers a little sooner or later; which is the more observable, because most other fish spawn in the spring or summer, when the sun hath warmed both the earth and the water, and made [180 it fit for generation. And you are to note, that he continues many months out of season; for it may be observed of the trout, that he is like the buck or the ox, that will not be fat in many months, though he go in the very same pastures that horses do, which will be fat in one month; and so you may observe that most other fishes recover strength, and grow sooner fat and in season, than [190] the trout doth.

* * * * *

Now you are to know that it is observed that usually the best trouts are either red or yellow; though some, as the Fordidge trout, be white and yet good; but that is not usual: and it is a note observable, that the female trout hath usually a less head and a deeper body than the male trout, and is usually the better meat. And note that a hog- [200] back and a little head, to either trout, salmon, or any other fish, is a sign that that fish is in season.

But yet you are to note that as you see some willows or palm-trees bud and blossom sooner than others do, so some trouts be, in rivers, sooner in season; and as some hollies or oaks are longer before they cast their leaves, so are some trouts, in rivers, longer before they go [210] out of season.

And you are to note that there are several kinds of trouts; but these several kinds are not considered but by very few men; for they go under the general name of trouts, just as pigeons do in most places; though it is certain there are tame and wild pigeons; and of the tame, there be helmets, and runts, and carriers, and coppers, and indeed too [220] many to name. Nay, the Royal Society have found and published lately that there be thirty and three kinds of spiders; and yet all, for aught I know, go under that one general name of spider. And it is so with many kinds of fish, and of trouts especially, which differ in their bigness, and shape, and spots, and color. The great Kentish hens may be an instance, compared to other hens. And, [230] doubtless, there is a kind of small trout, which will never thrive to be big, that breeds very many more than others do, that be of a larger size; which you may rather believe if you consider that the little wren and titmouse will have twenty young ones at a time, when usually the noble hawk or the musical thrassel or blackbird exceed not four or five.

And now you shall see me try my [240] skill to catch a trout; and at my next walking, either this evening or to-morrow morning, I will give you direction how you yourself shall fish for him.

VENATOR. Trust me, master, I see now it is a harder matter to catch a trout than a chub; for I have put on patience and followed you these two hours, and not seen a fish stir, neither at your minnow nor your worm. [250]

PISCATOR. Well, scholar, you must endure worse luck some time, or you will never make a good angler. But what say you now? There is a trout now, and a good one too, if I can but hold him; and two or three turns more will tire him. Now you see he lies still, and the sleight is to land him: reach me that landing-net. So, sir, now he is mine own. What say you now? is not this worth all my [260] labor and your patience?

VENATOR. On my word, master, this is a gallant trout: what shall we do with him?

PISCATOR. Marry, e'en eat him to supper: we'll go to my hostess, from whence we came; she told me, as I was going out of door, that my brother Peter, a good angler and a cheerful companion, had sent word that he would lodge there [270] to-night, and bring a friend with him. My hostess has two beds, and I know you and I may have the best; we'll rejoice with my brother Peter and his friend, tell tales, or sing ballads, or make a catch, or find some harmless sport to content us, and pass away a little time without offense to God or man.

VENATOR. A match, good master; let's go to that house, for the linen looks [280] white and smells of lavender, and I long to lie in a pair of sheets that smell so. Let's be going, good master, for I am hungry again with fishing.

PISCATOR. Nay, stay a little, good scholar. I caught my last trout with a worm; now I will put on a minnow, and try a quarter of an hour about yonder trees for another; and so walk towards our lodging. Look you, scholar, there- [290 about we shall have a bite presently or not at all. Have with you, sir! o' my word I have hold of him. Oh! it is a great logger-headed chub; come, hang him upon that willow twig, and let's be going. But turn out of the way a little, good scholar, towards yonder high honeysuckle hedge; there we'll sit and sing, whilst this shower falls so gently upon the teeming earth, and gives yet [300 a sweeter smell to the lovely flowers that adorn these verdant meadows.

Look! under that broad beech-tree I sat down, when I was last this way a-fishing. And the birds in the adjoining grove seemed to have a friendly contention with an echo, whose dead voice seemed to live in a hollow tree, near to the brow of that primrose hill. There I sat viewing the silver streams glide [310 silently towards their center, the tempestuous sea; yet sometimes opposed by rugged roots and pebble-stones, which broke their waves, and turned them into foam. And sometimes I beguiled time by viewing the harmless lambs;
some leaping securely in the cool shade, whilst others sported themselves in the cheerful sun; and saw others craving comfort from the swollen udders of their [320 bleating dams. As I thus sat, these and other sights had so fully possessed my soul with content, that I thought, as the poet hath happily expressed it,

"I was for that time lifted above earth,
And possessed joys not promised in my
birth."

As I left this place, and entered into the next field, a second pleasure entertained me; 'twas a handsome milkmaid, that had not yet attained so much age [330 and wisdom as to load her mind with any fears of many things that will never be,
as too many men too often do; but she cast away all care, and sung like a nightingale. Her voice was good, and the ditty fitted for it: it was that smooth song which was made by Kit Marlow, now at least fifty years ago; and the milkmaid's mother sung an answer to it, which was made by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his [340 younger days. They were old-fashioned poetry, but choicely good; I think much better than the strong lines that are now in fashion in this critical age. Look yonder! on my word, yonder they both be a-milking again. I will give her the chub, and persuade them to sing those two songs to us.

God speed you, good woman! I have been a-fishing, and am going to Bleak [350 Hall to my bed; and having caught more fish than will sup myself and my friend, I will bestow this upon you and your daughter, for I use to sell none.

MILK-WOMAN. Marry, God requite you, sir, and we'll eat it cheerfully; and if you come this way a-fishing two months hence, a grace of God! I'll give you a syllabub of new verjuice in a new-made hay-cock for it. And my Maudlin shall [360 sing you one of her best ballads; for she and I both love all anglers, they be such honest, civil, quiet men. In the meantime will you drink a draft of red cow's milk? You shall have it freely.

PISCATOR. No, I thank you; but, I pray, do us a courtesy that shall stand you and your daughter in nothing, and yet we will think ourselves still something in your debt; it is but to sing us a song [370 that was sung by your daughter when I last passed over this meadow, about eight or nine days since.

MILK-WOMAN. What song was it, I pray? Was it "Come, shepherds, deck your heads"? or, "As at noon Dulcina rested"? or, "Phillida flouts me"? or "Chevy Chase"? or, "Johnny Armstrong"? or, "Troy Town"?

PISCATOR. No, it is none of those; it [380 is a song that your daughter sung the first part, and you sung the answer to it.

MILK-WOMAN. Oh, I know it now.
I learned it the first part in my golden age, when I was about the age of my poor daughter; and the latter part, which indeed fits me best now, but two or three years ago, when the cares of the world began to take hold of me: but you shall,
God willing, hear them both, and sung [390
as well as we can, for we both love anglers.
Come, Maudlin, sing the first part to the gentlemen, with a merry heart; and I'll sing the second when you have done.

THE MILKMAID'S SONG

Come, live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That valleys, groves, or hills, or field,
Or woods, and steepy mountains yield,

Where we will sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed our flocks, [400
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses,
And then a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle;

A gown made of the finest wool
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Slippers lined choicely for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold; [410

A belt of straw and ivy-buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come, live with me, and be my love.

Thy silver dishes for my meat,
As precious as the gods do eat,
Shall, on an ivory table, be Prepared each day for thee and me.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For thy delight, each May morning. [420
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love.

VENATOR. Trust me, master, it is a choice song, and sweetly sung by honest Maudlin. I now see it was not without cause that our good Queen Elizabeth did so often wish herself a milkmaid all the month of May, because they are not troubled with fears and cares, but sing sweetly all the day, and sleep securely [430 all the night; and without doubt, honest, innocent, pretty Maudlin does so.
I'll bestow Sir Thomas Overbury's milkmaid's wish upon her, "That she may die in the spring, and being dead, may have good store of flowers stuck round about her winding-sheet."

THE MILKMAID'S MOTHER'S ANSWER

If all the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move [440
To live with thee, and be thy love.

But time drives flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold,
Then Philomel becometh dumb,
And age complains of care to come.

The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields.
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies, [450
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten;
In folly ripe, in reason rotten.

Thy belt of straw and ivy-buds,
Thy coral clasps, and amber studs,
All these in me no means can move
To come to thee, and be thy love.

What should we talk of dainties, then,
Of better meat than's fit for men?
These are but vain: that's only good [460
Which God hath blest, and sent for food.

But could youth last, and love still breed;
Had joys no date, nor age no need;
Then those delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

* * * * *

PISCATOR. Well sung, good woman; I thank you. I'll give you another dish of fish one of these days, and then beg another song of you. Come, scholar! let Maudlin alone; do not you offer to [470 spoil her voice. Look! yonder comes mine hostess, to call us to supper. How now?
Is my brother Peter come?

HOSTESS. Yes, and a friend with him;
they are both glad to hear that you are in these parts, and long to see you; and long to be at supper, for they be very hungry.

From CHAPTER VIII

If this direction to catch a pike do you no good, yet I am certain this direction how to roast him when he is caught is choicely good, for I have tried it; and it is somewhat the better for not being common. But with my direction you must take this caution, that your pike must not be a small one; that is, it must be more than half a yard, and should be bigger. [10]

First open your pike at the gills, and if need be cut also a little slit towards the belly. Out of these take his guts, and keep his liver, which you are to shred very small with thyme, sweet marjoram, and winter-savory. To these put some pickled oysters, and some anchovies, two or three, (both these last whole, for the anchovies will melt, and the oysters should not). To these you must add also a pound [20 of sweet butter, which you are to mix with the herbs that are shred; and let them all be well salted (if the pike be more than a yard long, then you may put into these herbs more than a pound; or if he be less, then less butter will suffice). These being thus mixed, with a blade or two of mace, must be put into the pike's belly, and then his belly sewed up. Then you are to thrust the spit through his mouth out at his [30 tail; and then take four, or five, or six, split sticks or very thin laths, and a convenient quantity of tape or fileting. These laths are to be tied round about the pike's body, from his head to his tail, and the tape tied somewhat thick to prevent his breaking or falling off from the spit. Let him be roasted very leisurely, and often basted with claret wine and anchovies and butter mixed together, and [40 also with what moisture falls from him into the pan. When you have roasted him sufficiently you are to hold under him, when you unwind or cut the tape that ties him, such a dish as you purpose to eat him out of; and let him fall into it with the sauce that is roasted in his belly; and by this means the pike will be kept unbroken and complete. Then to the sauce which was within him, and also [50 that sauce in the pan, you are to add a fit quantity of the best butter, and to squeeze the juice of three or four oranges. Lastly, you may either put into the pike with the oysters two cloves of garlic, and take it whole out when the pike is cut off the spit; or, to give the sauce a haut gout, let the dish into which you let the pike fall be rubbed with it; the using or not using of this garlic is left to your discretion. [60

JEREMY TAYLOR (1613-1667)

From HOLY DYING

It is a mighty change that is made by the death of every person, and it is visible to us who are alive. Reckon but from the sprightfulness of youth and the fair cheeks and full eyes of childhood, from the vigorousness and strong flexure of the joints of five-and-twenty, to the hollowness and dead paleness, to the loathsomeness and horror of a three days' burial, and we shall perceive the [10 distance to be very great and very strange. But so have I seen a rose newly springing from the clefts of its hood, and at first it was fair as the morning, and full with the dew of heaven as a lamb's fleece; but when a ruder breath had forced open its virgin modesty and dismantled its too youthful and unripe retirements, it began to put on darkness and to decline to softness and the symptoms of a sickly [20 age: it bowed the head and broke its stalk, and at night, having lost some of its leaves and all its beauty, it fell into the portion of weeds and outworn faces. The same is the portion of every man and every woman: the heritage of worms and serpents, rottenness and cold dishonor, and our beauty so changed that our acquaintance quickly know us not; and that change mingled with so much [30 horror, or else meets so with our fears and weak discouragements, that they who six hours ago tended upon us, either with charitable or ambitious services, cannot without regret stay in the room alone where the body lies stripped of its life and honor. I have read of a fair young German gentleman, who, living, often refused to be pictured, but put off the importunity of his friends' desire by [40 giving way that, after a few days' burial, they might send a painter to his vault, and, if they saw cause for it, draw the image of his death unto the life. They did so, and found his face half eaten, and his midriff and backbone full of serpents; and so he stands pictured among his armed ancestors. So does the fairest beauty change, and it will be as bad for you and me; and then what servants [50 shall we have to wait upon us in the grave? what friends to visit us? what officious people to cleanse away the moist and unwholesome cloud reflected upon our faces from the sides of the weeping vaults, which are the longest weepers for our funeral?

This discourse will be useful if we consider and practise by the following rules and considerations respectively. [60

1. All the rich and all the covetous men in the world will perceive, and all the world will perceive for them, that it is but an ill recompense for all their cares that by this time all that shall be left will be this, that the neighbors shall say, "He died a rich man;" and yet his wealth will not profit him in the grave, but hugely swell the sad accounts of doomsday. And he that kills the Lord's [70 people with unjust or ambitious wars, for an unrewarding interest shall have this character, that he threw away all the days of his life that one year might be reckoned with his name, and computed by his reign or consulship; and many men by great labors and affronts, many indignities and crimes, labor only for a pompous epitaph and a loud title upon their marble; whilst those into whose [80 possessions their heirs or kindred are entered are forgotten, and lie unregarded as their ashes, and without concernment or relation, as the turf upon the face of their grave. A man may read a sermon, the best and most passionate that ever man preached, if he shall but enter into the sepulchres of kings. In the same Escorial where the Spanish princes live in greatness and power, and decree [90 war or peace, they have wisely placed a cemetery, where their ashes and their glory shall sleep till time shall be no more; and where our kings have been crowned their ancestors lie interred, and they must walk over their grandsire's head to take his crown. There is an acre sown with royal seed, the copy of the greatest change, from rich to naked, from ceiled roofs to arched coffins, from [100 living like gods to die like men. There is enough to cool the flames of lust, to abate the heights of pride, to appease the itch of covetous desires, to sully and dash out the dissembling colors of a lustful, artificial, and imaginary beauty. There the warlike and the peaceful, the fortunate and the miserable, the beloved and the despised princes mingle their dust, and pay down their symbol of mortality, [110 and tell all the world that when we die our ashes shall be equal to kings', and our accounts easier, and our pains or our crowns shall be less. To my apprehension, it is a sad record which is left by Athenaeus concerning Ninus, the great Assyrian monarch, whose life and death are summed up in these words: "Ninus the Assyrian had an ocean of gold and other riches more than the sand in [120 the Caspian Sea; he never saw the stars, and perhaps he never desired it; he never stirred up the holy fire among the Magi, nor touched his god with the sacred rod according to the laws; he never offered sacrifice, nor worshipped the deity, nor administered justice, nor spake to his people, nor numbered them; but he was most valiant to eat and drink, and having mingled his wines, he threw the rest [130 upon the stones. This man is dead; behold his sepulchre; and now hear where Ninus is. Sometimes I was Ninus, and drew the breath of a living man, but now am nothing but clay. I have nothing but what I did eat, and what I served to myself in lust; that was and is all my portion. The wealth with which I was esteemed blessed, my enemies, meeting together, shall bear away, as the mad [140 Thyades carry a raw goat. I am gone to hell; and when I went thither I neither carried gold, nor horse, nor silver chariot. I that wore a mitre am now a little heap of dust." I know not anything that can better represent the evil condition of a wicked man or a changing greatness.

From the greatest secular dignity to dust and ashes his nature bears him; and from thence to hell his sins carry him, [150 and there he shall be for ever under the dominion of chains and devils, wrath and an intolerable calamity. This is the reward of an unsanctified condition, and a greatness ill-gotten or ill-administered.

2. Let no man extend his thoughts, or let his hopes wander towards future and far-distant events and accidental contingencies. This day is mine and yours, but ye know not what shall be on [160 the morrow; and every morning creeps out of a dark cloud, leaving behind it an ignorance and silence deep as midnight and undiscerned as are the phantasms that make a chrisom-child to smile; so that we cannot discern what comes hereafter, unless we had a light from heaven brighter than the vision of an angel, even the spirit of prophecy. Without revelation we cannot tell whether we [170 shall eat tomorrow, or whether a squinancy shall choke us; and it is written in the unrevealed folds of divine predestination that many who are this day alive shall tomorrow be laid upon the cold earth, and the women shall weep over their shroud, and dress them for their funeral. St. James, in his Epistle, notes the folly of some men his contemporaries, who were so impatient of the event [180 of tomorrow, or the accidents of next year, or the good or evils of old age, that they would consult astrologers and witches, oracles and devils, what should befall them the next calends—what should be the event of such a voyage—what God had written in his book concerning the success of battles, the election of emperors, the heirs of families, the price of merchandise, the return of the Tyrian [190 fleet, the rate of Sidonian carpets; and as they were taught by the crafty and lying demons, so they would expect the issue; and oftentimes by disposing their affairs in order towards such events, really did produce some little accidents according to their expectation, and that made them trust the oracles in greater things, and in all. Against this he opposes his counsel, that we should not search [200 after forbidden records, much less by uncertain significations; for whatsoever is disposed to happen by the order of natural causes or civil counsels may be rescinded by a peculiar decree of Providence, or be prevented by the death of the interested persons; who, while their hopes are full, and their causes conjoined, and the work brought forward, and the sickle put into the harvest, [210 and the first-fruits offered and ready to be eaten, even then, if they put forth their hand to an event that stands but at the door, at that door their body may be carried forth to burial before the expedition shall enter into fruition. When Richilda, the widow of Albert, earl of Ebersberg, had feasted the emperor Henry III, and petitioned in behalf of her nephew Welpo for some lands formerly pos- [220 sessed by the earl her husband, just as the emperor held out his hand to signify his consent, the chamber floor suddenly fell under them, and Richilda, falling upon the edge of a bathing-vessel, was bruised to death, and stayed not to see her nephew sleep in those lands which the emperor was reaching forth to her, and placed at the door of restitution.

3. As our hopes must be confined, so [230 must our designs: let us not project long designs, crafty plots, and diggings so deep that the intrigues of a design shall never be unfolded till our grandchildren have forgotten our virtues or our vices. The work of our soul is cut short, facile, sweet, and plain, and fitted to the small portions of our shorter life; and as we must not trouble our inquiry, so neither must we intricate our labor and pur- [240 poses with what we shall never enjoy. This rule does not forbid us to plant orchards, which shall feed our nephews with their fruit, for by such provisions they do something towards an imaginary immortality, and do charity to their relatives; but such projects are reprov'd which discompose our present duty by long and future designs: such which, by casting our labors to events at distance, make us less to [250 remember our death standing at the door. It is fit for a man to work for his day's wages, or to contrive for the hire of a week, or to lay a train to make provisions for such a time as is within our eye, and in our duty, and within the usual periods of man's life, for whatsoever is made necessary is also made prudent; but while we plot and busy ourselves in the toils of an ambitious war, [260 or the levies of a great estate, night enters in upon us, and tells all the world how like fools we lived and how deceived and miserably we died. Seneca tells of Senecio Cornelius, a man crafty in getting, and tenacious in holding, a great estate, and one who was as diligent in the care of his body as of his money, curious of his health as of his possessions, that he all day long attended upon his sick and [270 dying friend; but when he went away was quickly comforted, supped merrily, went to bed cheerfully, and on a sudden being surprised by a squinancy, scarce drew his breath until the morning, but by that time died, being snatched from the torrent of his fortune, and the swelling tide of wealth, and a likely hope bigger than the necessities of ten men. This accident was much noted then in [280 Rome, because it happened in so great a fortune, and in the midst of wealthy designs; and presently it made wise men to consider how imprudent a person he is who disposes of ten years to come when he is not lord of tomorrow.

* * * * *

5. Since we stay not here, being people but of a day's abode, and our age is like that of a fly, and contemporary with a gourd, we must look somewhere else [290 for an abiding city, a place in another country to fix our house in, whose walls and foundation is God, where we must find rest, or else be restless forever. For whatsoever ease we can have or fancy here is shortly to be changed into sadness or tediousness; it goes away too soon like the periods of our life, or stays too long like the sorrows of a sinner; its own weariness, or a contrary disturbance, [300 is its load; or it is eased by its revolution into vanity and forgetfulness; and where either there is sorrow or an end of joy, there can be no true felicity; which, because it must be had by some instrument, and in some period of our duration, we must carry up our affections to the mansion prepared for us above, where eternity is the measure, felicity is the state, angels are the company, the Lamb is [310 the light, and God is the portion and inheritance.

JOHN MILTON (1608-1674)

L'ALLEGRO

Hence, loathèd Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born
In Stygian cave forlorn,
'Mongst horrid shapes and shrieks and sights unholy!
Find out some uncouth cell, 5
Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night-raven sings;
There under ebon shades and low-browed rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. 10
But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
In heaven yclept¹ Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-easing Mirth;
Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,
With two sister Graces more, 15
To ivy-crownèd Bacchus bore;
Or whether (as some sager² sing)
The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a-Maying, 20
There on beds of violets blue
And fresh-blown roses washed in dew,
Filled her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom,³ blithe, and debonair.
Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee 25
Jest, and youthful Jollity,
Quips and cranks and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks and wreathèd smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek; 30
Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides.
Come, and trip it as you go,
On the light fantastic toe;
And in thy right hand lead with thee 35
The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty;
And if I give thee honor due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,

¹ called.

² more wisely.

³ sprightly.

To live with her, and live with thee, In unprovoked pleasures free: 40 To hear the lark begin his flight, And singing, startle the dull night, From his watch-tower in the skies, Till the dappled dawn doth rise; Then to come in spite of sorrow, 45 And at my window bid good-morrow, Through the sweet-briar or the vine, Or the twisted eglantine; While the cock, with lively din, Scatters the rear of darkness thin, 50 And to the stack, or the barn-door, Stoutly struts his dames before: Oft listening how the hounds and horn Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn, From the side of some hoar hill, 55 Through the high wood echoing shrill: Sometime walking, not unseen, By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green, Right against the eastern gate Where the great sun begins his state, 60 Robed in flames and amber light, The clouds in thousand liveries dight; While the ploughman, near at hand, Whistles o'er the furrowed land, And the milkmaid singeth blithe, 65 And the mower whets his scythe, And every shepherd tells his tale Under the hawthorn in the dale. Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures Whilst the landskip ¹ round it measures: 70 Russet lawns and fallows grey, Where the nibbling flocks do stray; Mountains on whose barren breast The laboring clouds do often rest; Meadows trim with daisies pied, 75 Shallow brooks and rivers wide; Towers and battlements it sees Bosomed high in tufted trees, Where perhaps some beauty lies, The cynosure ² of neighboring eyes. 80 Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes From betwixt two aged oaks, Where Corydon and Thyrsis met Are at their savory dinner set Of herbs and other country messes, 85 Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses; And then in haste her bower she leaves, With Thestylis to bind the sheaves; Or, if the earlier season lead,	Sometimes, with secure delight, The upland hamlets will invite, When the merry bells ring round, And the jocund rebecks ³ sound 95 To many a youth and many a maid Dancing in the chequered shade; And young and old come forth to play On a sunshine holiday, Till the livelong daylight fail: Then to the spicy nut-brown ale, 100 With stories told of many a feat, How faery Mab the junkets eat. She was pinched and pulled, she said; And he, by friar's lantern ⁴ led, Tells how the drudging goblin sweat 105 To earn his cream-bowl duly set, When in one night, ere glimpse of morn, His shadowy flail hath threshed the corn That ten day-laborers could not end; Then lies him down, the lubber ⁵ fiend, 110 And, stretched out all the chimney's length, Basks at the fire his hairy strength, And crop-full out of doors he flings, Ere the first cock his matin rings. Thus done the tales, to bed they creep, 115 By whispering winds soon lulled asleep. Towered cities please us then, And the busy hum of men, Where throngs of knights and barons bold, In weeds of peace high triumphs hold, 120 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes Rain influence, and judge the prize Of wit or arms, while both contend To win her grace whom all commend. There let Hymen oft appear 125 In saffron robe, with taper clear, And pomp and feast and revelry, With mask and antique pageantry; Such sights as youthful poets dream On summer eves by haunted stream. 130 Then to the well-trod stage anon, If Jonson's learned sock be on, Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child, Warble his native wood-notes wild. And ever, against eating cares, 135 Lap me in soft Lydian airs, Married to immortal verse, Such as the meeting soul may pierce, In notes with many a winding bout ⁶ Of linked sweetness long drawn out, 140 With wanton heed and giddy cunning, The melting voice through mazes running,
---	--

¹ fiddles ⁴ will o' the wisp. ⁵ awkward. ⁶ turn.

Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony;
 That Orpheus' self may heave his head 145
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heaped Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the ear
 Of Pluto to have quite set free
 His half-regained Eurydice. 150
 These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

IL PENSEROSO

Hence, vain deluding Joys,
 The brood of Folly without father bred!
 How little you bested,¹
 Or fill the fixèd mind with all your toys!
 Dwell in some idle brain, 5
 And fancies fond² with gaudy shapes possess,
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay motes that people the sunbeams,
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus'
 train. 10
 But hail, thou Goddess sage and holy,
 Hail, divinest Melancholy!
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit the sense of human sight,
 And therefore to our weaker view 15
 O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;
 Black, but such as in esteem
 Prince Memnon's sister might beseech,
 Or that starred Ethiop queen that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above 20
 The sea nymphs', and their powers offended.
 Yet thou art higher far descended:
 Thee bright-haired Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore;
 His daughter she (in Saturn's reign) 25
 Such mixture was not held a stain).
 Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades
 Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
 Whilst yet there was no fear of Jove. 30
 Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
 Sober, steadfast, and demure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,
 Flowing with majestic train,

¹ profit.² foolish.

And sable stole of cypress lawn 35
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
 Come, but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step, and musing gait,
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes: 40
 There, held-in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast.
 And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet,
 Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet, 46
 And hears the Muses in a ring
 Aye round about Jove's altar sing;
 And add to these retirèd Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure; 50
 But first, and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheelèd throne,
 The cherub Contemplation;
 And the mute Silence hist along, 55
 'Less Philomel³ will deign a song,
 In her sweetest, saddest plight,
 Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
 While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke
 Gently o'er the accustomed oak. 60 Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!
 Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among,
 I woo, to hear thy even-song;
 And, missing thee, I walk unseen 65
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
 And oft, as if her head she bowed, 71
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off curfew sound
 Over some wide-watered shore, 75
 Swinging slow with sullen roar;
 Or if the air will not permit,
 Some still removèd place will fit,
 Where glowing embers through the room
 Teach light to counterfeit a gloom, 80
 Far from all resort of mirth,
 Save the cricket on the hearth,
 Or the bellman's drowsy charm
 To bless the doors from nightly harm.
 Or let my lamp, at midnight hour, 85
 Be seen in some high lonely tower

³ the nightingale.

Where I may oft outwatch the Bear
 With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
 The spirit of Plato, to unfold
 What worlds or what vast regions hold 90
 The immortal mind that hath forsook
 Her mansion in this fleshly nook;
 And of those demons that are found
 In fire, air, flood, or underground,
 Whose power hath a true consent, 95
 With planet or with element.
 Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
 In sceptered pall come sweeping by,
 Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
 Or the tale of Troy divine, 100
 Or what (though rare) of later age
 Ennobled hath the buskined stage.
 But, O sad Virgin! that thy power
 Might raise Musæus from his bower;
 Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing 105
 Such notes as, warbled to the string,
 Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
 And made Hell grant what love did seek;
 Or call up him that left half-told
 The story of Cambuscan bold, 110
 Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
 And who had Canace to wife
 That owned the virtuous¹ ring and glass,
 And of the wondrous horse of brass,
 On which the Tartar king did ride; 115
 And if aught else great bards beside
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
 Of tourneys, and of trophies hung,
 Of forests, and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the
 ear. 120
 Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till civil-suited Morn appear,
 Not tricked² and frownced as she was wont
 With the Attic boy to hunt,
 But kerchieft in a comely cloud, 125
 While rocking winds are piping loud;
 Or ushered with a shower still,
 When the gust hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute-drops from off the eaves. 130
 And when the sun begins to fling
 His flaring beams, me, Goddess, bring
 To archèd walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
 Of pine, or monumental oak, 135
 Where the rude axe with heavèd stroke
 Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
 Or fright them from their hallowed haunt.

² adorned.

There in close covert by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look, 140
 Hide me from day's garish eye,
 While the bee, with honeyed thigh,
 That at her flowery work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring,
 With such consort as they keep, 145
 Entice the dewy-feathered Sleep;
 And let some strange mysterious dream
 Wave at his wings in airy stream
 Of lively portraiture displayed,
 Softly on my eyelids laid; 150
 And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some spirit to mortals good,
 Or the unseen Genius of the wood.
 But let my due feet never fail 155
 To walk the studious cloister's pale,³
 And love the high embowèd roof,
 With antique pillars massy proof,
 And storied windows richly dight,⁴
 Casting a dim religious light. 160
 There let the pealing organ blow
 To the full-voiced quire below
 In service high and anthems clear
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies, 165
 And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.
 And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell⁵ 170
 Of every star that heaven doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew,
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.
 These pleasures, Melancholy, give, 175
 And I with thee will choose to live.

LYCIDAS

In this Monody the Author bewails a learned Friend, unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester on the Irish Seas, 1637; and by occasion foretells the ruin of our corrupted Clergy, then in their height.

Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more,
 Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
 I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
 And with forced fingers rude

³ enclosure.⁴ ornamented⁵ reason, study.

Shatter your leaves before the mellowing
year. 5

Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear
Compels me to disturb your season due;
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.

Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew 10

Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter¹ to the parching wind,
Without the meed² of some melodious tear.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well 15
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth
spring;

Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.

Hence with denial vain and coy excuse;
So may some gentle Muse

With lucky words favor my destined urn,
And as he passes turn, 21

And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.

For we were nursed upon the self-same
hill,

Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade,
and rill;

Together both, ere the high lawns appeared 25

Under the opening eyelids of the morn,
We drove a-field, and both together heard
What time the grey-fly winds her sultry
horn,

Battening³ our flocks with the fresh dews
of night,

Oft till the star that rose at evening,
bright, 30

Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
Tempered to the oaten flute;

Rough Satyrs danced, and Fauns with cloven heel

From the glad sound would not be absent
long; 35

And old Damoetas loved to hear our
song.

But oh! the heavy change, now thou
art gone,

Now thou art gone, and never must return!

Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert
caves,

With wild thyme and the gadding vine
o'ergrown, 40

And all their echoes, mourn.

The willows and the hazel copses green

Shall now no more be seen,

Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.

As killing as the canker to the rose, 45
Or taint-worm to the weanling⁴ herds that graze,

Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear,

When first the white-thorn blows;

Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep 50

Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?

For neither were ye playing on the steep
Where your old bards, the famous Druids,

lie,

Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,

Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard
stream. 55

Ay me, I fondly⁵ dream!

Had ye been there—for what could that have done?

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus
bore,

The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament, 60

When by the rout that made the hideous
roar

His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian
shore?

Alas! what boots it with uncessant care
To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's

trade, 65

And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?

Were it not better done, as others use,

To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,

Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair?

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth
raise 70

(That last infirmity of noble mind)

To scorn delights and live laborious days;

But the fair guerdon⁶ when we hope to find,

And think to burst out into sudden blaze,

Comes the blind Fury with the abhorrèd
shears, 75

¹ toss.² tribute.³ fattening.⁴ young, weaned.⁵ foolishly.⁶ reward.

And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise," Phœbus replied, and touched my trembling ears:
"Fame is no plant that grows on mortal
soil,
Nor in the glistering foil Set off to the world, nor in broad rumor
lies; 80
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure
eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."
O fountain Arethuse, and thou honored
flood, 85
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood:
But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea,
That came in Neptune's plea. 90
He asked the waves, and asked the felon¹
winds,
What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?
And questioned every gust of rugged
wings
That blows from off each beakèd promontory:
They know not of his story; 95
And sage Hippotades their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon
strayed;
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope with all her sisters played.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark, 100
Built in the eclipse, and rigged with curses
dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.
Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge, Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge 105
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with
woe.
"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"²
Last came, and last did go,
The pilot of the Galilean lake;

¹ criminal.² child.

Two massy keys he bore of metals twain 110
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain).
He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespoke:
"How well could I have spared for^{*} thee,
young swain,
Enow of such as, for their bellies' sake Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold! 115
Of other care they little reckoning make Than how to scramble at the shearers'
feast
And shove away the worthy bidden guest;
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learnt aught else
the least 120
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What reck's it them? What need they?
They are sped;³
And when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel⁴ pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed, 125
But swoln with wind and the rank mist
they draw,
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread;
Besides what the grim wolf with privy
paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no
more." 131
Return, Alpheus; the dread voice is
past
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian
Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither
cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues. 135
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use⁵
Of shades and wanton winds and gushing
brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart star⁶ sparely
looks,
Throw hither all your quaint enamelled
eyes,

^{*} accomplish their end.
⁵ dwell.⁴ harsh, discordant.
⁶ the Dog-star, Sirius.

That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers, ¹⁴⁰
And purple all the ground with vernal
flowers.
Bring the rather¹ primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freaked with jet,
The glowing violet, ¹⁴⁵
The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive
head,
And every flower that sad embroidery
wears;
Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies. ¹⁵¹
For so, to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise:
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled; ¹⁵⁵
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou perhaps under the whelming
tide
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous
world;
Or whether thou, to our moist² vows
denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old, ¹⁶⁰
Where the great vision of the guarded mount Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's
hold.
Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth;³
And O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.
Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep
no more, ¹⁶⁵
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead, Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor;
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks⁴ his beams, and with new-spangled ore ¹⁷⁰
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,

¹ early.² tearful.³ pity.⁴ adorns.

Through the dear might of Him that walked the waves,
Where, other groves and other streams
along, ¹⁷⁴
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive⁵ nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and
love.
There entertain him all the saints above,
In solemn troops and sweet societies, ¹⁷⁹
That sing, and singing in their glory move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no
more;
Henceforth thou art the Genius⁶ of the
shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.
Thus sang the uncouth⁷ swain to the oaks and rills, ¹⁸⁶
While the still morn went out with sandals grey;
He touched the tender stops of various quills,⁸
With eager thought warbling his Doric
lay:
And now the sun had stretched out all the hills, ¹⁹⁰
And now was dropped into the western bay.
At last he rose, and twitched his mantle
blue:
To-morrow to fresh woods and pastures
new.

SONNETS

ON HIS HAVING ARRIVED AT THE AGE OF TWENTY-THREE

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of
youth,
Stolen on his wing my three and twentieth
year!
My hasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud or blossom
shew'th.
Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth ⁵
That I to manhood am arrived so near;
And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
That some more timely-happy spirits
endu'th.

⁵ inexpressible. ⁶ guardian angel. ⁷ unknown. ⁸ reeds.

Yet be it less or more, or soon or slow,
It shall be still in strictest measure
even 10
To that same lot, however mean or high, Toward which Time leads me, and the will
of Heaven;
All is, if I have grace to use it so,
As ever in my great Task-Master's eye.

ON SHAKESPEARE

What needs my Shakespeare for his honored bones
The labor of an age in piled stones?
Or that his hallowed relics should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?
Dear son of memory, great heir of fame, 5
What need'st thou such weak witness of thy name?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thyself a livelong monument.
For whilst, to the shame of slow-endeavoring art,
Thy easy numbers flow, and that each
heart 10
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued¹
book
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took,
Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving,
And so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie 15
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

TO THE LORD GENERAL CROM- WELL

MAY, 1652

ON THE PROPOSALS OF CERTAIN MINISTERS
AT THE COMMITTEE FOR PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL

Cromwell, our chief of men, who through a cloud
Not of war only, but detractions rude,
Guided by faith and matchless fortitude,
To peace and truth thy glorious way
hast ploughed,

¹ invaluable.

And on the neck of crownèd Fortune
proud 5
Hast reared God's trophies, and his work pursued,
While Darwen stream, with blood of Scots
imbrued,
And Dunbar field, resounds thy praises
loud,
And Worcester's laureate wreath: yet much remains To conquer still; Peace hath her victories 10
No less renowned than War: new foes
arise,
Threatening to bind our souls with secular chains.
Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their
maw.

ON HIS BLINDNESS

When I consider how my light is spent Ere half my days, in this dark world and
wide,
And that one talent which is death to hide
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
To serve therewith my Maker, and present
My true account, lest he returning chide;
"Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"
I fondly ask. But Patience, to prevent That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not need
Either man's work or his own gifts.
Who best 10
Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best.
His state
Is kingly: thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without
rest;
They also serve who only stand and wait."

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIED- MONT

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains
cold;

Even them who kept thy truth so pure of
old,
When all our fathers worshipped stocks
and stones,
Forget not: in thy book record their groans 5
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piedmontese, that rolled Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow 10
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth
sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundredfold, who, having learnt thy
way,
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

TO CYRIACK SKINNER

Cyriack, this three years' day these eyes, though clear
To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of light, their seeing have forgot;
Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
Of sun or moon or star throughout the
year, 5
Or man or woman. Yet I argue not Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot
Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, to have lost them
overplied 10
In liberty's defence, my noble task,
Of which all Europe talks from side to
side.
This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask
Content, though blind, had I no better guide.

ON HIS DECEASED WIFE

Methought I saw my late espoused saint
Brought to me like Alcestis from the grave,

Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave,
Rescued from Death by force, though pale and faint.
Mine, as whom washed from spot of child-bed taint 5
Purification in the old law did save,
And such as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in Heaven without restraint,
Came vested all in white, pure as her mind.
Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied
sight 10
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
So clear as in, no face with more delight.
But, oh! as to embrace me she inclined,
I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

PARADISE LOST

BOOK I

THE ARGUMENT

This First Book proposes, first in brief,
the whole subject,—Man's disobedience,
and the loss thereupon of Paradise,
wherein he was placed: then touches
the prime cause of his fall,—the Serpent, or rather Satan in the Serpent;
who, revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of Angels, was,
by the command of God, driven out of Heaven, with all his crew, into the great Deep. Which action passed over, the Poem hastens into the midst of things;
presenting Satan, with his Angels, now fallen into Hell—described here, not in the Center (for Heaven and earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed), but in a place of utter darkness, fitliest called Chaos. Here Satan with his Angels, lying on the burning lake, thunderstruck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion; calls up him who, next in order and dignity, lay by him: they confer of their miserable fall. Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded. They rise; their numbers; array of battle; their chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech; comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven; but tells them lastly of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy, or report, in Heaven—for that Angels were long before this visible creation was the opinion of many ancient Fathers. To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine thereon, he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium, the palace of Satan, rises, suddenly built out of the Deep: the infernal Peers there sit in council.

Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful seat, 5
Sing, Heavenly Muse, that on the secret top
Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
That shepherd who first taught the chosen seed
In the beginning how the heavens and earth
Rose out of Chaos: or, if Sion hill 10
Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flowed Fast¹ by the oracle of God, I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar
Above the Aonian mount, while it pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
And chiefly Thou, O Spirit, that dost prefer 17
Before all temples the upright heart and pure,
Instruct me, for Thou know'st; Thou from the first
Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread, 20
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast Abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant: what in me is dark,

¹ close.

Illumine; what is low, raise and support;
That to the highth of this great argument
I may assert² Eternal Providence, 25
And justify the ways of God to men.

Say first—for Heaven hides nothing
from Thy view,
Nor the deep tract of Hell—say first what cause
Moved our grand Parents, in that happy state,
Favored of Heaven so highly, to fall off 30
From their Creator, and transgress his will For³ one restraint, lords of the world besides.

Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?
The infernal Serpent; he it was, whose guile,

Stirred up with envy and revenge, deceived 35
The mother of mankind, what time his pride
Had cast him out from Heaven, with all his host

Of rebel Angels, by whose aid, aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,
He trusted to have equalled the Most High, 40

If he opposed; and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God,
Raised impious war in Heaven, and battle proud,

With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power Hurled headlong flaming from the ethereal 45
sky,

With hideous ruin and combustion, down
To bottomless perdition; there to dwell
In adamant chains and penal fire,
Who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.

Nine times the space that measures day
and night 50
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquished, rolling in the fiery gulf,
Confounded, though immortal. But his doom

Reserved him to more wrath; for now the thought
Both of lost happiness and lasting pain 55
Torments him; round he throws his baleful eyes,

That witnessed huge affliction and dismay,
Mixed with obdurate pride, and steadfast hate.

hate.

hate.

² vindicate.³ because of.

At once, as far as Angel's ken, he views
 The dismal situation waste and wild. 60
 A dungeon horrible on all sides round
 As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames
 No light; but rather darkness visible
 Served only to discover sights of woe, Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where
 peace 65
 And rest can never dwell; hope never comes
 That comes to all; but torture without end
 Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
 With ever-burning sulphur unconsumed.
 Such place Eternal Justice had prepared 70
 For those rebellious; here their prison ordained
 In utter darkness, and their portion set,
 As far removed from God and light of
 Heaven,
 As from the center thrice to the utmost pole.
 Oh how unlike the place from whence they
 fell! 75
 There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelmed
 With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous
 fire,
 He soon discerns; and weltering by his
 side
 One next himself in power, and next in crime,
 Long after known in Palestine, and named Beëlzebub. To whom the Arch-Enemy, 81
 And thence in Heaven called Satan, with bold words
 Breaking the horrid silence, thus began:—
 "If thou beest he—but oh how fallen!
 how changed
 From him who, in the happy realms of
 light, 85
 Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
 Myriads, though bright!—if he, whom mutual league,
 United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
 And hazard in the glorious enterprise, Joined with me once, now misery hath joined 90
 In equal ruin; into what pit thou seest
 From what highth fallen, so much the stronger proved
 He with his thunder: and till then who knew

The force of those dire arms? Yet not for those,
 Nor what the potent Victor in his rage 95
 Can else inflict, do I repent or change, Though changed in outward luster, that fixed mind,
 And high disdain from sense of injured
 merit,
 That with the Mightiest raised me to contend,
 And to the fierce contention brought along Innumerable force of Spirits armed, 101
 That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
 His utmost power with adverse power opposed
 In dubious battle on the plains of Heaven, And shook his throne. What though the field be lost? 105
 All is not lost: the unconquerable will,
 And study of revenge, immortal hate,
 And courage never to submit or yield,
 And what is else not to be overcome;
 That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for
 grace 111
 With suppliant knee, and deify his power
 Who, from the terror of this arm, so late Doubted his empire¹—that were low indeed;
 That were an ignominy and shame beneath 115
 This downfall; since by fate the strength of gods
 And this empyreal substance cannot fail;
 Since, through experience of this great event,
 In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,
 We may with more successful hope resolve 120
 To wage by force or guile eternal war,
 Irreconcilable to our grand Foe,
 Who now triumphs, and in the excess of joy
 Sole reigning holds the tyranny of
 Heaven."
 So spake the apostate Angel, though in pain, 125
 Vaunting aloud, but racked with deep despair;
 And him thus answered soon his bold com-peer:—

¹ sovereignty.

"O Prince! O Chief of many thronèd
 powers
 That led the embattled Seraphim to war
 Under thy conduct,¹ and, in dreadful
 deeds 130
 Fearless, endangered Heaven's perpetual
 King,
 And put to proof his high supremacy, Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or
 fate!
 Too well I see and rue the dire event
 That with sad overthrow and foul defeat 135
 Hath lost us Heaven, and all this mighty host
 In horrible destruction laid thus low,
 As far as gods and heavenly essences
 Can perish: for the mind and spirit remains
 Invincible, and vigor soon returns, 140
 Though all our glory extinct, and happy
 state
 Here swallowed up in endless misery.
 But what if he our Conqueror (whom I
 now
 "Of force believe almighty, since no less Than such could have o'erpowered such force as ours) 145
 Have left us this our spirit and strength entire,
 Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
 That we may so suffice² his vengeful ire,
 Or do him mightier service as his thralls
 By right of war, whate'er his business
 be, 150
 Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
 Or do his errands in the gloomy Deep?
 What can it then avail, though yet we feel Strength undiminished, or eternal being
 To undergo eternal punishment?" 155
 Whereto with speedy words the Arch-Fiend replied:—
 "Fallen Cherub, to be weak is miserable, Doing or suffering: but of this be sure—
 To do aught good never will be our task,
 But ever to do ill our sole delight, 160
 As being the contrary to his high will Whom we resist. If then his providence
 Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
 Our labor must be to pervert that end,
 And out of good still to find means of evil;
 Which oftimes may succeed so as perhaps 166

¹ command.² satisfy.

Shall grieve him, if I fail not, and disturb His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
 But see! the angry Victor hath recalled
 His ministers of vengeance and pursuit 170 Back to the gates of Heaven; the sulphurous hail,
 Shot after us in storm, o'erblown hath laid
 The fiery surge that from the precipice Of Heaven received us falling; and the thunder,
 Winged with red lightning and impetuous
 rage, 175
 Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases
 now
 To bellow through the vast and boundless
 Deep.
 Let us not slip³ the occasion, whether scorn
 Or satiate fury yield it from our Foe.
 Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild, 180
 The seat of desolation, void of light,
 Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
 Casts pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend
 From off the tossing of these fiery waves;
 There rest, if any rest can harbor there; 185
 And, reassembling our afflicted powers, Consult how we may henceforth most offend
 Our Enemy, our own loss how repair,
 How overcome this dire calamity,
 What reinforcement we may gain from
 hope, 190
 If not what resolution from despair."
 Thus Satan, talking to his nearest mate,
 With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
 That sparkling blazed; his other parts besides,
 Prone on the flood, extended long and large, 195
 Lay floating many a rood, in bulk as huge
 As whom⁴ the fables name of monstrous
 size,
 Titanian, or Earth-born, that warred on Jove,
 Briareos or Typhon, whom the den
 By ancient Tarsus held, or that sea-beast
 Leviathan, which God of all his works 201 Created hugest that swim the ocean-
 stream.

³ let slip.⁴ those whom.

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway
foam,
The pilot of some small night-foundered¹ skiff
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixèd anchor in his scaly rind, 206
Moors by his side under the lee, while
night
Invests the sea, and wishèd morn delays.
So stretched out huge in length the Arch-Fiend lay,
Chained on the burning lake; nor ever thence 210
Had risen or heaved his head, but that the
will
And high permission of all-ruling Heaven Left him at large to his own dark designs,
That with reiterated crimes he might Heap on himself damnation, while he sought 215
Evil to others, and enraged might see How all his malice served but to bring
forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy, shown
On Man by him seduced; but on himself Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance poured. 220
Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature; on each hand the flames
Driven backward slope their pointing spires, and, rolled
In billows, leave i' the midst a horrid vail.
Then with expanded wings he steers his
flight 225
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight; till on dry
land
He lights—if it were land that ever burned
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire,
And such appeared in hue, as when the force 230
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shattered side
Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible
And fuelled entrails thence conceiving fire, Sublimed² with mineral fury, aid the winds, 235
And leave a singèd bottom all involved
With stench and smoke: such resting found the sole

¹ overtaken by night.² sublimated.

Of unblest feet. Him followed his next mate,
Both glorying to have scaped the Stygian
flood
As gods, and by their own recovered
strength, 240
Not by the sufferance of supernal power.
“Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,”
Said then the lost Archangel, “this the seat
That we must change for Heaven? this mournful gloom
For that celestial light? Be it so, since
he 245
Who now is sovran can dispose and bid
What shall be right: farthest from him is
best,
Whom reason hath equalled, force hath made supreme Above his equals. Farewell, happy fields, Where joy forever dwells! Hail, horrors!
hail, 250
Infernal world! and thou, profoundest
Hell,
Receive thy new possessor, one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time.
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of
Heaven. 255
What matter where, if I be still the same,
And what I should be, all but³ less than he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least
We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy, will not drive us hence:
Here we may reign secure, and in my choice 261
To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell, than serve in Heaven.
But wherefore let we then our faithful
friends,
The associates and co-partners of our loss, 265
Lie thus astonished⁴ on the oblivious pool,
And call them not to share with us their
part
In this unhappy mansion, or once more
With rallied arms to try what may be yet Regained in Heaven, or what more lost in Hell?” 270
So Satan spake; and him Beëlzebub

³ only.⁴ confounded.

Thus answered:—"Leader of those armies
 bright
 Which but the Omnipotent none could have foiled,
 If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge
 Of hope in fears and dangers—heard so oft 275
 In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge
 Of battle when it raged, in all assaults
 Their surest signal—they will soon resume
 New courage and revive, though now they
 lie Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of
 fire, 280
 As we erewhile, astounded and amazed:
 No wonder, fallen such a pernicious
 highth!"
 He scarce had ceased when the superior
 Fiend
 Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous shield,
 Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
 Behind him cast. The broad circumference 286
 Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
 Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views
 At evening from the top of Fesole,
 Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands, 290
 Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe.
 His spear—to equal which the tallest pine Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
 Of some great ammiral,¹ were but a wand—
 He walked with, to support uneasy
 steps 295
 Over the burning marl,² not like those steps
 On Heaven's azure; and the torrid clime Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with
 fire.
 Nathless he so endured, till on the beach
 Of that inflamèd sea he stood, and called His legions, Angel forms, who lay entranced, 301
 Thick as autumnal leaves, that strew the brooks
 In Vallombrosa, where the Etrurian
 shades,
 High over-arched, embower; or scattered sedge

¹ flag-ship.² soil

Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion
 armed 305
 Hath vexed the Red Sea coast, whose waves o'erthrew
 Busiris and his Memphian chivalry,
 While with perfidious hatred they pursued
 The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
 From the safe shore their floating carcasses 310
 And broken chariot-wheels. So thick bestrown,
 Abject and lost lay these, covering the
 flood,
 Under amazement of³ their hideous
 change.
 He called so loud, that all the hollow deep
 Of Hell resounded:—"Princes, Poten-tates, 315
 Warriors, the Flower of Heaven,—once
 yours, now lost,
 If such astonishment as this can seize Eternal Spirits! Or have ye chosen this
 place
 After the toil of battle to repose
 Your wearied virtue, for the ease you
 find 320
 To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven?
 Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
 To adore the Conqueror, who now beholds
 Cherub and Seraph rolling in the flood
 With scattered arms and ensigns, till anon
 His swift pursuers from Heaven-gates discern 326
 The advantage, and descending tread us
 down
 Thus drooping, or with linkèd thunderbolts
 Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf?
 Awake, arise, or be for ever fall'n!" 330
 They heard, and were abashed, and up they sprung
 Upon the wing; as when men, wont to watch,
 On duty sleeping found by whom they dread,
 Rouse and bestir themselves ere well
 awake.
 Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
 In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel; 336
 Yet to their General's voice they soon
 obeyed,
 Innumerable. As when the potent rod

³ overwhelmed by.

Of Amram's son,¹ in Egypt's evil day, Waved round the coast, up-called a pitchy
 cloud 340
 Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
 That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
 Like night, and darkened all the land of Nile:
 So numberless were those bad Angels seen
 Hovering on wing under the cope of Hell,
 'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires; 346
 Till, as a signal given, the uplifted spear
 Of their great Sultan waving to direct Their course, in even balance down they
 light
 On the firm brimstone, and fill all the
 plain: 350
 A multitude like which the populous
 North Poured never from her frozen loins, to pass Rhene or the Danaw,² when her barbarous sons
 Came like a deluge on the South, and
 spread
 Beneath³ Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.
 Forthwith from every squadron and each
 band 356
 The heads and leaders thither haste where
 stood
 Their great Commander; godlike shapes, and forms
 Excelling human, princely Dignities,
 And Powers that erst in Heaven sat on thrones; 360
 Though of their names in Heavenly records
 now
 Be no memorial, blotted out and rased
 By their rebellion from the Books of Life.
 Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve Got them new names, till, wandering o'er
 the Earth, 365
 Through God's high sufferance, for the trial of man,
 By falsities and lies the greatest part
 Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
 God their Creator, and the invisible Glory of him that made them, to transform 370
 Oft to the image of a brute, adorned
 With gay religions⁴ full of pomp and gold,
 And devils to adore for deities:

¹ Moses. ² Danube. ³ south of. ⁴ rites.

Then were they known to men by various names,
 And various idols through the heathen
 world. 375
 Say, Muse, their names then known,
 who first, who last,
 Roused from the slumber on that fiery
 couch,
 At their great Emperor's call, as next in
 worth,
 Came singly where he stood on the bare
 strand,
 While the promiscuous crowd stood yet
 aloof. 380
 The chief were those who from the pit of Hell
 Roaming to seek their prey on Earth, durst fix
 Their seats, long after, next the seat of God,
 Their altars by his altar, gods adored
 Among the nations round, and durst
 abide 385
 Jehovah thundering out of Sion, throned
 Between the Cherubim; yea, often placed Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
 Abominations; and with cursèd things
 His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned,
 And with their darkness durst affront his
 light. 391
 First, Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with
 blood
 Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
 Though, for the noise of drums and tim-brels loud,
 Their children's cries unheard that passed through fire 395
 To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite Worshipped in Rabba and her watery
 plain,
 In Argob and in Basan, to the stream
 Of utmost Arnon. Nor content with such Audacious neighborhood, the wisest heart
 Of Solomon he led by fraud to build 401
 His temple right against the temple of God,
 On that opprobrious hill, and made his grove
 The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet
 thence
 And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell. 405
 Next, Chemos, the obscene dædal of Moab's sons,

From Aroer to Nebo and the wild
Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon
And Horonáim, Seon's realm, beyond
The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines,
And Eleále to the Asphaltic pool; 411
Peor his other name, when he enticed
Israel in Sittim, on their march from Nile,
To do him wanton rites, which cost them
woe.

Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarged 415
Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
Of Moloch homicide, lust hard by hate, Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.

With these came they who, from the bordering flood

Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts Egypt from Syrian ground, had general
names 421

Of Baälim and Ashtaroth: those male, These feminine. For Spirits, when they
please,

Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure,
Not tied or manacled with joint or limb, 426
Nor founded on the brittle strength of
bones,

Like cumbrous flesh; but, in what shape
they choose,

Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
Can execute their æery purposes, 430
And works of love or enmity fulfil.

For those the race of Israel oft forsook
Their living Strength, and unfrequented left

His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods; for which their heads as
low 435

Bowed down in battle, sunk before the spear

Of despicable foes. With these in troop Came Astoreth, whom the Phenicians called

Astarté, Queen of Heaven, with crescent horns;

To whose bright image nightly by the
moon 440

Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs;
In Sion also not unsung, where stood
Her temple on the offensive mountain,
built

By that uxorious king whose heart, though
large,

Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell 445

To idols foul. Thammuz came next behind,

Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
While smooth Adonis from his native rock Ran purple to the sea, supposed with
blood 451

Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love-tale

Infected Sion's daughters with like heat, Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch

Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led, 455
His eye surveyed the dark idolatries

Of alienated Judah. Next came one Who mourned in earnest, when the captive
ark

Maimed his brute image, head and hands
lopt off

In his own temple, on the grunsel-edge,¹ 460
Where he fell flat, and shamed his worshippers:

Dagon his name, sea-monster, upward
man

And downward fish; yet had his temple
high

Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast

Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon, 465
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat

Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams.

He also against the house of God was bold:
A leper once he lost, and gained a king, 471

Ahaz, his sottish conqueror, whom he drew God's altar to disparage and displace

For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings, and adore the gods 475

Whom he had vanquished. After these appeared

A crew who, under names of old renown,
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,

With monstrous shapes and sorceries
abused²

Fanatic Egypt and her priests, to seek 480
Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms

Rather than human. Nor did Israel scape
The infection, when their borrowed gold composed

¹ threshold.

² dec-ived.

The calf in Oreb, and the rebel king
 Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan, 485
 Likening his Maker to the grazèd ox—Jehovah, who, in one night, when he passed
 From Egypt marching, equalled with one stroke
 Both her first-born and all her bleating
 gods.
 Belial came last, than whom a Spirit more lewd 490
 Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to
 love
 Vice for itself. To him no temple stood Or altar smoked; yet who more oft than
 he
 In temples and at altars, when the priest
 Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons, who filled
 With lust and violence the house of God?
 In courts and palaces he also reigns, 497
 And in luxurious cities, where the noise
 Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
 And injury and outrage; and when night Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons 501
 Of Belial, flown¹ with insolence and wine.
 Witness the streets of Sodom, and that
 night
 In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
 Exposed a matron, to avoid worse rape. 505
 These were the prime in order and in
 might;
 The rest were long to tell, though far renowned
 The Ionian gods—of Javan's issue held Gods, yet confessed later than Heaven and Earth,
 Their boasted parents;—Titan, Heaven's first-born, 510
 With his enormous brood, and birthright seized
 By younger Saturn; he from mightier Jove,
 His own and Rhea's son, like measure
 found;
 So Jove usurping reigned. These, first in Crete
 And Ida known, thence on the snowy top
 Of cold Olympus ruled the middle air, 516
 Their highest Heaven; or on the Delphian cliff,
 Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
 Of Doric land; or who with Saturn old Fled over Adria to the Hesperian fields, 520

¹ flushed

And o'er the Celtic roamed the utmost isles.
 All these and more came flocking; but with looks Downcast and damp, yet such wherein appeared Obscure some glimpse of joy, to have found their Chief
 Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost 525
 In loss itself; which on his countenance
 cast
 Like doubtful hue. But he, his wonted
 pride
 Soon recollecting,² with high words that bore
 Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
 Their fainting courage, and dispelled their fears: 530
 Then straight commands that at the warlike sound
 Of trumpets loud and clarions, be up-reared
 His mighty standard. That proud honor claimed Azazel as his right, a Cherub tall:
 Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled 535
 The imperial ensign, which, full high advanced,
 Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
 With gems and golden lustre rich em-
 blazed,
 Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds: 540
 At which the universal host up-sent A shout that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
 Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.
 All in a moment through the gloom were
 seen
 Ten thousand banners rise into the air, 545
 With orient colors waving; with them rose
 A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
 Appeared, and serried³ shields in thick
 array
 Of depth immeasurable. Anon they move
 In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood 550 Of flutes and soft recorders⁴—such as
 raised
 To highth of noblest temper heroes old

² recovering.³ interlocked.⁴ flageolets.

Arming to battle, and instead of rage Deliberate valor breathed, firm and unmoved
 With dread of death to flight or foul retreat; 555
 Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage,¹
 With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
 Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow
 and pain
 From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
 Breathing united force with fixèd thought,
 Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed 561
 Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil; and
 now
 Advanced in view they stand, a horrid front
 Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
 Of warriors old, with ordered spear and shield, 565
 Awaiting what command their mighty
 Chief
 Had to impose. He through the armèd files
 Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse²
 The whole battalion views—their order
 due,
 Their visages and stature as of gods; 570 Their number last he sums. And now his
 heart
 Distends with pride, and hardening in his strength,
 Glories; for never, since created man,
 Met such embodied force as, named³ with these,
 Could merit more than that small infantry 575
 Warred on by cranes: though all the giant brood
 Of Phlegra with the heroic race were joined That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each
 side
 Mixed with auxiliar gods; and what re-sounds
 In fable or romance of Uther's son, 580
 Begirt with British and Armoric knights;
 And all who since, baptized or infidel,
 Jousted in Aspramont, or Montalban,
 Damasco, or Marocco, or Trebisond;

¹ assuage.² across.³ compared.

Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore 585
 When Charlemain with all his peerage fell
 By Fontarabbia. Thus far these beyond
 Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed⁴ Their dread Commander. He, above the
 rest
 In shape and gesture proudly eminent, 590 Stood like a tower; his form had yet not lost
 All her original brightness, nor appeared
 Less than Archangel ruined, and the excess Of glory obscured: as when the sun new-risen
 Looks through the horizontal misty air 595 Shorn of his beams, or from behind the
 moon,
 In dim eclipse, disastrous⁵ twilight sheds
 On half the nations, and with fear of change
 Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet shone Above them all the Archangel; but his
 face 600
 Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and
 care
 Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
 Of dauntless courage, and considerate⁶
 pride
 Waiting revenge. Cruel his eye, but cast
 Signs of remorse and passion, to behold 605
 The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemned
 Forever now to have their lot in pain;
 Millions of Spirits for his fault amerced⁷
 Of Heaven, and from eternal splendors flung 610
 For his revolt; yet faithful how they
 stood,
 Their glory withered: as, when Heaven's
 fire
 Hath scathed the forest oaks or mountain
 pines,
 With singèd top their stately growth,
 though bare,
 Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared 615
 To speak; whereat their doubled ranks
 they bend
 From wing to wing, and half enclose him
 round

⁴ obeyed.⁵ meditative.⁶ threatening disaster.⁷ deprived.

With all his peers: attention held them
mute.

Thrice he assayed, and thrice, in spite of
scorn,

Tears, such as Angels weep, burst forth: at
last 620

Words interwove with sighs found out their way:—

“O myriads of immortal Spirits! O
Powers

Matchless, but with the Almighty!—and that strife

Was not inglorious, though the event¹ was dire,

As this place testifies, and this dire change, Hateful to utter. But what power of
mind, 626

Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have feared

How such united force of gods, how such As stood like these, could ever know repulse? 630

For who can yet believe, though after
loss,

That all these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied Heaven, shall fail to reascend,

Self-raised, and repossess their native
seat?

For me, be witness all the host of Heaven,
If counsels different, or danger shunned 636

By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns

Monarch in Heaven, till then as one secure
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
Consent or custom, and his regal state 640
Put forth at full, but still his strength concealed;

Which tempted our attempt, and wrought
our fall.

Henceforth his might we know, and know
our own,

So as not either to provoke, or dread

New war provoked. Our better part remains 645

To work² in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not; that he no less

At length from us may find, who overcomes

By force hath overcome but half his foe.
Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife 650

¹ outcome.

² accomplish.

There went a fame in Heaven that he ere
long

Intended to create, and therein plant
A generation whom his choice regard

Should favor equal to the Sons of Heaven.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps 655

Our first eruption,³ thither, or elsewhere;

For this infernal pit shall never hold

Celestial Spirits in bondage, nor the Abyss

Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts

Full counsel must mature. Peace is despaired, 660

For who can think submission? War, then, war,

Open or understood,⁴ must be resolved.”

He spake; and, to confirm his words, outflew

Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs

Of mighty Cherubim; the sudden blaze 665

Far round illumined Hell; highly they raged

Against the Highest, and fierce with graspèd arms

Clashed on their sounding shields the din
of war,

Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly
top 670

Belched fire and rolling smoke; the rest entire

Shone with a glossy scurf, undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,

The work of sulphur. Thither, winged with speed,

A numerous brigad hastened: as when bands 675

Of pioneers, with spade and pickaxe
armed,

Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them
on:

Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts 680

Were always downward bent, admiring
more

The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden
gold,

Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed

³ sortie.

⁴ secretly decided on.

In vision beatific. By him first Men also, and by his suggestion taught, 685
 Ransacked the Center, and with impious
 hands
 Rifled the bowels of their mother Earth For treasures, better hid. Soon had his crew
 Opened into the hill a spacious wound,
 And digged out ribs of gold. Let none admire¹ 690
 That riches grow in Hell; that soil may
 best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those
 Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell
 Of Babel, and the works of Memphian
 kings,
 Learn how their greatest monuments of
 fame, 695
 And strength and art, are easily outdone
 By Spirits reprobate, and in an hour
 What in an age they, with incessant toil
 And hands innumerable, scarce perform.
 Nigh on the plain, in many cells prepared,
 That underneath had veins of liquid fire 701
 Sluiced from the lake, a second multitude
 With wondrous art founded² the massy ore, Severing³ each kind, and scummed the bullion dross.
 A third as soon had formed within the
 ground 705
 A various mold, and from the boiling cells,
 By strange conveyance, filled each hollow
 nook:
 As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
 To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.
 Anon, out of the earth a fabric huge 710
 Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
 Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet—
 Built like a temple, where pilasters round
 Were set, and Doric pillars overlaid With golden architrave; nor did there want 715
 Cornice or frieze, with bossy⁴ sculptures
 graven:
 The roof was fretted gold. Not Babylon,
 Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
 Equalled in all their glories, to enshrine
 Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat 720

¹ wonder.
³ separating.

² melted.
⁴ embossed, in high relief.

Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria
 strove
 In wealth and luxury. The ascending pile Stood fixed her stately highth, and straight
 the doors,
 Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
 Within, her ample spaces o'er the smooth
 And level pavement; from the archèd roof, 726
 Pendent by subtle magic, many a row
 Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
 With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
 As from a sky. The hasty multitude 730 Admiring entered, and the work some praise,
 And some the architect. His hand was known
 In Heaven by many a towered structure
 high Where sceptered Angels held their residence,
 And sat as Princes, whom the supreme
 King 735
 Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
 Each in his hierarchy, the Orders bright.
 Nor was his name unheard or unadored
 In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land Men called him Mulciber; and how he
 fell 740
 From Heaven they fabled, thrown by angry Jove Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from
 morn
 To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
 A summer's day; and with the setting sun
 Dropped from the zenith like a falling star, 745
 On Lemnos, the Ægean isle. Thus they relate,
 Erring; for he with this rebellious rout Fell long before; nor aught availed him
 now
 To have built in Heaven high towers; nor did he scape
 By all his engines,⁵ but was headlong
 sent 750
 With his industrious crew to build in Hell.
 Meanwhile, the wingèd heralds, by command
 Of sovran power, with awful ceremony
 And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
 A solemn council forthwith to be held 755

⁵ contrivances.

At Pandemonium, the high capital
 Of Satan and his peers. Their summons
 called
 From every band and squared regiment
 By place or choice the worthiest; they
 anon,
 With hundreds and with thousands, trooping came, 760
 Attended. All access was thronged; the gates
 And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall (Though like a covered field, where champions bold
 Wont¹ ride in armed, and at the Soldan's chair
 Defied the best of Panim² chivalry 765
 To mortal combat, or career with lance), Thick swarmed, both on the ground and in the air,
 Brushed with the hiss of rustling wings.
 As bees
 In spring-time, when the Sun with Taurus
 rides,
 Pour forth their populous youth about the hive 770
 In clusters; they among fresh dews and
 flowers
 Fly to and fro, or on the smoothèd plank,
 The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
 New rubbed with balm, expatiate³ and confer⁴
 Their state-affairs. So thick the aery crowd 775
 Swarmed and were straitened; till, the signal given,
 Behold a wonder! they but now who seemed
 In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons,
 Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
 Throng numberless, like that pygmean
 race 780
 Beyond the Indian mount; or faery elves,
 Whose midnight revels, by a forest-side
 Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
 Or dreams he sees, while overhead the
 Moon
 Sits arbitress,⁵ and nearer to the Earth 785 Wheels her pale course; they, on their mirth and dance
 Intent, with jocund music charm his ear;

¹ used to.
⁴ discuss.

² pagan.

³ walk about.
⁵ governess.

At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.
 Thus incorporeal Spirits to smallest forms Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large, 790
 Though without number still, amidst the hall
 Of that infernal court. But far within,
 And in their own dimensions like themselves,
 The great Seraphic Lords and Cherubim
 In close recess⁶ and secret conclave sat, 795
 A thousand demi-gods on golden seats, Frequent⁷ and full. After short silence
 then,
 And summons read, the great consult began.

BOOK II

THE ARGUMENT

The consultation begun, Satan debates whether another battle be to be haz-arded for the recovery of Heaven:
 some advise it, others dissuade. A third proposal is preferred, mentioned before by Satan—to search the truth of that prophecy or tradition in Heaven concerning another world, and another kind of creature, equal, or not much inferior, to themselves, about this time to be created. Their doubt who shall be sent on this difficult search: Satan, their chief, undertakes alone the voyage; is honored and applauded. The council thus ended, the rest betake them several ways and to several employments, as their inclinations lead them, to entertain the time till Satan return. He passes on his journey to Hell-gates, finds them shut, and who sat there to guard them; by whom at length they are opened, and discover to him the great gulf between Hell and Heaven; with what difficulty he passes through, directed by Chaos, the Power of that place, to the sight of this new World which he sought.

High on a throne of royal state, which far Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind,

⁶ retirement.

⁷ crowded.

Or where the gorgeous East with richest
hand
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and
gold,
Satan exalted sat, by merit raised 5
To that bad eminence; and, from despair
Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires
Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue Vain war with Heaven; and, by success¹
untaught,
His proud imaginations thus displayed:— “Powers and Dominions, Deities of
Heaven! 11
For since no deep within her gulf can hold Immortal vigor, though oppressed and fallen,
I give not Heaven for lost: from this descent
Celestial Virtues rising will appear 15
More glorious and more dread than from no fall,
And trust themselves to fear no second
fate!
Me though just right, and the fixed laws of
Heaven,
Did first create your leader, next, free
choice,
With what besides in council or in fight 20
Hath been achieved of merit, yet this loss,
Thus far at least recovered, hath much
more
Established in a safe, unenvied throne, Yielded with full consent. The happier
state
In Heaven, which follows dignity, might draw 25
Envy from each inferior; but who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes Foremost to stand against the Thunderer’s aim
Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share
Of endless pain? Where there is, then, no
good
For which to strive, no strife can grow up
there 31
From faction: for none sure will claim in Hell
Precedence; none whose portion is so small
Of present pain that with ambitious mind
Will covet more! With this advantage,
then, 35
To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,

¹ the event.

More than can be in Heaven, we now return
To claim our just inheritance of old,
Surer to prosper than prosperity
Could have assured us; and by what best
way, 40
Whether of open war or covert guile,
We now debate. Who can advise may speak.”
He ceased; and next him Moloch, scaptred king,
Stood up, the strongest and the fiercest
Spirit
That fought in Heaven, now fiercer by despair. 45
His trust was with the Eternal to be deemed Equal in strength, and rather than be less Cared not to be at all; with that care
lost
Went all his fear: of God, or Hell, or worse,
He recked not, and these words thereafter
spake:— 50
“My sentence² is for open war. Of wiles,
More unexpert, I boast not: them let those Contrive who need, or when they need;
not now.
For while they sit contriving, shall the
rest—
Millions that stand in arms, and longing
wait 55
The signal to ascend—sit lingering here,
Heaven’s fugitives, and for their dwelling-
place
Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
The prison of his tyranny who reigns
By our delay? No! let us rather choose, 60 Armed with Hell-flames and fury, all at once O’er Heaven’s high towers to force resist-less way,
Turning our tortures into horrid arms Against the Torturer; when, to meet the noise
Of his almighty engine, he shall hear 65
Infernal thunder, and for lightning see
Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
Among his Angels, and his throne itself
Mixed with Tartarean sulphur and strange
fire, 69
His own invented torments. But perhaps
The way seems difficult and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe?

² judgment.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
 Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
 That in our proper motion we ascend 75
 Up to our native seat; descent and fall
 To us is adverse. Who but felt of late,
 When the fierce foe hung on our broken
 rear
 Insulting, and pursued us through the
 deep,
 With what compulsion and laborious
 flight 80
 We sunk thus low? The ascent is easy,
 then;
 The event is feared? Should we again provoke
 Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may find
 To our destruction—if there be in Hell Fear to be worse destroyed? What can be worse 85
 Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemned
 In this abhorrèd deep to utter woe;
 Where pain of unextinguishable fire
 Must exercise us, without hope of end,
 The vassals of his anger, when the scourge
 Inexorably, and the torturing hour, 91 Calls us to penance? More destroyed than thus,
 We should be quite abolished, and expire.
 What fear we then? what doubt we to incense
 His utmost ire? which, to the highth en-ragèd, 95
 Will either quite consume us, and reduce
 To nothing this essential¹—happier far Than miserable to have eternal being!—
 Or, if our substance be indeed divine,
 And cannot cease to be, we are at worst 100
 On this side nothing; and by proof we feel
 Our power sufficient to disturb his Heaven,
 And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
 Though inaccessible, his fatal throne:
 Which, if not victory, is yet revenge.” 105
 He ended frowning, and his look de-nounced²
 Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
 To less than gods. On the other side up rose Belial, in act more graceful and humane;
 A fairer person lost not Heaven; he seemed
 For dignity composed, and high exploit. 111

¹ this being of ours.² threatened.

But all was false and hollow; though his tongue
 Dropped manna, and could make the worse appear
 The better reason, to perplex and dash Maturest counsels: for his thoughts were
 low— 115
 To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Timorous and slothful. Yet he pleased
 the ear,
 And with persuasive accent thus began:—
 “I should be much for open war, O Peers,
 As not behind in hate, if what was urged
 Main reason to persuade immediate war Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast 122
 Ominous conjecture on the whole success;
 When he who most excels in fact of arms,
 In what he counsels and in what excels 125
 Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
 And utter dissolution, as the scope
 Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.
 First, what revenge? The towers of Heaven are filled
 With armèd watch, that render all access Impregnable: oft on the bordering deep 131
 Encamp their legions, or with obscure
 wing
 Scout far and wide into the realm of Night, Scorning surprise. Or could we break our
 way
 By force, and at our heels all Hell should rise 135
 With blackest insurrection, to confound
 Heaven’s purest light, yet our great Enemy,
 All incorruptible, would on his throne
 Sit unpolluted, and the ethereal mould,
 Incapable of stain, would soon expel 140
 Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire, Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope
 Is flat despair: we must exasperate
 The Almighty Victor to spend all his
 rage,
 And that must end us; that must be our cure— 145
 To be no more. Sad cure! for who would lose,
 Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
 Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
 To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
 In the wide womb of uncreated Night, 150

Devoid of sense and motion? And who knows,
 Let this be good, whether our angry Foe
 Can give it, or will ever? How he can
 Is doubtful; that he never will is sure.
 Will He, so wise, let loose at once his ire,¹⁵⁵
 Belike through impotence, or unaware,
 To give his enemies their wish, and end
 Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
 To punish endless? 'Wherefore cease we
 then?'
 Say they who counsel war; 'we are decreed,
 Reserved, and destined to eternal woe; ¹⁶¹
 Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
 What can we suffer worse?' Is this then worst,
 Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
 What when we fled amain, pursued and strook ¹⁶⁵
 With Heaven's afflicting thunder, and besought
 The Deep to shelter us? This Hell then seemed
 A refuge from those wounds. Or when we
 lay Chained on the burning lake? That sure was worse.
 What if the breath that kindled those grim fires, ¹⁷⁰
 Awaked, should blow them into sevenfold
 rage,
 And plunge us in the flames; or from above
 Should intermitted vengeance arm again His red right hand to plague us? What if
 all
 Her stores were opened, and this firmament ¹⁷⁵
 Of Hell should spout her cataracts of fire,
 Impendent horrors, threatening hideous
 fall
 One day upon our heads; while we perhaps,
 Designing or exhorting glorious war,
 Caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurled,
 Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey ¹⁸¹
 Of racking whirlwinds, or forever sunk
 Under yon boiling ocean, wrapped in chains,
 There to converse with everlasting groans,
 Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved, ¹⁸⁵ Ages of hopeless end? This would be worse.
 War therefore, open or concealed, alike

My voice dissuades: for what can¹ force or
 guile
 With him, or who deceive his mind, whose
 eye
 Views all things at one view? He from Heaven's highth ¹⁹⁰
 All these our motions vain sees and de-
 rides;
 Not more almighty to resist our might Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
 Shall we, then, live thus vile—the race of
 Heaven
 Thus trampled, thus expelled to suffer here Chains and these torments? Better these than worse, ¹⁹⁶
 By my advice; since fate inevitable
 Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
 The Victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
 Our strength is equal; nor the law unjust
 That so ordains: this was at first resolved,
 If we were wise, against so great a foe ²⁰²
 Contending, and so doubtful what might
 fall.
 I laugh when those who at the spear are bold
 And venturous, if that fail them, shrink, and fear ²⁰⁵
 What yet they know must follow—to endure
 Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
 The sentence of their conqueror. This is
 now
 Our doom; which if we can sustain and
 bear,
 Our Supreme Foe in time may much remit
 His anger, and perhaps, thus far removed,
 Not mind us not offending, satisfied ²¹²
 With what is punished; whence these raging fires
 Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
 Our purer essence then will overcome ²¹⁵
 Their noxious vapor, or, inured, not feel;
 Or, changed at length, and to the place conformed
 In temper and in nature, will receive
 Familiar the fierce heat; and, void of pain,
 This horror will grow mild, this darkness light; ²²⁰
 Besides what hope the never-ending flight
 Of future days may bring, what chance, what change

¹ avail.

Worth waiting,—since our present lot appears

For happy though but ill, for ill not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe.”

Thus Belial, with words clothed in reason's garb, 226

Counselled ignoble ease and peaceful sloth,
Not peace; and after him thus Mammon spake:—

“Either to disenthroned the King of Heaven

We war, if war be best, or to regain 230
Our own right lost. Him to unthroned we then

May hope, when everlasting Fate shall yield

To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife.

The former, vain to hope, argues as vain
The latter; for what place can be for us 235

Within Heaven's bound, unless Heaven's Lord Supreme

We overpower? Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all, on promise made
Of new subjection; with what eyes could we 239

Stand in his presence, humble, and receive Strict laws imposed, to celebrate his throne
With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead sing

Forced Halleluiahs, while he lordly sits
Our envied sovran, and his altar breathes
Ambrosial odors and ambrosial flowers, 245
Our servile offerings? This must be our task

In Heaven, this our delight. How wearisome

Eternity so spent in worship paid
To whom we hate! Let us not then pursue,

By force impossible, by leave obtained 250
Unacceptable, though in Heaven, our state

Of splendid vassalage; but rather seek
Our own good from ourselves, and from our own

Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,

Free, and to none accountable, preferring Hard liberty before the easy yoke 256

Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear

Then most conspicuous, when great things of small,

Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse,

We can create, and in what place soe'er 260
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain

Through labor and endurance. This deep world

Of darkness do we dread? How oft amidst Thick clouds and dark doth Heaven's all-ruling Sire

Choose to reside, his glory unobscured, 265
And with the majesty of darkness round
Covers his throne, from whence deep thunders roar,

Mustering their rage, and Heaven resembles Hell!

As he our darkness, cannot we his light
Imitate when we please? This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems and gold; 271

Nor want we skill or art from whence to raise

Magnificence; and what can Heaven show more?

Our torments also may, in length of time,
Become our elements, these piercing fires
As soft as now severe, our temper changed
Into their temper; which must needs remove 277

The sensible¹ of pain. All things invite
To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
Of order, how in safety best we may 280
Compose our present evils, with regard
Of what we are and where, dismissing quite All thoughts of war. Ye have what I advise.”

He scarce had finished, when such murmur filled

The assembly, as when hollow rocks retain 285

The sound of blustering winds, which all night long

Had roused the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull

Seafaring men o'erwatched, whose bark by chance,

Or pinnace, anchors in a craggy bay
After the tempest: such applause was heard 290

As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleased,

Advising peace; for such another field
They dreaded worse than Hell; so much

the fear

Of thunder and the sword of Michael ¹sense.

Wrought still within them; and no less desire 295
 To found this nether empire, which might
 rise,
 By policy, and long process of time,
 In emulation opposite to Heaven.
 Which when Beëlzebub perceived—than whom,
 Satan except, none higher sat—with grave
 Aspect he rose, and in his rising seemed 301
 A pillar of state. Deep on his front en-
 graven
 Deliberation sat and public care;
 And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
 Majestic, though in ruin. Sage he stood,
 With Atlantean shoulders fit to bear 306
 The weight of mightiest monarchies; his look
 Drew audience and attention still as night Or summer's noontide air, while thus he
 spake:—
 "Thrones and Imperial Powers, Offspring of Heaven, 310
 Ethereal Virtues! or these titles now Must we renounce, and, changing style, be called
 Princes of Hell? for so the popular vote
 Inclines—here to continue, and build up
 here
 A growing empire; doubtless! while we dream, 315
 And know not that the King of Heaven hath doomed
 This place our dungeon—not our safe retreat
 Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
 From Heaven's high jurisdiction, in new league
 Banded against his throne, but to remain
 In strictest bondage, though thus far removed, 321
 Under the inevitable curb, reserved
 His captive multitude. For he, be sure,
 In highth or depth, still first and last will reign
 Sole king, and of his kingdom lose no
 part 325
 By our revolt, but over Hell extend
 His empire, and with iron sceptre rule Us here, as with his golden those in Heaven.
 What sit we then projecting peace and war?

War hath determined us,¹ and foiled with loss 330
 Irreparable; terms of peace yet none Vouchsafed or sought; for what peace will be given
 To us enslaved, but custody severe,
 And stripes, and arbitrary punishment
 Inflicted? and what peace can we return,
 But, to our power, hostility and hate, 336
 Untamed reluctance, and revenge, though
 slow,
 Yet ever plotting how the Conqueror least May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
 In doing what we most in suffering feel? 340
 Nor will occasion want, nor shall we need
 With dangerous expedition to invade Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
 Or ambush from the Deep. What if we find 344
 Some easier enterprise? There is a place
 (If ancient and prophetic fame in Heaven Err not), another World, the happy seat
 Of some new race called Man, about this
 time
 To be created like to us, though less 349
 In power and excellence, but favored more
 Of him who rules above; so was his will Pronounced among the gods, and, by an oath
 That shook Heaven's whole circumference, confirmed.
 Thither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn What creatures there inhabit, of what mould 355
 Or substance, how endued, and what their
 power,
 And where their weakness: how attempted
 best,
 By force or subtlety. Though Heaven be shut,
 And Heaven's high Arbitrator sit secure
 In his own strength, this place may lie exposed, 360
 The utmost border of his kingdom, left
 To their defence who hold it; here, perhaps,
 Some advantageous act may be achieved
 By sudden onset—either with Hell-fire
 To waste his whole creation, or possess 365
 All as our own, and drive, as we were driven,

¹ made an end of.

The puny habitants; or if not drive,
Seduce them to our party, that their God
May prove their foe, and with repenting
hand

Abolish his own works. This would surpass 370

Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
In our confusion, and our joy upraise
In his disturbance; when his darling sons, Hurled headlong to partake with us, shall need

Their frail original, and faded bliss— 375
Faded so soon! Advise if this be worth Attempting, or to sit in darkness here
Hatching vain empires." Thus Beëlzebub Pleaded his devilish counsel, first devised By Satan, and in part proposed; for whence, 380

But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and Earth with
Hell

To mingle and involve, done all to spite
The great Creator? But their spite still serves 385

His glory to augment. The bold design Pleased highly those Infernal States, and
joy

Sparkled in all their eyes: with full assent
They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews:—

"Well have ye judged, well ended long debate, 390

Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolved; which from the lowest deep

Will once more lift us up, in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat—perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence, with neighboring arms 395

And opportune excursion, we may chance Re-enter Heaven; or else in some mild zone

Dwell, not unvisited of Heaven's fair light,
Secure, and at the brightening orient beam
Purge off this gloom: the soft delicious air,
To heal the scar of these corrosive fires, 401 Shall breathe her balm. But first, whom shall we send

In search of this new world? whom shall we find

Sufficient? who shall tempt with wandering feet

The dark, unbottomed, infinite Abyss, 405

And through the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way, or spread his aery flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings
Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive

The happy isle? What strength, what art, can then 410

Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
Through the strict senteries and stations thick

Of Angels watching round? Here he had need

All circumspection: and we now no less Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send, 415

The weight of all, and our last hope, relies."

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His look suspense, awaiting who appeared
To second, or oppose, or undertake

The perilous attempt. But all sat mute, Pondering the danger with deep thoughts;
and each 421

In other's countenance read his own dis-
may,

Astonished. None among the choice and prime

Of those Heaven-warring champions could be found

So hardy as to proffer or accept, 425

Alone, the dreadful voyage; till at last Satan, whom now transcendent glory
raised

Above his fellows, with monarchical pride Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus spake:—

"O Progeny of Heaven! Empyrean
Thrones! 430

With reason hath deep silence and demur Seized us, though undismayed. Long is the way

And hard, that out of Hell leads up to Light.

Our prison strong, this huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round
Ninefold; and gates of burning adamant,
Barred over us, prohibit all egress. 437

These passed, if any pass, the void pro-
found

Of unessential¹ Night receives him next,
Wide-gaping, and with utter loss of being Threatens him, plunged in that abortive gulf. 441

If thence he scape into whatever world
Or unknown region, what remains him less

¹ devoid of being, or essence.

Than unknown dangers and as hard escape?
 But I should ill become this throne, O
 Peers, 445
 And this imperial sovranity, adorned With splendor, armed with power, if aught proposed
 And judged of public moment, in the shape
 Of difficulty or danger, could deter Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume 450
 These royalties, and not refuse to reign,
 Refusing to accept as great a share
 Of hazard as of honor, due alike
 To him who reigns, and so much to him
 due
 Of hazard more, as he above the rest 455
 High honored sits? Go therefore, mighty
 Powers, Terror of Heaven, though fallen; intend at home,
 While here shall be our home, what best may ease
 The present misery, and render Hell
 More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
 To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain 461
 Of this ill mansion; intermit no watch
 Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad
 Through all the coasts of dark destruction seek Deliverance for us all. This enterprise 465 None shall partake with me." Thus saying, rose
 The Monarch, and prevented all reply;
 Prudent, lest, from his resolution raised,¹
 Others among the chief might offer now, Certain to be refused, what erst they feared, 470
 And, so refused, might in opinion stand
 His rivals, winning cheap the high repute
 Which he through hazard huge must earn.
 But they Dreaded not more the adventure than his voice Forbidding; and at once with him they
 rose. 475
 Their rising all at once was as the sound Of thunder heard remote. Towards him
 they bend
 With awful reverence prone, and as a god
 Extol him equal to the Highest in Heaven.
 Nor failed they to express how much they praised 480

¹ encouraged by his resolution.

That for the general safety he despised
 His own; for neither do the Spirits damned Lose all their virtue,—lest bad men should boast
 Their specious deeds on Earth, which glory
 excites,
 Or close ambition varnished o'er with zeal.
 Thus they their doubtful consultations
 dark 486
 Ended, rejoicing in their matchless Chief:
 As when from mountain-tops the dusky clouds
 Ascending, while the North-wind sleeps, o'erspread
 Heaven's cheerful face, the louring element 490
 Scowls o'er the darkened landskip snow or shower,
 If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet
 Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
 The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds 494
 Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings.
 O shame to men! Devil with devil damned
 Firm concord holds; men only disagree
 Of creatures rational, though under hope
 Of heavenly grace; and, God proclaiming
 peace,
 Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife 500
 Among themselves, and levy cruel wars,
 Wasting the earth, each other to destroy:
 As if (which might induce us to accord)
 Man had not hellish foes enow besides,
 That day and night for his destruction
 wait! 505
 The Stygian council thus dissolved; and
 forth
 In order came the grand Infernal Peers:
 Midst came their mighty Paramount, and
 seemed
 Alone the antagonist of Heaven, nor less Than Hell's dread Emperor, with pomp supreme, 510
 And god-like imitated state; him round
 A globe of fiery Seraphim enclosed With bright emblazonry and horrent²
 arms.
 Then of their session ended they bid cry
 With trumpet's regal sound the great result: 515
 Toward the four winds four speedy Cherubim

² bristling.

Put to their mouths the sounding alchymy,¹
By harald's voice explained; the hollow
Abyss

Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
With deafening shout returned them loud acclaim. 520

Thence more at ease their minds, and somewhat raised
By false presumptuous hope, the ranged
Powers

Disband; and, wandering, each his several
way

Pursues, as inclination or sad choice Leads him perplexed, where he may like-liest find 525

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain

The irksome hours, till his great Chief return.

Part on the plain, or in the air sublime,²
Upon the wing or in swift race contend,
As at the Olympian games or Pythian
fields; 530

Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal

With rapid wheels, or fronted brigads
form:

As when, to warn proud cities, war appears Waged in the troubled sky, and armies rush
To battle in the clouds; before each van Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears, 536

Till thickest legions close; with feats of
arms

From either end of Heaven the welkin
burns.

Others, with vast Typhcean rage, more
fell,

Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the
air 540

In whirlwind; Hell scarce holds the wild uproar:

As when Alcides, from Œchalia crowned
With conquest, felt the envenomed robe, and tore

Through pain up by the roots Thessalian
pines,

And Lichas from the top of Ceta threw 545
Into the Euboic sea. Others, more mild,
Retreated in a silent valley, sing

With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroic deeds, and hapless fall

By doom of battle, and complain that Fate

¹ trumpet.

² raised.

Free Virtue should enthrall to Force or Chance. 551

Their song was partial, but the harmony (What could it less when Spirits immortal sing?)

Suspended Hell, and took with ravish-
ment

The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet 555

(For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense)

Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reasoned
high

Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and
fate,

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute, 560

And found no end, in wandering mazes
lost.

Of good and evil much they argued then,
Of happiness and final misery,

Passion and apathy, and glory and shame:
Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy!—

Yet with a pleasing sorcery could charm
Pain for a while or anguish, and excite 567

Fallacious hope, or arm the obdured³
breast

With stubborn patience as with triple steel.
Another part, in squadrons and gross
bands, 570

On bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps

Might yield them easier habitation, bend Four ways their flying march, along the banks

Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge 575
Into the burning lake their baleful streams:
Abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate;

Sad Acheron, of sorrow, black and deep;
Cocytus, named of lamentation loud

Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegeton, 580

Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.

Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls

Her watery labyrinth, whereof who drinks Forthwith his former state and being forgets, 585

Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and
pain.

Beyond this flood a frozen continent

³ obdurate.

Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm
land
Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems 590
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,
Where armies whole have sunk: the parching air
Burns froze,¹ and cold performs the effect
of fire. 595
Thither, by harpy-footed Furies haled,
At certain revolutions all the damned
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter
change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
From beds of raging fire to starve² in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine 601
Immovable, infixed, and frozen round Periods of time,—thence hurried back to
fire.
They ferry over this Lethean sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach 606
The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
All in one moment, and so near the brink;
But Fate withstands, and, to oppose the attempt 610
Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight, as once it fled
The lip of Tantalus. Thus roving on In confused march forlorn, the adventurous bands, 615
With shuddering horror pale, and eyes
aghast,
Viewed first their lamentable lot, and
found
No rest. Through many a dark and dreary
vale
They passed, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp, 620 Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death—
A universe of death, which God by curse
Created evil, for evil only good;

¹ frozen.² extinguish.

Where all life dies, death lives, and Nature breeds,
Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious
things, 625
Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feigned, or fear conceived,
Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimæras
dire.
Meanwhile the Adversary of God and
Man,
Satan, with thoughts inflamed of highest design, 630
Puts on swift wings, and toward the gates of Hell
Explores his solitary flight: sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left;
Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars
Up to the fiery concave towering high. 635
As when far off at sea a fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants
bring Their spicy drugs; they on the trading
flood, 640
Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape, Ply stemming nightly toward the pole: so
seemed Far off the flying Fiend. At last appear Hell-bounds, high reaching to the horrid
roof,
And thrice threefold the gates; three folds were brass, 645
Three iron, three of adamant rock
Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire, Yet unconsumed. Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable Shape.
The one seemed woman to the waist, and
fair, 650
But ended foul in many a scaly fold,
Voluminous and vast—a serpent armed With mortal sting. About her middle
round
A cry of Hell-hounds never-ceasing barked
With wide Cerberean mouths full loud, and rung 655
A hideous peal; yet, when they list, would creep,
If aught disturbed their noise, into her womb,

And kennel there; yet there still barked and howled Within unseen. Far less abhorred than
 these 659
 Vexed Scylla, bathing in the sea that parts
 Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore;
 Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when,
 called
 In secret, riding through the air she comes,
 Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
 With Lapland witches, while the laboring
 moon 665
 Eclipses at their charms. The other
 Shape—
 If shape it might be called that shape had none
 Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb;
 Or substance might be called that shadow
 seemed,
 For each seemed either—black it stood as
 Night, 670
 Fierce as ten Furies, terrible as Hell,
 And shook a dreadful dart; what seemed his head
 The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
 Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
 The monster moving onward came as fast,
 With horrid strides; Hell trembled as he strode. 676
 The undaunted Fiend what this might be admired¹—
 Admired, not feared—God and his Son except,
 Created thing naught valued he nor shunned—
 And with disdainful look thus first began:
 “Whence and what art thou, execrable
 Shape, 681
 That dar’st, though grim and terrible,
 advance
 Thy miscreated front athwart my way To yonder gates? Through them I mean to pass,
 That be assured, without leave asked of
 thee. 685
 Retire, or taste thy folly, and learn by proof,
 Hell-born, not to contend with Spirits of Heaven.” To whom the Goblin, full of wrath, replied:—

¹ wondered.

“Art thou that Traitor-Angel, art’ thou he Who first broke peace in Heaven and faith, till then 690
 Unbroken, and in proud rebellious arms
 Drew after him the third part of Heaven’s
 sons,
 Conjured against the Highest, for which both thou
 And they, outcast from God, are here condemned
 To waste eternal days in woe and pain? 695
 And recon’st thou thyself with Spirits of Heaven,
 Hell-doomed, and breath’st defiance here
 and scorn,
 Where I reign king, and, to enrage thee
 more,
 Thy king and lord? Back to thy punishment,
 False fugitive, and to thy speed add wings,
 Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue 701
 Thy lingering, or with one stroke of this dart
 Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before.”
 So spake the grisly Terror, and in shape,
 So speaking and so threatening, grew ten-
 fold 705
 More dreadful and deform. On the other
 side,
 Incensed with indignation, Satan stood Unterrified, and like a comet burned,
 That fires the length of Ophiuchus huge
 In the arctic sky, and from his horrid
 hair 710
 Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the
 head
 Levelled his deadly aim; their fatal hands
 No second stroke intend; and such a frown
 Each cast at the other as when two black
 clouds,
 With Heaven’s artillery fraught, come rattling on 715
 Over the Caspian—then stand front to front
 Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
 To join their dark encounter in mid-air.
 So frowned the mighty combatants that
 Hell
 Grew darker at their frown; so matched they stood; 720
 For never but once more was either like To meet so great a foe. And now great
 deeds

Had been achieved, whereof all Hell had rung,
 Had not the snaky Sorceress that sat 724
 Fast by Hell-gate and kept the fatal key, Risen, and with hideous outcry rushed between.

"O father, what intends thy hand," she cried,
 "Against thy only son? What fury, O son,
 Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart
 Against thy father's head? and know'st for whom?" 730

For him who sits above, and laughs the while

At thee, ordained his drudge to execute Whate'er his wrath, which he calls justice, bids—

His wrath, which one day will destroy ye both!"

She spake, and at her words the hellish Pest 735

Forbore: then these to her Satan returned:
 "So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange

Thou interposest, that my sudden hand,
 Prevented, spares to tell thee yet by deeds
 What it intends, till first I know of thee 740
 What thing thou art, thus double-formed, and why,

In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
 Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son.

I know thee not, nor ever saw till now Sight more detestable than him and thee."

To whom thus the Portress of Hell-gate replied:— 746

"Hast thou forgot me, then, and do I seem
 Now in thine eye so foul? once deemed so fair

In Heaven, when at the assembly, and in sight

Of all the Seraphim with thee combined 750
 In bold conspiracy against Heaven's King,
 All on a sudden miserable pain

Surprised thee; dim thine eyes, and dizzy swum

In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast

Threw forth, till on the left side opening wide, 755

Likest to thee in shape and countenance bright,

Then shining heavenly fair, a goddess armed,

Out of thy head I sprung. Amazement seized

All the host of Heaven: back they recoiled afraid 759

At first, and called me Sin, and for a sign Portentous held me; but, familiar grown,
 I pleased, and with attractive graces won
 The most averse; thee chiefly, who full oft Thyself in me thy perfect image viewing
 Becam'st enamored; and such joy thou took'st 765

With me in secret, that my womb conceived

A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose,
 And fields were fought in Heaven; wherein remained

(For what could else?) to our Almighty Foe

Clear victory; to our part loss and rout 770
 Through all the Empyrean. Down they fell,

Driven headlong from the pitch of Heaven, down

Into this deep; and in the general fall
 I also: at which time this powerful key

Into my hands was given, with charge to keep 775

These gates forever shut, which none can pass

Without my opening. Pensive here I sat Alone; but long I sat not, till my womb,
 Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown,

Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes.
 At last this odious offspring whom thou seest, 781

Thine own begotten, breaking violent way,
 Tore through my entrails, that, with fear, and pain

Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transformed; but he, my inbred enemy,
 Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart,
 Made to destroy. I fled, and cried out

Death! 787

Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sighed

From all her caves, and back resounded Death!

I fled; but he pursued (though more, it seems, 790

Inflamed with lust than rage) and, swifter far,

Me overtook, his mother, all dismayed,
 And, in embraces forcible and foul

Engendering with me, of that rape begot
These yelling monsters, that with ceaseless
cry 795

Surround me, as thou saw'st, hourly conceived

And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me: for, when they list, into the womb
That bred them they return, and howl, and gnaw

My bowels, their repast; then, bursting
forth 800

Afresh, with conscious terrors vex me
round,

That rest or intermission none I find.

Before mine eyes in opposition sits

Grim Death, my son and foe, who sets them on,

And me, his parent, would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but that he knows
His end with mine involved, and knows that I 807

Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,
Whenever that shall be: so Fate pronounced.

But thou, O father, I forewarn thee, shun
His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope 811
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
Though tempered heavenly; for that mortal dint,

Save he who reigns above, none can resist."

She finished; and the subtle Fiend his lore 815

Soon learned, now milder, and thus answered smooth:—

"Dear daughter—since thou claim'st me
for thy sire,

And my fair son here show'st me, the dear
pledge

Of dalliance had with thee in Heaven, and joys

Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change 820

Befallen us unforeseen, unthought of—
know,

I come no enemy, but to set free

From out this dark and dismal house of
pain

Both him and thee, and all the Heavenly host

Of Spirits that, in our just pretences
armed, 825

Fell with us from on high. From them I go
This uncouth errand sole, and one for all

Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
The unfounded Deep, and through the void immense

To search with wandering quest a place foretold 830

Should be—and by concurring signs, ere
now .

Created vast and round—a place of bliss
In the purlieus of Heaven; and therein placed

A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room, though more removed, 835

Lest Heaven, surcharged with potent multitude,

Might hap to move new broils. Be this,
or aught

Than this more secret, now designed, I haste

To know; and, this once known, shall soon
return,

And bring ye to the place where thou and
Death 840

Shall dwell at ease, and up and down un-
seen

Wing silently the buxom¹ air, embalmed
With odors: there ye shall be fed and filled Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey."

He ceased; for both seemed highly pleased, and Death 845

Grinned horrible a ghastly smile, to hear His famine should be filled, and blessed his
maw

Destined to that good hour. No less rejoiced

His mother bad, and thus bespake her sire:—

"The key of this infernal pit, by due 850
And by command of Heaven's all-powerful
King,

I keep, by him forbidden to unlock
These adamantine gates; against all force

Death ready stands to interpose his dart, Fearless to be o'ermatched by living

might. 855

But what owe I to his commands above,
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me

down
Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,

To sit in hateful office here confined,
Inhabitant of Heaven and Heavenly-

born,— 860

¹ yielding, obedient.

Here in perpetual agony and pain,
 With terrors and with clamors compassed
 round
 Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed?
 Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
 My being gav'st me, whom should I obey
 But thee? whom follow? Thou wilt bring me soon 866
 To that new world of light and bliss, among The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign
 At thy right hand voluptuous, as beseems Thy daughter and thy darling, without
 end." 870
 Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
 Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
 And, towards the gate rolling her bestial
 train,
 Forthwith the huge portcullis high up-
 drew,
 Which but herself not all the Stygian
 Powers 875
 Could once have moved; then in the keyhole turns
 The intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
 Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
 Unfastens. On a sudden open fly,
 With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
 The infernal doors, and on their hinges
 grate 881
 Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
 Of Erebus. She opened; but to shut Excelled her power: the gates wide open
 stood,
 That with extended wings a bannered
 host, 885
 Under spread ensigns marching, might pass through
 With horse and chariots ranked in loose
 array;
 So wide they stood, and like a furnace-mouth
 Cast forth redounding smoke and ruddy
 flame.
 Before their eyes in sudden view appear
 The secrets of the hoary Deep, a dark 891
 Illimitable ocean, without bound,
 Without dimension; where length, breadth,
 and highth,
 And time, and place, are lost; where eldest
 Night

And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold 895
 Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
 Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
 For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry, four champions fierce,
 Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms; they around the flag 900
 Of each his faction, in their several clans,
 Light-armed or heavy, sharp, smooth,
 swift, or slow,
 Swarm populous, unnumbered as the sands
 Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil, Levied to side with warring winds, and poised 905
 Their lighter wings. To whom these most adhere,
 He rules a moment; Chaos umpire sits,
 And by decision more embroils the fray
 By which he reigns; next him, high arbiter,
 Chance governs all. Into this wild Abyss,
 The womb of Nature, and perhaps her
 grave, 911
 Of neither sea, nor shore, nor air, nor fire,
 But all these in their pregnant causes mixed Confusedly, and which thus must ever
 fight, 914
 Unless the Almighty Maker them ordain
 His dark materials to create more worlds—
 Into this wild Abyss the wary Fiend Stood on the brink of Hell and looked awhile,
 Pondering his voyage; for no narrow frith
 He had to cross. Nor was his ear less pealed 920
 With noises loud and ruinous (to compare Great things with small) than when Bel-lona storms
 With all her battering engines, bent to rase
 Some capital city; or less than if this frame
 Of Heaven were falling, and these elements
 In mutiny had from her axle torn 926
 The steadfast Earth. At last his sail-broad vans
 He spreads for flight, and, in the surging
 smoke
 Uplifted, spurns the ground; thence many a league,
 As in a cloudy chair, ascending rides 930
 Audacious; but, that seat soon failing, meets
 A vast vacuity. All unawares,

Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb-down
 he drops
 Ten thousand fathom deep, and to this hour
 Down had been falling, had not, by ill
 chance, 935
 The strong rebuff of some tumultuous
 cloud,
 Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
 As many miles aloft. That fury stayed—Quenched in a boggy Syrtis,¹ neither
 sea
 Nor good dry land—nigh foundered, on he fares, 940
 Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
 Half flying; behoves him now both oar and sail.
 As when a gryphon through the wilderness
 With wingèd course, o'er hill or moory
 dale,
 Pursues the Arimasian, who by stealth 945
 Had from his wakeful custody purloined
 The guarded gold: so eagerly the Fiend
 O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough,
 dense, or rare,
 With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues
 his way,
 And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps,
 or flies. 950
 At length a universal hubbub wild
 Of stunning sounds and voices all confused, Borne through the hollow dark, assaults
 his ear
 With loudest vehemence. Thither he plies Undaunted, to meet there whatever
 Power 955
 Or Spirit of the nethermost Abyss Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
 Which way the nearest coast of darkness
 lies Bordering on light; when straight behold
 the throne
 Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread 960 Wide on the wasteful Deep! With him enthroned
 Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,
 The consort of his reign; and by them stood Orcus and Ades, and the dreaded name
 Of Demogorgon; Rumor next, and Chance,
 And Tumult, and Confusion, all embroiled, 966

¹quicksand.

And Discord with a thousand various mouths.
 To whom Satan, turning boldly, thus:— “Ye Powers
 And Spirits of this nethermost Abyss,
 Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy,
 With purpose to explore or to disturb 971
 The secrets of your realm; but, by constraint
 Wandering this darksome desert, as my
 way
 Lies through your spacious empire up to
 light,
 Alone and without guide, half lost, I seek What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds 976
 Confine² with Heaven; or if some other
 place,
 From your dominion won, the Ethereal
 King
 Possesses lately, thither to arrive
 I travel this profound. Direct my course:
 Directed, no mean recompense it brings
 To your behoof, if I that region lost, 982
 All usurpation thence expelled, reduce
 To her original darkness and your sway (Which is my present journey), and once
 more 985
 Erect the standard there of ancient Night.
 Yours be the advantage all, mine the revenge!”
 Thus Satan; and him thus the Anarch
 old,
 With faltering speech and visage incom-
 posed,
 Answered:—“I know thee, stranger, who
 thou art: 990
 That mighty leading Angel, who of late Made head against Heaven's King, though overthrown.
 I saw and heard; for such a numerous host Fled not in silence through the frightened
 Deep,
 With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout, 995
 Confusion worse confounded; and Heaven-
 gates
 Poured out by millions her victorious
 bands,
 Pursuing. I upon my frontiers here
 Keep residence; if all I can will serve
 That little which is left so to defend, 1000 Encroached on still through our intestine
 broils,

²are contiguous to.

Weakening the sceptre of old Night: first,
 Hell,
 Your dungeon, stretching far and wide
 beneath;
 Now lately Heaven and Earth, another
 world
 Hung o'er my realm, linked in a golden chain 1005
 To that side Heaven from whence your legions fell!
 If that way be your walk, you have not far;
 So much the nearer danger. Go, and speed!
 Havoc, and spoil, and ruin, are my gain."
 He ceased; and Satan stayed not to reply, 1010
 But, glad that now his sea should find a
 shore,
 With fresh alacrity and force renewed
 Springs upward, like a pyramid of fire,
 Into the wild expanse, and through the shock
 Of fighting elements, on all sides round
 Environed, wins his way; harder beset 1016
 And more endangered, than when Argo
 passed Through Bosphorus betwixt the justling
 rocks;
 Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunned
 Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steered: 1020
 So he with difficulty and labor hard Moved on. With difficulty and labor he;
 But, he once passed, soon after, when Man
 fell,
 Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain Following his track (such was the will of Heaven) 1025
 Paved after him a broad and beaten way
 Over the dark Abyss, whose boiling gulf Tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length,
 From Hell continued, reaching the utmost orb
 Of this frail World; by which the Spirits perverse 1030
 With easy intercourse pass to and fro
 To tempt or punish mortals, except whom God and good Angels guard by special
 grace.
 But now at last the sacred influence
 Of light appears, and from the walls of
 Heaven 1035

Shoots far into the bosom of dim Night
 A glimmering dawn. Here Nature first begins
 Her farthest verge, and Chaos to retire,
 As from her outmost works, a broken foe,
 With tumult less and with less hostile
 din; 1040
 That Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
 Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious
 light,
 And, like a weather-beaten vessel, holds Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn; 1044
 Or in the emptier waste, resembling air, Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to be-
 hold Far off the empyreal Heaven, extended
 wide
 In circuit, undetermined square or round,
 With opal towers, and battlements adorned 1049
 Of living sapphire, once his native seat;
 And fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
 This pendent World, in bigness as a star
 Of smallest magnitude close by the moon.
 Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
 Accurst, and in a cursed hour, he hies. 1055

From BOOK XII

THE EXPULSION FROM PARADISE

He ended, and they both descend the
 hill. 604
 Descended, Adam to the bower where Eve
 Lay sleeping ran before, but found her waked;
 And thus with words not sad she him received:—
 "Whence thou return'st and whither went'st I know; 610
 For God is also in sleep, and dreams advise,
 Which he hath sent propitious, some great
 good Presaging, since, with sorrow and heart's distress
 Wearied, I fell asleep. But now lead on;
 In me is no delay; with thee to go 615
 Is to stay here; without thee here to stay
 Is to go hence unwilling; thou to me
 Art all things under Heaven, all places
thou,

Who for my wilful crime art banished
hence.

This further consolation yet secure 620
I carry hence: though all by me is lost,
Such favor I unworthy am voutsafed,
By me the Promised Seed shall all restore."

So spake our mother Eve; and Adam
heard

Well pleased, but answered not; for now too nigh 625

The Archangel stood, and from the other
hill

To their fixed station, all in bright array,
The Cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist
Risen from a river o'er the marish glides,
And gathers ground fast at the laborer's heel 631

Homeward returning. High in front advanced,

The brandished sword of God before them
blazed,

Fierce as a comet; which with torrid heat,
And vapor as the Libyan air adust,¹ 635
Began to parch that temperate clime;
whereat

In either hand the hastening Angel caught
Our lingering parents, and to the eastern
gate

Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subjected plain—then disappeared.
They, looking back, all the eastern side
beheld 641

Of Paradise, so late their happy seat, Waved over by that flaming brand; the
gate

With dreadful faces thronged and fiery
arms.

Some natural tears they dropped, but wiped them soon; 645

The world was all before them, where to choose

Their place of rest, and Providence their guide.

They, hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,

Through Eden took their solitary way.

From AREOPAGITICA

I deny not, but that it is of greatest concernment in the Church and Commonwealth, to have a vigilant eye how books

¹ scorched.

demean themselves as well as men; and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors.
For books are not absolutely dead things,
but do contain a potency of life in them to be as active as that soul was whose progeny they are; nay, they do pre- [10 serve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively, and as vigorously productive, as those fabulous dragon's teeth; and being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men. And yet on the other hand, unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as kill a good book: who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's [20
image; but he who destroys a good book,
kills reason itself, kills the image of God,
as it were in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious lifeblood of a master spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. 'Tis true, no age can restore a life, whereof perhaps there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected [30 truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary therefore what persecution we raise against the living labors of public men, how we spill that seasoned life of man, preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of homicide may be thus committed, sometimes a martyrdom, and if it extend to the whole impression, a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not [40 in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at that ethereal and fifth essence the breath of reason itself; slays an immortality rather than a life. . . . But some will say, "What though the inventors were bad, the thing for all that may be good?" It may so; yet if that thing be no such deep invention, but obvious, and easy for any man to light on, and yet best and wisest common- [50 wealths through all ages and occasions have forborne to use it, and falsest se-ducers and oppressors of men were the first who took it up, and to no other purpose but to obstruct and hinder the first approach of Reformation, I am of those who believe, it will be a harder alchemy

than Lullius ever knew, to sublimate any good use out of such an invention. Yet this only is what I request to gain [60 from this reason, that it may be held a dangerous and suspicious fruit, as certainly it deserves, for the tree that bore it, until I can dissect one by one the properties it has. . . . Books are as meats and viands are; some of good, some of evil substance; and yet God in that unapocryphal vision, said without exception, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat," leaving the choice to each man's discretion. [70 Wholesome meats to a vitiated stomach differ little or nothing from unwholesome; and best books to a naughty mind are not unapplicable to occasions of evil. Bad meats will scarce breed good nourishment in the healthiest concoction; but herein the difference is of bad books, that they to a discreet and judicious reader serve in many respects to discover, to confute, to forewarn, and to illus- [80 trate. Whereof what better witness can ye expect I should produce, than one of your own now sitting in Parliament, the chief of learned men reputed in this land, Mr. Selden; whose volume of natural and national laws proves, not only by great authorities brought together, but by exquisite reasons and theorems almost mathematically demonstrative, that all opinions, yea errors, known, read, [90 and collated, are of main service and assistance toward the speedy attainment of what is truest. I conceive, therefore, that when God did enlarge the universal diet of man's body, saving ever the rules of temperance, He then also, as before, left arbitrary the dieting and repasting of our minds; as wherein every mature man might have to exercise his own leading capacity. How great a virtue [100 is temperance, how much of moment through the whole life of man! Yet God commits the managing so great a trust, without particular law or prescription, wholly to the demeanor of every grown man. And therefore when He Himself tabled the Jews from heaven, that omer, which was every man's daily portion of manna, is computed to have been more than might have well sufficed the [110 heartiest feeder thrice as many meals.

For those actions which enter into a man, rather than issue out of him, and therefore defile not, God uses not to captivate under a perpetual childhood of prescription, but trusts him with the gift of reason to be his own chooser; there were but little work left for preaching, if law and compulsion should grow so fast upon those things which heretofore [120 were governed only by exhortation. . . . Good and evil we know in the field of this world grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil, and in so many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned, that those confused seeds which were imposed on Psyche as an incessant labor to cull out and sort asunder, were not [130 more intermixed. It was from out the rind of one apple tasted that the knowledge of good and evil, as two twins cleaving together, leaped forth into the world. And perhaps this is that doom which Adam fell into of knowing good and evil, that is to say of knowing good by evil. As therefore the state of man now is, what wisdom can there be to choose, what continence to forbear, without [140 the knowledge of evil? He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true warfaring Christian. I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race, where that immortal garland [150 is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, we bring impurity much rather; that which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue therefore which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excre- [160 mental whiteness; which was the reason why our sage and serious poet Spenser, whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas, describing true temperance under the person of Guyon, brings him in with his palmer through the cave of Mammon, and the bower of earthly bliss, that he might see and know, and yet abstain. Since therefore the knowledge and survey of [170] vice is in this world so necessary to the constituting of human virtue, and the scanning of error to the confirmation of truth, how can we more safely, and with less danger scout into the regions of sin and falsity than by reading all manner of tractates and hearing all manner of reason? And this is the benefit which may be had of books promiscuously read.

* * * * *

I lastly proceed from the no good [180] it can do, to the manifest hurt it causes, in being first the greatest discouragement and affront that can be offered to learning, and to learned men.

It was the complaint and lamentation of prelates, upon every least breath of a motion to remove pluralities, and distribute more equally Church revenues, that then all learning would be for ever dashed and discouraged. But as for that [190] opinion, I never found cause to think that the tenth part of learning stood or fell with the clergy: nor could I ever but hold it for a sordid and unworthy speech of any churchman who had a competency left him. If therefore ye be loth to dishearten heartily and discontent, not the mercenary crew of false pretenders to learning, but the free and ingenuous sort of such as evidently were born to [200] study, and love learning for itself, not for lucre, or any other end, but the service of God and of truth, and perhaps that lasting fame and perpetuity of praise which God and good men have consented shall be the reward of those whose published labors advance the good of mankind, then know, that so far to distrust the judgment and the honesty of one who hath but a common repute in learn- [210] ing, and never yet offended, as not to count him fit to print his mind without a tutor and examiner, lest he should drop a schism, or something of corruption, is the greatest displeasure and indignity to a free and knowing spirit that can be put upon him. What advantage is it to be a man over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only escaped the ferular to come under the fescu of an Imprimatur? if [220] serious and elaborate writings, as if they were no more than the theme of a grammar-lad under his pedagogue must not be uttered without the cursory eyes of a temporising and extemporising licenser? He who is not trusted with his own actions, his drift not being known to be evil, and standing to the hazard of law and penalty, has no great argument to think himself reputed in the Common- [230] wealth wherein he was born, for other than a fool or a foreigner. When a man writes to the world, he summons up all his reason and deliberation to assist him; he searches, meditates, is industrious, and likely consults and confers with his judicious friends; after all which done, he takes himself to be informed in what he writes, as well as any that writ before him; if in this the most consummate act [240] of his fidelity and ripeness, no years, no industry, no former proof of his abilities, can bring him to that state of maturity, as not to be still mistrusted and suspected, unless he carry all his considerate diligence, all his midnight watchings, and expense of Palladian oil, to the hasty view of an unleisured licenser, perhaps much his younger, perhaps far his inferior in judgment, perhaps one who never knew [250] the labor of book writing; and if he be not repulsed, or slighted, must appear in print like a puny with his guardian, and his censor's hand on the back of his title to be his bail and security that he is no idiot, or seducer,—it can not be but a dishonor and derogation to the author, to the book, to the privilege and dignity of learning. . . .

Lords and Commons of England, [260] consider what nation it is whereof ye are, and whereof ye are the governors: a nation not slow and dull, but of a quick, ingenious, and piercing spirit, acute to invent, subtle and sinewy to discourse, not beneath the reach of any point the highest that human capacity can soar to. Therefore the studies of learning in her deepest sciences have been so ancient and so eminent among us, that writers of [270] good antiquity and ablest judgment have been persuaded that even the school of Pythagoras and the Persian wisdom took beginning from the old philosophy of this island. And that wise and civil Roman, Julius Agricola, who governed once here for Cæsar, preferred the natural wits of Britain, before the labored studies of the French. . . . Yet that which is above all this, the favor and the love of [280] Heaven, we have great argument to think in a peculiar manner propitious and propending towards us. Why else was this nation chosen before any other, that out of her as out of Sion should be proclaimed and sounded forth the first tidings and trumpet of Reformation to all Europe? . . . But now, as our obdurate clergy have with violence demeaned the matter, we are become hitherto the latest [290] and the backwardest scholars, of whom God offered to have made us the teachers. Now once again by all concurrence of signs, and by the general instinct of holy and devout men, as they daily and solemnly express their thoughts, God is decreeing to begin some new and great period in His church, even to the reforming of Reformation itself: what does He then but reveal Himself to His serv- [300] ants, and as His manner is, first to His Englishmen: I say as His manner is, first to us, though we mark not the method of His counsels, and are unworthy. Behold now this vast city: a city of refuge, the mansion house of liberty, encompassed and surrounded with His protection. The shop of war hath not there more anvils and hammers waking, to fashion out the plates and instruments of [310] armed justice in defense of beleaguered truth, than there be pens and heads there, sitting by their studious lamps, musing, searching, revolving new notions and ideas wherewith to present, as with their homage and their fealty, the approaching Reformation; others as fast reading, trying all things, assenting to the force of reason and conviction. What could a man require more from [320] a nation so pliant and so prone to seek after knowledge? What wants there to such a towardly and pregnant soil, but wise and faithful laborers, to make a knowing people, a nation of prophets, of sages, and of worthies? We reckon more than five months yet to harvest; there need not be five weeks; had we but eyes to lift up, the fields are white already. Where there is much desire to learn, [330] there of necessity will be much arguing, much writing, many opinions; for opinion in good men is but knowledge in the making. Under these fantastic terrors of sect and schism, we wrong the earnest and zealous thirst after knowledge and understanding which God hath stirred up in this city. What some lament of, we rather should rejoice at; should rather praise this pious forwardness among [340] men, to reassume the ill-deputed care of their religion into their own hands again. A little generous prudence, a little forbearance of one another, and some grain of charity might win all these diligences to join and unite in one general and brotherly search after truth, could we but forego this prelatial tradition of crowding free consciences and Christian liberties into canons and precepts of [350] men. I doubt not, if some great and worthy stranger should come among us, wise to discern the mould and temper of a people, and how to govern it, observing the high hopes and aims, the diligent alacrity of our extended thoughts and reasonings in the pursuance of truth and freedom, but that he would cry out as Pyrrhus did, admiring the Roman docility and courage, "If such were my [360] Epirots, I would not despair the greatest design that could be attempted to make a church or kingdom happy." Yet these are the men cried out against for schismatics and sectaries; as if, while the temple of the Lord was building, some cutting, some squaring the marble, others hewing the cedars, there should be a sort of irrational men who would not consider there must be many schisms [370] and many dissections made in the quarry and in the timber, ere the house of God can be built. And when every stone is laid artfully together, it cannot be united into a continuity, it can but be contiguous in this world; neither can every piece of the building be of one form, nay, rather the perfection consists in this, that out of many moderate varieties and brotherly dissimilitudes that are not vastly [380] disproportional, arises the goodly and the graceful symmetry that commends the whole pile and structure. Let us therefore be more considerate builders, more wise in spiritual architecture, when great reformation is expected. For now the time seems come, wherein Moses the great prophet may sit in heaven rejoicing to see that memorable and glorious wish of his fulfilled, when not only our [390] seventy elders, but all the Lord's people, are become prophets. No marvel then though some men, and some good men too, perhaps, but young in goodness, as Joshua then was, envy them. They fret, and out of their own weakness are in agony, lest those divisions and subdivisions will undo us. The adversary again applauds, and waits the hour; when they have branched themselves out (saith [400] he) small enough into parties and partitions, then will be our time. Fool! he sees not the firm root, out of which we all grow, though into branches; nor will beware until he see our small divided maniples cutting through at every angle of his ill-united and unwieldy brigade. . . .

And now the time in special is, by privilege to write and speak what may help [410] to the further discussing of matters in agitation. The temple of Janus with his two controversial faces might now not insignificantly be set open. And though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worse, in a free [420] and open encounter? Her confuting is the best and surest suppressing. He who hears what praying there is for light and clearer knowledge to be sent down among us, would think of other matters to be constituted beyond the discipline of Geneva, framed and fabricked already to our hands. Yet when the new light which we beg for shines in upon us, there be who envy and oppose, if it come not [430] first in at their casements. What a collusion is this, whenas we are exhorted by the wise man to use diligence, to seek for wisdom as for hidden treasures early and late, that another order shall enjoin us to know nothing but by statute? When a man hath been laboring the hardest labor in the deep mines of knowledge, hath furnished out his findings in all their equipage, drawn forth his reasons as it were [440] a battle ranged, scattered and defeated all objections in his way, calls out his adversary into the plain, offers him the advantage of wind and sun, if he please, only that he may try the matter by dint of argument—for his opponents then to skulk, to lay ambushments, to keep a narrow bridge of licensing where the challenger should pass, though it be valor enough in soldiership, is but weakness [450] and cowardice in the wars of Truth. For who knows not that Truth is strong, next to the Almighty? She needs no policies, no stratagems, no licensings to make her victorious; those are the shifts and the defenses that error uses against her power. Give her but room, and do not bind her when she sleeps, for then she speaks not true, as the old Proteus did, who spake oracles only when he was caught and [460] bound; but then rather she turns herself into all shapes, except her own, and perhaps tunes her voice according to the time, as Micaiah did before Ahab, until she be adjured into her own likeness. Yet it is not impossible that she may have more shapes than one. What else is all that rank of things indifferent, wherein Truth may be on this side, or on the other, without being unlike herself? [470] What but a vain shadow else is the abolition of those ordinances, that hand-writing nailed to the cross? what great purchase is this Christian liberty which Paul so often boasts of? His doctrine is, that he who eats or eats not, regards a day or regards it not, may do either to the Lord. How many other things might be tolerated in peace, and left to conscience, had we but charity, and were it not the [480] chief stronghold of our hypocrisy to be ever judging one another. I fear yet this iron yoke of outward conformity hath left a slavish print upon our necks; the ghost of a linen decency yet haunts us. We stumble and are impatient at the least dividing of one visible congregation from another, though it be not in fundamentals; and through our forwardness to suppress, and our backwardness to re- [490] cover any enthralled piece of truth out of the gripe of custom, we care not to keep truth separated from truth, which is the fiercest rent and disunion of all. We do not see that while we still affect by all means a rigid external formality, we may as soon fall again into a gross conforming stupidity, a stark and dead congealment of wood and hay and stubble forced and frozen together, which is more to the [500] sudden degenerating of a church than many subdichotomies of petty schisms. Not that I can think well of every light separation, or that all in a church is to be expected gold and silver and precious stones. It is not possible for man to sever the wheat from the tares, the good fish from the other fry; that must be the angels' ministry at the end of mortal things. Yet if all cannot be of one [510] mind, (as who looks they should be?) this doubtless is more wholesome, more prudent, and more Christian, that many be tolerated, rather than all compelled. I mean not tolerated popery, and open superstition, which, as it extirpates all religions and civil supremacies, so itself should be extirpate, provided first that all charitable and compassionate means be used to win and regain the weak [520] and the misled: that also which is impious or evil absolutely either against faith or manners, no law can possibly permit that intends not to unlaw itself. But those neighboring differences, or rather indifferences, are what I speak of, whether in some point of doctrine or of discipline, which though they may be many, yet need not interrupt the unity of Spirit, if we could but find among us [530] the bond of peace. In the meanwhile if any one would write, and bring his helpful hand to the slow-moving reformation which we labor under, if Truth have spoken to him before others, or but seemed at least to speak, who hath so bejesuited us that we should trouble that man with asking license to do so worthy a deed? and not consider this, that if it come to prohibiting, there is not aught [540] more likely to be prohibited than truth itself; whose first appearance to our eyes bleared and dimmed with prejudice and custom, is more unsightly and unplaussible than many errors, even as the person is of many a great man slight and contemptible to see to. And what do they tell us vainly of new opinions, when this very opinion of theirs, that none must be heard but whom they like, is the [550] worst and newest opinion of all others, and is the chief cause why sects and schisms do so much abound, and true knowledge is kept at distance from us, besides yet a greater danger which is in it? For when God shakes a kingdom with strong and healthful commotions to a general reforming, 'tis not untrue that many sectaries and false teachers are then busiest in seducing; but yet [560] more true it is, that God then raises to His own work men of rare abilities, and more than common industry, not only to look back and revise what hath been taught heretofore, but to gain further and go on, some new enlightened steps in the discovery of truth. For such is the order of God's enlightening His church, to dispense and deal out by degrees His beam, so as our earthly eyes may [570] best sustain it. Neither is God appointed and confined, where and out of what place these His chosen shall be first heard to speak; for He sees not as man sees, chooses not as man chooses, lest we should devote ourselves again to set places, and assemblies, and outward callings of men; planting our faith one while in the old Convocation House, and another while in the Chapel at West- [580] minster; when all the faith and religion that shall be there canonized, is not sufficient without plain convincement, and the charity of patient instruction, to supply the least bruise of conscience, to edify the meanest Christian, who desires to walk in the Spirit, and not in the letter of human trust, for all the number of voices that can be there made;—no, though Harry VII himself there, with [590] all his liege tombs about him, should lend them voices from the dead, to swell their number. . . .

And as for regulating the Press, let no man think to have the honor of advising ye better than yourselves have done in that order published next before this, "that no book be printed, unless the printer's and the author's name, or at least the printer's, be registered." Those [600 which otherwise come forth, if they be found mischievous and libelous, the fire and the executioner will be the timeliest and the most effectual remedy that man's prevention can use. For this authentic Spanish policy of licensing books, if I have said aught, will prove the most unlicensed book itself within a short while; and was the immediate image of a Star Chamber decree to that purpose made [610 in those very times when that court did the rest of those her pious works, for which she is now fallen from the stars with Lucifer. Whereby ye may guess what kind of state prudence, what love of the people, what care of religion or good manners, there was at the contriving, although with singular hypocrisy it pretended to bind books to their good behavior. . . . But of these sophisms [620 and elenchs of merchandise I skill not. This I know, that errors in a good government and in a bad are equally almost incident; for what magistrate may not be misinformed, and much the sooner, if liberty of printing be reduced into the power of a few? But to redress willingly and speedily what hath been erred, and in highest authority to esteem a plain advertisement more than others have [630 done a sumptuous bribe, is a virtue (honored Lords and Commons) answerable to your highest actions, and whereof none can participate but greatest and wisest men.

SAMUEL PEPYS (1633-1703)

From his DIARY

Jan. 1, 1660 (Lord's day). This morning (we living lately in the garret), I rose, put on my suit with great skirts, having not lately worn any other clothes but them. Went to Mr. Gunning's chapel at Exeter House, where he made a very good sermon. Dined at home in the garret, where my wife dressed the remains of a turkey, and in the doing of it she burned her hand. I stayed at [10 home all the afternoon, looking over my accounts; then went with my wife to my father's, and in going observed the great posts which the City have set up at the Conduit in Fleet Street.

Mar. 5th. To Westminster by water, only seeing Mr. Pinkney at his own house, where he showed me how he had always kept the lion and unicorn, in the back of his chimney, bright, in ex- [20 pectation of the King's coming again. At home I found Mr. Hunt, who told me how the Parliament had voted that the Covenant be printed and hung in churches again. Great hopes of the King's coming again. To bed.

6th. Everybody now drinks the King's health without any fear, whereas before it was very private that a man dare do it.

22nd. To Westminster, and received my warrant of Mr. Blackburne to be secretary to the two Generals of the Fleet.

23rd. My Lord, Captain Isham, Mr. Thomas, John Crewe, W. Howe, and I in a hackney to the Tower, where the barges stayed for us; my Lord and the Captain in one, and W. Howe and I, &c., in the other, to the Long Reach, where the Swiftsure lay at anchor; (in our way we [40 saw the great breach which the late high water had made, to the loss of many £1,000 to the people about Limehouse). Soon as my Lord on board, the guns went off bravely from the ships. And a little while after comes the Vice-Admiral Lawson, and seemed very respectful to my Lord, and so did the rest of the commanders of the frigates that were thereabouts. I to the cabin allotted for [50 me, which was the best that any had that belonged to my Lord.

May 1. To-day I hear they were very merry at Deal setting up the King's flag upon one of their maypoles, and drinking his health upon their knees in the streets, and firing the guns, which the soldiers of the castle threatened, but durst not oppose.

2nd. In the morning at a breakfast [60 of radishes in the Purser's cabin. After that, to writing till dinner. At which time comes Dunne from London, with letters that tell us the welcome news of the Parliament's votes yesterday, which will be remembered for the happiest May-day that hath been many a year to England. The King's letter was read in the House, wherein he submits himself and all things to them, as to an Act of [70 Oblivion to all, unless they shall please to except any.

13th (Lord's day). Trimmed in the morning, after that to the cook's room with Mr. Sheply, the first time I was there this voyage. Then to the quarter-deck, upon which the tailors and painters were at work cutting out some pieces of yellow cloth into the fashion of a crown and C. R. and put it upon a fine sheet, and that [80 into the flag instead of the State's arms; which, after dinner, was finished and set up, after it had been shown to my Lord, who liked it so well as to bid me give the tailors 20s. among them for doing of it.

23rd. The Doctor and I waked very merry, only my eye was very red and ill in the morning from yesterday's hurt. In the morning came infinity of people on board from the King to go along [90 with him. . . . The King, with the two Dukes, and Queen of Bohemia, Princess Royal, and Prince of Orange, came on board, where I in their coming in kissed the King's, Queen's, and Princess's hands. . . . Infinite shooting off of the guns, and that in a disorder on purpose, which was better than if it had been otherwise. . . . After dinner the King and duke altered the names of some [100 of the ships; viz., the Naseby into Charles; the Richard, James; the Speaker, Mary; the Dunbar, the Henry. . . . All the afternoon the King walked here and there, up and down (quite contrary to what I thought him to have been), very active and stirring. Upon the quarter-deck he fell into discourse of his escape from Worcester, where it made me ready to weep to hear the stories that he told [110 of his difficulties that he had passed through, as his travelling four days and three nights on foot, every step up to his knees in dirt, with nothing but a green coat and a pair of country breeches on, and a pair of country shoes that made him so sore all over his feet that he could scarce stir. Yet he was forced to run away from a miller and other company that took them for rogues. His sitting [120 at table at one place, where the master of the house, that had not seen him in eight years, did know him, but kept it private; when at the same table there was one that had been of his own regiment at Worcester, could not know him, but made him drink the King's health, and said that the King was at least four fingers higher than he. At another place he was by some servants of the house made to drink, [130 that they might know him not to be a Roundhead, which they swore he was. In another place at his inn, the master of the house, as the King was standing with his hands upon the back of a chair by the fireside, kneeled down and kissed his hand, privately, saying that he would not ask him who he was, but bid God bless him whither he was going. . . . Under sail all night, and most glorious weather. [140

24th. Up, and make myself as fine as I could, with the linen stockings on and wide canons that I bought the other day at Hague. Extraordinary press of noble company, and great mirth all the day.

25th. By the morning we were come close to the land, and everybody made ready to get on shore. The King and the two dukes did eat their breakfast before they went, and there being set some [150 ship's diet before them, only to show them the manner of the ship's diet, they eat of nothing else but peas and pork and boiled beef. I had Mr. Darcy in my cabin; and Dr. Clerke, who eat with me, told me how the King had given £50 to Mr. Sheply for my Lord's servants, and £500 among the officers and common men of the ship. I spoke with the Duke of York about business, who called me Pepys by [160 name, and upon my desire did promise me his future favor. Great expectation of the King's making some knights, but there was none. About noon . . . went in a boat by ourselves, and so got on shore when the King did, who was received by General Monk with all imaginable love and respect at his entrance upon the land of Dover. Infinite the crowd of people, and the horsemen, citizens, and noble- [170 men of all sorts. The Mayor of the town came and gave him his white staff, the badge of his place, which the King did give him again. The Mayor also presented him from the town a very rich Bible, which he took, and said it was the thing that he loved above all things in the world.

September 2nd, 1666 (Lord's day). Some of our maids sitting up late [180 last night to get things ready against our feast today, Jane called us up about three in the morning, to tell us of a great fire they saw in the city. So I rose and slipped on my night-gown, and went to her window, and thought it to be on the back side of Mark Lane at the farthest; but, being unused to such fires as followed, I thought it far enough off; and so went to bed again and to sleep. About [190 seven rose again to dress myself, and there looked out at the window, and saw the fire not so much as it was and further off. So to my closet to set things to rights after yesterday's cleaning. By and by Jane comes and tells me that she hears that above three hundred houses have been burned down tonight by the fire we saw, and that it is now burning down all Fish Street, by London Bridge. So I made [200 myself ready presently, and walked to the Tower, and there got up upon one of the high places, Sir J. Robinson's little son going up with me; and there I did see the houses at that end of the bridge all on fire, and an infinite great fire on this and the other side the end of the bridge; which, among other people, did trouble me for poor little Michell and our Sarah on the bridge. So down, with my heart full [210 of trouble, to the Lieutenant of the Tower, who tells me that it begun this morning in the King's baker's house in Pudding Lane, and that it hath burned St. Magnus's Church and most part of Fish Street already. So I down to the waterside, and there got a boat, and through bridge, and there saw a lamentable fire. Poor Michell's house, as far as the Old Swan, already burned that way, and the [220 fire running further, that in a very little time it got as far as the Steel-yard, while I was there. Everybody endeavoring to remove their goods, and flinging into the river, or bringing them into lighters that lay off; poor people staying in their houses as long as till the very fire touched them, and then running into boats, or clambering from one pair of stairs by the waterside to another. And among [230 other things, the poor pigeons, I perceive, were loth to leave their houses, but hovered about the windows and balconies till they were some of them burned, their wings, and fell down. Having stayed, and in an hour's time seen the fire rage every way, and nobody, to my sight, endeavoring to quench it, but to remove their goods, and leave all to the fire, and having seen it get as far as the Steel- [240 yard, and the wind mighty high and driving it into the city, and every thing, after so long a drought, proving combustible, even the very stones of the churches, and among other things the poor steeple by which pretty Mrs. — lives, and whereof my old schoolfellow Elborough is parson, taken fire in the very top, and there burned till it fell down: I to Whitehall (with a gentleman with me who de- [250 sired to go off from the Tower, to see the fire, in my boat); to Whitehall, and there up to the King's closet in the Chapel, where people come about me, and I did give them an account dismayed them all, and word was carried in to the King. So I was called for, and did tell the King and Duke of York what I saw, and that unless his Majesty did command houses to be pulled down nothing could stop [260 the fire. They seemed much troubled, and the King commanded me to go to my Lord Mayor from him, and command him to spare no houses, but to pull down before the fire every way. . . . Here meeting with Captain Cock, I in his coach, which he lent me, and Creed with me, to Paul's, and there walked along Watling Street, as well as I could; every creature coming away laden with [270 goods to save, and here and there sick people carried away in beds. Extraordinary good goods carried in carts and on backs. At last met my Lord Mayor in Canning Street, like a man spent, with a handkercher about his neck. To the King's message he cried, like a fainting woman, "Lord! what can I do? I am spent: people will not obey me. I have been pulling down houses; but the fire [280 overtakes us faster than we can do it." That be needed no more soldiers; and that for himself, he must go and refresh himself, having been up all night. So he left me, and I him, and walked home, seeing people all almost distracted, and no manner of means used to quench the fire. The houses, too, so very thick thereabouts, and full of matter for burning, as pitch and tar, in Thames Street; and [290 warehouses of oil, and wines, and brandy, and other things. . . .

Met with the King and Duke of York in their barge, and with them to Queenhithe, and there called Sir Richard Browne to them. Their order was only to pull down houses apace, and so below bridge at the waterside; but little was or could be done, the fire coming upon them so fast. Good hopes there was of stop- [300 ping it at the Three Cranes above, and at Buttolph's wharf below bridge, if care be used; but the wind carries it into the city, so as we know not by the waterside what it do there. River full of lighters and boats taking in goods, and good goods swimming in the water. . . . So near the fire as we could for smoke; and all over the Thames, with one's face in the wind, you were almost burned [310 with a shower of fire-drops. This is very true; so as houses were burned by these drops and flakes of fire,—three or four, nay, five or six houses, one from another. When we could endure no more upon the water, we to a little ale-house on the Bankside, over against the Three Cranes, and there stayed till it was dark almost, and saw the fire grow; and as it grew darker, appeared more and more, and [320 in corners and upon steeples, and between churches and houses, as far as we could see up the hill of the city, in a most horrid, malicious, bloody flame, not like the fine flame of an ordinary fire. . . . We stayed till, it being darkish, we saw the fire as only one entire arch of fire from this to the other side the bridge, and in a bow up the hill for an arch of above a mile long: it made me weep to see [330 it. . . . So home with a sad heart.

3rd. About four o'clock in the morning, my Lady Batten sent me a cart to carry away all my money, and plate, and best things, to Sir W. Rider's at Bednall Green. Which I did, riding myself in my night-gown in the cart; and Lord! to see how the streets and the highways are crowded with people running and riding, and getting of carts at any rate to [340 fetch away things. . . . At night lay down a little upon a quilt of W. Hewer's in the office, all my own things being packed up or gone; and after me my poor wife did the like, we having fed upon the remains of yesterday's dinner, having no fire nor dishes, nor any opportunity of dressing anything.

4th. Up by break of day to get away the remainder of my things; which [350 I did by a lighter at the Iron Gate; and my hands so few, that it was the afternoon before we could get them all away. . . . Sir W. Batten not knowing how to remove his wine, did dig a pit in the garden, and laid it in there; and I took the opportunity of laying all the papers of my office that I could not otherwise dispose of. And in the evening Sir W. Penn and I did dig another, and put our wine in it, and [360 I my Parmezan cheese, as well as my wine and some other things. . . . Now begins the practise of blowing up of houses in Tower Street, those next the Tower; which at first did frighten people more than anything; but it stopped the fire where it was done, it bringing down the houses to the ground in the same places they stood; and then it was easy to quench what little fire was in it, though it [370 kindled nothing almost.

January 2nd, 1667. Up, I, and walked to Whitehall to attend the Duke of York, as usual. My wife up, and with Mrs. Penn to walk in the fields to frost-bite themselves. . . . With Sir W. Penn by coach to the Temple, and there 'light and eat a bit at an ordinary by, and then alone to the King's House, and there saw The Custom of the Country, the second [380 time of its being acted, wherein Knipp does the Widow well; but, of all the plays that ever I did see, the worst—having neither plot, language, nor anything in the earth that is acceptable; only Knipp sings a little song admirably. But fully the worst play that ever I saw or I believe shall see. So away home, much displeased for the loss of so much time, and disoblighing my wife by being there with- [390 out her. So, by link, walked home, it being mighty cold but dry, yet bad walking because very slippery with the frost and treading. Home and to my chamber to set down my journal, and then to thinking upon establishing my vows against the next year, and so to supper and to bed.

August 19th. Up, and at the office all the morning very busy. Towards [400 noon I to Westminster about some tallies at the Exchequer, and then straight home again and dined, and then to sing with my wife with great content, and then I to the office again, where busy, and then out and took coach and to the Duke of York's House, all alone, and there saw Sir Martin Mar-all again, though I saw him but two days since, and do find it the most comical play that ever I saw in my [410 life.

20th. Up, and to my chamber to set down my journal for the last three days, and then to the office, where busy all the morning. At noon home to dinner, and then with my wife abroad; set her down at the Exchange, and I to St. James's. . . . Thence with my Lord Bruncker to the Duke's playhouse (telling my wife so at the 'Change, where I left her), and [420 there saw Sir Martin Mar-all again, which I have now seen three times, and it hath been acted but four times, and still find it a very ingenious play, and full of variety. So home, and to the office, where my eyes would not suffer me to do anything by candle-light, and so called my wife and walked in the garden. She mighty pressing for a new pair of cuffs, which I am against the laying out [430 of money upon yet, which makes her angry. So home to supper and to bed.

21st. Up, and my wife and I fell out about the pair of cuffs, which she hath a mind to have to go to see the ladies dancing tomorrow at Betty Turner's school; and do vex me so that I am resolved to deny them her. However, by-and-by a way was found that she had them, and I well satisfied, being unwilling to let [440 our difference grow higher upon so small an occasion and frowardness of mine.

22nd. After dinner with my Lord Bruncker and his mistress to the King's playhouse, and there saw The Indian Emperor; where I find Nell come again, which I am glad of; but was most infinitely displeased with her being put to act the Emperor's daughter, which is a great and serious part, which she [450 do most basely. The rest of the play, though pretty good, was not well acted by most of them, methought; so that I took no great content in it.

October 19th. At the office all the morning, where very busy, and at noon home to a short dinner, being full of my desire of seeing my Lord Orrery's new play this afternoon at the King's House, The Black Prince, the first time it is [460 acted; where, though we come by two o'clock, yet there was no room in the pit, but we were forced to go into one of the upper boxes, at 4s. a piece, which is the first time I ever sat in a box in my life. And in the same box come, by and by, behind me, my Lord Berkeley and his lady; but I did not turn my face to them to be known, so that I was excused from giving them my seat; and this pleas- [470 ure I had, that from this place the scenes do appear very fine indeed, and much better than in the pit. The house infinite full, and the King and Duke of York was there. . . . So after having done business at the office, I home to supper and to bed.

LOYALIST STALL BALLADS

TO MAKE CHARLES A GREAT KING

To make Charles a great King, and give him no power;

To honor him much, and not obey him an hour;

To provide for his safety, and take away his Tower;

And to prove all is sweet, be it never so sour:

The new order of the land, and the land's new order. 5

To secure men their lives, liberties, and estates,
By arbitrary power, as it pleaseth the fates;
To take away taxes by imposing great rates,
And to make us a plaster by breaking our pates:
The new order, etc.

To sit and consult for ever and a day; 10
To counterfeit treason by a Parliamentary
way;
To quiet the land by a tumultuous sway,
New plots to devise, then them to betray:
The new order, etc.

To send them their zealots to Heaven in a string,
Who else to confusion religion will bring, 15
Who say the Lord's Prayer is a Popish
thing,
Who pray for themselves, but leave out their King:
The new order of the land, and the land's new order.

THE HUMBLE PETITION OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

If, Charles, thou wilt but be so kind
To give us leave to take our mind
Of all thy store,
When we, thy loyal subjects, find Thou 'ast nothing left to give behind, 5
We'll ask no more.

First, for religion, it is meet
We make it go upon new feet;
'Twas lame before;
One from Geneva would be sweet: 10
Let Warwick fetch't home with his fleet,
We'll ask no more.

Let us a consultation call
Of honest men, but Roundheads all, 15
God knows wherefore;
Allow them but a place to bawl
'Gainst Bishops' courts canonical,
We'll ask no more.

Reform each University,
And in them let no learning be, 20
A great eye-sore;

From hence make Rome's Arminians flee,
That none may have free-will but we,
We'll ask no more.

In this we will not be denied, 25
Because in you we'll not confide,
We know wherefore;
The citizens their plate provide;
Do you but send in yours beside,
We'll ask no more. 30

THE CHARACTER OF A ROUND- HEAD

What creature's this with his short hairs,
His little band, and huge long ears,
That this new faith hath founded?
The Puritans were never such;
The Saints themselves had ne'er so much; 5
Oh, such a knave's a Roundhead.

What's he that doth the Bishops hate,
And count their calling reprobate,
Cause by the Pope propounded,
And say a zealous cobbler's better 10
Than he that studieth every letter?
Oh, such a knave's a Roundhead.

What's he that doth high treason say
As often as his yea and nay,
And wish the King confounded; 15
And dare maintain that Master Pym
Is fitter for the crown than him?
Oh, such a knave's a Roundhead.

COME, DRAWER, SOME WINE

Come, Drawer, some wine,
Or we'll pull down the sign,
For we are all jovial compounders:
We'll make the house ring
With healths to our King, 5
And confusion light on his confounders.

And next, who e'er sees,
We drink on our knees,
To the King,—may he thirst that re-
pines;
A fig for those traitors 10
That look to our waters,
They have nothing to do with our wines.

And next, here's a cup
To the Queen; fill it up!
Were it poison we would make an end
on't; 15

May Charles and she meet,
And tread under feet
Both Presbyter and Independent.

To the Prince, and all others,
His sisters and brothers, 20
As low in condition as high-born,
We'll drink this, and pray
That shortly they may See all them that wrongs them at Tyburn.

And next, here's three bowls 25
To all gallant souls
That for the King did, and will venture,
May they flourish when those
That are his, and their foes, Are hanged, and rammed down to the center. 30

And next, let a glass
To our undoers pass,
Attended with two or three curses;
May plagues sent from hell
Stuff their bodies as well 35
As the cavaliers' coin doth their purses!

THE PROTECTING BREWER

A brewer may be a burgess grave,
And carry the matter so fine and so brave,
That he the better may play the knave,
Which nobody can deny.

A brewer may be a Parliament-man, 5
For there the knavery first began;
And brew most cunning plots he can,
Which nobody can deny.

A brewer may put on a Nabal face,
And march to the wars with so much
grace, 10
That he may get a Captain's place,
Which nobody can deny.

A brewer may speak so wondrous well
That he may rise strange things to tell, 15
And so to be made a Colonel,
Which nobody can deny.

A brewer may make his foes to flee,
And raise his fortunes so that he Lieutenant-General may be,
Which nobody can deny. 20

A brewer he may be all in all,
And raise his powers both great and small,
That he may be a Lord-General,
Which nobody can deny.

A brewer may be as bold as Hector, 25
When he has drunk off his cup of nectar,
And a brewer may be a Lord Protector,
Which nobody can deny.

Now here remains the strangest thing,
How this brewer about his liquor did
bring, 30
To be an Emperor or a King,
Which nobody can deny.

A brewer may do what he will,
And rob the church and state, to sell
His soul unto the devil of hell, 35
Which nobody can deny!

THE LAWYERS' LAMENTATION FOR THE LOSS OF CHARING CROSS

Undone! undone! the lawyers cry;
They ramble up and down;
We know not the way to Westminster
Now Charing Cross is down.
Then fare thee well, old Charing
Cross, 5
Then fare thee well, old stump;
It was a thing set up by the King,
And so pulled down by the Rump.

And when they came to the bottom of the Strand,
They were all at a loss; 10
This is not the way to Westminster,
We must go by Charing Cross.
Then fare thee well, etc.

The Parliament did vote it down,
As a thing they thought most fitting,
For fear it should fall, and so kill 'em
all, 15
In the House as they were sitting.
Then fare thee well, etc.

The Whigs they do affirm and say,
 To Popery it was bent;
 For what I know it might be so,
 For to church it never went. 20
 Then fare thee well, etc.

This cursed Rump rebellious crew
 They were so damned hard-hearted,
 They passed a vote that Charing Cross
 Should be taken down and carted.
 Then fare thee well, etc.

Now, Whigs, I would advise you all, 25
 'Tis what I'd have you do;
 For fear the King should come again,
 Pray pull down Tyburn too!
 Then fare thee well, old Charing
 Cross,
 Then fare thee well, old stump; 30
 It was a thing set up by the
 King,
 And so pulled down by the Rump.

THE AGE OF CLASSICISM

JOHN DRYDEN (1631-1700)

ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL

In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin,
Before polygamy was made a sin,
When man on many multiplied his kind,
Ere one to one was cursedly confined,— 4

* * * * *

Then Israel's monarch, . . .
 . . . wide as his command,
Scattered his Maker's image through the land. 10

* * * * *

Of all this numerous progeny was none
So beautiful, so brave, as Absalon.

* * * * *

Early in foreign fields he won renown
With kings and states allied to Israel's crown;

In peace the thoughts of war he could remove, 25

And seemed as he were only born for
love.

Whate'er he did was done with so much
ease,

In him alone 'twas natural to please;
His motions all accompanied with grace,
And Paradise was opened in his face. 30

With secret joy indulgent David viewed
His youthful image in his son renewed;
To all his wishes nothing he denied,
And made the charming Annabel his bride.

What faults he had (for who from faults is
free?) 35

His father could not, or he would not see.
Some warm excesses, which the law for-
bore,

Were construed youth that purged by boiling o'er;

And Amnon's murder by a specious name
Was called a just revenge for injured
fame. 40

Thus praised and loved, the noble youth remained,

While David undisturbed in Sion reigned.
But life can never be sincerely blest;
Heaven punishes the bad, and proves the
best.

The Jews, a headstrong, moody, murmuring race 45

As ever tried the extent and stretch of
grace;

God's pampered people, whom, debauched
with ease,

No king could govern nor no God could
please;

Gods they had tried of every shape and size

That godsmiths could produce or priests
devise; 50

These Adam-wits, too fortunately free,
Began to dream they wanted liberty;

And when no rule, no precedent, was
found

Of men by laws less circumscribed and bound,

They led their wild desires to woods and
caves, 55

And thought that all but savages were slaves.

They who, when Saul was dead, without a
blow

Made foolish Ishbosheth the crown forego;
Who banished David did from Hebron

bring,
And with a general shout proclaimed him
King; 60

Those very Jews who at their very best
Their humor more than loyalty expressed,

Now wondered why so long they had obeyed

An idol monarch whom their hands had
made;

Thought they might ruin him they could create, 65

Or melt him to that golden calf, a State.
But these were random bolts; no formed

design

Nor interest made the factious crowd to join:

The sober part of Israel, free from stain,
Well knew the value of a peaceful reign; 70

And looking backward with a wise affright Saw seams of wounds dishonest to the sight,

In contemplation of whose ugly scars
They cursed the memory of civil wars.
The moderate sort of men, thus qualified,
Inclined the balance to the better side; 76
And David's mildness managed it so well,
The bad found no occasion to rebel.
But when to sin our biassed nature leans,
The careful Devil is still at hand with means, 80

And providently pimps for ill desires:
The good old cause, revived, a plot requires;

Plots true or false are necessary things
To raise up commonwealths and ruin
kings.

The inhabitants of old Jerusalem 85
Were Jebusites; the town so called from them,

And theirs the native right.
But when the chosen people grew more strong,

The rightful cause at length became the wrong;

And every loss the men of Jebus bore, 90
They still were thought God's enemies the
more.

Thus worn and weakened, well or ill content,

Submit they must to David's government:
Impoverished and deprived of all command,

Their taxes doubled as they lost their land;
And, what was harder yet to flesh and
blood, 96

Their gods disgraced, and burnt like common wood.

This set the heathen priesthood in a flame,
For priests of all religions are the same.

Of whatsoe'er descent their godhead be,
Stock, stone, or other homely pedigree, 101
In his defense his servants are as bold,
As if he had been born of beaten gold.

The Jewish rabbins, though their enemies,
In this conclude them honest men and
wise. 105

For 'twas their duty, all the learned think,
To espouse his cause by whom they eat and drink.

From hence began that Plot, the nation's curse,

Bad in itself, but represented worse,

Raised in extremes, and in extremes de-
cried, 110

With oaths affirmed, with dying vows denied,

Not weighed or winnowed by the multitude,

But swallowed in the mass, unchewed and crude.

Some truth there was, but dashed and brewed with lies

To please the fools and puzzle all the wise: 115

Succeeding times did equal folly call

Believing nothing or believing all.

The Egyptian rites the Jebusites embraced,

Where gods were recommended by their taste;

Such savory deities must needs be good 120

As served at once for worship and for food.

By force they could not introduce these
gods,

For ten to one in former days was odds:

So fraud was used, the sacrificer's trade;

Fools are more hard to conquer then persuade. 125

Their busy teachers mingled with the Jews

And raked for converts even the court and stews:

Which Hebrew priests the more unkindly
took,

Because the fleece accompanies the flock.

Some thought they God's anointed meant to slay 130

By guns, invented since full many a day:

Our author swears it not; but who can
know

How far the Devil and Jebusites may go?

This plot, which failed for want of common sense,

Had yet a deep and dangerous consequence; 135

For as, when raging fevers boil the blood,

The standing lake soon floats into a flood,

And every hostile humor which before

Slept quiet in its channels bubbles o'er;

So several factions from this first ferment

Work up to foam and threat the government. 141

Some by their friends, more by themselves thought wise,

Opposed the power to which they could not rise.

Some had in courts been great and, thrown from thence,
Like fiends were hardened in impenitence.
Some, by their Monarch's fatal mercy
grown 146
From pardoned rebels kinsmen to the
throne,
Were raised in power and public office
high;
Strong bands, if bands ungrateful men could tie.

Of these the false Achitophel was first, 150
A name to all succeeding ages curst:
For close design and crooked counsels fit;
Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit;
Restless, unfixed in principles and place;
In power unpleased, impatient of disgrace: 155

A fiery soul, which, working out its way,
Fretted the pigmy body to decay,
And o'er-informed the tenement of clay.
A daring pilot in extremity;
Pleased with the danger when the waves went high, 160
He sought the storms; but, for a calm unfit,
Would steer too nigh the sands, to boast his wit.

Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide;
Else why should he, with wealth and honor
blest, 165

Refuse his age the needful hours of rest?
Punish a body which he could not please,
Bankrupt of life, yet prodigal of ease?
And all to leave what with his toil he won
To that unfeathered two-legg'd thing, a son, 170

Got, while his soul did huddled notions
try,
And born a shapeless lump, like anarchy.
In friendship false, implacable in hate,
Resolved to ruin or to rule the state;
To compass this the triple bond he broke,
The pillars of the public safety shook, 176
And fitted Israel for a foreign yoke;
Then, seized with fear, yet still affecting
fame,

Usurped a patriot's all-atoning name.
So easy still it proves in factious times 180
With public zeal to cancel private crimes.
How safe is treason, and how sacred ill,
Where none can sin against the people's
will!

Where crowds can wink and no offence be
known,

Since in another's guilt they find their
own! 185

Yet fame deserved no enemy can grudge;
The statesman we abhor, but praise the judge.

In Israel's courts ne'er sat an Abbethdin
With more discerning eyes or hands more clean.

Unbribed, unsought, the wretched to redress, 190

Swift of despatch and easy of access.

Oh! had he been content to serve the crown
With virtues only proper to the gown,
Or had the rankness of the soil been freed
From cockle that oppressed the noble seed, 195

David for him his tuneful harp had strung

And Heaven had wanted one immortal
song.

But wild Ambition loves to slide, not
stand.

And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land.
Achtophel, grown weary to possess 200

A lawful fame and lazy happiness, Disdained the golden fruit to gather
free,

And lent the crowd his arm to shake the tree.

Now, manifest¹ of crimes contrived long since,

He stood at bold defiance with his prince,
Held up the buckler of the people's cause 206

Against the crown, and skulked behind the laws.

The wished occasion of the plot he takes;
Some circumstances finds, but more he makes;

By buzzing emissaries fills the ears 210
Of listening crowds with jealousies and fears

Of arbitrary counsels brought to light,
And proves the king himself a Jebusite.
Weak arguments! which yet he knew full
well

Were strong with people easy to rebel. 215
For, governed by the moon, the giddy
Jews

Tread the same track when she the prime
renews;

¹ evidently guilty.

And once in twenty years, their scribes record,
 By natural instinct they change their lord.
 Achitophel still wants a chief, and none 220
 Was found so fit as warlike Absalon.
 Not that he wished his greatness to create,
 (For politicians neither love nor hate)
 But, for he knew his title not allowed Would keep him still depending on the crowd, 225
 That kingly power, thus ebbing out, might be
 Drawn to the dregs of a democracy.
 Him he attracts with studied arts to
 please,
 And sheds his venom in such words as
 these: 229
 "Auspicious prince, at whose nativity
 Some royal planet ruled the southern sky,
 Thy longing country's darling and desire,
 Their cloudy pillar and their guardian fire,
 Their second Moses, whose extended wand Divides the seas and shows the promised
 land, 235
 Whose dawning day in every distant age
 Has exercised the sacred prophet's rage,
 The people's prayer, the glad diviner's theme,
 The young men's vision and the old men's
 dream,
 Thee savior, thee the nation's vows confess, 240
 And, never satisfied with seeing, bless:
 Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,
 And stammering babes are taught to lisp
 thy name.
 How long wilt thou the general joy detain, Starve and defraud the people of thy reign? 245

* * * * *

Had thus old David, from whose loins you
 spring,
 Not dared, when Fortune called him to be
 King,
 At Gath an exile he might still remain,
 And Heaven's anointing oil had been in
 vain. 265
 Let his successful youth your hopes engage,
 But shun the example of declining age.
 Behold him setting in his western skies,
 The shadows lengthening as the vapors
 rise;

He is not now as when on Jordan's sand 270
 The joyful people thronged to see him
 land,
 Covering the beach and blackening all the strand;

* * * * *

All sorts of men, by my successful arts
 Abhorring kings, estrange their altered
 hearts 290
 From David's rule; and 'tis the general
 cry:
 'Religion, commonwealth, and liberty.'
 If you, as champion of the public good,
 Add to their arms a chief of royal blood,
 What may not Israel hope, and what applause 295
 Might such a general gain by such a
 cause?
 Not barren praise alone, that gaudy
 flower,
 Fair only to the sight, but solid power;
 And nobler is a limited¹ command,
 Given by the love of all your native land,
 Than a successive title, long and dark, 301
 Drawn from the mouldy rolls of Noah's
 ark."

What cannot praise effect in mighty
 minds,
 When flattery soothes, and when ambition blinds? 304
 Desire of power, on earth a vicious weed,
 Yet sprung from high is of celestial seed;
 In God 'tis glory, and when men aspire,
 'Tis but a spark too much of heavenly fire.
 The ambitious youth, too covetous of fame,
 Too full of angels' metal in his frame, 310
 Unwarily was led from virtue's ways,
 Made drunk with honor, and debauched with praise.

Half loth, and half consenting to the ill,
 (For loyal blood within him struggled still,) He thus replied: "And what pretence
 have I 315
 To take up arms for public liberty?
 My father governs with unquestioned
 right,
 The faith's defender, and mankind's de-
 light;
 Good, gracious, just, observant of the laws;
 And Heaven by wonders has espoused his cause. 320

¹ appointed.

Whom has he wronged in all his peaceful reign?

Who sues for justice to his throne in vain?
What millions has he pardoned of his foes,
Whom just revenge did to his wrath expose? 324

Mild, easy, humble, studious of our good,
Inclined to mercy and averse from blood.
If mildness ill with stubborn Israel suit,
His crime is God's beloved attribute.

* * * * *

Why then should I, encouraging the bad,
Turn rebel and run popularly mad? 336
Were he a tyrant, who by lawless might Oppressed the Jews and raised the Jebusite,

Well might I mourn; but nature's holy bands

Would curb my spirit and restrain my
hands; 340

The people might assert their liberty,
But what was right in them were crime in
me.

His favor leaves me nothing to require,
Prevents my wishes, and outruns desire;
What more can I expect while David lives?
All but his kingly diadem he gives: 346
And that"—But here he paused, then sighing said,

"Is justly destined for a worthier head;
For when my father from his toils shall
rest, 349

And late augment the number of the blest,
His lawful issue shall the throne ascend,
Or the collateral line, where that shall
end.

His brother, though oppressed with vulgar
spite,

Yet dauntless and secure of native right,
Of every royal virtue stands possessed, 355
Still dear to all the bravest and the best.

His courage goes, his friends his truth pro-
claim,

His loyalty the King, the world his fame.
His mercy even the offending crowd will
find,

For sure he comes of a forgiving kind. 360
Why should I then repine at Heaven's decree,

Which gives me no pretence to royalty?
Yet oh that Fate, propitiously inclined,
Had raised my birth, or had debased my
mind; 364

To my large soul not all her treasure lent,
And then betrayed it to a mean descent!
I find, I find my mounting spirits bold,
And David's part disdains my mother's mould.

Why am I scanted by a niggard birth? 369
My soul disdains the kindred of her earth,
And, made for empire, whispers me within,
'Desire of greatness is a god-like sin.'

Him staggering so when Hell's dire agent found,

While fainting virtue scarce maintained
her ground,

He pours fresh forces in, and thus replies: 375

"The eternal God, supremely good and
wise,

Imparts not these prodigious gifts in vain.
What wonders are reserved to bless your
reign!

Against your will your arguments have shown 379

Such virtue's only given to guide a throne.
Not that your father's mildness I contemn,
But manly force becomes the diadem.

'Tis true he grants the people all they crave,

And more, perhaps, than subjects ought to have;

For lavish grants suppose a monarch tame,
And more his goodness than his wit proclaim. 386

* * * * *

Doubt not; but, when he most affects the
frown,

Commit a pleasing rape upon the crown.
Secure his person to secure your cause: 475
They who possess the Prince possess the laws."

He said, and this advice above the rest
With Absalom's mild nature suited best;
Unblamed of life (ambition set aside),

Not stained with cruelty nor puffed with
pride, 480

How happy had he been if Destiny
Had higher placed his birth or not so high!

His kingly virtues might have claimed a
throne

And blessed all other countries but his
own;

But charming greatness since so few refuse, 485

'Tis juster to lament him than accuse.

Strong were his hopes a rival to remove,
 With blandishments to gain the public
 love,
 To head the faction while their zeal was hot,
 And popularly prosecute the plot. 490
 To further this, Achitophel unites
 The malcontents of all the Israelites, Whose differing parties he could wisely
 join
 For several ends to serve the same design;
 The best, (and of the princes some were such,) 495
 Who thought the power of monarchy too
 much,
 Mistaken men, and patriots in their
 hearts,
 Not wicked, but seduced by impious arts;
 By these the springs of property were bent
 And wound so high they cracked the government. 500
 The next for interest sought to embroil
 the state
 To sell their duty at a dearer rate,
 And make their Jewish markets of the
 throne,
 Pretending public good to serve their own.
 Others thought kings an useless heavy load, 505
 Who cost too much and did too little good.
 These were for laying honest David by
 On principles of pure good husbandry.
 With them joined all the haranguers of the
 throne,
 That thought to get preferment by the tongue. 510

* * * * *

A numerous host of dreaming saints succeed
 Of the true old enthusiastic breed: 530
 'Gainst form and order they their power employ,
 Nothing to build, and all things to destroy.
 But far more numerous was the herd of
 such
 Who think too little, and who talk too
 much.
 These out of mere instinct, they knew not
 why, 535
 Adored their fathers' God and property,
 And, by the same blind benefit of Fate,
 The Devil and the Jebusite did hate:

Born to be saved, even in their own despite,
 Because they could not help believing
 right. 540
 Such were the tools; but a whole Hydra
 more Remains, of sprouting heads too long to score.
 Some of their chiefs were princes of the
 land:
 In the first rank of these did Zimri stand;
 A man so various that he seemed to be 545
 Not one, but all mankind's epitome:
 Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong,
 Was everything by starts and nothing
 long;
 But in the course of one revolving moon
 Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon; 550
 Then all for women, painting, rhyming,
 drinking,
 Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.
 Blest madman, who could every hour
 employ
 With something new to wish or to enjoy!
 Railing and praising were his usual themes, 555
 And both (to show his judgment) in extremes:
 So over violent, or over civil,
 That every man with him was God or Devil.
 In squandering wealth was his peculiar art:
 Nothing went unrewarded but desert. 560
 Beggared by fools whom still he found too
 late,
 He had his jest, and they had his estate.
 He laughed himself from Court; then sought relief
 By forming parties, but could ne'er be chief:
 For spite of him, the weight of business fell
 On Absalom and wise Achitophel: 566
 Thus wicked but in will, of means bereft,
 He left not faction, but of that was left.

* * * * *

Shimei, whose youth did early promise bring
 Of zeal to God, and hatred to his King, 586
 Did wisely from expensive sins refrain,
 And never broke the Sabbath but for gain;
 Nor ever was he known an oath to vent,
 Or curse, unless against the government.

Thus heaping wealth by the most ready
 way 591
 Among the Jews, which was to cheat and
 pray,
 The city, to reward his pious hate
 Against his master, chose him magistrate.
 His hand a vane¹ of justice did uphold, 595
 His neck was loaded with a chain of gold.
 During his office treason was no crime;
 The sons of Belial had a glorious time;
 For Shimei, though not prodigal of pelf,
 Yet loved his wicked neighbor as himself.
 When two or three were gathered to de-
 claim 601
 Against the monarch of Jerusalem,
 Shimei was always in the midst of them:
 And, if they cursed the King when he was
 by,
 Would rather curse than break good company. 605
 If any durst his factious friends accuse,
 He packed a jury of dissenting Jews;
 Whose fellow-feeling in the godly cause
 Would free the suffering saint from human laws:
 For laws are only made to punish those 610
 Who serve the King, and to protect his foes.
 If any leisure time he had from power,
 Because 'tis sin to misemploy an hour,
 His business was by writing to persuade That kings were useless and a clog to trade: 615
 And that his noble style he might refine,
 No Rechabite more shunned the fumes of wine.
 Chaste were his cellars, and his shriveling board
 The grossness of a city feast abhorred:
 His cooks with long disuse their trade
 forgot; 620
 Cool was his kitchen, though his brains were hot.
 Such frugal virtue malice may accuse,
 But sure 'twas necessary to the Jews:
 For towns once burnt such magistrates require
 As dare not tempt God's providence by fire. 625

* * * * *

Surrounded thus with friends of every sort,
 Deluded Absalom forsakes the court;

¹ wand.

Impatient of high hopes, urged with renown,
 And fired with near possession of a crown.
 The admiring crowd are dazzled with surprise, 686
 And on his goodly person feed their eyes.
 His joy concealed, he sets himself to show,
 On each side bowing popularly low;
 His looks, his gestures, and his words he frames, 690
 And with familiar ease repeats their names.
 Thus formed by nature, furnished out with arts,
 He glides unfelt into their secret hearts.

* * * * *

Youth, beauty, graceful action, seldom fail,
 But common interest always will prevail;
 And pity never ceases to be shown 725
 To him who makes the people's wrongs his
 own.
 The crowd that still believe their kings oppress,
 With lifted hands their young Messiah bless;
 Who now begins his progress to ordain
 With chariots, horsemen, and a numerous
 train; 730
 From east to west his glories he displays,
 And, like the sun, the promised land surveys.
 Fame runs before him like the morning
 star,
 And shouts of joy salute him from afar;
 Each house receives him as a guardian god,
 And consecrates the place of his abode. 736

* * * * *

Oh foolish Israel! never warned by ill!
 Still the same bait, and circumvented still!
 Did ever men forsake their present ease,
 In midst of health imagine a disease, 756
 Take pains contingent mischiefs to foresee,
 Make heirs for monarchs, and for God
 decree?
 What shall we think? Can people give
 away
 Both for themselves and sons their native
 sway? 760
 Then they are left defenceless to the sword
 Of each unbounded, arbitrary lord;
 And laws are vain by which we right enjoy,
 If kings unquestioned can those laws destroy.

Yet if the crowd be judge of fit and just,
And kings are only officers in trust, 766
Then this resuming covenant was declared
When kings were made, or is forever barred.

If those who gave the sceptre could not tie
By their own deed their own posterity, 770
How then could Adam bind his future
race?

How could his forfeit on mankind take
place?

Or how could heavenly justice damn us all
Who ne'er consented to our father's fall?
Then kings are slaves to those whom they command, 775

And tenants to their people's pleasure
stand.

Add that the power, for property allowed,
Is mischievously seated in the crowd;
For who can be secure of private right,
If sovereign sway may be dissolved by
might? 780

Nor is the people's judgment always true:
The most may err as grossly as the few;
And faultless kings run down by common
cry

For vice, oppression, and for tyranny.

* * * * *

Now what relief can righteous David
bring? 811

How fatal 'tis to be too good a king!

Friends he has few, so high the madness
grows;

Who dare be such must be the people's foes.

Yet some there were even in the worst of
days; 815

Some let me name, and naming is to praise.

In this short file Barzillai first appears, Barzillai, crowned with honor and with
years.

Long since the rising rebels he withstood
In regions waste beyond the Jordan's
flood: 820

Unfortunately brave to buoy the state,
But sinking underneath his master's fate.
In exile for his godlike prince he mourned,
For him he suffered, and with him returned.

The court he practised, not the courtier's
art: 825

Large was his wealth, but larger was his
heart,

Which well the noblest objects knew to choose,

The fighting warrior, and recording Muse.
His bed could once a fruitful issue boast;
Now more than half a father's name is
lost. 830

His eldest hope, with every grace adorned,
By me, so Heaven will have it, always mourned

And always honored, snatched in man-hood's prime

By unequal fates and Providence's crime:
Yet not before the goal of honor won, 835
All parts fulfilled of subject and of
son;

Swift was the race, but short the time to run.

* * * * *

Indulge one labor more, my weary
Muse,

For Amiel: who can Amiel's praise refuse?
Of ancient race by birth, but nobler yet 900
In his own worth, and without title great:
The Sanhedrin long time as chief he ruled,
Their reason guided, and their passion cooled:

So dexterous was he in the Crown's defence,

So formed to speak a loyal nation's
sense, 905

That, as their band was Israel's tribes in small,

So fit was he to represent them all.

Now rasher charioteers the seat ascend,
Whose loose careers his steady skill commend:

They, like unequal ruler of the day, 910
Misguide the seasons and mistake the
way,

While he, withdrawn, at their mad labor
smiles,

And safe enjoys the Sabbath of his toils.

These were the chief, a small but faithful
band

Of worthies in the breach who dared to
stand 915

And tempt the united fury of the land.

With grief they viewed such powerful engines bent

To batter down the lawful government.

A numerous faction, with pretended frights,

In Sanhedrins to plume the regal rights,

The true successor from the court removed; 921
 The plot by hireling witnesses improved.
 These ills they saw, and, as their duty bound,
 They showed the King the danger of the wound;
 That no concessions from the throne would please, 925
 But lenitives fomented the disease;
 That Absalom, ambitious of the crown,
 Was made the lure to draw the people down;
 That false Achitophel's pernicious hate
 Had turned the plot to ruin Church and State; 930
 The council violent, the rabble worse;
 That Shimei taught Jerusalem to curse.
 With all these loads of injuries oppressed,
 And long revolving in his careful breast
 The event of things, at last, his patience tired, 935
 Thus from his royal throne, by Heaven inspired,
 The godlike David spoke; with awful fear
 His train their Maker in their master hear.
 "Thus long have I, by native mercy swayed,
 My wrongs dissembled, my revenge delayed; 940
 So willing to forgive the offending age,
 So much the father did the king assuage.
 But now so far my clemency they slight,
 The offenders question my forgiving right.
 That one was made for many, they contend; 945
 But 'tis to rule, for that's a monarch's end.
 They call my tenderness of blood my fear,
 Though manly tempers can the longest bear.
 Yet since they will divert my native course,
 'Tis time to show I am not good by force.
 Those heaped affronts that haughty subjects bring 951
 Are burdens for a camel, not a king.
 Kings are the public pillars of the State,
 Born to sustain and prop the nation's weight:
 If my young Samson will pretend a call 955
 To shake the column, let him share the fall.
 But oh that yet he would repent and live!
 How easy 'tis for parents to forgive!

With how few tears a pardon might be won
 From nature, pleading for a darling son!
 Poor pitied youth, by my paternal care 961 Raised up to all the height his frame could bear!
 Had God ordained his fate for empire born,
 He would have given his soul another turn:
 Gulled with a patriot's name, whose modern sense 965
 Is one that would by law supplant his prince;
 The people's brave, the politician's tool,
 Never was patriot yet but was a fool.
 Whence comes it that religion and the laws
 Should more be Absalom's than David's cause? 970
 His old instructor, ere he lost his place,
 Was never thought endued with so much grace.
 Good heavens, how faction can a patriot paint!
 My rebel ever proves my people's saint.
 Would they impose an heir upon the throne? 975
 Let Sanhedrins be taught to give their own.
 A king's at least a part of government,
 And mine as requisite as their consent.
 Without my leave a future king to choose Infers a right the present to depose. 980
 True, they petition me to approve their choice;
 But Esau's hands suit ill with Jacob's voice.
 My pious subjects for my safety pray,
 Which to secure, they take my power away.
 From plots and treasons Heaven preserve my years, 985
 But save me most from my petitioners,
 Unsatiated as the barren womb or grave;
 God cannot grant so much as they can crave.
 What then is left but with a jealous eye
 To guard the small remains of royalty? 990
 The law shall still direct my peaceful sway,
 And the same law teach rebels to obey.

* * * * *

By their own arts, 'tis righteously decreed,
 Those dire artificers of death shall bleed.
 Against themselves their witnesses will swear 1012
 Till, viper-like, their mother-plot they tear,

And suck for nutriment that bloody gore
Which was their principle of life before.
Their Belial with their Beelzebub will fight; 1016
Thus on my foes my foes shall do me right.
Nor doubt the event; for factious crowds engage
In their first onset all their brutal rage.
Then let them take an unresisted course;
Retire and traverse, and delude their force:
But when they stand all breathless, urge
the fight, 1022
And rise upon them with redoubled might:
For lawful power is still superior found,
When long driven back at length it stands
the ground." 1025
He said. The Almighty, nodding, gave consent;
And peals of thunder shook the firmament.
Henceforth a series of new time began;
The mighty years in long procession ran;
Once more the godlike David was restored,
And willing nations knew their lawful lord.

MAC FLECKNOE

All human things are subject to decay,
And, when Fate summons, monarchs must obey.
This Flecknoe found, who, like Augustus,
young
Was called to empire, and had governed
long;
In prose and verse, was owned without dispute, 5
Through all the realms of Nonsense, absolute.
This aged prince, now flourishing in peace,
And blest with issue of a large increase,
Worn out with business, did at length debate
To settle the succession of the state; 10
And, pondering which of all his sons was fit
To reign and wage immortal war with
wit,
Cried, "'Tis resolved, for Nature pleads that he Should only rule who most resembles me.
Shadwell alone my perfect image bears, 15
Mature in dulness from his tender years;
Shadwell alone of all my sons is he
Who stands confirmed in full stupidity.

The rest to some faint meaning make pre-
tence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense. 20
Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no
ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.
Besides, his goodly fabric fills the eye 25
And seems designed for thoughtless majesty,
Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade
the plain,
And, spread in solemn state, supinely reign.
Heywood and Shirley were but types of
thee,
Thou last great prophet of tautology. 30
Even I, a dunce of more renown than they,
Was sent before but to prepare thy way,
And coarsely clad in Norwich druggel¹
came
To teach the nations in thy greater name.
My warbling lute, the lute I whilom
strung, 35
When to King John of Portugal I sung,
Was but the prelude to that glorious day
When thou on silver Thames didst cut thy way,
With well-timed oars before the royal
barge,
Swelled with the pride of thy celestial charge, 40
And, big with hymn, commander of an host;
The like was ne'er in Epsom blankets
tossed.
Methinks I see the new Arion sail,
Thelute still trembling underneath thy nail.
At thy well-sharpened thumb from shore to shore 45
The treble squeaks for fear, the basses roar;
* * * * *
About thy boat the little fishes throng,
As at the morning toast that floats along.
Sometimes, as prince of thy harmonious
band, 51
Thou wield'st thy papers in thy threshing
hand.
St. André's feet ne'er kept more equal
time,
Not even the feet of thy own Psyche's
rhyme:

¹ coarse cloth.

Though they in number as in sense excel,
 So just, so like tautology, they fell 56
 That, pale with envy, Singleton forswore,
 The lute and sword which he in triumph
 bore,
 And vowed he ne'er would act Valerius
 more."
 Here stopped the good old sire and wept for joy, 60
 In silent raptures of the hopeful boy.
 All arguments, but most his plays, persuade
 That for anointed dulness he was made.
 Close to the walls which fair Augusta
 bind, 64
 (The fair Augusta much to fears inclined,)
 An ancient fabric raised to inform the sight
 There stood of yore, and Barbican it hight;
 A watch-tower once, but now, so fate ordains,
 Of all the pile an empty name remains; 69
 * * * * *

Near these a Nursery erects its head
 Where queens are formed and future heroes bred, 75
 Where unfledged actors learn to laugh and
 cry,
 Where infant trulls their tender voices try,
 And little Maximins the gods defy.
 Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
 Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear;
 But gentle Simkin just reception finds 81
 Amidst this monument of vanished minds;
 Pure clinches¹ the suburban muse affords,
 And Panton waging harmless war with words.
 Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well
 known, 85
 Ambitiously designed his Shadwell's
 throne.
 For ancient Dekker prophesied long since
 That in this pile should reign a mighty prince,
 Born for a scourge of wit and flail of sense,
 To whom true dulness should some Psyches owe, 90
 But worlds of Misers from his pen should flow;
Humorists and hypocrites it should produce,
 Whole Raymond families and tribes of Bruce.

¹ puns.

Now Empress Fame had published the renown
 Of Shadwell's coronation through the town. 95
 Roused by report of fame, the nations
 meet,
 From near Bunhill and distant Watling-
 street.
 No Persian carpets spread the imperial
 way,
 But scattered limbs of mangled poets lay;
 * * * * *

Much Heywood, Shirley, Ogleby, there
 lay; 102
 But loads of Shadwell almost choked the
 way.
 Bilked stationers for yeomen stood prepared,
 And Herringman was captain of the guard.
 The hoary prince in majesty appeared, 106
 High on a throne of his own labors reared.
 At his right hand our young Ascanius
 sate,
 Rome's other hope and pillar of the state.
 His brows thick fogs instead of glories
 grace, 110
 And lambent dulness played around his
 face.
 As Hannibal did to the altars come,
 Sworn by his sire a mortal foe to Rome;
 So Shadwell swore, nor should his vow be
 vain,
 That he till death true dulness would maintain; 115
 And, in his father's right and realm's defence,
 Ne'er to have peace with wit nor truce
 with sense.
 The king himself the sacred unction made,
 As king by office and as priest by trade.
 In his sinister hand, instead of ball, 120
 He placed a mighty mug of potent ale;
Love's Kingdom to his right he did convey,
 At once his sceptre and his rule of sway;
 Whose righteous lore the prince had practised young
 And from whose loins recorded Psyche
 sprung. 125
 His temples, last, with poppies were o'er-
 spread,
 That nodding seemed to consecrate his
 head.

Just at that point of time, if fame not lie,
On his left hand twelve reverend owls did
fly.

So Romulus, 'tis sung, by Tiber's brook, Presage of sway from twice six vultures
took. 131

The admiring throng loud acclamations
make,

And omens of his future empire take.

The sire then shook the honors of his
head,

And from his brows damps of oblivion
shed 135

Full on the filial dulness: long he stood,
Repelling from his breast the raging god;
At length burst out in this prophetic mood:
"Heavens bless my son! from Ireland let him reign

To far Barbadoes on the western main; 140
Of his dominion may no end be known,
And greater than his father's be his throne;
Beyond Love's Kingdom let him stretch his pen!"

He paused, and all the people cried
"Amen."

Then thus continued he: "My son, advance 145

Still in new impudence, new ignorance.

Success let others teach; learn thou from
me

Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry.

Let Virtuosos in five years be writ,

Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit.

Let gentle George in triumph tread the stage, 151

Make Dorimant betray, and Loveit rage; Let Cully, Cockwood, Fopling, charm the pit,

And in their folly show the writer's wit.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence, 155

And justify their author's want of sense.

Let them be all by thy own model made

Of dulness, and desire no foreign aid,

That they to future ages may be known,

Not copies drawn, but issue of thy own. 160

Nay, let thy men of wit too be the same,

All full of thee, and differing but in name.

But let no alien Sedley interpose

To lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose.

And when false flowers of rhetoric thou wouldst cull, 165

Trust nature; do not labor to be dull;

But write thy best, and top; and in each
line

Sir Formal's oratory will be thine.

Sir Formal, though unsought, attends thy quill,

And does thy northern dedications fill. 170

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to
fame

By arrogating Jonson's hostile name;

Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with
praise,

And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise.

Thou art my blood, where Jonson has no
part: 175

What share have we in nature or in art?

Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,

And rail at arts he did not understand?

Where made he love in Prince Nicander's vein,

Or swept the dust in Psyche's humble strain? 180

* * * * *

When did his muse from Fletcher scenes
purloin,

As thou whole Etheredge dost transfuse to thine? 184

But so transfused as oil on water's flow,

His always floats above, thine sinks below.

This is thy province, this thy wondrous
way,

New humors to invent for each new play:

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,

By which one way to dulness 'tis inclined,

Which makes thy writings lean on one side still, 191

And, in all changes, that way bends thy
will.

Nor let thy mountain belly make pretence

Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ, 195

But sure thou art but a kilderkin of wit.

Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly
creep;

Thy tragic muse gives smiles; thy comic,
sleep.

With whate'er gall thou set'st thyself to write,

Thy inoffensive satires never bite; 200

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,

It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase
fame

In keen iambics, but mild anagram.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command 205
 Some peaceful province in Acrostic Land.
 There thou mayest wings display and altars raise,
 And torture one poor word ten thousand ways;
 Or, if thou wouldst thy different talents
 suit,
 Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute." 210
 He said, but his last words were scarcely
 heard,
 For Bruce and Longville had a trap prepared,
 And down they sent the yet declaiming
 bard.
 Sinking, he left his drugget robe behind,
 Borne upwards by a subterranean wind.
 The mantle fell to the young prophet's
 part 216
 With double portion of his father's art.

From THE HIND AND THE PANTHER

A milk-white Hind, immortal and unchanged,
 Fed on the lawns, and in the forest ranged;
 Without unspotted, innocent within,
 She feared no danger, for she knew no
 sin.
 Yet had she oft been chased with horns and hounds 5
 And Scythian shafts, and many wingèd wounds
 Aimed at her heart; was often forced to
 fly,
 And doomed to death, though fated not
 to die.
 Not so her young; for their unequal line
 Was hero's make, half human, half divine. 10
 Their earthly mold obnoxious was to
 fate,
 The immortal part assumed immortal
 state.
 Of these a slaughtered army lay in blood,
 Extended o'er the Caledonian wood,
 Their native walk; whose vocal blood
 arose 15
 And cried for pardon on their perjured
 foes.

Their fate was fruitful, and the sanguine
 seed, Endued with souls, increased the sacred breed.
 So captive Israel multiplied in chains,
 A numerous exile, and enjoyed her pains. 20
 With grief and gladness mixed, their mother viewed
 Her martyred offspring and their race renewed;
 Their corps to perish, but their kind to
 last,
 So much the deathless plant the dying fruit surpassed.
 Panting and pensive now she ranged alone, 25
 And wandered in the kingdoms once her
 own.
 The common hunt, though from their rage restrained
 By sovereign power, her company dis-
 dained;
 Grinned as they passed, and with a glaring
 eye
 Gave gloomy signs of secret enmity. 30
 'Tis true she bounded by, and tripped so
 light
 They had not time to take a steady sight;
 For truth has such a face and such a mien
 As to be loved needs only to be seen.
 The bloody Bear, an Independent beast 35
 Unlicked to form, in groans her hate expressed.
 Among the timorous kind the quaking
 Hare
 Professed neutrality, but would not swear.
 Next her the buffoon Ape, as atheists
 use, Mimicked all sects, and had his own to choose; 40
 Still when the Lion looked, his knees he bent,
 And paid at church a courtier's compliment.
 The bristled Baptist Boar, impure as he,
 But whitened with the foam of sanctity,
 With fat pollutions filled the sacred
 place, 45
 And mountains levelled in his furious race:
 So first rebellion founded was in grace.
 But since the mighty ravage which he
 made
 In German forests had his guilt betrayed,

With broken tusks and with a borrowed
 name, 50
 He shunned the vengeance and concealed the shame,
 So lurked in sects unseen. With greater
 guile
 False Reynard fed on consecrated spoil;
 The graceless beast by Athanasius first
 Was chased from Nice; then, by Socinus nursed, 55
 His impious race their blasphemy renewed,
 And nature's king through nature's optics viewed.
 Reversed, they viewed him lessened to their eye,
 Nor in an infant could a God descry.
 New swarming sects to this obliquely
 tend; 60
 Hence they began, and here they all will end.

* * * * *

The Panther, sure the noblest next the Hind,
 And fairest creature of the spotted kind;
 Oh, could her inborn stains be washed
 away,
 She were too good to be a beast of prey! 330
 How can I praise or blame, and not offend,
 Or how divide the frailty from the friend?
 Her faults and virtues lie so mixed, that
 she Nor wholly stands condemned, nor wholly
 free.
 Then, like her injured Lion, let me speak;
 He cannot bend her and he would not break. 336
 Unkind already, and estranged in part,
 The Wolf begins to share her wandering
 heart.
 Though unpolluted yet with actual ill,
 She half commits who sins but in her
 will. 340
 If, as our dreaming Platonists report,
 There could be spirits of a middle sort,
 Too black for heaven and yet too white
 for hell,
 Who just dropped half-way down, nor lower fell;
 So poised, so gently she descends from
 high, 345
 It seems a soft dismissal from the sky.

Her house not ancient, whatsoe'er pre-
 tence
 Her clergy heralds make in her defence;
 A second century not half-way run, Since the new honors of her blood begun. 350

A SONG FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1687

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
 This universal frame began:
 When Nature underneath a heap
 Of jarring atoms lay,
 And could not heave her head, 5
 The tuneful voice was heard from high:
 "Arise, ye more than dead."

Then cold and hot and moist and dry
 In order to their stations leap,
 And Music's power obey. 10
 From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
 This universal frame began:
 From harmony to harmony
 Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
 The diapason closing full in Man. 15

What passion cannot Music raise and quell!
 When Jubal struck the chorded shell,
 His listening brethren stood around,
 And, wondering, on their faces fell
 To worship that celestial sound. 20 Less than a god they thought there could not dwell
 Within the hollow of that shell
 That spoke so sweetly and so well.
 What passion cannot Music raise and quell!

The trumpet's loud clangor 25
 Excites us to arms
 With shrill notes of anger
 And mortal alarms.
 The double, double, double beat
 Of the thundering drum 30 Cries: "Hark! the foes come;
 Charge, charge, 'tis too late to retreat!"

The soft complaining flute
 In dying notes discovers 35
 The woes of hopeless lovers,
 Whose dirge is whispered by the warbling
 lute.

Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs and desperation,
Fury, frantic indignation,
Depth of pains, and height of passion, 40
For the fair, disdainful dame.

But oh! what art can teach,
What human voice can reach
The sacred organ's praise?
Notes inspiring holy love, 45
Notes that wing their heavenly ways
To mend the choirs above.
Orpheus could lead the savage race;
And trees unrooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre; 50
But bright Cecilia raised the wonder higher:
When to her organ vocal breath was given,
An angel heard, and straight appeared,
Mistaking earth for heaven.

GRAND CHORUS

As from the power of sacred lays 55
The spheres began to move,
And sung the great Creator's praise
To all the blessed above;
So when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour, 60
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And Music shall untune the sky.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST; OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC

A SONG IN HONOR OF ST. CECILIA'S DAY, 1697

'Twas at the royal feast for Persia won
By Philip's warlike son:
Aloft in awful state
The godlike hero sate
On his imperial throne: 5
His valiant peers were placed around;
Their brows with roses and with myrtles
bound:
(So should desert in arms be crowned.)
The lovely Thais, by his side,
Sate like a blooming Eastern bride, 10
In flower of youth and beauty's pride.
Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair. 15

CHORUS

Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.

Timotheus, placed on high 20
Amid the tuneful choir,
With flying fingers touched the lyre:
The trembling notes ascend the sky,
And heavenly joys inspire.
The song began from Jove, 25
Who left his blissful seats above,
(Such is the power of mighty love.)
A dragon's fiery form belied the god:
Sublime on radiant spires he rode,
When he to fair Olympia pressed, 30
And while he sought her snowy
breast;
Then round her slender waist he curled,
And stamped an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.
The listening crowd admire the lofty
sound,
"A present deity," they shout around;
"A present deity," the vaulted roofs rebound: 36
With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod, 40
And seems to shake the spheres.

CHORUS

With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod, 45
And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,
Of Bacchus ever fair, and ever young.
The jolly god in triumph comes;
Sound the trumpets; beat the drums; 50
Flushed with a purple grace
He shows his honest face:
Now give the hautboys breath; he comes,
he comes.
Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain; 55
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,

Drinking is the soldier's pleasure;
 Rich the treasure,
 Sweet the pleasure,
 Sweet is pleasure after pain. 60

CHORUS

Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
 Drinking is the soldier's pleasure;
 Rich the treasure,
 Sweet the pleasure,
 Sweet is pleasure after pain. 65

Soothed with the sound, the king grew
 vain;

Fought all his battles o'er again;
 And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice
 he slew the slain.

The master saw the madness rise,
 His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes; 70
 And, while he heaven and earth defied,

Changed his hand, and checked his
 pride.

He chose a mournful Muse,
 Soft pity to infuse;
 He sung Darius great and good, 75
 By too severe a fate,

Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
 Fallen from his high estate,
 And weltering in his blood;
 Deserted at his utmost need 80
 By those his former bounty fed;
 On the bare earth exposed he lies,
 With not a friend to close his eyes.

With downcast looks the joyless victor
 sate,

Revolving in his altered soul 85
 The various turns of chance be-
 low;

And, now and then, a sigh he stole,
 And tears began to flow.

CHORUS

Revolving in his altered soul
 The various turns of chance be-
 low; 90

And, now and then, a sigh he stole,
 And tears began to flow.

The mighty master smiled to see
 That love was in the next degree;
 'Twas but a kindred sound to move, 95
 For pity melts the mind to love.

Softly sweet, in Lydian measures,
 Soon he soothed his soul to pleasures.

"War," he sung, "is toil and trouble;
 Honor but an empty bubble; 100

Never ending, still beginning,
 Fighting still, and still destroying:

If the world be worth thy winning,

Think, oh think it worth enjoying,
 Lovely Thais sits beside thee, 105 Take the good the gods provide
 thee."

The many rend the skies with loud applause:

So Love was crowned, but Music won the
 cause.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gazed on the fair 110

Who caused his care,
 And sighed and looked, sighed and
 looked,

Sighed and looked, and sighed again:
 At length, with love and wine at once op-
 pressed,

The vanquished victor sunk upon her
 breast. 115

CHORUS

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gazed on the fair

Who caused his care,
 And sighed and looked, sighed and
 looked,

Sighed and looked, and sighed again: 120
 At length, with love and wine at once op-
 pressed,

The vanquished victor sunk upon her
 breast.

Now strike the golden lyre again:

A louder yet, and yet a louder strain.

Break his bands of sleep asunder, 125

And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound

Has raised up his head;

As awaked from the dead,

And, amazed, he stares around. 130

"Revenge, revenge!" Timotheus cries,

"See the Furies arise!

See the snakes that they rear,

How they hiss in their hair,

And the sparkles that flash from their
eyes! 135
Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand!
Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,
And unburied remain
Inglorious on the plain: 140
Give the vengeance due
To the valiant crew.
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes,
And glittering temples of their hostile
gods!" 145
The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seized a flambeau with zeal
to destroy;
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy. 150

CHORUS

And the king seized a flambeau with zeal
to destroy;
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another
Troy.

Thus, long ago, 155
Ere heaving bellows learned to blow,
While organs yet were mute,
Timotheus, to his breathing flute
And sounding lyre,
Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft
desire. 160

At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred
store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds, 165
With Nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown;
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down. 170

GRAND CHORUS

At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred
store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With Nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before. 176
Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown;
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down. 180

LINES PRINTED UNDER THE EN-GRAVED PORTRAIT OF MILTON

(In Tonson's folio edition of *Paradise
Lost*, 1688)

Three poets, in three distant ages born,
Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
The first in loftiness of thought surpassed,
The next in majesty, in both the last:
The force of Nature could no farther go;
To make a third she joined the former two.

From AN ESSAY OF DRAMATIC POESY

As Neander was beginning to examine The Silent Woman, Eugenius, earnestly regarding him: I beseech you, Neander, said he, gratify the company, and me in particular, so far as, before you speak of the play, to give us a character of the author; and tell us frankly your opinion, whether you do not think all writers, both French and English, ought to give place to him? [10

I fear, replied Neander, that, in obey-ing your commands, I shall draw some envy on myself. Besides, in performing them, it will be first necessary to speak somewhat of Shakespeare and Fletcher, his rivals in poesy; and one of them, in my opinion, at least his equal, perhaps his superior.

To begin then with Shakespeare. He was the man who of all modern, and [20 perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul. All the images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them not laboriously, but luckily:
when he describes anything, you more than see it, you feel it too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning, give him the greater commendation: he was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he [30] looked inwards, and found her there. I cannot say he is everywhere alike; were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat, insipid; his comic wit degenerating into clenches, his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him: no man can say, he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did [40] not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets,

Quantum lenta solvent inter viburna cupressi.

The consideration of this made Mr. Hales of Eton say, that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakespeare; and however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the [50] age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him, Fletcher and Jonson, never equaled them to him in their esteem: and in the last king's court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakespeare far above him.

Beaumont and Fletcher, of whom I am next to speak, had, with the advantage [60] of Shakespeare's wit, which was their precedent, great natural gifts, improved by study; Beaumont especially being so accurate a judge of plays, that Ben Jonson, while he lived, submitted all his writings to his censure, and 'tis thought, used his judgment in correcting, if not contriving all his plots. What value he had for him, appears by the verses he writ to him; and therefore I need speak [70] no further of it. The first play that brought Fletcher and him in esteem, was their Philaster; for before that, they had written two or three very unsuccessfully: as the like is reported of Ben Jonson, before he writ Every Man in his Humor. Their plots were generally more regular than Shakespeare's, especially those which were made before Beaumont's death; and they understood and imitated the [80] conversation of gentlemen much better; whose wild debaucheries, and quickness of wit in repartees, no poet before them could paint as they have done. Humor, which Ben Jonson derived from particular persons, they made it not their business to describe; they represented all the passions very lively, but above all, love. I am apt to believe the English language in them arrived to its high- [90] est perfection; what words have since been taken in, are rather superfluous than ornamental. Their plays are now the most pleasant and frequent entertainments of the stage; two of theirs being acted through the year for one of Shakespeare's or Jonson's: the reason is, because there is a certain gaiety in their comedies, and pathos in their more serious plays, which suits generally with all [100] men's humors. Shakespeare's language is likewise a little obsolete, and Ben Jonson's wit comes short of theirs.

As for Jonson, to whose character I am now arrived, if we look upon him while he was himself (for his last plays were but his dotages), I think him the most learned and judicious writer which any theater ever had. He was a most severe judge of himself, as well as [110] others. One cannot say he wanted wit, but rather that he was frugal of it. In his works you find little to retrench or alter. Wit and language, and humor also in some measure, we had before him; but something of art was wanting to the drama, till he came. He managed his strength to more advantage than any who preceded him. You seldom find him making love in any of his scenes, or [120] endeavoring to move the passions; his genius was too sullen and saturnine to do it gracefully, especially when he knew he came after those who had performed both to such an height. Humor was his proper sphere; and in that he delighted most to represent mechanic people. He was deeply conversant in the ancients, both Greek and Latin, and he borrowed boldly from them: there is scarce a poet [130] or historian among the Roman authors of those times, whom he has not translated in Sejanus and Catiline. But he has done his robberies so openly, that one may see he fears not to be taxed by any law. He invades authors like a monarch; and what would be theft in other poets, is only victory in him. With the spoils of these writers he so represents old Rome to us, in its rites, [140 ceremonies, and customs, that if one of their poets had written either of his tragedies, we had seen less of it than in him. If there was any fault in his language, it was, that he weaved it too closely and laboriously, in his comedies especially: perhaps, too, he did a little too much Romanize our tongue, leaving the words which he translated almost as much Latin as he found them: [150 wherein, though he learnedly followed their language, he did not enough comply with the idiom of ours. If I would compare him with Shakespeare, I must acknowledge him the more correct poet, but Shakespeare the greater wit. Shakespeare was the Homer, or father of our dramatic poets; Jonson was the Virgil, the pattern of elaborate writing; I admire him, but I love Shakespeare. To conclude of him; as [160 he has given us the most correct plays, so in the precepts which he has laid down in his Discoveries, we have as many and profitable rules for perfecting the stage, as any wherewith the French can furnish us.

From the PREFACE TO THE FABLES

It remains that I say somewhat of Chaucer in particular.

In the first place, as he is the father of English poetry, so I hold him in the same degree of veneration as the Grecians held Homer, or the Romans Virgil. He is a perpetual fountain of good sense, learned in all sciences, and therefore speaks properly on all subjects. As he knew what to say, so he knows also [10 when to leave off; a continence which is practised by few writers, and scarcely by any of the ancients, excepting Virgil and Horace. One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a drag-net, great and small. There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted; whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and [20 women, but little of solid meat for men. All this proceeded, not from any want of knowledge, but of judgment. Neither did he want that in discerning the beauties and faults of other poets, but only indulged himself in the luxury of writing; and perhaps knew it was a fault but hoped the reader would not find it. For this reason, though he must always be thought a great poet, he is no longer esteemed [30 a good writer; and for ten impressions, which his works have had in so many successive years, yet at present a hundred books are scarcely purchased once a twelvemonth; for, as my last Lord Rochester said, though somewhat profanely, "Not being of God, he could not stand."

Chaucer followed nature everywhere, but was never so bold to go beyond her; and there is a great difference of being [40 poeta and nimis poeta, if we believe Catullus, as much as betwixt a modest behavior and affectation. The verse of Chaucer, I confess, is not harmonious to us; but 'tis like the eloquence of one whom Tacitus commends, it was auribus istius temporis accommodata; they who lived with him, and some time after him, thought it musical; and it continues so even in our judgment, if compared with the num- [50 bers of Lydgate and Gower, his contemporaries; there is the rude sweetness of a Scotch tune in it, which is natural and pleasing though not perfect. 'Tis true I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him, for he would make us believe the fault is in our ears, and that there were really ten syllables in a verse where we find but nine; but this opinion is not worth confuting; 'tis so [60 gross and obvious an error that common sense (which is a rule in everything but matters of faith and revelation) must convince the reader that equality of numbers, in every verse which we call heroic, was either not known or not always practised in Chaucer's age. It were an easy matter to produce some thousands of his verses which are lame for want of half a foot, and sometimes a whole [70

one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. We can only say that he lived in the infancy of our poetry, and that nothing is brought to perfection at the first. We must be children before we grow men.

* * * * *

He must have been a man of a most wonderful comprehensive nature, because, as it has been truly observed of him, he has taken into the compass of his [80 Canterbury Tales the various manners and humors (as we now call them) of the whole English nation in his age. Not a single character has escaped him. All his pilgrims are severally distinguished from each other, and not only in their inclinations but in their very physiognomies and persons. Baptista Porta could not have described their natures better than by the marks which the [90 poet gives them. The matter and manner of their tales and of their telling are so suited to their different educations, humors, and callings that each of them would be improper in any other mouth. Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity: their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, [100 and of them only. Some of his persons are vicious and some virtuous; some are unlearned, or (as Chaucer calls them) lewd, and some are learned. Even the ribaldry of the low characters is different: the Reeve, the Miller, and the Cook are several men, and distinguished from each other as much as the mincing Lady Prioress and the broad-speaking, gap-toothed Wife of Bath. But enough [110 of this; there is such a variety of game springing up before me that I am distracted in my choice and know not which to follow. It is sufficient to say, according to the proverb, that here is God's plenty. We have our forefathers and great-grand-dames all before us as they were in Chaucer's days: their general characters are still remaining in mankind, and even in England, though [120 they are called by other names than those of monks, and friars, and canons, and lady abbesses, and nuns; for mankind is ever the same, and nothing lost out of nature though everything is altered.

DANIEL DEFOE (1660?-1731)

From THE TRUE-BORN ENGLISH-MAN

Satire, be kind, and draw a silent veil,
Thy native England's vices to conceal;
Or, if that task's impossible to do,
At least be just, and show her virtues too;
Too great the first, alas! the last too few. 5

* * * * *

Ingratitude, a devil of black renown,
Possessed her very early for his own:
An ugly, surly, sullen, selfish spirit,
Who Satan's worst perfections does inherit;
Second to him in malice and in force, 10
All devil without, and all within him worse.

He made her first-born race to be so rude,
And suffered her to be so oft subdued,
By several crowds of wandering thieves
o'er-run,
Often unpeopled, and as oft undone; 15
While every nation that her powers reduced
Their languages and manners introduced;
From whose mixed relics our compounded breed
By spurious generation does succeed,
Making a race uncertain and uneven, 20
Derived from all the nations under heaven.

The Romans first with Julius Cæsar came,
Including all the nations of that name,
Gauls, Greeks, and Lombards; and by computation
Auxiliaries or slaves of every nation. 25
With Hengist, Saxons; Danes with Sweno came,
In search of plunder, not in search of fame.
Scots, Picts, and Irish from the Hibernian shore;
And conquering William brought the Normans o'er.

All these their barbarous offspring left behind, 30
The dregs of armies, they of all mankind,
Blended with Britons, who before were
here,
Of whom the Welsh have blest the character.

From this amphibious, ill-born mob
began
That vain, ill-natured thing, an English-
man. 35
The customs, sir-names, languages and manners,
Of all these nations, are their own ex-plainers;
Whose relics are so lasting and so strong,
They've left a shibboleth upon our tongue;
By which, with easy search, you may distinguish 40
Your Roman, Saxon, Danish, Norman, English.

* * * * *

And here begins the ancient pedigree
That so exalts our poor nobility:—
'Tis that from some French trooper they derive,
Who with the Norman bastard did arrive:
The trophies of the families appear; 46
Some show the sword, the bow, and some
the spear,
Which their great ancestor, forsooth, did
wear.
These in the herald's register remain,
Their noble mean extraction to explain; 50
Yet who the hero was, no man can tell,
Whether a drummer, or a colonel;
The silent record blushes to reveal
Their undescended dark original.

But grant the best. How came the change to pass, 55
A true-born Englishman of Norman race?
A Turkish horse can show more history
To prove his well-descended family.
Conquest, as by the moderns 'tis expressed,
May give a title to the lands possessed; 60
But that the longest sword should be so civil
To make a Frenchman English, that's the devil.

These are the heroes that despise the Dutch,
And rail at new-come foreigners so much;

Forgetting that themselves are all derived From the most scoundrel race that ever lived, 66
A horrid crowd of rambling thieves and drones
Who ransacked kingdoms and dispeopled towns;
The Pict and painted Briton, treacherous Scot,
By hunger, theft, and rapine, hither
brought; 70
Norwegian pirates, buccaneering Danes, Whose red-haired offspring everywhere remains;
Who, joined with Norman French, compound the breed
From whence your true-born Englishmen proceed.

* * * * *

But England, modern to the last degree,
Borrows or makes her own nobility, 76
And yet she boldly boasts of pedigree;
Repines that foreigners are put upon
her,
And talks of her antiquity and honor.
Her Sackvills, Savils, Cecils, Delameres, 80
Mohuns, Montagues, Duras and Veeres,
Not one have English names, yet all are English peers.
Your Houblons, Papillons, and Lethuliers, Pass now for true-born English knights and squires,
And make good senate-members, or lord mayors. 85
Wealth, howsoever got, in England makes Lords of mechanics, gentlemen of rakes.
Antiquity and birth are needless here;
'Tis impudence and money makes a peer.
Innumerable city knights we know, 90
From Blue-coat Hospitals, and Bridewell
flow.
Draymen and porters fill the city chair,
And foot-boys magisterial purple wear.
Fate has but very small distinction set Betwixt the Counter and the coronet. 95
Tarpaulin lords, pages of high renown, Rise up by poor men's valor, not their
own;
Great families of yesterday we show,
And lords, whose parents were the Lord knows who.

* * * * *

Then let us boast of ancestors no more,
Or deeds of heroes done in days of yore,
In latent records of the ages past, 102
Behind the rear of time, in long oblivion
placed;

For if our virtues must in lines descend,
The merit with the families would end, 105
And intermixture would most fatal grow,
For vice would be hereditary too;
The tainted blood would of necessity Involuntary wickedness convey.

Vice, like ill-nature, for an age or two
May seem a generation to pursue; 111
But virtue seldom does regard the breed;
Fools do the wise, and wise men fools succeed.

What's it to us what ancestors we had?
If good, what better? or what worse, if bad? 115

Examples are for imitation set,
Yet all men follow virtue with regret.

Could but our ancestors retrieve their
fate,

And see their offspring thus degenerate,—
How we contend for birth and names unknown, 120

And build on their past actions, not our
own,—

They'd cancel records, and their tombs
deface,

And openly disown the vile degenerate
race;

For fame of families is all a cheat;
It's personal virtue only makes us great. 125

THE SHORTEST WAY WITH THE DISSENTERS

Sir Roger L'Estrange tells us a story in his collection of fables, of the cock and the horses. The cock was gotten to roost in the stable among the horses; and there being no racks or other conveniences for him, it seems he was forced to roost upon the ground. The horses jostling about for room and putting the cock in danger of his life, he gives them this grave advice, "Pray, gentlefolks, let us stand still, [10 for fear we should tread upon one another."

There are some people in the world, who, now they are unperched, and reduced to an equality with other people, and under strong and very just apprehensions of being further treated as they deserve, begin, with Esop's cock, to preach up peace and union and the Christian duties of moderation, forgetting that [20 when they had the power in their hands, those graces were strangers in their gates!

It is now near fourteen years, that the glory and peace of the purest and most flourishing Church in the world has been eclipsed, buffeted, and disturbed by a sort of men whom God in his providence has suffered to insult over her, and bring her down. These have been the days of her humiliation and tribulation. She [30 has borne with an invincible patience the reproach of the wicked; and God has at last heard her prayers, and delivered her from the oppression of the stranger.

And now, they find their day is over, their power gone, and the throne of this nation possessed by a royal, English, true, and ever constant member of, and friend to, the Church of England. Now they find that they are in danger of [40 the Church of England's just resentments. Now, they cry out, "Peace!" "Union!" "Forbearance!" and "Charity!": as if the Church had not too long harbored her enemies under her wing, and nourished the viperous brood, till they hiss and fly in the face of the mother that cherished them!

No, gentlemen, the time of mercy is past, your day of grace is over, you [50 should have practised peace, and moderation, and charity, if you expected any yourselves:

We have heard none of this lesson for fourteen years past. We have been huffed and bullied with your Act of Toleration. You have told us that you are the Church established by law, as well as others; have set up your canting synagogues at our church doors; and the Church and her [60 members have been loaded with reproaches, with oaths, associations, abjurations, and what not! Where has been the mercy, the forbearance, the charity you have shown to tender consciences of the Church of England that could not take oaths as fast as you made them; that, having sworn allegiance to their lawful and rightful king, could not dispense with their oath, their king being still alive, [70 and swear to your new hodge-podge of a Dutch government? These have been turned out of their livings, and they and their families left to starve; their estates double taxed to carry on a war they had no hand in, and you got nothing by! What account can you give of the multitudes you have forced to comply, against their consciences, with your new sophistical politics, who, like new converts [80 in France, sin because they cannot starve? And now the tables are turned upon you, you must not be persecuted! It is not a Christian spirit!

You have butchered one king, deposed another king, and made a mock king of a third, and yet, you could have the face to expect to be employed and trusted by the fourth! Anybody that did not know the temper of your party, would stand [90 amazed at the impudence as well as folly to think of it!

Your management of your Dutch monarch, whom you reduced to a mere King of Clubs, is enough to give any future princes such an idea of your principles as to warn them sufficiently from coming into your clutches; and, God be thanked, the Queen is out of your hands, knows you, and will have a care of you! [100

There is no doubt but the supreme authority of a nation has in itself a power, and a right to that power, to execute the laws upon any part of that nation it governs. The execution of the known laws of the land, and that with but a gentle hand neither, was all that the fanatical party of this land have ever called persecution. This they have magnified to a height that the sufferings of the [110 Huguenots in France were not to be compared with. Now to execute the known laws of a nation upon those who transgress them, after voluntarily consenting to the making of those laws, can never be called persecution, but justice. But justice is always violence to the party offending, for every man is innocent in his own eyes. The first execution of the laws against Dissenters in England [120 was in the days of King James I; and what did it amount to? Truly, the worst they suffered was, at their own request, to let them go to New England, and erect a new colony; and give them great privileges, grants, and suitable powers; keep them under protection, and defend them against all invaders; and receive no taxes or revenue from them! This was the cruelty of the Church of England. [130 Fatal lenity! It was the ruin of that excellent prince, King Charles I. Had King James sent all the Puritans in England away to the West Indies, we had been a national unmixed Church. The Church of England had been kept undivided and entire!

To requite the lenity of the father, they take up arms against the son, conquer, pursue, take, imprison, and at last [140 put to death the anointed of God, and destroy the very being and nature of government: setting up a sordid impostor, who had neither title to govern, nor understanding to manage, but supplied that want, with power, bloody and desperate counsels and craft, without conscience.

Had not King James I withheld the full execution of the laws, had he given them strict justice, he had cleared [150 the nation of them, and the consequences had been plain: his son had never been murdered by them, nor the monarchy overwhelmed. It was too much mercy shown them that was the ruin of his posterity, and the ruin of the nation's peace. One would think the Dissenters should not have the face to believe that we are to be wheedled and canted into peace and toleration, when they know that [160 they have once requited us with a civil war, and once with an intolerable and unrighteous persecution, for our former civility.

Nay, to encourage us to be easy with them, it is apparent that they never had the upper hand of the Church but they treated her with all the severity, with all the reproach and contempt as was possible! What peace and what mercy [170 did they show the loyal gentry of the Church of England, in the time of their triumphant Commonwealth? How did they put all the gentry of England to ransom, whether they were actually in arms for the king or not, making people compound for their estates, and starve their families! How did they treat the clergy of the Church of England, sequester the ministers, devour the patrimony [180 of the Church and divide the spoil, by sharing the Church lands among their soldiers, and turning her clergy out to starve! Just such measure as they have meted, should be measured them again!

Charity and love is the known doctrine of the Church of England, and it is plain she has put it in practise towards the Dissenters, even beyond what they ought, till she has been wanting to herself, [190 and in effect unkind to her own sons; particularly, in the too much lenity of King James I, mentioned before. Had he so rooted the Puritans from the face of the land, which he had an opportunity early to have done, they had not had the power to vex the Church, as since they have done.

In the days of King Charles II, how did the Church reward their bloody [200 doings with lenity and mercy! Except the barbarous regicides of the pretended court of justice, not a soul suffered for all the blood in an unnatural war. King Charles came in all mercy and love, cherished them, preferred them, employed them, withheld the rigor of the law and oftentimes, even against the advice of his Parliament, gave them liberty of conscience; and how did they requite [210 him? With the villainous contrivance to depose and murder him and his successor, at the Rye House Plot!

King James II, as if mercy was the inherent quality of the family, began his reign with unusual favor to them. Nor could their joining with the Duke of Monmouth against him, move him to do himself justice upon them. But that mistaken prince, thinking to win [220 them by gentleness and love, proclaimed a universal liberty to them, and rather discountenanced the Church of England than them. How they requited him, all the world knows!

The late reign is too fresh in the memory of all the world to need a comment. How under pretense of joining with the Church in redressing some grievances, they pushed things to that extremity, in conjunction [230 with some mistaken gentlemen, as to depose the late king; as if the grievance of the nation could not have been redressed but by the absolute ruin of the prince. Here is an instance of their temper, their peace, and charity! To what height they carried themselves during the reign of a king of their own, how they crept into all places of trust and profit; how they insinuated themselves [240 into the favor of the king, and were at first preferred to the highest places in the nation, how they engrossed the ministry; and, above all, how pitifully they managed, is too plain to need any remarks. . . .

These are the gentlemen! these, their ways of treating the Church, both at home and abroad! Now let us examine the reasons they pretend to give, why [250 we should be favorable to them; why we should continue and tolerate them among us.

First. They are very numerous, they say. They are a great part of the nation, and we cannot suppress them.

To this, may be answered:

First. They are not so numerous as the Protestants in France: and yet the French king effectually cleared the [260 nation of them at once; and we don't find he misses them at home! But I am not of the opinion they are so numerous as is pretended. Their party is more numerous than their persons; and those mistaken people of the Church who are misled and deluded by their wheedling artifices to join with them, make their party the greater: but those will open their eyes when the government shall set heartily [270 about the work, and come off from them, as some animals, which they say, always desert a house when it is likely to fall.

Secondly. The more numerous, the more dangerous; and therefore the more need to suppress them; and God has suffered us to bear them as goads in our sides, for not utterly extinguishing them long ago.

Thirdly. If we are to allow them, [280 only because we cannot suppress them; then it ought to be tried, whether we can or no. And I am of opinion it is easy to be done, and could prescribe ways and means, if it were proper: but I doubt not the government will find effectual methods for the rooting of the contagion from the face of this land.

Another argument they use, which is this: that it is a time of war, and we [290 have need to unite against the common enemy.

We answer, this common enemy had been no enemy, if they had not made him so. He was quiet, in peace, and no way disturbed or encroached upon us; and we know no reason we had to quarrel with him.

But, further, we make no question but we are able to deal with this common [300 enemy without their help: but why must we unite with them, because of the enemy? Will they go over to the enemy, if we do not prevent it, by a union with them? We are very well contented they should, and make no question we shall be ready to deal with them and the common enemy too; and better without them than with them. Besides, if we have a common enemy, there is the more [310 need to be secure against our private enemies. If there is one common enemy, we have the less need to have an enemy in our bowels!

It was a great argument some people used against suppressing the old money, that "it was a time of war, and it was too great a risk for the nation to run. If we should not master it, we should be undone!" And yet the sequel proved [320 the hazard was not so great, but it might be mastered, and the success was answerable. The suppressing the Dissenters is not a harder work, nor a work of less necessity to the public. We can never enjoy a settled, uninterrupted union and tranquillity in this nation, till the spirit of Whiggism, faction, and schism is melted down like the old money! . . .

The representatives of the nation [330 have now an opportunity. The time is come which all good men have wished for, that the gentlemen of England may serve the Church of England, now they are protected and encouraged by a Church of England queen! . . .

If ever you will establish the best Christian Church in the world; if ever you will suppress the spirit of enthusiasm; if ever you will free the nation from the [340 viperous brood that have so long sucked the blood of their mother; if ever you will leave your posterity free from faction and rebellion, this is the time! This is the time to pull up this heretical weed of sedition, that has so long disturbed the peace of our Church, and poisoned the good corn!

But, says another hot and cold objector, this is renewing fire and faggot, [350 reviving the Act De heretico comburendo. This will be cruelty in its nature, and barbarous to all the world.

I answer, it is cruelty to kill a snake or a toad in cold blood, but the poison of their nature makes it a charity to our neighbors to destroy those creatures, not for any personal injury received, but for prevention; not for the evil they have done, but the evil they may do. Ser- [360 pents, toads, vipers, etc., are noxious to the body, and poison the sensitive life: these poison the soul, corrupt our posterity, ensnare our children, destroy the vitals of our happiness, our future felicity, and contaminate the whole mass!

Shall any law be given to such wild creatures? Some beasts are for sport, and the huntsmen give them advantages of ground, but some are knocked on [370 the head by all possible ways of violence and surprise.

I do not prescribe fire and faggot; but as Scipio said of Carthage, Delenda est Carthago! they are to be rooted out of this nation, if ever we will live in peace, serve God, or enjoy our own. As for the manner, I leave it to those hands who have a right to execute God's justice on the nation's and the Church's enemies. [380

But if we must be frightened from this justice, under these specious pretenses, and odious sense of cruelty, nothing will be effected. It will be more barbarous to our own children and dear posterity, when they shall reproach their fathers, as we do ours, and tell us, "You had an opportunity to root out this cursed race from the world under the favor and protection of a true Church of England [390 queen, and out of your foolish pity, you spared them, because, forsooth, you would not be cruel! And now our Church is suppressed and persecuted, our religion trampled under foot, our estates plundered, our persons imprisoned, and dragged to gaols, gibbets, and scaffolds! Your sparing this Amalekite race is our destruction! Your mercy to them proves cruelty to your poor posterity!" [400]

How just will such reflections be when our posterity shall fall under the merciless clutches of this uncharitable generation; when our Church shall be swallowed up in schism, faction, enthusiasm, and confusion; when our government shall be devolved upon foreigners, and our monarchy dwindled into a republic!

It would be more rational for us, if we must spare this generation, to sum- [410] mon our own to a general massacre; and as we have brought them into the world free, to send them out so; and not betray them to destruction by our supine negligence, and then cry, "It is mercy!"

Moses was a merciful meek man; and yet with what fury did he run through the camp, and cut the throats of three and thirty thousand of his dear Israelites that were fallen into idolatry. What [420] was the reason? It was mercy to the rest, to make these examples, to prevent the destruction of the whole army.

How many millions of future souls we save from infection and delusion, if the present race of poisoned spirits were purged from the face of the land!

It is vain to trifle in this matter. The light foolish handling of them by mulcts, fines, etc.,—'tis their glory and their [430] advantage! If the gallows instead of the Counter, and the galleys instead of the fines were the reward of going to a conventicle to preach or hear, there would not be so many sufferers. The spirit of martyrdom is over. They that will go to church to be chosen sheriffs and mayors, would go to forty churches rather than be hanged!

If one severe law were made and [440] punctually executed that whoever was found at a conventicle should be banished the nation, and the preacher be hanged, we should soon see an end of the tale. They would all come to church, and one age would make us all one again.

To talk of five shillings a month for not coming to the sacrament, and one shilling per week, for not coming to church: this is such a way of converting [450] people as was never known. This is selling them a liberty to transgress, for so much money. If it be not a crime, why don't we give them full license? And if it be, no price ought to compound for the committing it, for that is selling a liberty to people to sin against God and the government.

If it be a crime of the highest consequence, both against the peace and [460] welfare of the nation, the glory of God, the good of the Church, and the happiness of the soul, let us rank it among capital offenses, and let it receive a punishment in proportion to it.

We hang men for trifles, and banish them for things not worth naming; but that an offense against God and the Church, against the welfare of the world, and the dignity of religion shall be [470] bought off for five shillings: this is such a shame to a Christian government that it is with regret I transmit it to posterity.

If men sin against God, affront his ordinances, rebel against his Church, and disobey the precepts of their superiors; let them suffer, as such capital crimes deserve. So will religion flourish, and this divided nation be once again united. . . . [480]

How can we answer it to God, to the Church, and to our posterity, to leave them entangled with fanaticism, error, and obstinacy, in the bowels of the nation; to leave them an enemy in their streets, that, in time, may involve them in the same crimes, and endanger the utter extirpation of the religion of the nation.

What is the difference betwixt this, and being subject to the power of the [490] Church of Rome, from whence we have reformed? If one be an extreme on one hand, and one on another, it is equally destructive to the truth to have errors settled among us, let them be of what nature they will. Both are enemies of our Church, and of our peace; and why should it not be as criminal to admit an enthusiast as a Jesuit? Why should the Papist with his seven sacraments be [500] worse than the Quaker with no sacraments at all? Why should religious houses be more intolerable than meeting houses? Alas, the Church of England! What with popery on one hand, and schismatics on the other, how has she been crucified between two thieves. Now, let us crucify the thieves!

Let her foundations be established upon the destruction of her enemies! The [510] doors of mercy being always open to the returning part of the deluded people, let the obstinate be ruled with the rod of iron!

Let all true sons of so holy and oppressed a mother, exasperated by her afflictions, harden their hearts against those who have oppressed her.

And may God Almighty put it into the hearts of all the friends of truth, to [520] lift up a standard against pride and Antichrist, that the posterity of the sons of error may be rooted out from the face of this land, for ever!

A TRUE RELATION OF THE APPARITION OF MRS. VEAL

The next day after her death, to Mrs. Bargrave, at Canterbury, the eighth of September, 1705

THE PREFACE

This relation is matter of fact, and attended with such circumstances as may induce any reasonable man to believe it. It was sent by a gentleman, a justice of peace at Maidstone, in Kent, and a very intelligent person, to his friend in London, as it is here worded; which discourse is attested by a very sober and understanding gentlewoman and kinswoman (of the said gentleman's) who lives in Canterbury, [10] within a few doors of the house in which the within-named Mrs. Bargrave lives; who believes his kinswoman to be of so discerning a spirit, as not to be put upon by any fallacy, and who positively assured him that the whole matter as it is here related and laid down is what is really true, and what she herself had in the same words, as near as may be, from Mrs. Bargrave's own mouth, who she knows, had no [20] reason to invent and publish such a story, or any design to forge and tell a lie, being a woman of much honesty and virtue, and her whole life a course, as it were, of piety. The use which we ought to make of it is to consider that there is a life to come after this, and a just God who will retribute to every one according to the deeds done in the body, and therefore to reflect upon our past course of life we [30] have led in the world; that our time is short and uncertain; and that if we would escape the punishment of the ungodly and receive the reward of the righteous, which is the laying hold of eternal life, we ought, for the time to come, to return to God by a speedy repentance, ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well; to seek after God early, if haply He may be found of us, and lead such lives [40] for the future as may be well pleasing in His sight.

A RELATION OF THE APPARITION OF MRS. VEAL

This thing is so rare in all its circumstances, and on so good authority, that my reading and conversation has not given me anything like it. It is fit to gratify the most ingenious and serious inquirer. Mrs. Bargrave is the person to whom Mrs. Veal appeared after her death; she is my intimate friend, and I can avouch for her reputation for these last fifteen or sixteen years, on my [10] own knowledge; and I can confirm the good character she had from her youth to the time of my acquaintance; though since this relation she is calumniated by some people that are friends to the brother of Mrs. Veal who appeared, who think the relation of this appearance to be a reflection, and endeavor what they can to blast Mrs. Bargrave's reputation, and to laugh the story out of coun- [20] tenance. But by the circumstances thereof, and the cheerful disposition of Mrs. Bargrave, notwithstanding the unheard-of ill-usage of a very wicked husband, there is not the least sign of dejection in her face; nor did I ever hear her let fall a desponding or murmuring expression; nay, not when actually under her husband's barbarity, which I have been witness to, and several other [30 persons of undoubted reputation.

Now you must know Mrs. Veal was a maiden gentlewoman of about thirty years of age, and for some years last past had been troubled with fits, which were perceived coming on her by her going off from her discourses very abruptly to some impertinence. She was maintained by an only brother, and kept his house in Dover. She was a very pious [40 woman, and her brother a very sober man, to all appearance; but now he does all he can to null or quash the story. Mrs. Veal was intimately acquainted with Mrs. Bargrave from her childhood. Mrs. Veal's circumstances were then mean; her father did not take care of his children as he ought, so that they were exposed to hardships; and Mrs. Bargrave in those days had as unkind a father, though [50 she wanted neither for food nor clothing, whilst Mrs. Veal wanted for both; so that it was in the power of Mrs. Bargrave to be very much her friend in several instances, which mightily endeared Mrs. Veal; insomuch that she would often say, "Mrs. Bargrave, you are not only the best, but the only friend I have in the world; and no circumstance in life shall ever dissolve my friendship." They [60 would often condole each other's adverse fortunes, and read together "Drelincourt upon Death," and other good books; and so, like two Christian friends, they comforted each other under their sorrow.

Some time after, Mr. Veal's friends got him a place in the custom-house at Dover, which occasioned Mrs. Veal, by little and little, to fall off from her intimacy with Mrs. Bargrave, though there never [70 was any such thing as a quarrel; but an indifferency came on by degrees, till at last Mrs. Bargrave had not seen her in two years and a half; though about a twelvemonth of the time Mrs. Bargrave had been absent from Dover, and this last half-year had been in Canterbury about two months of the time, dwelling in a house of her own.

In this house, on the 8th of Septem- [80 ber last, viz., 1705, she was sitting alone, in the forenoon, thinking over her unfortunate life, and arguing herself into a due resignation to Providence, though her condition seemed hard. "And," said she, "I have been provided for hitherto, and doubt not but I shall be still; and am well satisfied that my afflictions shall end when it is most fit for me;" and then took up her sewing-work, which she [90 had no sooner done but she hears a knocking at the door. She went to see who it was there, and this proved to be Mrs. Veal, her old friend, who was in a riding-habit; at that moment of time the clock struck twelve at noon.

"Madam," says Mrs. Bargrave, "I am surprised to see you, you have been so long a stranger;" but told her she was glad to see her, and offered to salute [100 her, which Mrs. Veal complied with, till their lips almost touched; and then Mrs. Veal drew her hand across her own eyes and said, "I am not very well," and so waived it. She told Mrs. Bargrave she was going a journey, and had a great mind to see her first. "But," says Mrs. Bargrave, "how came you to take a journey alone? I am amazed at it, because I know you have so fond a [110 brother." "Oh," says Mrs. Veal, "I gave my brother the slip, and came away, because I had so great a desire to see you before I took my journey." So Mrs. Bargrave went in with her into another room within the first, and Mrs. Veal set her down in an elbow-chair, in which Mrs. Bargrave was sitting when she heard Mrs. Veal knock. Then says Mrs. Veal, "My dear friend, I am come to renew [120 our old friendship again, and beg your pardon for my breach of it; and if you can forgive me, you are one of the best of women." "Oh," says Mrs. Bargrave, "don't mention such a thing. I have not had an uneasy thought about it; I can easily forgive it." "What did you think of me?" said Mrs. Veal. Says Mrs. Bargrave, "I thought you were like the rest of the world, and that prosperity [130 had made you forget yourself and me." Then Mrs. Veal reminded Mrs. Bargrave of the many friendly offices she did in her former days, and much of the conversation they had with each other in the time of their adversity; what books they read, and what comfort in particular they received from Drelincourt's "Book of Death," which was the best, she said, on that subject ever wrote. She [140] also mentioned Dr. Sherlock, and two Dutch books which were translated, wrote upon death, and several others; but Drelincourt, she said, had the clearest notions of death and of the future state of any who had handled that subject. Then she asked Mrs. Bargrave whether she had Drelincourt. She said, "Yes." Says Mrs. Veal, "Fetch it." And so Mrs. Bargrave goes upstairs and brings it [150] down. Says Mrs. Veal, "Dear Mrs. Bargrave, if the eyes of our faith were as open as the eyes of our body, we should see numbers of angels about us for our guard. The notions we have of heaven now are nothing like to what it is, as Drelincourt says. Therefore be comforted under your afflictions, and believe that the Almighty has a particular regard to you, and that your afflictions are [160] marks of God's favor; and when they have done the business they are sent for, they shall be removed from you. And believe me, my dear friend, believe what I say to you, one minute of future happiness will infinitely reward you for all your sufferings; for I can never believe" (and claps her hand upon her knee with great earnestness, which indeed ran through most of her discourse) "that ever [170] God will suffer you to spend all your days in this afflicted state; but be assured that your afflictions shall leave you, or you them, in a short time." She spake in that pathetic and heavenly manner that Mrs. Bargrave wept several times, she was so deeply affected with it.

Then Mrs. Veal mentioned Dr. Horneck's "Ascetick," at the end of which he gives an account of the lives of the [180] primitive Christians. Their pattern she recommended to our imitation, and said their conversation was not like this of our age; "for now," says she, "there is nothing but frothy, vain discourse, which is far different from theirs. Theirs was to edification, and to build one another up in faith; so that they were not as we are, nor are we as they were; but," said she, "we might do as they did. There [190] was a hearty friendship among them; but where is it now to be found?" Says Mrs. Bargrave, "'Tis hard indeed to find a true friend in these days." Says Mrs. Veal, "Mr. Norris has a fine copy of verses, called 'Friendship in Perfection,' which I wonderfully admire. Have you seen the book?" says Mrs. Veal. "No," says Mrs. Bargrave, "but I have the verses of my own writing out." [200] "Have you?" says Mrs. Veal; "then fetch them." Which she did from above-stairs, and offered them to Mrs. Veal to read, who refused, and waived the thing, saying holding down her head would make it ache; and then desired Mrs. Bargrave to read them to her, which she did. As they were admiring "Friendship" Mrs. Veal said, "Dear Mrs. Bargrave, I shall love you for ever." In [210] these verses there is twice used the word Elysian. "Ah!" says Mrs. Veal, "these poets have such names for heaven!" She would often draw her hand across her own eyes and say, "Mrs. Bargrave, don't you think I am mightily impaired by my fits?" "No," says Mrs. Bargrave, "I think you look as well as ever I knew you."

After all this discourse, which the ap- [220] parition put in words much finer than Mrs. Bargrave said she could pretend to, and was much more than she can remember, for it cannot be thought that an hour and three-quarters' conversation could all be retained, though the main of it she thinks she does, she said to Mrs. Bargrave she would have her write a letter to her brother, and tell him she would have him give rings to such and [230] such, and that there was a purse of gold in her cabinet, and that she would have two broad pieces given to her cousin Watson.

Talking at this rate, Mrs. Bargrave thought that a fit was coming upon her, and so placed herself in a chair just before her knees, to keep her from falling to the ground, if her fits should occasion it (for the elbow-chair, she thought, [240] would keep her from falling on either side); and to divert Mrs. Veal, as she thought, took hold of her gown-sleeve several times and commended it. Mrs. Veal told her it was a scoured silk, and newly made up. But for all this, Mrs. Veal persisted in her request, and told Mrs. Bargrave she must not deny her; and that she would have her tell her brother all their conversation when [250 she had an opportunity. "Dear Mrs. Veal," said Mrs. Bargrave, "this seems so impertinent that I cannot tell how to comply with it; and what a mortifying story will our conversation be to a young gentleman!" "Well," says Mrs. Veal, "I must not be denied." "Why," says Mrs. Bargrave, "'tis much better, methinks, to do it yourself." "No," says Mrs. Veal, "though it seems imperti- [260 nent to you now, you will see more reason for it hereafter." Mrs. Bargrave then, to satisfy her importunity, was going to fetch a pen and ink, but Mrs. Veal said, "Let it alone now, but do it when I am gone; but you must be sure to do it;" which was one of the last things she enjoined her at parting; and so she promised her.

Then Mrs. Veal asked for Mrs. [270 Bargrave's daughter. She said she was not at home, "but if you have a mind to see her," says Mrs. Bargrave, "I'll send for her." "Do," says Mrs. Veal. On which she left her, and went to a neighbor's to send for her; and by the time Mrs. Bargrave was returning, Mrs. Veal was got without the door in the street, in the face of the beast-market, on a Saturday (which is market-day), and stood [280 ready to part as soon as Mrs. Bargrave came to her. She asked her why she was in such haste. She said she must be going, though perhaps she might not go her journey until Monday; and told Mrs. Bargrave she hoped she should see her again at her cousin Watson's before she went whither she was a-going. Then she said she would take her leave of her, and walked from Mrs. Bargrave in [290 her view, till a turning interrupted the sight of her, which was three-quarters after one in the afternoon.

Mrs. Veal died the 7th of September, at twelve o'clock at noon, of her fits, and had not above four hours' senses before death, in which time she received the sacrament. The next day after Mrs. Veal's appearing, being Sunday, Mrs. Bargrave was mightily indisposed with a cold [300 and a sore throat, that she could not go out that day; but on Monday morning she sends a person to Captain Watson's to know if Mrs. Veal was there. They wondered at Mrs. Bargrave's inquiry, and sent her word that she was not there, nor was expected. At this answer, Mrs. Bargrave told the maid she had certainly mistook the name or made some blunder. And though she was ill, [310 she put on her hood, and went herself to Captain Watson's, though she knew none of the family, to see if Mrs. Veal was there or not. They said they wondered at her asking, for that she had not been in town; they were sure, if she had, she would have been there. Says Mrs. Bargrave, "I am sure she was with me on Saturday almost two hours." They said it was impossible; for they must [320 have seen her, if she had. In comes Captain Watson while they are in dispute, and said that Mrs. Veal was certainly dead, and her escutcheons were making. This strangely surprised Mrs. Bargrave, who went to the person immediately who had the care of them, and found it true. Then she related the whole story to Captain Watson's family, and what gown she had on, and how striped, and that [330 Mrs. Veal told her it was scoured. Then Mrs. Watson cried out, "You have seen her indeed, for none knew but Mrs. Veal and myself that the gown was scoured." And Mrs. Watson owned that she described the gown exactly; "for," said she, "I helped her to make it up." This Mrs. Watson blazed all about the town, and avouched the demonstration of the truth of Mrs. Bargrave's seeing Mrs. Veal's [340 apparition; and Captain Watson carried two gentlemen immediately to Mrs. Bargrave's house to hear the relation from her own mouth. And then it spread so fast that gentlemen and persons of quality, the judicious and sceptical part of the world, flocked in upon her, which at last became such a task that she was forced to go out of the way; for they were in general extremely satisfied of [350 the truth of the thing, and plainly saw that Mrs. Bargrave was no hypochondriac, for she always appears with such a cheerful air and pleasing mien, that she has gained the favor and esteem of all the gentry, and 'tis thought a great favor if they can but get the relation from her own mouth. I should have told you before that Mrs. Veal told Mrs. Bargrave that her sister and brother-in-law were [360 just come down from London to see her. Says Mrs. Bargrave, "How came you to order matters so strangely?" "It could not be helped," says Mrs. Veal. And her sister and brother did come to see her, and entered the town of Dover just as Mrs. Veal was expiring. Mrs. Bargrave asked her whether she would drink some tea. Says Mrs. Veal, "I do not care if I do; but I'll warrant this mad fel- [370 low" (meaning Mrs. Bargrave's husband) "has broke all your trinkets." "But," says Mrs. Bargrave, "I'll get something to drink in for all that." But Mrs. Veal waived it, and said, "It is no matter; let it alone;" and so it passed.

All the time I sat with Mrs. Bargrave, which was some hours, she recollected fresh sayings of Mrs. Veal. And one material thing more she told Mrs. Bargrave—[380 that old Mr. Breton allowed Mrs. Veal ten pounds a year, which was a secret, and unknown to Mrs. Bargrave till Mrs. Veal told it her. Mrs. Bargrave never varies in her story, which puzzles those who doubt of the truth or are unwilling to believe it. A servant in a neighbor's yard adjoining to Mrs. Bargrave's house heard her talking to somebody an hour of the time Mrs. Veal was with her. [390 Mrs. Bargrave went out to her next neighbor's the very moment she parted with Mrs. Veal, and told what ravishing conversation she had with an old friend, and told the whole of it. Drelincourt's "Book of Death" is, since this happened, bought up strangely. And it is to be observed that, notwithstanding all this trouble and fatigue Mrs. Bargrave has undergone upon this account, she [400 never took the value of a farthing, nor suffered her daughter to take anything of anybody, and therefore can have no interest in telling the story.

But Mr. Veal does what he can to stifle the matter, and said he would see Mrs. Bargrave; but yet it is certain matter of fact that he has been at Captain Watson's since the death of his sister, and yet never went near Mrs. Bargrave; [410 and some of his friends report her to be a great liar, and that she knew of Mr. Breton's ten pounds a year. But the person who pretends to say so has the reputation of a notorious liar among persons whom I know to be of undoubted repute. Now, Mr. Veal is more a gentleman than to say she lies, but says a bad husband has crazed her; but she needs only to present herself and it will [420 effectually confute that pretence. Mr. Veal says he asked his sister on her death-bed whether she had a mind to dispose of anything, and she said no. Now, the things which Mrs. Veal's apparition would have disposed of were so trifling, and nothing of justice aimed at in their disposal, that the design of it appears to me to be only in order to make Mrs. Bargrave so to demonstrate the truth of her [430 appearance, as to satisfy the world of the reality thereof as to what she had seen and heard, and to secure her reputation among the reasonable and understanding part of mankind. And then again Mr. Veal owns that there was a purse of gold; but it was not found in her cabinet, but in a comb-box. This looks improbable; for that Mrs. Watson owned that Mrs. Veal was so very careful of the key [440 of her cabinet that she would trust nobody with it; and if so, no doubt she would not trust her gold out of it. And Mrs. Veal's often drawing her hand over her eyes, and asking Mrs. Bargrave whether her fits had not impaired her, looks to me as if she did it on purpose to remind Mrs. Bargrave of her fits, to prepare her not to think it strange that she should put her upon writing to [450 her brother to dispose of rings and gold, which looks so much like a dying person's request; and it took accordingly with Mrs. Bargrave, as the effects of her fits coming upon her; and was one of the many instances of her wonderful love to her and care of her that she should not be affrighted; which indeed appears in her whole management, particularly in her coming to her in the daytime, waiv- [460 ing the salutation, and when she was alone; and then the manner of her parting to prevent a second attempt to salute her.

Now, why Mr. Veal should think this relation a reflection (as 'tis plain he does by his endeavoring to stifle it), I can't imagine, because the generality believe her to be a good spirit, her discourse was so heavenly. Her two great errands were to comfort Mrs. Bargrave in her [470] affliction, and to ask her forgiveness for her breach of friendship, and with a pious discourse to encourage her. So that after all to suppose that Mrs. Bargrave could hatch such an invention as this from Friday noon till Saturday noon (supposing that she knew of Mrs. Veal's death the very first moment) without jumbling circumstances, and without any interest too, she must be more witty, for- [480] tunate, and wicked too, than any indifferent person, I dare say, will allow. I asked Mrs. Bargrave several times if she was sure she felt the gown. She answered modestly, "If my senses are to be relied on, I am sure of it." I asked her if she heard a sound when she clapped her hands upon her knee. She said she did not remember she did, and she said, "She appeared to be as much a substance [490] as I did, who talked with her; and I may," said she, "be as soon persuaded that your apparition is talking to me now as that I did not really see her; for I was under no manner of fear; I received her as a friend, and parted with her as such. I would not," says she, "give one farthing to make any one believe it; I have no interest in it. Nothing but trouble is entailed upon me for a long time, for [500] aught I know; and had it not come to light by accident, it would never have been made public." But now she says she will make her own private use of it, and keep herself out of the way as much as she can; and so she has done since. She says she had a gentleman who came thirty miles to her to hear the relation, and that she had told it to a roomfull of people at a time. Several particular [510] gentlemen have had the story from Mrs. Bargrave's own mouth.

This thing has very much affected me, and I am as well satisfied as I am of the best grounded matter of fact. And why we should dispute matter of fact because we cannot solve things of which we have no certain or demonstrative notions, seems strange to me. Mrs. Bargrave's authority and sincerity alone would [520] have been undoubted in any other case.

JONATHAN SWIFT (1667-1745)

From A TALE OF A TUB

THE AUTHOR'S PREFACE

The wits of the present age being so very numerous and penetrating, it seems the grandees of church and state begin to fall under horrible apprehensions lest these gentlemen, during the intervals of a long peace, should find leisure to pick holes in the weak sides of religion and government. To prevent which, there has been much thought employed of late upon certain projects for taking off [10] the force and edge of those formidable inquirers from canvassing and reasoning upon such delicate points. They have at length fixed upon one which will require some time as well as cost to perfect. Meanwhile, the danger hourly increasing by new levies of wits, all appointed (as there is reason to fear) with pen, ink, and paper, which may at an hour's warning be drawn out into pamphlets and [20] other offensive weapons, ready for immediate execution, it was judged of absolute necessity that some present expedient be thought on, till the main design can be brought to maturity. To this end, at a grand committee some days ago, this important discovery was made by a certain curious and refined observer:—that seamen have a custom, when they meet a whale, to fling him an [30] empty tub by way of amusement, to divert him from laying violent hands upon the ship. This parable was immediately mythologised; the whale was interpreted to be Hobbes's Leviathan, which tosses and plays with all schemes of religion and government, whereof a great many are hollow, and dry, and empty, and noisy, and wooden, and given to rotation: this is the leviathan whence the ter- [40]

rible wits of our age are said to borrow their weapons. The ship in danger is easily understood to be its old antitype, the commonwealth. But how to analyze the tub, was a matter of difficulty; when after long inquiry and debate, the literal meaning was preserved; and it was decreed, that in order to prevent these leviathans from tossing and sporting with the commonwealth, which of itself [50 is too apt to fluctuate, they should be diverted from that game by a Tale of a Tub. And, my genius being conceived to lie not unhappily that way, I had the honor done me to be engaged in the performance. . . .

SECTION II

Once upon a time there was a man who had three sons by one wife, and all at a birth, neither could the midwife tell certainly which was the eldest. Their father died while they were young; and upon his death-bed, calling the lads to him, spoke thus:—

“Sons, because I have purchased no estate, nor was born to any, I have long considered of some good legacies to [10 bequeath you; and at last, with much care, as well as expense, have provided each of you (here they are) a new coat. Now, you are to understand that these coats have two virtues contained in them; one is, that with good wearing they will last you fresh and sound as long as you live; the other is, that they will grow in the same proportion with your bodies, lengthening and widening of them- [20 selves, so as to be always fit. Here; let me see them on you before I die. So; very well; pray, children, wear them clean, and brush them often. You will find in my will (here it is) full instructions in every particular concerning the wearing and management of your coats; wherein you must be very exact, to avoid the penalties I have appointed for every transgression or neglect, upon which your [30 future fortunes will entirely depend. I have also commanded in my will that you should live together in one house like brethren and friends, for then you will be sure to thrive, and not otherwise.”

Here, the story says, this good father died, and the three sons went all together to seek their fortunes.

I shall not trouble you with recounting what adventures they met for the [40 first seven years, any farther than by taking notice that they carefully observed their father's will, and kept their coats in very good order: that they travelled through several countries, encountered a reasonable quantity of giants, and slew certain dragons.

Being now arrived at the proper age for producing themselves, they came up to town, and fell in love with the ladies, [50 but especially three, who about that time were in chief reputation: the Duchess d'Argent, Madame de Grands Titres, and the Countess d'Orgueil. On their first appearance our three adventurers met with a very bad reception; and soon with great sagacity guessing out the reason, they quickly began to improve in the good qualities of the town; they writ, and rallied, and rhymed, and sung, [60 and said, and said nothing; . . . they killed bailiffs, kicked fiddlers down stairs, eat at Locket's, loitered at Will's; they talked of the drawing-room, and never came there; dined with lords they never saw; whispered a duchess, and spoke never a word; exposed the scrawls of their laundress for billets-doux of quality; came ever just from court, and were never seen in it; attended the levee sub dio; got [70 a list of peers by heart in one company, and with great familiarity retailed them in another. Above all, they constantly attended those committees of senators who are silent in the house and loud in the coffee-house; where they nightly adjourn to chew the cud of politics, and are encompassed with a ring of disciples, who lie in wait to catch up their droppings. The three brothers had ac- [80 quired forty other qualifications of the like stamp, too tedious to recount, and by consequence were justly reckoned the most accomplished persons in the town; but all would not suffice, and the ladies aforesaid continued still inflexible. To clear up which difficulty I must, with the reader's good leave and patience, have recourse to some points of weight, which the authors of that age have not [90 sufficiently illustrated.

For about this time it happened a sect arose whose tenets obtained and spread very far, especially in the grande monde, and among everybody of good fashion. They worshipped a sort of idol, who, as their doctrine delivered, did daily create men by a kind of manufactory operation. This idol they placed in the highest parts of the house, on an altar erected [100 about three foot; he was shown in the posture of a Persian emperor, sitting on a superficies, with his legs interwoven under him. . . .

The worshippers of this deity had also a system of their belief, which seemed to turn upon the following fundamentals. They held the universe to be a large suit of clothes, which invests everything; that the earth is invested by the air; the [110 air is invested by the stars; and the stars are invested by the primum mobile. Look on this globe of earth, you will find it to be a very complete and fashionable dress. What is that which some call land but a fine coat faced with green? or the sea, but a waistcoat of water-tabby? Proceed to the particular works of the creation, you will find how curious journeyman Nature has been to trim up the vegetable [120 beaux; observe how sparkish a periwig adorns the head of a beech, and what a fine doublet of white satin is worn by the birch. To conclude from all, what is man himself but a microcoat, or rather a complete suit of clothes with all its trimmings? As to his body there can be no dispute; but examine even the acquirements of his mind, you will find them all contribute in their order towards furnishing out an [130 exact dress: to instance no more; is not religion a cloak, honesty a pair of shoes worn out in the dirt, self-love a surtout, vanity a shirt, and conscience a pair of breeches? . . .

These opinions, therefore, were so universal, as well as the practices of them, among the refined part of court and town, that our three brother adventurers, as their circumstances then stood, were [140 strangely at a loss. For, on the one side, the three ladies they addressed themselves to, whom we have named already, were at the very top of the fashion, and abhorred all that were below it but the breadth of a hair. On the other side, their father's will was very precise; and it was the main precept in it, with the greatest penalties annexed, not to add to or diminish from their coats one [150 thread, without a positive command in the will. Now, the coats their father had left them were, 'tis true, of very good cloth, and besides so neatly sewn, you would swear they were all of a piece; but at the same time very plain, and with little or no ornament: and it happened that before they were a month in town great shoulder-knots came up; straight all the world was shoulder-knots. . . . [160 That fellow, cries one, has no soul; where is his shoulder-knot? Our three brethren soon discovered their want by sad experience, meeting in their walks with forty mortifications and indignities. If they went to the playhouse the door-keeper showed them into the twelve-penny gallery; if they called a boat, says a waterman, "I am first sculler"; if they stepped to the Rose to take a [170 bottle, the drawer would cry, "Friend, we sell no ale;" if they went to visit a lady, a footman met them at the door with "Pray send up your message." In this unhappy case they went immediately to consult their father's will, read it over and over, but not a word of the shoulder-knot. What should they do?—what temper should they find?—obedience was absolutely necessary, and yet shoulder- [180 knots appeared extremely requisite. After much thought one of the brothers, who happened to be more book-learned than the other two, said he had found an expedient. "'Tis true," said he, "there is nothing here in this will, totidem verbis, making mention of shoulder-knots: but I dare conjecture we may find them inclusive, or totidem syllabis." This distinction was immediately approved by [190 all, and so they fell again to examine the will; but their evil star had so directed the matter that the first syllable was not to be found in the whole writing. Upon which disappointment, he who found the former evasion took heart, and said; "Brothers, there are yet hopes; for though we cannot find them totidem verbis, nor totidem syllabis, I dare engage we shall make them out tertio modo, or totidem literis." This discovery was also highly commended, upon which they fell once more to the scrutiny, and picked out S, H, O, U, L, D, E, R; when the same planet, enemy to their repose, had wonderfully contrived that a K was not to be found. Here was a weighty difficulty! but the distinguishing brother, for whom we shall hereafter find a name, now his hand was in, proved by a very [210] good argument that K was a modern, illegitimate letter, unknown to the learned ages, nor anywhere to be found in ancient manuscripts. "'Tis true," said he, "Calendæ hath in Q. V. C. been sometimes writ with a K, but erroneously; for in the best copies it is ever spelled with a C. And, by consequence, it was a gross mistake in our language to spell 'knot' with a K;" but that from hencefor- [220] ward he would take care it should be writ with a C. Upon this all farther difficulty vanished—shoulder-knots were made clearly out to be jure paterno, and our three gentlemen swaggered with as large and as flaunting ones as the best. . . .

The learned brother, so often mentioned, was reckoned the best scholar in all that or the next street to it, insomuch as, having run something behindhand [230] in the world, he obtained the favor of a certain lord to receive him into his house, and to teach his children. A while after the lord died, and he, by long practice of his father's will, found the way of contriving a deed of conveyance of that house to himself and his heirs; upon which he took possession, turned the young squires out, and received his brothers in their stead. [240]

SECTION VI

We left lord Peter in open rupture with his two brethren; both for ever discarded from his house, and resigned to the wide world, with little or nothing to trust to. Which are circumstances that render them proper subjects for the charity of a writer's pen to work on; scenes of misery ever affording the fairest harvest for great adventures. And in this the world may perceive the difference between [10] the integrity of a generous author and that of a common friend. The latter is observed to adhere closely in prosperity, but on the decline of fortune to drop suddenly off. Whereas the generous author, just on the contrary, finds his hero on the dunghill, from thence by gradual steps raises him to a throne, and then immediately withdraws, expecting not so much as thanks for [20] his pains; in imitation of which example. I have placed lord Peter in a noble house, given him a title to wear and money to spend. There I shall leave him for some time; returning where common charity directs me, to the assistance of his two brothers at their lowest ebb. However, I shall by no means forget my character of an historian to follow the truth step by step, whatever happens, or wherever [30] it may lead me.

The two exiles, so nearly united in fortune and interest, took a lodging together; where, at their first leisure, they began to reflect on the numberless misfortunes and vexations of their life past, and could not tell on the sudden to what failure in their conduct they ought to impute them; when, after some recollection, they called to mind the copy of their father's will, [40] which they had so happily recovered. This was immediately produced, and a firm resolution taken between them to alter whatever was already amiss, and reduce all their future measures to the strictest obedience prescribed therein. The main body of the will (as the reader cannot easily have forgot) consisted in certain admirable rules about the wearing of their coats; in the perusal whereof, [50] the two brothers at every period duly comparing the doctrine with the practice, there was never seen a wider difference between two things; horrible, downright transgressions of every point. Upon which they both resolved, without farther delay, to fall immediately upon reducing the whole exactly after their father's model.

But here it is good to stop the hasty [60] reader, ever impatient to see the end of an adventure before we writers can duly prepare him for it. I am to record that these two brothers began to be distinguished at this time by certain names. One of them desired to be called MARTIN, and the other took the appellation of JACK. These two had lived in much friendship and agreement under the tyranny of their brother Peter, as it is [70 the talent of fellow-sufferers to do; men in misfortune being like men in the dark, to whom all colors are the same: but when they came forward into the world, and began to display themselves to each other and to the light, their complexions appeared extremely different, which the present posture of their affairs gave them sudden opportunity to discover.

But here the severe reader may [80 justly tax me as a writer of short memory, a deficiency to which a true modern cannot but of necessity be a little subject. . . . I ought in method to have informed the reader, about fifty pages ago, of a fancy lord Peter took, and infused into his brothers, to wear on their coats whatever trimmings came up in fashion; never pulling off any as they went out of the mode, but keeping on all [90 together, which amounted in time to a medley the most antic you can possibly conceive; and this to a degree, that upon the time of their falling out there was hardly a thread of the original coat to be seen; but an infinite quantity of lace, and ribbons, and fringe, and embroidery, and points; I mean only those tagged with silver, for the rest fell off. Now this material circumstance, having been [100 forgot in due place, as good fortune hath ordered, comes in very properly here when the two brothers are just going to reform their vestures into the primitive state prescribed by their father's will.

They both unanimously entered upon this great work, looking sometimes on their coats, and sometimes on the will. Martin laid the first hand; at one twitch brought off a large handful of points; [110 and, with a second pull, stripped away ten dozen yards of fringe. But when he had gone thus far he demurred a while: he knew very well there yet remained a great deal more to be done; however, the first heat being over, his violence began to cool, and he resolved to proceed more moderately in the rest of the work, having already narrowly escaped a swinging rent, in pulling off the points, which, being [120 tagged with silver (as we have observed before), the judicious workman had, with much sagacity, double sewn, to preserve them from falling. Resolving therefore to rid his coat of a huge quantity of gold lace, he picked up the stitches with much caution, and diligently gleaned out all the loose threads as he went, which proved to be a work of time. Then he fell about the embroidered Indian figures of [130 men, women, and children; against which, as you have heard in its due place, their father's testament was extremely exact and severe: these, with much dexterity and application, were, after a while, quite eradicated or utterly defaced. For the rest, where he observed the embroidery to be worked so close as not to be got away without damaging the cloth, or where it served to hide or strengthen [140 any flaw in the body of the coat, contracted by the perpetual tampering of workmen upon it, he concluded the wisest course was to let it remain, resolving in no case whatsoever that the substance of the stuff should suffer injury; which he thought the best method for serving the true intent and meaning of his father's will. And this is the nearest account I have been able to collect of Martin's [150 proceedings upon this great revolution.

But his brother Jack, whose adventures will be so extraordinary as to furnish a great part in the remainder of this discourse, entered upon the matter with other thoughts and a quite different spirit. For the memory of lord Peter's injuries produced a degree of hatred and spite which had a much greater share of inciting him than any regards after his [160 father's commands; since these appeared, at best, only secondary and subservient to the other. However, for this medley of humor he made a shift to find a very plausible name, honoring it with the title of zeal; which is perhaps the most significant word that has been ever yet produced in any language, as I think I have fully proved in my excellent analytical discourse upon that subject; wherein I [170 have deduced a histori-theo-physi-logical account of zeal, showing how it first proceeded from a notion into a word, and thence, in a hot summer, ripened into a tangible substance. This work, containing three large volumes in folio, I design very shortly to publish by the modern way of subscription, not doubting but the nobility and gentry of the land will give me all possible encouragement; having [180] had already such a taste of what I am able to perform.

I record, therefore, that brother Jack, brimful of this miraculous compound, reflecting with indignation upon Peter's tyranny, and farther provoked by the despondency of Martin, prefaced his resolutions to this purpose. "What," said he, "a rogue that locked up his drink, turned away our wives, cheated us [190] of our fortunes; palmed his damned crusts upon us for mutton; and at last kicked us out of doors; must we be in his fashions, with a pox? A rascal, besides, that all the street cries out, against." Having thus kindled and inflamed himself as high as possible, and by consequence in a delicate temper for beginning a reformation, he set about the work immediately; and in three minutes made more [200] despatch than Martin had done in as many hours. For, courteous reader, you are given to understand that zeal is never so highly obliged as when you set it a-tearing; and Jack, who doted on that quality in himself, allowed it at this time its full swing. Thus it happened that, stripping down a parcel of gold lace a little too hastily, he rent the main body of his coat from top to bottom; and [210] whereas his talent was not of the happiest in taking up a stitch, he knew no better way than to darn it again with packthread and a skewer. But the matter was yet infinitely worse (I record it with tears) when he proceeded to the embroidery: for, being clumsy by nature, and of temper impatient; withal, beholding millions of stitches that required the nicest hand and sedatest constitution to extricate, in [220] a great rage he tore off the whole piece, cloth and all, and flung them into the kennel, and furiously thus continuing his career: "Ah, good brother Martin," said he, "do as I do, for the love of God; strip, tear, pull, rend, flay off all, that we may appear as unlike the rogue Peter as it is possible; I would not for a hundred pounds carry the least mark about me that might give occasion to the neighbors [230] of suspecting that I was related to such a rascal." But Martin, who at this time happened to be extremely phlegmatic and sedate, begged his brother, of all love, not to damage his coat by any means; for he never would get such another: desired him to consider that it was not their business to form their actions by any reflection upon Peter, but by observing the rules prescribed in their [240] father's will. That he should remember Peter was still their brother, whatever faults or injuries he had committed; and therefore they should by all means avoid such a thought as that of taking measures for good and evil from no other rule than of opposition to him. That it was true, the testament of their good father was very exact in what related to the wearing of their coats; yet it was no less [250] penal and strict in prescribing agreement, and friendship, and affection between them. And therefore, if straining a point were at all dispensable, it would certainly be so rather to the advance of unity than increase of contradiction. . . .

A MODEST PROPOSAL

FOR PREVENTING THE CHILDREN OF POOR PEOPLE IN IRELAND FROM BEING A BURDEN TO THEIR PARENTS OR COUNTRY, AND FOR MAKING THEM BENEFICIAL TO THE PUBLIC

It is a melancholy object to those who walk through this great town or travel in the country, when they see the streets, the roads, and cabin doors, crowded with beggars of the female sex, followed by three, four, or six children, all in rags and importuning every passenger for an alms. These mothers, instead of being able to work for their honest livelihood, are forced to employ all their time in [10] strolling to beg sustenance for their helpless infants: who as they grow up either turn thieves for want of work, or leave their dear native country to fight for the pretender in Spain, or sell themselves to the Barbadoes.

I think it is agreed by all parties that this prodigious number of children in the arms, or on the backs, or at the heels of their mothers, and frequently of [20] their fathers, is in the present deplorable state of the kingdom a very great additional grievance; and, therefore, whoever could find out a fair, cheap, and easy method of making these children sound, useful members of the commonwealth, would deserve so well of the public as to have his statue set up for a preserver of the nation.

But my intention is very far from being [30] confined to provide only for the children of professed beggars; it is of a much greater extent, and shall take in the whole number of infants at a certain age who are born of parents in effect as little able to support them as those who demand our charity in the streets.

As to my own part, having turned my thoughts for many years upon this important subject, and maturely weighed [40] the several schemes of other projectors, I have always found them grossly mistaken in the computation. It is true, a child just born may be supported by its mother's milk for a solar year, with little other nourishment; at most not above the value of 2s., which the mother may certainly get, or the value in scraps, by her lawful occupation of begging; and it is exactly at one year old that I [50] propose to provide for them in such a manner as instead of being a charge upon their parents or the parish, or wanting food and raiment for the rest of their lives, they shall on the contrary contribute to the feeding, and partly to the clothing, of many thousands. . . .

The number of souls in this kingdom being usually reckoned one million and a half, of these I calculate there may [60] be about two hundred thousand couple whose wives are breeders; from which number I subtract thirty thousand couples who are able to maintain their own children, although I apprehend there cannot be so many, under the present distresses of the kingdom; but this being granted, there will remain an hundred and seventy thousand breeders. I again subtract fifty thousand for those women . . . [70] whose children die by accident or disease within the year. There only remains one hundred and twenty thousand children of poor parents annually born. The question therefore is, how this number shall be reared and provided for, which, as I have already said, under the present situation of affairs, is utterly impossible by all the methods hitherto proposed. For we can neither employ [80] them in handicraft or agriculture; we neither build houses (I mean in the country) nor cultivate land: they can very seldom pick up a livelihood by stealing, till they arrive at six years old, except where they are of towardly parts; although I confess they learn the rudiments much earlier, during which time, they can however be properly looked upon only as probationers, as I have been informed [90] by a principal gentleman in the county of Cavan, who protested to me that he never knew above one or two instances under the age of six, even in a part of the kingdom so renowned for the quickest proficiency in that art.

I am assured by our merchants, that a boy or a girl before twelve years old is no salable commodity; and even when they come to this age they will not [100] yield above three pounds, or three pounds and half-a-crown at most on the exchange; which cannot turn to account either to the parents or kingdom, the charge of nutriment and rags having been at least four times that value.

I shall now therefore humbly propose my own thoughts, which I hope will not be liable to the least objection.

I have been assured by a very [110] knowing American of my acquaintance in London, that a young healthy child well nursed is at a year old a most delicious, nourishing, and wholesome food, whether stewed, roasted, baked, or boiled; and I make no doubt that it will equally serve in a fricassee or a ragout. . . . A child will make two dishes at an entertainment for friends; and when the family dines alone, the fore or hind quarter [120] will make a reasonable dish, and seasoned with a little pepper or salt will be very good boiled on the fourth day, especially in winter.

I have reckoned upon a medium that a child just born will weigh 12 pounds, and in a solar year, if tolerably nursed, increaseth to 28 pounds.

I grant this food will be somewhat dear, and therefore very proper for [130] landlords, who, as they have already devoured most of the parents, seem to have the best title to the children. . . .

I have already computed the charge of nursing a beggar's child (in which list I reckon all cottagers, laborers, and four-fifths of the farmers) to be about two shillings per annum, rags included; and I believe no gentleman would repine to give ten shillings for the carcass of a [140] good fat child, which, as I have said, will make four dishes of excellent nutritive meat, when he hath only some particular friend or his own family to dine with him. Thus the squire will learn to be a good landlord, and grow popular among his tenants; the mother will have eight shillings net profit, and be fit for work till she produces another child. .

Those who are more thrifty (as I [150] must confess the times require) may flay the carcass; the skin of which artificially dressed will make admirable gloves for ladies, and summer boots for fine gentlemen.

As to our city of Dublin, shambles may be appointed for this purpose in the most convenient parts of it, and butchers we may be assured will not be wanting; although I rather recommend buying [160] the children alive, then dressing them hot from the knife as we do roasting pigs.

A very worthy person, a true lover of his country, and whose virtues I highly esteem, was lately pleased in discoursing on this matter to offer a refinement upon my scheme. He said that many gentlemen of this kingdom, having of late destroyed their deer, he conceived that the want of venison might be well sup- [170] plied by the bodies of young lads and maidens, not exceeding fourteen years of age nor under twelve; so great a number of both sexes in every country being now ready to starve for want of work and service; and these to be disposed of by their parents, if alive, or otherwise by their nearest relations. But with due deference to so excellent a friend and so deserving a patriot, I cannot be al- [180] together in his sentiments; for as to the males, my American acquaintance assured me, from frequent experience, that their flesh was generally tough and lean, like that of our school-boys, by continual exercise, and their taste disagreeable; and to fatten them would not answer the charge. . . . And besides, it is not improbable that some scrupulous people might be apt to censure such a prac- [190] tice (although indeed very unjustly), as a little bordering upon cruelty; which, I confess, hath always been with me the strongest objection against any project, however so well intended.

But in order to justify my friend, he confessed that this expedient was put into his head by the famous Psalmanazar, a native of the island Formosa, who came from thence to London above twenty [200] years ago, and in conversation told my friend, that in his country when any young person happened to be put to death, the executioner sold the carcass to persons of quality as a prime dainty; and that in his time the body of a plump girl of fifteen, who was crucified for an attempt to poison the emperor, was sold to his imperial majesty's prime minister of state, and other great mandarins of [210] the court, in joints from the gibbet, at four hundred crowns. Neither indeed can I deny, that if the same use were made of several plump young girls in this town, who without one single groat to their fortunes cannot stir abroad without a chair, and appear at playhouse and assemblies in foreign fineries which they never will pay for, the kingdom would not be the worse. [220]

Some persons of a desponding spirit are in great concern about that vast number of poor people, who are aged, diseased, or maimed, and I have been desired to employ my thoughts what course may be taken to ease the nation of so grievous an encumbrance. But I am not in the least pain upon that matter, because it is very well known that they are every day dying and rotting by [230]

cold and famine, and filth and vermin, as fast as can be reasonably expected. And as to the young laborers, they are now in as hopeful a condition; they cannot get work, and consequently pine away for want of nourishment, to a degree that if at any time they are accidentally hired to common labor, they have not strength to perform it; and thus the country and themselves are happily delivered from [240 the evils to come.

I have too long digressed, and therefore shall return to my subject. I think the advantages by the proposal which I have made are obvious and many, as well as of the highest importance.

For first, as I have already observed, it would greatly lessen the number of papists, with whom we are yearly overrun, being the principal breeders of [250 the nation as well as our most dangerous enemies; and who stay at home on purpose with a design to deliver the kingdom to the pretender, hoping to take their advantage by the absence of so many good protestants, who have chosen rather to leave their country than stay at home and pay tithes against their conscience to an episcopal curate.

Secondly, the poorer tenants will [260 have something valuable of their own, which by law may be made liable to distress and help to pay their landlord's rent, their corn and cattle being already seized, and money a thing unknown.

Thirdly, whereas the maintenance of an hundred thousand children, from two years old and upward, cannot be computed at less than ten shillings a-piece per annum, the nation's stock will be [270 thereby increased fifty thousand pounds per annum, beside the profit of a new dish introduced to the tables of all gentlemen of fortune in the kingdom who have any refinement in taste. And the money will circulate among ourselves, the goods being entirely of our own growth and manufacture.

Fourthly, the parents, beside the gain of eight shillings sterling per annum [280 by the sale of their children, will be rid of the charge of maintaining them after the first year.

Fifthly, this food would likewise bring great custom to taverns; where the vintners will certainly be so prudent as to procure the best receipts for dressing it to perfection, and consequently have their houses frequented by all the fine gentlemen, who justly value them- [290 selves upon their knowledge in good eating: and a skilful cook, who understands how to oblige his guests, will contrive to make it as expensive as they please.

Sixthly, this would be a great inducement to marriage, which all wise nations have either encouraged by rewards or enforced by laws and penalties. It would increase the care and tenderness of mothers toward their children, when they [300 were sure of a settlement for life to the poor babes, provided in some sort by the public, to their annual profit instead of expense. We should see an honest emulation among the married women, which of them could bring the fattest child to the market. Men would become as fond of their wives during the time of their pregnancy as they are now of their mares in foal, their cows in calf, their sows [310 when they are ready to farrow; nor offer to beat or kick them (as is too frequent a practice) for fear of a miscarriage.

Many other advantages might be enumerated. For instance, the addition of some thousand carcasses in our exportation of barreled beef, the propagation of swine's flesh, and improvement in the art of making good bacon, so much wanted among us by the great destruction [320 of pigs, too frequent at our tables; which are no way comparable in taste or magnificence to a well-grown, fat, yearling child, which roasted whole will make a considerable figure at a lord mayor's feast or any other public entertainment. But this and many others I omit, being studious of brevity.

Supposing that one thousand families in this city would be constant cus- [330 tomers for infant's flesh, beside others who might have it at merry-meetings, particularly weddings and christenings, I compute that Dublin would take off annually about twenty thousand carcasses; and the rest of the kingdom (where probably they will be sold somewhat cheaper) the remaining eighty thousand.

I can think of no one objection that will possibly be raised against this [340] proposal, unless it should be urged that the number of people will be thereby much lessened in the kingdom. This I freely own, and was indeed one principal design in offering it to the world. I desire the reader will observe, that I calculate my remedy for this one individual kingdom of Ireland and for no other that ever was, is, or I think ever can be upon earth. Therefore let no man talk to [350] me of other expedients: of taxing our absentees at five shillings a pound; of using neither clothes nor household furniture except what is of our own growth and manufacture; of utterly rejecting the materials and instruments that promote foreign luxury; of curing the expensiveness of pride, vanity, idleness, and gaming in our women; of introducing a vein of parsimony, prudence, and tem- [360] perance; of learning to love our country, wherein we differ even from LAPLANDERS and the inhabitants of TOPINAMBOO; of quitting our animosities and factions, nor act any longer like the Jews, who were murdering one another at the very moment their city was taken; of being a little cautious not to sell our country and conscience for nothing; of teaching landlords to have at least one degree [370] of mercy toward their tenants; lastly, of putting a spirit of honesty, industry, and skill into our shopkeepers; who, if a resolution could now be taken to buy only our native goods, would immediately unite to cheat and exact upon us in the price, the measure, and the goodness, nor could ever yet be brought to make one fair proposal of just dealing, though often and earnestly invited to it. [380]

Therefore I repeat, let no man talk to me of these and the like expedients, till he hath at least some glimpse of hope that there will be ever some hearty and sincere attempt to put them in practice.

But as to myself, having been wearied out for many years with offering vain, idle, visionary thoughts, and at length utterly despairing of success, I fortunately fell upon this proposal; which, as it [390] is wholly new, so it hath something solid and real, of no expense and little trouble, full in our own power, and whereby we can incur no danger in disobliging ENGLAND. For this kind of commodity will not bear exportation, the flesh being of too tender a consistence to admit a long continuance in salt, although perhaps I could name a country which would be glad to eat up our whole nation with- [400] out it.

After all, I am not so violently bent upon my own opinion as to reject any offer proposed by wise men, which shall be found equally innocent, cheap, easy, and effectual. But before something of that kind shall be advanced in contradiction to my scheme, and offering a better, I desire the author or authors will be pleased maturely to consider two [410] points. First, as things now stand, how they will be able to find food and raiment for an hundred thousand useless mouths and backs. And secondly, there being a round million of creatures in human figure throughout this kingdom, whose whole subsistence put into a common stock would leave them in debt two millions of pounds sterling, adding those who are beggars by profession to the [420] bulk of farmers, cottagers, and laborers, with their wives and children who are beggars in effect: I desire those politicians who dislike my overture, and may perhaps be so bold as to attempt an answer, that they will first ask the parents of these mortals, whether they would not at this day think it a great happiness to have been sold for food at a year old in the manner I prescribe, and thereby have [430] avoided such a perpetual scene of misfortunes as they have since gone through by the oppression of landlords, the impossibility of paying rent without money or trade, the want of common sustenance, with neither house nor clothes to cover them from the inclemencies of the weather, and the most inevitable prospect of entailing the like or greater miseries upon their breed for ever. [440]

I profess, in the sincerity of my heart, that I have not the least personal interest in endeavoring to promote this necessary work, having no other motive than the public good of my country, by advancing our trade, providing for infants, relieving the poor, and giving some pleasure to the rich. I have no children by which I can propose to get a single penny; the youngest being nine years old, and [450 my wife past child-bearing.

From THE JOURNAL TO STELLA

Sept. 30, 1710. Have not I brought myself into a fine premunire to begin writing letters in whole sheets? and now I dare not leave it off. I can't tell whether you like these journal letters: I believe they would be dull to me to read them over; but, perhaps, little MD is pleased to know how Presto passes his time in her absence. I always begin my last the same day I ended the former. I told [10 you where I dined to-day at a tavern with Stratford: Lewis, who is a great favorite of Harley's, was to have been with us; but he was hurried to Hampton Court, and sent his excuse, and that next Wednesday he would introduce me to Harley. 'Tis good to see what a lamentable confession the Whigs all make me of my ill usage; but I mind them not. I am already represented to Harley as a discontented person, that was used ill for not being Whig enough; and I hope for good usage from him. The Tories dryly tell me, I may make my fortune, if I please; but I do not understand them, or rather, I do understand them.

Oct. 4. After I had put out my candle last night, my landlady came into my room, with a servant of Lord Halifax, [30 to desire I would go dine with him at his house near Hampton Court; but I sent him word I had business of great importance that hindered me, etc. And, to-day, I was brought privately to Mr. Harley, who received me with the greatest respect and kindness imaginable: he has appointed me an hour on Saturday at four, afternoon, when I will open my business to him. [40

Oct. 7. I wonder when this letter will be finished: it must go by Tuesday, that is certain; and if I have one from MD before, I will not answer it, that's as certain too! 'Tis now morning, and I did not finish my papers for Mr. Harley last night; for you must understand Presto was sleepy, and made blunders and blots. Very pretty that I must be writing to young women in a morning fresh and [50 fasting, faith. Well, good morrow to you: and so I go to business, and lay aside this paper till night, sirrahs. —At night. Jack How told Harley, that if there were a lower place in hell than another, it was reserved for his porter, who tells lies so gravely, and with so civil a manner. This porter I have had to deal with, going this evening at four to visit Mr. Harley, by his own appointment. [60 But the fellow told me no lie, though I suspected every word he said. He told me his master was just gone to dinner, with much company, and desired I would come an hour hence, which I did, expecting to hear Mr. Harley was gone out; but they had just done dinner. Mr. Harley came out to me, brought me in, and presented me to his son-in-law, Lord Doblane (or some such name), and his [70 own son, and among others, Will Penn the Quaker: we sat two hours, drinking as good wine as you do; and two hours more he and I alone; where he heard me tell my business; asked for my powers, and read them; and read likewise a memorial I had drawn up, and put it in his pocket to show the Queen; told me the measures he would take; and, in short, said everything I could wish; told me he must [80 bring Mr. St. John (Secretary of State) and me acquainted; and spoke so many things of personal kindness and esteem for me, that I am inclined half to believe what some friends have told me, that he would do everything to bring me over. He has desired to dine with me (what a comical mistake was that), I mean, he has desired me to dine with him on Tuesday; and after four hours being with him, [90 set me down at St. James's Coffeehouse, in a hackney coach. All this is odd and comical if you consider him and me. He knew my Christian name very well. I could not forbear saying thus much upon this matter, although you will think it tedious. But I will tell you; you must know, 'tis fatal to me to be a scoundrel and a prince the same day: for being to see him at four, I could not engage [100 myself to dine at any friend's; so I went to Tooke, to give him a ballad and dine with him; but he was not at home; so I was forced to go to a blind chop house, and dine for temperance upon gill ale, bad broth, and three chops of mutton; and then go reeking from thence to the first minister of state. And now I am going in charity to send Steele a Tatler, who is very low of late. I think I am civiler than I used [110 to be; and have not used the expression of "you in Ireland" and "we in England," as I did when I was here before, to your great indignation.—They may talk of the you know what; but, gad, if it had not been for that, I should never have been able to get the access I have had; and if that helps me to succeed, then that same thing will be serviceable to the church. But how far we must depend upon [120 new friends, I have learned by long practice, though I think, among great ministers, they are just as good as old ones. And so I think this important day has made a great hole in this side of the paper; and the fiddle faddles of to-morrow and Monday will make up the rest; and, besides, I shall see Harley on Tuesday before this letter goes.

Feb. 4, 1711. I went to Mr. Addison's, and dined with him at his lodgings; I had not seen him these three weeks; we are grown common acquaintance: yet what have I not done for his friend Steele? Mr. Harley reproached me the last time I saw him, that to please me, he would be reconciled to Steele, and had promised and appointed to see him, and that Steele never came. Harrison, whom Mr. Addison recommended to me, I have introduced to [140 the Secretary of State, who has promised me to take care of him; and I have represented Addison himself so to the ministry, that they think and talk in his favor, though they hated him before.—Well; he is now in my debt, and there's an end; and I never had the least obligation to him, and there's another end. This evening I had a message from Mr. Harley, desiring to know whether I was alive, [150 and that I would dine with him to-morrow. They dine so late; that since my head has been wrong, I have avoided being with them.

Feb. 6. Mr. Harley desired I would dine with him again to-day; but I refused him, for I fell out with him yesterday, and will not see him again till he makes me amends; and so I go to bed. [160

Feb. 7. I was this morning early with Mr. Lewis of the Secretary's office, and saw a letter Mr. Harley had sent to him, desiring to be reconciled; but I was deaf to all entreaties, and have desired Lewis to go to him, and let him know I expect farther satisfaction. If we let these great ministers pretend too much, there will be no governing them. He promises to make me easy, if I will but come and see [170 him; but I won't, and he shall do it by message, or I will cast him off. I'll tell you the cause of our quarrel when I see you, and refer it to yourselves. In that he did something, which he intended for a favor, and I have taken it quite otherwise, disliking both the thing and the manner, and it has heartily vexed me, and all I have said is truth, though it looks like jest; and I absolutely re- [180 fused to submit to his intended favor, and expect further satisfaction.

Feb. 13. I have taken Mr. Harley into favor again.

June 30, 1711. We have plays acted in our town, and Patrick was at one of them, oh, oh. He was damnably mauled one day when he was drunk; he was at cuffs with a brother footman, who dragged him along the floor on 'his [190 face, which looked for a week after as if he had the leprosy; and I was glad enough to see it. I have been ten times sending him over to you; yet now he has new clothes, and a laced hat, which the hatter brought by his orders, and he offered to pay for the lace out of his wages. Farewell, my dearest lives and lights, I love you better than ever, if possible, as hope saved, I do, and ever will. [200 God Almighty bless you ever, and make us happy together; I pray for this twice every day; and I hope God will hear my poor hearty prayers. Remember, if I am used ill and ungratefully, as I have formerly been, 'tis what I am prepared for, and shall not wonder at it. Yet, I am now envied, and thought in high favor, and have every day numbers of considerable men teasing me to solicit [210 for them. And the ministry all use me perfectly well, and all that know them say they love me. Yet I can count upon nothing, nor will, but upon MD's love and kindness. They think me useful; they pretended they were afraid of none but me; and that they resolved to have me; they have often confessed this: yet all makes little impression on me. Pox of these speculations! they give me [220 the spleen; and that is a disease I was not born to.—Let me alone, sirrahs, and be satisfied: I am, as long as MD and Presto are well:

Little wealth,
And much health,
And a life by stealth;

that is all we want; and so, farewell, dearest MD; Stella, Dingley, Presto, all together, now and forever all to- [230 gether. Farewell again and again.

May 31, 1712. I'll say no more to oo tonite, sellohs, because I must send away the letter, not by the bell, but early: and besides, I have not much more to say at zis plesent-liting. Does MD never read at all now, pee? But oo walk plodigiousry, I suppose,—You make nothing of walking to, to, to, ay, to Donybrook. I walk too as much as I can, [240 because sweating is good; but I'll walk more if I go to Kensington. I suppose I shall have no apples this year neither, for I dined t'other day with Lord Rivers, who is sick at his country house, and he showed me all his cherries blasted. Nite deeleast sollahs; farewell deeleast Rives; rove poor Pdfr. Farewell deeleast richar MD, MD, MD, FW, FW, FW, FW, FW, ME, ME, Lele, ME, Lele, Lele, [250 richar MD.

Nov. 15, 1712. Before this comes to your hands, you will have heard of the most terrible accident that hath almost ever happened. This morning at eight, my man brought me word that Duke of Hamilton had fought with Lord Mohun, and killed him, and was brought home wounded. I immediately sent him to the Duke's house, in St. James's Square; [260 but the porter could hardly answer for tears, and a great rabble was about the house. In short, they fought at seven this morning. The dog Mohun was killed on the spot; and while the Duke was over him, Mohun shortening his sword, stabbed him in at the shoulder to the heart. The Duke was helped toward the cake-house by the ring in Hyde Park (where they fought), and died on the [270 grass, before he could reach the house; and was brought home in his coach by eight, while the poor Duchess was asleep. Macartney, and one Hamilton, were the seconds, who fought likewise, and are both fled. I am told, that a footman of Lord Mohun's stabbed Duke of Hamilton; and some say Macartney did so too. Mohun gave the affront, and yet sent the challenge. I am infinitely concerned [280 for the poor Duke, who was a frank, honest, good-natured man. I loved him very well, and I think he loved me better. He had the greatest mind in the world to have me go with him to France, but durst not tell it to me; and those he did, said I could not be spared, which was true. They have removed the poor Duchess to a lodging in the neighborhood, where I have been with her two [290 hours, and am just come away. I never saw so melancholy a scene; for indeed all reasons for real grief belong to her; nor is it possible for any body to be a greater loser in all regards. She has moved my very soul. The lodging was inconvenient, and they would have removed her to another; but I would not suffer it, because it had no room backward, and she must have been tortured with [300 the noise of the Grub Street screamers mentioning her husband's murder to her ears.

I believe you have heard the story of my escape, in opening the ben-box sent to Lord-Treasurer. The prints have told a thousand lies of it; but at last we gave them a true account of it at length, printed in the evening; only I would not suffer them to name me, having been [310 so often named before, and teased to death with questions. I wonder how I came to have so much presence of mind, which is usually not my talent; but so it pleased God, and I saved myself and him; for there was a bullet apiece. A gentleman told me, that if I had been killed, the Whigs would have called it a judgment, because the barrels were of ink-horns, with which I had done them [320 so much mischief. There was a pure Grub Street of it, full of lies and inconsistencies. I do not like these things at all, and I wish myself more and more among my willows. There is a devilish spirit among people, and the ministry must exert themselves, or sink. Nite dee sollahs, I'll go seep.

Nov. 16. I thought to have finished this yesterday, but was too much [330 disturbed. I sent a letter early this morning to Lady Masham, to beg her to write some comforting words to the poor Duchess. I dined to-day with Lady Masham at Kensington. She has promised me to get the Queen to write to the Duchess kindly on this occasion; and to-morrow I will beg Lord-Treasurer to visit and comfort her. I have been with her two hours again, and find her [340 worse. Her violences not so frequent, but her melancholy more formal and settled. She has abundance of wit and spirit; about thirty-three years old; handsome and airy, and seldom spared anybody that gave her the least provocation; by which she had many enemies, and few friends. Lady Orkney, her sister-in-law, is come to town on this occasion, and behaved herself with great human- [350 ity. They have always been very ill together, and the poor Duchess could not have patience when people told her I went often to Lady Orkney's. But I am resolved to make them friends; for the Duchess is now no more the object of envy, and must learn humility from the severest master, Affliction. I design to make the ministry put out a proclamation (if it can be found proper) against [360 that villain Macartney. What shall we do with these murderers? I cannot end this letter to-night, and there is no occasion; for I cannot send it till Tuesday, and the coroner's inquest on the Duke's body is to be to-morrow, and I shall know no more. But what care oo for all this? Iss, MD im sorry for poo Pdfr's friends; and this is a very surprising event. 'Tis late, and I'll go to bed. This looks [370 like journals. Nite.

Nov. 18. The committee of council is to sit this afternoon upon the affair of Duke of Hamilton's murder, and I hope a proclamation will be out against Macartney. I was just now ('tis now noon) with the Duchess, to let her know Lord-Treasurer will see her. She is mightily out of order. The jury have not yet brought in their verdict upon the cor- [380 oner's inquest. We suspect Macartney stabbed the Duke while he was fighting. The Queen and Lord-Treasurer are in great concern at this event. I dine to-day again with Lord-Treasurer; but must send this to the post-office before, because else I shall not have time; he usually keeps me so late.

JOSEPH ADDISON (1672-1719)

From THE CAMPAIGN, A POEM TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH

But, O my muse, what numbers wilt thou find
To sing the furious troops in battle joined!
Methinks I hear the drum's tumultuous
sound 275
The victor's shouts and dying groans con-
found,
The dreadful burst of cannon rend the
skies,
And all the thunder of the battle rise!
'Twas then great Marlborough's mighty soul was proved.
That, in the shock of charging hosts un-
moved, 280
Amidst confusion, horror, and despair,
Examined all the dreadful scenes of war;
In peaceful thought the field of death surveyed,
To fainting squadrons sent the timely aid,
Inspired repulsed battalions to engage, 285
And taught the doubtful battle where to rage.
So when an angel by divine command
With rising tempests shakes a guilty land,
Such as of late o'er pale Britannia past, Calm and serene he drives the furious
blast, 290

And, pleased the Almighty's orders to perform,
Rides in the whirlwind, and directs the storm.

HYMN

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.
Th' unwearied Sun from day to day 5
Does his Creator's power display;
And publishes to every land
The work of an Almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The Moon takes up the wondrous tale; 10
And nightly to the listening Earth
Repeats the story of her birth:
Whilst all the stars that round her burn,
And all the planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll, 15
And spread the truth from pole to pole.

What though in solemn silence all Move round the dark terrestrial ball;
What though no real voice nor sound
Amidst their radiant orbs be found? 20
In Reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice;
Forever singing as they shine,
"The Hand that made us is divine."

JOSEPH ADDISON (1672-1719) AND RICHARD STEELE (1672-1729)

From THE TATLER

PROSPECTUS

No. 1. Tuesday, April 12, 1709

Quicquid agunt homines—

—nostri est farrago libelli.

Juv. Sat. i. 85, 86.

*Whate'er men do, or say, or think, or dream,
Our motley paper seizes for its theme.—Pope.*

Though the other papers, which are published for the use of the good people of England, have certainly very wholesome effects, and are laudable in their particular

kinds, they do not seem to come up to the main design of such narrations, which, I humbly presume, should be principally intended for the use of politic persons, who are so public-spirited as to neglect their own affairs to look into trans- 10 actions of state. Now these gentlemen, for the most part, being persons of strong zeal, and weak intellects, it is both a charitable and necessary work to offer something, whereby such worthy and well-affected members of the commonwealth may be instructed, after their reading, what to think; which shall be the end and purpose of this my paper, wherein I shall, from time to time, 20 report and consider all matters of what kind soever that shall occur to me, and publish such my advices and reflections every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday in the week, for the convenience of the post. I resolve to have something which may be of entertainment to the fair sex, in honor of whom I have invented the title of this paper. I therefore earnestly desire all persons, without distinc- 30 tion, to take it in for the present gratis, and hereafter at the price of one penny, forbidding all hawkers to take more for it at their peril. And I desire all persons to consider, that I am at a very great charge for proper materials for this work, as well as that, before I resolved upon it, I had settled a correspondence in all parts of the known and knowing world. And forasmuch as this globe is not trodden 40 upon by mere drudges of business only, but that men of spirit and genius are justly to be esteemed as considerable agents in it, we shall not, upon a dearth of news, present you with musty foreign edicts, and dull proclamations, but shall divide our relation of the passages which occur in action or discourse throughout this town, as well as elsewhere, under such dates of places as may prepare 50 you for the matter you are to expect in the following manner.

All accounts of gallantry, pleasure, and entertainment, shall be under the article of White's Chocolate-house; poetry, under that of Will's Coffee-house; learning, under the title of Grecian; foreign and domestic news, you will have from St.

James's Coffee-house; and what else I have to offer on any other subject [60 shall be dated from my own Apartment.

I once more desire my reader to consider, that as I cannot keep an ingenious man to go daily to Will's under two-pence each day, merely for his charges; to White's under six-pence; nor to the Grecian, without allowing him some plain Spanish, to be as able as others at the learned table; and that a good observer cannot speak with even Kidney at [70 St. James's without clean linen; I say, these considerations will, I hope, make all persons willing to comply with my humble request (when my gratis stock is exhausted) of a penny apiece; especially since they are sure of some proper amusement, and that it is impossible for me to want means to entertain them, having, besides the force of my own parts, the power of divination, and that I can, by [80 casting a figure, tell you all that will happen before it comes to pass.

But this last faculty I shall use very sparingly, and speak but of few things until they are passed, for fear of divulging matters which may offend our superiors. * * *

—STEELE.

DUELLING

No. 25. Tuesday, June 7, 1709.

Quicquid agunt homines—

—nostri est farrago libelli.

Juv. Sat. i. 85, 86.

*Whate'er men do, or say, or think, or dream,
Our motley paper seizes for its theme.—Pope.*

WHITE'S CHOCOLATE-HOUSE, June 6.

A letter from a young lady, written in the most passionate terms, wherein she laments the misfortune of a gentleman, her lover, who was lately wounded in a duel, has turned my thoughts to that subject, and inclined me to examine into the causes which precipitate men into so fatal a folly. And as it has been proposed to treat of subjects of gallantry in the article from hence, and no one [10 point in nature is more proper to be considered by the company who frequent this place than that of duels, it is worth our consideration to examine into this chimerical groundless humor, and to lay every other thought aside, until we have stripped it of all its false pretences to credit and reputation amongst men.

But I must confess, when I consider what I am-going about, and run over in [20 my imagination all the endless crowd of men of honor who will be offended at such a discourse, I am undertaking, methinks, a work worthy an invulnerable hero in romance, rather than a private gentleman with a single rapier: but as I am pretty well acquainted by great opportunities with the nature of man, and know of a truth that all men fight against their will, the danger vanishes, [30 and resolution rises upon this subject. For this reason I shall talk very freely on a custom which all men wish exploded, though no man has courage enough to resist it.

But there is one unintelligible word, which I fear will extremely perplex my dissertation, and I must confess to you I find very hard to explain, which is the term "satisfaction." An honest [40 country gentleman had the misfortune to fall into company with two or three modern men of honor, where he happened to be very ill-treated; and one of the company, being conscious of his offense, sends a note to him in the morning, and tells him, he was ready to give him satisfaction. "This is fine doing," says the plain fellow; "last night he sent me away cursedly out of humor, and [50 this morning he fancies it would be a satisfaction to be run through the body."

As the matter at present stands, it is not to do handsome actions denominates a man of honor; it is enough if he dares to defend ill ones. Thus you often see a common sharper in competition with a gentleman of the first rank; though all mankind is convinced that a fighting gamester is only a pick-pocket with [60 the courage of a highwayman. One cannot with any patience reflect on the unaccountable jumble of persons and things in this town and nation, which occasions very frequently that a brave man falls by a hand below that of a common hangman, and yet his executioner escapes the clutches of the hangman for doing it. I shall therefore hereafter consider, how the bravest men in other ages and na- [70 tions have behaved themselves upon such incidents as we decide by combat; and show, from their practice, that this resentment neither has its foundation from true reason or solid fame; but is an imposture, made of cowardice, falsehood, and want of understanding. For this work, a good history of quarrels would be very edifying to the public, and I apply myself to the town for par- [80 ticulars and circumstances within their knowledge, which may serve to embellish the dissertation with proper cuts. Most of the quarrels I have ever known, have proceeded from some valiant coxcomb's persisting in the wrong, to defend some prevailing folly, and preserve himself from the ingenuity of owning a mistake.

By this means it is called "giving a man satisfaction," to urge your [90 offense against him with your sword; which puts me in mind of Peter's order to the keeper in The Tale of a Tub: "If you neglect to do all this, damn you and your generation for ever: and so we bid you heartily farewell." If the contradiction in the very terms of one of our challenges were as well explained and turned into downright English, would it not run after this manner? [100

"Sir,

Your extraordinary behavior last night, and the liberty you were pleased to take with me, makes me this morning give you this, to tell you, because you are an ill-bred puppy, I will meet you in Hyde- park, an hour hence; and because you want both breeding and humanity, I desire you would come with a pistol in your hand; on horseback, and endeavor to [110 shoot me through the head, to teach you more manners. If you fail of doing me this pleasure, I shall say, you are a rascal, on every post in town: and so, sir, if you will not injure me more, I shall never forgive what you have done already. Pray, sir, do not fail of getting everything ready; and you will infinitely oblige, sir, your most obedient humble servant, etc." * * * [120

—STEELE.

NED SOFTLY

*No. 163. Tuesday, April 25, 1710.

*Idem inficeto est inficetior rure,
Simul poemata attigit; neque idem unquam
Æquè est beatus, ac poema cum scribit:
Tam gaudet in se, tamque se ipse miratur.
Nimirum idem omnes fallimur; neque est
quisquam
Quem non in aliquâ re videre Suffenum Possis—*

Catul. de Suffeno, xx. 14.

Suffenus has no more wit than a mere clown when he attempts to write verses, and yet he is never happier than when he is scribbling; so much does he admire himself and his compositions. And, indeed, this is the foible of every one of us, for there is no man living who is not a Suffenus in one thing or other.

WILL'S COFFEE HOUSE, April 24.

I yesterday came hither about two hours before the company generally make their appearance, with a design to read over all the newspapers; but, upon my sitting down, I was accosted by Ned Softly, who saw me from a corner in the other end of the room, where I found he had been writing something. "Mr. Bickerstaff," says he, "I observe by a late Paper of yours, that you and I [10 are just of a humor; for you must know, of all impertinences, there is nothing which I so much hate as news. I never read a Gazette in my life; and never trouble my head about our armies, whether they win or lose, or in what part of the world they lie encamped." Without giving me time to reply, he drew a paper of verses out of his pocket, telling me, "that he had something which would entertain me [20 more agreeably; and that he would desire my judgment upon every line, for that we had time enough before us until the company came in."

Ned Softly is a very pretty poet, and a great admirer of easy lines. Waller is his favorite: and as that admirable writer has the best and worst verses of any among our great English poets, Ned Softly has got all the bad ones without book; [30 which he repeats upon occasion, to show his reading, and garnish his conversation. Ned is indeed a true English reader, incapable of relishing the great and masterly strokes of this art; but wonderfully pleased with the little Gothic ornaments of epigrammatical conceits, turns, points, and quibbles, which are so frequent in the most admired of our English poets, and practised by those who want genius [40 and strength to represent, after the manner of the ancients, simplicity in its natural beauty and perfection.

Finding myself unavoidably engaged in such a conversation, I was resolved to turn my pain into a pleasure, and to divert myself as well as I could with so very odd a fellow. "You must understand," says Ned, "that the sonnet I am going to read to you was written upon a [50 lady, who showed me some verses of her own making, and is, perhaps, the best poet of our age. But you shall hear it."

Upon which he began to read as follows:

TO MIRA ON HER INCOMPARABLE POEMS.

When dressed in laurel wreaths you shine,
And tune your soft melodious notes,
You seem a sister of the Nine,
Or Phœbus' self in petticoats.

I fancy, when your song you sing, [60
(Your song you sing with so much art)
Your pen was plucked from Cupid's wing;
For, ah! it wounds me like his dart.

"Why," says I, "this is a little nosegay of conceits, a very lump of salt: every verse has something in it that piques; and then the dart in the last line is certainly as pretty a sting in the tail of an epigram, for so I think you critics call it, as ever entered into the thought of a poet." [70 "Dear Mr. Bickerstaff," says he, shaking me by the hand, "everybody knows you to be a judge of these things; and to tell you truly, I read over Roscommon's translation of 'Horace's Art of Poetry' three several times, before I sat down to write the sonnet which I have shown you. But you shall hear it again, and pray observe every line of it; for not one of them shall pass without your approba- [80 tion.

When dressed in laurel wreaths you shine.

"That is," says he, "when you have your garland on; when you are writing verses." To which I replied, "I know your meaning: a metaphor!" "The same," said he, and went on:

"And tune your soft melodious notes.

"Pray observe the gliding of that verse; there is scarce a consonant in it: I [90 took care to make it run upon liquids. Give me your opinion of it." "Truly," said I, "I think it as good as the former." "I am very glad to hear you say so," says he; "but mind the next:

You seem a sister of the Nine.

"That is," says he, "you seem a sister of the Muses; for, if you look into ancient authors, you will find it was their opinion that there were nine of them." "I [100 remember it very well," said I; "but pray proceed."

"Or Phœbus' self in petticoats.

"Phœbus," says he, "was the god of poetry. These little instances, Mr. Bickerstaff, show a gentleman's reading. Then, to take off from the air of learning, which Phœbus and the Muses had given to this first stanza, you may observe, how it falls all of a sudden into the familiar; [110 'in Petticoats'!

Or Phœbus' self in petticoats."

"Let us now," says I, "enter upon the second stanza; I find the first line is still a continuation of the metaphor:

I fancy, when your song you sing."

"It is very right," says he, "but pray observe the turn of words in those two lines. I was a whole hour in adjusting of them, and have still a doubt upon [120 me, whether in the second line it should be 'Your song you sing;' or, 'You sing your song.' You shall hear them both:

I fancy, when your song you sing,
(Your song you sing with so much art)
or

I fancy, when your song you sing,
(You sing your song with so much art.)"

"Truly," said I, "the turn is so natural either way, that you have made me [130 almost giddy with it." "Dear sir," said he, grasping me by the hand, "you have a great deal of patience; but pray what do you think of the next verse?"

Your pen was plucked from Cupid's wing."

"Think!" says I; "I think you have made Cupid look like a little goose." "That was my meaning," says he: "I think the ridicule is well enough hit off. But we come now to the last, which [140 sums up the whole matter:

For, ah! it wounds me like his dart.

"Pray, how do you like that Ah! doth it not make a pretty figure in that place? Ah!—it looks as if I felt the dart, and cried out as being pricked with it!

For, ah! it wounds me like his dart.

"My friend Dick Easy," continued he, "assured me, he would rather have written that Ah! than to have been the au- [150 thor of the Æneid. He indeed objected, that I made Mira's pen like a quill in one of the lines, and like a dart in the other. But as to that—" "Oh! as to that," says I, "it is but supposing Cupid to be like a porcupine, and his quills and darts will be the same thing." He was going to embrace me for the hint; but half a dozen critics coming into the room, whose faces he did not like, he conveyed the son- [160 net into his pocket, and whispered me in the ear, "he would show it me again as soon as his man had written it over fair."

—ADDISON.

FROZEN WORDS

No. 254. Thursday, November 23, 1710.

Splendide mendax—.

Hor. 2 Od. iii. 35.

Gloriously false—.

Francis.

MY OWN APARTMENT, November 22.

There are no books which I more delight in than in travels, especially those that describe remote countries, and give the writer an opportunity of showing his parts without incurring any danger of being examined or contradicted. Among all the authors of this kind, our renowned countryman, Sir John Mandeville, has distinguished himself by the copiousness of his invention and the greatness of [10 his genius. The second to Sir John I take to have been Ferdinand Mendez Pinto, a person of infinite adventure, and unbounded imagination. One reads the voyages of these two great wits, with as much astonishment as the travels of Ulysses in Homer, or of the Red-Cross Knight in Spenser. All is enchanted ground, and fairyland.

I have got into my hands, by great [20 chance, several manuscripts of these two eminent authors, which are filled with greater wonders than any of those they have communicated to the public; and indeed, were they not so well attested, they would appear altogether improbable. I am apt to think the ingenious authors did not publish them with the rest of their works, lest they should pass for fictions and fables: a caution not unnecessary, [30 when the reputation of their veracity was not yet established in the world. But as this reason has now no farther weight, I shall make the public a present of these curious pieces, at such times as I shall find myself unprovided with other subjects.

The present paper I intend to fill with an extract from Sir John's Journal, in which that learned and worthy knight [40 gives an account of the freezing and thawing of several short speeches, which he made in the territories of Nova Zembla. I need not inform my reader, that the author of "Hudibras" alludes to this strange quality in that cold climate, when, speaking of abstracted notions clothed in a visible shape, he adds that apt simile,

"Like words congealed in northern air." 50

Not to keep my reader any longer in suspense, the relation put into modern language, is as follows:

"We were separated by a storm in the latitude of seventy-three, insomuch, that only the ship which I was in, with a Dutch and French vessel, got safe into a creek of Nova Zembla. We landed, in order to refit our vessels, and store ourselves with provisions. The crew of each vessel made themselves a cabin of turf and wood, at some distance from each other, to fence themselves against the inclemencies of the weather, which was severe beyond imagination. We soon observed, that in talking to one another we lost several of our words, and could not hear one another at above two yards distance, and that too when we sat very near the fire. After much perplexity, I found [70 that our words froze in the air, before they could reach the ears of the persons to whom they were spoken. I was soon confirmed in this conjecture, when, upon the increase of the cold, the whole company grew dumb, or rather deaf; for every man was sensible, as we afterwards found, that he spoke as well as ever; but the sounds no sooner took air than they were condensed and lost. It was now [80 a miserable spectacle to see us nodding and gaping at one another, every man talking, and no man heard. One might observe a seaman that could hail a ship at a league's distance, beckoning with his hand, straining his lungs, and tearing his throat; but all in vain:

"—Nec vox nec verba sequuntur.

OVID, Met. xi. 326.

"Nor voice, nor words ensued.

"We continued here three weeks [90 in this dismal plight. At length, upon a turn of wind, the air about us began to thaw. Our cabin was immediately filled with a dry clattering sound, which I afterwards found to be the crackling of consonants that broke above our heads, and were often mixed with a gentle hissing, which I imputed to the letter s, that occurs so frequently in the English tongue. I soon after felt a breeze of whispers [100 rushing by my ear; for those, being of a soft and gentle substance, immediately liquefied in the warm wind that blew across our cabin. These were soon followed by syllables and short words, and at length by entire sentences, that melted sooner or later, as they were more or less congealed; so that we now heard every thing that had been spoken during the whole three weeks that we had been [110 silent, if I may use that expression. It was now very early in the morning, and yet, to my surprise, I heard somebody say, 'Sir John, it is midnight, and time for the ship's crew to go to bed.' This I knew to be the pilot's voice; and, upon recollecting myself, I concluded that he had spoken these words to me some days before, though I could not hear them until the present thaw. My reader [120 will easily imagine how the whole crew was amazed to hear every man talking, and see no man opening his mouth. In the midst of this great surprise we were all in, we heard a volley of oaths and curses, lasting for a long while, and uttered in a very hoarse voice, which I knew belonged to the boatswain, who was a very choleric fellow, and had taken his opportunity of cursing and swearing at me, when he [130 thought I could not hear him; for I had several times given him the strappado on that account, as I did not fail to repeat it for these his pious soliloquies, when I got him on shipboard.

"I must not omit the names of several beauties in Wapping, which were heard every now and then, in the midst of a long sigh that accompanied them; as, 'Dear Kate!' 'Pretty Mrs. Peggy!' [140 'When shall I see my Sue again!' This betrayed several amours which had been concealed until that time, and furnished us with a great deal of mirth in our return to England.

"When this confusion of voices was pretty well over, though I was afraid to offer at speaking, as fearing I should not be heard, I proposed a visit to the Dutch cabin, which lay about a mile [150 farther up in the country. My crew were extremely rejoiced to find they had again recovered their hearing; though every man uttered his voice with the same apprehensions that I had done,

"—Et timide verba intermissa retentat.

OVID, Met. i. 746.

"And tried his tongue, his silence softly broke.

"At about half-a-mile's distance from our cabin we heard the groanings of a bear, which at first startled us; but, upon [160 enquiry, we were informed by some of our company, that he was dead, and now lay in salt, having been killed upon that very spot about a fortnight before, in the time of the frost. Not far from the same place, we were likewise entertained with some posthumous snarls and barkings of a fox.

"We at length arrived at the little Dutch settlement; and, upon entering [170 the room, found it filled with sighs that smelt of brandy, and several other unsavory sounds, that were altogether inarticulate. My valet, who was an Irishman, fell into so great a rage at what he heard, that he drew his sword; but not knowing where to lay the blame, he put it up again. We were stunned with these confused noises, but did not hear a single word until about half-an-hour after; [180 which I ascribed to the harsh and obdurate sounds of that language, which wanted more time than ours to melt, and become audible.

"After having here met with a very hearty welcome, we went to the cabin of the French, who, to make amends for their three weeks' silence, were talking and disputing with greater rapidity and confusion than I ever heard in an [190 assembly, even of that nation. Their language, as I found, upon the first giving of the weather, fell asunder and dissolved. I was here convinced of an error, into which I had before fallen; for I fancied, that for the freezing of the sound, it was necessary for it to be wrapped up, and, as it were, preserved in breath: but I found my mistake when I heard the sound of a kit playing a minuet over [200 our heads. I asked the occasion of it; upon which one of the company told me that it would play there above a week longer; 'for,' says he, 'finding ourselves bereft of speech, we prevailed upon one of the company, who had his musical instrument about him, to play to us from morning to night; all which time was employed in dancing in order to dissipate our chagrin, and tuer le temps.'" [210

Here Sir John gives very good philosophical reasons, why the kit could not be heard during the frost; but, as they are something prolix, I pass them over in silence, and shall only observe, that the honorable author seems, by his quotations, to have been well versed in the ancient poets, which perhaps raised his fancy above the ordinary pitch of historians, and very much contributed to [220 the embellishment of his writings.

—ADDISON.

From THE SPECTATOR

MR. SPECTATOR

No. 1. Thursday, March 1, 1711.

Non fumum ex fulgore, sed ex fumo dare lucem

Cogitat, ut speciosa dehinc miracula promat.
Hor. Ars Poet. 143.

*One with a flash begins, and ends in smoke;
Another out of smoke brings glorious light,
And, without raising expectation high,
Surprises us with dazzling miracles.*

—ROSCOMMON.

I have observed that a reader seldom peruses a book with pleasure, till he knows whether the writer of it be a black or a fair man, of a mild or choleric disposition, married or a bachelor, with other particulars of the like nature, that conduce very much to the right understanding of an author. To gratify this curiosity, which is so natural to a reader, I design this paper, and my next, [10 as prefatory discourses to my following writings, and shall give some account in them of the several persons that are engaged in this work. As the chief trouble of compiling, digesting, and correcting will fall to my share, I must do myself the justice to open the work with my own history.

I was born to a small hereditary estate, which, according to the tradition [20 of the village where it lies, was bounded by the same hedges and ditches in William the Conqueror's time that it is at present, and has been delivered down from father to son whole and entire, without the loss or acquisition of a single field or meadow, during the space of six hundred years. There runs a story in the family that when my mother was gone with child of me about three [30 months, she dreamt that she was brought to bed of a judge. Whether this might proceed from a law-suit which was then depending in the family, or my father's being a justice of the peace, I cannot determine; for I am not so vain as to think it presaged any dignity that I should arrive at in my future life, though that was the interpretation which the neighborhood put upon it. The gravity of [40 my behavior at my very first appearance in the world seemed to favor my mother's dream; for, as she often told me, I threw away my rattle before I was two months old, and would not make use of my coral until they had taken away the bells from it.

As for the rest of my infancy, there being nothing in it remarkable, I shall pass it over in silence. I find that [50 during my nonage I had the reputation of a very sullen youth, but was always a favorite of my schoolmaster, who used to say, that my parts were solid, and would wear well. I had not been long at the university, before I distinguished myself by a most profound silence; for, during the space of eight years, excepting in the public exercises of the college, I scarce uttered the quantity of a [60 hundred words; and indeed do not remember that I ever spoke three sentences together in my whole life. Whilst I was in this learned body, I applied myself with so much diligence to my studies, that there are very few celebrated books, either in the learned or the modern tongues, which I am not acquainted with.

Upon the death of my father, I was resolved to travel into foreign coun- [70 tries, and therefore left the university, with the character of an odd unaccountable fellow, that had a great deal of learning, if I would but show it. An insatiable thirst after knowledge carried me into all the countries of Europe, in which there was anything new or strange to be seen; nay, to such a degree was my curiosity raised, that having read the controversies of some great men concerning the an- [80 tiquities of Egypt, I made a voyage to Grand Cairo, on purpose to take the measure of a pyramid, and as soon as I had set myself right in that particular, returned to my native country with great satisfaction.

I have passed my latter years in this city, where I am frequently seen in most public places, though there are not above half a dozen of my select friends that [90 know me; of whom my next paper shall give a more particular account. There is no place of general resort, wherein I do not often make my appearance; sometimes I am seen thrusting my head into a round of politicians at Will's, and listening with great attention to the narratives that are made in those little circular audiences. Sometimes I smoke a pipe at Child's, and whilst I seem at- [100 tentive to nothing but the Postman, overhear the conversation of every table in the room. I appear on Sunday nights at St. James's coffee-house, and sometimes join the little committee of politics in the inner room, as one who comes there to hear and improve. My face is likewise very well known at the Grecian, the Cocoa-tree, and in the theaters both of Drury-Lane and the Hay-market. I [110 have been taken for a merchant upon the Exchange for above these ten years, and sometimes pass for a Jew in the assembly of stock-jobbers at Jonathan's. In short, wherever I see a cluster of people, I always mix with them, though I never open my lips but in my own club.

Thus I live in the world rather as a Spectator of mankind, than as one of the species, by which means I have made [120 myself a speculative statesman, soldier, merchant, and artisan, without ever meddling with any practical part in life. I am very well versed in the theory of a husband or a father, and can discern the errors in the economy, business, and diversion of others, better than those who are engaged in them; as standers-by discover blots which are apt to escape those who are in the game. I never espoused [130 any party with violence, and am resolved to observe an exact neutrality between the Whigs and Tories, unless I shall be forced to declare myself by the hostilities of either side. In short, I have acted in all the parts of my life as a looker-on, which is the character I intend to preserve in this paper.

I have given the reader just so much of my history and character, as to let [140 him see I am not altogether unqualified for the business I have undertaken. As for other particulars in my life and adventures, I shall insert them in following papers, as I shall see occasion. In the meantime, when I consider how much I have seen, read, and heard, I begin to blame my own taciturnity; and since I have neither time nor inclination, to communicate the fulness of my heart in [150 speech, I am resolved to do it in writing, and to print myself out, if possible, before I die. I have been often told by my friends, that it is a pity so many useful discoveries which I have made should be in the possession of a silent man. For this reason, therefore, I shall publish a sheet-full of thoughts every morning, for the benefit of my contemporaries; and if I can any way contri- [160 ute to the diversion or improvement of the country in which I live, I shall leave it when I am summoned out of it, with the secret satisfaction of thinking that I have not lived in vain.

There are three very material points which I have not spoken to in this paper; and which, for several important reasons, I must keep to myself, at least for some time: I mean, an account of [170 my name, my age, and my lodgings. I must confess, I would gratify my reader in anything that is reasonable; but as for these three particulars, though I am sensible they might tend very much to the embellishment of my paper, I cannot yet come to a resolution of communicating them to the public. They would indeed draw me out of that obscurity which I have enjoyed for many years, and ex- [180 pose me in public places to several salutes and civilities, which have been always very disagreeable to me; for the greatest pain I can suffer, is the being talked to, and being stared at. It is for this reason likewise, that I keep my complexion and dress as very great secrets; though it is not impossible but I may make discoveries of both in the progress of the work I have undertaken. [190

After having been thus particular upon myself, I shall, in to-morrow's paper, give an account of those gentlemen who are concerned with me in this work; for, as I have before intimated, a plan of it is laid and concerted, as all other matters of importance are, in a club. However, as my friends have engaged me to stand in the front, those who have a mind to correspond with me may direct their [200 letters to the Spectator, at Mr. Buckley's, in Little Britain. For I must further acquaint the reader, that, though our club meets only on Tuesdays and Thursdays, we have appointed a committee to sit every night, for the inspection of all such papers as may contribute to the advancement of the public weal.

—ADDISON.

THE CLUB

No. 2. Friday, March 2, 1711.

—Asi alii sex

Et plures uno conclamant ore.

—Juv. Sat. vii. 167.

Six more at least join their consenting voice.

The first of our society is a gentleman of Worcestershire, of ancient descent, a baronet, his name Sir Roger de Coverley. His great grandfather was inventor of that famous country-dance which is called after him. All who know that shire are very well acquainted with the parts and merits of Sir Roger. He is a gentleman that is very singular in his behavior, but his singularities proceed from his [10 good sense, and are contradictions to the manners of the world, only as he thinks the world is in the wrong. However, this humor creates him no enemies, for he does nothing with sourness or obstinacy; and his being unconfined to modes and forms, makes him but the readier and more capable to please and oblige all who know him. When he is in town, he lives in Soho Square. It is said, he keeps himself [20 a bachelor, by reason he was crossed in love by a perverse beautiful widow of the next county to him. Before this disappointment, Sir Roger was what you call a fine gentleman, had often supped with my Lord Rochester and Sir George Etherege, fought a duel upon his first coming to town, and kicked Bully Dawson in a public coffee house for calling him youngster. But being ill used by the [30 above mentioned widow, he was very serious for a year and a half; and though, his temper being naturally jovial, he at last got over it, he grew careless of himself, and never dressed afterwards. He continues to wear a coat and doublet of the same cut that were in fashion at the time of his repulse, which, in his merry humors, he tells us, has been in and out twelve times since he first wore it. It is said [40 Sir Roger grew humble in his desires after he had forgot his cruel beauty, inasmuch that it is reported he has frequently offended in point of chastity with beggars and gypsies; but this is looked upon, by his friends, rather as matter of raillery than truth. He is now in his fifty-sixth year, cheerful, gay, and hearty; keeps a good house both in town and country; a great lover of mankind; but there is [50 such a mirthful cast in his behavior, that he is rather beloved than esteemed.

His tenants grow rich, his servants look satisfied, all the young women profess love to him, and the young men are glad of his company. When he comes into a house, he calls the servants by their names, and talks all the way up stairs to a visit. I must not omit, that Sir Roger is a justice of the quorum; that he fills the chair [60 at a quarter-session with great abilities, and three months ago, gained universal applause, by explaining a passage in the game-act.

The gentleman next in esteem and authority among us, is another bachelor, who is a member of the Inner Temple; a man of great probity, wit, and understanding; but he has chosen his place of residence rather to obey the direction [70 of an old humorous father, than in pursuit of his own inclinations. He was placed there to study the laws of the land, and is the most learned of any of the house in those of the stage. Aristotle and Longinus are much better understood by him than Littleton or Coke. The father sends up every post questions relating to marriage articles, leases, and tenures, in the neighborhood; all which questions [80 he agrees with an attorney to answer and take care of in the lump. He is studying the passions themselves, when he should be inquiring into the debates among men which arise from them. He knows the argument of each of the orations of Demosthenes and Tully; but not one case in the reports of our own courts. No one ever took him for a fool, but none, except his intimate friends, know he has [90 a great deal of wit. This turn makes him at once both disinterested and agreeable. As few of his thoughts are drawn from business, they are most of them fit for conversation. His taste of books is a little too just for the age he lives in; he has read all, but approves of very few. His familiarity with the customs, manners, actions, and writings of the ancients, makes him a very delicate ob- [100 server of what occurs to him in the present world. He is an excellent critic, and the time of the play is his hour of business; exactly at five he passes through New Inn, crosses through Russell court, and takes a turn at Will's, till the play begins; he has his shoes rubbed, and his periwig powdered, at the barber's as you go into the Rose. It is for the good of the audience when he is at a play; for [110 the actors have an ambition to please him.

The person of next consideration is Sir Andrew Freeport, a merchant of great eminence in the city of London. A person of indefatigable industry, strong reason, and great experience. His notions of trade are noble and generous, and, as every rich man has usually some sly way of jesting, which would make no great figure were he not a rich man, he [120 calls the sea the British Common. He is acquainted with commerce in all its parts, and will tell you that it is a stupid and barbarous way to extend dominion by arms; for true power is to be got by arts and industry. He will often argue that if this part of our trade were well cultivated, we should gain from one nation;—and if another, from another. I have heard him prove, that diligence [130 makes more lasting acquisitions than valor, and that sloth has ruined more nations than the sword. He abounds in several frugal maxims, amongst which the greatest favorite is, "A penny saved is a penny got." A general trader of good sense is pleasanter company than a general scholar; and Sir Andrew having a natural unaffected eloquence, the perspicuity of his discourse gives the [140 same pleasure that wit would in another man. He has made his fortunes himself; and says that England may be richer than other kingdoms, by as plain methods as he himself is richer than other men; though at the same time I can say this of him, that there is not a point in the compass but blows home a ship in which he is an owner.

Next to Sir Andrew in the club-room [150 sits Captain Sentry, a gentleman of great courage, good understanding, but invincible modesty. He is one of those that deserve very well, but are very awkward at putting their talents within the observation of such as should take notice of them. He was some years a captain, and behaved himself with great gallantry in several engagements and at several sieges; but having a small estate of [160 his own, and being next heir to Sir Roger, he has quitted a way of life, in which no man can rise suitably to his merit, who is not something of a courtier as well as a soldier. I have heard him often lament, that in a profession where merit is placed in so conspicuous a view, impudence should get the better of modesty. When he has talked to this purpose, I never heard him make a sour expres- [170 sion, but frankly confess that he left the world, because he was not fit for it. A strict honesty and an even regular behavior are in themselves obstacles to him that must press through crowds who endeavor at the same end with himself, the favor of a commander. He will, however, in his way of talk, excuse generals for not disposing according to men's desert, or inquiring into it: for, says he, [180 that great man who has a mind to help me, has as many to break through to come at me, as I have to come at him: therefore, he will conclude, that the man who would make a figure, especially in a military way, must get over all false modesty, and assist his patron against the importunity of other pretenders, by a proper assurance in his own vindication. He says it is a civil cowardice to [190 be backward in asserting what you ought to expect, as it is a military fear to be slow in attacking when it is your duty. With this candor does the gentleman speak of himself and others. The same frankness runs through all his conversation. The military part of his life has furnished him with many adventures, in the relation of which he is very agreeable to the company; for he is never [200 over-bearing, though accustomed to command men in the utmost degree below him; nor ever too obsequious, from an habit of obeying men highly above him.

But, that our society may not appear a set of humorists, unacquainted with the gallantries and pleasures of the age, we have amongst us the gallant Will Honeycomb, a gentleman who, according to his years, should be in the decline of his [210 life, but, having ever been very careful of his person, and always had a very easy fortune, time has made but a very little impression, either by wrinkles on his forehead, or traces on his brain. His person is well turned, of a good height. He is very ready at that sort of discourse with which men usually entertain women. He has all his life dressed very well, and remembers habits as others do men. [220 He can smile when one speaks to him, and laughs easily. He knows the history of every mode, and can inform you from which of the French king's wenches our wives and daughters had this manner of curling their hair, that way of placing their hoods; whose frailty was covered by such a sort of petticoat, and whose vanity to show her foot made that part of the dress so short in such a year. [230 In a word, all his conversation and knowledge have been in the female world. As other men of his age will take notice to you what such a minister said upon such and such an occasion, he will tell you, when the Duke of Monmouth danced at court, such a woman was then smitten, another was taken with him at the head of his troop in the Park. In all these important relations, he has ever [240 about the same time received a kind glance or a blow of a fan from some celebrated beauty, mother of the present Lord Such-a-one. * * * This way of talking of his very much enlivens the conversation among us of a more sedate turn; and I find there is not one of the company, but myself, who rarely speak at all, but speaks of him as of that sort of man who is usually called a well- [250 bred fine gentleman. To conclude his character, where women are not concerned, he is an honest worthy man.

I cannot tell whether I am to account him whom I am next to speak of, as one of our company; for he visits us but seldom, but when he does, it adds to every man else a new enjoyment of himself. He is a clergyman, a very philosophic man, of general learning, great sanctity of life, [260 and the most exact good breeding. He has the misfortune to be of a very weak constitution; and consequently cannot accept of such cares and business as preferments in his function would oblige him to; he is therefore among divines what a chamber-councillor is among lawyers. The probity of his mind, and the integrity of his life, create him followers, as being eloquent or loud ad- [270 vances others. He seldom introduces the subject he speaks upon; but we are so far gone in years that he observes, when he is among us, an earnestness to have him fall on some divine topic, which he always treats with much authority, as one who has no interest in this world, as one who is hastening to the object of all his wishes, and conceives hope from his decays and infirmities. These are my [280 ordinary companions.

—STEELE.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

No. 26. Friday, March 30, 1711.

Pallida mors æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas

Regumque turres, O beate Sextil!
Vitæ summa brevis spem nos vetat inchoare longam.

Jam te premet nox, fabulaeque manes,
Et domus exilis Plutonia.

Hor. Od. i. 4, 13.

With equal foot, rich friend, impartial Fate

*Knocks at the cottage, and the palace gate:
Life's span forbids thee to extend thy cares,
And stretch thy hopes beyond thy years:
Night soon will seize, and you must quickly*

*go
To storied ghosts, and Pluto's house below.*
—CREECH.

When I am in a serious humor, I very often walk by myself in Westminster Abbey; where the gloominess of the place, and the use to which it is applied, with the solemnity of the building, and the condition of the people who lie in it, are apt to fill the mind with a kind of melancholy, or rather thoughtfulness, that is not disagreeable. I yesterday passed a whole afternoon in the church- [10 yard, the cloisters, and the church, amusing myself with the tombstones and inscriptions that I met with in those several regions of the dead. Most of them recorded nothing else of the buried person, but that he was born upon one day, and died upon another; the whole history of his life being comprehended in those two circumstances that are com- [20 mon to all mankind. I could not but look upon these registers of existence, whether of brass or marble, as a kind of satire upon the departed persons; who had left no other memorial of them, but that they were born, and that they died. They put me in mind of several persons mentioned in the battles of heroic poems, who have sounding names given them, for no other reason but that they may be killed, and are celebrated for nothing [30 but being knocked on the head.

Γλαυκὸν τε Μεδοντά τε Θερσίλοχόν τε. Hom.
Glaucumque, Medontaque, Thersilochumque. Virg.

The life of these men is finely described in holy writ by "the path of an arrow," which is immediately closed up and lost.

Upon my going into the church, I entertained myself with the digging of a grave; and saw in every shovel-full of [40 it that was thrown up, the fragment of a bone or skull intermixed with a kind of fresh mouldering earth; that some time or other had a place in the composition of a human body. Upon this I began to consider with myself what innumerable multitudes of people lay confused together under the pavement of that ancient cathedral; how men and women, friends and enemies, priests and soldiers, monks and prebendaries, were crumbled amongst one another, and blended together in the same common mass; how beauty, strength, and youth, with old-age, weakness, and deformity, lay undistinguished in the same promiscuous heap of matter.

After having thus surveyed this great magazine of mortality, as it were in the lump, I examined it more particularly by the accounts which I found on several of the monuments which are raised in every quarter of that ancient fabric. Some of them were covered with such extravagant epitaphs, that if it were possible for the dead person to be acquainted with them, he would blush at the praises which his friends have bestowed upon him. There are others so excessively modest, that they deliver the character of the person departed in Greek or Hebrew, and by that means are not understood once in a twelvemonth. In the poetical quarter, I found there were poets who had no monuments, and monuments which had no poets. I observed indeed that the present war had filled the church with many of these uninhabited monuments, which had been erected to the memory of persons whose bodies were perhaps buried in the plains of Blenheim, or in the bosom of the ocean.

I could not but be very much delighted with several modern epitaphs, which are written with great elegance of expression and justness of thought, and therefore do honor to the living as well as to the dead. As a foreigner is very apt to conceive an idea of the ignorance or politeness of a nation from the turn of their public monuments and inscriptions, they should be submitted to the perusal of men of learning and genius, before they are put in execution. Sir Cloudesley Shovel's monument has very often given me great offense. Instead of the brave rough English admiral, which was the distinguishing character of that plain gallant man, he is represented on his tomb by the figure of a beau, dressed in a long periwig, and reposing himself upon velvet cushions under a canopy of state. The inscription is answerable to the monument; for instead of celebrating the many remarkable actions he had performed in the service of his country, it acquaints us only with the manner of his death, in which it was impossible for him to reap any honor. The Dutch, whom we are apt to despise for want of genius, show an infinitely greater taste of antiquity and politeness in their buildings and works of this nature, than what we meet with in those of our own country. The monuments of their admirals, which have been erected at the public expense, represent them like themselves; and are adorned with rostral crowns and naval ornaments, with beautiful festoons of sea-weed, shells, and coral.

But to return to our subject. I have left the repository of our English kings for the contemplation of another day, when I shall find my mind disposed for so serious an amusement. I know that entertainments of this nature are apt to raise dark and dismal thoughts in timorous minds, and gloomy imaginations; but for my own part, though I am always serious, I do not know what it is to be melancholy; and can therefore take a view of nature in her deep and solemn scenes, with the same pleasure as in her most gay and delightful ones. By this means I can improve myself with those objects, which others consider with terror. When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me; when I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out; when I meet with the grief of parents upon a tomb-stone, my heart melts with compassion; when I see the tomb of the parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow. When I see kings lying by those who deposed them, when I consider rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men that divided the world with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions, and debates of mankind. When I read the several dates of the tombs, of some that died yesterday, and some six hundred years ago, I consider that great day when we shall all of us be contemporaries, and make our appearance together.

—ADDISON.

SIR ROGER AT CHURCH

No. 112. Monday, July 9, 1711.

Ἀθανάτους μὲν πρῶτα θεοὺς, νόμῳ ὡς δικάεται Τιμῇ.—PYTHAG.

*First, in obedience to thy country's rites,
Worship the immortal gods.*

I am always very well pleased with a country Sunday, and think, if keeping holy the seventh day were only a human institution, it would be the best method that could have been thought of for the polishing and civilizing of mankind. It is certain the country people would soon degenerate into a kind of savages and barbarians, were there not such frequent returns of a stated time in which the [10 whole village meet together with their best faces, and in their cleanliest habits, to converse with one another upon indifferent subjects, hear their duties explained to them, and join together in adoration of the Supreme Being. Sunday clears away the rust of the whole week, not only as it refreshes in their minds the notions of religion, but as it puts both the sexes upon appearing in [20 their most agreeable forms, and exerting all such qualities as are apt to give them a figure in the eye of the village. A country fellow distinguishes himself as much in the churchyard, as a citizen does upon the Change, the whole parish-politics being generally discussed in that place either after sermon or before the bell rings.

My friend Sir Roger, being a good [30 churchman, has beautified the inside of his church with several texts of his own choosing. He has likewise given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion table at his own expense. He has often told me, that at his coming to his estate he found his parishioners very irregular; and that in order to make them kneel and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock [40 and a common-prayer book: and at the same time employed an itinerant singing master, who goes about the country for that purpose, to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the Psalms; upon which they now very much value themselves, and indeed outdo most of the country churches that I have ever heard.

As Sir Roger is landlord to the whole congregation, he keeps them in very [50 good order, and will suffer nobody to sleep in it besides himself; for if by chance he has been surprised into a short nap at sermon, upon recovering out of it he stands up and looks about him, and if he sees anybody else nodding, either wakes them himself, or sends his servants to them. Several other of the old knight's particularities break out upon these occasions. Sometimes he will [60 be lengthening out a verse in the singing Psalms, half a minute after the rest of the congregation have done with it; sometimes, when he is pleased with the matter of his devotion, he pronounces "Amen" three or four times to the same prayer; and sometimes stands up when everybody else is upon their knees, to count the congregation, or see if any of his tenants are missing. [70

I was yesterday very much surprised to hear my old friend, in the midst of the service, calling out to one John Matthews to mind what he was about, and not disturb the congregation. This John Matthews, it seems, is remarkable for being an idle fellow, and at that time was kicking his heels for his diversion. This authority of the knight, though exerted in that odd manner which ac- [80 companies him in all circumstances or life, has a very good effect upon the parish, who are not polite enough to see any thing ridiculous in his behavior; besides that the general good sense and worthiness of his character makes his friends observe these little singularities as foils that rather set off than blemish his good qualities.

As soon as the sermon is finished, [90 nobody presumes to stir till Sir Roger is gone out of the church. The knight walks down from his seat in the chancel between a double row of his tenants that stand bowing to him on each side; and every now and then inquires how such a one's wife, or mother, or son, or father do, whom he does not see at church; which is understood as a secret reprimand to the person that is absent. [100

The chaplain has often told me, that upon a catechising day, when Sir Roger has been pleased with a boy that answers well, he has ordered a Bible to be given him next day for his encouragement; and sometimes accompanies it with a flitch of bacon to his mother. Sir Roger has likewise added five pounds a year to the clerk's place; and that he may encourage the young fellows to make themselves [110 perfect in the church-service, has promised, upon the death of the present incumbent, who is very old, to bestow it according to merit.

The fair understanding between Sir Roger and his chaplain, and their mutual concurrence in doing good, is the more remarkable, because the very next village is famous for the differences and contentions that rise between the par- [120 son and the squire, who live in a perpetual state of war. The parson is always preaching at the squire, and the squire to be revenged on the parson never comes to church. The squire has made all his tenants atheists, and tithe-stealers; while the parson instructs them every Sunday in the dignity of his order, and insinuates to them, in almost every sermon, that he is a better man than [130 his patron. In short, matters have come to such an extremity, that the squire has not said his prayers either in public or private this half year; and that the parson threatens him, if he does not mend his manners, to pray for him in the face of the whole congregation.

Feuds of this nature, though too frequent in the country, are very fatal to the ordinary people; who are so used [140 to be dazzled with riches, that they pay as much deference to the understanding of a man of an estate, as of a man of learning; and are very hardly brought to regard any truth, how important soever it may be, that is preached to them, when they know there are several men of five hundred a year who do not believe it.

—ADDISON.

SIR ROGER AT THE ASSIZES

No. 122. Friday, July 20, 1711.

Comes jucundus in via pro vehiculo est.

Publ. Syr. Frag.

An agreeable companion upon the road is as good as a coach.

A man's first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censures of the world. If the last interferes with the former, it ought to be entirely neglected; but otherwise there cannot be a greater satisfaction to an honest mind, than to see those approbations which it gives itself seconded by the applauses of the public. A man is more sure of conduct, when the [10 verdict which he passes upon his own behavior is thus warranted and confirmed by the opinion of all that know him.

My worthy friend Sir Roger is one of those who is not only at peace within himself, but beloved and esteemed by all about him. He receives a suitable tribute for his universal benevolence to mankind, in the returns of affection and goodwill, which are paid him by every one [20 that lives within his neighborhood. I lately met with two or three odd instances of that general respect which is shown to the good old knight. He would needs carry Will Wimble and myself with him to the county assizes. As we were upon the road Will Wimble joined a couple of plain men who rid before us, and conversed with them for some time; during which my friend Sir Roger ac- [30 quainted me with their characters.

"The first of them," says he, "that has a spaniel by his side, is a yeoman of about an hundred pounds a year, an honest man. He is just within the game-

act, and qualified to kill a hare or a pheasant. He knocks down a dinner with his gun twice or thrice a week; and by that means lives much cheaper than those who have not so good an estate [40 as himself. He would be a good neighbor if he did not destroy so many partridges. In short he is a very sensible man; shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury.

"That other that rides along with him is Tom Touchy, a fellow famous for 'taking the law' of everybody. There is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued at a quarter-sessions. [50 The rogue had once the impudence to go to law with the widow. His head is full of costs, damages, and ejectments. He plagued a couple of honest gentlemen so long for a trespass in breaking one of his hedges, till he was forced to sell the ground it enclosed to defray the charges of the prosecution; his father left him fourscore pounds a year; but he has cast and been cast so often, that he is not [60 now worth thirty. I suppose he is going upon the old business of the willow tree."

As Sir Roger was giving me this account of Tom Touchy, Will Wimble and his two companions stopped short till we came up to them. After having paid their respects to Sir Roger, Will told him that Mr. Touchy and he must appeal to him upon a dispute that arose between them. Will it seems had been giving [70 his fellow-traveler an account of his angling one day in such a hole; when Tom Touchy, instead of hearing out his story, told him that Mr. Such-a-one, if he pleased, might "take the law of him" for fishing in that part of the river. My friend Sir Roger heard them both, upon a round trot; and after having paused some time, told them, with the air of a man who would not give his judg- [80 ment rashly, that "much might be said on both sides." They were neither of them dissatisfied with the knight's determination, because neither of them found himself in the wrong by it; upon which we made the best of our way to the assizes.

The court was sat before Sir Roger came; but notwithstanding all the justices had taken their places upon the bench, they made room for the old knight at [90 the head of them; who, for his reputation in the country, took occasion to whisper in the judge's ear, that he was glad his lordship had met with so much good weather in his circuit. I was listening to the proceedings of the court with much attention, and infinitely pleased with that great appearance of solemnity which so properly accompanies such a public administration of our laws; when, after [100 about an hour's sitting, I observed to my great surprise, in the midst of a trial, that my friend Sir Roger was getting up to speak. I was in some pain for him till I found he had acquitted himself of two or three sentences, with a look of much business and great intrepidity.

Upon his first rising the court was hushed, and a general whisper ran among the country people that Sir Roger [110 "was up." The speech he made was so little to the purpose, that I shall not trouble my readers with an account of it; and I believe was not so much designed by the knight himself to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country.

I was highly delighted, when the court rose, to see the gentlemen of the country gathering about my old friend, and [120 striving who should compliment him most; at the same time that the ordinary people gazed upon him at a distance, not a little admiring his courage, that was not afraid to speak to the judge.

In our return home we met with a very odd accident; which I cannot forbear relating, because it shows how desirous all who know Sir Roger are of giving him marks of their esteem. When we [130 were arrived upon the verge of his estate, we stopped at a little inn to rest ourselves and our horses. The man of the house had, it seems, been formerly a servant in the knight's family; and to do honor to his old master, had some time since, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post before the door; so that the knight's head had hung out upon the road about a week before he himself [140 knew anything of the matter. As soon as Sir Roger was acquainted with it, finding that his servant's indiscretion proceeded wholly from affection and goodwill, he only told him that he had made him too high a compliment; and when the fellow seemed to think that could hardly be, added with a more decisive look, that it was too great an honor for any man under a duke; but told him at the [150 same time, that it might be altered with a very few touches, and that he himself would be at the charge of it. Accordingly, they got a painter by the knight's directions to add a pair of whiskers to the face, and by a little aggravation of the features to change it into the Saracen's Head. I should not have known this story, had not the inn-keeper, upon Sir Roger's alighting, told him in my hearing, [160 that his honor's head was brought back last night with the alterations that he had ordered to be made in it. Upon this my friend with his usual cheerfulness related the particulars above-mentioned, and ordered the head to be brought into the room. I could not forbear discovering greater expressions of mirth than ordinary upon the appearance of this monstrous face, under which, notwith- [170 standing it was made to frown and stare in a most extraordinary manner, I could still discover a distant resemblance of my old friend. Sir Roger, upon seeing me laugh, desired me to tell him truly if I thought it possible for people to know him in that disguise. I at first kept my usual silence; but upon the knight's conjuring me to tell him whether it was not still more like himself than a Saracen, [180 I composed my countenance in the best manner I could, and replied "that much might be said on both sides."

These several adventures, with the knight's behavior in them, gave me as pleasant a day as ever I met with in any of my travels.

—ADDISON.

THE VISION OF MIRZA

No. 159. Saturday, September 1, 1711.

—*Omnem, quæ nunc obducta tuenti
Mortales hebetat visus tibi, et humida circum
Caligat, nubem eripiam—*

Virg. Æn. ii. 604.

*The cloud, which, intercepting the clear light, Hangs o'er thy eyes, and blunts thy mortal
sight,
I will remove—*

When I was at Grand Cairo, I picked up several Oriental manuscripts, which I have still by me. Among others I met with one entitled The Visions of Mirza, which I have read over with great pleasure. I intend to give it to the public when I have no other entertainment for them, and shall begin with the first vision, which I have translated word for word as follows: [10

"On the fifth day of the moon, which, according to the custom of my forefathers, I always keep holy, after having washed myself, and offered up my morning devotions, I ascended the high hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life; and passing [20 from one thought to another, 'Surely,' said I, 'man is but a shadow, and life a dream.' Whilst I was thus musing, I cast my eyes towards the summit of a rock that was not far from me, where I discovered one in the habit of a shepherd, with a musical instrument in his hand. As I looked upon him he applied it to his lips, and began to play upon it. The sound of it was exceedingly sweet, [30 and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious, and altogether different from anything I had ever heard. They put me in mind of those heavenly airs that are played to the departed souls of good men upon their first arrival in Paradise, to wear out the impressions of their last agonies, and qualify them for the pleasures of that happy place. My heart melted [40 away in secret raptures.

"I had been often told that the rock before me was the haunt of a Genius; and that several had been entertained with music who had passed by it, but never heard that the musician had before made himself visible. When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs which he played to taste the pleasures of his conversation, as I looked upon [50 him like one astonished, he beckoned to me, and by the waving of his hand directed me to approach the place where he sat. I drew near with that reverence which is due to a superior nature; and as my heart was entirely subdued by the captivating strains I had heard, I fell down at his feet and wept. The Genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized [60 him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all the fears and apprehensions with which I approached him. He lifted me from the ground, and taking me by the hand, 'Mirza,' said he, 'I have heard thee in thy soliloquies; follow me.'

"He then led me to the highest pinnacle of the rock, and placing me on the top of it, 'Cast thy eyes eastward,' said he, 'and tell me what thou seest.' [70 'I see,' said I, 'a huge valley, and a prodigious tide of water rolling through it.' 'The valley that thou seest,' said he, 'is the Vale of Misery, and the tide of water that thou seest is part of the great Tide of Eternity.' 'What is the reason,' said I, 'that the tide I see rises out of a thick mist at one end, and again loses itself in a thick mist at the other?' 'What thou seest,' said he, 'is that portion of [80 eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Examine now,' said he, 'this sea that is bounded with darkness at both ends, and tell me what thou discoverest in it.' 'I see a bridge,' said I, 'standing in the midst of the tide.' 'The bridge thou seest,' said he, 'is Human Life: consider it attentively.' Upon a more [90 leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threescore and ten entire arches, with several broken arches, which added to those that were entire, made up the number about a hundred. As I was counting the arches, the Genius told me that this bridge consisted at first of a thousand arches; but that a great flood swept away the rest, and left the bridge in the ruinous condition I now beheld it. 'But tell [100 me farther,' said he, 'what thou discoverest on it.' 'I see multitudes of people passing over it,' said I, 'and a black cloud hanging on each end of it.' As I looked more attentively, I saw several of the passengers dropping through the bridge into the great tide that flowed underneath it; and upon farther examination, perceived there were innumerable trap-doors that lay concealed in the [110 bridge, which the passengers no sooner trod upon, but they fell through them into the tide, and immediately disappeared. These hidden pit-falls were set very thick at the entrance of the bridge, so that throngs of people no sooner broke through the cloud, but many of them fell into them. They grew thinner towards the middle, but multiplied and lay closer together towards the end of the arches [120 that were entire.

"There were indeed some persons, but their number was very small, that continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through one after another, being quite tired and spent with so long a walk.

"I passed some time in the contemplation of this wonderful structure, and the great variety of objects which it [130 presented. My heart was filled with a deep melancholy to see several dropping unexpectedly in the midst of mirth and jollity, and catching at everything that stood by them to save themselves. Some were looking up towards the heavens in a thoughtful posture, and in the midst of a speculation stumbled and fell out of sight. Multitudes were very busy in the pursuit of bubbles that glittered in [140 their eyes and danced before them; but often when they thought themselves within the reach of them, their footing failed and down they sunk. In this confusion of objects, I observed some with scymetars in their hands, who ran to and fro upon the bridge, thrusting several persons on trap-doors which did not seem to lie in their way, and which they might have escaped had they not been [150 thus forced upon them.

"The Genius seeing me indulge myself on this melancholy prospect, told me I had dwelt long enough upon it. 'Take thine eyes off the bridge,' said he, 'and tell me if thou yet seest anything thou dost not comprehend.' Upon looking up,

'what mean,' said I, 'those great flights of birds that are perpetually hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it [160 from time to time? I see vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and among many other feathered creatures several little winged boys, that perch in great numbers upon the middle arches.' 'These,' said the Genius, 'are Envy, Avarice, Superstition, Despair, Love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life.'

"I here fetched a deep sigh. 'Alas,' said I, 'Man was made in vain! how [170 is he given away to misery and mortality! tortured in life, and swallowed up in death!' The Genius being moved with compassion towards me, bid me quit so uncomfortable a prospect. 'Look no more,' said he, 'on man in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity; but cast thine eye on that thick mist into which the tide bears the several generations of mortals that fall into [180 it.' I directed my sight as I was ordered, and (whether or no the good Genius strengthened it with any supernatural force, or dissipated part of the mist that was before too thick for the eye to penetrate), I saw the valley opening at the farther end, and spreading forth into an immense ocean, that had a huge rock of adamant running through the midst of it, and dividing it into two equal [190 parts. The clouds still rested on one half of it, insomuch that I could discover nothing in it; but the other appeared to me a vast ocean planted with innumerable islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them. I could see persons dressed in glorious habits with garlands upon their heads, passing among the trees, [200 lying down by the sides of fountains, or resting on beds of flowers; and could hear a confused harmony of singing birds, falling waters, human voices, and musical instruments. Gladness grew in me upon the discovery of so delightful a scene. I wished for the wings of an eagle, that I might fly away to those happy seats; but the Genius told me there was no passage to them, except through the [210 gates of death that I saw opening every moment upon the bridge. 'The islands,' said he, 'that lie so fresh and green before thee, and with which the whole face of the ocean appears spotted as far as thou canst see, are more in number than the sands on the sea-shore, there are myriads of islands behind those which thou here discoverest, reaching farther than thine eye, or even thine imagination can [220 extend itself. These are the mansions of good men after death, who, according to the degree and kinds of virtue in which they excelled, are distributed among these several islands, which abound with pleasures of different kinds and degrees, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those who are settled in them; every island is a paradise accommodated to its respective inhabitants. Are not [230 these, O Mirza, habitations worth contending for? Does life appear miserable that gives thee opportunities of earning such a reward? Is death to be feared that will convey thee to so happy an existence? Think not man was made in vain, who has such an eternity reserved for him.' I gazed with inexpressible pleasure on these happy islands. At length, said I, 'Show me now, I be- [240 seech thee, the secrets that lie hid under those dark clouds which cover the ocean on the other side of the rock of adamant.' The Genius making me no answer, I turned me about to address myself to him a second time, but I found that he had left me; I then turned again to the vision which I had been so long contemplating; but instead of the rolling tide, the arched bridge, and the happy [250 islands, I saw nothing but the long hollow valley of Bagdat, with oxen, sheep, and camels grazing upon the sides of it."

—ADDISON.

A COQUETTE'S HEART

No. 281. Tuesday, January 22, 1712.

Pectoribus inhians spirantia consulit exta.

Virg. Æn. iv. 64.

Anxious the recking entrails he consults.

Having already given an account of the dissection of a beau's head, with the several discoveries made on that occasion, I shall here, according to my promise, enter upon the dissection of a coquette's heart, and communicate to the public such particularities as we observed in that curious piece of anatomy.

I should perhaps have waived this undertaking, had not I been put in [10 mind of my promise by several of my unknown correspondents, who are very importunate with me to make an example of the coquette, as I have already done of the beau. It is therefore in compliance with the request of friends, that I have looked over the minutes of my former dream, in order to give the public an exact relation of it, which I shall enter upon without farther [20 preface.

Our operator, before he engaged in this visionary dissection, told us that there was nothing in his art more difficult than to lay open the heart of a coquette, by reason of the many labyrinths and recesses which are to be found in it, and which do not appear in the heart of any other animal.

He desired us first of all to observe [30 the pericardium, or outward case of the heart, which we did very attentively; and by the help of our glasses discerned in it millions of little scars, which seemed to have been occasioned by the points of innumerable darts and arrows, that from time to time had glanced upon the outward coat; though we could not discover the smallest orifice by which any of them had entered and pierced the inward [40 substance,

Every smatterer in anatomy knows that this pericardium, or case of the heart, contains in it a thin reddish liquor, supposed to be bred from the vapors which exhale out of the heart, and being stopped here, are condensed into this watery substance. Upon examining this liquor, we found that it had in it all the qualities of that spirit which is made use of in [50 the thermometer to show the change of weather.

Nor must I here omit an experiment one of the company assured us he himself had made with this liquor, which he found in great quantity about the heart of a coquette whom he had formerly dissected. He affirmed to us, that he had actually inclosed it in a small tube made after the manner of a weather-glass; [60 but that, instead of acquainting him with the variations of the atmosphere, it showed him the qualities of those persons who entered the room where it stood. He affirmed also, that it rose at the approach of a plume of feathers, an embroidered coat, or a pair of fringed gloves; and that it fell as soon as an ill-shaped periwig, a clumsy pair of shoes, or an unfashionable coat came into his house. Nay, he [70 proceeded so far as to assure us, that upon his laughing aloud when he stood by it, the liquor mounted very sensibly, and immediately sunk again upon his looking serious. In short, he told us that he knew very well by this invention, whenever he had a man of sense or a coxcomb in his room.

Having cleared away the pericardium, or the case, and liquor above-men- [80 tioned, we came to the heart itself. The outward surface of it was extremely slippery, and the mucro, or point, so very cold withal, that upon endeavoring to take hold of it, it glided through the fingers like a smooth piece of ice.

The fibres were turned and twisted in a more intricate and perplexed manner than they are usually found in other hearts; insomuch that the whole heart [90 was wound up together like a Gordian knot, and must have had very irregular and unequal motions, while it was employed in its vital function.

One thing we thought very observable, namely, that upon examining all the vessels which came into it, or issued out of it, we could not discover any communication that it had with the tongue.

We could not but take notice like- [100 wise that several of those little nerves in the heart which are affected by the sentiments of love, hatred, and other passions, did not descend to this before us from the brain, but from the muscles which lie about the eye.

Upon weighing the heart in my hand, I found it to be extremely light, and consequently very hollow, which I did not wonder at, when, upon looking [110

into the inside of it, I saw multitudes of cells and cavities running one within another, as our historians describe the apartments of Rosamond's bower. Several of these little hollows were stuffed with innumerable sorts of trifles, which I shall forbear giving any particular account of, and shall, therefore, only take notice of what lay first and uppermost, which, upon our unfolding it, and [120] applying our microscopes to it, appeared to be a flame-colored hood.

We are informed that the lady of this heart, when living, received the addresses of several who made love to her, and did not only give each of them encouragement, but made everyone she conversed with believe that she regarded him with an eye of kindness; for which reason we expected to have seen the impression of [130] multitudes of faces among the several plaits and foldings of the heart; but to our great surprise not a single print of this nature discovered itself till we came into the very core and centre of it. We there observed a little figure, which, upon applying our glasses to it, appeared dressed in a very fantastic manner. The more I looked upon it, the more I thought I had seen the face before, but [140] could not possibly recollect either the place or time; when at length one of the company, who had examined this figure more nicely than the rest, showed us plainly by the make of its face, and the several turns of its features, that the little idol which was thus lodged in the very middle of the heart was the deceased beau, whose head I gave some account of in my last Tuesday's paper. [150]

As soon as we had finished our dissection, we resolved to make an experiment of the heart, not being able to determine among ourselves the nature of its substance, which differed in so many particulars from that in the heart of other females. Accordingly, we laid it into a pan of burning coals, when we observed in it a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in [160] the midst of fire and flame, without being consumed or so much as singed.

As we were admiring this strange phenomenon, and standing round the heart in a circle, it gave a most prodigious sigh, or rather crack, and dispersed all at once in smoke and vapor. This imaginary noise, which methought was louder than the burst of a cannon, produced such a violent shake in my brain, [170] that it dissipated the fumes of sleep, and left me in an instant broad awake.

—ADDISON.

ALEXANDER POPE (1688–1744)

From WINDSOR FOREST

The groves of Eden, vanished now so long,
Live in description, and look green in song:
These, were my breast inspired with equal flame,
Like them in beauty, should be like in fame. 10
Here hills and vales, the woodland and the plain,
Here earth and water seem to strive again;
Not chaos-like together crushed and bruised,
But, as the world, harmoniously confused:
Where order in variety we see, 15
And where, though all things differ, all agree.
Here waving groves a chequered scene display,
And part admit, and part exclude the day;
As some coy nymph her lover's warm address
Nor quite indulges, nor can quite repress. 20
There, interspersed in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades.
Here in full light the russet plains extend:
There wrapt in clouds the bluish hills ascend.
Even the wild heath displays her purple dyes, 25
And 'midst the desert fruitful fields arise,
That crowned with tufted trees and springing corn,
Like verdant isles, the sable waste adorn.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree, 30

While by our oaks the precious loads are
borne,
And realms commanded which those trees
adorn.
Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his towering height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here, ³⁵
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear.
See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona crowned,
Here blushing Flora paints th' enamelled
ground,
Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect
stand,
And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand, ⁴⁰
Rich industry sits smiling on the plains,
And peace and plenty tell a Stuart reigns.

* * * * *

See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant
wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound, Flutters in blood, and panting beats the
ground.
Ah! what avail his glossy, varying dyes, ¹¹⁵
His purple crest, and scarlet-circled eyes,
The vivid green his shining plumes un-
fold,
His painted wings, and breast that flames
with gold?
Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds
the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny. ¹²⁰
To plains with well-breathed beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare (Beasts, urged by us, their fellow beasts
pursue,
And learn of man each other to undo).
With slaughtering guns th' unwearied
fowler roves, ¹²⁵
When frosts have whitened all the naked
groves,
Where doves in flocks the leafless trees
o'ershade,
And lonely woodcocks haunt the watery glade.

He lifts the tube, and levels with his eye;
Straight a short thunder breaks the frozen sky: ¹³⁰
Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clamorous lapwings feel the leaden
death;
Oft, as the mounting larks their notes
prepare,
They fall, and leave their little lives in
air.
In genial spring, beneath the quivering shade, ¹³⁵
Where cooling vapors breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand:
With looks unmoved, he hopes the scaly
breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending
reed. ¹⁴⁰
Our plenteous streams a various race supply,
The bright-eyed perch with fins of Tyrian
dye,
The silver eel, in shining volumes rolled,
The yellow carp, in scales bedropped with
gold,
Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains, ¹⁴⁵
And pikes, the tyrants of the watery plains.
Now Cancer glows with Phoebus' fiery car:
The youth rush eager to the sylvan war,
Swarm o'er the lawns, the forest walks surround,
Rouse the fleet hart, and cheer the opening hound. ¹⁵⁰
Th' impatient courser pants in every
vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant
plain:
Hills, vales, and floods appear already crossed,
And ere he starts, a thousand steps are
lost.
See the bold youth strain up the threatening steep, ¹⁵⁵
Rush through the thickets, down the valleys sweep,
Hang o'er their coursers' heads with eager
speed,
And earth rolls back beneath the flying steed.

AN ESSAY ON CRITICISM

From PART I

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill;
But, of the two, less dangerous is th'
offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.

Some few in that, but numbers err in this; 5
Ten censure wrong for one who writes
amiss;

A fool might once himself alone expose;
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches,
none

Go just alike, yet each believes his own. 10
In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic's share;
Both must alike from Heaven derive their
light,

These born to judge, as well as those to write.

Let such teach others who themselves
excel, 15

And censure freely who have written well.
Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true,
But are not critics to their judgment too?

* * * * *

First follow Nature, and your judgment
frame

By her just standard, which is still the
same;

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright, 70
One clear, unchanged, and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of Art.

Art from that fund each just supply provides,

Works without show, and without pomp presides. 75

In some fair body thus th' informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigor fills the whole,

Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains;

Itself unseen, but in th' effects, remains.
Some, to whom Heaven in wit has been profuse, 80

Want as much more, to turn it to its use;

For wit and judgment often are at strife,
Though meant each other's aid, like man and wife.

'Tis more to guide than spur the Muse's
steed; 84

Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courser, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

Those rules of old, discovered, not devised,

Are Nature still, but Nature methodized;
Nature, like liberty, is but restrained 90
By the same laws which first herself ordained.

* * * * *

You, then, whose judgment the right
course would steer,

Know well each ancient's proper character;

His fable,¹ subject, scope in every page; 120
Religion, country, genius of his age:

Without all these at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise.

Be Homer's works your study and delight,
Read them by day, and meditate by night;

Thence form your judgment, thence your maxims bring, 126

And trace the Muses upward to their
spring.

Still with itself compared, his text peruse;
And let your comment be the Mantuan
Muse.

When first young Maro in his boundless
mind 130

A work t' outlast immortal Rome designed.

Perhaps he seemed above the critic's
law,

And but from nature's fountains scorned
to draw:

But when t' examine every part he came,
Nature and Homer were, he found, the
same. 135

Convinced, amazed, he checks the bold
design;

And rules as strict his labored work confine,

As if the Stagirite o'erlooked each line.

Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem;

To copy nature is to copy them. 140

¹ plot.

From PART II

A little learning is a dangerous thing; 15
 Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian
 spring:
 There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
 And drinking largely sobers us again.
 Fired at first sight with what the Muse imparts,
 In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts, 20
 While from the bounded level of our mind
 Short views we take, nor see the lengths
 behind;
 But, more advanced, behold with strange surprise
 New distant scenes of endless science rise!
 So pleased at first the towering Alps we
 try, 25
 Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread
 the sky,
 Th' eternal snows appear already past,
 And the first clouds and mountains seem
 the last;
 But, those attained, we tremble to survey
 The growing labors of the lengthened way,
 Th' increasing prospects tire our wandering eyes, 31
 Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise!

* * * * *

Some to conceit alone their taste con-
 fine,
 And glittering thoughts struck out at every line; 90
 Pleased with a work where nothing's just or fit;
 One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.
 Poets like painters, thus unskilled to trace
 The naked nature and the living grace,
 With gold and jewels cover every part, 95
 And hide with ornaments their want of
 art.
 True wit is nature to advantage dressed,
 What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed;
 Something whose truth convinced at sight
 we find,
 That gives us back the image of our mind.
 As shades more sweetly recommend the
 light, 101
 So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit.

For works may have more wit than does
 'em good,
 As bodies perish through excess of blood.
 Others for language all their care express, 105
 And value books, as women men, for dress:
 Their praise is still—the style is excellent:
 The sense they humbly take upon content.
 Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,
 Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely
 found. 110
 False eloquence, like the prismatic glass,
 Its gaudy colors spreads on every place;
 The face of nature we no more survey,
 All glares alike, without distinction gay:
 But true expression, like th' unchanging
 sun, 115
 Clears and improves whate'er it shines
 upon;
 It gilds all objects, but it alters none.
 Expression is the dress of thought, and
 still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
 A vile conceit in pompous words expressed,
 Is like a clown in regal purple dressed: 121
 For different styles with different subjects sort,¹
 As several garbs with country, town, and court.
 Some by old words to fame have made pretence,
 Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their
 sense; 125
 Such labored nothings, in so strange a
 style,
 Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.
 Unlucky as Fungoso in the play,
 These sparks with awkward vanity dis-
 play
 What the fine gentleman wore yesterday;
 And but so mimic ancient wits at best, 131
 As apes our grandsires, in their doublets dressed.
 In words, as fashions, the same rule will
 hold;
 Alike fantastic if too new or old:
 Be not the first by whom the new are tried, 135
 Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

¹ accord.

But most by numbers judge a poet's
 song;
 And smooth or rough, with them, is right
 or wrong.
 In the bright Muse though thousand charms conspire,
 Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire;
 Who haunt Parnassus but to please their
 ear, 141
 Not mend their minds; as some to church
 repair,
 Not for the doctrine, but the music there.
 These equal syllables alone require,
 Though oft the ear the open vowels
 tire; 145
 While expletives their feeble aid do join,
 And ten low words oft creep in one dull
 line:
 While they ring round the same unvaried chimes,
 With sure returns of still expected rhymes: Where'er you find "the cooling western breeze," 150
 In the next line, it "whispers through the trees;"
 If crystal streams "with pleasing murmurs creep,"
 The reader's threatened (not in vain) with
 "sleep:"
 Then, at the last and only couplet fraught With some unmeaning thing they call a
 thought, 155
 A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
 That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.
 Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes,
 and know
 What's roundly smooth or languishingly
 slow;
 And praise the easy vigor of a line, 160
 Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join.
 True ease in writing comes from art, not
 chance,
 As those move easiest who have learned to dance.
 'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence:
 The sound must seem an echo to the
 sense. 165
 Soft is the strain when Zephyr gently
 blows,
 And the smooth stream in smoother numbers flows;

But when loud surges lash the sounding
 shore,
 The hoarse, rough verse should like the torrent roar.
 When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw, 170
 The line, too, labors, and the words move
 slow.
 Not so when swift Camilla scours the
 plain,
 Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims
 along the main.
 Hear how Timotheus' varied lays surprise,
 And bid alternate passions fall and rise! 175
 While, at each change, the son of Libyan
 Jove
 Now burns with glory, and then melts with
 love;
 Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury
 glow,
 Now sighs steal out, and tears begin to
 flow:
 Persians and Greeks like turns of nature
 found, 180
 And the world's victor stood subdued by
 sound!
 The power of music all our hearts allow,
 And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now.
 Avoid extremes; and shun the fault of
 such
 Who still are pleased too little or too much.
 At every trifle scorn to take offence; 186
 That always shows great pride, or little
 sense;
 Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the
 best,
 Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest.
 Yet let not each gay turn thy rapture
 move; 190
 For fools admire, but men of sense approve:
 As things seem large which we through mists descry,
 Dullness is ever apt to magnify.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK

AN HEROIC-COMICAL POEM

CANTO I

What dire offence from amorous causes
 springs,
 What mighty contests rise from trivial
 things,

I sing.—This verse to Caryl, Muse! is due;
This, e'en Belinda may vouchsafe to view.

Slight is the subject, but not so the praise,⁵
If she inspire, and he approve my lays.

Say what strange motive, Goddess!
could compel

A well-bred lord t' assault a gentle belle?
Oh say what stranger cause, yet unex-
plored,

Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? ¹⁰
In tasks so bold, can little men engage,
And in soft bosoms dwells such mighty
rage?

Sol through white curtains shot a timorous ray,
And oped those eyes that must eclipse the
day.

Now lap-dogs give themselves the rousing shake, ¹⁵

And sleepless lovers, just at twelve, awake.
Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knocked
the ground,

And the pressed watch returned a silver
sound.

Belinda still her downy pillow pressed,
Her guardian sylph prolonged the balmy rest. ²⁰

'Twas he had summoned to her silent bed
The morning-dream that hovered o'er her
head:

A youth more glittering than a birth-night
beau,

(That ev'n in slumber caused her cheek to glow)

Seemed to her ear his winning lips to lay,²⁵
And thus in whispers said, or seemed to
say:

"Fairest of mortals, thou distinguished
care

Of thousand bright inhabitants of air!
If e'er one vision touched thy infant
thought,

Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught— ³⁰

Of airy elves by moonlight shadows seen,
The silver token, and the circled green,
Or virgins visited by angel powers,
With golden crowns and wreaths of heavenly flowers,—

Hear and believe! thy own importance know, ³⁵

Nor bound thy narrow views to things be-
low.

Some secret truths, from learned pride concealed,

To maids alone and children are revealed.
What though no credit doubting wits may give?

The fair and innocent shall still believe. ⁴⁰ Know, then, unnumbered spirits round thee fly,

The light militia of the lower sky.

These, though unseen, are ever on the
wing,

Hang o'er the box, and hover round the Ring.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air, ⁴⁵

And view with scorn two pages and a chair.

As now your own, our beings were of
old,

And once enclosed in woman's beauteous
mould;

Thence, by a soft transition, we repair
From earthly vehicles to these of air. ⁵⁰

Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,

That all her vanities at once are dead;

Succeeding vanities she still regards,

And though she plays no more, o'erlooks
the cards.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive, ⁵⁵
And love of ombre, after death survive.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements their souls retire:

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away, ⁶¹
And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea.

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,

In search of mischief still on earth to roam.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air. ⁶⁶

"Know further yet: whoever fair and chaste

Rejects mankind, is by some sylph embraced;

For spirits, freed from mortal laws, with
ease

Assume what sexes and what shapes they please. ⁷⁰

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls, and midnight masquerades,

Safe from the treacherous friend, the daring spark,
 The glance by day, the whisper in the
 dark,
 When kind occasion prompts their warm
 desires, 75
 When music softens, and when dancing
 fires?
 'Tis but their sylph, the wise celestials
 know,
 Though honor is the word with men below.
 Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face,
 For life predestined to the gnomes' embrace. 80
 These swell their prospects and exalt their
 pride,
 When offers are disdained, and love
 denied:
 Then gay ideas crowd the vacant brain,
 While peers, and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
 And garters, stars, and coronets appear, 85
 And in soft sounds 'Your Grace' salutes their ear.
 'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
 Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
 Teach infant cheeks a bidden blush to
 know,
 And little hearts to tutter at a beau. 90
 "Oft when the world imagine women
 stray,
 The sylphs through mystic mazes guide
 their way;
 Through all the giddy circle they pursue,
 And old impertinence expel by new.
 What tender maid but must a victim
 fall 95
 To one man's treat, but for another's ball?
 When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
 If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
 With varying vanities, from every part,
 They shift the moving toyshop of their
 heart, 100
 Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,
 Beaux banish beaux, and coaches coaches drive.
 This erring mortals levity may call;
 Oh, blind to truth! the sylphs contrive it
 all.

"Of these am I, who thy protection
 claim, 105
 A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name.
 Late, as I ranged the crystal wilds of air,
 In the clear mirror of thy ruling star
 I saw, alas! some dread event impend,
 Ere to the main¹ this morning sun descend,
 But Heaven reveals not what, or how, or where. 111
 Warned by the sylph, O pious maid, beware!
 This to disclose is all thy guardian can:
 Beware of all, but most beware of man!"
 He said; when Shock, who thought she slept too long, 115 Leaped up, and waked his mistress with his tongue.
 'Twas then, Belinda, if report say true,
 Thy eyes first opened on a billet-doux;
 Wounds, charms, and ardors were no sooner read,
 But all the vision vanished from thy head.
 And now, unveiled, the toilet stands displayed, 121
 Each silver vase in mystic order laid.
 First, robed in white, the nymph intent
 adores,
 With head uncovered, the cosmetic powers.
 A heavenly image in the glass appears, 125
 To that she bends, to that her eyes she rears.
 Th' inferior priestess, at her altar's side,
 Trembling begins the sacred rites of Pride.
 Unnumbered treasures ope at once, and
 here
 The various offerings of the world appear;
 From each she nicely culls with curious toil, 131
 And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil.
 This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
 And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.
 The tortoise here and elephant unite, 135 Transformed to combs, the speckled, and the white.
 Here files of pins extend their shining rows,
 Puffs, powders, patches, bibles, billetsdoux.
 Now awful beauty puts on all its arms;
 The fair each moment rises in her charms,
 Repairs her smiles, awakens every grace,
 And calls forth all the wonders of her
 face; 142

¹ the sea.

Sees by degrees a purer blush arise,
 And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.
 The busy sylphs surround their darling
 care, 14.5
 These set the head, and those divide the
 hair,
 Some fold the sleeve, whilst others plait
 the gown;
 And Betty's praised for labors not her own.

CANTO II

Not with more glories, in th' ethereal
 plain,
 The sun first rises o'er the purpled main,
 Than, issuing forth, the rival of his beams
 Launched on the bosom of the silver Thames.
 Fair nymphs and well-dressed youths around her shone, 5
 But every eye was fixed on her alone.
 On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore
 Which Jews might kiss, and infidels adore.
 Her lively looks a sprightly mind disclose,
 Quick as her eyes, and as unfixed as those;
 Favors to none, to all she smiles extends; 11
 Oft she rejects, but never once offends.
 Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers
 strike,
 And, like the sun, they shine on all alike.
 Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of
 pride, 15
 Might hide her faults, if belles had faults
 to hide;
 If to her share some female errors fall,
 Look on her face, and you'll forget 'em all.
 This nymph, to the destruction of man-
 kind,
 Nourished two locks, which graceful hung
 behind 20
 In equal curls, and well conspired to deck
 With shining ringlets the smooth ivory neck.
 Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
 And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.
 With hairy springes we the birds betray; 25
 Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey;
 Fair tresses man's imperial race ensnare,
 And beauty draws us with a single hair.
 Th' adventurous baron the bright locks admired;
 He saw, he wished, and to the prize aspired.

Resolved to win, he meditates the way, 31
 By force to ravish, or by fraud betray;
 For when success a lover's toil attends,
 Few ask if fraud or force attained his ends.
 For this, ere Phœbus rose, he had im-
 plored 35
 Propitious. Heaven, and every Power
 adored,
 But chiefly Love; to Love an altar built,
 Of twelve vast French romances, neatly gilt.
 There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
 And all the trophies of his former loves; 40
 With tender billets-doux he lights the pyre,
 And breathes three amorous sighs to raise the fire.
 Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent
 eyes
 Soon to obtain, and long possess the prize.
 The Powers gave ear, and granted half his prayer; 45
 The rest the winds dispersed in empty air.
 But now secure the painted vessel glides,
 The sunbeams trembling on the floating tides;
 While melting music steals upon the sky,
 And softened sounds along the waters die;
 Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently
 play, 51
 Belinda smiled, and all the world was gay.
 All but the sylph—with careful thoughts
 oppressed,
 Th' impending woe sat heavy on his
 breast.
 He summons straight his denizens of air; 55
 The lucid squadrons round the sails repair;¹
 Soft o'er the shrouds aerial whispers
 breathe,
 That seemed but zephyrs to the train
 beneath.
 Some to the sun their insect-wings unfold, Waft on the breeze, or sink in clouds of
 gold; 60
 Transparent forms, too fine for mortal
 sight,
 Their fluid bodies half dissolved in light.
 Loose to the wind their airy garments flew,
 Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew,
 Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies, 65
 Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes,

¹ gather.

While every beam new transient colors
flings,
Colors that change whene'er they wave their wings.
Amid the circle, on the gilded mast,
Superior by the head, was Ariel placed; 70
His purple pinions opening to the sun,
He raised his azure wand, and thus begun:
"Ye sylphs and sylphids, to your chief give ear!
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons,
hear!
Ye know the spheres, and various tasks assigned 75
By laws eternal to th' aërial kind.
Some in the fields of purest æther play,
And bask and whiten in the blaze of day.
Some guide the course of wandering orbs
on high,
Or roll the planets through the boundless
sky. 80
Some, less refined, beneath the moon's pale
light Pursue the stars that shoot athwart the
night,
Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow,
Or brew fierce tempests on the wintry
main, 85
Or o'er the glebe distil the kindly rain.
Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Watch all their ways, and all their actions
guide:
Of these the chief the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British
throne. 90
"Our humbler province is to tend the
fair,
Not a less pleasing, though less glorious
care;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprisoned essences exhale;
To draw fresh colors from the vernal
flowers; 95
To steal from rainbows, ere they drop in showers,
A brighter wash; to curl their waving
hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs;
Nay oft, in dreams, invention we bestow,
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow. 100
"This day, black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er deserved a watchful spirit's care;

Some dire disaster, or by force, or sleight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapped in night.
Whether the nymph shall break Diana's
law, 105
Or some frail china jar receive a flaw;
Or stain her honor, or her new brocade;
Forget her prayers, or miss a masquerade;
Or lose her heart, or necklace, at a ball;
Or whether Heaven has doomed that Shock must fall. 110
Haste, then, ye spirits! to your charge
repair:
The fluttering fan be Zephyretta's care;
The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine;
Do thou, Crispissa, tend her favorite lock;
Ariel himself shall be the guard of Shock.
To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note, 117
We trust th' important charge, the petticoat:
Oft have we known that seven-fold fence
to fail,
Though stiff with hoops, and armed with ribs of whale; 120
Form a strong line about the silver bound,
And guard the wide circumference around.
"Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins, 125
Be stopped in vials, or transfix'd with pins;
Or plunged in lakes of bitter washes lie,
Or wedged whole ages in a bodkin's eye;
Gums and pomatums shall his flight re-
strain,
While, clogged, he beats his silken wings
in vain; 130
Or alum styptics with contracting power
Shrink his thin essence like a rivelled
flower;
Or, as Ixion fixed, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill,
In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below!"
He spoke; the spirits from the sails descend; 137
Some, orb in orb, around the nymph extend;
Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair;
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear;
With beating hearts the dire event they wait, 141
Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate.

CANTO III

Close by those meads, forever crowned with flowers,

Where Thames with pride surveys his rising towers,

There stands a structure of majestic frame,
Which from the neighboring Hampton takes its name.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall fore-doom

Of foreign tyrants and of nymphs at home;
Here thou, great Anna! whom three realms
obey,

Dost sometimes counsel take—and sometimes tea.

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort,

To taste awhile the pleasures of a court; 10
In various talk th' instructive hours they
passed,

Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last;
One speaks the glory of the British Queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen;

A third interprets motions, looks, and
eyes; 15

At every word a reputation dies.

Snuff, or the fan, supply each pause of chat,

With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.
Meanwhile, declining from the noon of
day,

The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray;
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine; 22

The merchant from th' Exchange returns
in peace,

And the long labors of the toilet cease.

Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
Burns to encounter two adventurous
knights, 26

At ombre singly to decide their doom;
And swells her breast with conquests yet to come.

Straight the three bands prepare in arms
to join,

Each band the number of the sacred nine.
Soon as she spreads her hand, th' aerial guard 31

Descend, and sit on each important card:
First, Ariel perched upon a Matadore,

Then each, according to the rank they bore;

For sylphs, yet mindful of their ancient
race, 35

Are, as when women, wondrous fond of
place.

Behold four kings in majesty revered,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard;
And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flower,

The expressive emblem of their softer
power; 40

Four knaves, in garbs succinct, a trusty
band,

Caps on their heads, and halberts in their
hand;

And parti-colored troops, a shining train,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain.

The skilful nymph reviews her force with care: 45

"Let spades be trumps!" she said, and trumps they were.

Now moved to war her sable Matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
Spadillio first, unconquerable lord!

Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board. 50

As many more Manillio forced to yield,
And marched a victor from the verdant
field.

Him Basto followed, but, his fate more hard,

Gained but one trump and one plebeian
card.

With his broad sabre next, a chief in years,
The hoary majesty of spades appears, 56
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight revealed;
The rest, his many-colored robe concealed.

The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,

Proves the just victim of his royal rage. 60
E'en mighty Pam, that kings and queens o'erthrew,

And mowed down armies in the fights of Loo,

Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguished by the victor spade.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field. 66

His warlike Amazon her host invades,
Th' imperial consort of the crown of spades;
The club's black tyrant first her victim
died,

Spite of his haughty mien, and barbarous
pride. 70

What boots the regal circle on his head,
His giant limbs, in state unwieldy spread;
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe?

The baron now his diamonds pours apace; 75
Th' embroidered king who shows but half
his face,

And his refulgent queen, with powers combined,

Of broken troops an easy conquest find.
Clubs, diamonds, hearts, in wild disorder
seen,

With throngs promiscuous strew the level
green. 80

Thus when dispersed a routed army runs,
Of Asia's troops, and Afric's sable sons,
With like confusion different nations fly,
Of various habit, and of various dye,
The pierced battalions disunited fall, 85
In heaps on heaps; one fate o'erwhelms them all.

The knave of diamonds tries his wily
arts,
And wins (oh shameful chance!) the queen of hearts.

At this the blood the virgin's cheek forsook,

A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look; 90
She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill,

Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille.

And now (as oft in some distempered
state)

On one nice trick depends the general fate.
An ace of hearts steps forth; the king un-
seen 95

Lurked in her hand, and mourned his captive queen:

He springs to vengeance with an eager
pace,

And falls like thunder on the prostrate ace.
The nymph exulting fills with shouts the
sky;

The walls, the woods, and long canals
reply. 100

Oh thoughtless mortals! ever blind to
fate,

Too soon dejected, and too soon elate.

Sudden, these honors shall be snatched
away,

And cursed forever this victorious day.

For lo! the board with cups and spoons is crowned, 105

The berries crackle, and the mill turns
round;

On shining altars of Japan they raise
The silver lamp; the fiery spirits blaze:
From silver spouts the grateful liquors
glide,

While China's earth receives the smoking
tide. 110

At once they gratify their scent and taste,
And frequent cups prolong the rich repast.
Straight hover round the fair her airy
band;

Some, as she sipped, the fuming liquor
fanned,

Some o'er her lap their careful plumes displayed, 115

Trembling, and conscious of the rich brocade.

Coffee (which makes the politician wise,
And see through all things with his halfshut eyes)

Sent up in vapors to the baron's brain
New stratagems the radiant lock to gain.
Ah, cease, rash youth! desist ere 'tis too
late, 121

Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's
fate!

Changed to a bird, and sent to flit in air,
She dearly pays for Nisus' injured hair!

But when to mischief mortals bend their
will, 125

How soon they find fit instruments of ill!
Just then Clarissa drew with tempting
grace

A two-edged weapon from her shining
case:

So ladies in romance assist their knight, Present the spear, and arm him for the
fight. 130

He takes the gift with reverence, and extends

The little engine on his fingers' ends;
This just behind Belinda's neck he spread,
As o'er the fragrant steams she bends her
head.

Swift to the lock a thousand sprites repair,
A thousand wings, by turns, blow back
the hair; 136

And thrice they twitched the diamond in her ear;

Thrice she looked back, and thrice the foe drew near.

Just in that instant, anxious Ariel sought
The close recesses of the virgin's thought;
As on the nosegay in her breast reclined, 141
He watched th' ideas rising in her mind,
Sudden he viewed, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart.

Amazed, confused, he found his power expired, 145

Resigned to fate, and with a sigh retired.

The peer now spreads the glittering forfex wide,

T' inclose the lock; now joins it, to divide.
E'en then, before the fatal engine closed,
A wretched sylph too fondly interposed; 150 Fate urged the shears, and cut the sylph in twain

(But airy substance soon unites again).

The meeting points the sacred hair dis-sever

From the fair head, for ever, and for ever!
Then flashed the living lightning from her eyes, 155

And screams of horror rend th' affrighted
skies.

Not louder shrieks to pitying Heaven are
cast,

When husbands, or when lap-dogs breathe
their last;

Or when rich China vessels, fallen from
high,

In glittering dust and painted fragments
lie! 160

"Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,"

The victor cried; "the glorious prize is mine!

While fish in streams, or birds delight in
air,

Or in a coach and six the British fair,
As long as Atalantis shall be read, 165

Or the small pillow grace a lady's bed,
While visits shall be paid on solemn days,

When numerous wax-lights in bright order
blaze,

While nymphs take treats, or assignations
give,

So long my honor, name, and praise shall
live! 170

What Time would spare, from steel receives its date,

And monuments, like men, submit to fate!
Steel could the labor of the gods destroy,

And strike to dust th' imperial towers of Troy;

Steel could the works of mortal pride con-
found, 175

And hew triumphal arches to the ground.
What wonder then, fair nymph! thy hairs should feel

The conquering force of unresisted steel?"

CANTO IV

But anxious cares the pensive nymph
oppressed,

And secret passions labored in her breast.
Not youthful kings in battle seized alive,

Not scornful virgins who their charms survive,

Not ardent lovers robbed of all their bliss,
Not ancient ladies when refused a kiss, 6

Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her mantua's pinned awry,

E'er felt such rage, resentment, and de-
spair,

As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravished hair.
For, that sad moment, when the sylphs

withdrew, 11

And Ariel weeping from Belinda flew,
Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite

As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper

scene, 15

Repaired to search the gloomy cave of Spleen.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the
gnome,

And in a vapor reached the dismal dome.
No cheerful breeze this sullen region

knows,
The dreaded east is all the wind that blows. 20

Here in a grotto, sheltered close from air,
And screened in shades from day's de-tested glare,

She sighs forever on her pensive bed,
Pain at her side, and Megrim¹ at her head.

Two handmaids wait the throne, alike in place, 25

But differing far in figure and in face.
Here stood Ill-nature like an ancient maid,

Her wrinkled form in black and white arrayed;

With store of prayers for mornings, nights,
and noons

Her hand is filled; her bosom with lampoons. 30

¹ headache.

There Affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen;
Practised to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride;
On the rich quilt sinks with becoming
woe, 35
Wrapped in a gown, for sickness, and for show.

The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease.

A constant vapor o'er the palace flies,
Strange phantoms rising as the mists
arise; 40

Dreadful, as hermits' dreams in haunted
shades,

Or bright, as visions of expiring maids:
Now glaring fiends, and snakes on rolling spires,¹

Pale spectres, gaping tombs, and purple
fires;

Now lakes of liquid gold, Elysian scenes, 45
And crystal domes, and angels in machines.

Unnumbered throngs on every side are
seen,

Of bodies changed to various forms by Spleen.

Here living tea-pots stand, one arm held
out,

One bent; the handle this, and that the spout. 50

A pipkin there, like Homer's tripod, walks;
Here sighs a jar, and there a goose-pie talks;

Men prove with child, as powerful fancy
works,

And maids, turned bottles, call aloud for corks.

Safe passed the gnome through this fantastic band, 55

A branch of healing spleenwort in his
hand.

Then thus addressed the power: "Hail,
wayward queen!"

Who rule the sex, to fifty from fifteen;
Parent of vapors² and of female wit;

Who give th' hysteric, or poetic fit; 60

On various tempers act by various ways,
Make some take physic, others scribble
plays;

Who cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray.

¹ coils.² whims.

A nymph there is that all thy power dis-
dains, 65

And thousands more in equal mirth maintains.

But oh! if e'er thy gnome could spoil a
grace,

Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face,
Like citron-waters matrons' cheeks inflame,

Or change complexions at a losing game; 70

If e'er with airy horns I planted heads,
Or rumpled petticoats, or tumbled beds,

Or caused suspicion when no soul was rude,
Or discomposed the head-dress of a prude,

Or e'er to costive lap-dog gave disease, 75
Which not the tears of brightest eyes could ease:

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin;
That single act gives half the world the spleen."

The goddess with a discontented air
Seems to reject him, though she grants his prayer. 80

A wondrous bag with both her hands she binds,

Like that where once Ulysses held the
winds:

There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.

A vial next she fills with fainting fears, 85
Soft sorrows, melting griefs, and flowing tears.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.

Sunk in Thalestris' arms the nymph he
found,

Her eyes dejected and her hair unbound.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent, 91

And all the furies issued at the vent.
Belinda burns with more than mortal ire,

And fierce Thalestris fans the rising fire.
"O wretched maid!" she spread her hands,

and cried, 95
(While Hampton's echoes, "Wretched maid!" replied)

"Was it for this you took such constant
care

The bodkin, comb, and essence to prepare?
For this your locks in paper durance

bound,
For this with torturing irons wreathed

around?

For this with fillets strained your tender
 head,
 And bravely bore the double loads of lead?
 Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,
 While the fops envy, and the ladies stare!
 Honor forbid! at whose unrivalled shrine Ease, pleasure, virtue, all, our sex resign. 106
 Methinks already I your tears survey,
 Already hear the horrid things they say,
 Already see you a degraded toast,
 And all your honor in a whisper lost! 110
 How shall I, then, your helpless fame defend?
 'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend!
 And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
 Exposed through crystal to the gazing
 eyes,
 And heightened by the diamond's circling rays, 115
 On that rapacious hand forever blaze?
 Sooner shall grass in Hyde Park Circus
 grow,
 And wits take lodgings in the sound of
 Bow:
 Sooner let earth, air, sea, to chaos fall,
 Men, monkeys, lap-dogs, parrots, perish
 all!" 120
 She said; then raging to Sir Plume repairs,
 And bids her beau demand the precious hairs
 (Sir Plume, of amber snuff-box justly vain,
 And the nice conduct of a clouded cane).
 With earnest eyes, and round unthinking
 face, 125
 He first the snuff-box opened, then the
 case,
 And thus broke out—"My lord—why—
 what the devil!
 Zounds! damn the lock! 'fore Gad, you must be civil!
 Plague on't! 'tis past a jest—nay, prithee,
 pox!
 Give her the hair."—He spoke, and rapped his box. 130
 "It grieves me much," replied the peer
 again,
 "Who speaks so well should ever speak
 in vain.
 But by this lock, this sacred lock, I swear, (Which never more shall join its parted
 hair,

Which never more its honors shall renew, 135
 Clipped from the lovely head where late it grew)
 That while my nostrils draw the vital air,
 This hand, which won it, shall forever
 wear."
 He spoke, and speaking, in proud triumph
 spread
 The long-contended honors of her head. 140
 But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so;
 He breaks the vial whence the sorrows
 flow.
 Then see! the nymph in beauteous grief appears,
 Her eyes half languishing, half drowned in
 tears;
 On her heaved bosom hung her drooping
 head, 145
 Which, with a sigh, she raised; and thus
 she said:
 "Forever cursed be this detested day,
 Which snatched my best, my favorite curl
 away!
 Happy! ah, ten times happy had I been,
 If Hampton Court these eyes had never
 seen! 150
 Yet am not I the first mistaken maid,
 By love of courts to numerous ills betrayed.
 Oh, had I rather unadmired remained
 In some lone isle or distant northern land;
 Where the gilt chariot never marks the
 way, 155
 Where none learn ombre, none e'er taste
 bohea!
 There kept my charms concealed from mortal eye,
 Like roses, that in deserts bloom and die.
 What moved my mind with youthful lords to roam?
 Oh, had I stayed, and said my prayers at
 home! 160
 'Twas this, the morning omens seemed to tell:
 Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-
 box fell;
 The tottering china shook without a wind;
 Nay, Poll sat mute, and Shock was most unkind!
 A sylph, too, warned me of the threats of
 fate, 165
 In mystic visions, now believed too late!

See the poor remnants of these slighted
hairs!
My hands shall rend what e'en thy rapine
spares;
These in two sable ringlets taught to break,
Once gave new beauties to the snowy
neck; 170
The sister lock now sits uncouth, alone,
And in its fellow's fate foresees its own;
Uncurled it hangs, the fatal shears demands,
And tempts once more, thy sacrilegious
hands.
Oh, hadst thou, cruel! been content to seize 175
Hairs less in sight, or any hairs but these!"

CANTO V

She said: the pitying audience melt in
tears.
But Fate and Jove had stopped the baron's
ears.
In vain Thalestris with reproach assails,
For who can move when fair Belinda fails?
Not half so fixed the Trojan could remain, 5
While Anna begged and Dido raged in
vain.
Then grave Clarissa graceful waved her fan;
Silence ensued, and thus the nymph began:
"Say, why are beauties praised and honored most,
The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast? 10
Why decked with all that land and sea
afford,
Why angels called, and angel-like adored?
Why round our coaches crowd the white-gloved beaux,
Why bows the side-box from its inmost
rows?
How vain are all these glories, all our pains, 15
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains;
That men may say, when we the front-
box grace,
'Behold the first in virtue as in face!'
Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charmed the small-pox, or chased old age
away, 20

Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce,
Or who would learn one earthly thing of
use?
To patch, nay, ogle, might become a saint,
Nor could it sure be such a sin to paint.
But since, alas! frail beauty must decay; 25
Curled or uncurled, since locks will turn to grey;
Since painted, or not painted, all shall
fade,
And she who scorns a man must die a
maid;
What then remains but well our power to
use,
And keep good humor still whate'er we lose? 30
And trust me, dear, good humor can prevail,
When airs, and flights, and screams, and scolding fail.
Beauties in vain their pretty eyes may
roll;
Charms strike the sight, but merit wins
the soul."
So spoke the dame, but no applause ensued; 35
Belinda frowned, Thalestris called her prude.
"To arms, to arms!" the fierce virago
cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies.
All side in parties, and begin th' attack;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whale-bones crack; 40
Heroes' and heroines' shouts confusedly
rise,
And bass and treble voices strike the skies.
No common weapons in their hands are
found;
Like gods they fight, nor dread a mortal
wound.
So when bold Homer makes the gods
engage, 45
And heavenly breasts with human passions rage;
'Gainst Pallas, Mars; Latona, Hermes
arms;
And all Olympus rings with loud alarms:
Jove's thunder roars, Heaven trembles all
around,
Blue Neptune storms, the bellowing deeps
resound: 50

Earth shakes her nodding towers, the ground gives way,
And the pale ghosts start at the flash of
day!

Triumphant Umbriel on a sponce's
height
Clapped his glad wings, and sat to view
the fight:

Propped on their bodkin-spears, the sprites survey 55
The growing combat, or assist the fray.

While through the press enraged Thalestris flies,
And scatters death around from both her
eyes,

A beau and witling perished in the throng,
One died in metaphor, and one in song. 60
"O cruel nymph! a living death I bear," Cried Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.

A mournful glance Sir Fopling upwards
cast,

"Those eyes are made so killing"—was his last.

Thus on Meander's flowery margin lies 65
Th' expiring swan, and as he sings he dies.

When bold Sir Plume had drawn Clarissa down,

Chloc stepped in, and killed him with a
frown;

She smiled to see the doughty hero slain,
But, at her smile, the beau revived again.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in
air, 71

Weighs the men's wits against the lady's
hair;

The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;

At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.

See, fierce Belinda on the Baron flies, 75
With more than usual lightning in her
eyes;

Nor feared the chief th' unequal fight to
try,

Who sought no more than on his foe to
die.

But this bold lord, with manly strength
endued,

She with one finger and a thumb subdued:
Just where the breath of life his nostrils
drew, 81

A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;

The gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.
Sudden with starting tears each eye o'er-flows, 85

And the high dome re-echoes to his nose.
"Now meet thy fate," incensed Belinda
cried,

And drew a deadly bodkin from her side.
(The same, his ancient personage to deck,
Her great great grandsire wore about his neck, 90

In three seal-rings; which after, melted
down,

Formed a vast buckle for his widow's
gown;

Her infant grandame's whistle next it
grew,

The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew;
Then in a bodkin graced her mother's
hairs, 95

Which long she wore, and now Belinda wears.)

"Boast not my fall," he cried, "insulting foe!

Thou by some other shalt be laid as
low;

Nor think to die dejects my lofty mind:
All that I dread is leaving you behind! 100

Rather than so, ah, let me still survive,
And burn in Cupid's flames—but burn alive."

"Restore the lock!" she cries; and all around

"Restore the lock!" the vaulted roofs re-
bound.

Not fierce Othello in so loud a strain 105
Roared for the handkerchief that caused his pain.

But see how oft ambitious aims are crossed,

And chiefs contend till all the prize is
lost!

The lock, obtained with guilt, and kept
with pain,

In every place is sought, but sought in
vain: 110

With such a prize no mortal must be blessed.

So Heaven decrees! With Heaven who can contest?

Some thought it mounted to the lunar
sphere,

Since all things lost on earth are treasured
there.

There heroes' wits are kept in ponderous vases, 115
And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer cases;
There broken vows and death-bed alms
are found,
And lovers' hearts with ends of riband
bound;
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs; 120
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.
But trust the Muse—she saw it upward
rise,
Though marked by none but quick, poetic
eyes:
(So Rome's great founder to the heavens
withdrew, 125
To Proculus alone confessed in view)
A sudden star, it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.
Not Berenice's locks first rose so bright,
The heavens bespangling with dishevelled
light. 130
The sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleased pursue its progress through the skies.
This the beau monde shall from the Mall survey,
And hail with music its propitious ray;
This the blest lover shall for Venus
take, 135
And send up vows from Rosamonda's lake.
This Partridge soon shall view in cloudless skies,
When next he looks through Galileo's
eyes;
And hence th' egregious wizard shall fore-doom
The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome. 140
Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn
thy ravished hair,
Which adds new glory to the shining
sphere!
Not all the tresses that fair head can
boast,
Shall draw such envy as the lock you
lost.
For, after all the murders of your eye, 145
When, after millions slain, yourself shall
die;

When those fair suns shall set, as set they must,
And all those tresses shall be laid in dust;
This lock the Muse shall consecrate to
fame,
And 'midst the stars inscribe Belinda's
name. 150

AN ESSAY ON MAN

From BOOK I

Awake, my St. John! leave all meaner
things
To low ambition, and the pride of kings.
Let us (since life can little more supply Than just to look about us and to die)
Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man; 5
A mighty maze! but not without a plan;
A wild, where weeds and flowers promiscuous shoot;
Or garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.
Together let us beat¹ this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield;
The latent tracts, the giddy heights, explore 11
Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar;
Eye nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise;
Laugh where we must, be candid where we can; 15
But vindicate the ways of God to man.
I. Say first, of God above, or man be-
low,
What can we reason, but from what we
know?
Of man, what see we but his station here,
From which to reason, or to which refer? 20
Through worlds unnumbered though the God be known,
'Tis ours to trace him only in our own.
He who through vast immensity can pierce,
See worlds on worlds compose one universe,
Observe how system into system runs, 25
What other planets circle other suns,
What varied being peoples every star,
May tell why Heaven has made us as we
are:
But of this frame the bearings, and the ties,
The strong connections, nice dependencies,

¹ scour, range through

Gradations just, has thy pervading soul 31
Looked through? or can a part contain the whole?

Is the great chain, that draws all to agree,
And drawn, supports, upheld by God, or
thee?

II. Presumptuous man! the reason wouldst thou find, 35
Why formed so weak, so little, and so blind?

First, if thou canst, the harder reason
guess,

Why formed no weaker, blinder, and no
less?

Ask of thy mother earth, why oaks are
made

Taller or stronger than the weeds they shade; 40

Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.

* * * * *

Respecting man, whatever wrong we
call,

May, must be right, as relative to all.

In human works, though labored on with
pain,

A thousand movements scarce one purpose
gain;

In God's, one single can its end produce; 55
Yet serves to second too some other use.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere un-
known,

Touches some wheel, or verges to some
goal:

'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. 60

When the proud steed shall know why man restrains

His fiery course, or drives him o'er the plains;

When the dull ox, why now he breaks the clod,

Is now a victim, and now Egypt's god;
Then shall man's pride and dullness comprehend 65

His actions', passions', being's, use and
end;

Why doing, suffering, checked, impelled;
and why

This hour a slave, the next a deity.

Then say not man's imperfect, Heaven
in fault;

Say rather, man's as perfect as he ought: 70

His knowledge measured to his state and
place,

His time a moment, and a point his space.

If to be perfect in a certain sphere,

What matter soon or late, or here or
there?

The blest to-day is as completely so, 75
As who began a thousand years ago.

III. Heaven from all creatures hides
the book of fate,

All but the page prescribed, their present
state:

From brutes what men, from men what spirits know:

Or who could suffer being here below? 80

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and
play?

Pleased to the last, he crops the flowery food,

And licks the hand just raised to shed his
blood.

Oh, blindness to the future! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle marked by
Heaven: 86

Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,

Atoms or systems into ruin hurled,
And now a bubble burst, and now a

world. 90

Hope humbly then; with trembling
pinions soar;

Wait the great teacher Death; and God adore.

What future bliss, he gives not thee to
know,

But gives that hope to be thy blessing now.

Hope springs eternal in the human breast:

Man never is, but always to be, blest. 96

The soul, uneasy and confined from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutored
mind

Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind; 100

His soul proud science never taught to
stray

Far as the solar walk, or milky way;
Yet simple nature to his hope has given,

Behind the cloud-topped hill, an humbler
Heaven;

Some safer world in depths of woods embraced, 105

Some happier island in the watery waste,

Where slaves once more their native land
behold,
No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.

To be, contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire;
But thinks, admitted to that equal sky, ¹¹¹
His faithful dog shall bear him company.

IV. Go, wiser thou! and, in thy scale of
sense

Weigh thy opinion against Providence;
Call imperfection what thou fanciest such; ¹¹⁵

Say, "Here he gives too little, there too much;"

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,¹ Yet cry, "If man's unhappy, God's unjust;"

If man alone engross not Heaven's high
care,

Alone made perfect here, immortal there,
Snatch from his hand the balance and the rod, ¹²¹

Re-judge his justice, be the god of God.
In pride, in reasoning pride, our error lies;
All quit their sphere, and rush into the
skies.

Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes; ¹²⁵ Men would be angels, angels would be gods.

Aspiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aspiring to be angels, men rebel:
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against the Eternal Cause. ¹³⁰

* * * * *

IX. What if the foot, ordained the dust to tread,

Or hand to toil, aspired to be the head? ²⁶⁰

What if the head, the eye, or ear repined
To serve mere engines to the ruling mind?

Just as absurd for any part to claim
To be another, in this general frame;

Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains, ²⁶⁵

The great directing Mind of All ordains.
All are but parts of one stupendous
whole,

Whose body nature is, and God the soul;
That, changed through all, and yet in all
the same,

Great in the earth, as in th' ethereal frame, ²⁷⁰

¹ pleasure.

Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glow in the stars, and blossoms in the
trees,

Lives through all life, extends through all extent,

Spreads undivided, operates unspent,
Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part, ²⁷⁵

As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart,
As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns,

As the rapt seraph that adores and burns.
To him no high, no low, no great, no
small;

He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals
all. ²⁸⁰

X. Cease then, nor order imperfection
name:

Our proper bliss depends on what we blame.

Know thy own point: this kind, this due degree

Of blindness, weakness, Heaven bestows on thee.

Submit.—In this, or any other sphere, ²⁸⁵

Secure to be as blest as thou canst bear:
Safe in the hand of one disposing Power,

Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
All nature is but art, unknown to thee;

All chance, direction, which thou canst not see; ²⁹⁰

All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good:

And, spite of pride, in erring reason's
spite,

One truth is clear, Whatever is, is right.

From EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT

—Were there one whose fires True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires,

Blessed with each talent and each art to please, ¹⁹⁵

And born to write, converse, and live with
ease;

Should such a man, too fond to rule
alone,

Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the
throne;

View him with scornful, yet with jealous
eyes,

And hate for arts that caused himself to rise; ²⁰⁰

Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
 And without sneering, teach the rest to sneer;
 Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
 Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
 Alike reserved to blame, or to commend, 205
 A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend, Dreading ev'n fools, by flatterers besieged,
 And so obliging that he ne'er obliged;
 Like Cato, give his little senate laws,
 And sit attentive to his own applause, 210
 While wits and Templars every sentence
 raise,
 And wonder with a foolish face of praise—
 Who but must laugh, if such a man there
 be?
 Who would not weep, if Atticus were he!

THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER

Father of all! in every age,
 In every clime adored,
 By saint, by savage, and by sage,
 Jehovah, Jove, or Lord!
 Thou Great First Cause, least understood: 5
 Who all my sense confined
 To know but this, that Thou art good,
 And that myself am blind;
 Yet gave me, in this dark estate,
 To see the good from ill; 10
 And, binding nature fast in fate,
 Left free the human will.
 What conscience dictates to be done,
 Or warns me not to do,
 This, teach me more than hell to shun, 15
 That, more than heaven pursue.
 What blessings Thy free bounty gives,
 Let me not cast away;
 For God is paid when man receives;
 T' enjoy is to obey. 20
 Yet not to earth's contracted span
 Thy goodness let me bound,
 Or think Thee Lord alone of man,
 When thousand worlds are round.

Let not this weak, unknowing hand 25
 Presume Thy bolts to throw,
 And deal damnation round the land
 On each I deem Thy foe.

If I am right, Thy grace impart,
 Still in the right to stay; 30
 If I am wrong, oh teach my heart
 To find that better way.

Save me alike from foolish pride,
 Or impious discontent,
 At aught Thy wisdom has denied, 35
 Or aught Thy goodness lent.

Teach me to feel another's woe,
 To hide the fault I see;
 That mercy I to others show,
 That mercy show to me. 40

Mean though I am, not wholly so,
 Since quickened by Thy breath;
 Oh lead me wheresoe'er I go,
 Through this day's life or death.

This day be bread and peace my lot: 45
 All else beneath the sun,
 Thou know'st if best bestowed or not;
 And let Thy will be done.

To Thee whose temple is all space,
 Whose altar earth, sea, skies, 50
 One chorus let all being raise,
 All nature's incense rise!

OLIVER GOLDSMITH (1728-1774)

THE DESERTED VILLAGE

Sweet Auburn! loveliest village of the
 plain;
 Where health and plenty cheered the laboring swain,
 Where smiling spring its earliest visit paid,
 And parting summer's lingering blooms delayed:
 Dear lovely bowers of innocence and
 ease, 5
 Seats of my youth, when every sport could
 please,
 How often have I loitered o'er thy green,
 Where humble happiness endeared each
 scene!

How often have I paused on every charm,
 The sheltered cot, the cultivated farm, ¹⁰
 The never-failing brook, the busy mill,
 The decent church that topped the neighboring hill,
 The hawthorn bush, with seats beneath the shade
 For talking age and whispering lovers
 made!
 How often have I blest the coming day, ¹⁵
 When toil remitting lent its turn to play,
 And all the village train, from labor free,
 Led up their sports beneath the spreading
 tree,
 While many a pastime circled in the shade,
 The young contending as the old surveyed; ²⁰
 And many a gambol frolicked o'er the
 ground,
 And sleights of art and feats of strength went round.
 And still, as each repeated pleasure tired, Succeeding sports the mirthful band inspired;
 The dancing pair that simply sought renown ²⁵
 By holding out to tire each other down,
 The swain mistrustless of his smutted face, While secret laughter tittered round the
 place;
 The bashful virgin's sidelong looks of love,
 The matron's glance that would those looks reprove. ³⁰
 These were thy charms, sweet village!
 sports like these,
 With sweet succession, taught even toil to
 please:
 These round thy bowers their cheerful influence shed:
 These were thy charms—but all these charms are fled.
 Sweet smiling village, loveliest of the lawn, ³⁵
 Thy sports are fled, and all thy charms withdrawn;
 Amidst thy bowers the tyrant's hand is
 seen,
 And desolation saddens all thy green:
 One only master grasps the whole domain,
 And half a tillage stints thy smiling
 plain. ⁴⁰
 No more thy glassy brook reflects the day,
 But, choked with sedges, works its weedy

Along the glades, a solitary guest,
 The hollow sounding bittern guards its
 nest;
 Amidst thy desert walks the lapwing flies, ⁴⁵
 And tires their echoes with unvaried cries.
 Sunk are thy bowers in shapeless ruin all,
 And the long grass o'ertops the mouldering wall;
 And trembling, shrinking from the spoiler's
 hand,
 Far, far away thy children leave the land.
 Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, ⁵¹
 Where wealth accumulates, and men
 decay:
 Princes and lords may flourish, or may
 fade;
 A breath can make them, as a breath has
 made:
 But a bold peasantry, their country's pride, ⁵⁵
 When once destroyed, can never be supplied.
 A time there was, ere England's griefs
 began,
 When every rood of ground maintained
 its man;
 For him light labor spread her wholesome
 store,
 Just gave what life required, but gave no
 more: ⁶⁰
 His best companions, innocence and health;
 And his best riches, ignorance of wealth.
 But times are altered; trade's unfeeling
 train
 Usurp the land and dispossess the swain;
 Along the lawn, where scattered hamlets rose, ⁶⁵
 Unwieldy wealth and cumbrous pomp repose,
 And every want to opulence allied,
 And every pang that folly pays to pride.
 These gentle hours that plenty bade to bloom,
 Those calm desires that asked but little room, ⁷⁰
 Those healthful sports that graced the peaceful scene,
 Lived in each look, and brightened all the
 green;
 These, far departing, seek a kinder shore,
 And rural mirth and manners are no more.

Sweet Auburn! parent of the blissful
 hour, 75
 Thy glades forlorn confess the tyrant's
 power.
 Here, as I take my solitary rounds Amidst thy tangling walks and ruined grounds,
 And, many a year elapsed, return to view
 Where once the cottage stood, the hawthorn grew, 80
 Remembrance wakes with all her busy
 train,
 Swells at my breast, and turns the past to
 pain.
 In all my wanderings round this world
 of care,
 In all my griefs—and God has given my share—
 I still had hopes, my latest hours to crown,
 Amidst these humble bowers to lay me
 down; 86
 To husband out life's taper at the close,
 And keep the flame from wasting by re-
 pose;
 I still had hopes, for pride attends us still,
 Amidst the swains to show my book-learned skill, 90
 Around my fire an evening group to draw,
 And tell of all I felt, and all I saw;
 And, as an hare whom hounds and horns
 pursue
 Pants to the place from whence at first she flew,
 I still had hopes, my long vexations
 past, 95
 Here to return—and die at home at last.
 O blest retirement, friend to life's decline,
 Retreats from care, that never must be
 mine,
 How happy he who crowns in shades like
 these
 A youth of labor with an age of ease; 100
 Who quits a world where strong temptations try,
 And, since 'tis hard to combat, learns to
 fly!
 For him no wretches, born to work and weep,
 Explore the mine, or tempt the dangerous
 deep;
 No surly porter stands in guilty state, 105
 To spurn imploring famine from the gate;

But on he moves to meet his latter end,
 Angels around befriending virtue's friend;
 Bends to the grave with unperceived decay,
 While resignation gently slopes the way;
 And, all his prospects brightening to the
 last, 111
 His heaven commences ere the world be
 past!
 Sweet was the sound, when oft at evening's close
 Up yonder hill the village murmur rose;
 There, as I passed with careless steps and
 slow, 115
 The mingling notes came softened from
 below;
 The swain responsive as the milk-maid
 sung,
 The sober herd that lowed to meet their
 young,
 The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the
 pool,
 The playful children just let loose from school, 120
 The watch-dog's voice that bayed the whispering wind,
 And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant
 mind;—
 These all in sweet confusion sought the
 shade,
 And filled each pause the nightingale had
 made.
 But now the sounds of population fail, 125
 No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the
 gale,
 No busy steps the grass-grown footway
 tread,
 For all the bloomy flush of life is fled.
 All but yon widowed, solitary thing,
 That feebly bends beside the plashy
 spring: 130
 She, wretched matron, forced in age, for bread,
 To strip the brook with mantling cresses
 spread,
 To pick her wintry faggot from the thorn,
 To seek her nightly shed, and weep till
 morn;
 She only left of all the harmless train, 135
 The sad historian of the pensive plain.
 Near yonder copse, where once the garden smiled,
 And still where many a garden flower
 grows wild;

There, where a few torn shrubs the place
 disclose,
 The village preacher's modest mansion
 rose. 140
 A man he was to all the country dear,
 And passing rich with forty pounds a
 year;
 Remote from towns he ran his godly
 race,
 Nor e'er had changed, nor wished to change his place;
 Unpractised he to fawn, or seek for
 power, 145
 By doctrines fashioned to the varying
 hour;
 Far other aims his heart had learned to prize,
 More skilled to raise the wretched than to
 rise.
 His house was known to all the vagrant
 train;
 He chid their wanderings but relieved their pain: 150
 The long-remembered beggar was his
 guest,
 Whose beard descending swept his aged
 breast;
 The ruined spendthrift, now no longer
 proud,
 Claimed kindred there, and had his claims allowed;
 The broken soldier, kindly bade to
 stay, 155
 Sat by the fire, and talked the night away,
 Wept o'er his wounds or, tales of sorrow
 done,
 Shouldered his crutch and showed how fields were won.
 Pleased with his guests, the good man learned to glow,
 And quite forgot their vices in their woe;
 Careless their merits or their faults to scan, 161
 His pity gave ere charity began.
 Thus to relieve the wretched was his
 pride,
 And e'en his failings leaned to virtue's
 side;
 But in his duty prompt at every call, 165
 He watched and wept, he prayed and felt for all;
 And, as a bird each fond endearment tries To tempt its new-fledged offspring to the
 skies,

He tried each art, reproved each dull de-
 lay,
 Allured to brighter worlds, and led the
 way. 170
 Beside the bed where parting life was
 laid,
 And sorrow, guilt, and pain by turns dismayed,
 The reverend champion stood. At his control
 Despair and anguish fled the struggling
 soul;
 Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise, 175
 And his last faltering accents whispered
 praise.
 At church, with meek and unaffected
 grace,
 His looks adorned the venerable place;
 Truth from his lips prevailed with double
 sway,
 And fools, who come to scoff, remained to
 pray. 180
 The service past, around the pious man,
 With steady zeal, each honest rustic ran;
 Even children followed with endearing
 wile,
 And plucked his gown to share the good man's smile.
 His ready smile a parent's warmth expressed;
 Their welfare pleased him, and their cares distressed: 186
 To them his heart, his love, his griefs were given,
 But all his serious thoughts had rest in
 heaven.
 As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
 Swells from the vale, and midway leaves
 the storm, 190
 Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
 Eternal sunshine settles on its head.
 Beside yon straggling fence that skirts
 the way,
 With blossomed furze unprofitably gay,
 There, in his noisy mansion, skilled to rule, 195
 The village master taught his little school.
 A man severe he was, and stern to view;
 I knew him well, and every truant knew;
 Well had the boding tremblers learned to trace
 The day's disasters in his morning face; 200

Full well they laughed with counter-feited glee
 At all his jokes, for many a joke had he;
 Full well the busy whisper circling round Conveyed the dismal tidings when he frowned.
 Yet he was kind, or, if severe in aught, ²⁰⁵
 The love he bore to learning was in fault;
 The village all declared how much he
 knew:
 'Twas certain he could write, and cipher
 too;
 Lands he could measure, terms and tides
 presage,
 And even the story ran that he could gauge; ²¹⁰
 In arguing, too, the parson owned his skill,
 For, even though vanquished, he could argue still;
 While words of learned length and thundering sound
 Amazed the gazing rustics ranged around;
 And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew, ²¹⁵
 That one small head could carry all he
 knew.
 But past is all his fame. The very spot Where many a time he triumphed is forgot.
 Near yonder thorn that lifts its head on
 high,
 Where once the sign-post caught the passing eye, ²²⁰
 Low lies that house where nut-brown
 draughts inspired,
 Where graybeard mirth and smiling toil
 retired,
 Where village statesmen talked with looks profound,
 And news much older than their ale went
 round.
 Imagination fondly stoops to trace ²²⁵
 The parlor splendors of that festive place:
 The white-washed wall, the nicely sanded
 floor,
 The varnished clock that clicked behind
 the door;
 The chest contrived a double debt to pay,
 A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day; ²³⁰
 The pictures placed for ornament and
 use,
 The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose;

The hearth, except when winter chilled
 the day,
 With aspen boughs and flowers and fennel
 gay;
 While broken tea-cups, wisely kept for show, ²³⁵
 Ranged o'er the chimney, glistened in a row.
 Vain transitory splendors! could not all Reprieve the tottering mansion from its fall?
 Obscure it sinks, nor shall it more impart
 An hour's importance to the poor man's heart. ²⁴⁰
 Thither no more the peasant shall repair
 To sweet oblivion of his daily care;
 No more the farmer's news, the barber's
 tale,
 No more the woodman's ballad shall prevail;
 No more the smith his dusky brow shall clear, ²⁴⁵
 Relax his ponderous strength, and lean
 to hear;
 The host himself no longer shall be found
 Careful to see the mantling bliss go round;
 Nor the coy maid, half willing to be
 pressed,
 Shall kiss the cup to pass it to the rest. ²⁵⁰
 Yes! let the rich deride, the proud dis-
 dain,
 These simple blessings of the lowly train;
 To me more dear, congenial to my heart,
 One native charm, than all the gloss of art.
 Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play, ²⁵⁵
 The soul adopts, and owns their first-born
 sway;
 Lightly they frolic o'er the vacant mind,
 Unenvied, unmolested, unconfined.
 But the long pomp, the midnight masquerade,
 With all the freaks of wanton wealth arrayed— ²⁶⁰
 In these, ere triflers half their wish obtain,
 The toiling pleasure sickens into pain;
 And, even while fashion's brightest arts
 decoy,
 The heart distrusting asks if this be joy.
 Ye friends to truth, ye statesmen who survey ²⁶⁵
 The rich man's joy increase, the poor's
 decay,

'Tis yours to judge, how wide the limits
stand
Between a splendid and an happy land.
Proud swells the tide with loads of freighted ore,
And shouting Folly hails them from her
shore; 270
Hoards even beyond the miser's wish
abound,
And rich men flock from all the world
around.
Yet count our gains! This wealth is but a name
That leaves our useful products still the
same.
Not so the loss. The man of wealth and
pride 275
Takes up a space that many poor supplied;
Space for his lake, his park's extended bounds,
Space for his horses, equipage, and hounds:
The robe that wraps his limbs in silken
sloth
Has robbed the neighboring fields of half their growth; 280
His seat, where solitary sports are seen, Indignant spurns the cottage from the
green:
Around the world each needful product
flies,
For all the luxuries the world supplies;
While thus the land adorned for pleasure
all 285
In barren splendor feebly waits the fall.
As some fair female unadorned and
plain,
Secure to please while youth confirms her
reign,
Slights every borrowed charm that dress supplies,
Nor shares with art the triumph of her
eyes; 290
But when those charms are past, for charms are frail,
When time advances, and when lovers
fail,
She then shines forth, solicitous to bless,
In all the glaring impotence of dress.
Thus fares the land by luxury betrayed: 295
In nature's simplest charms at first arrayed,
But verging to decline, its splendors rise,
Its vistas strike, its palaces surprise;

While, scourged by famine from the smiling land
The mournful peasant leads his humble
band, 300
And while he sinks, without one arm to save,
The country blooms—a garden and a
grave.
Where then, ah! where, shall poverty
reside,
To 'scape the pressure of contiguous pride?
If to some common's fenceless limits
strayed 305
He drives his flock to pick the scanty
blade,
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth
divide,
And even the bare-worn common is denied.
If to the city sped—what waits him
there?
To see profusion that he must not share; 310
To see ten thousand baneful arts combined
To pamper luxury, and thin mankind;
To see those joys the sons of pleasure
know
Extorted from his fellow-creature's woe.
Here while the courtier glitters in brocade, 315
There the pale artist¹ plies the sickly trade;
Here while the proud their long-drawn
pomps display,
There the black gibbet glooms beside the
way.
The dome where pleasure holds her midnight reign
Here, richly decked, admits the gorgeous
train: 320
Tumultuous grandeur crowds the blazing
square,
The rattling chariots clash, the torches glare.
Sure scenes like these no troubles e'er annoy!
Sure these denote one universal joy!
Are these thy serious thoughts?—Ah, turn thine eyes 325
Where the poor houseless shivering female
lies.
She once, perhaps, in village plenty blest,
Has wept at tales of innocence distressed;
Her modest looks the cottage might adorn, Sweet as the primrose peeps beneath the thorn: 330

¹ artisan.

Now lost to all; her friends, her virtue, fled,
Near her betrayer's door she lays her
head,
And, pinched with cold, and shrinking
from the shower,
With heavy heart deplores that luckless
hour,
When idly first, ambitious of the town, 335
She left her wheel and robes of country
brown.

Do thine, sweet Auburn,—thine, the loveliest train,—

Do thy fair tribes participate her pain?

Even now, perhaps, by cold and hunger led,

At proud men's doors they ask a little bread! 340

Ah, no! To distant climes, a dreary
scene,

Where half the convex world intrudes between,

Through torrid tracts with fainting steps
they go,

Where wild Altama murmurs to their woe.
Far different there from all that charmed
before 345

The various terrors of that horrid shore;
Those blazing suns that dart a downward
ray,

And fiercely shed intolerable day;

Those matted woods, where birds forget to sing,

But silent bats in drowsy clusters cling; 350
Those poisonous fields with rank luxuri-ance crowned,

Where the dark scorpion gathers death
around;

Where at each step the stranger fears to wake

The rattling terrors of the vengeful snake;
Where crouching tigers wait their hapless

prey, 355
And savage men more murderous still than they;

While oft in whirls the mad tornado flies, Mingling the ravaged landscape with the

skies.

Far different these from every former
scene,

The cooling brook, the grassy vested
green, 360

The breezy covert of the warbling grove,
That only sheltered thefts of harmless

love.

Good Heaven! what sorrows gloomed that parting day,

That called them from their native walks
away;

When the poor exiles, every pleasure past, Hung round the bowers, and fondly looked
their last, 366

And took a long farewell, and wished in
vain

For seats like these beyond the western
main,

And shuddering still to face the distant
deep,

Returned and wept, and still returned to weep. 370

The good old sire the first prepared to
go

To new-found worlds, and wept for other's
woe;

But for himself, in conscious virtue brave,
He only wished for worlds beyond the

grave.

His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears,
The fond companion of his helpless

years, 376
Silent went next, neglectful of her charms,
And left a lover's for a father's arms.

With louder plaints the mother spoke her
woes,

And blest the cot where every pleasure
rose, 380

And kissed her thoughtless babes with many a tear,

And clasped them close, in sorrow doubly
dear,

Whilst her fond husband strove to lend relief

In all the silent manliness of grief.

O luxury! thou curst by Heaven's decree, 385

How ill exchanged are things like these for
thee!

How do thy potions, with insidious joy,
Diffuse their pleasures only to destroy!

Kingdoms, by thee to sickly greatness
grown,

Boast of a florid vigor not their own. 390

At every draught more large and large they grow,

A bloated mass of rank unwieldly woe;
Till sapped their strength, and every part unsound,

Down, down, they sink, and spread a ruin

round.

Even now the devastation is begun, 395
 And half the business of destruction done;
 Even now, methinks, as pondering here I
 stand,
 I see the rural virtues leave the land.
 Down where yon anchoring vessel spreads
 the sail,
 That idly waiting flaps with every gale, 400
 Downward they move, a melancholy
 band,
 Pass from the shore, and darken all the strand.
 Contented Toil, and hospitable Care,
 And kind connubial Tenderness are there;
 And Piety with wishes placed above, 405
 And steady Loyalty, and faithful Love.
 And thou, sweet Poetry, thou loveliest
 maid,
 Still first to fly where sensual joys invade;
 Unfit in these degenerate times of shame
 To catch the heart, or strike for honest
 fame; 410
 Dear charming nymph, neglected and de-
 cried,
 My shame in crowds, my solitary pride;
 Thou source of all my bliss, and all my
 woe,
 That found'st me poor at first, and keep'st
 me so;
 Thou guide by which the nobler arts
 excel, 415
 Thou nurse of every virtue, fare thee
 well!
 Farewell, and oh! where'er thy voice be tried,
 On Torno's cliffs, or Pambamarca's side,
 Whether where equinoctial fervors glow,
 Or winter wraps the polar world in snow,
 Still let thy voice, prevailing over time, 421
 Redress the rigors of the inclement clime;
 Aid slighted truth with thy persuasive
 strain;
 Teach erring man to spurn the rage of
 gain;
 Teach him that states of native strength
 possessed, 425
 Though very poor, may still be very blest;
 That trade's proud empire hastes to swift
 decay,
 As ocean sweeps the labored mole away;
 While self-dependent power can time defy,
 As rocks resist the billows and the sky. 430

From THE RETALIATION

At a dinner so various, at such a repast, Who'd not be a glutton, and stick to the
 last?
 Here, waiter, more wine! let me sit while I'm able,
 Till all my companions sink under the table; 20
 Then, with chaos and blunders encircling
 my head,
 Let me ponder, and tell what I think of the dead.
 Here lies the good Dean, reunited to
 earth,
 Who mixed reason with pleasure, and wisdom with mirth;
 If he had any faults, he has left us in doubt, 25
 At least in six weeks I could not find 'em
 out;
 Yet some have declared, and it can't be denied 'em,
 That Slyboots was cursedly cunning to hide 'em.
 Here lies our good Edmund, whose genius was such,
 We scarcely can praise it, or blame it too
 much; 30
 Who, born for the universe, narrowed his
 mind,
 And to party gave up what was meant for mankind:
 Though fraught with all learning, yet straining his throat
 To persuade Tommy Townshend to lend him a vote;
 Who, too deep for his hearers, still went on refining, 35
 And thought of convincing, while they thought of dining;
 Though equal to all things, for all things unfit;
 Too nice for a statesman, too proud for a
 wit;
 For a patriot too cool; for a drudge disobedient;
 And too fond of the right to pursue the expedient. 40
 In short, 'twas his fate, unemployed or in place, sir,
 To eat mutton cold, and cut blocks with a razor.

* * * * *

Here lies David Garrick, describe me who can
 An abridgment of all that was pleasant
 in man;
 As an actor, confessed without rival to
 shine; 95
 As a wit, if not first, in the very first
 line;
 Yet with talents like these, and an excellent heart,
 The man had his failings, a dupe to his art;
 Like an ill-judging beauty his colors he
 spread,
 And beplastered with rouge his own natural red. 100
 On the stage he was natural, simple, affecting,
 'Twas only that when he was off he was acting.
 With no reason on earth to go out of his
 way,
 He turned and he varied full ten times a
 day:
 Though secure of our hearts, yet con-foundedly sick 105
 If they were not his own by finessing and trick;
 He cast off his friends as a huntsman his pack,
 For he knew when he pleased he could whistle them back.
 Of praise a mere glutton, he swallowed what came,
 And the puff of a dunce, he mistook it for
 fame; 110
 Till his relish grown callous, almost to disease,
 Who peppered the highest was surest to
 please.
 But let us be candid, and speak out our
 mind:
 If dunces applauded, he paid them in
 kind.
 Ye Kenricks, ye Kellys, and Woodfalls so
 grave, 115
 What a commerce was yours, while you got and you gave!
 How did Grub Street re-echo the shouts
 that you raised,
 When he was be-Rosciused, and you were bepraised!
 But peace to his spirit, wherever it flies,
 To act as an angel, and mix with the
 skies! 120

Those poets who owe their best fame to his skill,
 Shall still be his flatterers, go where he
 will;
 Old Shakespeare receive him with praise
 and with love,
 And Beaumonts and Bens be his Kellys above.

* * * * *

Here Reynolds is laid, and to tell you
 my mind,
 He has not left a wiser or better behind.
 His pencil was striking, resistless, and grand;
 His manners were gentle, complying, and bland; 140
 Still born to improve us in every part,
 His pencil our faces, his manners our
 heart;
 To coxcombs averse, yet most civilly
 steering,
 When they judged without skill he was still hard of hearing;
 When they talked of their Raphaels,
 Correggios, and stuff, 145
 He shifted his trumpet, and only took snuff.

From THE CITIZEN OF THE WORLD

LETTER LV

BEAU TIBBS AT HOME

I am apt to fancy I have contracted a new acquaintance whom it will be no easy matter to shake off. My little beau yesterday overtook me again in one of the public walks, and, slapping me on the shoulder, saluted me with an air of the most perfect familiarity. His dress was the same as usual, except that he had more powder in his hair, wore a dirtier shirt, a pair of temple spectacles, and [10
 his hat under his arm.

As I knew him to be a harmless amusing little thing, I could not return his smiles with any degree of severity; so we walked forward on terms of the utmost intimacy, and in a few minutes discussed all the usual topics preliminary to particular conversation.

The oddities that marked his character, however, soon began to appear; he [20 bowed to several well-dressed persons, who, by their manner of returning the compliment, appeared perfect strangers. At intervals he drew out a pocket-book, seeming to take memorandums before all the company, with much importance and assiduity. In this manner he led me through the length of the whole walk, fretting at his absurdities, and fancying myself laughed at not less than him [30 by every spectator.

When we were got to the end of our procession, "Blast me," cries he, with an air of vivacity, "I never saw the Park so thin in my life before! There's no company at all to-day; not a single face to be seen."—"No company!" interrupted I peevishly; "no company where there is such a crowd? why, man, there's too much. What are the thousands [40 that have been laughing at us but company?"—"Lord, my dear," returned he, with the utmost good humor, "you seem immensely chagrined; but, blast me, when the world laughs at me, I laugh at the world, and so we are even. My Lord Trip, Bill Squash the Creolian, and I, sometimes make a party at being ridiculous; and so we say and do a thousand things for the joke's sake. But I see [50 you are grave, and if you are for a fine grave sentimental companion, you shall dine with me and my wife to-day; I must insist on 't. I'll introduce you to Mrs. Tibbs, a lady of as elegant qualifications as any in nature; she was bred (but that's between ourselves,) under the inspection of the Countess of All-night. A charming body of voice; but no more of that,—she will give us a song. You shall see my [60 little girl too, Carolina Wilhelmina Amelia Tibbs, a sweet pretty creature! I design her for my Lord Drumstick's eldest son; but that's in friendship, let it go no farther: she's but six years old, and yet she walks a minuet, and plays on the guitar immensely already. I intend she shall be as perfect as possible in every accomplishment. In the first place, I'll make her a scholar: I'll teach her Greek myself, [70 and learn that language purposely to instruct her; but let that be a secret."

Thus saying, without waiting for a reply, he took me by the arm, and hauled me along. We passed through many dark alleys and winding ways; for, from some motives to me unknown, he seemed to have a particular aversion to every frequented street; at last, however, we got to the door of a dismal-looking [80 house in the outlets of the town, where he informed me he chose to reside for the benefit of the air.

We entered the lower door, which ever seemed to lie most hospitably open; and I began to ascend an old and creaking staircase, when, as he mounted to show me the way, he demanded, whether I delighted in prospects; to which answering in the affirmative, "Then," [90 says he, "I shall show you one of the most charming in the world, out of my window; we shall see the ships sailing, and the whole country for twenty miles round, tip top, quite high. My Lord Swamp would give ten thousand guineas for such a one; but, as I sometimes pleasantly tell him, I always love to keep my prospects at home, that my friends may visit me the oftener." [100

By this time we were arrived as high as the stairs would permit us to ascend, till we came to what he was facetiously pleased to call the first floor down the chimney; and knocking at the door, a voice from within demanded, "Who's there?" My conductor answered that it was him. But this not satisfying the querist, the voice again repeated the demand; to which he answered louder [110 than before; and now the door was opened by an old woman with cautious reluctance.

When we were got in, he welcomed me to his house with great ceremony, and turning to the old woman, asked where was her lady? "Good troth," replied she, in a peculiar dialect, "she's washing your twa shirts at the next door, because they have taken an oath against lending, out the tub any longer."—"My two [120 shirts!" cried he in a tone that faltered with confusion, "what does the idiot mean?"—"I ken what I mean weel enough," replied the other; "she's washing your twa shirts at the next door, because——"—"Fire and fury, no more of thy stupid explanations!" cried he; "go and inform her we have got company. Were that Scotch hag," continued he, turning to me, "to be for ever in my [130 family, she would never learn politeness, nor forget that absurd poisonous accent of hers, or testify the smallest specimen of breeding or high life; and yet it is very surprising too, as I had her from a parliament man, a friend of mine from the Highlands, one of the politest men in the world; but that's a secret."

We waited some time for Mrs. Tibbs' arrival, during which interval I had [140 a full opportunity of surveying the chamber and all its furniture, which consisted of four chairs with old wrought bottoms, that he assured me were his wife's embroidery; a square table that had been once japanned; a cradle in one corner, a lumbering cabinet in the other; a broken shepherdess, and a mandarin without a head, were stuck over the chimney; and round the walls several paltry un- [150 framed pictures, which, he observed, were all his own drawing. "What do you think, sir, of that head in the corner, done in the manner of Grisoni? there's the true keeping in it; it is my own face, and though there happens to be no likeness, a Countess offered me a hundred for its fellow: I refused her, for, hang it, that would be mechanical, you know."

The wife at last made her appear- [160 ance, at once a slattern and a coquette; much emaciated, but still carrying the remains of beauty. She made twenty apologies for being seen in such odious dishabille, but hoped to be excused, as she had stayed out all night at the Gardens with the Countess, who was excessively fond of the horns. "And indeed, my dear," added she, turning to her husband, "his lordship drank your [170 health in a bumper." "Poor Jack!" cries he, "a dear good-natured creature, I know he loves me. But I hope, my dear, you have given orders for dinner; you need make no great preparations neither, there are but three of us; something elegant:—a little will do—a turbot, an ortolan, a ——" "Or what do you think, my dear," interrupts the wife, "of a nice pretty bit of ox-cheek, piping [180 hot, and dressed with a little of my own sauce?" "The very thing," replies he; "it will eat best with some smart bottled beer: but be sure to let us have the sauce his Grace was so fond of. I hate your immense loads of meat; that is country all over; extremely disgusting to those who are in the least acquainted with high life."

By this time my curiosity began [190 to abate, and my appetite to increase; the company of fools may at first make us smile, but at last never fails of rendering us melancholy. I therefore pretended to a prior engagement, and after having shown my respect to the house, according to the fashion of the English, by giving the old servant a piece of money at the door, I took my leave: Mr. Tibbs assuring me that dinner, if I stayed, [200 would be ready at least in less than two hours.

LETTER LXXXVII

A VISIT TO A SILK-MERCHANT

The shops of London are as well furnished as those of Pekin. Those of London have a picture hung at their door, informing the passengers what they have to sell, as those at Pekin have a board to assure the buyer that they have no intention to cheat him.

I was this morning to buy silk for a nightcap: immediately upon entering the mercer's shop, the master and his [10 two men, with wigs plastered with powder, appeared to ask my commands. They were certainly the civilest people alive; if I but looked, they flew to the place where I cast my eye; every motion of mine sent them running round the whole shop for my satisfaction. I informed them that I wanted what was good, and they showed me not less than forty pieces, and each was better than the former, [20 the prettiest pattern in nature, and the fittest in the world for nightcaps. "My very good friend," said I to the mercer, "you must not pretend to instruct me in silks; I know these in particular to be no better than your mere flimsy Bungees."—"That may be," cried the mercer, who, I afterwards found, had never contradicted a man in his life; "I cannot pretend to say but they may; but I [30 can assure you, my Lady Trail has had a sack from this piece this very morning."—"But, friend," said I, "though my lady has chosen a sack from it, I see no necessity that I should wear it for a nightcap."—"That may be," returned he again, "yet what becomes a pretty lady, will at any time look well on a handsome gentleman." This short compliment was thrown in so very seasonably upon [40 my ugly face, that even though I disliked the silk, I desired him to cut me off the pattern of a nightcap.

While this business was consigned to his journeymen, the master himself took down some pieces of silk still finer than any I had yet seen, and spreading them before me, "There," cries he, "there's beauty; my Lord Snakeskin has bespoke the fellow to this for the birthnight [50 this very morning; it would look charmingly in waistcoats."—"But I don't want a waistcoat," replied I. "Not want a waistcoat!" returned the mercer, "then I would advise you to buy one; when waistcoats are wanted, you may depend upon it they will come dear. Always buy before you want, and you are sure to be well used, as they say in Cheapside." There was so much justice in his ad- [60 vice, that I could not refuse taking it; besides, the silk, which was really a good one, increased the temptation; so I gave orders for that too.

As I was waiting to have my bargains measured and cut, which, I know not how, they executed but slowly, during the interval the mercer entertained me with the modern manner of some of the nobility receiving company in their [70 morning gowns; "Perhaps, sir," adds he, "you have a mind to see what kind of silk is universally worn." Without waiting for my reply, he spreads a piece before me, which might be reckoned beautiful even in China. "If the nobility," continues he, "were to know I sold this to any under a Right Honorable, I should certainly lose their custom; you see, my lord, it is at once rich, tasty, and quite [80 the thing."—"I am no lord," interrupted

I.—"I beg pardon," cried he; "but be pleased to remember, when you intend buying a morning gown, that you had an offer from me of something worth money. Conscience, sir, conscience is my way of dealing; you may buy a morning gown now, or you may stay till they become dearer and less fashionable; but it is not my business to advise." In short, [90 most reverend Fum, he persuaded me to buy a morning gown also, and would probably have persuaded me to have bought half the goods in his shop, if I had stayed long enough, or was furnished with sufficient money.

Upon returning home, I could not help reflecting, with some astonishment, how this very man, with such a confined education and capacity, was yet capable [100 of turning me as he thought proper, and moulding me to his inclinations! I knew he was only answering his own purposes, even while he attempted to appear solicitous about mine: yet, by a voluntary infatuation, a sort of passion, compounded of vanity and good-nature, I walked into the snare with my eyes open, and put myself to future pain in order to give him immediate pleasure. The wisdom [110 of the ignorant somewhat resembles the instinct of animals; it is diffused in but a very narrow sphere, but within that circle it acts with vigor, uniformity, and success.

SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709-1784)

From THE RAMBLER

No. 121. Tuesday, May 14, 1751.

O imitatores, servum pecus!

Hor.

Away, ye imitators, servile herd!

Elphinston.

I have been informed by a letter from one of the universities, that among the youth from whom the next swarm of reasoners is to learn philosophy, and the next flight of beauties to hear elegies and sonnets, there are many who, instead of endeavoring by books and meditation to form their own opinions, content themselves with the secondary knowledge which a convenient bench in a coffee [10] house can supply; and, without any examination or distinction, adopt the criticisms and remarks which happen to drop from those who have risen, by merit or fortune, to reputation and authority.

These humble retailers of knowledge my correspondent stigmatizes with the name of Echoes; and seems desirous that they should be made ashamed of lazy submission, and animated to attempts [20] after new discoveries and original sentiments.

It is very natural for young men to be vehement, acrimonious, and severe. For, as they seldom comprehend at once all the consequences of a position, or perceive the difficulties by which cooler and more experienced reasoners are restrained from confidence, they form their opinions with great precipitance. Seeing nothing [30] that can darken or embarrass the question, they expect to find their own opinion universally prevalent, and are inclined to impute uncertainty and hesitation to want of honesty rather than to knowledge. I may perhaps, therefore, be reproached by my lively correspondent, when it shall be found that I have no inclination to persecute these collectors of fortuitous knowledge with the severity re- [40] quired; yet, as I am now too old to be much pained by hasty censure, I shall not be afraid of taking into protection those whom I think condemned without a sufficient knowledge of their cause.

He that adopts the sentiments of another, whom he has reason to believe wiser than himself, is only to be blamed when he claims the honors that are not due but to the author, and endeavors [50] to deceive the world into praise and veneration; for to learn is the proper business of youth; and whether we increase our knowledge by books or by conversation, we are equally indebted to foreign assistance.

The greater part of students are not born with abilities to construct systems, or advance knowledge; nor can have any hope beyond that of becoming intelli- [60] gent hearers in the schools of art, of being able to comprehend what others discover, and to remember what others teach. Even those to whom Providence hath allotted greater strength of understanding, can expect only to improve a single science. In every other part of learning, they must be content to follow opinions which they are not able to examine; and, even in that which they claim as peculiarly their own, can seldom add more than some small particle of knowledge to the hereditary stock devolved to them from ancient times, the collective labor of a thousand intellects.

In science, which, being fixed and limited, admits of no other variety than such as arises from new methods of distribution, or new arts of illustration, the necessity of following the traces of [80] our predecessors is indisputably evident; but there appears no reason why imagination should be subject to the same restraint. It might be conceived, that of those who profess to forsake the narrow paths of truth, every one may deviate towards a different point; since, though rectitude is uniform and fixed, obliquity may be infinitely diversified. The roads of science are narrow, so that they [90] who travel them must either follow or meet one another; but in the boundless regions of possibility which fiction claims for her dominion, there are surely a thousand recesses unexplored, a thousand flowers unexhausted, combinations of imagery yet unobserved, and races of ideal inhabitants not hitherto described.

Yet, whatever hope may persuade or reason evince, experience can boast [100] of very few additions to ancient fable. The wars of Troy, and the travels of Ulysses, have furnished almost all succeeding poets with incidents, characters, and sentiments. The Romans are confessed to have attempted little more than to display in their own tongue the inventions of the Greeks. There is in all their writings such a perpetual recurrence of allusions to the tales of the [110] fabulous age, that they must be confessed often to want that power of giving pleasure which novelty supplies; nor can we wonder that they excelled so much in the graces of diction, when we consider how rarely they were employed in search of new thoughts.

The warmest admirers of the great Mantuan poet can extol him for little more than the skill with which he has, [120 by making his hero both a traveller and a warrior, united the beauties of the Iliad and the Odyssey in one composition: yet his judgment was perhaps sometimes overborne by his avarice of the Homeric treasures; and, for fear of suffering a sparkling ornament to be lost, he has inserted it where it cannot shine with its original splendor.

When Ulysses visited the infernal [130 regions, he found among the heroes that perished at Troy, his competitor Ajax, who, when the arms of Achilles were adjudged to Ulysses, died by his own hand in the madness of disappointment. He still appeared to resent, as on earth, his loss and disgrace. Ulysses endeavored to pacify him with praises and submission; but Ajax walked away without reply. This passage has always been [140 considered as eminently beautiful, because Ajax, the haughty chief, the unlettered soldier, of unshaken courage, of immovable constancy, but without the power of recommending his own virtues by eloquence, or enforcing his assertions by any other argument than the sword, had no way of making his anger known but by gloomy sullenness and dumb ferocity. His hatred of a man whom [150 he conceived to have defeated him only by volubility of tongue, was therefore naturally shown by silence, more contemptuous and piercing than any words that so rude an orator could have found, and by which he gave his enemy no opportunity of exerting the only power in which he was superior.

When Æneas is sent by Virgil to the shades, he meets Dido, the queen of [160 Carthage, whom his perfidy had hurried to the grave; he accosts her with tenderness and excuses; but the lady turns away like Ajax in mute disdain. She turns away like Ajax; but she resembles him in none of those qualities which give either dignity or propriety to silence. She might, without any departure from the tenor of her conduct, have burst out, like other injured women, into clamor, re- [170 proach, and denunciation; but Virgil had his imagination full of Ajax, and therefore could not prevail on himself to teach Dido any other mode of resentment.

If Virgil could be thus seduced by imitation, there will be little hope that common wits should escape; and accordingly we find that, besides the universal and acknowledged practice of copying the ancients, there has prevailed in [180 every age a particular species of fiction. At one time all truth was conveyed in allegory; at another, nothing was seen but in a vision; at one period, all the poets followed sheep, and every event produced a pastoral; at another, they busied themselves wholly in giving directions to a painter.

It is indeed easy to conceive why any fashion should become popular, by [190 which idleness is favored and imbecility assisted; but surely no man of genius can much applaud himself for repeating a tale with which the audience is already tired, and which could bring no honor to any but its inventor.

There are, I think, two schemes of writing on which the laborious wits of the present time employ their faculties. One is the adaptation of sense to all the [200 rhymes which our language can supply to some word that makes the burden of the stanza; but this, as it has been only used in a kind of amorous burlesque, can scarcely be censured with much acrimony. The other is the imitation of Spenser, which, by the influence of some men of learning and genius, seems likely to gain upon the age, and therefore deserves to be more attentively considered. [210

To imitate the fictions and sentiments of Spenser can incur no reproach, for allegory is perhaps one of the most pleasing vehicles of instruction. But I am very far from extending the same respect to his diction or his stanza. His style was in his own time allowed to be vicious, so darkened with old words and peculiarities of phrase, and so remote from common use, that Jonson boldly pronounces [220 him to have written no language. His stanza is at once difficult and unpleasing; tiresome to the ear by its uniformity, and to the attention by its length. It was at first formed in imitation of the Italian poets, without due regard to the genius of our language. The Italians have little variety of termination, and were forced to contrive such a stanza as might admit the greatest number of similar [230 rhymes; but our words end with so much diversity, that it is seldom convenient for us to bring more than two of the same sound together. If it be justly observed by Milton, that rhyme obliges poets to express their thoughts in improper terms, these improprieties must always be multiplied as the difficulty of rhyme is increased by long concatenations.

The imitators of Spenser are in- [240 deed not very rigid censors of themselves, for they seem to conclude that, when they have disfigured their lines with a few obsolete syllables, they have accomplished their design, without considering that they ought not only to admit old words, but to avoid new. The laws of imitation are broken by every word introduced since the time of Spenser, as the character of Hector is violated by quoting Aris- [250 totle in the play. It would indeed be difficult to exclude from a long poem all modern phrases, though it is easy to sprinkle it with gleanings of antiquity. Perhaps, however, the style of Spenser might by long labor be justly copied; but life is surely given us for higher purposes than to gather what our ancestors have wisely thrown away, and to learn what is of no value but because it has [260 been forgotten.

LETTER TO THE EARL OF CHESTERFIELD

February 7, 1755.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE EARL OF CHESTERFIELD.

MY LORD,

I have been lately informed, by the proprietor of the World, that two papers, in which my Dictionary is recommended to the public, were written by your Lordship. To be so distinguished, is an honor, which, being very little accustomed to favors from the great, I know not well how to receive, or in what terms to acknowledge.

When, upon some slight encour- [10 agement, I first visited your Lordship, I was overpowered, like the rest of mankind, by the enchantment of your address; and could not forbear to wish that I might boast myself Le vainqueur du vainqueur de la terre;—that I might obtain that regard for which I saw the world contending; but I found my attendance so little encouraged, that neither pride nor modesty would suffer me [20 to continue it. When I had once addressed your Lordship in public, I had exhausted all the art of pleasing which a retired and uncourtly scholar can possess. I had done all that I could; and no man is well pleased to have his all neglected, be it ever so little.

Seven years, my Lord, have now past, since I waited in your outward rooms, or was repulsed from your door; dur- [30 ing which time I have been pushing on my work through difficulties, of which it is useless to complain, and have brought it, at last, to the verge of publication, without one act of assistance, one word of encouragement, or one smile of favor. Such treatment I did not expect, for I never had a Patron before.

The shepherd in Virgil grew at last acquainted with Love, and found him a [40 native of the rocks.

Is not a Patron, my Lord, one who looks with unconcern on a man struggling for life in the water, and, when he has reached ground, encumbers him with help? The notice which you have been pleased to take of my labors, had it been early, had been kind; but it has been delayed till I am indifferent, and cannot enjoy it; till I am solitary, and cannot [50 impart it; till I am known, and do not want it. I hope it is no very cynical asperity, not to confess obligations where no benefit has been received, or to be unwilling that the Public should consider me as owing that to a Patron, which Providence has enabled me to do for myself.

Having carried on my work thus far with so little obligation to any favorer [60 of learning, I shall not be disappointed

though I should conclude it, if less be possible, with less; for I have been long wakened from that dream of hope, in which I once boasted myself with so much exultation,

My Lord,
Your Lordship's most humble
Most obedient servant,
SAM. JOHNSON.

LETTER TO JAMES MACPHERSON

MR. JAMES MACPHERSON,

I received your foolish and impudent letter. Any violence offered me I shall do my best to repel; and what I cannot do for myself, the law shall do for me. I hope I shall never be deterred from detecting what I think a cheat, by the menaces of a ruffian.

What would you have me retract? I thought your book an imposture; I think it an imposture still. For this [10] opinion I have given my reasons to the public, which I here dare you to refute. Your rage I defy. Your abilities, since your Homer, are not so formidable; and what I hear of your morals inclines me to pay regard not to what you shall say, but to what you shall prove. You may print this if you will.

SAM. JOHNSON.

THE LIVES OF THE ENGLISH POETS

From MILTON

The English poems, though they make no promises of Paradise Lost, have this evidence of genius, that they have a cast original and unborrowed. But their peculiarity is not excellence: if they differ from verses of others, they differ for the worse; for they are too often distinguished by repulsive harshness; the combinations of words are new, but they are not pleasing; the rhymes and epithets seem to [10] be laboriously sought, and violently applied.

That in the early parts of his life he wrote with much care appears from his manuscripts, happily preserved at Cambridge, in which many of his smaller works are found as they were first written, with the subsequent corrections. Such reliques show how excellence is acquired: what we hope ever to do with ease, we may learn [20] first to do with diligence.

Those who admire the beauties of this great poet, sometimes force their own judgment into false approbation of his little pieces, and prevail upon themselves to think that admirable which is only singular. All that short compositions can commonly attain is neatness and elegance. Milton never learned the art of doing little things with grace; he overlooked [30] the milder excellence of suavity and softness: he was a "lion" that had no skill "in dandling the kid."

One of the poems upon which most praise has been bestowed is Lycidas; of which the diction is harsh, the rhymes uncertain, and the numbers displeasing. What beauty there is we must therefore seek in the sentiments and images. It is not to be considered as the effusion [40] of real passion; for passion runs not after remote allusions and obscure opinions. Passion plucks no berries from the myrtle and ivy, nor calls upon Arethuse and Mincius, nor tells of "rough satyrs and fauns with cloven heel." Where there is leisure for fiction there is little grief.

In this poem there is no nature, for there is no truth; there is no art, for there is nothing new. Its form is that of a [50] pastoral, easy, vulgar, and therefore disgusting: whatever images it can supply are long ago exhausted; and its inherent improbability always forces dissatisfaction on the mind. When Cowley tells of Hervey that they studied together, it is easy to suppose how much he must miss the companion of his labors, and the partner of his discoveries; but what image of tenderness can be excited by these [60] lines!

"We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grey fly winds her sultry
horn,
Battening our flocks with the fresh dews
of night."

We know that they never drove afield, and that they had no flocks to batten; and though it be allowed that the representation may be allegorical, the true meaning is so uncertain and remote, that it is never sought because it cannot [70 be known when it is found.

Among the flocks and copses and flowers appear the heathen deities, Jove and Phœbus, Neptune and Æolus, with a long train of mythological imagery, such as a college easily supplies. Nothing can less display knowledge, or less exercise invention, than to tell how a shepherd has lost his companion, and must now feed his flocks alone, without any judge [80 of his skill in piping; and how one god asks another god what has become of Lycidas, and how neither god can tell. He who thus grieves will excite no sympathy; he who thus praises will confer no honor.

This poem has yet a grosser fault. With these trifling fictions are mingled the most awful and sacred truths, such as ought never to be polluted with [90 such irreverent combinations. The shepherd likewise is now a feeder of sheep, and afterwards an ecclesiastical pastor, a superintendent of a Christian flock. Such equivocations are always unskilful; but here they are indecent, and at least approach to impiety, of which, however, I believe the writer not to have been conscious.

Such is the power of reputation [100 justly acquired, that its blaze drives away the eye from nice examination. Surely no man could have fancied that he read Lycidas with pleasure, had he not known its author.

Of the two pieces, L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, I believe opinion is uniform; every man that reads them, reads them with pleasure. The author's design is not . . . merely to show how objects [110 derive their colors from the mind, by representing the operation of the same things upon the gay and the melancholy temper, or upon the same man as he is differently disposed; but rather how, among the successive variety of appearances, every disposition of mind takes hold on those by which it may be gratified.

* * * * *

By the general consent of critics, the first praise of genius is due to the [120

writer of an epic poem, as it requires an assemblage of all the powers which are singly sufficient for other compositions. Poetry is the art of uniting pleasure with truth, by calling imagination to the help of reason. Epic poetry undertakes to teach the most important truths by the most pleasing precepts, and therefore relates some great event in the most affecting manner. History must sup- [130 ply the writer with the rudiments of narration, which he must improve and exalt by a nobler art, must animate by dramatic energy, and diversify by retrospection and anticipation; morality must teach him the exact bounds and different shades of vice and virtue; from policy and the practise of life he has to learn the discriminations of character, and the tendency of the passions, either single [140 or combined; and physiology must supply him with illustrations and images. To put these materials to poetical use, is required an imagination capable of painting nature and realizing fiction. Nor is he yet a poet till he has attained the whole extension of his language, distinguished all the delicacies of phrase, and all the colors of words, and learned to adjust their different sounds to all the [150 varieties of metrical modulation.

* * * * *

The subject of an epic poem is naturally an event of great importance. That of Milton is not the destruction of a city, the conduct of a colony, or the foundation of an empire. His subject is the fate of worlds, the revolutions of heaven and of earth; rebellion against the Supreme King, raised by the highest order of created beings; the overthrow of their [160 host and the punishment of their crime; the creation of a new race of reasonable creatures; their original happiness and innocence, their forfeiture of immortality, and their restoration to hope and peace.

* * * * *

Of his moral sentiments it is hardly praise to affirm that they excel those of all other poets; for this superiority he was indebted to his acquaintance with the sacred writings. The ancient epic [170 poets, wanting the light of Revelation, were very unskilful teachers of virtue: their principal characters may be great, but they are not amiable. The reader may rise from their works with a greater degree of active or passive fortitude, and sometimes of prudence; but he will be able to carry away few precepts of justice, and none of mercy.

* * * * *

In Milton every line breathes sanctity of thought and purity of manners, except when the train of the narration requires the introduction of the rebellious spirits; and even they are compelled to acknowledge their subjection to God in such a manner as excites reverence, and confirms piety.

* * * * *

Something must be said of his versification. "The measure," he says, "is the English heroic verse without rhyme." . . .

"Rhyme," he says, and says truly, "is no necessary adjunct of true poetry." But perhaps of poetry as a mental operation metre or music is no necessary adjunct; it is however by the music of metre that poetry has been discriminated in all languages, and in languages melodiously constructed with a due proportion of long and short syllables, metre is sufficient. But one language cannot communicate its rules to another; where metre is scanty and imperfect some help is necessary. The music of the English heroic line strikes the ear so faintly that it is easily lost, unless all the syllables of every line co-operate together; this co-operation can only be obtained by the preservation of every verse unmingled with another, as a distinct system of sounds, and this distinctness is obtained and preserved by the artifice of rhyme. The variety of pauses, so much boasted by the lovers of blank verse, changes the measures of an English poet to the periods of a declaimer; and there are only a few skilful and happy readers of Milton, who enable their audience to perceive where the lines end or begin. "Blank verse," says an ingenious critic, "seems to be verse only to the eye."

Poetry may subsist without rhyme, but English poetry will not often please; nor can rhyme ever be safely spared but where the subject is able to support itself. Blank verse makes some approach to that which is called the lupidary style; has neither the easiness of prose, nor the melody of numbers, and therefore tires by long continuance. Of the Italian writers without rhyme, whom Milton alleges as precedents, not one is popular; what reason could urge in its defence, has been confuted by the ear.

But, whatever be the advantage of rhyme, I cannot prevail on myself to wish that Milton had been a rhymers, for I cannot wish his work to be other than it is; yet, like other heroes, he is to be admired rather than imitated. He that thinks himself capable of astonishing, may write blank verse; but those that hope only to please, must condescend to rhyme.

The highest praise of genius is original invention. Milton cannot be said to have contrived the structure of an epic poem, and therefore owes reverence to that vigor and amplitude of mind to which all generations must be indebted for the art of poetical narration, for the texture of the fable, the variation of incidents, the interposition of dialogue, and all the stratagems that surprise and enchain attention. But of all the borrowers from Homer, Milton is perhaps the least indebted. He was naturally a thinker for himself, confident of his own abilities, and disdainful of help and hindrance; he did not refuse admission to the thoughts or images of his predecessors, but he did not seek them. From his contemporaries he neither courted nor received support; there is in his writings nothing by which the pride of other authors might be gratified, or favor gained; no exchange of praise, nor solicitation of support. His great works were performed under discountenance, and in blindness, but difficulties vanished at his touch; he was born for whatever is arduous; and his work is not the greatest of heroic poems, only because it is not the first.

From DRYDEN

Criticism, either didactic or defensive, occupies almost all his prose, except those pages which he has devoted to his patrons; but none of his prefaces were ever thought tedious. They have not the formality of a settled style, in which the first half of a sentence betrays the other. The clauses are never balanced, nor the periods modelled; every word seems to drop by chance, though it [10 falls into its proper place. Nothing is cold or languid; the whole is airy, animated, and vigorous: what is little, is gay; what is great, is splendid. He may be thought to mention himself too frequently; but while he forces himself upon our esteem, we cannot refuse him to stand high in his own. Everything is excused by the play of images and the sprightliness of expression. Though all is [20 easy, nothing is feeble; though all seems careless, there is nothing harsh; and though since his earlier works more than a century has passed, they have nothing yet uncouth or obsolete.

He who writes much will not easily escape a manner, such a recurrence of particular modes as may be easily noted. Dryden is always "another and the same;" he does not exhibit a second [30 time the same elegances in the same form, nor appears to have any art other than that of expressing with clearness what he thinks with vigor. His style could not easily be imitated, either seriously or ludicrously; for, being always equable and always varied, it has no prominent or discriminative characters. The beauty who is totally free from disproportion of parts and features, cannot be ridiculed [40 by an overcharged resemblance.

From his prose, however, Dryden derives only his accidental and secondary praise; the veneration with which his name is pronounced by every cultivator of English literature is paid to him as he refined the language, improved the sentiments, and tuned the numbers of English Poetry.

After about half a century of forced [50 thoughts and rugged metre, some advances towards nature and harmony had been already made by Waller and Denham; they had shown that long discourses in rhyme grew more pleasing when they were broken unto couplets, and that verse consisted not only in the number but the arrangement of syllables.

But though they did much, who can deny that they left much to do? [60 Their works were not many, nor were their minds of very ample comprehension. More examples of more modes of composition were necessary for the establishment of regularity, and the introduction of propriety in word and thought.

Every language of a learned nation necessarily divides itself into diction scholastic and popular, grave and familiar, elegant and gross; and from a nice [70 distinction of these different parts arises a great part of the beauty of style. But if we except a few minds, the favorites of nature, to whom their original rectitude was in the place of rules, this delicacy of selection was little known to our authors: our speech lay before them in a heap of confusion, and every man took for every purpose what chance might offer him.

There was therefore before the time [80 of Dryden no poetical diction: no system of words at once refined from the grossness of domestic use, and free from the harshness of terms appropriated to particular arts. Words too familiar, or too remote, defeat the purpose of a poet. From those sounds which we hear on small or on coarse occasions, we do not easily receive strong impressions, or delightful images; and words to which [90 we are nearly strangers, whenever they occur, draw that attention on themselves which they should transmit to things.

Those happy combinations of words which distinguish poetry from prose had been rarely attempted; we had few elegances or flowers of speech: the roses had not yet been plucked from the bramble, or different colors had not yet been joined to enliven one another. [100

It may be doubted whether Waller and Denham could have overborne the prejudices which had long prevailed, and which even then were sheltered by the protection of Cowley. The new versification, as it was called, may be considered as owing its establishment to Dryden; from whose time it is apparent that English poetry has had no tendency to relapse to its former savageness. [110]

From ADDISON.

At the school of the Chartreux . . . he . . . contracted that intimacy with Sir Richard Steele, which their joint labors have so effectually recorded.

Of this memorable friendship the greater praise must be given to Steele. It is not hard to love those from whom nothing can be feared, and Addison never considered Steele as a rival; but Steele lived, as he confesses, under an habitual [10 subjection to the predominating genius of Addison, whom he always mentioned with reverence, and treated with obsequiousness.

Addison, who knew his own dignity, could not always forbear to show it, by playing a little upon his admirer; but he was in no danger of retort: his jests were endured without resistance or resentment.

* * * * *

Before the Taller and Spectator, if [20 the writers for the theatre are excepted, England had no masters of common life. No writers had yet undertaken to reform either the savageness of neglect or the impertinence of civility; to show when to speak, or to be silent; how to refuse, or how to comply. We had many books to teach us our more important duties, and to settle opinions in philosophy or politics; but an Arbiter elegantiarum, a judge of [30 propriety, was yet wanting, who should survey the track of daily conversation and free it from thorns and prickles, which tease the passer, though they do not wound him.

For this purpose nothing is so proper as the frequent publication of short papers, which we read not as study but amusement. If the subject be slight, the treatise likewise is short. The busy may [40 find time, and the idle may find patience.

* * * * *

That he always wrote as he would think it necessary to write now, cannot be affirmed; his instructions were such as the characters of his readers made proper. That general knowledge which now circulates in common talk, was in his time rarely to be found. Men not professing learning were not ashamed of ignorance, and in the female world, any acquaintance with books was distinguished only to be censured. His purpose was to infuse literary curiosity, by gentle and unsuspected conveyance, into the gay, the idle, and the wealthy; he therefore presented knowledge in the most alluring form, not lofty and austere, but accessible and familiar. When he showed them their defects, he showed them likewise that they might be easily supplied. [60 His attempt succeeded; enquiry was awakened, and comprehension expanded. An emulation of intellectual elegance was excited, and from his time to our own, life has been gradually exalted, and conversation purified and enlarged.

* * * * *

As a describer of life and manners, he must be allowed to stand perhaps the first of the first rank. His humor, which, as Steele observes, is peculiar to himself, [70 is so happily diffused as to give the grace of novelty to domestic scenes and daily occurrences. He never "outsteps the modesty of nature," nor raises merriment or wonder by the violation of truth. His figures neither divert by distortion, nor amaze by aggravation. He copies life with so much fidelity, that he can be hardly said to invent; yet his exhibitions have an air so much original that it [80 is difficult to suppose them not merely the product of imagination.

As a teacher of wisdom, he may be confidently followed. His religion has nothing in it enthusiastic or superstitious: he appears neither weakly credulous nor wantonly sceptical; his morality is neither dangerously lax, nor impracticably rigid. All the enchantment of fancy and all the cogency of argument are employed [90 to recommend to the reader his real interest, the care of pleasing the Author of his being. Truth is shown sometimes as the phantom of a vision, sometimes appears half-veiled in an allegory; sometimes attracts regard in the robes of fancy, and sometimes steps forth in the confidence of reason. She wears a thousand dresses, and all is pleasing.

Mille habet ornatus, mille decenter habet. [100

His prose is the model of the middle style; on grave subjects not formal, on light occasions not groveling; pure without scrupulosity, and exact without apparent elaboration; always equable, and always easy, without glowing words or pointed sentences. Addison never deviates from his track to snatch a grace; he seeks no ambitious ornaments, and tries no hazardous inventions. His [110 page is always luminous, but never blazes in unexquisite splendor.

It was apparently his principal endeavor to avoid all harshness and severity of diction; he is therefore sometimes verbose in his transitions and connections, and sometimes descends too much to the language of conversation; yet if his language had been less idiomatical it might have lost somewhat of its genuine [120 Anglicism. What he attempted, he performed; he is never feeble, and he did not wish to be energetic; he is never rapid, and he never stagnates. His sentences have neither studied amplitude, nor affected brevity; his periods, though not diligently rounded, are voluble and easy. Whoever wishes to attain an English style, familiar but not coarse, and elegant but not ostentatious, must give his [130 days and nights to the volumes of Addison.

From POPE

[Pope] professed to have learned his poetry from Dryden, whom, whenever an opportunity was presented, he praised through his whole life with unvaried liberality; and perhaps his character may receive some illustration if he be compared with his master.

* * * * *

Pope was not content to satisfy; he desired to excel, and therefore always endeavored to do his best: he did not [10 court the candor, but dared the judgment of his reader, and, expecting no indulgence from others, he showed none to himself. He examined lines and words with minute and punctilious observation, and retouched every part with indefatigable diligence, till he had left nothing to be forgiven.

* * * * *

In acquired knowledge, the superiority must be allowed to Dryden, whose [20 education was more scholastic, and who before he became an author had been allowed more time for study, with better means of information. His mind has a larger range, and he collects his images and illustrations from a more extensive circumference of science. Dryden knew more of man in his general nature, and Pope in his local manners. The notions of Dryden were formed by compre- [30 hensive speculation, and those of Pope by minute attention. There is more dignity in the knowledge of Dryden, and more certainty in that of Pope.

Poetry was not the sole praise of either, for both excelled likewise in prose; but Pope did not borrow his prose from his predecessor. The style of Dryden is capricious and varied, that of Pope is cautious and uniform; Dryden obeys [40 the motions of his own mind, Pope constrains his mind to his own rules of composition. Dryden is sometimes vehement and rapid; Pope is always smooth, uniform, and gentle. Dryden's page is a natural field, rising into inequalities, and diversified by the varied exuberance of abundant vegetation; Pope's is a velvet lawn, shaven by the scythe, and levelled by the roller. [50

Of genius, that power which constitutes a poet; that quality without which judgment is cold and knowledge is inert; that energy which collects, combines, amplifies, and animates—the superiority must, with some hesitation, be allowed to Dryden. It is not to be inferred that of this poetical vigor Pope had only a little, because Dryden had more; for every other writer since Milton must [60 give place to Pope; and even of Dryden it must be said, that if he has brighter paragraphs, he has not better poems.

Dryden's performances were always hasty, either excited by some external occasion, or extorted by domestic necessity; he composed without consideration, and published without correction. What his mind could supply at call, or gather in one excursion, was all that he sought, [70 and all that he gave. The dilatory caution of Pope enabled him to condense his sentiments, to multiply his images, and to accumulate all that study might produce, or chance might supply. If the flights of Dryden therefore are higher, Pope continues longer on the wing. If of Dryden's fire the blaze is brighter, of Pope's the heat is more regular and constant. Dryden often surpasses expectation, and Pope never falls below it. Dryden is read with frequent astonishment, and Pope with perpetual delight.

From GRAY

Gray's poetry is now to be considered, and I hope not to be looked on as an enemy to his name if I confess that I contemplate it with less pleasure than his life.

* * * * *

The Prospect of Eton College suggests nothing to Gray which every beholder does not equally think and feel. His supplication to Father Thames, to tell him who drives the hoop or tosses the ball, is [10 useless and puerile. Father Thames has no better means of knowing than himself. His epithet "buxom health" is not elegant; he seems not to understand the word. Gray thought his language more poetical as it was more remote from common use: finding in Dryden "honey redolent of Spring," an expression that reaches the utmost limits of our language, Gray drove it a little more beyond common apprehension, by making "gales" to be "redolent of joy and youth."

Of the Ode on Adversity, the hint was at first taken from O Diva, gratum quae regis Antium; but Gray has excelled his original by the variety of his sentiments, and by their moral application. Of this piece, at once poetical and rational, I will not by slight objections violate the dignity. [30

My process has now brought me to the "Wonderful Wonder of Wonders," the two Sister Odes; by which, though either vulgar ignorance or common sense at first universally rejected them, many have been since persuaded to think themselves delighted. I am one of those that are willing to be pleased, and therefore would gladly find the meaning of the first stanza of The Progress of Poesy. [40

Gray seems in his rapture to confound the images of "spreading sound" and "running water." A "stream of music" may be allowed; but where does music, however "smooth and strong," after having visited the "verdant vales," "roll down the steep again," so as that "rocks and nodding groves rebellow to the roar"? If this be said of music, it is nonsense; if it be said of water, it is [50 nothing to the purpose.

The second stanza, exhibiting Mars's car and Jove's eagle, is unworthy of further notice. Criticism disdains to chase a schoolboy to his commonplaces.

* * * * *

The third stanza sounds big with Delphi, and Egean, and Ilissus, and Meander, and "hallowed fountain", and "solemn sound"; but in all Gray's odes there is a kind of cumbrous splendor which we [60 wish away. His position is at last false: in the time of Dante and Petrarch, from whom he derives our first school of poetry, Italy was overrun by "tyrant power" and "coward vice"; nor was our state much better when we first borrowed the Italian arts.

* * * * *

The Bard appears, at first view, to be . . . an imitation of the prophecy of Nereus. . . . [70

To select a singular event, and swell it to a giant's bulk by fabulous appendages of spectres and predictions, has little difficulty, for he that forsakes the probable may always find the marvellous. And it has little use: we are affected only as we believe; we are improved only as we find something to be imitated or declined. I do not see that The Bard promotes any truth, moral or political. [80

* * * * *

These odes are marked by glittering accumulations of ungraceful ornaments: they strike, rather than please; the images are magnified by affectation, the language is labored into harshness. The mind of the writer seems to work with unnatural violence. "Double, double, toil and trouble." He has a kind of strutting dignity, and is tall by walking on tiptoe. His art and his struggle are too [90 visible, and there is too little appearance of ease and nature.

To say that he has no beauties, would be unjust: a man like him, of great learning, and great industry, could not but produce something valuable. When he pleases least, it can only be said that a good design was ill directed.

His translations of Northern and Welsh poetry deserve praise: the imagery is preserved, perhaps often improved; but the language is unlike the language of other poets.

In the character of his Elegy I rejoice to concur with the common reader; for by the common sense of readers uncorrupted with literary prejudices, after all the refinements of subtilty and the dogmatism of learning, must be finally decided all claim to poetical honors. The [110 Church-yard abounds with images which find a mirror in every mind, and with sentiments to which every bosom returns an echo. The four stanzas beginning "Yet even these bones," are to me original: I have never seen the notions in any other place; yet he that reads them here, persuades himself that he has always felt them. Had Gray written often thus it had been vain to blame, and useless [120 to praise him.

JAMES BOSWELL (1740-1795)

THE LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON

From THE YEAR 1763

This is to me a memorable year; for in it I had the happiness to obtain the acquaintance of that extraordinary man whose memoirs I am now writing; an acquaintance which I shall ever esteem as one of the most fortunate circumstances in my life. Though then but two-and-twenty, I had for several years read his works with delight and instruction, and had the highest reverence for their author, which had grown up in my fancy into a kind of mysterious veneration, by figuring to myself a state of solemn elevated abstraction, in which I supposed him to live in the immense metropolis of London. Mr. Gentleman, a native of Ireland, who passed some years in Scotland as a player, and as an instructor in the English language, a man whose talents and worth were depressed by misfortune, [20 had given me a representation of the figure and manner of DICTIONARY JOHNSON! as he was then generally called; and during my first visit to London, which was for three months in 1760, Mr. Derrick, the poet, who was Gentleman's friend and countryman, flattered me with hopes that he would introduce me to Johnson, an honor of which I was very ambitious. But he never found an [30 opportunity; which made me doubt that he had promised to do what was not in his power; till Johnson some years afterwards told me, "Derrick, Sir, might very well have introduced you. I had a kindness for Derrick, and am sorry he is dead."

In the summer of 1761 Mr. Thomas Sheridan was at Edinburgh, and delivered lectures upon the English Language and Public Speaking to large and respectable [40 audiences. I was often in his company, and heard him frequently expatiate upon Johnson's extraordinary knowledge, talents, and virtues, repeat his pointed sayings, describe his particularities, and boast of his being his guest sometimes till two or three in the morning. At his house I hoped to have many opportunities of seeing the sage, as Mr. Sheridan obligingly assured me I should not be disappointed. [50

When I returned to London in the end of 1762, to my surprise and regret I found an irreconcilable difference had taken place between Johnson and Sheridan. A pension of two hundred pounds a year had been given to Sheridan. Johnson, who, as has been already mentioned, thought slightly of Sheridan's art, upon hearing that he was also pensioned, exclaimed, "What! have they given him a pension? Then it is time for me to give up mine." Whether this proceeded from a momentary indignation, as if it were an affront to his exalted merit that a player should be awarded in the same manner with him, or was the sudden effect of a fit of peevishness, it was unluckily said, and, indeed, cannot be justified. Mr. Sheridan's pension was granted to him not as a player, but as a sufferer in the cause of government, when he was manager of the Theatre Royal in Ireland, when parties ran high in 1753. And it must also be allowed that he was a man of literature, and had considerably improved the arts of reading and speaking with distinctness and propriety.

* * * * *

Johnson complained that a man who disliked him repeated his sarcasm to Mr. Sheridan, without telling him what followed, which was, that after a pause he added, "However, I am glad that Mr. Sheridan has a pension, for he is a very good man." Sheridan could never forgive this hasty contemptuous expression. It rankled in his mind; and though I informed him of all that Johnson said, and that he would be very glad to meet him amicably, he positively declined repeated offers which I made, and once went off abruptly from a house where he and I were engaged to dine, because he was told that Dr. Johnson was to be there. I have no sympathetic feeling with such persevering resentment. It is painful when there is a breach between those who have lived together socially and cordially; and I wonder that there is not, in all such cases, a mutual wish that it should be healed. I could perceive that Mr. Sheridan was by no means satisfied with Johnson's acknowledging him to be a good man. That could not soothe his injured vanity. I could not but smile, at the same time that I was offended, to observe Sheridan in the Life of Swift, which he afterwards published, attempting, in the writhings of his resentment, to depreciate Johnson, [110 by characterising him as "A writer of gigantic fame, in these days of little men," that very Johnson whom he once so highly admired and venerated.

This rupture with Sheridan deprived Johnson of one of his most agreeable resources for amusement in his lonely evenings; for Sheridan's well-informed, animated, and bustling mind never suffered conversation to stagnate; and [120 Mrs. Sheridan was a most agreeable companion to an intellectual man. She was sensible, ingenious, unassuming, yet communicative. I recollect, with satisfaction, many pleasing hours which I passed with her under the hospitable roof of her husband, who was to me a very kind friend. Her novel, entitled Memoirs of Miss Sydney Biddulph, contains an excellent moral, while it inculcates a [130 future state of retribution; and what it teaches is impressed upon the mind by a series of as deep distress as can affect humanity, in the amiable and pious heroine who goes to her grave unrelieved, but resigned, and full of hope of "heaven's mercy." Johnson paid her this high compliment upon it: "I know not, Madam, that you have a right, upon moral principles, to make your readers suffer so [140 much."

Mr. Thomas Davies the actor, who then kept a bookseller's shop in Russell-street, Covent-garden, told me that Johnson was very much his friend, and came frequently to his house, where he more than once invited me to meet him; but by some unlucky accident or other he was prevented from coming to us. [150

Mr. Thomas Davies was a man of good understanding and talents, with the advantage of a liberal education. Though somewhat pompous, he was an entertaining companion; and his literary performances have no inconsiderable share of merit. He was a friendly and very hospitable man. Both he and his wife (who has been celebrated for her beauty), though upon the stage for many years, [160 maintained a uniform decency of character; and Johnson esteemed them, and lived in as easy an intimacy with them as with any family which he used to visit. Mr. Davies recollected several of Johnson's remarkable sayings, and was one of the best of the many imitators of his voice and manner, while relating them. He increased my impatience more and more to see the extraordinary man [170 whose works I highly valued, and whose conversation was reported to be so peculiarly excellent.

At last, on Monday the 16th of May, when I was sitting in Mr. Davies's back-parlor, after having drunk tea with him and Mrs. Davies, Johnson unexpectedly came into the shop; and Mr. Davies having perceived him through the glass-door in the room in which we were sitting, [180 advancing towards us,—he announced his awful approach to me, somewhat in the manner of an actor in the part of Horatio, when he addresses Hamlet on the appearance of his father's ghost: "Look, my Lord, it comes." I found that I had a very perfect idea of Johnson's figure, from the portrait of him painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds soon after he had published his Dictionary, in the [190 attitude of sitting in his easy chair in deep meditation; which was the first picture his friend did for him, which Sir Joshua very kindly presented to me, and from which an engraving has been made for this work: Mr. Davies mentioned my name, and respectfully introduced me to him. I was much agitated; and recollecting his prejudice against the Scotch, of which I had heard much, I [200 said to Davies, "Don't tell where I come from."—"From Scotland," cried Davies, roguishly. "Mr. Johnson (said I), I do indeed come from Scotland, but I cannot help it." I am willing to flatter myself that I meant this as light pleasantry to soothe and conciliate him, and not as an humiliating abasement at the expense of my country. But however that might be, this speech was somewhat un- [210 lucky; for with that quickness of wit for which he was so remarkable, he seized the expression "come from Scotland," which I used in the sense of being of that country; and, as if I had said that I had come away from it, or left it, retorted, "That, Sir, I find, is what a very great many of your countrymen cannot help." This stroke stunned me a good deal; and when we had sat down, I felt myself [220 not a little embarrassed, and apprehensive of what might come next. He then addressed himself to Davies: "What do you think of Garrick? He has refused me an order for the play for Miss Williams, because he knows the house will be full. and that an order would be worth three shillings." Eager to take any opening to get into conversation with him, I ventured to say, "Oh, Sir, I cannot think [230 Mr. Garrick would grudge such a trifle to you." "Sir, (said he, with a stern look,) I have known David Garrick longer than you have done: and I know no right you have to talk to me on the subject." Perhaps I deserved this check; for it was rather presumptuous in me, an entire stranger, to express any doubt of the justice of his animadversion upon his old acquaintance and pupil. I now [240 felt myself much mortified, and began to think that the hope which I had long indulged of obtaining his acquaintance was blasted. And, in truth, had not my ardor been uncommonly strong, and my resolution uncommonly persevering, so rough a reception might have deterred me for ever from making any further attempts. Fortunately, however, I remained upon the field not wholly dis- [250 comfited; and was soon rewarded by hearing some of his conversation.

* * * * *

I was highly pleased with the extraordinary vigor of his conversation, and regretted that I was drawn away from it by an engagement at another place. I had, for a part of the evening, been left alone with him, and had ventured to make an observation now and then, which he received very civilly; so [260 that I was satisfied that though there was a roughness in his manner, there was no ill-nature in his disposition. Davies followed me to the door, and when I complained to him a little of the hard blows which the great man had given me, he kindly took upon him to console me by saying, "Don't be uneasy. I can see he likes you very well."

A few days afterwards I called on [270 Davies, and asked him if he thought I might take the liberty of waiting on Mr. Johnson at his chambers in the Temple. He said I certainly might, and that Mr. Johnson would take it as a compliment. So on Tuesday the 24th of May, after having been enlivened by the witty sallies of Messieurs Thornton, Wilkes, Churchill, and Lloyd, with whom I had passed the morning, I boldly repaired to Johnson. [280 His chambers were on the first floor of No. 1, Inner-Temple-lane, and I entered them with an impression given me by the Reverend Dr. Blair, of Edinburgh, who had been introduced to him not long before, and described his having "found the Giant in his den;" an expression which, when I came to be pretty well acquainted with Johnson, I repeated to him, and he was diverted at this picturesque account of himself. Dr. Blair had been presented to him by Dr. James Fordyce. At this time the controversy concerning the pieces published by Mr. James Macpherson, as translations of Ossian, was at its height. Johnson had all along denied their authenticity; and, what was still more provoking to their admirers, maintained that they had no merit. The subject having been introduced by Dr. Fordyce, Dr. Blair, relying on the internal evidence of their antiquity, asked Dr. Johnson whether he thought any man of a modern age could have written such poems? Johnson replied, "Yes, Sir; many men, many women, and many children." Johnson at this time, did not know that Dr. Blair had just published a Dissertation, not only defending their authenticity, but seriously ranking them with the poems of Homer and Virgil; and when he was afterwards informed of this circumstance, he expressed some displeasure at Dr. Fordyce's having suggested the topic, and said, "I am not sorry that they got thus much for their pains. Sir, it was like leading one to talk of a book, when the author is concealed behind the door."

He received me very courteously: [320 but, it must be confessed, that his apartment, and furniture, and morning dress, were sufficiently uncouth. His brown suit of clothes looked very rusty; he had on a little old shrivelled unpowdered wig, which was too small for his head; his shirt-neck and knees of his breeches were loose; his black worsted stockings ill drawn up; and he had a pair of unbuckled shoes by way of slippers. But all these slovenly [330 particularities were forgotten the moment that he began to talk. Some gentlemen, whom I do not recollect, were sitting with him; and when they went away, I also rose; but he said to me, "Nay, don't go."—"Sir (said I), I am afraid that I intrude upon you. It is benevolent to allow me to sit and hear you." He seemed pleased with this compliment, which I sincerely paid him, and answered, [340 "Sir, I am obliged to any man who visits me."—I have preserved the following short minute of what passed this day:—

"Madness frequently discovers itself merely by unnecessary deviation from the usual modes of the world. My poor friend Smart showed the disturbance of his mind, by falling upon his knees, and saying his prayers in the street, or in [350 any other unusual place. Now although, rationally speaking, it is greater madness not to pray at all, than to pray as Smart did, I am afraid there are so many who do not pray, that their understanding is not called in question."

Concerning this unfortunate poet, Christopher Smart, who was confined in a mad-house, he had, at another time, the following conversation with Dr. Burney:— [360 BURNLEY. "How does poor Smart do, Sir; is he likely to recover?" JOHNSON. "It seems as if his mind had ceased to struggle with the disease; for he grows fat upon it." BURNLEY. "Perhaps, Sir, that may be from want of exercise." JOHNSON. "No, Sir; he has partly as much exercise as he used to have, for he digs in the garden. Indeed, before his confinement, he used for exercise to [370 walk to the alehouse; but he was carried back again. I did not think he ought to be shut up. His infirmities were not noxious to society. He insisted on people praying with him; and I'd as lief pray with Kit Smart as any one else. Another charge was, that he did not love clean linen; and I have no passion for it." Johnson continued. "Mankind have a great aversion to intellectual labor; [380 but even supposing knowledge to be easily attainable, more people would be content to be ignorant than would take even a little trouble to acquire it.

"The morality of an action depends on the motive from which we act. If I fling half a crown to a beggar with intention to break his head, and he picks it up and buys victuals with it, the physical effect is good; but, with respect to me, the [390 action is very wrong. So, religious exercises, if not performed with an intention to please God, avail us nothing. As our Savior says of those who perform them from other motives, 'Verily they have their reward.'

"The Christian religion has very strong evidences. It, indeed, appears in some degree strange to reason; but in History we have undoubted facts, against [400 which, in reasoning a priori, we have more arguments than we have for them; but then, testimony has great weight, and casts the balance." . . .

Talking of Garrick, he said, "He is the first man in the world for sprightly conversation."

When I rose a second time, he again pressed me to stay, which I did.

He told me, that he generally went [410 abroad at four in the afternoon, and seldom came home till two in the morning. I took the liberty to ask if he did not think it wrong to live thus, and not make more use of his great talents. He owned it was a bad habit. On reviewing, at the distance of many years, my journal of this period, I wonder how, at my first visit, I ventured to talk to him so freely, and that he bore it with so much indul- [420 gence.

Before we parted, he was so good as to promise to favor me with his company one evening at my lodgings: and, as I took my leave, shook me cordially by the hand. It is almost needless to add, that I felt no little elation at having now so happily established an acquaintance of which I had been so long ambitious.

My readers will, I trust, excuse me [430 for being thus minutely circumstantial, when it is considered that the acquaintance of Dr. Johnson was to me a most valuable acquisition, and laid the foundation of whatever instruction and entertainment they may receive from my collections concerning the great subject of the work which they are now perusing.

I did not visit him again till Monday, June 13, at which time I recollect [440 no part of his conversation, except that when I told him I had been to see Johnson ride upon three horses, he said, "Such a man, Sir, should be encouraged; for his performances show the extent of the human power in one instance, and thus tend to raise our opinion of the faculties of man. He shows what may be attained by persevering application; so that every man may hope, that by giving as [450 much application, although perhaps he may never ride three horses at a time, or dance upon a wire, yet he may be equally expert in whatever profession he has chosen to pursue."

He again shook me by the hand at parting, and asked me why I did not come oftener to him. Trusting that I was now in his good graces, I answered, that he had not given me much [460 encouragement, and reminded him of the check I had received from him at our first interview. "Poh, poh! (said he, with a complacent smile,) never mind these things. Come to me as often as you can. I shall be glad to see you."

I had learned that his place of frequent resort was the Mitre tavern in Fleet-street, where he loved to sit up late, [470 and I begged I might be allowed to pass an evening with him there soon, which he promised I should. A few days afterwards I met him near Temple-bar, about one o'clock in the morning, and asked him if he would then go to the Mitre. "Sir (said he), it is too late; they won't let us in. But I'll go with you another night with all my heart."

A revolution of some importance [480 in my plan of life had just taken place; for instead of procuring a commission in the foot-guards, which was my own inclination, I had, in compliance with my father's wishes, agreed to study the law, and was soon to set out for Utrecht, to hear the lectures of an excellent Civilian in that University, and then to proceed on my travels. Though very desirous of obtaining Dr. Johnson's advice and [490] instructions on the mode of pursuing my studies, I was at this time so occupied, shall I call it? or so dissipated, by the amusements of London, that our next meeting was not till Saturday, June 25, when happening to dine at Clifton's eating-house, in Butcher-row, I was surprised to perceive Johnson come in and take his seat at another table. The mode of dining, or rather being fed, [500] at such houses in London, is well known to many to be particularly unsocial, as there is no Ordinary, or united company, but each person has his own mess, and is under no obligation to hold any intercourse with any one. A liberal and full-minded man, however, who loves to talk, will break through this churlish and unsocial restraint. Johnson and an Irish gentleman got into a dispute concerning the cause of some part of mankind being black. "Why, Sir (said Johnson), it has been accounted for in three ways: either by supposing that they are the posterity of Ham, who was cursed; or that God at first created two kinds of men, one black and another white; or that by the heat of the sun the skin is scorched, and so acquires a sooty hue. This matter has been much canvassed among [520] naturalists, but has never been brought to any certain issue." What the Irishman said is totally obliterated from my mind; but I remember that he became very warm and intemperate in his expressions: upon which Johnson rose, and quietly walked away. When he had retired, his antagonist took his revenge, as he thought, by saying, "He has a most ungainly figure, and an affectation [530] of pomposity, unworthy of a man of genius."

Johnson had not observed that I was in the room. I followed him, however, and he agreed to meet me in the evening at the Mitre. I called on him, and we went thither at nine. We had a good supper, and port wine, of which he then sometimes drank a bottle. The orthodox high-church sound of the MITRE,—[540] the figure and manner of the celebrated SAMUEL JOHNSON,—the extraordinary power and precision of his conversation, and the pride arising from finding myself admitted as his companion, produced a variety of sensations, and a pleasing elevation of mind beyond what I had ever before experienced. I find in my Journal the following minute of our conversation, which, though it will give but a very [550] faint notion of what passed, is, in some degree a valuable record; and it will be curious in this view, as showing how habitual to his mind were some opinions which appear in his works.

"Colley Cibber, Sir, was by no means a blockhead; but by arrogating to himself too much, he was in danger of losing that degree of estimation to which he was entitled. His friends gave out that [560] he intended his birth-day Odes should be bad: but that was not the case, Sir; for he kept them many months by him, and a few years before he died he showed me one of them, with great solicitude to render it as perfect as might be, and I made some corrections, to which he was not very willing to submit. I remember the following couplet in allusion to the King and himself: [570]

'Perched on the eagle's soaring wing,
The lowly linnet loves to sing.'

Sir, he had heard something of the fabulous tale of the wren sitting upon the eagle's wing, and he had applied it to a linnet. Cibber's familiar style, however, was better than that which Whitehead has assumed. Grand nonsense is insupportable. Whitehead is but a little man to inscribe verses to players." [580]

I did not presume to controvert this censure, which was tinctured with his prejudice against players, but I could not help thinking that a dramatic poet might with propriety pay a compliment to an eminent performer, as Whitehead has very happily done in his verses to Mr. Garrick.

"Sir, I do not think Gray a first-rate poet. He has not a bold imagination, [590] nor much command of words. The obscurity in which he has involved himself will not persuade us that he is sublime. His Elegy in a church-yard has a happy selection of images, but I don't like what are called his great things. His ode which begins

'Ruin seize thee, ruthless King,
Confusion on thy banners wait!'

has been celebrated for its abruptness, [600 and plunging into the subject all at once. But such arts as these have no merit, unless when they are original. We admire them only once; and this abruptness has nothing new in it. We have had it often before. Nay, we have it in the old song of Johnny Armstrong:

'Is there ever a man in all Scotland,
From the highest estate to the lowest degree, &c.'

And then, Sir, [610

'Yes, there is a man in Westmoreland,
And Johnny Armstrong they do him call.'

There, now, you plunge at once into the subject. You have no previous narration to lead you to it.—The two next lines in that Ode are, I think, very good:

'Though fained by conquest's crimson
wing,
They mock the air with idle state.'

Here let it be observed, that although his opinion of Gray's poetry was [620 widely different from mine, and I believe from that of most men of taste, by whom it is with justice highly admired, there is certainly much absurdity in the clamor which has been raised, as if he had been culpably injurious to the merit of that bard, and had been actuated by envy. Alas! ye little short-sighted critics, could Johnson be envious of the talents of any of his contemporaries? That his opin- [630 ion on this subject was what in private and in public he uniformly expressed, regardless of what others might think, we may wonder, and perhaps regret; but it is shallow and unjust to charge him with expressing what he did not think.

Finding him in a placid humor, and wishing to avail myself of the opportunity which I fortunately had of consulting a sage, to hear whose wisdom, I con- [640

ceived, in the ardor of youthful imagination, that men filled with a noble enthusiasm for intellectual improvement would gladly have resorted from distant lands;—I opened my mind to him ingenuously, and gave him a little sketch of my life, to which he was pleased to listen with great attention.

I acknowledged, that though educated very strictly in the principles of re- [650 ligion, I had for some time been misled into a certain degree of infidelity; but that I was come now to a better way of thinking, and was fully satisfied of the truth of the Christian revelation, though I was not clear as to every point considered to be orthodox. Being at all times a curious examiner of the human mind, and pleased with an undisguised display of what had passed in it, [660 he called to me with warmth, "Give me your hand; I have taken a liking to you." He then began to descant upon the force of testimony, and the little we could know of final causes; so that the objections of, why was it so? or why was it not so? ought not to disturb us: adding, that he himself had at one period been guilty of a temporary neglect of religion, but that it was not the result of argu- [670 ment, but mere absence of thought.

After having given credit to reports of his bigotry, I was agreeably surprised when he expressed the following very liberal sentiment, which has the additional value of obviating an objection to our holy religion, founded upon the discordant tenets of Christians themselves: "For my part, Sir, I think all Christians, whether Papists or Protestants, agree [680 in the essential articles, and that their differences are trivial, and rather political than religious."

We talked of belief in ghosts. He said, "Sir, I make a distinction between what a man may experience by the mere strength of his imagination, and what imagination cannot possibly produce. Thus, suppose I should think that I saw a form, and heard a voice cry, 'John- [690 son, you are a very wicked fellow, and unless you repent you will certainly be punished;' my own unworthiness is so deeply impressed upon my mind, that I might imagine I thus saw and heard, and therefore I should not believe that an external communication had been made to me. But if a form should appear, and a voice should tell me that a particular man had died at a particular place, [700 and a particular hour, a fact which I had no apprehension of, nor any means of knowing, and this fact, with all its circumstances, should afterwards be unquestionably proved, I should, in that case, be persuaded that I had supernatural intelligence imparted to me."

Here it is proper, once for all, to give a true and fair statement of Johnson's way of thinking upon the question, [710 whether departed spirits are ever permitted to appear in this world, or in any way to operate upon human life. He has been ignorantly misrepresented as weakly credulous upon that subject, and, therefore, though I feel an inclination to disdain and treat with silent contempt so foolish a notion concerning my illustrious friend, yet as I find it has gained ground, it is necessary to refute it. The real fact [720 then is, that Johnson had a very philosophical mind, and such a rational respect for testimony, as to make him submit his understanding to what was authentically proved, though he could not comprehend why it was so. Being thus disposed, he was willing to inquire into the truth of any relation of supernatural agency, a general belief of which has prevailed in all nations and ages. But [730 so far was he from being the dupe of implicit faith, that he examined the matter with a jealous attention, and no man was more ready to refute its falsehood when he had discovered it. Churchill in his poem entitled The Ghost, availed himself of the absurd credulity imputed to Johnson, and drew a caricature of him under the name of "POMPOSO," representing him as one of the believers of [740 the story of a Ghost in Cock-lane, which, in the year 1762, had gained very general credit in London. Many of my readers, I am convinced, are to this hour under an impression that Johnson was thus foolishly deceived. It will therefore surprise them a good deal when they are informed upon undoubted authority, that

Johnson was one of those by whom the imposture was detected. The story [750 had become so popular, that he thought it should be investigated; and in this research he was assisted by the Reverend Dr. Douglas, now Bishop of Salisbury, the great detector of impostures; who informs me, that after the gentlemen who went and examined into the evidence were satisfied of its falsity, Johnson wrote in their presence an account of it, which was published in the news- [760 papers and Gentleman's Magazine, and undeceived the world.

* * * * *

As Dr. Oliver Goldsmith will frequently appear in this narrative, I shall endeavor to make my readers in some degree acquainted with his singular character. He was a native of Ireland, and a contemporary with Mr. Burke, at Trinity College, Dublin, but did not then give much promise of future celebrity. He, [770 however, observed to Mr. Malone, that "though he made no great figure in mathematics, which was a study in much repute there, he could turn an Ode of Horace into English better than any of them." He afterwards studied physic at Edinburgh, and upon the Continent: and I have been informed, was enabled to pursue his travels on foot, partly by demanding at Universities to enter the [780 lists as a disputant, by which, according to the custom of many of them, he was entitled to the premium of a crown, when luckily for him his challenge was not accepted; so that, as I once observed to Dr. Johnson, he disputed his passage through Europe. He then came to England, and was employed successively in the capacities of an usher to an academy, a corrector of the press, a reviewer, [790 and a writer for a newspaper. He had sagacity enough to cultivate assiduously the acquaintance of Johnson, and his faculties were gradually enlarged by the contemplation of such a model. To me and many others it appeared that he studiously copied the manner of Johnson, though, indeed, upon a smaller scale.

At this time I think he had pub- [800

lished nothing with his name, though it was pretty generally known that one Dr. Goldsmith was the author of "An Enquiry into the Present State of Polite Learning in Europe," and of "The Citizen of the World," a series of letters supposed to be written from London by a Chinese. No man had the art of displaying with more advantage as a writer, whatever literary acquisitions he made. "Nihil [810 quod teligit non ornavit." His mind resembled a fertile, but thin soil. There was a quick, but not a strong vegetation, of whatever chanced to be thrown upon it. No deep root could be struck. The oak of the forest did not grow there: but the elegant shrubbery and the fragrant parterre appeared in gay succession. It has been generally circulated and believed that he was a mere fool in conversation; but, in truth, this has been greatly exaggerated. He had, no doubt, a more than common share of that hurry of ideas which we often find in his countrymen, and which sometimes produces a laughable confusion in expressing them. He was very much what the French call un étourdi, and from vanity and an eager desire of being conspicuous wherever he was, he frequently talked carelessly [830 without knowledge of the subject, or even without thought. His person was short, his countenance coarse and vulgar, his deportment that of a scholar awkwardly affecting the easy gentleman. Those who were in any way distinguished, excited envy in him to so ridiculous an excess, that the instances of it are hardly credible. When accompanying two beautiful young ladies with their mother [840 on a tour in France, he was seriously angry that more attention was paid to them than to him; and once at the exhibition of the Fantoccini in London, when those who sat next him observed with what dexterity a puppet was made to toss a pike, he could not bear that it should have such praise, and exclaimed with some warmth, "Pshaw! I can do it better myself." [850

He, I am afraid, had no settled system of any sort, so that his conduct must not be strictly scrutinized; but his affections were social and generous, and when he had money he gave it away very liberally. His desire of imaginary consequence predominated over his attention to truth. When he began to rise into notice, he said he had a brother who was Dean of Durham, a fiction so easily detected, [860 that it is wonderful how he should have been so inconsiderate as to hazard it. He boasted to me at this time of the power of his pen in commanding money, which I believe was true in a certain degree, though in the instance he gave he was by no means correct. He told me that he had sold a novel for four hundred pounds. This was his Vicar of Wakefield. But Johnson informed me, that he had [870 made the bargain for Goldsmith, and the price was sixty pounds. "And, Sir (said he), a sufficient price too, when it was sold, for then the fame of Goldsmith had not been elevated, as it afterwards was, by his Traveller; and the bookseller had such faint hopes of profit by his bargain, that he kept the manuscript by him a long time, and did not publish it till after the Traveller had appeared. Then, to [880 be sure, it was accidentally worth more money."

Mrs. Piozzi and Sir John Hawkins have strangely misstated the history of Goldsmith's situation and Johnson's friendly interference, when this novel was sold. I shall give it authentically from Johnson's own exact narration:

"I received one morning a message from poor Goldsmith that he was in [890 great distress, and as it was not in his power to come to me, begging that I would come to him as soon as possible. I sent him a guinea, and promised to come to him directly. I accordingly went as soon as I was dressed, and found that his landlady had arrested him for his rent, at which he was in a violent passion. I perceived that he had already changed my guinea, and had got a bottle of [900 Madeira and a glass before him. I put the cork into the bottle, desired he would be calm, and began to talk to him of the means by which he might be extricated. He then told me that he had a novel ready for the press, which he produced to me. I looked into it, and saw its merit; told the landlady I should soon return, and having gone to a bookseller, sold it for sixty pounds. I brought Goldsmith [910 the money, and he discharged his rent, not without rating his landlady in a high tone for having used him so ill."

My next meeting with Johnson was on Friday the 1st of July, when he and I and Dr. Goldsmith supped at the Mitre. I was before this time pretty well acquainted with Goldsmith, who was one of the brightest ornaments of the Johnsonian school. Goldsmith's respectful attachment to Johnson was then at its height; for his own literary reputation had not yet distinguished him so much as to excite a vain desire of competition with his great Master. He had increased my admiration of the goodness of Johnson's heart, by incidental remarks in the course of conversation, such as, when I mentioned Mr. Levet, whom he entertained under his roof, "He is poor [930 and honest, which is recommendation enough to Johnson;" and when I wondered that he was very kind to a man of whom I had heard a very bad character, "He is now become miserable, and that insures the protection of Johnson."

Goldsmith attempting this evening to maintain, I suppose from an affectation of paradox, "that knowledge was not desirable on its own account, for it [940 often was a source of unhappiness." JOHNSON. "Why, Sir, that knowledge may in some cases produce unhappiness, I allow. But, upon the whole, knowledge, per se, is certainly an object which every man would wish to attain, although, perhaps, he may not take the trouble necessary for attaining it."

Dr. John Campbell, the celebrated political and biographical writer, being mentioned, Johnson said, "Campbell is a man of much knowledge, and has a good share of imagination. His 'Hermippus Redivivus' is very entertaining, as an account of the Hermetic philosophy, and as furnishing a curious history of the extravagances of the human mind. If it were merely imaginary, it would be nothing at all. Campbell is not always rigidly careful of truth in his conversation; [960 but I do not believe there is any thing of this carelessness in his books. Campbell is a good man, a pious man. I am afraid he has not been in the inside of a church for many years; but he never passes a church without pulling off his hat. This shows that he has good principles. I used to go pretty often to Campbell's on a Sunday evening till I began to consider that the shoals of Scotchmen who [970 flocked about him might probably say, when any thing of mine was well done, 'Ay, ay, he has learnt this of CAWMELL!'"

He talked very contemptuously of Churchill's poetry, observing, that "it had a temporary currency, only from its audacity of abuse, and being filled with living names, that it would sink into oblivion." I ventured to hint that he was not quite a fair judge, as Churchill [980 had attacked him violently. JOHNSON. "Nay, Sir, I am a very fair judge. He did not attack me violently till he found I did not like his poetry; and his attack on me shall not prevent me from continuing to say what I think of him, from an apprehension that it may be ascribed to resentment. No, Sir, I called the fellow a blockhead at first, and I will call him a blockhead still. However, I [990 will acknowledge that I have a better opinion of him now, than I once had; for he has shown more fertility than I expected. To be sure, he is a tree that cannot produce good fruit: he only bears crabs. But, Sir, a tree that produces a great many crabs is better than a tree which produces only a few."

In this depreciation of Churchill's poetry I could not agree with him. [1000 It is very true that the greatest part of it is upon the topics of the day, on which account, as it brought him great fame and profit at the time, it must proportionably slide out of the public attention as other occasional objects succeed. But Churchill had extraordinary vigor both of thought and expression. His portraits of the players will ever be valuable to the true lovers of the drama; and his strong [1010 caricatures of several eminent men of his age, will not be forgotten by the curious. Let me add, that there are in his works many passages which are of a general nature; and his Prophecy of Famine is a poem of no ordinary merit. It is, indeed, falsely injurious to Scotland, but therefore may be allowed a greater share of invention.

Bonnell Thornton had just published a burlesque "Ode on St. Cecilia's day, adapted to the ancient British music, viz. the salt-box, the jews-harp, the marrow-bones and cleaver, the hum-strum or hurdy-gurdy, &c." Johnson praised its humor, and seemed much diverted with it. He repeated the following passage:

"In strains more exalted the salt-box shall join,
And clattering and battering and clapping combine;
With a rap and a tap while the hollow side sounds,
Up and down leaps the flap, and with rattling rebounds."

I mentioned the periodical paper called The Connoisseur. He said it wanted matter.—No doubt it had not the deep thinking of Johnson's writings. But surely it has just views of the surface of life, and a very sprightly manner. His opinion of The World was not much higher than of The Connoisseur.

Let me here apologize for the imperfect manner in which I am obliged to exhibit Johnson's conversation at this period. In the early part of my acquaintance with him, I was so wrapt in admiration of his extraordinary colloquial talents, and so little accustomed to his peculiar mode of expression, that I found it extremely difficult to recollect and record his conversation with its genuine vigor and vivacity. In progress of time, when my mind was, as it were, strongly impregnated with the Johnsonian æther, I could with much more facility and exactness, carry in my memory and commit to paper the exuberant variety of his wisdom and wit.

At this time Miss Williams, as she was then called, though she did not reside with him in the Temple under his roof, but had lodgings in Bolt-court, Fleet-street, had so much of his attention, that he every night drank tea with her before he went home, however late it might be, and she always sat up for him. This, it may be fairly conjectured, was not alone a proof of his regard for her, but of his own unwillingness to go into solitude, before that unseasonable hour at which he had habituated himself to expect the oblivion of repose. Dr. Goldsmith, being a privileged man, went with him this night, strutting away, and calling to me with an air of superiority, like that of an esoteric over an exoteric disciple of a sage of antiquity, "I go to see Miss Williams." I confess, I then envied him this mighty privilege, of which he seemed so proud; but it was not long before I obtained the same mark of distinction.

* * * * *

On Wednesday, July 6, he was engaged to sup with me at my lodgings in Downing-street, Westminster. But on the preceding night my landlord having behaved very rudely to me and some company who were with me, I had resolved not to remain another night in his house. I was exceedingly uneasy at the awkward appearance I supposed I should make to Johnson and the other gentleman whom I had invited, not being able to receive them at home, and being obliged to order supper at the Mitre. I went to Johnson in the morning, and talked of it as of a serious distress. He laughed, and said, "Consider, Sir, how insignificant this will appear a twelvemonth hence."—Were this consideration to be applied to most of the little vexatious incidents of life, by which our quiet is too often disturbed, it would prevent many painful sensations. I have tried it frequently with good effect. "There is nothing (continued he) in this mighty misfortune; nay, we shall be better at the Mitre." I told him that I had been at Sir John Fielding's office, complaining of my landlord, and had been informed, that though I had taken my lodgings for a year, I might, upon proof of his bad behavior, quit them when I pleased, without being under an obligation to pay rent for any longer time than while I possessed them. The fertility of Johnson's mind could show itself even upon so small a matter as this. "Why, Sir (said he), I suppose this must be the law, since you have been told so in Bow-street. But, if your landlord could hold you to your bargain, and the lodgings should be yours for a year, you may [1120] certainly use them as you think fit. So, Sir, you may quarter two life-guardmen upon him; or you may send the greatest scoundrel you can find into your apartments; or you may say that you want to make some experiments in natural philosophy, and may burn a large quantity of assafoetida in his house."

I had as my guests this evening at the Mitre tavern, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Goldsmith, Mr. Thomas Davies, Mr. Eccles, an Irish gentleman, for whose agreeable company I was obliged to Mr. Davies, and the Reverend Mr. John Ogilvie, who was desirous of being in company with my illustrious friend, while I in my turn was proud to have the honor of showing one of my countrymen upon what easy terms Johnson permitted me to live with him. [1140]

Goldsmith, as usual, endeavored, with too much eagerness, to shine, and disputed very warmly with Johnson against the well known maxim of the British constitution, "the King can do no wrong;" affirming, that "what was morally false could not be politically true; and as the King might, in the exercise of his regal power, command and cause the doing of what was wrong, it certainly might [1150] be said, in sense and in reason, that he could do wrong." JOHNSON. "Sir, you are to consider, that in our constitution, according to its true principles, the King is the head, he is supreme: he is above everything, and there is no power by which he can be tried. Therefore, it is, Sir, that we hold the King can do no wrong; that whatever may happen to be wrong in government may not be [1160] above our reach, by being ascribed to Majesty. Redress is always to be had against oppression, by punishing the immediate agents. The King, though he should command, cannot force a Judge to condemn a man unjustly; therefore it is the Judge whom we prosecute and punish. Political institutions are formed upon the consideration of what will most frequently tend to the good of the whole, al- [1170] though now and then exceptions may occur. Thus it is better in general that a nation should have a supreme legislative power, although it may at times be abused. And then, Sir, there is this consideration, that if the abuse be enormous, Nature will rise up, and claiming her original rights, overturn a corrupt political system." I mark this animated sentence with peculiar pleasure, as a noble instance [1180] of that truly dignified spirit of freedom which ever glowed in his heart, though he was charged with slavish tenets by superficial observers; because he was at all times indignant against that false patriotism, that pretended love of freedom, that unruly restlessness which is inconsistent with the stable authority of any good government.

This generous sentiment, which he [1190] uttered with great fervor, struck me exceedingly, and stirred my blood to that pitch of fancied resistance, the possibility of which I am glad to keep in mind, but to which I trust I never shall be forced.

"Great abilities (said he) are not requisite for an Historian; for in historical composition, all the greatest powers of the human mind are quiescent. He has facts ready to his hand; so there is no [1200] exercise of invention. Imagination is not required in any high degree; only about as much as is used in the lower kinds of poetry. Some penetration, accuracy, and coloring, will fit a man for the task, if he can give the application which is necessary."

"Bayle's Dictionary is a very useful work for those to consult who love the biographical part of literature, which [1210] is what I love most."

Talking of the eminent writers in Queen Anne's reign, he observed, "I think Dr. Arbuthnot the first man among them. He was the most universal genius, being an excellent physician, a man of deep learning, and a man of much humor. Mr. Addison was, to be sure, a great man; his learning was not profound; but his morality, his humor, and his elegance [1220] of writing, set him very high."

Mr. Ogilvie was unlucky enough to choose for the topic of his conversation the praises of his native country. He began with saying, that there was very rich land around Edinburgh. Goldsmith, who had studied physic there, contradicted this, very truly, with a sneering laugh. Disconcerted a little by this, Mr. Ogilvie then took a new ground, [1230 where, I suppose, he thought himself perfectly safe; for he observed, that Scotland had a great many noble wild prospects. JOHNSON. "I believe, Sir, you have a great many. Norway, too, has noble wild prospects; and Lapland is remarkable for prodigious noble wild prospects. But, Sir, let me tell you, the noblest prospect which a Scotchman ever sees, is the high road that leads him [1240 to England!" This unexpected and pointed sally produced a roar of applause. After all, however, those who admire the rude grandeur of Nature, cannot deny it to Caledonia.

On Saturday, July 9, I found Johnson surrounded with a numerous levee, but have not preserved any part of his conversation. On the 14th we had another evening by ourselves at the Mitre. It [1250 happening to be a very rainy night, I made some common-place observations on the relaxation of nerves and depression of spirits which such weather occasioned; adding, however, that it was good for the vegetable creation. Johnson, who, as we have already seen, denied that the temperature of the air had any influence on the human frame, answered, with a smile of ridicule, "Why, yes, Sir, it is good [1260 for vegetables, and for the animals who eat those vegetables, and for the animals who eat those animals." This observation of his aptly enough introduced a good supper; and I soon forgot, in Johnson's company, the influence of a moist atmosphere.

Feeling myself now quite at ease as his companion, though I had all possible reverence for him, I expressed a regret that I could not be so easy with my father, though he was not much older than Johnson, and certainly however respectable had not more learning and greater abilities to depress me. I asked him the reason of this. JOHNSON. "Why, Sir, I am a man of the world. I live in the world, and I take, in some degree, the color of the world as it moves along. Your father is a Judge in a remote part of [1280 the island, and all his notions are taken from the old world. Besides, Sir, there must always be a struggle between a father and son, while one aims at power and the other at independence." I said, I was afraid my father would force me to be a lawyer. JOHNSON. "Sir, you need not be afraid of his forcing you to be a laborious practising lawyer; that is not in his power. For as the proverb [1290 says, 'One man may lead a horse to the water, but twenty cannot make him drink.' He may be displeased that you are not what he wishes you to be; but that displeasure will not go far. If he insists only on your having as much law as is necessary for a man of property, and then endeavors to get you into Parliament, he is quite in the right."

He enlarged very convincingly [1300 upon the excellence of rhyme over blank verse in English poetry. I mentioned to him that Dr. Adam Smith, in his lectures upon composition, when I studied under him in the College of Glasgow, had maintained the same opinion strenuously, and I repeated some of his arguments. JOHNSON. "Sir, I was once in company with Smith, and we did not take to each other; but had I known that he loved [1310 rhyme as much as you tell me he does, I should have HUGGED him."

Talking of those who denied the truth of Christianity, he said, "It is always easy to be on the negative side. If a man were now to deny that there is salt upon the table, you could not reduce him to an absurdity. Come, let us try this a little further. I deny that Canada is taken; and I can support my denial by [1320 pretty good arguments. The French are a much more numerous people than we; and it is not likely that they would allow us to take it. 'But the ministry have assured us, in all the formality of the Gazette, that it is taken.'—Very true. But the ministry have put us to an enormous expense by the war in America, and it is their interest to persuade us that we have got something for our money.— [1330 'But the fact is confirmed by thousands of men who were at the taking of it.'—Ay, but these men have still more interest in deceiving us. They don't want that you should think the French have beat them, but that they have beat the French. Now suppose you should go over and find that it really is taken, that would only satisfy yourself; for when you come home we will not believe you. [1340] We will say, you have been bribed.— Yet, Sir, notwithstanding all these plausible objections, we have no doubt that Canada is really ours. Such is the weight of common testimony. How much stronger are the evidences of the Christian religion?

"Idleness is a disease which must be combated; but I would not advise a rigid adherence to a particular plan of [1350] study. I myself have never persisted in any plan for two days together. A man ought to read just as inclination leads him; for what he reads as a task will do him little good. A young man should read five hours in a day, and so may acquire a great deal of knowledge."

To a man of vigorous intellect and ardent curiosity like his own, reading without a regular plan may be beneficial; though even such a man must submit to it, if he would attain a full understanding of any of the sciences.

To such a degree of unrestrained frankness had he now accustomed me, that in the course of this evening I talked of the numerous reflections which had been thrown out against him on account of his having accepted a pension from his present Majesty. "Why, Sir (said [1370] he, with a hearty laugh), it is a mighty foolish noise that they make. I have accepted of a pension as a reward which has been thought due to my literary merit; and now that I have this pension, I am the same man in every respect that I have ever been; I retain the same principles. It is true, that I cannot now curse (smiling) the House of Hanover; nor would it be decent for me to drink [1380] King James's health in the wine that King George gives me money to pay for. But, Sir, I think that the pleasure of cursing the House of Hanover, and drinking King James's health, are amply overbalanced by three hundred pounds a year."

There was here, most certainly, an affectation of more Jacobitism than he really had; and indeed an intention of admitting, for the moment, in a [1390] much greater extent than it really existed, the charge of disaffection imputed to him by the world, merely for the purpose of showing how dexterously he could repel an attack, even though he were placed in the most disadvantageous position; for I have heard him declare, that if holding up his right hand would have secured victory at Culloden to Prince Charles's army, he was not sure he [1400] would have held it up; so little confidence had he in the right claimed by the House of Stuart, and so fearful was he of the consequences of another revolution on the throne of Great Britain; and Mr. Topham Beauclerk assured me, he had heard him say this before he had his pension. At another time he said to Mr. Langton, "Nothing has ever offered, that has made it worth my while to consider the question fully." He, however, also said to the same gentleman, talking of King James the Second, "It was become impossible for him to reign any longer in this country." He no doubt had an early attachment to the House of Stuart; but his zeal had cooled as his reason strengthened. Indeed, I heard him once say, "that after the death of a violent Whig, with whom he used [1420] to contend with great eagerness, he felt his Toryism much abated." I suppose he meant Mr. Walmsley.

Yet there is no doubt that at earlier periods he was wont often to exercise both his pleasantry and ingenuity in talking Jacobitism. My much respected friend, Dr. Douglas, now Bishop of Salisbury, has favored me with the following admirable instance from his Lord- [1430] ship's own recollection. One day when dining at old Mr. Langton's, where Miss Roberts, his niece, was one of the company, Johnson, with his usual complacent attention to the fair sex, took her by the hand and said, "My dear, I hope you are a Jacobite." Old Mr. Langton, who, though a high and steady Tory, was attached to the present Royal Family, seemed offended, and asked Johnson, [1440] with great warmth, what he could mean by putting such a question to his niece! "Why, Sir (said Johnson), I meant no offence to your niece, I meant her a great compliment. A Jacobite, Sir, believes in the divine right of Kings. He that believes in the divine right of Kings believes in a Divinity. A Jacobite believes in the divine right of Bishops. He that believes in the divine right of Bishops believes in the divine authority of the Christian religion. Therefore, Sir, a Jacobite is neither an Atheist nor a Deist. That cannot be said of a Whig; for Whiggism is a negation of all principle."

* * * * *

Next morning I found him alone, and have preserved the following fragments of his conversation. Of a gentleman who was mentioned, he said, "I have not met with any man for a long time [1460] who has given me such general displeasure. He is totally unfixed in his principles, and wants to puzzle other people." I said his principles had been poisoned by a noted infidel writer, but that he was, nevertheless, a benevolent good man. JOHNSON. "We can have no dependance upon that instinctive, that constitutional goodness, which is not founded upon principle. I grant you that such a [1470] man may be a very amiable member of society. I can conceive him placed in such a situation that he is not much tempted to deviate from what is right; and as every man prefers virtue, when there is not some strong incitement to transgress its precepts, I can conceive him doing nothing wrong. But if such a man stood in need of money, I should not like to trust him; and I should [1480] certainly not trust him with young ladies, for there there is always temptation. Hume, and other sceptical innovators, are vain men, and will gratify themselves at any expense. Truth will not afford sufficient food to their vanity; so they have betaken themselves to error. Truth, Sir, is a cow which will yield such people no more milk, and so they are gone to milk the bull. If I could have al- [1490] lowed myself to gratify my vanity at the expense of truth, what fame might I have acquired. Everything which Hume has advanced against Christianity had passed through my mind long before he wrote. Always remember this, that after a system is well settled upon positive evidence, a few partial objections ought not to shake it. The human mind is so limited, that it cannot take in all the parts [1500] of a subject, so that there may be objections raised against any thing." . . .

I mentioned Hume's argument against the belief of miracles, that it is more probable that the witnesses to the truth of them are mistaken, or speak falsely, than that the miracles should be true. JOHNSON. "Why, Sir, the great difficulty of proving miracles should make us very cautious in believing them. But let [1510] us consider; although God has made Nature to operate by certain fixed laws, yet it is not unreasonable to think that he may suspend those laws, in order to establish a system highly advantageous to mankind. Now the Christian Religion is a most beneficial system, as it gives us light and certainty where we were before in darkness and doubt. The miracles which prove it are attested by men [1520] who had no interest in deceiving us; but who, on the contrary, were told that they should suffer persecution, and did actually lay down their lives in confirmation of the truth of the facts which they asserted. Indeed, for some centuries the heathens did not pretend to deny the miracles; but said they were performed by the aid of evil spirits. This is a circumstance of great weight. Then, [1530] Sir, when we take the proofs derived from prophecies which have been so exactly fulfilled, we have most satisfactory evidence. Supposing a miracle possible, as to which, in my opinion, there can be no doubt, we have as strong evidence for the miracles in support of Christianity, as the nature of the thing admits."

At night, Mr. Johnson and I supped in a private room at the Turk's Head [1540] coffee-house, in the Strand. "I encourage this house (said he), for the mistress of it is a good civil woman, and has not much business.

"Sir, I love the acquaintance of young people; because, in the first place, I don't like to think myself growing old. In the next place, young acquaintances must last longest, if they do last; and then, Sir, young men have more virtue than [1550] old men; they have more generous sentiments in every respect. I love the young dogs of this age, they have more wit and humor and knowledge of life than we had; but then the dogs are not so good scholars. Sir, in my early years I read very hard. It is a sad reflection but a true one, that I knew almost as much at eighteen as I do now. My judgment, to be sure, was not so good; but I had all the facts. [1560] I remember very well, when I was at Oxford, an old gentleman said to me, 'Young man, ply your book diligently now, and acquire a stock of knowledge, for when years come upon you, you will find that poring upon books will be but an irksome task.'

This account of his reading, given by himself in plain words, sufficiently confirms what I have already ad- [1570] vanced upon the disputed question as to his application. It reconciles any seeming inconsistency in his way of talking upon it at different times; and shows that idleness and reading hard were with him relative terms, the import of which, as used by him, must be gathered from a comparison with what scholars of different degrees of ardor and assiduity have been known to do. And let it be re- [1580] membered, that he was now talking spontaneously, and expressing his genuine sentiments; whereas at other times he might be induced, from his spirit of contradiction, or more properly from his love of argumentative contest, to speak lightly of his own application to study. It is pleasing to consider that the old gentleman's gloomy prophecy as to the irksomeness of books to men of an ad- [1590] vanced age, which is too often fulfilled, was so far from being verified in Johnson, that his ardor for literature never failed, and his last writings had more ease and vivacity than any of his earlier productions.

He mentioned to me now, for the first time, that he had been distressed by melancholy, and for that reason had been obliged to fly from study and medita- [1600] tion, to the dissipating variety of life.

Against melancholy he recommended constant occupation of mind, a great deal of exercise, moderation in eating and drinking, and especially to shun drinking at night. He said melancholy people were apt to fly to intemperance for relief, but that it sunk them much deeper in misery. He observed, that laboring men who work hard, and live sparingly, are [1610] seldom or never troubled with low spirits.

He again insisted on the duty of maintaining subordination of rank. "Sir, I would no more deprive a nobleman of his respect, than of his money. I consider myself as acting a part in the great system of society, and I do to others as I would have them to do to me. I would behave to a nobleman as I should expect he would behave to me, were I a [1620] nobleman and he Sam. Johnson. Sir, there is one Mrs. Macaulay in this town, a great republican. One day when I was at her house, I put on a very grave countenance, and said to her, 'Madam, I am now become a convert to your way of thinking. I am convinced that all mankind are upon an equal footing; and to give you an unquestionable proof, Madam, that I am in earnest, here [1630] is a very sensible, civil, well-behaved fellow citizen, your footman; I desire that he may be allowed to sit down and dine with us.' I thus, Sir, showed her the absurdity of the levelling doctrine. She has never liked me since. Sir, your levellers wish to level down as far as themselves; but they cannot bear levelling up to themselves. They would all have some people under them; why not [1640] then have some people above them?" I mentioned a certain author who disgusted me by his forwardness, and by showing no deference to noblemen into whose company he was admitted. JOHNSON. "Suppose a shoemaker should claim an equality with him, as he does with a Lord: how he would stare. 'Why, Sir, do you stare? (says the shoemaker,) I do great service to society. 'Tis [1650] true, I am paid for doing it; but so are you, Sir: and I am sorry to say it, better paid than I am, for doing something not so necessary. For mankind could do better without your books, than without my shoes.' Thus, Sir, there would be a perpetual struggle for precedence, were there no fixed invariable rules for the distinction of rank, which creates no jealousy, as it is allowed to be accidental." [1660]

* * * * *

I again begged his advice as to my method of study at Utrecht. "Come, (said he) let us make a day of it. Let us go down to Greenwich and dine, and talk of it there." The following Saturday was fixed for this excursion.

As we walked along the Strand to-night, arm in arm, a woman of the town accosted us, in the usual enticing manner. "No, no, my girl (said Johnson), it [1670] won't do." He, however, did not treat her with harshness; and we talked of the wretched life of such women, and agreed, that much more misery than happiness, upon the whole, is produced by illicit commerce between the sexes.

On Saturday, July 30, Dr. Johnson and I took a sculler at the Temple-stairs, and set out for Greenwich. I asked him if he really thought a knowledge of [1680] the Greek and Latin languages an essential requisite to a good education. JOHNSON. "Most certainly, Sir; for those who know them have a very great advantage over those who do not. Nay, Sir, it is wonderful what a difference learning makes upon people even in the common intercourse of life, which does not appear to be much connected with it." "And yet (said I), people go through the [1690] world very well, and carry on the business of life to good advantage, without learning." JOHNSON. "Why, Sir, that may be true in cases where learning cannot possibly be of any use; for instance, this boy rows us as well without learning, as if he could sing the song of Orpheus to the Argonauts, who were the first sailors." He then called to the boy, "What would you give, my lad, to know about [1700] the Argonauts?" "Sir (said the boy), I would give what I have." Johnson was much pleased with his answer, and we gave him a double fare. Dr. Johnson then turning to me, "Sir (said he), a desire of knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind; and every human being, whose mind is not debauched, will be willing to give all that he has, to get knowledge." [1710]

We landed at the Old Swan, and walked to Billingsgate, where we took oars and moved smoothly along the silver Thames. It was a very fine day. We were entertained with the immense number and variety of ships that were lying at anchor, and with the beautiful country on each side of the river.

I talked of preaching, and of the great success which those called Metho- [1720] dists have. JOHNSON. "Sir, it is owing to their expressing themselves in a plain and familiar manner, which is the only way to do good to the common people, and which clergymen of genius and learning ought to do from a principle of duty, when it is suited to their congregations; a practice, for which they will be praised by men of sense. To insist against drunkenness as a crime, because it de- [1730] bases reason, the noblest faculty of man, would be of no service to the common people; but to tell them that they may die in a fit of drunkenness, and show them how dreadful that would be, cannot fail to make a deep impression. Sir, when your Scotch clergy give up their homely manner, religion will soon decay in that country." Let this observation, as Johnson meant it, be ever remembered. [1740]

I was much pleased to find myself with Johnson at Greenwich, which he celebrates in his "London" as a favorite scene. I had the poem in my pocket, and read the lines aloud with enthusiasm:

"On Thames's banks in silent thought we stood,
Where Greenwich smiles upon the silver flood:
Pleased with the seat which gave ELIZA birth,
We kneel, and kiss the consecrated earth."

He remarked that the structure of [1750] Greenwich hospital was too magnificent for a place of charity, and that its parts were too much detached, to make one great whole.

Buchanan, he said, was a very fine poet; and observed, that he was the first who complimented a lady, by ascribing to her the different perfections of the heathen goddesses; but that Johnston improved upon this, by making his [1760] lady, at the same time, free from their defects.

He dwelt upon Buchanan's elegant verses to Mary, Queen of Scots, Nympha Caledoniæ, &c. and spoke with enthusiasm of the beauty of Latin verse. "All the modern languages (said he) cannot furnish so melodious a line as

*Formosam resonare doces Amarillida
silvas.* [1770]

Afterwards he entered upon the business of the day, which was to give me his advice as to a course of study. And here I am to mention with much regret, that my record of what he said is miserably scanty. I recollect with admiration an animating blaze of eloquence, which roused every intellectual power in me to the highest pitch, but must have dazzled me so much, [1780] that my memory could not preserve the substance of his discourse; for the note which I find of it is no more than this:—"He ran over the grand scale of human knowledge; advised me to select some particular branch to excel in, but to acquire a little of every kind." The defect of my minutes will be fully supplied by a long letter upon the subject, which he favored me with, after I had been [1790] some time at Utrecht, and which my readers will have the pleasure to peruse in its proper place.

We walked in the evening in Greenwich Park. He asked me I suppose, by way of trying my disposition, "Is not this very fine?" Having no exquisite relish of the beauties of Nature, and being more delighted with "the busy hum of men," I answered, "Yes, Sir; but not equal [1800] to Fleet-street." JOHNSON. "You are right, Sir."

I am aware that many of my readers may censure my want of taste. Let me, however, shelter myself under the authority of a very fashionable Baronet in the brilliant world, who, on his attention being called to the fragrance of a May evening in the country, observed, "This may be very well; but for my part, [1810] I prefer the smell of a flambeau at the play-house."

We stayed so long at Greenwich, that our sail up the river, in our return to London, was by no means so pleasant as in the morning; for the night air was so cold that it made me shiver. I was the more sensible of it from having sat up all the night before recollecting and writing in my Journal what I thought [1820] worthy of preservation; an exertion, which, during the first part of my acquaintance with Johnson, I frequently made. I remember having sat up four nights in one week, without being much incommoded in the day time.

Johnson, whose robust frame was not in the least affected by the cold, scolded me, as if my shivering had been a paltry effeminacy, saying, "Why do you [1830] shiver?" Sir William Scott, of the Commons, told me, that when he complained of a head-ache in the post-chaise, as they were travelling together to Scotland, Johnson treated him in the same manner: "At your age, Sir, I had no head-ache." It is not easy to make allowance for sensations in others, which we ourselves have not at the time. We must all have experienced how very differently we [1840] are affected by the complaints of our neighbors, when we are well and when we are ill. In full health, we can scarcely believe that they suffer much; so faint is the image of pain upon our imagination: when softened by sickness, we readily sympathize with the sufferings of others.

We concluded the day at the Turk's Head coffee-house very socially. [1850] He was pleased to listen to a particular account which I gave him of my family, and of its hereditary estate, as to the extent and population of which he asked questions, and made calculations; recommending, at the same time, a liberal kindness to the tenantry, as people over whom the proprietor was placed by Providence. He took delight in hearing my description of the romantic seat [1860] of my ancestors. "I must be there, Sir (said he), and we will live in the old castle; and if there is not a room in it remaining, we will build one." I was highly flattered, but could scarcely indulge a hope that Auchinleck would indeed be honored by his presence, and celebrated by a description, as it afterwards was, in his Journey to the Western Islands.

After we had again talked of my [1870 setting out for Holland, he said, "I must see thee out of England; I will accompany you to Harwich." I could not find words to express what I felt upon this unexpected and very great mark of his affectionate regard.

Next day, Sunday, July 31, I told him I had been that morning at a meeting of the people called Quakers, where I had heard a woman preach. JOHNSON. [1880 "Sir, a woman's preaching is like a dog's walking on his hind legs. It is not done well; but you are surprised to find it done at all."

On Tuesday, August 2 (the day of my departure from London having been fixed for the 5th), Dr. Johnson did me the honor to pass a part of the morning with me at my chambers. He said, that "he always felt an inclination to do nothing." [1890 I observed, that it was strange to think that the most indolent man in Britain had written the most laborious work, THE ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

I mentioned an imprudent publication, by a certain friend of his, at an early period of life, and asked him if he thought it would hurt him. JOHNSON. "No, Sir; not much. It may, perhaps, be mentioned at an election." [1900

I had now made good my title to be a privileged man, and was carried by him in the evening to drink tea with Miss Williams, whom, though under the misfortune of having lost her sight, I found to be agreeable in conversation; for she had a variety of literature, and expressed herself well; but her peculiar value was the intimacy in which she had long lived with Johnson, by which [1910 she was well acquainted with his habits, and knew how to lead him on to talk.

After tea he carried me to what he called his walk, which was a long narrow paved court in the neighborhood, overshadowed by some trees. There we sauntered a considerable time; and I complained to him that my love of London and of his company was such, that I shrunk almost from the thought of going away even [1920 to travel, which is generally so much desired by young men. He roused me by manly and spirited conversation. He advised me, when settled in any place abroad, to study with an eagerness after knowledge, and to apply to Greek an hour every day; and when I was moving about, to read diligently the great book of mankind.

On Wednesday, August 3, we had [1930 our last social evening at the Turk's Head coffee-house, before my setting out for foreign parts. I had the misfortune, before we parted, to irritate him unintentionally. I mentioned to him how common it was in the world to tell absurd stories of him, and to ascribe to him very strange sayings. JOHNSON. "What do they make me say, Sir?" BOSWELL. "Why, Sir, as an instance very strange [1940 indeed (laughing heartily as I spoke), David Hume told me, you said that you would stand before a battery of cannon to restore the Convocation to its full powers." —Little did I apprehend that he had actually said this: but I was soon convinced of my error; for, with a determined look, he thundered out, "And would I not, Sir? Shall the Presbyterian Kirk of Scotland have its General Assembly, [1950 and the Church of England be denied its Convocation?" He was walking up and down the room, while I told him the anecdote; but when he uttered this explosion of high-church zeal, he had come close to my chair, and his eye flashed with indignation. I bowed to the storm, and diverted the force of it, by leading him to expatiate on the influence which religion derived from maintaining [1960 the church with great external respectability. . . .

On Friday, August 5, we set out early in the morning in the Harwich stage-coach. A fat elderly gentlewoman, and a young Dutchman, seemed the most inclined among us to conversation. At the inn where we dined, the gentlewoman said that she had done her best to educate her children; and, particularly, that [1970 she had never suffered them to be a moment idle. JOHNSON. "I wish, Madam, you would educate me too; for I have been an idle fellow all my life." "I am sure, Sir (said she), you have not been idle." JOHNSON. "Nay, Madam, it is very true; and that gentleman there (pointing to me), has been idle. He was idle at Edinburgh. His father sent him to Glasgow, where he continued [1980 to be idle. He then came to London, where he has been very idle; and now he is going to Utrecht, where he will be as idle as ever." I asked him privately how he could expose me so. JOHNSON. "Poh, poh! (said he) they knew nothing about you, and will think of it no more." In the afternoon the gentlewoman talked violently against the Roman Catholics, and of the horrors of the Inquisition. [1990 To the utter astonishment of all the passengers but myself, who knew that he could talk upon any side of a question, he defended the Inquisition, and maintained, that "false doctrine should be checked on its first appearance; that the civil power should unite with the church in punishing those who dare to attack the established religion, and that such only were punished by the Inquisition." [2000 He had in his pocket Pomponius Mela de Situ Orbis, in which he read occasionally, and seemed very intent upon ancient geography. Though by no means negligently, his attention to what was generally right was so minute, that having observed at one of the stages that I ostentatiously gave a shilling to the coachman, when the custom was for each passenger to give only six-pence, he took me aside [2010 and scolded me, saying that what I had done would make the coachman dissatisfied with all the rest of the passengers who gave him no more than his due. This was a just reprimand; for in whatever way a man may indulge his generosity or his vanity in spending his money, for the sake of others he ought not to raise the price of any article for which there is a constant demand. [2020

He talked of Mr. Blacklock's poetry, so far as it was descriptive of visible objects; and observed, that "as its author had the misfortune to be blind, we may be absolutely sure that such passages are combinations of what he has remembered of the works of other writers who could see. That foolish fellow, Spence, has labored to explain philosophically how Blacklock may [2030 have done, by means of his own faculties, what it is impossible he should do. The solution, as I have given it, is plain. Suppose, I know a man to be so lame that he is absolutely incapable to move himself, and I find him in a different room from that in which I left him; shall I puzzle myself with idle conjectures, that, perhaps, his nerves have by some unknown change all at once become [2040 effective? No, Sir, it is clear how he got into a different room: he was carried."

Having stopped a night at Colchester, Johnson talked of that town with veneration, for having stood a siege for Charles the First. The Dutchman alone now remained with us. He spoke English tolerably well; and thinking to recommend himself to us by expatiating on the superiority of the criminal jurisprudence of this country over that of Holland, he inveighed against the barbarity of putting an accused person to the torture, in order to force a confession. But Johnson was as ready for this, as for the Inquisition. "Why, Sir, you do not, I find, understand the law of your own country. To torture in Holland is considered as a favor to an accused person; for no man is put to the torture [2060 there, unless there is as much evidence against him as would amount to conviction in England. An accused person among you, therefore, has one chance more to escape punishment, than those who are tried among us."

At supper this night he talked of good eating with uncommon satisfaction. "Some people (said he), have a foolish way of not minding, or pretending [2070 not to mind, what they eat. For my part, I mind my belly very studiously, and very carefully; for I look upon it, that he who does not mind his belly, will hardly mind any thing else." He now appeared to me Jean Bull philosophe, and he was for the moment, not only serious, but vehement. Yet I have heard him, upon other occasions, talk with great contempt of people who were anxious to gratify their palates; and the 206th number of his Rambler is a masterly essay against gulosity. His practice, indeed, I must acknowledge, may be considered as casting the balance of his different opinions upon this subject; for I never knew any man who relished good eating more than he did. When at table, he was totally absorbed in the business of the moment; his looks seemed rivetted to his plate; nor would he, unless when in very high company, say one word, or even pay the least attention to what was said by others, till he had satisfied his appetite: which was so fierce, and indulged with such intemperance, that while in the act of eating, the veins of his forehead swelled, and generally a strong perspiration was visible. To those whose sensations were delicate, this could not but be disgusting; and it was doubtless not very suitable to the character of a philosopher, who should be distinguished by self-command. But it must be owned, that Johnson, though he could be rigidly abstemious, was not a temperate man either in eating or drinking. He could refrain, but he could not use moderately. He told me, that he had fasted two days without inconvenience, and that he had never been hungry but once. They who beheld with wonder how much he eat upon all occasions, when his dinner was to his taste, could not easily conceive what he must have meant by hunger; and not only was he remarkable for the extraordinary quantity which he eat, but he was, or affected to be, a man of very nice discernment in the science of cookery. He used to descant critically on the dishes which had been at table where he had dined or supped, and to recollect very minutely what he had liked. I remember when he was in Scotland, his praising "Gordon's palates," (a dish of palates at the Honorable Alexander Gordon's) with a warmth of expression which might have done honor to more important subjects. "As for Maclaurin's imitation of a made dish, it was a wretched attempt." He about the same time was so much displeased with the performances of a nobleman's French cook, that he exclaimed with vehemence, "I'd throw such a rascal into the river;" and he then proceeded to alarm a lady at whose house he was to sup, by the following manifesto of his skill: "I, Madam, who live at a variety of good tables, am a much better judge of cookery, than any person who has a very tolerable cook, but lives much at home; for his palate is gradually adapted to the taste of his cook: whereas, Madam, in trying by a wider range, I can more exquisitely judge." When invited to dine, even with an intimate friend, he was not pleased if something better than a plain dinner was not prepared for him. I have heard him say on such an occasion, "This was a good dinner enough, to be sure: but it was not a dinner to ask a man to." On the other hand, he was wont to express, with great glee, his satisfaction when he had been entertained quite to his mind. One day when he had dined with his neighbor and landlord, in Bolt-court, Mr. Allen, the printer, whose old housekeeper had studied his taste in every thing, he pronounced this eulogy: "Sir, we could not have had a better dinner, had there been a Synod of Cooks."

While we were left by ourselves, after the Dutchman had gone to bed, Dr. Johnson talked of that studied behavior which many have recommended and practised. He disapproved of it; and said, "I never considered whether I should be a grave man, or a merry man, but just let inclination, for the time, have its course."

He flattered me with some hopes that he would, in the course of the following summer, come over to Holland, and accompany me in a tour through the Netherlands.

I teased him with fanciful apprehensions of unhappiness. A moth having fluttered round the candle, and burnt itself, he laid hold of this little incident to admonish me; saying, with a sly look, and in a solemn but a quiet tone, "That creature was its own tormentor, and I believe its name was BOSWELL."

Next day we got to Harwich, to dinner; and my passage in the packet-boat to Helvoetsluys being secured, and my baggage put on board, we dined at our inn by ourselves. I happened to say, it would be terrible if he should not [2190 find a speedy opportunity of returning to London, and be confined in so dull a place. JOHNSON. "Don't, Sir, accustom yourself to use big words for little matters. It would not be terrible, though I were to be detained some time here." The practice of using words of disproportionate magnitude, is, no doubt, too frequent everywhere; but, I think, most remarkable among the French, of [2200 which, all who have travelled in France must have been struck with innumerable instances.

We went and looked at the church, and having gone into it, and walked up to the altar, Johnson, whose piety was constant and fervent, sent me to my knees, saying, "Now that you are going to leave your native country, recommend yourself to the protection of your CREATOR [2210 and REDEEMER."

After we came out of the church, we stood talking for some time together of Bishop Berkeley's ingenious sophistry to prove the non-existence of matter, and that every thing in the universe is merely ideal. I observed, that though we are satisfied his doctrine is not true, it is impossible to refute it. I never shall forget the alacrity with which John- [2220 son answered, striking his foot with mighty force against a large stone, till he rebounded from it,—“I refute it thus.” This was a stout exemplification of the first truths of Pere Bouffier, or the original principles of Reid and of Beattie; without admitting which, we can no more argue in metaphysics, than we can argue in mathematics without axioms. To me it is not conceivable how Berkeley can [2230 be answered by pure reasoning; but I know that the nice and difficult task was to have been undertaken by one of the most luminous minds of the present age, had not politics “turned him from calm philosophy aside.” What an admirable display of subtilty, united with brilliance, might his contending with Berkeley have afforded us! How must we, when we reflect on the loss of such an intellectual feast, regret [2240 that he should be characterised as the man,

“Who, born for the universe, narrowed his mind,
And to party gave up what was meant for mankind”?

My revered friend walked down with me to the beach, where we embraced and parted with tenderness, and engaged to correspond by letters. I said, “I hope, Sir, you will not forget me in my absence.” JOHNSON. “Nay, Sir, it is more likely you should forget me, than that I [2250 should forget you.” As the vessel put out to sea, I kept my eyes upon him for a considerable time, while he remained rolling his majestic frame in his usual manner; and at last I perceived him walk back into the town, and he disappeared.

EDMUND BURKE (1729–1797)

TO THE ELECTORS OF BRISTOL,

ON HIS BEING DECLARED BY THE SHERIFFS, DULY ELECTED ONE OF THE REPRESENT-ATIVES IN PARLIAMENT FOR THAT CITY,

On Thursday the Third of November, 1774

GENTLEMEN: I cannot avoid sympathizing strongly with the feelings of the gentleman who has received the same honor that you have conferred on me. If he, who was bred and passed his whole life amongst you; if he, who through the easy gradations of acquaintance, friendship, and esteem, has obtained the honor, which seems of itself, naturally and almost insensibly, to meet with those, [10 who by the even tenor of pleasing manners and social virtues, slide into the love and confidence of their fellow-citizens;—if he cannot speak but with great emotion on this subject, surrounded as he is on all sides with his old friends; you will have the goodness to excuse me, if my real, unaffected embarrassment prevents me from expressing my gratitude to you as I ought.

I was brought hither under the disadvantage of being unknown, even by sight, to any of you. No previous canvass was made for me. I was put in nomination after the poll was opened. I did not appear until it was far advanced. If, under all these accumulated disadvantages, your good opinion has carried me to this happy point of success, you will pardon me, if I can only say to you collectively, as I said to you individually, [30] simply, and plainly, I thank you—I am obliged to you—I am not insensible of your kindness.

This is all that I am able to say for the inestimable favor you have conferred upon me. But I cannot be satisfied, without saying a little more in defence of the right you have to confer such a favor. The person that appeared here as counsel for the candidate who so long and so [40] earnestly solicited your votes, thinks proper to deny, that a very great part of you have any votes to give. He fixes a standard period of time in his own imagination, not what the law defines, but merely what the convenience of his client suggests, by which he would cut off, at one stroke, all those freedoms which are the dearest privileges of your corporation; which the common law authorizes; [50] which your magistrates are compelled to grant; which come duly authenticated into this court; and are saved in the clearest words, and with the most religious care and tenderness, in that very act of parliament which was made to regulate the elections by freemen, and to prevent all possible abuses in making them.

I do not intend to argue the matter here. My learned counsel has sup- [60] ported your cause with his usual ability; the worthy sheriffs have acted with their usual equity, and I have no doubt that the same equity which dictates the return, will guide the final determination. I had the honor, in conjunction with many far wiser men, to contribute a very small assistance, but, however, some assistance, to the forming the judicature which is to try such questions. It [70] would be unnatural in me to doubt the justice of that court, in the trial of my own cause, to which I have been so active to give jurisdiction over every other.

I assure the worthy freemen, and this corporation, that, if the gentleman perseveres in the intentions which his present warmth dictates to him, I will attend their cause with diligence, and I hope with effect. For, if I know anything of my- [80] self, it is not my own interest in it, but my full conviction, that induces me to tell you—I think there is not a shadow of doubt in the case.

I do not imagine that you find me rash in declaring myself, or very forward in troubling you. From the beginning to the end of the election, I have kept silence in all matters of discussion. I have never asked a question of a voter [90] on the other side, or supported a doubtful vote on my own. I respected the abilities of my managers; I relied on the candor of the court. I think the worthy sheriffs will bear me witness, that I have never once made an attempt to impose upon their reason, to surprise their justice, or to ruffle their temper. I stood on the hustings (except when I gave my thanks to those who favored me with their [100] votes) less like a candidate, than an unconcerned spectator of a public proceeding. But here the face of things is altered. Here is an attempt for a general massacre of suffrages; an attempt, by a promiscuous carnage of friends and foes, to exterminate above two thousand votes, including seven hundred polled for the gentleman himself, who now complains, and who would destroy the friends [110] whom he has obtained, only because he cannot obtain as many of them as he wishes.

How he will be permitted, in another place, to stultify and disable himself, and to plead against his own acts, is another question. The law will decide it. I shall only speak of it as it concerns the propriety of public conduct in this city. I do not pretend to lay down rules of [120] decorum for other gentlemen. They are best judges of the mode of proceeding that will recommend them to the favor of their fellow-citizens. But I confess I should look rather awkward, if I had been the very first to produce the new copies of freedom, if I had persisted in producing them to the last; if I had ransacked, with the most unremitting industry and the most penetrating research, the remotest [130] corners of the kingdom to discover them; if I were then, all at once, to turn short, and declare that I had been sporting all this while with the right of election; and that I had been drawing out a poll, upon no sort of rational grounds, which disturbed the peace of my fellow-citizens for a month together—I really, for my part, should appear awkward under such circumstances. [140]

It would be still more awkward in me, if I were gravely to look the sheriffs in the face, and to tell them they were not to determine my cause on my own principles; not to make the return upon those votes upon which I had rested my election. Such would be my appearance to the court and magistrates.

But how should I appear to the voters themselves? If I had gone round to [150] the citizens entitled to freedom, and squeezed them by the hand—"Sir, I humbly beg your vote—I shall be eternally thankful—may I hope for the honor of your support?—Well!—come—we shall see you at the council-house."—If I were then to deliver them to my managers, pack them into tallies, vote them off in court, and when I heard from the bar—"Such a one only! and such a one for [160] ever!—he's my man!"—"Thank you, good Sir—Hah! my worthy friend! thank you kindly—that's an honest fellow—how is your good family?"—Whilst these words were hardly out of my mouth, if I should have wheeled round at once, and told them—"Get you gone, you pack of worthless fellows! you have no votes—you are usurpers! you are intruders on the rights of real freemen! I will have [170] nothing to do with you! you ought never to have been produced at this election, and the sheriffs ought not to have admitted you to poll."

Gentlemen, I should make a strange figure if my conduct had been of this sort. I am not so old an acquaintance of yours as the worthy gentleman. Indeed I could not have ventured on such kind of freedoms with you. But I am bound, and [180] I will endeavor, to have justice done to the rights of freemen; even though I should, at the same time, be obliged to vindicate the former part of my antagonist's conduct against his own present inclinations.

I owe myself, in all things, to all the freemen of this city. My particular friends have a demand on me that I should not deceive their expectations. [190] Never was cause or man supported with more constancy, more activity, more spirit. I have been supported with a zeal indeed and heartiness in my friends, which (if their object had been at all proportioned to their endeavors) could never be sufficiently commended. They supported me upon the most liberal principles. They wished that the members for Bristol should be chosen for the [200] city, and for their country at large, and not for themselves.

So far they are not disappointed. If I possess nothing else, I am sure I possess the temper that is fit for your service. I know nothing of Bristol, but by the favors I have received, and the virtues I have seen exerted in it.

I shall ever retain, what I now feel, the most perfect and grateful attach- [210] ment to my friends—and I have no enmities, no resentment. I never can consider fidelity to engagements, and constancy in friendships, but with the highest approbation; even when those noble qualities are employed against my own pretensions. The gentleman, who is not so fortunate as I have been in this contest, enjoys, in this respect, a consolation full of honor both to himself and to [220] his friends. They have certainly left nothing undone for his service.

As for the trifling petulance which the rage of party stirs up in little minds, though it should show itself even in this court, it has not made the slightest impression on me. The highest flight of such clamorous birds is winged in an inferior reign of the air. We hear them, and we look upon them, just as you, [230] gentlemen, when you enjoy the serene air on your lofty rocks, look down upon the gulls that skim the mud of your river, when it is exhausted of its tide.

I am sorry I cannot conclude without saying a word on a topic touched upon by my worthy colleague. I wish that topic had been passed by at a time when I have so little leisure to discuss it. But since he has thought proper to throw [240]

it out, I owe you a clear explanation of my poor sentiments on that subject.

He tells you that "the topic of instructions has occasioned much altercation and uneasiness in this city;" and he expresses himself (if I understand him rightly) in favor of the coercive authority of such instructions.

Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion, high respect; their business, unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own. [250] But his unbiassed opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure; no, nor from the law and the constitution. They are a trust from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; [270] and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

My worthy colleague says, his will ought to be subservient to yours. If that be all, the thing is innocent. If government were a matter of will upon any side, yours, without question, ought to be superior. But government and legislation are matters of reason and judgment, and not of inclination; and what sort of [280] reason is that, in which the determination precedes the discussion; in which one set of men deliberate, and another decide; and where those who form the conclusion are perhaps three hundred miles distant from those who hear the arguments?

To deliver an opinion is the right of all men; that of constituents is a weighty and respectable opinion, which a [290] representative ought always to rejoice to hear; and which he ought always most seriously to consider. But authoritative instructions; mandates issued, which the member is bound blindly and implicitly to obey, to vote, and to argue for, though contrary to the clearest conviction of his judgment and conscience—these are things utterly unknown to the laws of this land, and which arise from a [300] fundamental mistake of the whole order and tenor of our constitution.

Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests; which interests each must maintain, as an agent and advocate, against other agents and advocates; but parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, that of the whole; where, not local purposes, not [310] local prejudices, ought to guide, but the general good, resulting from the general reason of the whole. You choose a member indeed; but when you have chosen him, he is not member of Bristol, but he is a member of parliament. If the local constituent should have an interest, or should form an hasty opinion, evidently opposite to the real good of the rest of the community, the member for that [320] place ought to be as far as any other from any endeavor to give it effect. I beg pardon for saying so much on this subject. I have been unwillingly drawn into it; but I shall ever use a respectful frankness of communication with you. Your faithful friend, your devoted servant, I shall be to the end of my life; a flatterer you do not wish for. On this point of instructions, however, I think [330] it scarcely possible we ever can have any sort of difference. Perhaps I may give you too much, rather than too little, trouble.

From the first hour I was encouraged to court your favor, to this happy day of obtaining it, I have never promised you anything but humble and persevering endeavors to do my duty. The weight of that duty, I confess, makes me [340] tremble; and whoever well considers what it is, of all things in the world, will fly from what has the least likeness to a positive and precipitate engagement. To be a good member of parliament is, let me tell you, no easy task; especially at this time, when there is so strong a disposition to run into the perilous extremes of servile compliance or wild popularity. To unite circumspection with vigor, is abso- [350] lutely necessary; but it is extremely difficult. We are now members for a rich commercial city; this city, however, is but a part of a rich commercial nation, the interests of which are various, multi-form, and intricate. We are members for that great nation, which, however, is itself but part of a great empire, extended by our virtue and our fortune to the farthest limits of the east and of the [360] west. All these wide-spread interests must be considered; must be compared; must be reconciled, if possible. We are members for a free country; and surely we all know, that the machine of a free constitution is no simple thing; but as intricate and as delicate as it is valuable. We are members in a great and ancient monarchy; and we must preserve religiously the true legal rights of the [370] sovereign, which form the key-stone that binds together the noble and well-constructed arch of our empire and our constitution. A constitution made up of balanced powers must ever be a critical thing. As such I mean to touch that part of it which comes within my reach. I know my inability, and I wish for support from every quarter. In particular I shall aim at the friendship, and shall culti- [380] vate the best correspondence, of the worthy colleague you have given me.

I trouble you no further than once more to thank you all; you, gentlemen, for your favors; the candidates, for their temperate and polite behavior; and the sheriffs, for a conduct which may give a model for all who are in public stations.

From THE IMPEACHMENT OF WARREN HASTINGS

THE CHARGE

I, therefore, charge Mr. Hastings with having destroyed, for private purposes, the whole system of government by the six provincial councils, which he had no right to destroy.

I charge him with having delegated to others that power which the act of parliament had directed him to preserve unalienably in himself.

I charge him with having formed a [10] committee to be mere instruments and tools, at the enormous expenses of £62,000 per annum.

I charge him with having appointed a person their dewan, to whom these Englishmen were to be subservient tools; whose name, to his own knowledge, was by the general voice of India, by the general recorded voice of the Company, by recorded official transactions, by [20] everything that can make a man known, abhorred and detested, stamped with infamy; and with giving him the whole power which he had thus separated from the council-general and from the provincial councils.

I charge him with taking bribes of Gunga Govin Sing.

I charge him with not having done that bribe service which fidelity even in [30] iniquity requires at the hands of the worst of men.

I charge him with having robbed those people of whom he took the bribes.

I charge him with having fraudulently alienated the fortunes of widows.

I charge him with having, without right, title, or purchase, taken the lands of orphans, and given them to wicked persons under him. [40]

I charge him with having removed the natural guardians of a minor Rajah, and with having given that trust to a stranger, Debi Sing, whose wickedness was known to himself and all the world; and by whom the Rajah, his family, and dependants, were cruelly oppressed.

I charge him with having committed to the management of Debi Sing three great provinces; and thereby, with [50] having wasted the country, ruined the landed interest, cruelly harassed the peasants, burnt their houses, seized their crops, tortured and degraded their persons, and destroyed the honor of the whole female race of that country.

In the name of the Commons of England, I charge all this villany upon Warren Hastings, in this last moment of my application to you. [60]

My lords, what is it that we want here to a great act of national justice? Do we want a cause, my lords? You have the cause of oppressed princes, of undone women of the first rank, of desolated provinces, and of wasted kingdoms.

Do you want a criminal, my lords? When was there so much iniquity ever laid to the charge of any one?—No, my lords, you must not look to punish any [70 other such delinquent from India.—Warren Hastings has not left substance enough in India to nourish such another delinquent.

My lords, is it a prosecutor you want?—You have before you the Commons of Great Britain as prosecutors; and, I believe, my lords, that the sun in his beneficent progress round the world does not behold a more glorious sight than [80 that of men, separated from a remote people by the material bounds and barriers of nature, united by the bond of a social and moral community;—all the Commons of England resenting, as their own, the indignities and cruelties that are offered to all the people of India.

Do we want a tribunal? My lords, no example of antiquity, nothing in the modern world, nothing in the range of [90 human imagination, can supply us with a tribunal like this. My lords, here we see virtually in the mind's eye that sacred majesty of the Crown, under whose authority you sit, and whose power you exercise. We see in that invisible authority, what we all feel in reality and life, the beneficent powers and protecting justice of his Majesty. We have here the heir-apparent to the Crown, such as [100 the fond wishes of the people of England wish an heir-apparent of the Crown to be. We have here all the branches of the royal family in a situation between majesty and subjection, between the sovereign and the subject,—offering a pledge in that situation for the support of the rights of the Crown and the liberties of the people, both which extremities they touch. My lords, we have a great [110 hereditary peerage here; those who have their own honor, the honor of their ancestors, and of their posterity, to guard; and who will justify, as they have always justified, that provision in the constitution by which justice is made an hereditary office. My lords, we have here a new nobility, who have risen and exalted themselves by various merits, by great military services, which have ex- [120 tended the fame of this country from the rising to the setting sun: we have those who by various civil merits and various civil talents have been exalted to a situation which they well deserve, and in which they will justify the favor of their sovereign, and the good opinion of their fellow-subjects, and make them rejoice to see those virtuous characters, that were the other day upon a [130 level with them, now exalted above them in rank, but feeling with them in sympathy what they felt in common with them before. We have persons exalted from the practice of the law, from the place in which they administered high though subordinate justice, to a seat here, to enlighten with their knowledge and to strengthen with their votes those principles which have distinguished the [140 courts in which they have presided.

My lords, you have here also the lights of our religion; you have the bishops of England. My lords, you have that true image of the primitive church in its ancient form, in its ancient ordinances, purified from the superstitions and the vices which a long succession of ages will bring upon the best institutions. You have the representatives of that re- [150 ligion which says that their God is love, that the very vital spirit of their institution is charity; a religion which so much hates oppression, that when the God whom we adore appeared in human form, He did not appear in a form of greatness and majesty, but in sympathy with the lowest of the people,—and thereby made it a firm and ruling principle, that their welfare was the object of all [160 government; since the person, who was the Master of Nature, chose to appear Himself in a subordinate situation. These are the considerations which influence them, which animate them, and will animate them, against all oppression; knowing, that He who is called first among them, and first among us all, both of the flock that is fed and of those who feed it, made Himself "the servant [170 of all."

My lords, these are the securities which we have in all the constituent parts of the body of this House. We know them, we reckon, we rest upon them, and commit safely the interests of India and of humanity into your hands. Therefore, it is with confidence that, ordered by the Commons,

I impeach Warren Hastings, Esq., [180 of high crimes and misdemeanors.

I impeach him in the name of the Commons of Great Britain in parliament assembled, whose parliamentary trust he has betrayed.

I impeach him in the name of all the Commons of Great Britain, whose national character he has dishonored.

I impeach him in the name of the people in India, whose laws, rights, and [190 liberties he has subverted, whose properties he has destroyed, whose country he has laid waste and desolate.

I impeach him in the name and by virtue of those eternal laws of justice which he has violated.

I impeach him in the name of human nature itself, which he has cruelly outraged, injured, and oppressed in both sexes, in every age, rank, situation, [200 and condition of life.

THE PERORATION

My lords, I have done; the part of the Commons is concluded. With a trembling solicitude we consign this product of our long, long labors to your charge. Take it!—take it! It is a sacred trust. Never before was a cause of such magnitude submitted to any human tribunal.

My lords, at this awful close, in the name of the Commons, and surrounded by them, I attest the retiring, I attest [10 the advancing generations, between which, as a link in the great chain of eternal order, we stand.—We call this nation, we call the world to witness, that the Commons have shrunk from no labor; that we have been guilty of no prevarication; that we have made no compromise with crime; that we have not feared any odium whatsoever, in the long warfare which we have carried on with the crimes— [20 with the vices—with the exorbitant wealth—with the enormous and overpowering influence of Eastern corruption. This war, my lords, we have waged for twenty-two years, and the conflict has been fought at your lordships' bar for the last seven years. My lords, twenty-two years is a great space in the scale of the life of man; it is no inconsiderable space in the history of a great nation. [30 A business which has so long occupied the councils and the tribunals of Great Britain, cannot possibly be huddled over in the course of vulgar, trite, and transitory events. Nothing but some of those great revolutions that break the traditional chain of human memory, and alter the very face of nature itself, can possibly obscure it. My lords, we are all elevated to a degree of importance [40 by it; the meanest of us will, by means of it, more or less become the concern of posterity, if we are yet to hope for such a thing in the present state of the world as a recording, retrospective, civilized posterity; but this is in the hands of the great Disposer of events: it is not ours to settle how it shall be. My lords, your House yet stands; it stands as a great edifice; but let me say, that it stands [50 in the midst of ruins; in the midst of the ruins that have been made by the greatest moral earthquake that ever convulsed and shattered this globe of ours. My lords, it has pleased Providence to place us in such a state, that we appear every moment to be upon the verge of some great mutations. There is one thing, and one thing only, which defies all mutation; that which existed before the [60 world, and will survive the fabric of the world itself; I mean justice; that justice, which, emanating from the Divinity, has a place in the breast of every one of us, given us for our guide with regard to ourselves and with regard to others, and which will stand after this globe is burned to ashes, our advocate or our accuser before the great Judge, when He comes to call upon us for the tenor of a well- [70 spent life.

My lords, the Commons will share in every fate with your lordships; there is nothing sinister which can happen to you, in which we shall not be involved; and if it should so happen that we shall be subjected to some of those frightful changes which we have seen—if it should happen that your lordships, stripped of all the decorous distinctions of human [80] society, should, by hands at once base and cruel, be led to those scaffolds and machines of murder, upon which great kings and glorious queens have shed their blood, amidst the prelates, amidst the nobles, amidst the magistrates who supported their thrones, may you in those moments feel that consolation which I am persuaded they felt in the critical moments of their dreadful agony! [90]

My lords, there is a consolation, and a great consolation it is, which often happens to oppressed virtue and fallen dignity; it often happens that the very oppressors and persecutors themselves are forced to bear testimony in its favor. I do not like to go for instances a great way back into antiquity. I know very well that length of time operates so as to give an air of the fabulous to remote events, [100] which lessens the interest and weakens the application of examples. I wish to come nearer to the present time. Your lordships know and have heard, for which of us has not known and heard, of the parliament of Paris? The parliament of Paris had an origin very, very similar to that of the great court before which I stand; the parliament of Paris continued to have a great resemblance [110] to it in its constitution, even to its fall; the parliament of Paris, my lords, WAS; it is gone! It has passed away; it has vanished like a dream! It fell, pierced by the sword of the Comte de Mirabeau. And yet I will say that that man, at the time of his inflicting the death wound of that parliament, produced at once the shortest and the grandest funeral oration that ever was or could be made upon [120] the departure of a great court of magistracy. Though he had himself smarted under its lash, as every one knows who knows his history (and he was elevated to dreadful notoriety in history), yet when he pronounced the death sentence upon that parliament, and inflicted the mortal wound, he declared that his motives for doing it were merely political, and that their hands were as pure as those of [130] justice itself, which they administered—a great and glorious exit, my lords, of a great and glorious body! And never was a eulogy pronounced upon a body more deserved. They were persons in nobility of rank, in amplitude of fortune, in weight of authority, in depth of learning, inferior to few of those that hear me. My lords, it was but the other day that they submitted their necks to the axe; but [140] their honor was unwounded. Their enemies, the persons who sentenced them to death, were lawyers, full of subtlety; they were enemies, full of malice; yet lawyers full of subtlety, and enemies full of malice, as they were, they did not dare to reproach them with having supported the wealthy, the great, and powerful, and of having oppressed the weak and feeble, in any of their judgments, or of having [150] perverted justice in any one instance whatever, through favor, through interest, or cabal.

My lords, if you must fall, may you so fall! But if you stand, and stand I trust you will, together with the fortune of this ancient monarchy—together with the ancient laws and liberties of this great and illustrious kingdom, may you stand as unimpeached in honor as in power; [160] may you stand not as a substitute for virtue, but as an ornament of virtue, as a security for virtue; may you stand long, and long stand the terror of tyrants; may you stand the refuge of afflicted nations; may you stand a sacred temple, for the perpetual residence of an inviolable justice.

From REFLECTIONS ON THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE

THE RIGHTS OF MEN

Far am I from denying in theory, full as far is my heart from withholding in practice (if I were of power to give or to withhold), the real rights of men. In denying their false claims of right, I do not mean to injure those which are real, and are such as their pretended rights would totally destroy. If civil society be made for the advantage of man, all the advantages for which it is made [10 become his right. It is an institution of beneficence; and law itself is only beneficence acting by a rule. Men have a right to live by that rule; they have a right to do justice, as between their fellows, whether their fellows are in public function or in ordinary occupation. They have a right to the fruits of their industry; and to the means of making their industry fruitful. They have a right to the [20 acquisitions of their parents, to the nourishment and improvement of their offspring; to instruction in life, and to consolation in death. Whatever each man can separately do, without trespassing upon others, he has a right to do for himself; and he has a right to a fair portion of all which society, with all its combinations of skill and force, can do in his favor. In this partnership all men [30 have equal rights; but not to equal things. He that has but five shillings in the partnership, has as good a right to it, as he that has five hundred pounds has to his larger proportion. But he has not a right to an equal dividend in the product of the joint stock; and as to the share of power, authority, and direction which each individual ought to have in the management of the state, that I must [40 deny to be amongst the direct original rights of man in civil society; for I have in my contemplation the civil social man, and no other. It is a thing to be settled by convention.

If civil society be the offspring of convention, that convention must be its law. That convention must limit and modify all the descriptions of constitution which are formed under it. Every sort of [50 legislative, judicial, or executory power are its creatures. They can have no being in any other state of things; and how can any man claim under the conventions of civil society, rights which do not so much as suppose its existence? rights which are absolutely repugnant to it? One of the first motives to civil society, and which becomes one of its fundamental rules, is, that no man should [60 be judge in his own cause. By this each person has at once divested himself of the first fundamental right of unconvenanted man, that is, to judge for himself, and to assert his own cause. He abdicates all right to be his own governor. He inclusively, in a great measure, abandons the right of self-defence, the first law of nature. Men cannot enjoy the rights of an uncivil and of a civil state together. [70 That he may obtain justice, he gives up his right of determining what it is in points the most essential to him. That he may secure some liberty, he makes a surrender in trust of the whole of it.

Government is not made in virtue of natural rights, which may and do exist in total independence of it; and exist in much greater clearness, and in a much greater degree of abstract perfection; [80 but their abstract perfection is their practical defect. By having a right to everything they want everything. Government is a contrivance of human wisdom to provide for human wants. Men have a right that these wants should be provided for by this wisdom. Among these wants is to be reckoned the want, out of civil society, of a sufficient restraint upon their passions. Society requires not [90 only that the passions of individuals should be subjected, but that even in the mass and body, as well as in the individuals, the inclinations of men should frequently be thwarted, their will controlled, and their passions brought into subjection. This can only be done by a power out of themselves; and not, in the exercise of its function, subject to that will and to those passions which it is [100 its office to bridle and subdue. In this sense the restraints on men, as well as their liberties, are to be reckoned amongst their rights. But as the liberties and the restrictions vary with times and circumstances, and admit of infinite modifications, they cannot be settled upon any abstract rule; and nothing is so foolish as to discuss them upon that principle.

The moment you abate anything [110 from the full rights of men, each to govern himself, and suffer any artificial, positive limitation upon those rights, from that moment the whole organization of government becomes a consideration of convenience. This it is which makes the constitution of a state, and the due distribution of its powers, a matter of the most delicate and complicated skill. It requires a deep knowledge of human [120 nature and human necessities, and of the things which facilitate or obstruct the various ends, which are to be pursued by the mechanism of civil institutions. The state is to have recruits to its strength, and remedies to its distempers. What is the use of discussing a man's abstract right to food or medicine? The question is upon the method of procuring and administering them. In that delibera- [130 tion I shall always advise to call in the aid of the farmer and the physician, rather than the professor of metaphysics.

The science of constructing a commonwealth, or renovating it, or reforming it, is, like every other experimental science, not to be taught a priori. Nor is it a short experience that can instruct us in that practical science; because the real effects of moral causes are not always [140 immediate; but that which in the first instance is prejudicial may be excellent in its remoter operation; and its excellence may arise even from the ill effects it produces in the beginning. The reverse also happens: and very plausible schemes, with very pleasing commencements, have often shameful and lamentable conclusions. In states there are often some obscure and almost latent causes, [150 things which appear at first view of little moment, on which a very great part of its prosperity or adversity may most essentially depend. The science of government being therefore so practical in itself, and intended for such practical purposes, a matter which requires experience, and even more experience than any person can gain in his whole life, however sagacious and observing he may be, it is [160 with infinite caution that any man ought to venture upon pulling down an edifice, which has answered in any tolerable degree for ages the common purposes of society, or on building it up again, without having models and patterns of approved utility before his eyes.

These metaphysic rights entering into common life, like rays of light which pierce into a dense medium, are, by [170

the laws of nature, refracted from their straight line. Indeed in the gross and complicated mass of human passions and concerns, the primitive rights of men undergo such a variety of refractions and reflections, that it becomes absurd to talk of them as if they continued in the simplicity of their original direction. The nature of man is intricate; the objects of society are of the greatest [180 possible complexity: and therefore no simple disposition or direction of power can be suitable either to man's nature, or to the quality of his affairs. When I hear the simplicity of contrivance aimed at and boasted of in any new political constitutions, I am at no loss to decide that the artificers are grossly ignorant of their trade, or totally negligent of their duty. The simple governments are [190 fundamentally defective, to say no worse of them. If you were to contemplate society in but one point of view, all the simple modes of polity are infinitely captivating. In effect each would answer its single end much more perfectly than the more complex is able to attain all its complex purposes. But it is better that the whole should be imperfectly and anomalously answered, than that, [200 while some parts are provided for with great exactness, others might be totally neglected, or perhaps materially injured, by the over-care of a favorite member.

The pretended rights of these theorists are all extremes: and in proportion as they are metaphysically true, they are morally and politically false. The rights of men are in a sort of middle, incapable of [210 definition, but not impossible to be discerned. The rights of men in governments are their advantages; and these are often in balances between differences of good; in compromises sometimes between good and evil, and sometimes between evil and evil. Political reason is a computing principle; adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing, morally and not metaphysically, or mathematic- [220 ally, true moral denominations.

By these theorists the right of the people is almost always sophistically confounded with their power. The body of the community, whenever it can come to act, can meet with no effectual resistance; but till power and right are the same, the whole body of them has no right inconsistent with virtue, and the first of all virtues, prudence. Men have no [230 right to what is not reasonable, and to what is not for their benefit; for though a pleasant writer said, Liceat perire poetis, when one of them, in cold blood, is said to have leaped into the flames of a volcanic revolution, Audentem frigidus Ætnam insiluit, I consider such a frolic rather as an unjustifiable poetic license, than as one of the franchises of Parnassus; and whether he were poet, or divine, or [240 politician, that chose to exercise this kind of right, I think that more wise, because more charitable, thoughts would urge me rather to save the man, than to preserve his brazen slippers as the monuments of his folly.

THE PRECURSORS OF ROMANTICISM

ALLAN RAMSAY (1686-1758)

PEGGY

My Peggy is a young thing,
Just entered in her teens,
Fair as the day, and sweet as May,
Fair as the day, and always gay;
My Peggy is a young thing, 5
And I'm not very auld,
Yet well I like to meet her at
The wauking¹ of the fauld.

My Peggy speaks sae sweetly
Whene'er we meet alane, 10
I wish nae mair to lay my care,
I wish nae mair of a' that's rare;
My Peggy speaks sae sweetly,
To a' the lave² I'm cauld,
But she gars³ a' my spirits glow 15
At wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy smiles sae kindly Whene'er I whisper love,
That I look down on a' the town,
That I look down upon a crown; 20

¹ watching.

² rest.

³ makes.

My Peggy smiles sae kindly,
It makes me blyth and bauld,
And naething gives me sic⁴ delight
As wauking of the fauld.

My Peggy sings sae saftly 25
When on my pipe I play,
By a' the rest it is confest,
By a' the rest, that she sings best;
My Peggy sings sae saftly,
And in her sangs are tauld 30
With innocence the wale⁵ of sense,
At wauking of the fauld.

THE LASS WITH A LUMP OF LAND

Gi'e me a lass with a lump of land,
And we for life shall gang thegither;
Though daft⁶ or wise I'll never demand,
Or black or fair it maks na whether.
I'm aff with wit, and beauty will fade, 5
And blood alane is no worth a shilling;
But she that's rich, her market's made,
For ilka⁷ charm about her is killing.

Gi'e me a lass with a lump of land,
And in my bosom I'll hug my treasure; 10
Gin I had anes⁸ her gear⁹ in my hand, Should love turn dowf,¹⁰ it will find
pleasure.
Laugh on wha likes, but there's my hand,
I hate with poortith,¹¹ though bonny, to meddle;
Unless they bring cash or a lump of land, 15
They'se never get me to dance to their fiddle.

There's meikle good love in bands and bags,
And siller and gowd's¹² a sweet complexion;
But beauty, and wit, and virtue in rags,
Have tint¹³ the art of gaining affection. 20
Love tips his arrows with woods and parks,
And castles, and riggs,¹⁴ and moors, and meadows;
And naething can catch our modern sparks,
But well-tochered¹⁵ lasses or jointured widows.

⁴ such ⁵ choice ⁶ foolish. ⁷ every. ⁸ once.
⁹ property ¹⁰ mournful. ¹¹ poverty. ¹² gold. ¹³ lost.
¹⁴ ridge, a measure of land. ¹⁵ well-dowered.

JAMES THOMSON (1700-1748)

THE SEASONS

From WINTER

Through the hushed air the whitening shower descends,
 At first thin-wavering, till at last the flakes 230
 Fall broad, and wide, and fast, dimming
 the day
 With a continual flow. The cherished fields
 Put on their winter robe of purest white:
 'T is brightness all, save where the new snow melts
 Along the mazy current. Low the woods
 Bow their hoar head; and ere the languid
 sun 236
 Faint from the west emits his evening
 ray,
 Earth's universal face, deep-hid and chill,
 Is one wide dazzling waste, that buries
 wide
 The works of man. Drooping, the laborer-ox 240
 Stands covered o'er with snow, and then demands
 The fruit of all his toil. The fowls of
 heaven,
 Tamed by the cruel season, crowd around
 The winnowing store, and claim the little boon
 Which Providence assigns them. One
 alone, 245
 The redbreast, sacred to the household
 gods,
 Wisely regardful of the embroiling sky,
 In joyless fields and thorny thickets
 leaves
 His shivering mates, and pays to trusted
 man
 His annual visit. Half-afraid, he first 250
 Against the window beats; then, brisk, alights
 On the warm hearth; then hopping o'er the floor,
 Eyes all the smiling family askance,
 And pecks, and starts, and wonders where he is;
 Till more familiar grown, the table-crumbs 255

Attract his slender feet. The foodless wilds Pour forth their brown inhabitants. The
 hare,
 Though timorous of heart, and hard beset
 By death in various forms, dark snares and dogs,
 And more unpitying men, the garden seeks, 260
 Urged on by fearless want. The bleating
 kind
 Eye the bleak heaven, and next, the glistening earth,
 With looks of dumb despair; then, sad dispersed,
 Dig for the withered herb through heaps of snow.

* * * * *

As thus the snows arise, and foul and fierce 276
 All winter drives along the darkened air,
 In his own loose-revolving fields the swain
 Disaster'd stands; sees other hills ascend,
 Of unknown joyless brow, and other scenes, 280
 Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless
 plain;
 Nor finds the river nor the forest, hid Beneath the formless wild; but wanders on From hill to dale, still more and more astray,
 Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps, 285
 Stung with the thoughts of home; the thoughts of home
 Rush on his nerves, and call their vigor
 forth
 In many a vain attempt. How sinks his
 soul!
 What black despair, what horror, fills his
 heart!
 When for the dusky spot which fancy
 feigned, 290
 His tufted cottage rising through the snow,
 He meets the roughness of the middle
 waste,
 Far from the track and blessed abode of
 man;
 While round him night resistless closes
 fast,
 And every tempest howling o'er his
 head, 295
 Renders the savage wilderness more wild.

Then throng the busy shapes into his
mind,
Of covered pits, unfathomably deep,
A dire descent! beyond the power of frost;
Of faithless bogs; of precipices huge, 300
Smoothed up with snow; and what is land unknown,
What water of the still unfrozen spring,
In the loose marsh or solitary lake,
Where the fresh fountain from the bottom boils.
These check his fearful steps, and down he sinks 305
Beneath the shelter of the shapeless drift,
Thinking o'er all the bitterness of death,
Mixed with the tender anguish nature shoots
Through the wrung bosom of the dying
man,
His wife, his children, and his friends, un-
seen. 310
In vain for him the officious wife prepares
The fire fair blazing, and the vestment
warm;
In vain his little children, peeping out
Into the mingling storm, demand their sire
With tears of artless innocence. Alas! 315
Nor wife nor children more shall he behold, Nor friends, nor sacred home. On every nerve
The deadly winter seizes, shuts up sense,
And o'er his inmost vitals creeping cold,
Lays him along the snows a stiffened corse, 320
Stretched out, and bleaching in the northern blast.

From SUMMER

Rushing thence, in one diffusive band, 371
They drive the troubled flocks, by many a dog Compelled, to where the mazy-running brook Forms a deep pool; this bank abrupt and
high,
And that, fair-spreading in a pebbled
shore. 375
Urged to the giddy brink, much is the toil,
The clamor much, of men, and boys, and
dogs,
Ere the soft, fearful people to the flood Commit their woolly sides. And oft the swain,

On some impatient seizing, hurls them in:
Emboldened then, nor hesitating more, 381
Fast, fast, they plunge amid the flashing
wave,
And, panting, labor to the farther shore.
Repeated this, till deep the well-washed fleece
Has drunk the flood, and from his lively haunt 385
The trout is banished by the sordid stream;
Heavy and dripping, to the breezy brow Slow move the harmless race; where, as they spread
Their swelling treasures to the sunny ray, Inly disturbed, and wondering what this wild 390
Outrageous tumult means, their loud complaints
The country fill—and, tossed from rock to rock,
Incessant bleatings run around the hills.
At last, of snowy white, the gathered flocks
Are in the wattled pen innumerable pressed, Head above head; and ranged in lusty
rows 396
The shepherds sit, and whet the sounding
shears.
The housewife waits to roll her fleecy stores,
With all her gay-dressed maids attending
round.
One, chief, in gracious dignity enthroned, Shines o'er the rest, the pastoral queen, and rays 401
Her smiles, sweet-beaming, on her shepherd-king;
While the glad circle round them yield their souls
To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall.
Meantime, their joyous task goes on apace:
Some mingling stir the melted tar, and
some, 406
Deep on the new-shorn vagrant's heaving
side,
To stamp his master's cipher ready stand;
Others the unwilling wether drag along;
And, glorying in his might, the sturdy boy Holds by the twisted horns the indignant
ram. 411
Behold where bound, and of its robe
bereft,
By needy man, that all-depending lord,

How meek, how patient, the mild creature
lies!
What softness in its melancholy face, 415
What dumb complaining innocence appears!
Fear not, ye gentle tribes, 'tis not the knife
Of horrid slaughter that is o'er you waved;
No, 'tis the tender swain's well-guided
shears,
Who having now, to pay his annual
care, 420
Borrowed your fleece, to you a cumbrous
load,
Will send you bounding to your hills
again.

From THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE

In lowly dale, fast by a river's side, 10
With woody hill o'er hill encompassed
round,
A most enchanting wizard did abide,
Than whom a fiend more fell is nowhere
found.
It was, I ween, a lovely spot of ground;
And there a season atween June and
May, 15
Half pranked¹ with spring, with summer half imbrowned,
A listless climate made, where, 'sooth
to say,
No living wight could work, ne cared even for play.

Was nought around but images of rest:
Sleep-soothing groves, and quiet lawns
between; 20
And flowery beds, that slumbrous influence kest,²
From poppies breathed; and beds of pleasant green,
Where never yet was creeping creature
seen.
Meantime unnumbered glittering stream-lets played,
And hurled everywhere their waters
sheen; 25
That, as they bickered through the sunny glade,
Though restless still themselves, a lulling murmur made.

¹ adorned.

² cast.

Joined to the prattle of the purling rills,
Were heard the lowing herds along the
vale,
And flocks loud-bleating from the distant hills, 30
And vacant³ shepherds piping in the
dale:
And now and then sweet Philomel would
wail,
Or stock-doves plain amid the forest
deep,
That drowsy rustled to the sighing gale;
And still a coil the grasshopper did keep:
Yet all the sounds yblent⁴ inclinèd all to
sleep. 36

Full in the passage of the vale, above,
A sable, silent, solemn forest stood;
Where nought but shadowy forms were seen to move,
As Idless fancied in her dreaming mood:
And up the hills, on either side, a wood
Of blackening pines, aye waving to and fro, 42
Sent forth a sleepy horror through the
blood;
And where this valley winded out below,
The murmuring main was heard, and scarcely heard, to flow. 45

A pleasing land of drowsy-head⁵ it was:
Of dreams that wave before the halfshut eye;
And of gay castles in the clouds that
pass,
Forever flushing round a summer-sky.
There eke⁶ the soft delights, that witchingly 50
Instil a wanton sweetness through the
breast,
And the calm pleasures, always hovered nigh;
But whate'er smackt of noyance,⁷ or unrest,
Was far, far off expelled from this delicious nest.

The landscape such, inspiring perfect
ease, 55
Where Indolence (for so the wizard hight)
Close-hid his castle mid embowering
trees,

³ care-free ⁴ mingled. ⁵ sleepiness. ⁶ also ⁷ annoyance.

That half shut out the beams of Phœbus
 bright,
 And made a kind of checkered day and
 night.
 Meanwhile, unceasing at the massy
 gate, 60
 Beneath a spacious palm, the wicked
 wight¹
 Was placed; and to his lute, of cruel
 fate
 And labor harsh, complained, lamenting man's estate.

Thither continual pilgrims crowded still,
 From all the roads of earth that pass
 there by: 65
 For, as they chanced to breathe on neighboring hill,
 The freshness of this valley smote their
 eye,
 And drew them ever and anon more nigh;
 Till clustering round the enchanter false they hung,
 Ymolten with his syren melody; 70
 While o'er the enfeebling lute his hand
 he flung,
 And to the trembling chords these tempting verses sung

"Behold! ye pilgrims of this earth,
 behold!
 See all but man with unearned pleasure
 gay:
 See her bright robes the butterfly unfold, Broke from her wintry tomb in prime of May! 76
 What youthful bride can equal her
 array?
 Who can with her for easy pleasure vie?
 From mead to mead with gentle wing
 to stray,
 From flower to flower on balmy gales to
 fly, 80
 Is all she has to do beneath the radiant
 sky."

RULE, BRITANNIA

When Britain first, at Heaven's command,
 Arose from out the azure main,
 This was the charter of the land,
 And guardian angels sang this strain:
 Rule, Britannia, rule the waves! 5
 Britons never will be slaves!

¹ person.

The nations not so blest as thee,
 Must in their turns to tyrants fall,
 Whilst thou shalt flourish great and free,
 The dread and envy of them all. 10
 Rule, Britannia, etc.

Still more majestic shalt thou rise,
 More dreadful from each foreign stroke;
 As the loud blast that tears the skies,
 Serves but to root thy native oak. 15
 Rule, Britannia, etc.

Thee haughty tyrants ne'er shall tame;
 All their attempts to bend thee down
 Will but arouse thy generous flame,
 But work their woe and thy renown. 20
 Rule, Britannia, etc.

To thee belongs the rural reign;
 Thy cities shall with commerce shine;
 All thine shall be the subject main,
 And every shore it circles thine. 25
 Rule, Britannia, etc.

The Muses, still with freedom found,
 Shall to thy happy coast repair;
 Blest isle, with matchless beauty crowned,
 And manly hearts to guard the fair! 30
 Rule, Britannia, etc.

EDWARD YOUNG (1681-1765)

NIGHT THOUGHTS

From NIGHT THE FIRST

Tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy
 Sleep!
 He, like the world, his ready visit pays Where Fortune smiles; the wretched he forsakes:
 Swift on his downy pinion flies from woe,
 And lights on lids unsullied with a tear. 5
 From short (as usual) and disturbed repose
 I wake: how happy they who wake no
 more!
 Yet that were vain, if dreams infest the
 grave.
 I wake, emerging from a sea of dreams
 Tumultuous; where my wrecked desponding thought 10

From wave to wave of fancied misery
At random drove, her helm of reason lost.
Though now restored, 'tis only change of
pain—

A bitter change!—severer for severe:
The day too short for my distress; and night, ¹⁵

Even in the zenith of her dark domain,
Is sunshine to the color of my fate.

Night, sable goddess, from her ebon
throne,

In rayless majesty, now stretches forth
Her leaden scepter o'er a slumbering world.
Silence how dead! and darkness how profound! ²¹

Nor eye nor listening ear an object finds;
Creation sleeps. 'Tis as the general pulse
Of life stood still, and Nature made a pause;

An awful pause! prophetic of her end. ²⁵
And let her prophecy be soon fulfilled:
Fate! drop the curtain; I can lose no
more.

Silence and Darkness! solemn sisters!
twins

From ancient Night, who nurse the tender thought

To reason, and on reason build resolve—
That column of true majesty in man— ³¹
Assist me: I will thank you in the grave;
The grave, your kingdom; there this frame shall fall

A victim sacred to your dreary shrine.
But what are ye? Thou who didst put to flight ³⁵

Primeval Silence, when the morning stars,
Exulting, shouted o'er the rising ball;

O Thou! whose word from solid darkness struck

That spark, the sun, strike wisdom from
my soul;

My soul which flies to thee, her trust, her treasure, ⁴⁰

As misers to their gold, while others rest.
Through this opaque of nature and of
soul,

This double night, transmit one pitying
ray

To lighten and to cheer. Oh, lead my
mind—

A mind that fain would wander from its woe— ⁴⁵

Lead it through various scenes of life and
death,

And from each scene the noblest truths inspire.

Nor less inspire my conduct than my song;
Teach my best reason, reason; my best
will

Teach rectitude; and fix my firm resolve ⁵⁰
Wisdom to wed, and pay her long arrear.

Nor let the phial of thy vengeance,
poured

On this devoted head, be poured in vain.

* * * * *

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,

How complicate, how wonderful is man!

How passing wonder He who made him
such!

Who centered in our make such strange extremes, ⁷⁰

From different natures marvellously mixed,
Connection exquisite of distant worlds,

Distinguished link in being's endless chain,
Midway from nothing to the Deity!

A beam ethereal, sullied and absorbed, ⁷⁵
Though sullied and dishonored, still divine,

Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory, a frail child of dust,

Helpless immortal, insect infinite,
A worm, a god!—I tremble at myself, ⁸⁰

And in myself am lost, at home a stranger.
Thought wanders up and down, surprised,

aghast,
And wondering at her own; how reason reels!

Oh, what a miracle to man is man, Triumphantly distressed! What joy, what
dread,

Alternately transported and alarmed!
What can preserve my life, or what destroy?

An angel's arm can't snatch me from the
grave;

Legions of angels can't confine me there.

ROBERT BLAIR (1699–1746)

From THE GRAVE

While some affect the sun, and some the
shade,

Some flee the city, some the hermitage,
Their aims as various as the roads they take

In journeying through life, the task be mine
 To paint the gloomy horrors of the tomb; 5
 The appointed place of rendezvous, where
 all These travellers meet. Thy succors I implore,
 Eternal King! whose potent arm sustains
 The keys of hell and death.—The Grave, dread thing!
 Men shiver when thou'rt named: nature,
 appalled, 10
 Shakes off her wonted firmness.—Ah, how
 dark
 Thy long-extended realms, and rueful wastes!
 Where nought but silence reigns, and night, dark night,
 Dark as was chaos, ere the infant sun
 Was rolled together, or had tried his beams Athwart the gloom profound.—The sickly taper 16
 By glimmering through thy low-browed misty vaults,
 Furred round with mouldy damps and ropy slime,
 Lets fall a supernumerary horror,
 And only serves to make thy night more irksome. 20
 Well do I know thee by thy trusty yew, Cheerless, unsocial plant! that loves to
 dwell
 Midst skulls and coffins, epitaphs and worms:
 Where light-heeled ghosts, and visionary
 shades,
 Beneath the wan cold moon (as fame reports) 25
 Embodied, thick, perform their mystic rounds.
 No other merriment, dull tree! is thine.
 See yonder hallowed fane;—the pious work
 Of names once famed, now dubious or
 forgot,
 And buried midst the wreck of things which were; 30
 There lie interred the more illustrious
 dead.
 The wind is up: hark! how it howls! Methinks
 Till now I never heard a sound so dreary:
 Doors creak, and windows clap, and night's foul bird,

Rooked¹ in the spire, screams loud: the gloomy aisles, 35
 Black-plastered, and hung round with shreds of 'scutcheons
 And tattered coats of arms, send back the sound
 Laden with heavier airs, from the low vaults,
 The mansions of the dead.—Roused from their slumbers,
 In grim array the grisly spectres rise, 40
 Grin horrible, and, obstinately sullen, Pass and repass, hushed as the foot of
 night.
 Again the screech-owl shrieks: ungracious
 sound!
 I'll hear no more; it makes one's blood run chill.
 Quite round the pile, a row of reverend elms, 45
 (Coeval near with that) all ragged show, Long lashed by the rude winds. Some rift half down
 Their branchless trunks; others so thin
 a-top,
 That scarce two crows could lodge in the same tree.
 Strange things, the neighbors say, have happened here: 50
 Wild shrieks have issued from the hollow
 tombs;
 Dead men have come again, and walked
 about;
 And the great bell has tolled, unring, untouched.
 (Such tales their cheer, at wake or gossip-
 ing,
 When it draws near the witching time of
 night.) 55
 Oft in the lone church-yard at night I've
 seen,
 By glimpse of moonshine chequering
 through the trees,
 The school-boy, with his satchel in his
 hand,
 Whistling aloud to bear his courage up,
 And lightly tripping o'er the long flat
 stones, 60
 (With nettles skirted, and with moss o'er-grown.)
 That tell in homely phrase who lie below.
 Sudden he starts, and hears, or thinks he hears,

¹ cowering.

The sound of something purring at his heels;
Full fast he flies, and dares not look behind him, 65
Till out of breath he overtakes his fellows;
Who gather round, and wonder at the tale
Of horrid apparition, tall and ghastly, That walks at dead of night, or takes his
stand O'er some new-opened grave; and (strange to tell!) 70
Evanishes at crowing of the cock.

WILLIAM COLLINS (1721-1759)

A SONG FROM SHAKESPEARE'S CYMBELINE

Sung by Guiderus and Arviragus over Fidele, supposed to be dead

To fair Fidele's grassy tomb
Soft maids and village hinds shall bring
Each opening sweet, of earliest bloom,
And rifle all the breathing spring.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear, 5
To vex with shrieks this quiet grove;
But shepherd lads assemble here,
And melting virgins own their love.

No withered witch shall here be seen,
No goblins lead their nightly crew; 10
The female fays shall haunt the green,
And dress thy grave with pearly dew.

The redbreast oft at evening hours
Shall kindly lend his little aid,
With hoary moss, and gathered flow'rs, 15
To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds, and beating rain,
In tempests shake the sylvan cell,
Or midst the chase on every plain,
The tender thought on thee shall
dwell, 20

Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
For thee the tear be duly shed:
Beloved till life could charm no more;
And mourned till Pity's self be dead.

ODE

WRITTEN IN THE BEGINNING OF
THE YEAR 1746

How sleep the brave who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blest!
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod 5
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung,
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There Honor comes, a pilgrim grey,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay; 10
And Freedom shall awhile repair,
To dwell a weeping hermit there!

ODE TO EVENING

If ought of oaten stop, or pastoral song,
May hope, chaste Eve, to soothe thy modest
ear,
Like thy own solemn springs,
Thy springs and dying gales,

O nymph reserved, while now the bright-haired sun 5
Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
With brede¹ ethereal wove,
O'erhang his wavy bed:

Now air is hushed, save where the weak-eyed bat,
With short shrill shriek, flits by on leathern
wing, 10
Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum-
Now teach me, maid composed, 15
To breathe some softened strain,

Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening vale
May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
As, musing slow, I hail Thy genial loved return! 20

¹ embroidery.

For when thy folding-star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant Hours, and elves
Who slept in flowers the day,

And many a nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge, 25
And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier
still,
The pensive Pleasures sweet,
Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then lead, calm votaress, where some sheety lake
Cheers the lone heath, or some timehallowed pile 30
Or upland fallows gray
Reflect its last cool gleam.

But when chill blustering winds, or driving rain,
Forbid my willing feet, be mine the hut
That from the mountain's side 35
Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discovered
spires,
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er
all Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil. 40

While Spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest
Eve;
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy lingering light;

While sallow Autumn fills thy lap with
leaves; 45
Or Winter, yelling through the troublous
air,
Affrights thy shrinking train,
And rudely rends thy robes;

So long, sure-found beneath the sylvan
shed,
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, roselipped Health, 50
Thy gentlest influence own,
And hymn thy favorite name!

THE PASSIONS

AN ODE FOR MUSIC

When Music, heavenly maid, was young,
While yet in early Greece she sung,
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Thronged around her magic cell,
Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting, 5
Possessed beyond the Muse's painting;
By turns they felt the glowing mind
Disturbed, delighted, raised, refined:
Till once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
Filled with fury, rapt, inspired, 10
From the supporting myrtles round
They snatched her instruments of sound;
And as they oft had heard apart
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each, for madness ruled the hour, 15
Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewildered laid,
And back recoiled, he knew not why,
Ev'n at the sound himself had made. 20

Next Anger rushed; his eyes, on fire,
In lightnings owned his secret stings;
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woeful measures wan Despair 25
Low sullen sounds his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air;
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delightful measure? 30
Still it whispered promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance
hail!

Still would her touch the strain prolong,
And from the rocks, the woods, the
vale,
She called on Echo still through all the
song; 35
And where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
And Hope, enchanted, smiled, and waved her golden hair.

And longer had she sung,—but with a frown
 Revenge impatient rose; 40
 He threw his blood-stained sword in thunder down

And with a withering look
 The war-denouncing trumpet took,
 And blew a blast so loud and dread,
 Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe. 45

And ever and anon he beat
 The doubling drum with furious heat;
 And though sometimes, each dreary pause between,
 Dejected Pity, at his side,
 Her soul-subduing voice applied, 50
 Yet still he kept his wild unaltered mien,
 While each strained ball of sight seemed bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fixed,
 Sad proof of thy distressful state;
 Of differing themes the veering song was mixed, 55
 And now it courted Love, now raving called on Hate.

With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
 Pale Melancholy sate retired,
 And from her wild sequestered seat,
 In notes by distance made more sweet, 60
 Poured through the mellow horn her pensive soul:

And, dashing soft from rocks around,
 Bubbling runnels joined the sound;
 Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole;
 Or o'er some haunted stream with fond delay 65
 Round an holy calm diffusing,
 Love of peace and lonely musing,
 In hollow murmurs died away.

But oh, how altered was its sprightlier tone,
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue, 70

Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemmed with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
 The hunter's call, to faun and dryad known!

The oak-crowned sisters, and their chaste-eyed queen, 75
 Satyrs, and sylvan boys, were seen,
 Peeping from forth their alleys green;
 Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear,
 And Sport leaped up, and seized his beachen spear.

Last came Joy's ecstatic trial. 80
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand addressed;

But soon he saw the brisk awakening viol,

Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the best.

They would have thought, who heard the strain, 85

They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids

Amidst the festal sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing,
 While, as his flying fingers kissed the strings,

Loved framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round; 90

Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound,

And he, amidst his frolic play,

As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odors from his dewy wings.

O Music, sphere-descended maid, 95

Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid,

Why, goddess, why, to us denied,

Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?

As in that loved Athenian bower

You learned an all-commanding power, 100

Thy mimic soul, O nymph endeared,

Can well recall what then it heard.

Where is thy native simple heart,

Devote to Virtue, Fancy, Art?

Arise as in that elder time, 105

Warm, energetic,¹ chaste, sublime!

Thy wonders, in that godlike age,

Fill thy recording sister's page.—

'Tis said, and I believe the tale,

Thy humblest reed could more prevail, 110

Had more of strength, diviner rage,

Than all which charms this laggard age,

Ev'n all at once together found,
 Cecilia's mingled world of sound.

¹ energetic.

O bid our vain endeavors cease,
Revive the just designs of Greece,
Return in all thy simple state,
Confirm the tales her sons relate!

115

THOMAS GRAY (1716-1771)

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

Ye distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the watry glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy Shade;
And ye, that from the stately brow 5
Of Windsor's heights the expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey, Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers
among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way: 10

Ah, happy hills, ah, pleasing shade,
Ah, fields beloved in vain,
Where once my careless childhood strayed,
A stranger yet to pain!
I feel the gales, that from ye blow, 15
A momentary bliss bestow,
As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to sooth,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breathe a second spring. 20

Say, Father Thames, for thou hast seen
Full many a sprightly race
Disporting on thy margent green
The paths of pleasure trace,
Who foremost now delight to cleave 25
With pliant arm thy glassy wave?
The captive linnet which enthrall?
What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed,
Or urge the flying ball? 30

While some on earnest business bent
Their murm'ring labors ply
'Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint
To sweeten liberty;
Some bold adventurers disdain 35
The limits of their little reign,
And unknown regions dare descry:

Still as they run they look behind,
They hear a voice in every wind,
And snatch a fearful joy. 40

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
Less pleasing when possessed;
The tear forgot as soon as shed,
The sunshine of the breast:
Theirs buxom health of rosy hue, 45
Wild wit, invention ever-new,
And lively cheer of vigor born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
That fly the approach of morn. 50

Alas, regardless of their doom,
The little victims play!
No sense have they of ills to come,
Nor care beyond to-day:
Yet see how all around 'em wait 55
The Ministers of human fate,
And black Misfortune's baleful train!
Ah, show them where in ambush stand
To seize their prey the murth'rous band!
Ah, tell them, they are men! 60

These shall the fury Passions tear,
The vultures of the mind,
Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
And Shame that skulks behind;
Or pining Love shall waste their youth, 65
Or Jealousy with rankling tooth,
That inly gnaws the secret heart,
And Envy wan, and faded Care,
Grim-visaged, comfortless Despair,
And Sorrow's piercing dart. 70

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
Then whirl the wretch from high,
To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
And grinning Infamy.
The stings of Falsehood those shall try, 75
And hard Unkindness' altered eye,
That mocks the tear it forced to flow;
And keen Remorse with blood defiled,
And moody Madness laughing wild
Amid severest woe. 80

Lo, in the vale of years beneath
A griesly troop are seen,
The painful family of Death,
More hideous than their Queen:
This racks the joints, this fires the veins, 85

That every laboring sinew strains,
 Those in the deeper vitals rage,
 Lo, Poverty, to fill the band,
 That numbs the soul with icy hand,
 And slow-consuming Age. 90

To each his sufferings: all are men,
 Condemned alike to groan,
 The tender for another's pain,
 The unfeeling for his own.
 Yet ah! why should they know their
 fate?
 Since sorrow never comes too late, 96
 And happiness too swiftly flies.
 Thought would destroy their paradise.
 No more; where ignorance is bliss,
 'Tis folly to be wise. 100

ELEGY
 WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY
 CHURCHYARD

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
 The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the
 lea,
 The plowman homeward plods his weary
 way,
 And leaves the world to darkness and to
 me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight, 5
 And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
 Save where the beetle wheels his droning
 flight,
 And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds;

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower
 The moping owl does to the moon com-
 plain 10
 Of such, as wandering near her secret
 bower,
 Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yewtree's shade,
 Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,
 Each in his narrow cell for ever laid, 15
 The rude forefathers of the hamlet
 sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
 The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
 The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing
 horn,
 No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed. 20

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
 Or busy housewife ply her evening care:
 No children run to lisp their sire's return,
 Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield, 25
 Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke;
 How jocund did they drive their team afield!
 How bowed the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
 Their homely joys, and destiny obscure; 30
 Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful
 smile,
 The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
 And all that beauty, all that wealth
 e'er gave,
 Awaits alike the inevitable hour. 35
 The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,
 If Memory o'er their tomb no trophies
 raise,
 Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
 The pealing anthem swells the note of
 praise. 40

Can storied¹ urn or animated bust
 Back to its mansion call the fleeting
 breath?
 Can Honor's voice provoke the silent
 dust,
 Or Flattery soothe the dull cold ear of Death?

¹ pictured.

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid 45
 Some heart once pregnant with celestial
 fire;
 Hands, that the rod of empire might have swayed,
 Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre.

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample
 page
 Rich with the spoils of time did ne'er
 unroll; 50
 Chill Penury repressed their noble rage,
 And froze the genial current of the soul,

Full many a gem of purest ray serene.
 The dark unfathomed caves of ocean
 bear:
 Full many a flower is born to blush un-
 seen, 55
 And waste its sweetness on the desert
 air.

Some village Hampden, that with dauntless breast
 The little tyrant of his fields withstood;
 Some mute inglorious Milton here may
 rest,
 Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's
 blood. 60

The applause of listening senates to command,
 The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
 To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
 And read their history in a nation's
 eyes,

Their lot forbade: nor circumscribed
 alone 65
 Their growing virtues, but their crimes confined;
 Forbade to wade through slaughter to a
 throne,
 And shut the gates of mercy on man-
 kind,

The struggling pangs of conscious truth
 to hide,
 To quench the blushes of ingenuous
 shame, 70
 Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
 With incense kindled at the Muse's
 flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble
 strife,
 Their sober wishes never learned to
 stray;
 Along the cool sequestered vale of life 75
 They kept the noiseless tenor of their
 way.

Yet even these bones from insult to protect,
 Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
 With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture decked,
 Implores the passing tribute of a sigh. 80

Their name, their years, spelt by the unlettered muse,
 The place of fame and elegy supply;
 And many a holy text around she strews,
 That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who to dumb Forgetfulness a prey, 85
 This pleasing anxious being e'er resigned,
 Left the warm precincts of the cheerful
 day,
 Nor cast one longing lingering look
 behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul re-
 lies,
 Some pious drops the closing eye requires; 90
 Ev'n from the tomb the voice of Nature
 cries,
 Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who mindful of the unhonored
 dead
 Dost in these lines their artless tale re-
 late;
 If chance, by lonely contemplation led, 95
 Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy
 fate,

Haply some hoary-headed swain may
 say,
 "Oft have we seen him at the peep of
 dawn
 Brushing with hasty steps the dews
 away
 To meet the sun upon the upland lawn. 100

"There at the foot of yonder nodding beech
That wreathes its old fantastic roots so
high,
His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
And pore upon the brook that babbles
by.

"Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in
scorn,
Muttering his wayward fancies he¹⁰⁵
would rove,
Now drooping, woeful wan, like one forlorn,
Or crazed with care, or crossed in hopeless love.

"One morn I missed him on the custom'd
hill,
Along the heath and near his favorite
tree;
Another came; nor yet beside the rill,¹¹⁰ Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was
he,

"The next with dirges due in sad array Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne.
Approach and read (for thou can'st read)
the lay,¹¹⁵
Graved on the stone beneath yon aged thorn."

THE EPITAPH

*Here rests his head upon the lap of earth
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown.
Fair Science frowned not on his humble
birth,
And Melancholy marked him for her own.*¹²⁰

*Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heaven did a recompense as largely send:
He gave to Misery all he had, a tear,
He gained from Heaven ('twas all he wished) a friend.*

*No farther seek his merits to disclose,¹²⁵
Or draw his frailties from their dread
abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose)
The bosom of his Father and his God.*

THE PROGRESS OF POESY

A PINDARIC ODE

I

The Strophe

Awake, Æolian lyre, awake,
And give to rapture all thy trembling
strings.

From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their mazy progress take:
The laughing flowers, that round them blow,⁵

Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of music winds along
Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,
Through verdant vales, and Ceres' golden
reign:

Now rolling down the steep amain,¹⁰
Headlong, impetuous, see it pour:
The rocks and nodding groves rebellow to the roar.

The Antistrophe

Oh! Sovereign of the willing soul,
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell! the sullen Cares¹⁵
And frantic Passions hear thy soft control.
On Thracia's hills the Lord of War,
Has curbed the fury of his car,
And dropped his thirsty lance at thy command.

Perching on the scepter'd hand²⁰
Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feathered king
With ruffled plumes, and flagging wing:
Quenched in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his eye.

The Epode

Thee the voice, the dance, obey,²⁵
Tempered to thy warbled lay.
O'er Idalia's velvet-green
The rosy-crown'd Loves are seen
On Cytherea's day
With antic Sports, and blue-eyed Pleasures,³⁰

Frisking light in frolic measures;
Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet:
To brisk notes in cadence beating
Glance their many-twinkling feet.³⁵

Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare:
 Where'er she turns the Graces homage pay.
 With arms sublime,¹ that float upon the air,
 In gliding state she wins her easy way:
 O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom, move 40
 The bloom of young desire, and purple light of love.

II

The Strophe

Man's feeble race what ills await,
 Labor, and Penury, the racks of Pain,
 Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,
 And Death, sad refuge from the storms of Fate! 45
 The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
 And justify the laws of Jove.
 Say, has he given in vain the heavenly Muse?
 Night, and all her sickly dews,
 Her spectres wan, and birds of boding cry,
 He gives to range the dreary sky: 51
 Till down the eastern cliffs afar
 Hyperion's march they spy, and glittering shafts of war.

The Antistrophe

In climes beyond the solar road,
 Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam, 55
 The Muse has broke the twilight-gloom,
 To cheer the shivering native's dull abode.
 And oft, beneath the odorous shade
 Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
 She deigns to hear the savage youth repeat 60
 In loose numbers wildly sweet
 Their feather-cinctured chiefs, and dusky loves.
 Her track, where'er the Goddess roves,
 Glory pursue, and generous Shame,
 The unconquerable mind, and Freedom's holy flame. 65

The Epode

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep,
 Isles, that crown the Ægean deep,
 Fields, that cool Ilissus laves,
 Or where Mæander's amber waves

¹ uplifted.

In lingering labyrinths creep, 70
 How do your tuneful echoes languish,
 Mute, but to the voice of Anguish?
 Where each old poetic mountain Inspiration breathed around:
 Every shade and hallowed fountain 75
 Murmured deep a solemn sound:
 Till the sad Nine in Greece's evil hour
 Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains.
 Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant-Power,
 And coward Vice, that revels in her chains. 80
 When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
 They sought, O Albion! next thy sea-encircled coast.

III

The Strophe

Far from the sun and summer-gale,
 In thy green lap was Nature's darling laid,
 What time, where lucid Avon strayed, 85
 To him the mighty mother did unveil
 Her awful face: the dauntless child
 Stretched forth his little arms, and smiled.
 This pencil take (she said) whose colors clear Richly paint the vernal year: 90
 Thine too these golden keys, immortal boy!
 This can unlock the gates of Joy;
 Of Horror that, and thrilling Fears,
 Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears.

The Antistrophe

Nor second he, that rode sublime 95
 Upon the seraph-wings of Ecstasy,
 The secrets of the Abyss to spy.
 He passed the flaming bounds of place and time:
 The living throne, the sapphire-blaze,
 Where angels tremble, while they gaze, 100
 He saw; but blasted with excess of light,
 Closed his eyes in endless night.
 Behold, where Dryden's less presumptuous car,
 Wide o'er the fields of glory bear
 Two coursers of ethereal race, 105
 With necks in thunder clothed, and long-resounding pace.

The Epode

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
 Bright-eyed Fancy hovering o'er Scatters from her pictured urn Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn. 110
 But ah! 'tis heard no more——
 O Lyre divine, what daring spirit
 Wakes thee now? though he inherit
 Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
 That the Theban Eagle bear 115
 Sailing with supreme dominion
 Through the azure deep of air:
 Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
 Such forms, as glitter in the Muse's ray
 With orient hues, unborrowed of the
 Sun: 120
 Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant
 way
 Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate, Bencath the good how far—but far above the great.

THE BARD

A PINDARIC ODE

I

The Strophe

"Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
 Confusion on thy banners wait,
 Though fanned by Conquest's crimson
 wing
 They mock the air with idle state.
 Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail, 5
 Nor even thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
 To save thy secret soul from nightly
 fears,
 From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's
 tears!"
 Such were the sounds, that o'er the crested pride
 Of the first Edward scattered wild dis-
 may, 10
 As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy
 side
 He wound with toilsome march his long
 array.
 Stout Glo'ster stood aghast in speechless
 trance;
 "To arms!" cried Mortimer, and couched his quivering lance.

The Antistrophe

On a rock, whose haughty brow 15
 Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
 Robed in the sable garb of woe,
 With haggard eyes the Poet stood;
 (Loose his beard, and hoary hair Streamed, like a meteor, to the troubled
 air) 20
 And with a master's hand, and prophet's
 fire,
 Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre:
 "Hark, how each giant-oak, and desert
 cave,
 Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
 O'er thee, O King! their hundred arms
 they wave, 25
 Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs
 breathe;
 Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
 To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewel-lyn's lay.

The Epode

"Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
 That hushed the stormy main; 30
 Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
 Mountains, ye mourn in vain
 Modred, whose magic song
 Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topped head.
 On dreary Arvon's shore they lie, 35
 Smeared with gore, and ghastly pale:
 Far, far aloof the affrighted ravens sail;
 The famished eagle screams, and passes by.
 Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
 Dear, as the light that visits these sad
 eyes, 40
 Dear, as the ruddy drops that warm my
 heart,
 Ye died amidst your dying country's
 cries—
 No more I weep. They do not sleep.
 On yonder cliffs, a griesly band,
 I see them sit, they linger yet, 45
 Avengers of their native land:
 With me in dreadful harmony they join,
 And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line:—

II

The Strophe

"Weave the warp, and weave the woof,
 The winding sheet of Edward's race. 50

Give ample room, and verge enough
 The characters of hell to trace.
 Mark the year, and mark the night,
 When Severn shall re-echo with affright
 The shrieks of death, through Berkley's roofs that ring, 55
 Shrieks of an agonising king!
 She-Wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs,
 That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled
 mate,
 From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
 The scourge of Heaven. What terrors round him wait! 60
 Amazement in his van, with flight combined,
 And sorrow's faded form, and solitude
 behind.

The Antistrophe

"Mighty Victor, mighty Lord,
 Low on his funeral couch he lies!
 No pitying heart, no eye, afford 65
 A tear to grace his obsequies.
 Is the sable warrior fled?
 Thy son is gone. He rests among the
 dead.
 The swarm, that in thy noon-tide beam
 were born?
 Gone to salute the rising morn. 70
 Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr
 blows,
 While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
 In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes;
 Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm;
 Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's
 sway, 75
 That, hushed in grim repose, expects his evening prey.

The Epode

"Fill high the sparkling bowl,
 The rich repast prepare;
 Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast.
 Close by the regal chair 80
 Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
 A baleful smile upon their baffled guest.
 Heard ye the din of battle bray,
 Lance to lance and horse to horse?
 Long years of havoc urge their destined course, 85

And through the kindred squadrons mow
 their way.
 Ye Towers of Julius, London's lasting
 shame,
 With many a foul and midnight murder
 fed,
 Revere his consort's faith, his father's
 fame,
 And spare the meek usurper's holy head. 90
 Above, below, the rose of snow,
 Twined with her blushing foe, we spread:
 The bristled Boar in infant-gore
 Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
 Now, brothers, bending o'er the accursed loom 95
 Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom.

III

The Strophe

"Edward, lo! to sudden fate
 (Weave we the woof. The thread is spun.)
 Half of thy heart we consecrate.
 (The web is wove. The work is done.)'—
 Stay, oh stay! nor thus forlorn 101 Leave me unblessed, unpitied, here to mourn!
 In yon bright track, that fires the western
 skies,
 They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
 But oh! what solemn scenes on Snow-don's height 105
 Descending slow their glittering skirts
 unroll?
 Visions of glory, spare my aching sight,
 Ye unborn ages, crowd not on my soul!
 No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.
 All-hail, ye genuine kings, Britannia's issue, hail! 110

The Antistrophe

"Girt with many a baron bold
 Sublime their starry fronts they rear;
 And gorgeous dames, and statesmen old
 In bearded majesty, appear.
 In the midst a form divine! 115
 Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-line;
 Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face,
 Attempered sweet to virgin-grace.
 What strings symphonious tremble in the
 air,
 What strains of vocal transport round her
 play! 120

Hear from the grave, great Taliessin,
 hear;
 They breathe a soul to animate thy
 clay.
 Bright Rapture calls, and soaring, as she sings,
 Waves in the eye of Heaven her many-colored wings.

The Epode

"The verse adorn again 125
 Fierce War, and faithful Love,
 And Truth severe, by fairy Fiction drest.
 In buskined measures move
 Pale Grief, and pleasing Pain,
 With Horror, Tyrant of the throbbing
 breast. 130

A voice, as of the cherub-choir,
 Gales from blooming Eden bear;
 And distant warblings lessen on my ear,
 That lost in long futurity expire.

Fond¹ impious man, think'st thou, yon sanguine cloud, 135 Raised by thy breath, has quenched the orb of day?

To-morrow he repairs the golden flood,
 And warms the nations with redoubled
 ray.

Enough for me: with joy I see
 The different doom our fates assign. 140
 Be thine Despair, and scepter'd Care,
 To triumph, and to die, are mine."—

He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's height Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless night.

THE FATAL SISTERS

AN ODE FROM THE NORSE TONGUE

Now the storm begins to lower,
 (Haste, the loom of hell prepare,) Iron-sleet of arrowy shower
 Hurtles in the darkened air.

Glittering lances are the loom, 5
 Where the dusky warp we strain,
 Weaving many a soldier's doom,
 Orkney's woe, and Randver's bane.

¹ foolish.

See the griesly texture grow!
 ('Tis of human entrails made,) 10
 And the weights, that play below,
 Each a gasping warrior's head.

Shafts for shuttles, dipt in gore,
 Shoot the trembling cords along.
 Sword, that once a monarch bore, 15
 Keep the tissue close and strong.

Mista black, terrific maid,
 Sangrida, and Hilda, see,
 Join the wayward work to aid:
 'Tis the woof of victory. 20

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
 Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
 Blade with clattering buckler meet,
 Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

(Weave the crimson web of war.) 25
 Let us go, and let us fly,
 Where our friends the conflict share,
 Where they triumph, where they die.

As the paths of fate we tread,
 Wading through the ensanguined field: 30
 Gondula, and Geira, spread
 O'er the youthful king your shield.

We the reins to slaughter give,
 Ours to kill, and ours to spare:
 Spite of danger he shall live. 35
 (Weave the crimson web of war.)

They, whom once the desert-beach
 Pent within its bleak domain,
 Soon their ample sway shall stretch
 O'er the plenty of the plain. 40

Low the dauntless earl is laid,
 Gored with many a gaping wound:
 Fate demands a nobler head;
 Soon a king shall bite the ground.

Long his loss shall Eirin weep, 45
 Ne'er again his likeness see;
 Long her strains in sorrow steep,
 Strains of immortality!

Horror covers all the heath,
 Clouds of carnage blot the sun: 50
 Sisters, weave the web of death;
 Sisters, cease, the work is done.

Hail the task, and hail the hands!
Songs of joy and triumph sing!
Joy to the victorious bands; 55
Triumph to the younger king.

Mortal, thou that hear'st the tale,
Learn the tenor of our song. .
Scotland, through each winding vale
Far and wide the notes prolong. 60

Sisters, hence with spurs of speed:
Each her thundering falchion wield;
Each bestride her sable steed.
Hurry, hurry to the field.

SKETCH OF HIS OWN CHARACTER

Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to importune;
He had not the method of making a fortune;
Could love, and could hate, so was thought somewhat odd;
No very great wit, he believed in a God.
A place or a pension he did not desire, 5
But left church and state to Charles Townshend and Squire.

LETTERS

TO MRS. DOROTHY GRAY

LYONS, October 13, 1739.

. . . It is a fortnight since we set out from hence upon a little excursion to Geneva. We took the longest road, which lies through Savoy, on purpose to see a famous monastery, called the Grand Chartreuse, and had no reason to think our time lost. After having travelled seven days very slow (for we did not change horses, it being impossible for a chaise to go post in these roads) we [10 arrived at a little village, among the mountains of Savoy, called Échelles; from thence we proceeded on horses, who we used to the way, to the mountain of the Chartreuse. It is six miles to the top;
the road runs winding up it, commonly not six feet broad; on one hand is the rock, with woods of pine-trees hanging overhead; on the other, a monstrous precipice, almost perpendicular, at the bottom [20

of which rolls a torrent, that sometimes tumbling among the fragments of stone that have fallen from on high, and sometimes precipitating itself down vast descents with a noise like thunder, which is still made greater by the echo from the mountains on each side, concurs to form one of the most solemn, the most romantic, and the most astonishing scenes I ever beheld. . . . [30

TO MRS. DOROTHY GRAY

TURIN, November 7, 1739.

I am this night arrived here, and have just set down to rest me after eight days' tiresome journey. For the first three we had the same road we before passed through to go to Geneva; the fourth we turned out of it, and for that day and the next travelled rather among than upon the Alps; the way commonly running through a deep valley by the side of the river Arve, which works itself a pas- [10 sage, with great difficulty and a mighty noise, among vast quantities of rocks, that have rolled down from the mountaintops. The winter was so far advanced as in great measure to spoil the beauty of the prospect; however, there was still somewhat fine remaining amidst the savageness and horror of the place: the sixth we began to go up several of these mountains; and as we were passing [20
one, met with an odd accident enough:
Mr. Walpole had a little fat black spaniel, that he was very fond of, which he sometimes used to set down, and let it run by the chaise side. We were at that time in a very rough road, not two yards broad at most; on one side was a great wood of pines, and on the other a vast precipice;
it was noonday, and the sun shone bright,
when all of a sudden, from the wood- [30 side (which was as steep upwards as the other part was downwards), out rushed a great wolf, came close to the head of the horses, seized the dog by the throat, and rushed up the hill again with him in his mouth. This was done in less than a quarter of a minute; we all saw it, and yet the servants had not time to draw their pistols, or do anything to save the dog. If he had not been there, and [40 the creature had thought fit to lay hold of one of the horses, chaise, and we, and all must inevitably have tumbled about fifty fathoms perpendicular down the precipice. The seventh we came to Lanebourg, the last town in Savoy; it lies at the foot of the famous Mount Cenis, which is so situated as to allow no room for any way but over the very top of it. Here the chaise was forced to be pulled to [50 pieces, and the baggage and that to be carried by mules. We ourselves were wrapped up in our furs, and seated upon a sort of matted chair without legs, which is carried upon poles in the manner of a bier, and so begun to ascend by the help of eight men. It was six miles to the top, where a plain opens itself about as many more in breadth, covered perpetually with very deep snow, and in the midst [60 of that a great lake of unfathomable depth, from whence a river takes its rise, and tumbles over monstrous rocks quite down the other side of the mountain. The descent is six miles more, but infinitely more steep than the going up; and, here the men perfectly fly down with you, stepping from stone to stone with incredible swiftness in places where none but they could go three paces without [70 falling. The immensity of the precipices, the roaring of the river and torrents that run into it, the huge crags covered with ice and snow, and the clouds below you and about you, are objects it is impossible to conceive without seeing them; and though we had heard many strange descriptions of the scene, none of them at all came up to it. . . .

TO RICHARD WEST

TURIN, November 16, 1739.

. . . I have not, as yet, anywhere met with those grand and simple works of Art, that are to amaze one, and whose sight one is to be the better for: but those of Nature have astonished me beyond expression. In our little journey up to the Grande Chartreuse, I do not remember to have gone ten paces without an exclamation that there was no restraining. Not a precipice, not a torrent, not a cliff, [10 but is pregnant with religion and poetry. There are certain scenes that would awe an atheist into belief, without the help of other argument. One need not have a very fantastic imagination to see spirits there at noonday; you have Death perpetually before your eyes, only so far removed, as to compose the mind without frightening it. I am well persuaded St. Bruno was a man of no common genius, [20 to choose such a situation for his retirement; and perhaps should have been a disciple of his, had I been born in his time. . . .

TO HORACE WALPOLE

CAMBRIDGE, February 11, 1751.

As you have brought me into a little sort of distress, you must assist me, I believe, to get out of it as well as I can. Yesterday I had the misfortune of receiving a letter from certain gentlemen (as their bookseller expresses it), who have taken the Magazine of Magazines into their hands. They tell me that an ingenious poem, called reflections in a Country Church-yard, has been com- [10 municated to them, which they are printing forthwith; that they are informed that the excellent author of it is I by name, and that they beg not only his indulgence, but the honor of his correspondence, etc. As I am not at all disposed to be either so indulgent, or so correspondent, as they desire, I have but one bad way left to escape the honor they would inflict upon me; and therefore am obliged to desire [20 you would make Dodsley print it immediately (which may be done in less than a week's time) from your copy, but without my name, in what form is most convenient to him, but on his best paper and character; he must correct the press himself, and print it without any interval between the stanzas, because the sense is in some places continued beyond them; and the title must be, — Elegy, writ- [30 ten in a Country Church-yard. If he would add a line or two to say it came into his hands by accident, I should like it better. If you behold the Magazine of Magazines in the light that I do, you will not refuse to give yourself this trouble on my account, which you have taken of your own accord before now. If Dodsley do not do this immediately, he may as well let it alone. [40

TO THE REV. WILLIAM MASON

December 19, 1757.

Dear Mason—Though I very well know the bland emollient saponaceous qualities both of sack and silver, yet if any great man would say to me, "I make you rat-catcher to his Majesty, with a salary of £300 a year and two butts of the best Malaga; and though it has been usual to catch a mouse or two, for form's sake, in public once a year, yet to you, sir, we will not stand upon these things," I can- [10 not say I should jump at it; nay, if they would drop the very name of the office, and call me Sinecure to the King's Majesty, I should still feel a little awkward, and think everybody I saw smelt a rat about me; but I do not pretend to blame any one else that has not the same sensations; for my part I would rather be serjeant trumpeter or pinmaker to the palace. Nevertheless I interest my- [20 self a little in the history of it, and rather wish somebody may accept it that will retrieve the credit of the thing, if it be retrievable, or ever had any credit. Rowe was, I think, the last man of character that had it. As to Settle, whom you mention, he belonged to my lord mayor, not to the king. Eusden was a person of great hopes in his youth, though he at last turned out a drunken parson. [30 Dryden was as disgraceful to the office, from his character, as the poorest scribbler could have been from his verses. The office itself has always humbled the professor hitherto (even in an age when kings were somebody), if he were a poor writer by making him more conspicuous, and if he were a good one by setting him at war with the little fry of his own profession, for there are poets little enough to [40 envy even a poet-laureate. . . .

JAMES MACPHERSON (1736-1796)

From CATH-LODA

A Tale of the times of old!

Why, thou wanderer unseen! Thou bender of the thistle of Lora; why, thou breeze of the valley, hast thou left mine ear? I hear no distant roar of streams!

No sound of the harp, from the rock! Come, thou huntress of Lutha, Malvina, call back his soul to the bard. I look forward to Lochlin of lakes, to the dark, billowy bay of U-thorno, where Fingal [10 descends from ocean, from the roar of winds. Few are the heroes of Morven, in a land unknown!

Starno sent a dweller of Loda, to bid Fingal to the feast; but the king remembered the past, and all his rage arose. "Nor Gormal's mossy towers, nor Starno, shall Fingal behold. Deaths wander, like shadows, over his fiery soul! Do I forget that beam of light, the white-handed [20 daughter of kings? Go, son of Loda; his words are wind to Fingal: wind, that to and fro drives the thistle, in autumn's dusky vale. Duth-maruno, arm of death! Cromma-glas, of iron shields! Struthmor, dweller of battle's wing! Cormar, whose ships bound on seas, careless as the course of a meteor, on dark-rolling clouds! Arise around me, children of heroes, in a land unknown! Let each look on his [30 shield, like Trenmor, the ruler of wars."

* * * * *

Around the king they rise in wrath. No words come forth: they seize their spears. Each soul is rolled into itself. At length the sudden clang is waked, on all their echoing shields. Each takes his hill, by night; at intervals, they darkly stand. Unequal bursts the hum of songs, between the roaring wind!

Broad over them rose the moon! [40

In his arms came tall Duth-maruno; he from Croma of rocks, stern hunter of the boar! In his dark boat he rose on waves.

* * * * *

Fingal rushed, in all his arms, wide-bounding over Turthor's stream, that sent its sullen roar by night through Gormal's misty vale. A moon-beam glittered on a rock; in the midst, stood a stately form; a form with floating [50 locks, like Lochlin's white-bosomed maids. Unequal are her steps, and short. She throws a broken song on wind. At times she tosses her white arms: for grief is dwelling in her soul.

* * * * *

Whence is the stream of years? Whither do they roll along? Where have they hid, in mist, their many-colored sides?

I look into the times of old, but they seem dim to Ossian's eyes, like reflected [60 moonbeams on a distant lake. Here rise the red beams of war! There, silent, dwells a feeble race! They mark no years with their deeds, as slow they pass along. Dweller between the shields! thou that awakest the failing soul! descend from thy wall, harp of Cona, with thy voices three! Come with that which kindles the past: rear the forms of old, on their own dark-brown years! [70

From THE SONGS OF SELMA

It is night; I am alone, forlorn on the hill of storms. The wind is heard in the mountain. The torrent pours down the rock. No hut receives me from the rain; forlorn on the hill of winds!

Rise, moon! from behind thy clouds. Stars of the night arise! Lead me, some light, to the place where my love rests from the chase alone! his bow near him, unstrung; his dogs panting around [10 him. But here I must sit alone, by the rock of the mossy stream. The stream and the wind roar aloud. I hear not the voice of my love! Why delays my Salgar, why the chief of the hill his promise? Here is the rock, and here the tree! here is the roaring stream! Thou didst promise with night to be here. Ah! whither is my Salgar gone? With thee I would fly, from my father; with thee from my [20 brother of pride. Our races have long been foes; we are not foes, O Salgar!

Cease a little while, O wind! stream, be thou silent a while! let my voice be heard around. Let my wanderer hear me! Salgar! it is Colma who calls. Here is the tree, and the rock. Salgar, my love! I am here. Why delayest thou thy coming? Lo! the calm moon comes forth. The flood is bright in the vale. The [30 rocks are grey on the steep. I see him not on the brow. His dogs come not before him, with tidings of his near approach. Here I must sit alone.

From CARTHON

OSSIAN'S ADDRESS TO THE SUN

O thou that rollest above, round as the shield of my fathers! Whence are thy beams, O sun! thy everlasting light? Thou comest forth, in thy awful beauty; the stars hide themselves in the sky; the moon, cold and pale, sinks in the western wave. But thou thyself movest alone: who can be a companion of thy course? The oaks of the mountains fall: the mountains themselves decay with years; [10 the ocean shrinks and grows again: the moon herself is lost in heaven; but thou art for ever the same; rejoicing in the brightness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests; when thunder rolls, and lightning flies; thou lookest in thy beauty from the clouds, and laughest at the storm. But to Ossian, thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair [20 flows on the eastern clouds, or thou tremblest at the gates of the west. But thou art, perhaps, like me, for a season; thy years will have an end. Thou shalt sleep in thy clouds, careless of the voice of the morning. Exult then, O sun! in the strength of thy youth: Age is dark and unlovely; it is like the glimmering light of the moon, when it shines through broken clouds, and the mist is on the [30 hills; the blast of the north is on the plain; the traveller shrinks in the midst of his journey.

ROBERT FERGUSSON (1750-1774)

THE DAFT DAYS

Now mirk December's dowie¹ face
Glowrs ovr the rigs² wi' sour grimace,
While, thro' his minimum of space,
The bleer-eyed sun,
Wi' blinkin light and stealing pace, 5
His race doth run.

From naked groves nae birdie sings;
To shepherd's pipe nae hillock rings;
The breeze nae odorous flavor brings
From Borean cave; 10
And dwynin³ Nature droops her wings,
Wi' visage grave.

¹ dreary.

² fields.

³ pining.

Mankind but scanty pleasure glean
 Frae snawy hill or barren plain,
 Whan Winter, 'midst his nipping train, 15
 Wi' frozen spear,
 Sends drift ower a' his bleak domain,
 And guides¹ the weir.²

Auld Reikie!³ thou'rt the canty⁴ hole,
 A bield⁵ for mony a caldrife⁶ soul, 20
 Wha snugly at thine ingle⁷ loll,
 Baith warm and couth;⁸
 While round they gar⁹ the bicker¹⁰ roll
 To weet their mouth.

When merry Yule-day comes, I trow, 25
 You'll scantlins¹¹ find a hungry mou,¹²
 Sma' are our cares, our stamacks fou
 O' gusty gear,¹³
 And kickshaws,¹⁴ strangers to our view,
 Sin' fairn-year.¹⁵ 30

Ye browster¹⁶ wives! now busk¹⁷ yc bra,¹⁸
 And fling your sorrows far awa';
 Then, come and gie's the tither blaw¹⁹
 Of reaming²⁰ ale,
 Mair precious than the Well of Spa, 35
 Our hearts to heal.

Then, tho' at odds wi' a' the warl',
 Amang ourselfs we'll never quarrel;
 Tho' Discord gie a cankered snarl
 To spoil our glee, 40
 As lang's there's pith²¹ into the barrel
 We'll drink and 'gree.

Fiddlers! your pins in temper fix,
 And roset²² weel your fiddlesticks,
 But banish vile Italian tricks 45
 From out your quorum,
 Nor fortes wi' pianos mix—
 Gie's Tullochgorum.

For nought can cheer the heart sae weel
 As can a canty²³ Highland reel; 50
 It even vivifies the heel
 To skip and dance:
 Lifeless is he wha canna feel
 Its influence.

¹ governs. ² mill-dam. ³ Edinburgh ("Old Sooty").
⁴ snug. ⁵ shelter. ⁶ freezing. ⁷ fireside.
⁸ comfortable. ⁹ make. ¹⁰ bowl.
¹¹ scarcely. ¹² mouth. ¹³ savory food. ¹⁴ delicacies
¹⁵ long ago. ¹⁶ brewer ¹⁷ dress yourselves
¹⁸ finely. ¹⁹ draught ²⁰ foaming.
²¹ anything left. ²² rosin. ²³ jolly.

Let mirth abound; let social cheer 55
 Invest the dawning of the year;
 Let blithesome innocence appear
 To crown our joy:
 Nor envy, wi' sarcastic sneer,
 Our bliss destroy. 60

And thou, great god of aqua vitæ!
 Wha sways the empire of this city—
 When fou²⁴ we're sometimes capernoity²⁵—
 Be thou prepared
 To hedge us frae that black banditti, 65
 The City Guard.

THOMAS CHATTERTON (1752–1770)

BRISTOWE TRAGEDIE;

OR, THE DETHE OF SYR CHARLES BAWDIN

The feathered songster chaunticleer
 Han²⁶ wounde hys bugle horne,
 And tolde the earlie villager
 The commynge of the morne:

Kynge Edward sawe the ruddie streakes 5
 Of lyghte eclypse the greie;
 And herde the raven's crokyng throte
 Proclayme the fated daie.

"Thou'rt righte," quod hee, "for, by the Godde
 That syttes enthroned on hyghe! 10
 Charles Bawdin, and hys fellowes twaine,
 To-daie shall surelie die."

Thenne wythe a jugge of nappy ale
 Hys knyghtes dydd onne hymm waite;
 "Goe tell the traytour, thatt to-daie 15
 Hee leaves thys mortall state."

Sir Canterlone thenne bendedd lowe,
 With harte brymm-fulle of woe;
 Hee journeyed to the castle-gate,
 And to Syr Charles dydd goe. 20

Butt whenne hee came, hys children
 twaine,
 And eke hys lovyng wyfe,
 Wythe brinie tears dydd wett the floore,
 For goode Syr Charleses lyfe.

²⁴ drunk.

²⁵ ill-natured.

²⁶ has.

"O goode Syr Charles!" sayd Canterlone,
 "Badde tydyngs I doe brynge." 26
 "Speke boldlic, manne," sayd brave Syr
 Charles,
 "Whatte says the traytor kynge?"

"I greeve to telle; before yonne sonne
 Does fromme the welkin flye, 30
 Hee hathe uppon hys honnour sworne, Thatt thou shalt surelie die."

"Wee all must die," quod brave Syr
 Charles;
 "Of thatte I'm not affearde;
 Whatte bootes to lyve a little space? 35
 Thanke Jesu, I'm prepared;

"Butt telle thye kynge, for myne hee's not,
 I'de sooner die to-daie Thanne lyve hys slave, as manie are,
 Though I shoulde lyve for aie." 40

Thenne Canterlone hee dydd goe out,
 To telle the maior straite
 To gett all thynges ynne reddyness
 For goode Syr Charles's fate.

Thenne Maisterr Canynge saughte the
 kynge, 45
 And felle down onne hys knee;
 "I'm come," quod hee, "unto your grace
 To move your clemencye."

Thenne quod the kynge, "Youre tale
 speke out,
 You have been much oure friende; 50
 Whatever youre request may bee,
 Wee wylle to ytte attende."

"My nobile leige! alle my request,
 Ys for a nobile knyghte,
 Who, though may hap hee has donne
 wronge, 55
 Hee thoughte ytte¹ style was ryghte:

"He has a spouse and children twaine,
 Alle rewyned² are for aie;
 Yff that you are resolved to lett
 Charles Bawdin die to-dai." 60

"Speke not of such a traytour vile,"
 The kynge ynne furie sayde;
 "Before the evening starre doth sheene,³ Bawdin shall loose hys hedde:

¹ It.² ruined.³ shine.

"Justice does loudlie for hym calle, 65
 And hee shalle have hys meede:
 Speke, Maister Canynge! Whatte thyng else
 Att present doe you neede?"

"My nobile leige!" goode Canynge sayde,
 "Leave justice to our Godde, 70
 And laye the yronne rule asyde;
 Be thyne the olyve rodde.

"Was Godde to serche our hertes and reines,
 The best were synners grete;
 Christ's vycarr only knowes ne synne, 75
 Ynne alle thys mortall state.

"Lett mercie rule thyne infante reigne,
 'Twylle faste⁴ thye crowne fulle sure;
 From race to race thye familie
 Alle sov'reigns shall endure: 80

"But yff wythe bloode and slaughter thou Beginne thy infante reigne, Thy crowne upponne thy childrennes
 brows
 Wylle never long remayne."

"Canynge, awaie! thys traytour vile 85
 Has scorned my power and mee;
 Howe canst thou then for such a manne
 Entreate my clemencye?"

"Mie nobile leige! the trulie brave
 Wylle val'rous actions prize; 90
 Respect a brave and nobile mynde, Although ynne enemies."

"Canynge, awaie! By Godde ynne Heav'n
 Thatt dydd mee beinge gyve,
 I wylle nott taste a bitt of breade 95
 Whilst thys Syr Charles dothe lyve.

"Bie Marie, and alle Seinctes ynne Heav'n,
 Thys sunne shall be hys laste," Thenne Canynge dropt a brinie teare,
 And from the presence paste.⁵ 100

With herte brymm-fulle of gnawynge
 grief,
 Hee to Syr Charles dydd goe,
 And sat hymm downe upponne a stoole,
 And teares beganne to flowe.

⁴ secure.⁵ passed.

"Wee all must die," quod brave Syr
Charles; 105
"Whatte bootes ytte howe or whenne;
Dethe ys the sure, the certaine fate
Of all wee mortall menne.

"Saye why, my friende, thie honest soul
Runns overr att thyne eye; 110
Is ytte for my most welcome doome
Thatt thou dost child-lyke crye?"

Quod godlie Canynge, "I doe weepe,
Thatt thou soe soone must dye,
And leave thy sonnes and helpless
wyfe; 115
'Tys thys thatt wettes myne eye."

"Thenne drie the tears thatt out thyne eye
From godlie fountaines sprynge;
Dethe I despise, and alle the power
Of Edward, traytour kynge. 120

"Whan through the tyrant's welcom
means
I shall resigne my lyfe,
The Godde I serve wylle soone provyde
For bothe mye sonnes and wyfe.

"Before I sawe the lyghtsome sunne, 125
Thys was appointed mee;
Shall mortall manne repyne or grudge
What Godde ordeynes to bee?

"Howe oft ynne bataille have I stoode,
Whan thousands dyed arounde; 130
Whan smokyng streemes of crimson bloode
Imbrewed the fattened ground:

"Howe dydd I knowe thatt ev'ry darte,
That cutte the airie waie,
Myghte nott fynde passage toe my harte,
And close myne eyes for aie? 136

"And shall I now, forr feere of dethe,
Looke wanne and bee dysmayde?
Ne! fromm my herte flie childyshe feere,
Bee alle the manne displayed. 140

"Ah! goddelyke Henrie! Godde forefende,
And garde thee and thye sonne,
Yff 'tis hys wylle; but yff 'tis nott,
Why thenne hys wylle bee donne.

"My honest friende, my faulte has beene
To serve Godde and mye prynce; 146
And thatt I no tyme-server am,
My dethe wylle soone convynce.

"Ynne Londonne citey was I borne,
Of parents of grete note; 150
My fadre dydd a nobile armes Emblazon onne hys cote:

"I make ne doubt butt hee ys gone
Where soone I hope to goe;
Where wee for ever shall bee blest, 155
From oute the reech of woe.

"Hee taughte mee justice and the laws
Wyth pitie to unite;
And eke hee taughte mee howe to knowe
The wrong cause fromm the ryghte: 160

"Hee taughte mee wyth a prudent hande
To feede the hungrie poore,
Ne lett mye sarvants dryve awaie
The hungrie fromme my doore:

"And none can saye butt alle mye lyfe 165
I have hys wordyes kept;
And summed the actyonns of the daie
Eche nyghte before I slept.

"I have a spouse, goe aske of her Yff I defyled her bedde? 170
I have a kynge, and none can laie
Black treason onne my hedde.

"Ynne Lent, and onne the holie eve,
Fromm fleshe I dydd refrayne:
Whie should I thenne appeare dismayed
To leave thys worlde of payne? 176

"Ne, hapless Henrie! I rejoyce,
I shall ne see thye dethe;
Moste willinglie ynne thye just cause
Doe I resign my brethe. 180

"Oh, fickle people! rewyned londe!
Thou wylt kenne¹ peace ne moe;²
Whyle Richard's sonnes exalt themselves,
Thye brookes wythe bloude wylle flowe.

"Saie, were ye tyred of godlie peace, 185
And godlie Henrie's reigne,
Thatt you dyd choppe³ youre easie daies
For those of bloude and payne?

¹ know.² more.³ exchange.

"Whatte though I onne a sledde be drawne,
And mangled by a hynde,¹ 190
I doe defye the traytor's pow'r,
Hee can ne harm my mynd;

"Whatte though, uphoisted onne a pole,
Mye lymbes shall rotte ynne ayre,
And ne ryche monument of brasse 195
Charles Bawdin's name shall bear;

"Yett ynne the holie booke above,
Whyche tyme can't eate awaie,
There wythe the servants of the Lord
Mye name shall lyve for aie. 200

"Thenne welcome dethe! for lyfe eterne
I leave thys mortall lyfe:
Farewell, vayne world, and alle that's
deare,
Mye sonnes and lovyng wyfe!

"Nowe dethe as welcome to mee comes, 205
As e'er the moneth of Maie;
Nor woulde I even wyshe to lyve,
Wyth my dere wyfe to staie."

Quod Canynge, "'Tys a goodlie thyng
To bee prepared to die; 210
And from thys world of peyne and grefe
To Godde ynne Heav'n to flie."

And nowe the belle began to tolle,
And claryonnes to sound;
Syr Charles hee herde the horses feete 215
A-prancing onne the grounde:

And just before the officers
His lovyng wyfe came ynne,
Weepyng unfeigned teeres of woe,
Wythe loude and dysmalle dynne. 220

"Sweet Florence! nowe I praie forbere, Ynne quiet lett mee die;
Praie Godd thatt ev'ry Christian soule
Maye looke onne dethe as I.

"Sweet Florence! why these brinie teers?
Theye washe my soule awaie, 226
And almost make mee wyshe for lyfe,
Wyth thee, sweete dame, to staie.

"'Tys butt a journie I shalle goe
Untoe the lande of blysse; 230
Nowe, as a prooffe of husbande's love, Receive thys holie kysse."

¹ slave.

Thenne Florence, fault'ring ynne her saie, Tremblyng these wordyes spoke,
"Ah, cruele Edward! bloudie kynge! 235
Mye herte ys welle nyghe broke:

"Ah, sweete Syr Charles! why wylt thou
goe,
Wythoute thye lovyng wyfe?
The cruelle axe thatt cuttes thy necke,
Ytte eke shall ende mye lyfe." 240

And nowe the officers came ynne
To bryng Syr Charles awaie, Whoe turnedd toe hys loyvng wyfe,
And thus to her dydd saie:

"I goe to lyfe, and nott to dethe; 245
Truste thou ynne Godde above,
And teache thy sonnes to feare the Lorde,
And ynne theyre hertes hym love:

"Teache them to runne the nobile race
Thatt I theyre fader runne; 250
Florence! shou'd dethe thee take—adiou!
Yee officers, leade onne."

Thenne Florence raved as anie madde,
And dydd her tresses tere;
"Oh, staie, mye husbande, lorde, and lyfe!" 255
Syr Charles thenne dropt a teare.

"Tyll tyredd oute wythe ravyngs loude,
Shee fellen² onne the flore;
Syr Charles exerted alle hys myghte,
And marched fromm oute the dore. 260

Uponne a sledde hee mounted thenne,
Wythe lookes full brave and swete;
Lookes thatt enshone³ ne more concern
Thanne anie ynne the strete.

Before hym went the council-mennie, 265
Ynne scarlett robes and golde,
And tassils spanglyng ynne the sunne,
Muche glorious to beholde:

The Freers of Seincte Augustyne next
Appeared to the syghte, 270
Alle cladd ynne homelie russett weedes,
Of godlie monkysh plyghte:

² fell.

³ displayed.

Ynne diffraunt partes a godlie psaume
 Moste sweetlie theye dydd chaunt;
 Behynde theyre backes syx mynstrelles
 came, 275
 Who tuned the strunge¹ bataunt.

Thenne fyve-and-twentye archers came;
 Echone the bowe dydd bende,
 From rescue of Kynge Henrie's friends
 Syr Charles forr to defend. 280

Bolde as a lyon came Syr Charles,
 Drawne onne a cloth-layde sledde,
 Bye two blacke stedes ynne trappynge
 white,
 Wyth plumes uponne theyre hedde:

Behynde hym five-and-twentye moe 285
 Of archers stronge and stoute,
 Wyth bended bowe echone ynne hande,
 Marched ynne goodlie route;

Seincte Jameses Freers marched next,
 Echone hys parte dydd chaunt; 290
 Behynde theyre backes syx mynstrelles
 came,
 Who tuned the strunge bataunt:

Thenne came the maior and eldermenne,
 Ynne clothe of scarlett deck't;
 And theyre attendynge menne echone, 295
 Lyke Easterne princes trickt:

And after them, a multitude
 Of citizenns dydd thronge;
 The wyndowes were alle fulle of heddes,
 As hee dydd passe alonge. 300

And whenne hee came to the hyghe
 crosse,
 Syr Charles dydd turne and saie,
 "O Thou, thatt savest manne fromme
 synne,
 Washe mye soule clean thys daie!"

Att the grete mynster² wyndowe sat 305
 The kynge ynne myckle³ state,
 To see Charles Bawdin goe alonge
 To hys most welcom fate.

Soone as the sledde drewe nyghe enowe,
 Thatt Edwarde hee myghte heare, 310

¹ stringed.² cathedral.³ great.

The brave Syr Charles hee dydd stande
 uppe,
 And thus hys words declare:

"Thou seest me, Edwarde! traytour vile!
 Exposed to infamie;
 Butt bee assured, disloyall manne! 315
 I'm greater nowe thanne thee.

"Bye foule procedynge, murdre, bloude,
 Thou wearest nowe a crowne;
 And hast appoynted mee to die,
 By power nott thyne owne. 320

"Thou thynkest I shall die to-daie;
 I have beene dede 'till nowe,
 And soone shall lyve to weare a crowne
 For aie uponne my browe:

"Whylst thou, perhapps, for som few yeares, 325
 Shalt rule thys fickle lande,
 To lett them knowe howe wyde the rule
 'Twixt kynge and tyrant hande:

"Thye pow'r unjust, thou traytour slave!
 Shall falle onne thye owne hedde"— 330
 Fromm out of hearyng of the kynge
 Departed thenne the sledde.

Kynge Edwarde's soule rushed to hys face,
 Hee turned hys hedde awaie,
 And to hys broder Gloucester 335
 Hee thus dydd speke and saie:

"To hym that soe much dreaded dethe
 Ne ghasstlie terrors brynge,
 Beholde the manne! hee spake the truthe,
 Hee's greater thanne a kynge!" 340

"Soe let hym die!" Duke Richard sayde;
 "And maye echone oure foes
 Bende downe theyre neckes to bloudie axe
 And feede the carryon crows."

And nowe the horses gentlie drewe 345
 Syr Charles uppe the hyghe hylle;
 The axe dydd glysterr ynne the sunne,
 His pretious bloude to spylle.

Syrr Charles dydd uppe the scaffold goe,
 As uppe a gilded carre 350
 Of victorye, bye val'rous chiefs
 Gayned ynne the bloudie warre:

And to the people hee dyd saie,
 "Beholde you see mee dye,
 For servynge loyally mye kynge, 355
 Mye kynge most rightfullie.

"As longe as Edward rules thys land,
 Ne quiet you wylle knowe:
 Your sonnes and husbandes shalle bee
 slayne,
 And brookes wythe bloude shall flowe.

"You leave youre goode and lawfull
 kynge, 361
 Whenne ynne adversitey;
 Lyke mee, untoe the true cause stycke,
 And for the true cause dye."

Thenne hee, wyth preestes, uponne hys knees, 365
 A pray'r to Godde dyd make,
 Beseechyng hym unto hymselfe Hys partyng soule to take.

Thenne, kneelyng downe, hee layd hys hedde
 Most seemlie onne the blocke; 370
 Whyche fromme hys bodie fayre at once
 The able heddesh-manne stroke:

And oute the bloude beganne to flowe,
 And rounde the scaffold twyne;
 And teares, enow to washe 't awaie, 375
 Dydd flowe fromme each mann's eyne.

The bloudie axe hys bodie fayre
 Ynnto foure parties cutte;
 And ev'rye parte, and eke hys hedde,
 Uponne a pole was putte. 380

One parte dydd rotte onne Kynwulph-hylle,
 One onne the mynster-tower,
 And one from off the castle-gate
 The crowen dydd devoure;

The other onne Seyncte Powle's goode
 gate, 385
 A dreery spectacle;
 Hys hedde was placed onne the hyghe
 crosse,
 Ynne hyghe-streete most nobile.

Thus was the ende of Bawdin's fate:
 Godde prosper longe oure kynge, 390
 And grante hee maye, wyth Bawdin's
 soule,
 Ynne heav'n Godd's mercie syng!

MYNSTRELLES SONGE

From ÆLLA: A TRAGYCAL ENTERLUDE

O, synge untoc mie roundelaie!
 O, droppe the brynie teare wythe mee!
 Daunce ne moe atte hallie daie,
 Lycke a reynynge¹ ryver bee;
 Mie love ys dedde, 5
 Gon to hys death-bedde,
 Al under the wyllowe tree.

Blacke hys cryne² as the wyntere nyghte,
 Whyte hys rode³ as the sommer snowe,
 Rodde⁴ hys face as the morynyng lyghte,
 Cale⁵ he lyes ynne the grave belowe; 11
 Mie love ys dedde,
 Gon to hys death-bedde,
 Al under the wyllowe tree.

Swote⁶ hys tyngue as the throstles note, 15
 Quicke ynn daunce as thoughte canne
 bee,
 Defte hys taboure, codgelle stote,
 O! hee lyes bie the wyllowe tree:
 Mie love ys dedde,
 Gon to hys death-bedde, 20
 Alle underre the wyllowe tree.

Harke! the ravenne flappes hys wyng,
 In the briered delle belowe;
 Harke! the dethe-owle loude dothe synge,
 To the nyghte-mares as heie⁷ goe; 25
 Mie love ys dedde,
 Gon to hys death-bedde,
 Al under the wyllowe tree.

See! the whyte moone sheenes onne hie;
 Whyterre ys mie true loves shroude; 30
 Whyterre yanne⁸ the morynge skie,
 Whyterre yanne the evenyng cloude;
 Mie love ys dedde,
 Gon to hys death-bedde,
 Al under the wyllowe tree. 35

Heere, uponne mie true loves grave,
 Schalle the baren fleurs be layde,
 Nee one hallie Seyncte to save
 Al the celness⁹ of a mayde.
 Mie love ys dedde, 40
 Gon to hys death-bedde,
 Alle under the wyllowe tree.

¹ running. ² hair. ³ skin. ⁴ ruddy. ⁵ cold.
⁶ sweet. ⁷ they. ⁸ than. ⁹ coldness.

Wythe mie hondes I'lle dente¹ the brieres
 Rounde his hallie corse to gre,²
 Ouphante³ fairie, lyghte youre fyres, 45
 Heere mie boddie style schalle bee.
 Mie love ys dedde,
 Gon to hys death-bedde,
 Al under the wyllowe tree.

Comme, wythe acorne-coppe and thorne,
 Drayne mie hartys blodde awaie: 51
 Lyfe and all yttes goode I scorne,
 Daunce bie nete, or feaste by daie.
 Mie love ys dedde,
 Gon to hys death-bedde, 55
 Al under the wyllowe tree.

Waterre wythes, crowne de wythe reytes,⁴
 Bere mee to yer leathalle⁵ tyde.
 I die; I komme; mie true love waytes.—
 Thos the damselle spake, and dyed. 60

WILLIAM COWPER (1731-1800)

WALKING WITH GOD. Gen. v. 24

From OLNEY HYMNS

Oh! for a closer walk with God,
 A calm and heavenly frame;
 A light to shine upon the road
 That leads me to the Lamb!

Where is the blessedness I knew 5
 When first I saw the Lord?
 Where is the soul-refreshing view
 Of Jesus and his word?

What peaceful hours I once enjoyed!
 How sweet their memory still! 10
 But they have left an aching void
 The world can never fill.

Return, O holy Dove, return,
 Sweet messenger of rest!
 I hate the sins that made thee mourn 15
 And drove thee from my breast.

The dearest idol I have known,
 Whate'er that idol be,
 Help me to tear it from thy throne,
 And worship only thee.

¹ fasten
⁴ reeds

² grow.

So shall my walk be close with God,
 Calm and serene my frame;
 So purer light shall mark the road
 That leads me to the Lamb.

ON THE LOSS OF THE ROYAL GEORGE

Toll for the brave!
 The brave that are no more!
 All sunk beneath the wave,
 Fast by their native shore!

Eight hundred of the brave, 5
 Whose courage well was tried,
 Had made the vessel heel,
 And laid her on her side.

A land-breeze shook the shrouds,
 And she was overset; 10
 Down went the Royal George,
 With all her crew complete.

Toll for the brave!
 Brave Kempenfelt is gone;
 His last sea-fight is fought; 15
 His work of glory done.

It was not in the battle;
 No tempest gave the shock;
 She sprang no fatal leak;
 She ran upon no rock. 20

His sword was in its sheath;
 His fingers held the pen,
 When Kempenfelt went down
 With twice four hundred men.

Weigh the vessel up, 25
 Once dreaded by our foes!
 And mingle with our cup
 The tears that England owes.

Her timbers yet are sound,
 And she may float again 30
 Full charged with England's thunder,
 And plough the distant main.

But Kempenfelt is gone,
 His victories are o'er;
 And he and his eight hundred 35
 Shall plough the wave no more.

THE TASK

From BOOK I

There often wanders one, whom better days
 Saw better clad, in cloak of satin trimmed
 With lace, and hat with splendid riband
 bound. 536
 A serving-maid was she, and fell in love
 With one who left her, went to sea, and
 died.
 Her fancy followed him through foaming
 waves
 To distant shores, and she would sit and weep 540
 At what a sailor suffers; fancy too,
 Delusive most where warmest wishes are,
 Would oft anticipate his glad return,
 And dream of transports she was not to
 know.
 She heard the doleful tidings of his death,
 And never smiled again. And now she roams 546
 The dreary waste; there spends the livelong day,
 And there, unless when charity forbids,
 The livelong night. A tattered apron
 hides,
 Worn as a cloak, and hardly hides, a gown 550
 More tattered still; and both but ill conceal
 A bosom heaved with never-ceasing sighs.
 She begs an idle pin of all she meets,
 And hoards them in her sleeve; but needful food,
 Though pressed with hunger oft, or come-lier clothes, 555
 Though pinched with cold, asks never.—
 Kate is crazed.
 I see a column of slow-rising smoke
 O'ertop the lofty wood that skirts the wild.
 A vagabond and useless tribe there eat
 Their miserable meal. A kettle, slung 560
 Between two poles upon a stick transverse,
 Receives the morsel; flesh obscene of dog,
 Or vermin, or, at best, of cock purloined
 From his accustomed perch. Hard-faring
 race!
 They pick their fuel out of every hedge, 565
 Which, kindled with dry leaves, just saves

Their fluttering rags, and shows a tawny
 skin,
 The vellum of the pedigree they claim.
 Great skill have they in palmistry, and
 more 570
 To conjure clean away the gold they touch,
 Conveying worthless dross into its place;
 Loud when they beg, dumb only when they steal.
 Strange! that a creature rational, and cast
 In human mould, should brutalize by choice 575
 His nature, and, though capable of arts
 By which the world might profit and himself,
 Self-banished from society, prefer
 Such squalid sloth to honorable toil!
 Yet even these, though, feigning sickness
 oft, 580
 They swathe the forehead, drag the limp-
 ing limb,
 And vex their flesh with artificial sores,
 Can change their whine into a mirthful
 note
 When safe occasion offers; and with dance,
 And music of the bladder and the bag, 585
 Beguile their woes, and make the woods
 resound.
 Such health and gaiety of heart enjoy
 The houseless rovers of the sylvan world;
 And breathing wholesome air, and wandering much,
 Need other physic none to heal the effects
 Of loathsome diet, penury, and cold. 591

* * * * *

From BOOK II

Oh for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
 Some boundless contiguity of shade,
 Where rumor of oppression and deceit,
 Of unsuccessful or successful war, Might never reach me more! My ear is pained, 5
 My soul is sick with every day's report
 Of wrong and outrage with which earth is filled.
 There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart,
 It does not feel for man; the natural bond
 Of brotherhood is severed as the flax 10
 That falls asunder at the touch of fire.
 He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
 Not colored like his own, and, having
 power.

To enforce the wrong, for such a worthy
cause Dooms and devotes him as his lawful
prey. 15
Lands intersected by a narrow frith
Abhor each other. Mountains interposed Make enemies of nations who had else
Like kindred drops been mingled into one.
Thus man devotes¹ his brother, and destroys; 20
And worse than all, and most to be deplored,
As human nature's broadest, foulest blot, Chains him, and tasks him, and exacts his sweat
With stripes that Mercy, with a bleeding
heart,
Weeps when she sees inflicted on a beast. 25
Then what is man? And what man seeing this,
And having human feelings, does not blush
And hang his head, to think himself a
man?
I would not have a slave to till my ground,
To carry me, to fan me while I sleep, 30
And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth
That sinews bought and sold have ever earned.
No: dear as freedom is, and in my heart's
Just estimation prized above all price,
I had much rather be myself the slave 35
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
We have no slaves at home: then why abroad?
And they themselves once ferried o'er the wave
That parts us, are emancipate and loosed.
Slaves cannot breathe in England; if their lungs 40
Receive our air, that moment they are
free;
They touch our country, and their shackles
fall.
That's noble, and bespeaks a nation proud
And jealous of the blessing. Sprung 45
then,
And let it circulate through every vein
Of all your empire; that where Britain's
power
Is felt, mankind may feel her mercy too.

¹ vows to destruction.

From BOOK V

There shame to manhood, and opprobrious more
To France than all her losses and defeats
Old or of later date, by sea or land, 381
Her house of bondage worse than that of
old
Which God avenged on Pharaoh—the Bastile!
Ye horrid towers, the abode of broken
hearts,
Ye dungeons and ye cages of despair, 385
That monarchs have supplied from age to age
With music such as suits their sovereign
ears—
The sighs and groans of miserable men, There's not an English heart that would not leap
To hear that ye were fallen at last, to
know 390
That even our enemies, so oft employed In forging chains for us, themselves were
free:
For he that values liberty, confines
His zeal for her predominance within No narrow bounds; her cause engages
him 395
Wherever pleaded; 'tis the cause of man.

ON THE RECEIPT OF MY MOTHER'S PICTURE

Oh that those lips had language! Life has passed
With me but roughly since I heard thee
last.
Those lips are thine—thy own sweet smile I see,
The same that oft in childhood solaced me;
Voice only fails, else how distinct they say,
"Grieve not, my child, chase all thy fears
away!" 6
The meek intelligence of those dear eyes (Blest be the art that can immortalise,
The art that baffles Time's tyrannic
claim
To quench it) here shines on me still the
same. 10
Faithful remembrancer of one so dear,
O welcome guest, though unexpected here!
Who bidst me honor with an artless song,
Affectionate, a mother lost so long,

I will obey, not willingly alone, 15
 But gladly, as the precept were her own:
 And, while that face renews my filial grief,
 Fancy shall weave a charm for my relief,
 Shall steep me in Elysian reverie,
 A momentary dream that thou art she. 20
 My mother! when I learned that thou wast dead,
 Say, wast thou conscious of the tears I
 shed?
 Hovered thy spirit o'er thy sorrowing son, Wretch even then, life's journey just begun?
 Perhaps thou gavest me, though unfelt,
 a kiss: 25
 Perhaps a tear, if souls can weep in bliss—
 Ah, that maternal smile! It answers—
 Yes.
 I heard the bell tolled on thy burial day,
 I saw the hearse that bore thee slow away,
 And turning from my nursery window,
 drew 30
 A long, long sigh, and wept a last adieu!
 But was it such?—It was.—Where thou
 art gone
 Adieus and farewells are a sound unknown.
 May I but meet thee on that peaceful
 shore,
 The parting word shall pass my lips no
 more! 35
 Thy maidens, grieved themselves at my concern,
 Oft gave me promise of thy quick return.
 What ardently I wished I long believed,
 And, disappointed still, was still deceived.
 By expectation every day beguiled, 40
 Dupe of to-morrow even from a child.
 Thus many a sad to-morrow came and
 went,
 Till, all my stock of infant sorrow spent,
 I learned at last submission to my lot;
 But, though I less deplored thee, ne'er for-
 got. 45
 Where once we dwelt our name is heard no more,
 Children not thine have trod my nursery
 floor;
 And where the gardener Robin, day by day,
 Drew me to school along the public way, Delighted with my bauble coach, and wrapped 50
 In scarlet mantle warm, and velvet capped,

'Tis now become a history little known,
 That once we called the pastoral house
 our own.
 Short-lived possession! but the record fair
 That memory keeps, of all thy kindness
 there, 55
 Still outlives many a storm that has effaced
 A thousand other themes less deeply traced.
 Thy nightly visits to my chamber made,
 That thou mightst know me safe and warmly laid;
 Thy morning bounties ere I left my home,
 The biscuit, or confectionary plum; 61
 The fragrant waters on my cheeks bestowed
 By thy own hand, till fresh they shone and glowed;
 All this, and more endearing still than
 all,
 Thy constant flow of love, that knew no
 fall, 65
 Ne'er roughened by those cataracts and brakes
 That humor interposed too often makes;
 All this still legible in memory's page,
 And still to be so to my latest age,
 Adds joy to duty, makes me glad to pay 70
 Such honors to thee as my numbers may;
 Perhaps a frail memorial, but sincere,
 Not scorned in heaven, though little noticed here.
 Could Time, his flight reversed, restore the hours,
 When, playing with thy vesture's tissued
 flowers, 75
 The violet, the pink, and jessamine,
 I pricked them into paper with a pin (And thou wast happier than myself the while,
 Would softly speak, and stroke my head and smile),
 Could those few pleasant days again
 appear, 80
 Might one wish bring them, would I wish them here?
 I would not trust my heart—the dear de-
 light
 Seems so to be desired, perhaps I might.—
 But no—what here we call our life is such,
 So little to be loved, and thou so much,
 That I should ill requite thee to constrain
 Thy unbound spirit into bonds again.

Thou, as a gallant bark from Albion's
coast 88
(The storms all weathered and the ocean crossed)
Shoots into port at some well-havened isle, 90
Where spices breathe, and brighter seasons
smile,
There sits quiescent on the floods that show
Her beauteous form reflected clear below,
While airs impregnated with incense play Around her, fanning light her streamers
gay; 95
So thou, with sails how swift! hast reached
the shore,
"Where tempests never beat nor billows
roar."
And thy loved consort on the dangerous
tide
Of life long since has anchored by thy
side.
But me, scarce hoping to attain that rest,
Always from port withheld, always distressed— 101
Me howling blasts drive devious, tempest
tossed,
Sails ripped, seams opening wide, and compass lost,
And day by day some current's thwarting
force
Sets me more distant from a prosperous
course. 105
Yet, oh, the thought that thou art safe,
and he!
That thought is joy, arrive what may
to me.
My boast is not, that I deduce my birth
From loins enthroned and rulers of the
earth;
But higher far my proud pretensions
rise— 110
The son of parents passed into the skies!
And now, farewell—Time unrevoked has
run
His wonted course, yet what I wished is
done.
By contemplation's help, not sought in
vain,
I seem to have lived my childhood o'er
again; 115
To have renewed the joys that once were
mine,
Without the sin of violating thine:

And, while the wings of Fancy still are
free,
And I can view this mimic show of thee,
Time has but half succeeded in his theft—
Thyself removed, thy power to soothe me left. 121

SONNET TO MRS. UNWIN

Mary! I want a lyre with other strings, Such aid from heaven as some have feigned they drew,
An eloquence scarce given to mortals,
new,
And undebased by praise of meaner things!
That, ere through age or woe I shed my
wings, 5
I may record thy worth, with honor
due,
In verse as musical as thou art true,
Verse that immortalizes whom it sings.
But thou hast little need. There is a book,
By seraphs writ with beams of heavenly
light, 10
On which the eyes of God not rarely look;
A chronicle of actions just and bright;
There all thy deeds, my faithful Mary,
shine,
And since thou ownest that praise, I spare thee mine.

TO MARY

The twentieth year is well-nigh past,
Since first our sky was overcast;
Ah, would that this might be the last!
My Mary!

Thy spirits have a fainter flow, 5
I see thee daily weaker grow;
'Twas my distress that brought thee low,
My Mary!

Thy needles, once a shining store,
For my sake restless heretofore, 10
Now rust disused, and shine no more,
My Mary!

For though thou gladly wouldst fulfil
The same kind office for me still,
Thy sight now seconds not thy will, 15
My Mary!

But well thou playedst the housewife's
part,
And all thy threads with magic art
Have wound themselves about this heart,
My Mary! 20

Thy indistinct expressions seem Like language uttered in a dream;
Yet me they charm, whate'er the theme,
My Mary!

Thy silver locks, once auburn bright, 25
Are still more lovely in my sight
Than golden beams of orient light,
My Mary!

For, could I view nor them nor thee,
What sight worth seeing could I see? 30
The sun would rise in vain for me,
My Mary!

Partakers of thy sad decline,
Thy hands their little force resign,
Yet, gently pressed, press gently mine, 35
My Mary!

Such feebleness of limbs thou provest,
That now at every step thou movest
Upheld by two, yet still thou lovest,
My Mary! 40

And still to love, though pressed with ill,
In wintry age to feel no chill,
With me is to be lovely still,
My Mary!

But ah! by constant heed I know, 45
How oft the sadness that I show
Transforms thy smiles to looks of woe,
My Mary!

And should my future lot be cast
With much resemblance of the past, 50
Thy worn-out heart will break at last,
My Mary!

THE CASTAWAY

Obscurest night involved the sky,
The Atlantic billows roared,
When such a destined wretch as I,
Washed headlong from on board,
Of friends, of hope, of all bereft, 5
His floating home forever left.

No braver chief could Albion boast
Than he with whom he went,
Nor ever ship left Albion's coast
With warmer wishes sent. 10
He loved them both, but both in vain,
Nor him beheld, nor her again.

Not long beneath the whelming brine,
Expert to swim, he lay;
Nor soon he felt his strength decline, 15
Or courage die away;
But waged with death a lasting strife,
Supported by despair of life.

He shouted: nor his friends had failed
To check the vessel's course, 20
But so the furious blast prevailed,
That, pitiless perforce,
They left their outcast mate behind,
And scudded still before the wind.

Some succor yet they could afford; 25
And such as storms allow,
The cask, the coop, the floated cord,
Delayed not to bestow.
But he (they knew) nor ship nor shore,
Whate'er they gave, should visit more. 30

Nor, cruel as it seemed, could he
Their haste himself condemn,
Aware that flight, in such a sea,
Alone could rescue them;
Yet bitter felt it still to die 35
Deserted, and his friends so nigh.

He long survives, who lives an hour
In ocean, self-upheld;
And so long he, with unspent power,
His destiny repelled; 40
And ever, as the minutes flew,
Entreated help, or cried "Adieu!"

At length, his transient respite past,
His comrades, who before
Had heard his voice in every blast, 45
Could catch the sound no more:
For then, by toil subdued, he drank
The stifling wave, and then he sank.

No poet wept him; but the page
Of narrative sincere, 50
That tells his name, his worth, his age,
Is wet with Anson's tear:
And tears by bards or heroes shed
Alike immortalize the dead.

I therefore purpose not, or dream, 55
 Descanting on his fate,
 To give the melancholy theme
 A more enduring date:
 But misery still delights to trace
 Its semblance in another's case. 60

No voice divine the storm allayed,
 No light propitious shone,
 When, snatched from all effectual aid,
 We perished, each alone:
 But I beneath a rougher sea, 65
 And whelmed in deeper gulfs than he.

ROBERT BURNS (1759-1796)

From LINES TO JOHN LAPRAIK

I am nae poet, in a sense,
 But just a rhymer like by chance, 50
 An' hae to learning nae pretence;
 Yet what the matter?
 Whene'er my Muse does on me glance,
 I jingle at her.

Your critic-folk may cock their nose, 55
 And say, "How can you e'er propose,
 You wha ken hardly verse frae prose,
 To mak a sang?"
 But, by your leaves, my learnèd foes, 60
 Ye're maybe wrang.

What's a' your jargon o' your schools,
 Your Latin names for horns an' stools?
 If honest Nature made you fools,
 What sairs¹ your grammars?
 Ye'd better taen up spades and shoals, 65
 Or knappin-hammers.²

A set o' dull, conceited hashes³
 Confuse their brains in college classes!
 They gang in stirks⁴ and come out asses,
 Plain truth to speak; 70
 An' syne⁵ they think to climb Parnassus
 By dint o' Greek!

Gie me ae⁶ spark o' Nature's fire,
 That's a' the learning I desire;
 Then, tho' I drudge thro' dub⁷ an' mire 75
 At pleugh or cart,
 My Muse, tho' hamely in attire,
 May touch the heart.

¹ serve. ² sledge-hammers. ³ idiots. ⁴ oxen.
⁵ afterwards. ⁶ one. ⁷ puddle.

THE HOLY FAIR

Upon a simmer⁸ Sunday morn,
 When Nature's face is fair,
 I walkèd forth to view the corn
 An' snuff the caller⁹ air.
 The rising sun owre Galston muirs 5
 Wi' glorious light was glintin,
 The hares were hirplin¹⁰ down the furs,¹¹
 The lav'rocks¹² they were chantin
 Fu' sweet that day.

As lightsomely I glowered¹³ abroad 10
 To see a scene sae gay,
 Three hizzies,¹⁴ early at the road,
 Cam skelpin¹⁵ up the way.
 Twa had manteeles o' dolefu' black,
 But ane wi' lyart¹⁶ lining; 15
 The third, that gaed a wee a-back,
 Was in the fashion shining
 Fu' gay that day.

The twa appeared like sisters twin
 In feature, form, an' claes;¹⁷ 20
 Their visage withered, lang an' thin,
 An' sour as onie slaes.¹⁸
 The third cam up, hap-step-an'-lowp,¹⁹
 As light as onie lambie,
 An' wi' a curchie²⁰ low did stoop, 25
 As soon as e'er she saw me,
 Fu' kind that day.

Wi' bonnet aff, quoth I, "Sweet lass,
 I think ye seem to ken me;
 I'm sure I've seen that bonie face, 30
 But yet I canna name ye."
 Quo' she, an' laughin as she spak,
 An' taks me by the han's,
 "Ye, for my sake, hae gien the feck²¹
 Of a' the Ten Comman's 35
 A screed²² some day.

"My name is Fun—your crònie dear,
 The nearest friend ye hae;
 An' this is Superstition here,
 An' that's Hypocrisy. 40
 I'm gaun to Mauchline Holy Fair,
 To spend an hour in daffin;²³
 Gin²⁴ ye'll go there, yon runkled²⁵ pair,
 We will get famous laughin
 At them this day." 45

⁸ summer. ⁹ fresh. ¹⁰ hopping. ¹¹ furrows.
¹² larks. ¹³ stared. ¹⁴ young women. ¹⁵ hurrying
¹⁶ grey. ¹⁷ clothes. ¹⁸ sloes. ¹⁹ majority.
²⁰ hop-step-and-jump. ²¹ courtesy. ²² if.
²³ rip. ²⁴ larking. ²⁵ wrinkled.

Quoth I, "Wi' a' my heart, I'll do't:
I'll get my Sunday's sark¹ on,
An' meet you on the holy spot;
Faith, we'se hae fine remarkin'!"
Then I gaed hame at crowdie-time,² 50
An' soon I made me ready;
For roads were clad frae side to side
Wi' monie a wearie body,
In droves that day.

Here farmers gash³ in ridin graith⁴ 55
Gaed hoddin⁵ by their cotters,
There swankies⁶ young in braw⁷ braidclaith
Are springin owre the gutters.
The lasses, skelpin⁸ barefit, thrang,⁹
In silks an' scarlets glitter, 60
Wi' sweet-milk cheese in monie a whang,¹⁰
An' farls¹¹ baked wi' butter,
Fu' crump¹² that day.

When by the plate we set our nose,
Weel heapèd up wi' ha'pence, 65
A greedy glowr Black Bonnet throws,
An' we maun draw our tippence.
Then in we go to see the show:
On every side they're gath'rin,
Some carryin dails,¹³ some chairs an' 70
stools,
An' some are busy bleth'rin¹⁴
Right loud that day.

* * * * *

Here some are thinkin on their sins,
An' some upo' their claes;
Ane curses feet that fyled¹⁵ his shins,
Anither sighs an' prays: 85
On this hand sits a chosen swatch,¹⁶
Wi' screwed-up, grace-proud faces,
On that a set o' chaps at watch,
Thrang winkin on the lasses
To chairs that day. 90

O happy is that man an' blest!
(Nae wonder that it pride him!)
Whase ain dear lass that he likes best,
Comes clinkin down beside him!
Wi' arm reposed on the chair back, 95
He sweetly does compose him;

¹ shirt. ² porridge-time. ³ shrewd. ⁴ attire.
⁵ jogging. ⁶ lusty chaps. ⁷ fine. ⁸ running
⁹ busy. ¹⁰ large slice. ¹¹ cakes ¹² crisp.
¹³ planks. ¹⁴ gabbling. ¹⁵ soiled. ¹⁶ sample.

Which by degrees slips round her neck,
An's loof¹⁷ upon her bosom,
Unkend that day.

Now a' the congregation o'er 100
Is silent expectation;
For Moodie speels¹⁸ the holy door,
Wi' tidings o' damnation.
Should Hornie,¹⁹ as in ancient days,
'Mang sons o' God present him, 105
The vera sight o' Moodie's face
To's ain het²⁰ hame had sent him
Wi' fright that day.

Hear how he clears the points o' faith
Wi' rattlin an' wi' thumpin! 110
Now meekly calm, now wild in wrath
He's stampin an' he's jumpin!
His lengthened chin, his turned-up snout,
His eldritch²¹ squeel and gestures,
Oh, how they fire the heart devout, 115
Like cantharidian plaisters,
On sic a day!

But hark! the tent has changed its voice:
There's peace and rest nae langer;
For a' the real judges rise, 120
They canna sit for anger.
Smith opens out his cauld harangues,
On practice and on morals;
An' aff the godly pour in thrangs,
To gie the jars an' barrels 125
A lift that day.

What signifies his barren shine
Of moral powers and reason?
His English style an' gesture fine
Are a' clean out o' season. 130
Like Socrates or Antonine
Or some auld pagan heathen,
The moral man he does define,
But ne'er a word o' faith in That's right that day. 135

In guid time comes an antidote
Against sic poisoned nostrum;
For Peebles, frae the water-fit,²²
Ascends the holy rostrum:
See, up he's got the word o' God 140
An' meek an' mim²³ has viewed it,

¹⁷ hand. ¹⁸ ascends. ¹⁹ the devil ²⁰ hot.
²¹ unearthly. ²² river's mouth. ²³ primly.

While Common Sense has ta'en the road,
An's aff, an' up the Cowgate
Fast, fast that day.

Wee Miller niest¹ the guard relieves, 145
An' orthodoxy raibles,²
Tho' in his heart he weel believes
An' thinks it auld wives' fables:
But faith! the birkie³ wants a manse,
So cannilie⁴ he hums them; 150
Altho' his carnal wit an' sense
Like hafflins-wise⁵ o'ercomes him
At times that day.

Now butt an' ben⁶ the change-house⁷ fills Wi' yill-caup⁸ commentators: 155
Here's cryin out for bakes⁹ an gills,
An' there the pint-stowp¹⁰ clatters;
While thick an' thrang, an' loud an' lang,
Wi' logic an' wi' Scripture,
They raise a din, that in the end 160
Is like to breed a rupture
O' wrath that day.

Leeze me¹¹ on drink! it gies us mair
Than either school or college:
It kindles wit, it waukens lear,¹² 165
It pangs¹³ us fou o' knowledge.
Be't whisky-gill or penny-wheep,¹⁴
Or onie stronger potion,
It never fails, on drinkin deep,
To kittle¹⁵ up our notion 170
By night or day.

The lads an' lasses, blythely bent
To mind baith saul an' body,
Sit round the table weel content,
An' steer about the toddy. 175
On this ane's dress an' that ane's leuk
They're makin observations;
While some are cozie i' the neuk,¹⁶
An' formin assignations
To meet some day. 180

But now the Lord's ain trumpet touts,
Till a' the hills are rairin,¹⁷
An' echoes back return the shouts—
Black Russell is na spairin.
His piercin words, like Highlan' swords, 185
Divide the joints an' marrow;

¹ next. ² babbles. ³ fellow. ⁴ cunningly. ⁵ partly.
⁶ all through the house ⁷ tavern.
⁸ ale-cup. ⁹ cakes. ¹⁰ pint-mug. ¹¹ good luck to!
¹² learning. ¹³ packs. ¹⁴ small-beer. ¹⁵ tickle.
¹⁶ corner. ¹⁷ roaring.

His talk o' hell, whare devils dwell,
Our vera "sauls does harrow"
Wi' fright that day.

A vast, unbottomed, boundless pit, 190
Filled fou o' lowin¹⁸ brunstane,¹⁹
Whase ragin flame an' scorchin heat
Wad melt the hardest whun-stane!²⁰
The half-asleep start up wi' fear
An' think they hear it roarin, 195
When presently it does appear
'Twas but some neebor snorin, Asleep that day.

'Twad be owre lang a tale to tell How monie stories past, 200
An' how they crouded to the yill,²¹
When they were a' dismist;
How drink gaed round in cogs²² and caups²³
Amang the furms²⁴ an' benches:
An' cheese and bread frae women's laps 205
Was dealt about in lunches
An' dawds²⁵ that day.

In comes a gawsie,²⁶ gash²⁷ guidwife
An' sits down by the fire,
Syne²⁸ draws her kebbuck²⁹ an' her knife;
The lasses they are shyer: 211
The auld guidmen about the grace
Frae side to side they bother,
Till some ane by his bonnet lays,
And gi'es them't,³⁰ like a tether, 215
Fu' lang that day.

Waesucks!³¹ for him that gets nae lass,
Or lasses that hae naething!
Sma' need has he to say a grace,
Or melvie³² his braw claithing! 220
O wives, be mindfu' ance yoursel
How bonie lads ye wanted,
An' dinna for a kebbuck-heel³³
Let lasses be affronted
On sic a day! 225

Now Clinkumbell, wi' rattlin tow,³⁴
Begins to jow³⁵ an' croon;
Some swagger hame the best they dow,³⁶
Some wait the afternoon.
At slaps³⁷ the billies³⁸ halt a blink, 230
Till lasses strip their shoon:

¹⁸ flaming. ¹⁹ brimstone. ²⁰ whinstone. ²¹ ale.
²² wooden bowls ²³ cups
²⁴ wooden seats. ²⁵ pieces ²⁶ jolly.
²⁷ clever. ²⁸ then ²⁹ cheese.
³⁰ gives it to them ³¹ alas ³² soil.
³³ cheese-rind. ³⁴ rope. ³⁵ swing.
³⁶ can. ³⁷ gaps in the hedge. ³⁸ young fellows.

Wi' faith an' hope, an' love an' drink,
They're a' in famous tune
For crack¹ that day.

How monie hearts this day converts 235
O' sinners and o' lasses!
Their hearts o' stane,² gin³ night, are gane
As saft as onie flesh is.
There's some are fou o' love divine,
There's some are fou o' brandy; 240
An' monie jobs that day begin,
May end in houghmagandie⁴
Some ither day.

TO A MOUSE

ON TURNING UP HER NEST WITH
THE PLOUGH, NOVEMBER, 1785

Wee, sleekit,⁵ cowrin, tim'rous beastie,
Oh, what a panic's in thy breastie!
Thou need na start awa sae hasty
Wi' bickerin⁶ brattle!⁷
I wad be laith⁸ to rin an' chase thee 5
Wi' murdering pattie!⁹

I'm truly sorry man's dominion
Has broken Nature's social union,
An' justifies that ill opinion
Which makes thee startle 10
At me, thy poor earth-born companion,
An' fellow-mortal!

I doubt na, whyles,¹⁰ but thou may thieve:
What then? poor beastie, thou maun¹¹
live!
A daimen¹² icker¹³ in a thrave¹⁴ 15
'S a sma' request;
I'll get a blessin wi' the lave,¹⁵
An' never miss 't!

Thy wee bit housie, too, in ruin!
Its silly wa's the win's are strewin! 20
An' naething, now, to big¹⁶ a new ane,
O' foggage¹⁷ green!
An' bleak December's winds ensuin
Baith snell¹⁸ an' keen!

Thou saw the fields laid bare and waste, 25
An' weary winter comin fast,

¹ talk. ² stone. ³ by. ⁴ disgrace ⁵ soft, sleek.
⁶ hurrying ⁷ clatter. ⁸ loth.
⁹ plough-staff. ¹⁰ sometimes. ¹¹ must.
¹² occasional. ¹³ ear ¹⁴ twenty-four sheaves.
¹⁵ rest. ¹⁶ build. ¹⁷ coarse grass. ¹⁸ bitter.

An' cozie here, beneath the blast
Thou thought to dwell,
Till crash! the cruel coulter past
Out thro' thy cell. 30

That wee bit heap o' leaves an' stibble
Has cost thee monie a weary nibble!
Now thou's turned out for a' thy trouble,
But¹⁹ house or hald,
To thole²⁰ the winter's sleety dribble 35
An' cranreuch²¹ cauld!

But, Mousie, thou art no thy lane²²
In proving foresight may be vain:
The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft a-gley,²³ 40
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain
For promised joy.

Still thou art blest, compared wi' me!
The present only toucheth thee:
But, och! I backward cast my ee 45
On prospects drear!
An' forward, tho' I canna see,
I guess an' fear!

TO A MOUNTAIN DAISY,

ON TURNING ONE DOWN WITH
THE PLOUGH, IN APRIL, 1786

Wee, modest, crimson-tippèd flow'r,
Thou's met me in an evil hour;
For I maun²⁴ crush among the stoure²⁵
Thy slender stem:
To spare thee now is past my pow'r, 5
Thou bonie gem.

Alas! it's no thy neebor sweet,
The bonie lark, companion meet,
Bending thee 'mang the dewy weet
Wi' speckled breast, 10
When upward-springing, blythe, to greet
The purpling east.

Cauld blew the bitter-biting north
Upon thy early, humble birth;
Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth 15
Amid the storm,
Scarce reared above the parent-earth
Thy tender form.

¹⁹ without. ²⁰ endure. ²¹ hoar-frost. ²² alone.
²³ amiss. ²⁴ must. ²⁵ dust.

The flaunting flowers our gardens yield High sheltering woods an' wa's¹ maun
shield: 20

But thou, beneath the random field²
O' clod or stane,
Adorns the histie³ stibble-field
Unseen, alane.

There, in thy scanty mantle clad, 25
Thy snawie bosom sun-ward spread,
Thou lifts thy unassuming head
In humble guise;
But now the share uptears thy bed,
And low thou lies! 30

Such is the fate of artless maid,
Sweet flow'ret of the rural shade!
By love's simplicity betrayed
And guileless trust;
Till she, like thee, all soiled, is laid 35
Low i' the dust.

Such is the fate of simple bard,
On life's rough ocean luckless starred!
Unskilful he to note the card
Of prudent lore, 40
Till billows rage and gales blow hard,
And overwhelm him o'er!

Such fate to suffering worth is giv'n,
Who long with wants and woes has striv'n,
By human pride or cunning driv'n 45
To misery's brink;
Till, wrenched of ev'ry stay but Heav'n,
He ruined sink!

Ev'n thou who mourn'st the daisy's fate,
That fate is thine—no distant date; 50
Stern Ruin's ploughshare drives elate,
Full on thy bloom,
Till crushed beneath the furrow's weight
Shall be thy doom.

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT
INSCRIBED TO ROBERT AIKEN, ESQ.

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys and destiny obscure;
Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor.
—GRAY.

¹ walls.

² protection.

³ dry.

My loved, my honored, much respected
friend!

No mercenary bard his homage pays;
With honest pride, I scorn each selfish
end:

My dearest meed a friend's esteem and praise.

To you I sing, in simple Scottish
lays, 5

The lowly train in life's sequestered
scene;

The native feelings strong, the guileless ways;

What Aiken in a cottage would have been;

Ah! tho' his worth unknown, far happier
there, I ween!

November chill blows loud wi' angry
sugh,⁴ 10

The short'ning winter day is near a
close;

The miry beasts retreating frae the pleugh,

The black'ning trains o' craws to their repose;

The toil-worn cotter frae his labor goes,—

This night his weekly moil is at an
end,— 15

Collects his spades, his mattocks, and his hoes,

Hoping the morn in ease and rest to spend,

And weary, o'er the moor, his course does hameward bend.

At length his lonely cot appears in view,
Beneath the shelter of an aged
tree; 20

Th' expectant wee-things, toddlin, stacher⁵ through

To meet their dad, wi' flichterin⁶ noise an' glee.

His wee bit ingle,⁷ blinkin bonilie,
His clean hearth-stane, his thrifty wife's smile,

The lispin infant prattling on his knee, 25

Does a' his weary kiaugh⁸ and care
beguile,

An' makes him quite forget his labor an'
his toil.

⁴ moan. ⁵ stagger. ⁶ fluttering. ⁷ fire-place. ⁸ anxiety.

Belyve,¹ the elder bairns come drapping
in,
At service out amang the farmers
roun';
Some ca² the pleugh, some herd, some tentie³ rin 30
A cannie errand to a neebor toun:
Their eldest hope, their Jeny,
woman-grown,
In youthfu' bloom, love sparkling in her ee,
Comes hame, perhaps to shew a braw⁴
new gown,
Or deposite her sair-won⁵ penny-fee, 35
To help her parents dear, if they in hardship be.

With joy unfeigned, brothers and sisters
meet,
An' each for other's weelfare kindly spiers:⁶
The social hours, swift-winged, unnoticed fleet;
Each tells the uncos⁷ that he sees or hears. 40
The parents, partial, eye their hopeful
years;
Anticipation forward points the view;
The mother, wi' her needle an' her sheers,
Gars⁸ auld claes look amaist as weel's
the new;
The father mixes a' wi' admonition due. 45

Their master's an' their mistress's command
The youngers a' are warnèd to obey;
An' mind their labors wi' an eydent⁹
hand,
An' ne'er, tho' out o' sight, to jauk¹⁰
or play:
"An' O! be sure to fear the Lord
alway, 50
An' mind your duty, duly, morn and
night!
Lest in temptation's path ye gang
astray,
Implore His counsel and assisting might:
They never sought in vain that sought
the Lord aright!"

¹ soon.⁵ hard-earned.⁸ makes.² drive.⁶ inquires.⁹ diligent.³ careful.⁷ unusual things.¹⁰ dally.⁴ fine.

But hark! a rap comes gently to the
door. 55
Jenny, wha kens the meaning o' the
same,
Tells how a neebor lad cam o'er the moor,
To do some errands, and convoy her hame.
The wily mother sees the conscious
flame
Sparkle in Jenny's ee, and flush her cheek; 60
Wi' heart-struck, anxious care, inquires his name,
While Jenny hafflins¹¹ is afraid to speak;
Weel pleased the mother hears it's nae wild worthless rake.

With kindly welcome Jenny brings him ben;¹²
A strappin' youth, he takes the mother's eye; * 65
Blythe Jenny sees the visit's no ill taen;
The father cracks¹³ of horses, pleughs, and kye.¹⁴
The youngster's artless heart o'erflows
wi' joy,
But, blate¹⁵ and laithfu',¹⁶ scarce can weel
behave;
The mother wi' a woman's wiles can spy 70
What makes the youth sae bashfu' an'
sae grave,
Weel-pleased to think her bairn's respected like the lave.¹⁷

O happy love! where love like this is
found!
O heart-felt raptures! bliss beyond
compare!
I've paced much this weary, mortal
round, 75
And sage experience bids me this declare—
"If Heaven a draught of heavenly pleasure spare,
One cordial in this melancholy vale,
'Tis when a youthful, loving, modest pair,
In other's arms breathe out the tender
tale, 80
Beneath the milk-white thorn that scents
the evening gale."

¹¹ partly.
¹⁶ shy.¹² within.
¹⁶ bashful.¹³ talks.
¹⁷ rest.¹⁴ cows.

Is there, in human form, that bears a
heart,
A wretch! a villain! lost to love and
truth!
That can with studied, sly, ensnaring
art
Betray sweet Jenny's unsuspecting
youth? 85
Curse on his perjured arts! dissem-bling, smooth!
Are honor, virtue, conscience, all exiled?
Is there no pity, no relenting ruth,
Points to the parents fondling o'er their child,
Then paints the ruined maid, and their distraction wild? 90

But now the supper crowns their simple
board,
The halesome parritch,¹ chief of Scotia's food;
The soupe² their only hawkie³ does
afford,
That yont⁴ the hallan⁵ snugly chows
her cood.
The dame brings forth, in compli-mental mood, 95
To grace the lad, her weel-hained⁶
kebbuck⁷ fell,⁸
An' aft⁹ he's prest, an' aft he ca's it guid;
The frugal wife, garrulous, will tell,
How 'twas a towmond¹⁰ auld, sin' lint¹¹ was i' the bell.

The cheerfu' supper done, wi' serious
face, 100
They round the ingle form a circle
wide;
The sire turns o'er with patriarchal grace
The big ha'-Bible,¹² ance his father's
pride;
His bonnet rev'rently is laid aside,
His lyart¹³ haffets¹⁴ wearing thin and
bare; 105
Those strains that once did sweet in Zion glide,
He wales¹⁵ a portion with judicious care;
And, "Let us worship God," he says with solemn air.

¹ porridge.² milk.³ cow.⁴ beyond.⁵ partition.⁶ well-saved.⁷ cheese.⁸ strong.⁹ often.¹⁰ twelve-month.¹¹ since flax.¹² hall-Bible.¹³ grey.¹⁴ locks.¹⁵ selects.

They chant their artless notes in simple
guise,
They tune their hearts, by far the noblest aim: 110
Perhaps Dundee's wild-warbling measures rise,
Or plaintive Martyrs, worthy of the
name,
Or noble Elgin beats¹⁶ the heavenward flame,
The sweetest far of Scotia's holy lays.
Compared with these, Italian trills are tame; 115
The tickled ear no heart-felt raptures
raise;
Nae unison hae they with our Creator's
praise.

The priest-like father reads the sacred
page,—
How Abram was the friend of God
on high;
Or Moses bade eternal warfare wage 120
With Amalek's ungracious progeny;
Or how the royal bard did groaning
lie
Beneath the stroke of Heaven's avenging ire;
Or Job's pathetic plaint, and wailing
cry;
Or rapt Isaiah's wild, seraphic fire; 125
Or other holy seers that tune the sacred lyre.

Perhaps the Christian volume is the theme,—
How guiltless blood for guilty man was shed;
How He, who bore in Heaven the second name,
Had not on earth whereon to lay His
head: 130
How His first followers and servants
sped;
The precepts sage they wrote to many a land
How he, who lone in Patmos banishèd,
Saw in the sun a mighty angel stand,
And heard great Bab'lon's doom pronounced by Heaven's command. 135

Then kneeling down to Heaven's Eternal King,
The saint, the father, and the husband prays:

¹⁶ kindles.

Hope "springs exulting on triumphant wing,"
 That thus they all shall meet in future days:
 There ever bask in uncreated rays, 140
 No more to sigh or shed the bitter tear,
 Together hymning their Creator's praise,
 In such society, yet still more dear,
 While circling Time moves round in an eternal sphere.

Compared with this, how poor Religion's pride 145
 In all the pomp of method and of art,
 When men display to congregations wide
 Devotion's ev'ry grace except the heart!
 The Power, incensed, the pageant will desert,
 The pompous strain, the sacerdotal stole; 150
 But haply in some cottage far apart
 May hear, well pleased, the language of the soul,
 And in His book of life the inmates poor enrol.

Then homeward all take off their sev'ral way;
 The youngling cottagers retire to rest; 155
 The parent-pair their secret homage pay,
 And proffer up to Heaven the warm request,
 That He who stills the raven's clam'rous nest
 And decks the lily fair in flow'ry pride,
 Would, in the way His wisdom sees the best, 160
 For them and for their little ones provide;
 But chiefly, in their hearts with grace divine preside.

From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs,
 That makes her loved at home, revered abroad:
 Princes and lords are but the breath of kings, 165
 "An honest man's the noblest work of God":
 And certes, in fair Virtue's heavenly road,

The cottage leaves the palace far behind:
 What is a lordling's pomp? a cumbrous load,
 Disguising oft the wretch of human kind, 170
 Studied in arts of hell, in wickedness refined!

O Scotia! my dear, my native soil!
 For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is sent!
 Long may thy hardy sons of rustic toil
 Be blest with health, and peace, and sweet content! 175
 And, oh! may Heaven their simple lives prevent
 From luxury's contagion, weak and vile!
 Then, howe'er crowns and coronets be rent,
 A virtuous populace may rise the while,
 And stand a wall of fire around their much-loved isle. 180

O Thou! who poured the patriotic tide
 That streamed thro' Wallace's undaunted heart,
 Who dared to nobly stem tyrannic pride,
 Or nobly die, the second glorious part,—
 (The patriot's God peculiarly thou art, 185
 His friend, inspirer, guardian, and reward!)
 O never, never Scotia's realm desert,
 But still the patriot, and the patriot-bard,
 In bright succession raise, her ornament and guard!

ADDRESS TO THE UNCO GUID, OR THE RIGIDLY RIGHTEOUS

My Son, these maxims make a rule,
 An' lump them ay thegither;
 The Rigid Righteous is a fool,
 The Rigid Wise anither:

The cleanest corn that e'er was dight¹
 May hae some pyles o' caff² in;
 So ne'er a fellow-creature slight
 For random fits o' daffin.³
 SOLOMON.—Eccles. vii, 16.

O ye wha are sae guid yoursel,
 Sae pious and sae holy,
 Ye've nought to do but mark and tell
 Your neebor's fauts and folly!
 Whase life is like a weel-gaun⁴ mill, 5
 Supplied wi' store o' water,
 The heaped happer's⁵ ebbing still,
 An' still the clap plays clatter,—

Hear me, ye venerable core,⁶
 As counsel for poor mortals 10
 That frequent pass douce⁷ Wisdom's door
 For glaikit⁸ Folly's portals;
 I for their thoughtless, careless sakes
 Would here propone⁹ defences—
 Their donsie¹⁰ tricks, their black mistakes,
 Their failings and mischances. 16

Ye see your state wi' theirs compared,
 And shudder at the niffer;¹¹
 But cast a moment's fair regard,
 What makes the mighty differ?¹² 20
 Discount what scant occasion gave,
 That purity ye pride in,
 And (what's aft¹³ mair than a' the lave)¹⁴
 Your better art o' hidin.

Think, when your castigated pulse 25
 Gies now and then a wallop,
 What ragins must his veins convulse
 That still eternal gallop:
 Wi' wind and tide fair i' your tail,
 Right on ye scud your sea-way; 30
 But in the teeth o' baith¹⁵ to sail,
 It makes an unco¹⁶ leeway.

See Social Life and Glee sit down,
 All joyous and unthinking,
 Till, quite transmugrified,¹⁷ they're grown Debauchery and Drinking: 36
 O would they stay to calculate
 Th' eternal consequences;
 Or—your more dreaded hell to state—
 Damnation of expenses! 40

¹ winnowed.⁴ well-going.⁷ grave.¹⁰ reckless.¹³ often.¹⁶ tremendous.² grains of chaff.⁵ hopper.⁸ giddy.¹¹ comparison.¹⁴ rest.³ larking.⁶ assembly.⁹ proffer.¹² difference.¹⁵ both¹⁷ transformed.

Ye high, exalted, virtuous dames,
 Tied up in godly laces,
 Before you gie poor Frailty names,
 Suppose a change o' cases:
 A dear loved lad, convenience snug, 45
 A treacherous inclination—
 But, let me whisper i' your lug,¹⁸
 Ye're aiblins¹⁹ nae temptation.

Then gently scan your brother man,
 Still gentler sister woman; 50
 Tho' they may gang a kennin²⁰ wrang,
 To step aside is human:
 One point must still be greatly dark,
 The moving Why they do it;
 And just as lamely can ye mark, 55
 How far perhaps they rue it.

Who made the heart, 'tis He alone
 Decidedly can try us,
 He knows each chord, its various tone,
 Each spring, its various bias: 60
 Then at the balance, let's be mute,
 We never can adjust it;
 What's done we partly can compute,
 But know not what's resisted.

TAM O' SHANTER

A TALE

Of Brownies and of Bogillis full is this buke.
 —GAWIN DOUGLAS.

When chapman billies²¹ leave the street,
 And drouthy²² neebors neebors meet,
 As market-days are wearing late,
 An' folk begin to tak the gate;²³
 While we sit bousing at the nappy,²⁴ 5
 An' gettin fou and unco²⁵ happy,
 We think na on the lang Scots miles,
 The mosses, waters, slaps,²⁶ and stiles,
 That lie between us and our hame,
 Where sits our sulky, sullen dame, 10
 Gathering her brows like gathering storm,
 Nursing her wrath to keep it warm.

This truth fand honest Tam o' Shanter,
 As he frae Ayr ae night did canter:
 (Auld Ayr, wham ne'er a town surpasses,
 For honest men and bonie lasses.) 16

¹⁸ ear²¹ shopmen²⁴ ale.¹⁹ perhaps.²² thirsty.²⁵ wonderfully.²⁰ trifle²³ go home.²⁶ gaps in the road.

O Tam! had'st thou but been sae wise
 As taen thy ain wife Kate's advice!
 She tauld thee weel thou was a skellum,¹
 A bletherin, blusterin, drunken blellum;² 20
 That frae November till October,
 Ae³ market-day thou was nae sober;
 That ilka⁴ melder⁵ wi' the miller,
 Thou sat as lang as thou had siller;
 That ev'ry naig⁶ was ca'd⁷ a shoe on,⁷ 25
 The smith and thee gat roaring fou on;
 That at the Lord's house, even on Sunday,
 Thou drank wi' Kirkton Jean till Monday.
 She prophesied, that, late or soon,
 Thou would be found deep drowned in Doon; 30
 Or caught wi' warlocks⁸ in the mirk,⁹
 By Alloway's auld haunted kirk.

Ah, gentle dames! it gars¹⁰ me greet,¹¹
 To think how monie counsels sweet,
 How monie lengthened sage advices, 35
 The husband frae the wife despises!

But to our tale:—Ae market night,
 Tam had got planted unco right,
 Fast by an ingle,¹² bleezing finely,
 Wi' reaming swats¹³ that drank divinely;
 And at his elbow, Souter Johnie, 41
 His ancient, trusty, drouthy cronie:
 Tam lo'ed him like a very brither;¹⁴
 They had been fou for weeks thegither.
 The night drave on wi' sangs and clatter;
 And ay the ale was growing better: 46
 The landlady and Tam grew gracious
 Wi' secret favors, sweet and precious:
 The souter¹⁵ tauld his queerest stories;
 The landlord's laugh was ready chorus: 50
 The storm without might rair and rustle,
 Tam did na mind the storm a whistle.

Care, mad to see a man sae happy,
 E'en drowned himsel amang the nappy:
 As bees flee hame wi' lades o' treasure, 55
 The minutes winged their way wi' pleasure;
 Kings may be blest, but Tam was glorious,
 O'er a' the ills o' life victorious!

But pleasures are like poppies spread,
 You seize the flow'r, its bloom is shed; 60
 Or like the snow falls in the river,
 A moment white—then melts forever;

¹ rascal. ² prattler. ³ one. ⁴ every. ⁵ grinding.
⁶ nag. ⁷ shod. ⁸ wizards. ⁹ dark. ¹⁰ makes.
¹¹ weep. ¹² fireside. ¹³ foaming ale. ¹⁴ brother. ¹⁵ cobbler.

Or like the borealis race,
 That flit ere you can point their place;
 Or like the rainbow's lovely form 65
 Evanishing amid the storm.
 Nae man can tether time or tide:
 The hour approaches Tam maun ride,—
 That hour, o' night's black arch the key-stane,
 That dreary hour Tam mounts his beast
 in; 70
 And sic a night he taks the road in,
 As ne'er poor sinner was abroad in.

The wind blew as 't wad blawn its last;
 The rattling showers rose on the blast;
 The speedy gleams the darkness swallowed; 75
 Loud, deep, and lang the thunder bel-
 lowed:
 That night, a child might understand,
 The Deil had business on his hand.

Weel mounted on his grey mare, Meg,—
 A better never lifted leg,— 80
 Tam skelpit¹⁶ on thro' dub¹⁷ and mire,
 Despising wind and rain and fire;
 Whiles holding fast his guid blue bonnet,
 Whiles crooning o'er some auld Scots
 sonnet,
 Whiles glow'ring round wi' prudent cares,
 Lest bogles¹⁸ catch him unawares. 86
 Kirk-Alloway was drawing nigh,
 Whare ghaists and houlets¹⁹ nightly cry.

By this time he was cross the ford,
 Whare in the snaw the chapman smooored;²⁰
 And past the birks²¹ and meikle²² stane, 91
 Whare drunken Charlie brak's neck-bane;²³
 And thro' the whins,²⁴ and by the cairn,²⁵
 Whare hunters fand the murdered bairn;²⁶
 And near the thorn, aboon²⁷ the well, 95
 Whare Mungo's mither hanged hersel.
 Before him Doon pours all his floods;
 The doubling storm roars thro' the woods;
 The lightnings flash from pole to pole,
 Near and more near the thunders roll; 100
 When, glimmering thro' the groaning
 trees

Kirk-Alloway seemed in a bleeze:²⁸
 Thro' ilka bore²⁹ the beams were glancing,
 And loud resounded mirth and dancing.

¹⁶ hurried. ¹⁷ mud. ¹⁸ bogies. ¹⁹ owls. ²⁰ smothered.
²¹ birches. ²² big. ²³ neck. ²⁴ gorse. ²⁵ rock-pile.
²⁶ child. ²⁷ above. ²⁸ blaze. ²⁹ opening.

Inspiring bold John Barleycorn! 105
 What dangers thou canst make us scorn!
 Wi' tippenny¹ we fear nae evil;
 Wi' usquebae² we'll face the devil!
 The swats³ sae reamed⁴ in Tammie's noddle,

 Fair play, he cared na deils a boddle.⁵ 110
 But Maggie stood right sair astonished,
 Till, by the heel and hand admonished,
 She ventured forward on the light;
 And, wow! Tam saw an unco sight!

Warlocks and witches in a dance; 115
 Nae cotillion brent-new⁶ frae France,
 But hornpipes, jigs, strathspeys, and reels

Put life and mettle in their heels:
 A winnock⁷ bunker⁸ in the east,
 There sat Auld Nick in shape o' beast; 120
 A towsie⁹ tyke,¹⁰ black, grim, and large,
 To gie them music was his charge;
 He screwed the pipes and gart¹¹ them
 skirl,¹²

Till roof and rafters a' did dirl.¹³—
 Coffins stood round like open presses, 125
 That shawed the dead in their last dresses;

And by some devilish cantraip¹⁴ sleight
 Each in its cauld hand held a light,
 By which heroic Tam was able
 To note upon the haly table 130
 A murderer's banes in gibbet airns;¹⁵
 Twa span-lang, wee, unchristened bairns;
 A thief, new-cutted frae a rape¹⁶—
 Wi' his last gasp his gab¹⁷ did gape;
 Five tomahawks, wi' bluid red-rusted; 135
 Five scymitars, wi' murder crusted;
 A garter, which a babe had strangled;
 A knife, a father's throat had mangled,
 Whom his ain son o' life bereft—
 The grey hairs yet stack to the heft; 140
 Wi' mair o' horrible and awfu',
 Which even to name wad be unlawfu'.

As Tammie glowered, amazed and curious,
 The mirth and fun grew fast and furious:
 The piper loud and louder blew, 145
 The dancers quick and quicker flew;

¹ twopenny ale.

⁴ foamed.

⁷ window.

¹⁰ dog.

¹³ shake.

¹⁶ rope.

² whiskey.

⁵ penny.

⁸ bench

¹¹ made

¹⁴ magical.

³ ale.

⁶ brand-new.

⁹ shaggy.

¹² scream.

¹⁵ irons.

¹⁷ mouth.

They reeled, they set, they crossed, they cleekit,¹⁸
 Till ilka carlin¹⁹ swat²⁰ and reekit,²¹
 And coost²² her duddies²³ to the wark²⁴
 And linket²⁵ at it in her sark!²⁶ 150

Now Tam, O Tam! had thae been queans,²⁷
 A' plump and strapping in their teens!
 Their sarks, instead o' creeshie²⁸ flannen,²⁹
 Been snaw-white seventeen hunder linen!—

Thir³⁰ breeks o' mine, my only pair, 155
 That ance were plush, o' guid blue hair,
 I wad hae gien them aff my hurdies,³¹
 For ae blink o' the bonie burdies!

* * * * *

But Tam kend what was what fu' brawlie,³²

There was ae winsome wench and wawlie,³³
 That night enlisted in the core³⁴ 165

Lang after kend on Carrick shore
 (For monie a beast to dead she shot,
 An' perished monie a bonie boat,
 And shook baith meikle corn and bear,³⁵
 And kept the country-side in fear). 170

Her cutty sark³⁶ o' Paisley harn,³⁷
 That while a lassie she had worn,
 In longitude tho' sorely scanty,
 It was her best, and she was vauntie.³⁸
 Ah! little kend thy reverend grannie, 175
 That sark she coft³⁹ for her wee Nannie,
 Wi' twa pund Scots ('twas a' her riches),
 Wad ever graced a dance o' witches!

But here my Muse her wing maun cour,
 Sic flights are far beyond her power; 180
 To sing how Nannie lap and flang,
 (A souple jad⁴⁰ she was and strang,)
 And how Tam stood like ane bewitched,
 And thought his very een⁴¹ enriched; 184
 Even Satan glowered and fidget⁴² fu' fain,
 And hotched⁴³ and blew wi' might and
 main:

Till first ae caper, syne⁴⁴ anither,
 Tam tint⁴⁵ his reason a' thegither,
 And roars out, "Weel done, Cutty-sark!"
 And in an instant all was dark: 190
 And scarcely had he Maggie rallied,
 When out the hellish legion sallied.

¹⁸ clutched.

²² threw.

²⁶ shirt

³⁰ these

³⁴ company.

³⁸ proud

⁴² fidgeted.

¹⁹ old hag

²³ clothes

²⁷ young girls

³¹ hips

³⁵ barley

³⁹ bought

⁴³ squirmed

²⁰ sweated.

²⁴ work.

²⁸ greasy

³² well

³⁶ chemise

⁴⁰ jade.

⁴⁴ then.

²¹ steamed.

²⁵ rushed.

²⁹ flannel.

³³ handsome.

³⁷ linen.

⁴¹ eyes.

⁴⁵ lost.

As bees bizz out wi' angry fyke,¹
 When plundering herds assail their hyke;²
 As open pussie's³ mortal foes, 195
 When, pop! she starts before their nose;
 As eager runs the market-crowd,
 When "Catch the thief!" resounds aloud;
 So Maggie runs, the witches follow, 199
 Wi' monie an eldritch⁴ skriech and hollo.

Ah, Tam! ah, Tam! thou'll get thy fairin!⁵
 In hell they'll roast thee like a herrin!
 In vain thy Kate awaits thy comin!
 Kate soon will be a woefu' woman!
 Now, do thy speedy utmost, Meg, 205
 And win the key-stane of the brig:⁶
 There at them thou thy tail may toss,
 A running stream they dare na cross.
 But ere the key-stane she could make,
 The fient' a tail she had to shake! 210
 For Nannie, far before the rest,
 Hard upon noble Maggie prest,
 And flew at Tam wi' furious ettle;⁸
 But little wist she Maggie's mettle—
 Ae spring brought aff her master hale, 215
 But left behind her ain grey tail:
 The carlin claut her by the rump,
 And left poor Maggie scarce a stump.

Now, wha this tale o' truth shall read,
 Ilk⁹ man and mother's son, take heed, 220
 Whene'er to drink you are inclined,
 Or cutty-sarks run in your mind,
 Think, ye may buy the joys o'er dear,
 Remember Tam o' Shanter's Mare.

SCOTS WHA HAE

Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled, Scots, wham Bruce has aften led;
 Welcome to your gory bed,
 Or to victorie!
 Now's the day, and now's the hour; 5
 See the front o' battle lour;
 See approach proud Edward's power—
 Chains and slaverie!

Wha will be a traitor knave?
 Wha can fill a coward's grave? 10
 Wha sae base as be a slave?
 Let him turn and flee!

¹ fury.⁴ unearthly.⁷ devil.² hive⁶ reward.⁸ intent.³ the hare's⁶ bridge⁹ every.

Wha for Scotland's king and law
 Freedom's sword will strongly draw,
 Freeman stand or freeman fa', 15
 Let him follow me!

By oppression's woes and pains!
 By your sons in servile chains!
 We will drain our dearest veins,
 But they shall be free! 20
 Lay the proud usurpers low!
 Tyrants fall in every foe!
 Liberty's in every blow!—
 Let us do or die!

SONGS

MARY MORISON

O Mary, at thy window be,
 It is the wished, the trysted hour!
 Those smiles and glances let me see,
 That make the miser's treasure poor:
 How blythely wad I bide the stoure,¹⁰ 5
 A weary slave frae sun to sun,
 Could I the rich reward secure,
 The lovely Mary Morison.

Yestreen when to the trembling string
 The dance gaed thro' the lighted ha', 10
 To thee my fancy took its wing,
 I sat, but neither heard nor saw:
 Tho' this was fair, and that was braw,¹¹
 And yon the toast of a' the town,
 I sighed, and said among them a', 15
 "Ye are na Mary Morison."

O Mary, canst thou wreck his peace,
 Wha for thy sake wad gladly die?
 Or canst thou break that heart of his,
 Whase only faut is loving thee? 20
 If love for love thou wilt na gie
 At least be pity to me shown:
 A thought ungentle canna be
 The thought o' Mary Morison.

GREEN GROW THE RASHES

CHORUS.—Green grow the rashes, O;
 Green grow the rashes, O;
 The sweetest hours that e'er I spend
 Are spent among the lasses, O.

¹⁰ endure the struggle.¹¹ handsome.

There's nought but care on ev'ry han', 5
 In every hour that passes, O:
 What signifies the life o' man,
 An 'twere na for the lasses, O?

The war'ly¹ race may riches chase,
 An' riches still may fly them, O; 10
 An' tho' at last they catch them fast,
 Their hearts can ne'er enjoy them, O.

But gie me a cannie² hour at e'en,
 My arms about my dearie, O;
 An' war'ly cares, an' war'ly men, 15
 May a' gae tapsalteerie,³ O.

For you sae douce,⁴ ye sneer at this;
 Ye're nought but senseless asses, O:
 The wisest man the warl' e'er saw,
 He dearly loved the lasses, O. 20

Auld Nature swears, the lovely dears
 Her noblest work she classes, O:
 Her prentice han' she tried on man,
 An' then she made the lasses, O.

AULD LANG SYNE

Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
 And never brought to min'?
 Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
 And auld lang syne?

CHO.—For auld lang syne, my dear, 5
 For auld lang syne,
 We'll tak a cup o' kindness yet
 For auld lang syne.

And surely ye'll be your pint-stowp,⁵
 And surely I'll be mine! 10
 And we'll tak a cup o' kindness yet
 For auld lang syne.

We twa hae run about the braes,⁶
 And pu'd the gowans⁷ fine;
 But we've wandered monie a weary fit⁸ 15
 Sin' auld lang syne.

We twa hae paidled⁹ i' the burn,¹⁰
 From mornin' sun till dine,¹¹
 But seas between us braid¹² hae roared
 Sin' auld lang syne. 20

¹ worldly. ² quiet. ³ topsy-turvy. ⁴ sedate.
⁵ pint-cup. ⁶ hillsides. ⁷ daisies. ⁸ foot.
⁹ paddled. ¹⁰ brook. ¹¹ noon. ¹² broad.

And there's a hand, my trusty fiere,¹³
 And gie's a hand o' thine;
 And we'll tak a right guid-willie waught¹⁴
 For auld lang syne.

OF A' THE AIRTS THE WIND CAN BLAW

Of a' the airts¹⁵ the wind can blaw
 I dearly like the west,
 For there the bonie lassie lives,
 The lassie I lo'e best:
 There wild woods grow an' rivers row,¹⁶ 5
 An' monie a hill between;
 But day and night my fancy's flight
 Is ever wi' my Jean.

I see her in the dewy flowers,
 I see her sweet an' fair: 10
 I hear her in the tunefu' birds,
 I hear her charm the air:
 There's not a bonie flower that springs
 By fountain, shaw,¹⁷ or green;
 There's not a bonie bird that sings, 15
 But minds me o' my Jean.

TAM GLEN

My heart is a-breaking, dear tittie,¹⁸
 Some counsel unto me come len';
 To anger them a' is a pity,
 But what will I do wi' Tam Glen?

I'm thinking, wi' sic¹⁹ a braw²⁰ fellow, 5
 In poortith²¹ I might mak a fen';²²
 What care I in riches to wallow,
 If I mauna marry Tam Glen?

There's Lowrie, the laird o' Dumeller,
 "Guid-day to you,"—brute! he comes 10
 ben:²³
 He brags and he blaws o' his siller,
 But when will he dance like Tam Glen?

My minnie²⁴ does constantly deave²⁵ me,
 And bids me beware o' young men;
 They flatter, she says, to deceive me; 15
 But wha can think sae o' Tam Glen?

¹³ comrade. ¹⁴ draught. ¹⁵ ways. ¹⁶ roll.
¹⁷ wood. ¹⁸ sister. ¹⁹ such.
²⁰ handsome. ²¹ poverty. ²² shift.
²³ in. ²⁴ mother. ²⁵ deafen.

My daddie says, gin I'll forsake him,
 He'll gie me guid hunder marks ten:
 But, if it's ordained I maun take him,
 O wha will I get but Tam Glen? 20

Yestreen at the valentines' dealing,
 My heart to my mou¹ gied a sten:²
 For thrice I drew ane without failing,
 And thrice it was written, "Tam Glen"!

The last Halloween I was waukin³ 25
 My droukit⁴ sark-sleeve,⁵ as ye ken:
 His likeness cam up the house staukin,⁶
 And the very gray breeks o' Tam Glen!

Come counsel, dear tittie, don't tarry;
 I'll gie ye my bonie black hen, 30
 Gif ye will advise me to marry
 The lad I lo'e dearly, Tam Glen.

MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS

Farewell to the Highlands, farewell to the North,
 The birth-place of valor, the country of
 worth;
 Wherever I wander, wherever I rove,
 The hills of the Highlands for ever I love.

My heart's in the Highlands, my heart
 is not here; 5
 My heart's in the Highlands, a-chasing
 the deer;
 A-chasing the wild deer, and following
 the roe,
 My heart's in the Highlands wherever I
 go.

Farewell to the mountains, high-covered
 with snow;
 Farewell to the straths⁷ and green valleys
 below; 10
 Farewell to the forests and wild-hanging
 woods,
 Farewell to the torrents and loud-pouring floods.

My heart's in the Highlands, my heart
 is not here;
 My heart's in the Highlands, a-chasing
 the deer;

¹ mouth. ² spring. ³ watching. ⁴ wetted.
⁵ shirt-sleeve. ⁶ stalking. ⁷ river valleys.

A-chasing the wild deer, and following
 the roe, 15
 My heart's in the Highlands wherever
 I go.

GO FETCH TO ME A PINT O' WINE

Go fetch to me a pint o' wine,
 And fill it in a silver tassie;⁸
 That I may drink, before I go,
 A service to my bonie lassie:
 The boat rocks at the pier o' Leith, 5
 Fu' loud the wind blaws frae the Ferry;
 The ship rides by the Berwick-law,
 And I maun leave my bonie Mary.

The trumpets sound, the banners fly,
 The glittering spears are rankèd ready,¹⁰
 The shouts o' war are heard afar,
 The battle closes deep and bloody;
 It's not the roar o' sea or shore
 Wad mak me langer wish to tarry;
 Nor shouts o' war that's heard afar— 15
 It's leaving thee, my bonie Mary!

JOHN ANDERSON MY JO

John Anderson my jo,⁹ John,
 When we were first acquent,
 Your locks were like the raven,
 Your bonie brow was brent;¹⁰
 But now your brow is beld,¹¹ John, 5
 Your locks are like the snaw;
 But blessings on your frosty pow,¹²
 John Anderson my jo.

John Anderson my jo, John,
 We clamb the hill thegither; 10
 And monie a cantie¹³ day, John,
 We've had wi' ane anither:
 Now we maun totter down, John,
 And hand in hand we'll go,
 And sleep thegither at the foot, 15
 John Anderson my jo.

WILLIE BREWED A PECK O' MAUT

O, Willie brewed a peck o' maut,¹⁴
 An' Rob an' Allan cam to see:
 Three blyther hearts that lee-lang¹⁵ night
 Ye wad na found in Christendie.

⁸ goblet. ⁹ sweetheart. ¹⁰ smooth. ¹¹ bald.
¹² head. ¹³ happy. ¹⁴ malt. ¹⁵ live-long.

CHORUS.—We are na fou, we're nae that fou, 5
But just a drappie¹ in our ee;
The cock may crawl, the day may daw,²
And ay we'll taste the barley
bree.³

Here are we met, three merry boys,
Three merry boys, I trow, are we; 10
An' monie a night we've merry been,
And monie mae⁴ we hope to be!

It is the moon, I ken her horn,
That's blinkin in the lift⁵ sae hie;
She shines sae bright to wyle⁶ us hame, 15
But, by my sooth, she'll wait a wee!

Wha first shall rise to gang awa',
A cuckold, coward loun is he!
Wha first beside his chair shall fa',
He is the king amang us three! 20

FLOW GENTLY, SWEET AFTON

Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green braes,⁷
Flow gently, I'll sing thee a song in thy
praise;
My Mary's asleep by thy murmuring
stream,
Flow gently, sweet Afton, disturb not her
dream.

Thou stock-dove, whose echo resounds thro' the glen, 5
Ye wild whistling blackbirds in yon thorny
den,
Thou green-crested lapwing, thy screaming
forbear,
I charge you disturb not my slumbering
fair.

How lofty, sweet Afton, thy neighboring hills,
Far marked with the courses of clear winding rills; 10
There daily I wander as noon rises high,
My flocks and my Mary's sweet cot in my
eye.

¹ little drop.⁴ more.⁶ entice.² dawn.³ brew.⁵ sky.⁷ hillsides.

How pleasant thy banks and green valleys
below,
Where wild in the woodlands the prim-
roses blow;
There oft, as mild Evening weeps over the
lea, 15
The sweet-scented birk⁸ shades my Mary
and me.

Thy crystal stream, Afton, how lovely it glides,
And winds by the cot where my Mary resides;
How wanton thy waters her snowy feet
lave,
As gathering sweet flowerets she stems thy clear wave. 20

Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green braes,
Flow gently, sweet river, the theme of my
lays;
My Mary's asleep by thy murmuring
stream,
Flow gently, sweet Afton, disturb not her
dream.

BONIE DOON

Ye flowery banks o' bonie Doon,
How can ye blume sae fair?
How can ye chant, ye little birds,
And I sae fu' o' care?

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonie bird, 5
That sings upon the bough;
Thou minds me o' the happy days,
When my fause luvie was true.

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonie bird, 10
That sings beside thy mate;
For sae I sat, and sae I sang,
And wist na o' my fate.

Aft hae I roved by bonie Doon
To see the woodbine twine,
And ilka⁹ bird sang o' its luvie, 15
And sae did I o' mine.

Wi' lightsome heart I pu'd a rose
Frae aff its thorny tree;
And my fause luvie staw¹⁰ my rose
But left the thorn wi' me. 20

⁸ birch.⁹ every.¹⁰ stole.

AE FOND KISS

Ae¹ fond kiss, and then we sever;
 Ae farewell, and then forever!
 Deep in heart-wrung tears I'll pledge thee,
 Warring sighs and groans I'll wage thee.
 Who shall say that Fortune grieves him, 5
 While the star of hope she leaves him?
 Me, nae cheerfu' twinkle lights me;
 Dark despair around benights me.

I'll ne'er blame my partial fancy,
 Naething could resist my Nancy; 10
 But to see her was to love her;
 Love but her, and love forever.
 Had we never loved sae kindly,
 Had we never loved sae blindly,
 Never met—or never parted— 15
 We had ne'er been broken-hearted.

Fare thee weel, thou first and fairest!
 Fare thee weel, thou best and dearest!
 Thine be ilka² joy and treasure,
 Peace, enjoyment, love, and pleasure! 20
 Ae fond kiss, and then we sever;
 Ae farewell, alas, forever!
 Deep in heart-wrung tears I'll pledge thee,
 Warring sighs and groans I'll wage thee!

HIGHLAND MARY

Ye banks, and braes,³ and streams around
 The castle o' Montgomery,
 Green be your woods and fair your flowers,
 Your waters never drumlie!⁴
 There simmer first unfold her robes, 5
 And there the longest tarry;
 For there I took the last fareweel,
 O' my sweet Highland Mary.

How sweetly bloomed the gay green birk,⁵
 How rich the hawthorn's blossom, 10
 As underneath their fragrant shade
 I clasped her to my bosom!
 The golden hours on angel wings
 Flew o'er me and my dearie;
 For dear to me as light and life, 15
 Was my sweet Highland Mary.

Wi' monie a vow and locked embrace
 Our parting was fu' tender;
 And, pledging aft to meet again,
 We tore oursels asunder; 20
 1 onc. 2 every. 3 hills. 4 muddy. 5 birch.

But O! fell death's untimely frost,
 That nipt my flower sae early!
 Now green's the sod, and cauld's the clay,
 That wraps my Highland Mary!

O pale, pale now, those rosy lips, 25
 I aft hae kissed sae fondly!
 And closed for ay the sparkling glance,
 That dwalt on me sae kindly!
 And mouldering now in silent dust,
 That heart that lo'ed me dearly! 30
 But still within my bosom's core Shall live my Highland Mary.

DUNCAN GRAY

Duncan Gray came here to woo,
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)
 On blythe Yule night when we were fou,⁶
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)
 Maggie coost⁷ her head fu high, 5
 Looked asklent⁸ and unco skeigh,⁹ Gart¹⁰ poor Duncan stand abeigh,¹¹
 Ha, ha, the wooin o't!

Duncan fleech¹²ed, and Duncan prayed;
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!) 10
 Meg was deaf as Ailsa Craig,
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)
 Duncan sighed baith out and in,
 Grat¹³ his een¹⁴ baith bleer't¹⁵ and blin',
 Spak o' lowpin¹⁶ o'er a linn,¹⁷ 15
 Ha, ha, the wooin o't!

Time and chance are but a tide,
 (Ha ha, the wooin o't!)
 Slighted love is sair to bide,¹⁸
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!) 20
 "Shall I, like a fool," quoth he,
 "For a haughty hizzie¹⁹ die?"
 She may gae to—France for me!"
 Ha, ha, the wooin o't!

How it comes let doctors tell, 25
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)
 Meg grew sick as he grew hale,
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)
 Something in her bosom wrings,
 For relief a sigh she brings; 30
 And O! her een, they spak sic things!
 Ha, ha, the wooin o't!

⁶ full. ⁷ tossed. ⁸ sidewise. ⁹ very shy.
¹⁰ made. ¹¹ aside. ¹² wheedled. ¹³ wept.
¹⁴ eyes. ¹⁵ bleared. ¹⁶ leaping. ¹⁷ waterfall.
¹⁸ endure. ¹⁹ hussy.

Duncan was a lad o' grace,
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)

Maggie's was a piteous case,
 (Ha, ha, the wooin o't!)

Duncan could na be her death,
 Swelling pity smoores¹ his wrath;
 Now they're crouse² and cantie³ baith;
 Ha, ha, the wooin o't!

35

40

From THE JOLLY BEGGARS

See! the smoking bowl before us,
 Mark our jovial ragged ring;
 Round and round take up the chorus,
 And in raptures let us sing:

CHORUS

A fig for those by law protected! 5
 Liberty's a glorious feast!
 Courts for cowards were erected,
 Churches built to please the priest.

What is title? what is treasure?
 What is reputation's care? 10
 If we lead a life of pleasure,
 Tis no matter, how or where!

With the ready trick and fable,
 Round we wander all the day;
 And at night, in barn or stable, 15
 Hug our doxies on the hay.

Does the train-attended carriage
 Through the country lighter rove?
 Does the sober bed of marriage 20
 Witness brighter scenes of love?

Life is all a variorum,
 We regard not how it goes;
 Let them cant about decorum
 Who have characters to lose.

Here's to budgets, bags, and wallets! 25
 Here's to all our wandering train!
 Here's our ragged brats and callets!⁴
 One and all cry out, Amen!

CONTENTED WI' LITTLE AND CANTIE WI' MAIR

Contented wi' little, and cantie⁵ wi' mair, Whene'er I forgather⁶ wi' Sorrow and Care,

¹ smothered.
⁴ trulls

² cheerful.
⁵ cheerful.

³ happy.
⁶ associate.

I gie them a skelp⁷ as they're creeping
 along,
 Wi' a cog⁸ o' guid swats⁹ and an auld Scottish sang.

I whiles claw¹⁰ the elbow o' troublesome
 Thought;
 But man is a soger, and life is a faught; 5
 My mirth and guid humor are coin in my pouch,
 And my freedom's my lairdship nae
 monarch daur touch.

A towmond¹¹ o' trouble, should that be my fa,¹²
 A night o' guid fellowship sowthers¹³ it a';
 When at the blythe end of our journey at
 last, 11
 Wha the deil ever thinks o' the road he has past?

Blind Chance, let her snapper¹⁴ and
 stoyte¹⁵ on her way;
 Be't to me, be't frae me, e'en let the jade gae:
 Come ease or come travail, come pleasure or pain, 15
 My warst word is: "Welcome, and welcome again!"

A MAN'S A MAN FOR A' THAT

Is there, for honest poverty,
 That hings his head, an' a' that?
 The coward slave, we pass him by,
 We dare be poor for a' that!
 For a' that, an' a' that, 5
 Our toils obscure, an' a' that;
 The rank is but the guinea's stamp;
 The man's the gowd¹⁶ for a' that.

What though on hamely fare we dine,
 Wear hodden-gray,¹⁷ an' a' that; 10
 Gie fools their silks, and knaves their
 wine,
 A man's a man for a' that.
 For a' that, an' a' that,
 Their tinsel show, an' a' that;
 The honest man, tho' e'er sae poor, 15
 Is king o' men for a' that.

⁷ rap.

¹⁰ scratch
¹³ makes it all up
¹⁶ gold.

⁸ bowl

¹¹ twelve-month.

¹⁴ stumble

⁹ ale.

¹² lot

¹⁵ stagger.

¹⁷ homespun grey.

Ye see yon birkie,¹ ca'd a lord,
 Wha struts, an' stares, an' a' that;
 Tho' hundreds worship at his word,
 He's but a cuif² for a' that: 20
 For a' that, an' a' that,
 His riband, star, an' a' that,
 The man o' independent mind,
 He looks and laughs at a' that.

A prince can mak a belted knight, 25
 A marquis, duke, an' a' that;
 But an honest man's aboon³ his might,
 Guid faith, he mauna fa⁴ that!
 For a' that, an' a' that,
 Their dignities, an' a' that, 30
 The pith o' sense, an' pride o' worth,
 Are higher rank than a' that.

Then let us pray that come it may,
 (As come it will for a' that)
 That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
 Shall bear the gree,⁵ an' a' that. 36
 For a' that, an' a' that,
 It's coming yet, for a' that,
 That man to man, the world o'er,
 Shall brithers be for a' that. 40

O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

O, wert thou in the cauld blast,
 On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
 My plaidie to the angry airt,
 I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee.
 Or did misfortune's bitter storms 5
 Around thee blaw, around thee
 blaw,
 Thy bield should be my bosom,
 To share it a', to share it a'.

Or were I in the wildest waste,
 Sae black and bare, sae black and 10
 bare,
 The desert wert a paradise,
 If thou wert there, if thou wert there.
 Or were I monarch o' the globe,
 Wi' thee to reign, wi' thee to reign,
 The brightest jewel in my crown 15
 Wad be my queen, wad be my queen.

¹ young chap.² fool.³ above.⁴ cannot lay claim to.⁵ prize.

WILLIAM BLAKE (1757-1827)

From SONGS OF INNOCENCE

INTRODUCTION

Piping down the valleys wild,
 Piping songs of pleasant glee,
 On a cloud I saw a child,
 And he laughing said to me:

"Pipe a song about a Lamb!" 5
 So I piped with merry cheer.
 "Piper, pipe that song again;"
 So I piped: he wept to hear.

"Drop thy pipe, thy happy pipe;
 Sing thy songs of happy cheer!" 10
 So I sung the same again,
 While he wept with joy to hear.

"Piper, sit thee down and write
 In a book, that all may read."
 So he vanished from my sight; 15
 And I plucked a hollow reed,

And I made a rural pen,
 And I stained the water clear,
 And I wrote my happy songs
 Every child may joy to hear. 20

THE LAMB

Little Lamb, who made thee?
 Dost thou know who made thee?
 Gave thee life, and bid thee feed
 By the stream and o'er the mead;
 Gave thee clothing of delight, 5
 Softest clothing, woolly, bright;
 Gave thee such a tender voice,
 Making all the vales rejoice?
 Little Lamb, who made thee?
 Dost thou know who made thee? 10

Little Lamb, I'll tell thee,
 Little Lamb, I'll tell thee:
 He is callèd by thy name,
 For He calls Himself a Lamb.
 He is meek, and He is mild; 15
 He became a little child.
 I a child, and thou a lamb,
 We are callèd by His name.
 Little Lamb, God bless thee!
 Little Lamb, God bless thee! 20

CRADLE SONG

Sweet dreams, form a shade
O'er my lovely infant's head;
Sweet dreams of pleasant streams
By happy, silent, moony beams.

Sweet Sleep, with soft down 5
Weave thy brows an infant crown.
Sweet Sleep, angel mild,
Hover o'er my happy child.

Sweet smiles, in the night
Hover over my delight; 10
Sweet smiles, mother's smiles,
All the livelong night beguiles.

Sweet moans, dovelike sighs,
Chase not slumber from thy eyes.
Sweet moans, sweeter smiles, 15
All the dovelike moans beguiles.

Sleep, sleep, happy child,
All creation slept and smiled;
Sleep, sleep, happy sleep, 20
While o'er thee thy mother weep.

Sweet babe, in thy face
Holy image I can trace.
Sweet babe, once like thee,
Thy Maker lay and wept for me.

Wept for me, for thee, for all, 25
When he was an infant small.
Thou his image ever see,
Heavenly face that smiles on thee,

Smiles on thee, on me, on all;
Who became an infant small. 30
Infant smiles are His own smiles;
Heaven and earth to peace beguiles.

THE LITTLE BLACK BOY

My mother bore me in the southern wild,
And I am black, but oh my soul is white!
White as an angel is the English child,
But I am black, as if bereaved of light.

My mother taught me underneath a tree, 5
And, sitting down before the heat of day,
She took me on her lap and kissed me,
And, pointing to the east, began to say:

"Look on the rising sun,—there God does
live,
And gives his light, and gives his heat
away; 10
And flowers and trees and beasts and men receive Comfort in morning, joy in the noonday.

"And we are put on earth a little space,
That we may learn to bear the beams of
love;
And these black bodies and this sunburnt
face 15
Are but a cloud, and like a shady grove.

"For when our souls have learned the heat
to bear,
The cloud will vanish, we shall hear his
voice,
Saying: 'Come out from the grove, my love and care,
And round my golden tent like lambs
rejoice.'" 20

Thus did my mother say, and kissèd me;
And thus I say to little English boy.
When I from black, and he from white cloud free,
And round the tent of God like lambs
we joy,

I'll shade him from the heat, till he can
bear 25
To lean in joy upon our Father's knee;
And then I'll stand and stroke his silver
hair,
And be like him, and he will then love
me.

From SONGS OF EXPERIENCE

THE CLOD AND THE PEBBLE

"Love seeketh not itself to please,
Nor for itself hath any care,
But for another gives its ease,
And builds a heaven in hell's despair."

So sung a little clod of clay,
Trodden with the cattle's feet,
But a pebble of the brook
Warbled out these metres meet:

"Love seeketh only Self to please,
To bind another to its delight, 10
Joys in another's loss of ease,
And builds a hell in heaven's despite."

THE SICK ROSE

O Rose, thou art sick!
The invisible worm,
That flies in the night,
In the howling storm,
Has found out thy bed 5
Of crimson joy,
And his dark secret love
Does thy life destroy.

THE TIGER

Tiger, tiger, burning bright
In the forests of the night,
What immortal hand or eye
Could frame thy fearful symmetry?
In what distant deeps or skies 5
Burnt the fire of thine eyes?
On what wings dare he aspire?
What the hand dare seize the fire?
And what shoulder and what art
Could twist the sinews of thy heart? 10
And, when thy heart began to beat,
What dread hand? and what dread feet?
What the hammer? what the chain?
In what furnace was thy brain?
What the anvil? what dread grasp 15
Dare its deadly terrors clasp?
When the stars threw down their spears,
And watered heaven with their tears,
Did He smile His work to see?
Did He who made the lamb make thee? 20
Tiger, tiger, burning bright
In the forests of the night,
What immortal hand or eye
Dare frame thy fearful symmetry?

THE SUNFLOWER

Ah, Sunflower! weary of time,
Who countest the steps of the sun, .
Seeking after that sweet golden clime,
Where the traveller's journey is done;

Where the youth pined away with desire, 5
And the pale virgin shrouded in snow,
Arise from their graves, and aspire
Where my Sunflower wishes to go.

From AUGURIES OF INNOCENCE

To see a world in a grain of sand,
And a heaven in a wild flower;
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
And eternity in an hour.

From MILTON

And did those feet in ancient time
Walk upon England's mountains green?
And was the holy Lamb of God
On England's pleasant pastures seen?

And did the countenance divine 5
Shine forth upon our clouded hills?
And was Jerusalem builded here
Among these dark Satanic mills?

Bring me my bow of burning gold!
Bring me my arrows of desire! 10
Bring me my spear! O clouds, unfold!
Bring me my chariot of fire!

I will not cease from mental fight,
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand,
Till we have built Jerusalem 15
In England's green and pleasant land.

GEORGE CRABBE (1754-1832)

From THE VILLAGE, Book I

The village life, and every care that reigns O'er youthful peasants and declining
swains;
What labor yields, and what, that labor
past,
Age, in its hour of languor, finds at last;
What form the real picture of the poor, 5
Demand a song—the Muse can give no
more.

No shepherds now, in smooth alternate
verse,
Their country's beauty or their nymphs'
rehearse; 10
Yet still for these we frame the tender
strain,
Still in our lays fond Corydons complain,
And shepherds' boys their amorous pains reveal,
The only pains, alas! they never feel.
On Mincio's banks, in Cæsar's bounteous reign, 15
If Tityrus found the Golden Age again, Must sleepy bards the flattering dream prolong,
Mechanic echoes of the Mantuan song?
From Truth and Nature shall we widely
stray,
Where Virgil, not where Fancy, leads the
way? 20
Yes, thus the Muses sing of happy
swains,
Because the Muses never knew their
pains:
They boast their peasants' pipes; but peasants now Resign their pipes and plod behind the plough;
And few amid the rural tribe have time 25
To number syllables, and play with
rhyme;
Save honest Duck, what son of verse could share
The poet's rapture and the peasant's care?
Or the great labors of the field degrade,
With the new peril of a poorer trade? 30
From this chief cause these idle praises
spring,
That themes so easy few forbear to sing;
For no deep thought the trifling subjects
ask;
To sing of shepherds is an easy task;
The happy youth assumes the common
strain, 35
A nymph his mistress, and himself a swain;
With no sad scenes he clouds his tuneful
prayer,
But all, to look like her, is painted fair.
I grant indeed that fields and flocks have charms
For him that grazes or for him that farms;
But when amid such pleasing scenes I
trace 41
The poor laborious natives of the place,

And see the mid-day sun with fervid ray
On their bare heads and dewy temples
play,
While some, with feeblers heads and fainter
hearts 45
Deplore their fortune, yet sustain their parts—
Then shall I dare these real ills to hide,
In tinsel trappings of poetic pride?
No; cast by Fortune on a frowning
coast,
Which neither groves nor happy valleys
boast; 50
Where other cares than those the Muse relates,
And other shepherds dwell with other
mates;
By such examples taught, I paint the cot,
As Truth will paint it, and as bards will
not:
Nor you, ye poor, of lettered scorn com-
plain, 55
To you the smoothest song is smooth in
vain;
O'ercome by labor, and bowed down by
time,
Feel you the barren flattery of a rhyme?
Can poets soothe you, when you pine for
bread,
By winding myrtles round your ruined
shed? 60
Can their light tales your weighty griefs o'erpower,
Or glad with airy mirth the toilsome hour?
Lo! where the heath, with withering brake grown o'er,
Lends the light turf that warms the neighboring poor;
From thence a length of burning sand appears, 65
Where the thin harvest waves its withered
ears.
Rank weeds, that every art and care defy,
Reign o'er the land, and rob the blighted
rye;
There thistles stretch their prickly arms
afar,
And to the ragged infant threaten war; 70
There poppies, nodding, mock the hope of
toil,
There the blue bugloss paints the sterile
soil;
Hardy and high, above the slender sheaf,
The slimy mallow waves her silky leaf;

O'er the young shoot the charlock throws
 a shade, 75
 And clasping tares cling round the sickly
 blade;
 With mingled tints the rocky coasts
 abound,
 And a sad splendor vainly shines around.
 So looks the nymph whom wretched arts
 adorn,
 Betrayed by man, then left for man to
 scorn; 80
 Whose cheek in vain assumes the mimic
 rose,
 While her sad eyes the troubled breast
 disclose:
 Whose outward splendor is but folly's
 dress,
 Exposing most when most it gilds distress.
 Here joyless roam a wild amphibious
 race, 85
 With sullen woe displayed in every face;
 Who far from civil arts and social fly,
 And scowl at strangers with suspicious
 eye.

Here too the lawless merchant of the main Draws from his plough the intoxicated
 swain; 90
 Want only claimed the labor of the day,
 But vice now steals his nightly rest away.
 Where are the swains, who, daily labor
 done,
 With rural games played down the setting
 sun;
 Who struck with matchless force the bounding ball, 95
 Or made the ponderous quoit obliquely
 fall;
 While some huge Ajax, terrible and strong, Engaged some artful stripling of the throng,
 And fell beneath him, foiled, while far
 around Hoarse triumph rose, and rocks returned the sound? 100
 Where now are these?—Beneath yon cliff
 they stand,
 To show the freighted pinnace where to
 land;
 To load the ready steed with guilty haste,
 To fly in terror o'er the pathless waste,
 Or, when detected, in their straggling
 course, 105
 To foil their foes by cunning or by force;

Or, yielding part (which equal knaves demand),
 To gain a lawless passport through the
 land.

From THE BOROUGH

Old Peter Grimes made fishing his employ;
 His wife he cabined with him and his boy,
 And seemed that life laborious to enjoy.
 To town came quiet Peter with his fish,
 And had of all a civil word and wish. 5
 He left his trade upon the Sabbath day,
 And took young Peter in his hand to pray:
 But soon the stubborn boy from care broke loose,
 At first refused, then added his abuse;
 His father's love he scorned, his power defied, 10
 But, being drunk, wept sorely when he
 died.

WILLIAM LISLE BOWLES (1762-1850)

TIME

O Time! who knowest a lenient hand to
 lay Softest on sorrow's wound, and slowly
 thence,
 Lulling to sad repose the weary sense,
 The faint pang stealest, unperceived,
 away;
 On thee I rest my only hope at last, 5
 And think when thou hast dried the bitter tear
 That flows in vain o'er all my soul held
 dear,
 I may look back on every sorrow past,
 And meet life's peaceful evening with a
 smile:
 As some lone bird, at day's departing hour,
 Sings in the sunbeam, of the transient shower 11
 Forgetful, though its wings are wet the
 while:
 Yet, ah! how much must that poor heart endure
 Which hopes from thee, and thee alone,
 a cure.

HOPE

As one who, long by wasting sickness worn,
Weary has watched the lingering night,
and heard,
Heartless, the carol of the matin bird Salute his lonely porch, now first at
morn
Goes forth, leaving his melancholy bed; 5
He the green slope and level meadow
views,
Delightful bathed in slow-ascending dew; 5
Or marks the clouds that o'er the mountain's head
In varying forms fantastic wander white;
Or turns his ear to every random song 10
Heard the green river's winding marge
along,
The while each sense is steeped in still
delight:
With such delight o'er all my heart I
feel Sweet Hope! thy fragrance pure and healing incense steal.

TO THE RIVER TWEED

O Tweed! a stranger, that with wandering feet
O'er hill and dale has journeyed many a mile
(If so his weary thoughts he might beguile),
Delighted turns thy beauteous scenes to greet.
The waving branches that romantic bend
O'er thy tall banks, a soothing charm bestow; 6
The murmurs of thy wandering wave
below
Seem to his ear the pity of a friend.
Delightful stream! though now along thy
shore,
When spring returns in all her wonted
pride, 10
The shepherd's distant pipe is heard no
more,
Yet here with pensive peace I could abide,
Far from the stormy world's tumultuous
roar,
To muse upon thy banks at eventide.

BAMBOROUGH CASTLE

Ye holy towers that shade the wave-worn steep,
Long may ye rear your agèd brows sublime,
Though, hurrying silent by, relentless time
Assail you, and the winds of winter sweep Round your dark battlements; for far from halls 5
Of Pride, here Charity hath fixed her seat,
Oft listening tearful when the wild winds
beat
With hollow bodings round your ancient walls;
And Pity, at the dark and stormy hour
Of midnight, when the moon is hid on
high, 10
Keeps her lone watch upon the topmost tower,
And turns her ear to each expiring cry,
Blest if her aid some fainting wretch
may save,
And snatch him cold and speechless from the wave.

WRITTEN AT TYNEMOUTH AFTER A TEMPESTUOUS VOYAGE

As slow I climbed the cliff's ascending
side,
Much musing on the track of terror past,
When o'er the dark wave rode the howling
blast,
Pleased I look back, and view the tranquil
tide
That laves the pebbled shore: and now the beam 5
Of evening smiles on the gray battlement,
And yon forsaken tower that Time has rent:—
The lifted oar far off with silver gleam
Is touched, and hushed is all the billowy
deep!
Soothed by the scene, thus on tired Nature's breast 10
A stillness slowly steals, and kindred rest;
While sea-sounds lull her, as she sinks
to sleep,
Like melodies which mourn upon the lyre,
Waked by the breeze, and, as they mourn, expire!

THE AGE OF ROMANTICISM

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH (1770-1850)

From THE PREFACE TO THE LYRICAL BALLADS

The principal object proposed in these poems was to choose incidents and situations from common life, and to relate or describe them, throughout, as far as was possible, in a selection of language really used by men, and, at the same time, to throw over them a certain coloring of imagination, whereby ordinary things should be presented to the mind in an unusual aspect; and, further, and [10] above all, to make these incidents and situations interesting by tracing in them, truly though not ostentatiously, the primary laws of our nature: chiefly, as far as regards the manner in which we associate ideas in a state of excitement. Humble and rustic life was generally chosen, because, in that condition, the essential passions of the heart find a better soil in which they can attain [20] their maturity, are less under restraint, and speak a plainer and more emphatic language; because in that condition of life our elementary feelings co-exist in a state of greater simplicity, and, consequently, may be more accurately contemplated, and more forcibly communicated; because the manners of rural life germinate from those elementary feelings; and from the necessary character of [30] rural occupations, are more easily comprehended, and are more durable; and, lastly, because in that condition the passions of men are incorporated with the beautiful and permanent forms of nature. The language, too, of these men has been adopted (purified indeed from what appear to be its real defects, from all lasting and rational causes of dislike or disgust) because such men hourly [40] communicate with the best objects from which the best part of language is originally derived; and because, from their rank in society and the sameness and narrow circle of their intercourse, being less under the influence of social vanity, they convey their feelings and notions in simple and unelaborated expressions. Accordingly such a language, arising out of repeated experience and regular [50] feelings, is a more permanent, and a far more philosophical language, than that which is frequently substituted for it by poets, who think that they are conferring honor upon themselves and their art, in proportion as they separate themselves from the sympathies of men, and indulge in arbitrary and capricious habits of expression, in order to furnish food for fickle tastes, and fickle appetites, of their [60] own creation.

I cannot, however, be insensible to the present outcry against the triviality and meanness, both of thought and language, which some of my contemporaries have occasionally introduced into their metrical compositions; and I acknowledge that this defect, where it exists, is more dishonorable to the writer's own character than false refinement or arbitrary in- [70] novation, though I should contend at the same time, that it is far less pernicious in the sum of its consequences. From such verses the poems in these volumes will be found distinguished at least by one mark of difference, that each of them has a worthy purpose. Not that I always began to write with a distinct purpose formally conceived; but habits of meditation have, I trust, so prompted and [80] regulated my feelings, that my descriptions of such objects as strongly excite those feelings, will be found to carry along with them a purpose. If this opinion is erroneous, I can have little right to the name of a poet. For all good poetry is the spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings: and though this be true, poems to which any value can be attached were never produced on any variety of sub- [90] jects but by a man, who, being possessed of more than usual organic sensibility, had also thought long and deeply. For our continued influxes of feeling are modified and directed by our thoughts, which are indeed the representatives of all our past feelings; and, as by contemplating the relation of these general representatives to each other, we discover what is really important to men, so, [100 by the repetition and continuance of this act, our feelings will be connected with important subjects, till at length, if we be originally possessed of much sensibility, such habits of mind will be produced, that, by obeying blindly and mechanically the impulses of those habits, we shall describe objects, and utter sentiments, of such a nature, and in such connection with each other, that the understanding of the reader must necessarily be in some degree enlightened, and his affection strengthened and purified.

It has been said that each of these poems has a purpose. Another circumstance must be mentioned which distinguishes these poems from the popular poetry of the day; it is this, that the feeling therein developed gives importance to the action and situation, and not the [120 action and situation to the feeling.

A sense of false modesty shall not prevent me from asserting, that the reader's attention is pointed to this mark of distinction, far less for the sake of these particular poems than from the general importance of the subject. The subject is indeed important! For the human mind is capable of being excited without the application of gross and violent stimuli; [130 and he must have a very faint perception of its beauty and dignity who does not know this, and who does not further know, that one being is elevated above another, in proportion as he possesses this capability. It has therefore appeared to me, that to endeavor to produce or enlarge this capability is one of the best services in which, at any period, a writer can be engaged; but this [140 service, excellent at all times, is especially so at the present day. For a multitude of causes, unknown to former times, are now acting with a combined force to blunt the discriminating powers of the mind, and, unfitting it for all voluntary exertion, to reduce it to a state of almost savage torpor. The most effective of these causes are the great national events which are daily taking place, and the increasing [150 accumulation of men in cities, where the uniformity of their occupations produces a craving for extraordinary incident, which the rapid communication of intelligence hourly gratifies. To this tendency of life and manners the literature and theatrical exhibitions of the country have conformed themselves. The invaluable works of our elder writers, I had almost said the works of Shakespeare [160 and Milton, are driven into neglect by frantic novels, sickly and stupid German tragedies, and deluges of idle and extravagant stories in verse.—When I think upon this degrading thirst after outrageous stimulation, I am almost ashamed to have spoken of the feeble endeavor made in these volumes to counteract it; and, reflecting upon the magnitude of the general evil, I should be [170 oppressed with no dishonorable melancholy, had I not a deep impression of certain inherent and indestructible qualities of the human mind, and likewise of certain powers in the great and permanent objects that act upon it, which are equally inherent and indestructible; and were there not added to this impression a belief that the time is approaching when the evil will be systematically opposed, [180 by men of greater powers, and with far more distinguished success.

Having dwelt thus long on the subjects and aim of these poems, I shall request the reader's permission to apprise him of a few circumstances relating to their style, in order, among other reasons, that he may not censure me for not having performed what I never attempted. The reader will find that personifications [190 of abstract ideas rarely occur in these volumes; and are utterly rejected as an ordinary device to elevate the style, and raise it above prose. My purpose was to imitate, and, as far as is possible, to adopt the very language of men; and assuredly such personifications do not make any natural or regular part of that language. They are, indeed, a figure of speech occasionally prompted by passion, and [200

I have made use of them as such; but I have endeavored utterly to reject them as a mechanical device of style, or as a family language which writers in meter seem to lay claim to by prescription. I have wished to keep the reader in the company of flesh and blood, persuaded that by so doing I shall interest him. Others who pursue a different track will interest him likewise; I do not interfere with their claim, but wish to prefer a claim of my own. There will also be found in these pieces little of what is usually called poetic diction; as much pains has been taken to avoid it as is ordinarily taken to produce it; this has been done for the reason already alleged, to bring my language near to the language of men, and further, because the pleasure which I have proposed to myself to impart, is of a kind very different from that which is supposed by many persons to be the proper object of poetry. Without being culpably particular, I do not know how to give my reader a more exact notion of the style in which it was my wish and intention to write, than by informing him that I have at all times endeavored to look steadily at my subject; consequently there is, I hope, in these poems little falsehood of description, and my ideas are expressed in language fitted to their respective importance. Something must have been gained by this practice, as it is friendly to one property of all good poetry, namely, good sense; but it has necessarily cut me off from a large portion of phrases and figures of speech which from father to son have long been regarded as the common inheritance of poets. I have also thought it expedient to restrict myself still further, having abstained from the use of many expressions, in themselves proper and beautiful, but which have been foolishly repeated by bad poets, till such feelings of disgust are connected with them as it is scarcely possible by any art of association to overpower.

* * * * *

templated, till, by a species of reaction, the tranquillity gradually disappears, and an emotion, kindred to that which was before the subject of contemplation, is gradually produced, and does itself actually exist in the mind. In this mood successful composition generally begins, and in a mood similar to this it is carried on; but the emotion of whatever kind, and in whatever degree, from various causes, is qualified by various pleasures, so that in describing any passions whatsoever, which are voluntarily described, the mind will, upon the whole, be in a state of enjoyment. If nature be thus cautious to preserve in a state of enjoyment a being so employed, the poet ought to profit by the lesson held forth to him, and ought especially to take care, that, whatever passions he communicates to his reader, those passions, if his reader's mind be sound and vigorous, should always be accompanied with an overbalance of pleasure. Now the music of harmonious metrical language, the sense of difficulty overcome, and the blind association of pleasure which has been previously received from works of rime or meter of the same or similar construction, an indistinct perception perpetually renewed of language closely resembling that of real life, and yet, in the circumstance of meter, differing from it so widely—all these imperceptibly make up a complex feeling of delight, which is of the most important use in tempering the painful feeling which is always found intermingled with powerful descriptions of the deeper passions. This effect is always produced in pathetic and impassioned poetry; while, in lighter compositions, the ease and gracefulness with which the poet manages his numbers are themselves confessedly a principal source of the gratification of the reader. All that it is necessary to say, however, upon this subject, may be effected by affirming, what few persons will deny, that, of two descriptions, either of passions, manners, or characters, each of them equally well executed, the one in prose and the other in verse, the verse will be read a hundred times where the prose is read once.

LINES WRITTEN IN EARLY SPRING

I heard a thousand blended notes,
While in a grove I sat reclined,
In that sweet mood when pleasant
thoughts
Bring sad thoughts to the mind.

To her fair works did Nature link 5
The human soul that through me ran;
And much it grieved my heart to think
What man has made of man.

Through primrose tufts, in that green
bower,
The periwinkle trailed its wreaths; 10
And 'tis my faith that every flower
Enjoys the air it breathes.

The birds around me hopped and played,
Their thoughts I cannot measure:
But the least motion which they made 15
It seemed a thrill of pleasure.

The budding twigs spread out their fan,
To catch the breezy air;
And I must think, do all I can,
That there was pleasure there. 20

If this belief from heaven be sent,
If such be nature's holy plan,
Have I not reason to lament
What man has made of man?

EXPOSTULATION AND REPLY

"Why, William, on that old grey stone,
Thus for the length of half a day,
Why, William, sit you thus alone,
And dream your time away?

"Where are your books?—that light bequeathed 5
To beings else forlorn and blind!
Up! up! and drink the spirit breathed
From dead men to their kind.

"You look round on your Mother
Earth,
As if she for no purpose bore you; 10
As if you were her first-born birth,
And none had lived before you!"

One morning thus, by Esthwaite lake,
When life was sweet, I knew not why,
To me my good friend Matthew spake, 15
And thus I made reply:

"The eye—it cannot choose but see;
We cannot bid the ear be still;
Our bodies feel, where'er they be,
Against or with our will. 20

"Nor less I deem that there are Powers
Which of themselves our minds impress;
That we can feed this mind of ours
In a wise passiveness.

"Think you, 'mid all this mighty sum 25
Of things forever speaking,
That nothing of itself will come,
But we must still be seeking?

"—Then ask not wherefore, here, alone,
Conversing as I may, 30
I sit upon this old grey stone,
And dream my time away."

THE TABLES TURNED

An Evening Scene on the same Subject

Up! up! my friend, and quit your books;
Or surely you'll grow double:
Up! up! my friend, and clear your looks;
Why all this toil and trouble?

The sun, above the mountain's head, 5
A freshening lustre mellow
Through all the long green fields has spread,
His first sweet evening yellow.

Books! 'tis a dull and endless strife: 10
Come, hear the woodland linnet,
How sweet his music! on my life
There's more of wisdom in it.

And hark! how blithe the throstle sings!
He, too, is no mean preacher:
Come forth into the light of things, 15
Let Nature be your teacher.

She has a world of ready wealth,
Our minds and hearts to bless—
Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health,
Truth breathed by cheerfulness. 20

One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good,
Than all the sages can.

Sweet is the lore which Nature brings; 25
Our meddling intellect
Misshapes the beauteous forms of things:—
We murder to dissect.

Enough of Science and of Art;
Close up those barren leaves; 30
Come forth, and bring with you a heart
That watches and receives.

LINES COMPOSED A FEW MILES ABOVE TINTER ABBEY, ON RE-VISITING THE BANKS OF THE WYE DURING A TOUR

JULY 13, 1798

Five years have past; five summers, with the length
Of five long winters! and again I hear These waters, rolling from their mountain-
springs
With a soft inland murmur.—Once again
Do I behold these steep and lofty cliffs, 5
That on a wild secluded scene impress Thoughts of more deep seclusion; and connect
The landscape with the quiet of the
sky.
The day is come when I again repose
Here, under this dark sycamore, and view
These plots of cottage-ground, these orchard-tufts, 11
Which at this season, with their unripe fruits,
Are clad in one green hue, and lose themselves
'Mid groves and copses. Once again I see These hedgerows, hardly hedgerows, little lines 15
Of sportive wood run wild: these pastoral farms,
Green to the very door; and wreaths of
smoke
Sent up, in silence, from among the trees!
With some uncertain notice, as might seem

Of vagrant dwellers in the houseless woods,
Or of some hermit's cave, where by his
fire 21
The hermit sits alone.

These beauteous forms,
Through a long absence, have not been
to me

As is a landscape to a blind man's eye:
But oft, in lonely rooms, and 'mid the din 25
Of towns and cities, I have owed to them
In hours of weariness, sensations sweet, Felt in the blood, and felt along the
heart;

And passing even into my purer mind,
With tranquil restoration:—feelings too 30
Of unremembered pleasure: such, perhaps,
As have no slight or trivial influence
On that best portion of a good man's life,
His little, nameless, unremembered acts
Of kindness and of love. Nor less, I trust,
To them I may have owed another gift, 36
Of aspect more sublime; that blessed
mood,

In which the burthen of the mystery,
In which the heavy and the weary weight
Of all this unintelligible world, 40
Is lightened:—that serene and blessed mood

In which the affections gently lead us on,— Until, the breath of this corporeal frame
And even the motion of our human blood
Almost suspended, we are laid asleep 45
In body, and become a living soul:
While with an eye made quiet by the
power

Of harmony, and the deep power of joy,
We see into the life of things.

If this
Be but a vain belief, yet, oh! how oft— 50
In darkness and amid the many shapes
Of joyless daylight; when the fretful stir
Unprofitable, and the fever of the world,
Have hung upon the beatings of my
heart—

How oft, in spirit, have I turned to thee, 55 O sylvan Wye! thou wanderer through the
woods,

How often has my spirit turned to thee!
And now, with gleams of half-extinguished thought,

With many recognitions dim and faint,
And somewhat of a sad perplexity, 60
The picture of the mind revives again:
While here I stand, not only with the sense

Of present pleasure, but with pleasing
thoughts
That in this moment there is life and food
For future years. And so I dare to hope, 65
Though changed, no doubt, from what I was when first
I came among these hills; when like a roe
I bounded o'er the mountains, by the sides
Of the deep rivers, and the lonely streams,
Wherever nature led: more like a man 70
Flying from something that he dreads, than one Who sought the thing he loved. For nature then
(The coarser pleasures of my boyish days,
And their glad animal movements all gone
by)
To me was all in all.—I cannot paint 75
What then I was. The sounding cataract
Haunted me like a passion; the tall rock,
The mountain, and the deep and gloomy
wood,
Their colors and their forms, were then to
me
An appetite; a feeling and a love, 80
That had no need of a remoter charm,
By thought supplied, nor any interest Unborrowed from the eye.—That time is
past,
And all its aching joys are now no more,
And all its dizzy raptures. Not for this 85
Faint I, nor mourn, nor murmur; other gifts
Have followed; for such loss, I would believe,
Abundant recompense. For I have learned
To look on nature, not as in the hour
Of thoughtless youth; but hearing oftentimes 90
The still, sad music of humanity,
Nor harsh nor grating, though of ample
power
To chasten and subdue. And I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime, 95
Of something far more deeply interfused, Whose dwelling is the light of setting
suns,
And the round ocean and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man;

A motion and a spirit, that impels 100
All thinking things, all objects of all
thought,
And rolls through all things. Therefore am I still
A lover of the meadows and the woods,
And mountains; and of all that we be-
hold
From this green earth; of all the mighty
world 105
Of eye, and ear,—both what they half create,
And what perceive; well pleased to recognize
In nature and the language of the sense,
The anchor of my purest thoughts, the nurse,
The guide, the guardian of my heart, and
soul 110
Of all my moral being.
Nor perchance,
If I were not thus taught, should I the
more
Suffer my genial spirits to decay:
For thou art with me here upon the banks
Of this fair river; thou my dearest friend,
My dear, dear friend; and in thy voice I catch 116
The language of my former heart, and read
My former pleasures in the shooting lights
Of thy wild eyes. Oh! yet a little while
May I behold in thee what I was once, 120
My dear, dear sister! and this prayer I
make,
Knowing that Nature never did betray
The heart that loved her; 'tis her privilege, Through all the years of this our life, to lead
From joy to joy: for she can so inform 125
The mind that is within us, so impress
With quietness and beauty, and so feed
With lofty thoughts, that neither evil
tongues,
Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish
men,
Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor
all 130
The dreary intercourse of daily life,
Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb
Our cheerful faith, that all which we behold
Is full of blessings. Therefore let the
moon

Shine on thee in thy solitary walk; 135
 And let the misty mountain-winds be
 free
 To blow against thee: and, in after years,
 When these wild ecstasies shall be matured
 Into a sober pleasure; when thy mind
 Shall be a mansion for all lovely forms, 140
 Thy memory be as a dwelling-place
 For all sweet sounds and harmonies; oh!
 then,
 If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief,
 Should be thy portion, with what healing
 thoughts
 Of tender joy wilt thou remember me, 145
 And these my exhortations! Nor, perchance—
 If I should be where I no more can hear Thy voice, nor catch from thy wild eyes these gleams
 Of past existence—wilt thou then forget That on the banks of this delightful
 stream 150
 We stood together; and that I, so long
 A worshipper of Nature, hither came Unwearied in that service: rather say
 With warmer love—oh! with far deeper zeal
 Of holier love. Nor wilt thou then forget,
 That after many wanderings, many years
 Of absence, these steep woods and lofty cliffs, 157
 And this green pastoral landscape, were
 to me
 More dear, both for themselves and for thy sake!

LUCY GRAY; OR, SOLITUDE

Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray:
 And, when I crossed the wild,
 I chanced to see at break of day
 The solitary child.

No mate, no comrade Lucy knew; 5
 She dwelt on a wide moor,
 —The sweetest thing that ever grew Beside a human door!

You yet may spy the fawn at play,
 The hare upon the green; 10
 But the sweet face of Lucy Gray
 Will never more be seen.

“To-night will be a stormy night—
 You to the town must go;
 And take a lantern, Child, to light 15
 Your mother through the snow.”

“That, Father! will I gladly do:
 ’Tis scarcely afternoon—
 The minster-clock has just struck two,
 And yonder is the moon!” 20

At this the father raised his hook,
 And snapped a faggot-band;
 He plied his work;—and Lucy took
 The lantern in her hand.

Not blither is the mountain roe: 25
 With many a wanton stroke
 Her feet disperse the powdery snow,
 That rises up like smoke.

The storm came on before its time:
 She wandered up and down; 30
 And many a hill did Lucy climb:
 But never reached the town.

The wretched parents all that night
 Went shouting far and wide;
 But there was neither sound nor sight 35
 To serve them for a guide.

At daybreak on a hill they stood
 That overlooked the moor;
 And thence they saw the bridge of wood,
 A furlong from their door. 40

They wept—and, turning homeward,
 cried,
 “In heaven we all shall meet;”
 —When in the snow the mother spied 45
 The print of Lucy’s feet.

Then downwards from the steep hill’s
 edge 45
 They tracked the footmarks small;
 And through the broken hawthorn hedge,
 And by the long stone-wall;

And then an open field they crossed:
 The marks were still the same; 50
 They tracked them on, nor ever lost;
 And to the bridge they came.

They followed from the snowy bank
 Those footmarks, one by one,
 Into the middle of the plank; 55
 And further there were none!

—Yet some maintain that to this day
She is a living child;
That you may see sweet Lucy Gray
Upon the lonesome wild. 60

O'er rough and smooth she trips along,
And never looks behind;
And sings a solitary song
That whistles in the wind.

SHE DWELT AMONG THE UN- TRODDEN WAYS

She dwelt among the untrodden ways
Beside the springs of Dove,
A maid whom there were none to praise
And very few to love:

A violet by a mossy stone 5
Half hidden from the eye!
—Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky.

She lived unknown, and few could know
When Lucy ceased to be; 10
But she is in her grave, and, oh,
The difference to me!

THREE YEARS SHE GREW

Three years she grew in sun and shower,
Then Nature said, "A lovelier flower
On earth was never sown;
This child I to myself will take;
She shall be mine, and I will make 5
A lady of my own.

"Myself will to my darling be Both law and impulse: and with me
The girl, in rock and plain,
In earth and heaven, in glade and bower, 10
Shall feel an overseeing power
To kindle or restrain.

"She shall be sportive as the fawn
That wild with glee across the lawn, 15
Or up the mountain springs;
And hers shall be the breathing balm,
And hers the silence and the calm
Of mute insensate things.

Even in the motions of the storm
Grace that shall mould the maiden's form
By silent sympathy.

"The stars of midnight shall be dear 25
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where rivulets dance their wayward
round,
And beauty born of murmuring sound
Shall pass into her face. 30

"And vital feelings of delight
Shall rear her form to stately height,
Her virgin bosom swell;
Such thoughts to Lucy I will give While she and I together live 35
Here in this happy dell."

Thus Nature spake—The work was done—
How soon my Lucy's race was run!
She died, and left to me
This heath, this calm, and quiet scene; 40
The memory of what has been,
And never more will be.

A SLUMBER DID MY SPIRIT SEAL

A slumber did my spirit seal;
I had no human fears:
She seemed a thing that could not feel
The touch of earthly years.

No motion has she now, no force; 5
She neither hears nor sees;
Rolled round in earth's diurnal course,
With rocks, and stones, and trees.

THE PRELUDE

From Book I

CHILDHOOD AND SCHOOLTIME

And in the frosty season, when the sun
Was set, and visible for many a milé
The cottage windows blazed through twilight gloom,
I heeded not their summons: happy time
It was indeed for all of us—for me
It was a time of rapture! Clear and loud 430

The village clock tolled six,—I wheeled
about,
Proud and exulting like an untired horse
That cares not for his home. All shod with steel,
We hissed along the polished ice in games
Confederate, imitative of the chase 435
And woodland pleasures,—the resounding
horn,
The pack loud chiming, and the hunted
hare.
So through the darkness and the cold we flew,
And not a voice was idle; with the din
Smitten, the precipices rang aloud; 440
The leafless trees and every icy crag
Tinkled like iron; while far distant hills
Into the tumult sent an alien sound Of melancholy not unnoticed, while the stars Eastward were sparkling clear, and in the west 445
The orange sky of evening died away.
Not seldom from the uproar I retired
Into a silent bay, or sportively Glanced sideways, leaving the tumultuous
throng,
To cut across the reflex of a star 450
That fled, and, flying still before me, gleamed
Upon the glassy plain; and oftentimes,
When we had given our bodies to the wind,
And all the shadowy banks on either side
Came sweeping through the darkness, spinning still 455
The rapid line of motion, then at once
Have I, reclining back upon my heels,
Stopped short; yet still the solitary cliffs Wheeled by me—even as if the earth had rolled
With visible motion her diurnal round! 460 Behind me did they stretch in solemn
train,
Feebler and feebler, and I stood and watched
Till all was tranquil as a dreamless sleep.

From BOOK IX

RESIDENCE IN FRANCE

France lured me forth; the realm that I had crossed
So lately, journeying toward the snow-clad Alps. 35

But now, relinquishing the scrip and staff,
And all enjoyment which the summer sun
Sheds round the steps of those who meet
the day
With motion constant as his own, I went Prepared to sojourn in a pleasant town, 40
Washed by the current of the stately Loire.
Through Paris lay my readiest course,
and there
Sojourning a few days, I visited
In haste, each spot of old or recent fame.

* * * * *

Where silent zephyrs sported with the dust
Of the Bastille, I sate in the open sun,
And from the rubbish gathered up a stone,
And pocketed the relic, in the guise 70
Of an enthusiast: yet, in honest truth,
I looked for something that I could not
find,
Affecting more emotion than I felt;
For 'tis most certain, that these various sights,
However potent their first shock, with
me 75
Appeared to recompense the traveller's
pains
Less than the painted Magdalene of Le Brun,
A beauty exquisitely wrought, with hair Dishevelled, gleaming eyes, and rueful
cheek
Pale and bedropped with overflowing
tears. 80

* * * * *

I stood 'mid those concussions, unconcerned,
Tranquil almost, and careless as a flower
Glassed in a green-house, or a parlor, shrub
That spreads its leaves in unmolested
peace,
While every bush and tree, the country
through, 90
Is shaking to the roots.

* * * * *

A band of military Officers, 125
Then stationed in the city, were the chief
Of my associates: some of these wore swords
That had been seasoned in the wars, and
all

Were men well-born; the chivalry of France.
 In age and temper differing, they had yet 130
 One spirit ruling in each heart; alike
 (Save only one, hereafter to be named)
 Were bent upon undoing what was done:
 This was their rest and only hope; there-
 with
 No fear had they of bad becoming worse,
 For bad to them was come; nor would have stirred, 136
 Or deemed it worth a moment's thought to stir,
 In anything, save only as the act Looked thitherward. One, reckoning by
 years,
 Was in the prime of manhood, and ere-
 while 140
 He had sate lord in many tender hearts;
 Though heedless of such honors now, and
 changed:
 His temper was quite mastered by the
 times,
 And they had blighted him, had eaten
 away
 The beauty of his person, doing wrong 145
 Alike to body and to mind: his port,
 Which once had been erect and open,
 now
 Was stooping and contracted, and a face
 Endowed by Nature with her fairest gifts
 Of symmetry and light and bloom, expressed, 150
 As much as any that was ever seen,
 A ravage out of season, made by thoughts
 Unhealthy and vexatious. . . .
 'Twas in truth an hour
 Of universal ferment; mildest men
 Were agitated; and commotions, strife
 Of passion and opinion, filled the walls
 Of peaceful houses with unquiet sounds. 165
 The soil of life was, at that time,
 Too hot to tread upon.

* * * * *

Along that very Loire, with festal
 mirth 431
 Resounding at all hours, and innocent yet
 Of civil slaughter, was our frequent walk.
 . . . And when we chanced
 One day to meet a hunger-bitten girl, 510
 Who crept along fitting her languid gait
 Unto a heifer's motion, by a cord

Tied to her arm, and picking thus from the lane
 Its sustenance, while the girl with pallid
 hands
 Was busy knitting in a heartless mood 515
 Of solitude, and at the sight my friend
 In agitation said, "'Tis against that
 That we are fighting," I with him believed
 That a benignant spirit was abroad Which might not be withstood, that poverty 520
 Abject as this would in a little time
 Be found no more, that we should see the
 earth
 Unthwarted in her wish to recompense
 The meek, the lowly, patient child of toil,
 All institutes for ever blotted out 525
 That legalised exclusion, empty pomp Abolished, sensual state and cruel power
 Whether by edict of the one or few;
 And finally, as sum and crown of all,
 Should see the people having a strong
 hand 530
 In framing their own laws; whence better days
 To all mankind.

From Book X

RESIDENCE IN FRANCE (continued)

Cheered with this hope, to Paris I returned,
 And ranged, with ardor heretofore unfelt,
 The spacious city, and in progress passed
 The prison where the unhappy Monarch
 lay, 51
 Associate with his children and his wife
 In bondage; and the palace, lately stormed
 With roar of cannon by a furious host.
 I crossed the square (an empty area then!)
 Of the Carrousel, where so late had lain 56
 The dead, upon the dying heaped, and gazed
 On this and other spots, as doth a man
 Upon a volume whose contents he knows
 Are memorable, but from him locked up,
 Being written in a tongue he cannot read,
 So that he questions the mute leaves
 with pain, 62
 And half upbraids their silence. But that
 night
 I felt most deeply in what world I was,
 What ground I trod on, and what air
 I breathed. 65

High was my room and lonely, near the roof
 Of a large mansion or hotel, a lodge
 That would have pleased me in more quiet
 times;
 Nor was it wholly without pleasure then.
 With unextinguished taper I kept watch,
 Reading at intervals; the fear gone by 71
 Pressed on me almost like a fear to come.
 I thought of those September massacres,
 Divided from me by one little month,
 Saw them and touched: the rest was conjured up 75
 From tragic fictions or true history,
 Remembrances and dim admonishments.
 The horse is taught his manage, and no
 star
 Of wildest course but treads back his own
 steps;
 For the spent hurricane the air provides so
 As fierce a successor; the tide retreats
 But to return out of its hiding-place
 In the great deep; all things have second
 birth;
 The earthquake is not satisfied at once;
 And in this way I wrought upon myself, 85
 Until I seemed to hear a voice that cried,
 To the whole city, "Sleep no more."
 The trance
 Fled with the voice to which it had given
 birth;
 But vainly comments of a calmer mind Promised soft peace and sweet forgetful-
 ness. 90
 The place, all hushed and silent as it was,
 Appeared unfit for the repose of night,
 Defenceless as a wood where tigers roam;

MICHAEL

A PASTORAL POEM

If from the public way you turn your steps
 Up the tumultuous brook of Greenhead
 Ghyll,
 You will suppose that with an upright
 path
 Your feet must struggle; in such bold ascent
 The pastoral mountains front you face to
 face. 5
 But courage! for around that boisterous
 brook

The mountains have all opened out themselves,
 And made a hidden valley of their own.
 No habitation can be seen: but they
 Who journey thither find themselves alone
 With a few sheep, with rocks and stones, and kites 11
 That overhead are sailing in the sky.
 It is in truth an utter solitude;
 Nor should I have made mention of this Dell
 But for one object which you might pass
 by, 15
 Might see and notice not. Beside the brook
 Appears a straggling heap of unhewn
 stones!
 And to that simple object appertains
 A story, unenriched with strange events,
 Yet not unfit, I deem, for the fireside, 20
 Or for the summer shade. It was the first
 Of those domestic tales that spake to me
 Of shepherds, dwellers in the valleys, men
 Whom I already loved; not verily For their own sakes, but for the fields and
 hills 25
 Where was their occupation and abode.
 And hence this Tale, while I was yet a boy Careless of books, yet having felt the
 power
 Of Nature, by the gentle agency
 Of natural objects, led me on to feel 30
 For passions that were not my own, and think
 (At random and imperfectly indeed)
 On man, the heart of man, and human life.
 Therefore, although it be a history
 Homely and rude, I will relate the same 35
 For the delight of a few natural hearts;
 And, with yet fonder feeling, for the sake
 Of youthful Poets who among these hills
 Will be my second self when I am gone.
 Upon the forest-side in Grasmere Vale
 There dwelt a Shepherd, Michael was his
 name; 41
 An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb.
 His bodily frame had been from youth to age
 Of an unusual strength: his mind was keen,
 Intense, and frugal, apt for all affairs, 45
 And in his shepherd's calling he was prompt

And watchful more than ordinary men.
 Hence had he learned the meaning of all
 winds,
 Of blasts of every tone; and, oftentimes,
 When others heeded not, he heard the South 50
 Make subterraneous music, like the noise
 Of bagpipers on distant Highland hills.
 The Shepherd, at such warning, of his flock Bethought him, and he to himself would
 say,
 "The winds are now devising work for me!"
 And truly, at all times, the storm, that drives 56
 The traveller to a shelter, summoned him
 Up to the mountains, he had been alone
 Amid the heart of many thousand mists,
 That came to him and left him on the heights. 60
 So lived he till his eightieth year was
 past.
 And grossly that man errs, who should suppose That the green valleys, and the streams and rocks,
 Were things indifferent to the Shepherd's
 thoughts.
 Fields, where with cheerful spirits he had breathed 65
 The common air; hills, which with vigorous step
 He had so often climbed; which had impressed
 So many incidents upon his mind
 Of hardship, skill or courage, joy or fear;
 Which like a book preserved the memory
 Of the dumb animals whom he had saved, 71
 Had fed or sheltered, linking to such acts,
 The certainty of honorable gain;
 Those fields, those hills—what could they less?—had laid
 Strong hold on his affections, were to him
 A pleasurable feeling of blind love, 76
 The pleasure which there is in life itself.
 His days had not been passed in single-
 ness.
 His helpmate was a comely matron, old—Though younger than himself full twenty
 years. 80
 She was a woman of a stirring life,
 Whose heart was in her house: two wheels
 she had

Of antique form, this large for spinning wool,
 That small for flax; and if one wheel had
 rest,
 It was because the other was at work. 85
 The pair had but one inmate in their
 house,
 An only child, who had been born to
 them
 When Michael, telling o'er his years,
 began
 To deem that he was old,—in shepherd's phrase,
 With one foot in the grave. This only
 son, 90
 With two brave sheep-dogs tried in many a storm,
 The one of an inestimable worth,
 Made all their household. I may truly
 say,
 That they were as a proverb in the vale
 For endless industry. When day was gone, 95
 And from their occupations out of doors
 The son and father were come home, even
 then,
 Their labor did not cease; unless when
 all Turned to the cleanly supper-board, and
 there,
 Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk, 100
 Sat round the basket piled with oaten
 cakes,
 And their plain home-made cheese. Yet when the meal
 Was ended, Luke (for so the son was named)
 And his old father both betook themselves
 To such convenient work as might employ Their hands by the fire-side; perhaps to card 106
 Wool for the housewife's spindle, or repair
 Some injury done to sickle, flail, or scythe,
 Or other implement of house or field.
 Down from the ceiling by the chimney's
 edge 110
 That in our ancient uncouth country
 style
 With huge and black projection over-browed
 Large space beneath, as duly as the light

Of day grew dim the housewife hung a lamp;
 An aged utensil, which had performed 115
 Service beyond all others of its kind.
 Early at evening did it burn and late,
 Surviving comrade of uncounted hours,
 Which going by from year to year had
 found
 And left the couple neither gay perhaps Nor cheerful, yet with objects and with hopes, 121
 Living a life of eager industry.
 And now, when Luke had reached his eighteenth year,
 There by the light of this old lamp they
 sat,
 Father and son, while far into the night
 The housewife plied her own peculiar work, 126
 Making the cottage through the silent
 hours
 Murmur as with the sound of summer
 flies.
 This light was famous in its neighborhood,
 And was a public symbol of the life 130
 That thrifty pair had lived. For, as it chanced,
 Their cottage on a plot of rising ground
 Stood single, with large prospect, north
 and south,
 High into Easedale, up to Dunmail-
 Raise,
 And westward to the village near the lake; 135
 And from this constant light, so regular
 And so far seen, the house itself, by all
 Who dwelt within the limits of the vale,
 Both old and young, was named The Evening Star.
 Thus living on through such a length of
 years 140
 The Shepherd, if he loved himself, must needs
 Have loved his helpmate; but to Michael's heart
 This son of his old age was yet more
 dear—
 Less from instinctive tenderness, the same Fond spirit that blindly works in the blood of all— 145
 Than that a child, more than all other gifts
 That earth can offer to declining man,

Brings hope with it; and forward looking
 thoughts,
 And stirrings of inquietude, when they
 By tendency of nature needs must fail. 150
 Exceeding was the love he bare to him,
 His heart and his heart's joy! For often-
 times
 Old Michael, while he was a babe in arms,
 Had done him female service, not alone
 For pastime and delight, as is the use 155
 Of fathers, but with patient mind enforced
 To acts of tenderness; and he had rocked
 His cradle as with a woman's gentle hand.
 And, in a later time, ere yet the boy Had put on boy's attire, did Michael
 love, 160
 Albeit of a stern unbending mind,
 To have the young one in his sight, when
 he Wrought in the field, or on his shepherd's stool
 Sat with a fettered sheep before him stretched,
 Under the large old oak, that near his
 door 165
 Stood single, and, from matchless depth of shade,
 Chosen for the shearers' covert from the
 sun,
 Thence in our rustic dialect was called
 The Clipping Tree, a name which yet it bears.
 There, while they two were sitting in the shade, 170
 With others round them, earnest all and blithe,
 Would Michael exercise his heart with looks
 Of fond correction and reproof bestowed
 Upon the child, if he disturbed the sheep
 By catching at their legs, or with his shouts 175
 Scared them, while they lay still beneath the shears.
 And when by Heaven's good grace the boy grew up
 A healthy lad, and carried in his cheek
 Two steady roses that were five years old,
 Then Michael from a winter coppice cut
 With his own hand a sapling, which he hooped 181
 With iron, making it throughout in all
 Due requisites a perfect shepherd's staff,

And gave it to the boy; wherewith equipped
He as a watchman oftentimes was placed
At gate or gap, to stem or turn the flock;
And, to his office prematurely called, 187
There stood the urchin, as you will divine,
Something between a hindrance and a help;
And for this course not always, I believe, 190
Receiving from his father hire of praise;
Though nought was left undone which staff or voice,
Or looks, or threatening gestures, could perform.
But soon as Luke, full ten years old,
could stand Against the mountain blasts; and to the heights, 195
Not fearing toil, nor length of weary ways,
He with his father daily went, and they Were as companions, why should I relate That objects which the Shepherd loved
before
Were dearer now? that from the boy there
came 200
Feelings and emanations—things which
were
Light to the sun and music to the wind;
And that the old man's heart seemed born
again?
Thus in his father's sight the boy grew up;
And now when he had reached his eighteenth year, 205
He was his comfort and his daily hope.
While in this sort the simple household
lived
From day to day, to Michael's ear there
came Distressful tidings. Long before the time
Of which I speak, the Shepherd had been bound 210
In surety for his brother's son, a man
Of an industrious life, and ample means;
But unforeseen misfortunes suddenly Had pressed upon him; and old Michael
now
Was summoned to discharge the forfeiture, 215
A grievous penalty, but little less Than half his substance. This unlooked for claim
At the first hearing, for a moment took
More hope out of his life than he supposed

That any old man ever could have lost. 220
As soon as he had armed himself with strength
To look his trouble in the face, it seemed
The Shepherd's sole resource to sell at once
A portion of his patrimonial fields.
Such was his first resolve; he thought
again, 225
And his heart failed him. "Isabel," said
he,
Two evenings after he had heard the news,
"I have been toiling more than seventy
years,
And in the open sunshine of God's love
Have we all lived; yet if these fields of ours 230
Should pass into a stranger's hand, I think
That I could not lie quiet in my grave.
Our lot is a hard lot; the sun himself
Has scarcely been more diligent than I;
And I have lived to be a fool at last 235
To my own family. An evil man
That was, and made an evil choice, if he Were false to us; and if he were not false,
There are ten thousand to whom loss like
this
Had been no sorrow. I forgive him—but
'T were better to be dumb, than to talk thus. 241
When I began, my purpose was to speak
Of remedies and of a cheerful hope.
Our Luke shall leave us, Isabel; the land
Shall not go from us, and it shall be free;
He shall possess it free as is the wind 246
That passes over it. We have, thou know'st,
Another kinsman—he will be our friend
In this distress. He is a prosperous man, Thriving in trade—and Luke to him shall
go, 250
And with his kinsman's help and his own thrift
He quickly will repair this loss, and then
He may return to us. If here he stay, What can be done? Where every one is poor,
What can be gained?" 255
At this the old man paused,
And Isabel sat silent, for her mind
Was busy, looking back into past times.
There's Richard Bateman, thought she to herself,
He was a parish-boy—at the church-door

They made a gathering for him, shillings, pence, ²⁶⁰
And halfpennies, wherewith the neighbors bought
A basket, which they filled with pedlar's wares;
And with this basket on his arm, the lad
Went up to London, found a master there,
Who out of many chose the trusty boy ²⁶⁵
To go and overlook his merchandise
Beyond the seas: where he grew wondrous rich,
And left estates and monies to the poor,
And at his birthplace built a chapel floored
With marble which he sent from foreign lands. ²⁷⁰
These thoughts, and many others of like
sort,
Passed quickly through the mind of Isabel,
And her face brightened. The old man was glad,
And thus resumed:—"Well, Isabel! this scheme
These two days has been meat and drink to me. ²⁷⁵
Far more than we have lost is left us yet.
We have enough—I wish indeed that I Were younger,—but this hope is a good
hope.
Make ready Luke's best garments, of the
best Buy for him more, and let us send him forth ²⁸⁰
To-morrow, or the next day, or to-night:
If he could go, the boy should go to-night."
Here Michael ceased, and to the fields went forth
With a light heart. The housewife for five days
Was restless morn and night, and all day long ²⁸⁵
Wrought on with her best fingers to prepare
Things needful for the journey of her
son.
But Isabel was glad when Sunday came To stop her in her work: for, when she
lay
By Michael's side, she through the last two nights ²⁹⁰
Heard him, how he was troubled in his
sleep:
And when they rose at morning she could
see

That all his hopes were gone. That day at noon
She said to Luke, while they two by themselves
Were sitting at the door, "Thou must not go: ²⁹⁵
We have no other child but thee to lose,
None to remember—do not go away,
For if thou leave thy father he will die."
The youth made answer with a jocund
voice;
And Isabel, when she had told her fears, ³⁰⁰
Recovered heart. That evening her best fare
Did she bring forth, and all together sat
Like happy people round a Christmas fire.
With daylight Isabel resumed her work;
And all the ensuing week the house appeared ³⁰⁵
As cheerful as a grove in spring: at length
The expected letter from their kinsman
came,
With kind assurances that he would do
His utmost for the welfare of the boy:
To which, requests were added, that forthwith ³¹⁰
He might be sent to him. Ten times or
more
The letter was read over; Isabel Went forth to show it to the neighbors
round;
Nor was there at that time on English land
A prouder heart than Luke's. When Isabel ³¹⁵
Had to her house returned, the old man
said,
"He shall depart to-morrow." To this
word
The housewife answered, talking much of things
Which, if at such short notice he should go,
Would surely be forgotten. But at length
She gave consent, and Michael was at ease. ³²⁰
Near the tumultuous brook of Green-head Ghyll,
In that deep valley, Michael had designed
To build a sheepfold; and, before he heard
The tidings of his melancholy loss, ³²⁵
For this same purpose he had gathered up
A heap of stones, which by the streamlet's edge
Lay thrown together, ready for the work.

With Luke that evening thitherward he walked;
 And soon as they had reached the place he stopped, 330
 And thus the old man spake to him:—
 "My son,
 To-morrow thou wilt leave me: with full
 heart
 I look upon thee, for thou art the same
 That wert a promise to me ere thy birth,
 And all thy life hast been my daily joy. 335
 I will relate to thee some little part
 Of our two histories; 't will do thee good When thou art from me, even if I should touch
 On things thou canst not know of.—After
 thou
 First cam'st into the world—as oft befalls
 To new-born infants—thou didst sleep
 away 341
 Two days, and blessings from thy father's
 tongue
 Then fell upon thee. Day by day passed
 on,
 And still I loved thee with increasing love.
 Never to living ear came sweeter sounds
 Than when I heard thee by our own fire-
 side 346
 First uttering, without words, a natural tune;
 While thou, a feeding babe, didst in thy
 joy
 Sing at thy mother's breast. Month followed month,
 And in the open fields my life was passed
 And on the mountains; else I think that
 thou 351
 Hadst been brought up upon thy father's knees.
 But we were playmates, Luke: among these hills,
 As well thou knowest, in us the old and young
 Have played together, nor with me didst
 thou 355
 Lack any pleasure which a boy can know."
 Luke had a manly heart; but at these words
 He sobbed aloud. The old man grasped his hand
 And said, "Nay, do not take it so—I see That these are things of which I need not speak. 360
 Even to the utmost I have been to thee

A kind and a good father: and herein
 I but repay a gift which I myself Received at others' hands; for, though now
 old
 Beyond the common life of man, I still 365 Remember them who loved me in my
 youth.
 Both of them sleep together: here they lived,
 As all their forefathers had done; and
 when
 At length their time was come, they were not loath
 To give their bodies to the family mould. 370
 I wished that thou should'st live the life
 they lived.
 But 't is a long time to look back, my son,
 And see so little gain from threescore
 years.
 These fields were burdened when they came to me;
 Till I was forty years of age, not more 375
 Than half of my inheritance was mine.
 I toiled and toiled; God blessed me in my work,
 And till these three weeks past the land was free.
 It looks as if it never could endure
 Another master. Heaven forgive me,
 Luke, 380
 If I judge ill for thee, but it seems good
 That thou should'st go."
 At this the old man paused;
 Then, pointing to the stones near which
 they stood,
 Thus, after a short silence, he resumed:
 "This was a work for us; and now, my
 son, 385
 It is a work for me. But lay one stone—
 Here, lay it for me, Luke, with thine own
 hands.
 Nay, boy, be of good hope;—we both may
 live
 To see a better day. At eighty-four I still am strong and hale;—do thou thy
 part, 390
 I will do mine.—I will begin again
 With many tasks that were resigned to
 thee;
 Up to the heights, and in among the
 storms,
 Will I without thee go again, and do
 All works which I was wont to do
 alone, 395

Before I knew thy face.—Heaven bless thee, boy!
 Thy heart these two weeks has been beating fast
 With many hopes; it should be so—yes—yes—
 I knew that thou could'st never have a wish
 To leave me, Luke: thou hast been bound to me 400
 Only by links of love: when thou art gone,
 What will be left to us!—But I forget My purposes. Lay now the corner-stone,
 As I requested; and hereafter, Luke, When thou art gone away, should 'evil men 405
 Be thy companions, think of me, my son, And of this moment; hither turn thy thoughts,
 And God will strengthen thee: amid all fear
 And all temptation, Luke, I pray that thou May'st bear in mind the life thy fathers lived, 410
 Who, being innocent, did for that cause Bestir them in good deeds. Now, fare thee well—
 When thou return'st, thou in this place wilt see
 A work which is not here: a covenant 'T will be between us; but, whatever fate
 Befall thee, I shall love thee to the last, 416
 And bear thy memory with me to the grave."
 The Shepherd ended here; and Luke stooped down,
 And, as his father had requested, laid The first stone of the sheepfold. At the sight 420
 The old man's grief broke from him; to his heart
 He pressed his son, he kissèd him and wept;
 And to the house together they returned. Hushed was that house in peace, or seeming peace,
 Ere the night fell;—with morrow's dawn the boy 425
 Began his journey, and when he had reached
 The public way, he put on a bold face;
 And all the neighbors, as he passed their doors,

Came forth with wishes and with farewell prayers,
 That followed him till he was out of sight. 430
 A good report did from their kinsman come,
 Of Luke and his well doing: and the boy Wrote loving letters, full of wondrous news,
 Which, as the housewife phrased it, were throughout
 "The prettiest letters that were ever seen."
 Both parents read them with rejoicing hearts. 436
 So, many months passed on: and once again
 The Shepherd went about his daily work With confident and cheerful thoughts; and now
 Sometimes when he could find a leisure hour 440
 He to that valley took his way, and there Wrought at the sheepfold. Meantime Luke began
 To slacken in his duty; and at length He in the dissolute city gave himself
 To evil courses: ignominy and shame 445
 Fell on him, so that he was driven at last To seek a hiding-place beyond the seas.
 There is a comfort in the strength of love;
 'T will make a thing endurable, which else Would upset the brain, or break the heart: 450
 I have conversed with more than one who well
 Remember the old man, and what he was Years after he had heard this heavy news.
 His bodily frame had been from youth to age 454
 Of an unusual strength. Among the rocks He went, and still looked up to sun and cloud
 And listened to the wind; and as before Performed all kinds of labor for his sheep,
 And for the land his small inheritance. And to that hollow dell from time to time
 Did he repair, to build the fold of which 461
 His flock had need. 'T is not forgotten yet The pity which was then in every heart
 For the old man—and 't is believed by all That many and many a day he thither went, 465
 And never lifted up a single stone.

There, by the sheepfold, sometimes was he seen
 Sitting alone, or with his faithful dog,
 Then old, beside him, lying at his feet.
 The length of full seven years, from time to time, 470
 He at the building of this sheepfold
 wrought,
 And left the work unfinished when he died.
 Three years, or little more, did Isabel Survive her husband: at her death the estate
 Was sold, and went into a stranger's hand.
 The cottage which was named The Evening
 Star 476
 Is gone—the ploughshare has been through
 the ground
 On which it stood; great changes have been
 wrought
 In all the neighborhood:—yet the oak is left
 That grew beside their door; and the remains 480
 Of the unfinished sheepfold may be seen
 Beside the boisterous brook of Greenhead Ghyll.

MY HEART LEAPS UP WHEN I BEHOLD

My heart leaps up when I behold
 A rainbow in the sky:
 So was it when my life began;
 So is it now I am a man;
 So be it when I shall grow old, 5
 Or let me die!
 The child is father of the man;
 And I could wish my days to be
 Bound each to each by natural piety.

RESOLUTION AND INDEPEND- ENCE

There was a roaring in the wind all night;
 The rain came heavily and fell in floods;
 But now the sun is rising calm and bright;
 The birds are singing in the distant
 woods:
 Over his own sweet voice the stock-dove
 broods; 5

The jay makes answer as the magpie
 chatters;
 And all the air is filled with pleasant noise of waters.

All things that love the sun are out of doors;
 The sky rejoices in the morning's birth;
 The grass is bright with rain-drops;—on the moors 10
 The hare is running races in her mirth;
 And with her feet she from the plashy
 earth
 Raises a mist, that, glittering in the sun, Runs with her all the way wherever she doth run.

I was a traveller then upon the moor; 15
 I saw the hare that raced about with
 joy;
 I heard the woods and distant waters
 roar,
 Or heard them not, as happy as a boy:
 The pleasant season did my heart employ:
 My old remembrances went from me wholly; 20
 And all the ways of men so vain and melancholy.

But, as it sometimes chanceth, from the
 might
 Of joy in minds that can no further go,
 As high as we have mounted in delight
 In our dejection do we sink as low, 25
 To me that morning did it happen so;
 And fears, and fancies, thick upon me
 came;
 Dim sadness—and blind thoughts, I knew not, nor could name.

I heard the sky-lark warbling in the sky;
 And I bethought me of the playful hare: 30
 Even such a happy child of earth am I;
 Even as these blissful creatures do I
 fare;
 Far from the world I walk, and from all
 care;
 But there may come another day to me—
 Solitude, pain of heart, distress, and poverty. 35

My whole life I have lived in pleasant
 thought,
 As if life's business were a summer mood;

As if all needful things would come un-
sought
To genial faith, still rich in genial good;
But how can he expect that others should Build for him, sow for him, and at his
call 41
Love him, who for himself will take no heed at all?

I thought of Chatterton, the marvelous
boy,
The sleepless soul that perished in his
pride;
Of him who walked in glory and in joy 45
Following his plough, along the mountain-
side:
By our own spirits are we deified:
We poets in our youth begin in glad-
ness;
But thereof come in the end despondency and madness.

Now, whether it were by peculiar grace, 50
A leading from above, a something given,
Yet it befell, that, in this lonely place,
When I with these untoward thoughts had striven,
Beside a pool bare to the eye of heaven
I saw a man before me unawares: 55
The oldest man he seemed that ever wore gray hairs.

As a huge stone is sometimes seen to lie
Couched on the bald top of an eminence;
Wonder to all who do the same espy,
By what means it could thither come, and
whence; 60
So that it seems a thing endued with
sense:
Like a sea-beast crawled forth, that on a shelf
Of rock or sand reposes, there to sun itself;

Such seemed this man, not all alive nor
dead,
Nor all asleep—in his extreme old age: 65
His body was bent double, feet and head
Coming together in life's pilgrimage;
As if some dire constraint of pain, or
rage
Of sickness felt by him in times long past,
A more than human weight upon his frame had cast. 70

Himself he propped, limbs, body, and pale
face,
Upon a long gray staff of shaven wood:
And, still as I drew near with gentle
pace,
Upon the margin of that moorish flood Motionless as a cloud the old man stood;
That heareth not the loud winds when they call, 76
And moveth altogether, if it move at all.

At length, himself unsettling, he the pond
Stirred with his staff and fixedly did look Upon the muddy water, which he coned,
As if he had been reading in a book: 81
And now a stranger's privilege I took;
And, drawing to his side, to him did say
"This morning gives us promise of a glorious day."

A gentle answer did the old man make, 85
In courteous speech which forth he slowly drew:
And him with further words I thus bespoke,
"What occupation do you there pursue?
This is a lonesome place for one like
you."
Ere he replied, a flash of mild surprise Broke from the sable orbs of his yet vivid
eyes. 91

His words came feebly, from a feeble chest,
But each in solemn order followed each,
With something of a lofty utterance
dressed;
Choice word, and measured phrase, above
the reach 95
Of ordinary men; a stately speech;
Such as grave Livers do in Scotland use, Religious men, who give to God and man their dues.

He told, that to these waters he had come
To gather leeches, being old and poor: 100
Employment hazardous and wearisome!
And he had many hardships to endure:
From pond to pond he roamed, from moor
to moor;
Housing, with God's good help, by choice
or chance;
And in this way he gained an honest maintenance. 105

The old man still stood talking by my
side;
But now his voice to me was like a stream Scarce heard; nor word from word could
I divide;
And the whole body of the man did seem Like one whom I had met with in a dream;
Or like a man from some far region sent,
To give me human strength, by apt ad-monishment. 112

My former thoughts returned: the fear
that kills;
And hope that is unwilling to be fed;
Cold, pain and labor, and all fleshly ills;
And mighty poets in their misery dead.
Perplexed, and longing to be comforted,
My question eagerly did I renew, 118
"How is it that you live, and what is it you do?"

He with a smile did then his words repeat;
And said, that, gathering leeches, far and
wide 121
He travelled; stirring thus about his feet
The waters of the pools where they abide.
"Once I could meet with them on every
side;
But they have dwindled long by slow
decay; 125
Yet still I persevere, and find them where I may."

While he was talking thus, the lonely
place,
The old man's shape, and speech, all troubled me:
In my mind's eye I seemed to see him
pace
About the weary moors continually, 130
Wandering about alone and silently.
While I these thoughts within myself
pursued,
He, having made a pause, the same discourse renewed.

And soon with this he other matter
blended,
Cheerfully uttered, with demeanor kind,
But stately in the main; and when he ended, 136
I could have laughed myself to scorn to
find
In that decrepit man so firm a mind.

"God," said I, "be my help and stay secure;
I'll think of the leech-gatherer on the lonely moor!" 140

YEW-TREES

There is a Yew-tree, pride of Lorton
Vale,
Which to this day stands single, in the midst
Of its own darkness, as it stood of yore;
Not loth to furnish weapons for the bands
Of Umfraville or Percy ere they marched 5
To Scotland's heaths; or those that crossed the sea
And drew their sounding bows at Azincour,
Perhaps at earlier Crecy, or Poitiers.
Of vast circumference and gloom profound
This solitary Tree! a living thing 10
Produced too slowly ever to decay;
Of form and aspect too magnificent To be destroyed. But worthier still of note
Are those fraternal Four of Borrowdale, Joined in one solemn and capacious
grove; 15
Huge trunks! and each particular trunk
a growth
Of intertwined fibres serpentine
Up-coiling, and inveterately convolved;
Nor uninformed with Phantasy, and looks
That threaten the profane;—a pillared
shade, 20
Upon whose grassless floor of red-brown
hue,
By sheddings from the pining umbrage tinged
Perennially—beneath whose sable roof
Of boughs, as if for festal purpose, decked
With unrejoicing berries—ghostly Shapes
May meet at noontide; Fear and trembling
Hope, 26
Silence and Foresight; Death the Skeleton
And Time the Shadow;—there to celebrate,
As in a natural temple scattered o'er
With altars undisturbed of mossy stone, 30
United worship; or in mute repose
To lie, and listen to the mountain flood Murmuring from Glaramara's inmost
caves.

AT THE GRAVE OF BURNS

SEVEN YEARS AFTER HIS DEATH

I shiver, Spirit fierce and bold,
At thought of what I now behold:
As vapors breathed from dungeons cold
Strike pleasure dead,
So sadness comes from out the mould 5
Where Burns is laid.

And have I then thy bones so near,
And thou forbidden to appear?
As if it were thyself that's here
I shrink with pain; 10
And both my wishes and my fear
Alike are vain.

Off weight—nor press on weight!—away Dark thoughts!—they came, but not to stay;
With chastened feelings would I pay 15
The tribute due
To him, and aught that hides his clay
From mortal view.

Fresh as the flower, whose modest worth
He sang, his genius 'glinted' forth, 20
Rose like a star that touching earth,
For so it seems,
Doth glorify its humble birth
With matchless beams.

The piercing eye, the thoughtful brow, 25
The struggling heart, where be they
now?—
Full soon the Aspirant of the plough,
The prompt, the brave,
Slept, with the obscurest, in the low
And silent grave. 30

I mourned with thousands, but as one
More deeply grieved, for He was gone
Whose light I hailed when first it shone,
And showed my youth
How verse may build a princely throne 35
On humble truth.

Alas! where'er the current tends,
Regret pursues and with it blends,—
Huge Criffel's hoary top ascends
By Skiddaw seen,— 40
Neighbors we were, and loving friends
We might have been;

True friends though diversely inclined;
But heart with heart and mind with mind,
Where the main fibres are entwined, 45
Through Nature's skill,
May even by contraries be joined
More closely still.

The tear will start, and let it flow;
Thou "poor Inhabitant below," 50
At this dread moment—even so—Might we together
Have sat and talked where gowans blow,
Or on wild heather.

What treasures would have then been placed 55
Within my reach; of knowledge graced
By fancy what a rich repast!
But why go on?—
Oh! spare to sweep, thou mournful blast,
His grave grass-grown. 60

There, too, a son, his joy and pride,
(Not three weeks past the stripling died,)
Lies gathered to his father's side,
Soul-moving sight!
Yet one to which is not denied 65
Some sad delight:

For he is safe, a quiet bed
Hath early found among the dead,
Harbored where none can be misled,
Wronged, or distressed; 70
And surely here it may be said
That such are blest.

And oh! for thee, by pitying grace
Checked oft-times in a devious race,
May He who halloweth the place 75
Where man is laid
Receive thy spirit in the embrace
For which it prayed!

Sighing I turned away; but ere Night fell I heard, or seemed to hear, 80
Music that sorrow comes not near,
A ritual hymn,
Chaunted in love that casts out fear
By Seraphim.

THE SOLITARY REAPER

Behold her, single in the field,
Yon solitary Highland Lass!
Reaping and singing by herself;
Stop here, or gently pass!

Alone she cuts and binds the grain 5
And sings a melancholy strain;
Oh listen! for the vale profound
Is overflowing with the sound.

No nightingale did ever chaunt
More welcome notes to weary bands 10
Of travellers in some shady haunt,
Among Arabian sands:
A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
In spring-time from the cuckoo-bird
Breaking the silence of the seas 15
Among the farthest Hebrides.

Will no one tell me what she sings?—
Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
For old, unhappy, far-off things,
And battles long ago: 20
Or is it some more humble lay,
Familiar matter of to-day?
Some natural sorrow, loss, or pain,
That has been, and may be again?

Whate'er the theme, the maiden sang 25
As if her song could have no ending;
I saw her singing at her work,
And o'er the sickle bending;—
I listened, motionless and still;
And, as I mounted up the hill, 30
The music in my heart I bore,
Long after it was heard no more.

TO THE CUCKOO

O blithe New-comer! I have heard,
I hear thee and rejoice.
O Cuckoo! shall I call thee Bird,
Or but a wandering Voice?

While I am lying on the grass 5
Thy twofold shout I hear,
From hill to hill it seems to pass,
At once far off, and near.

Though babbling only to the vale,
Of sunshine and of flowers, 10
Thou bringest unto me a tale
Of visionary hours.

Thrice welcome, darling of the spring!
Even yet thou art to me
No bird, but an invisible thing, 15
A voice, a mystery;

The same whom in my school-boy days
I listened to; that Cry
Which made me look a thousand ways
In bush, and tree, and sky. 20

To seek thee did I often rove
Through woods and on the green;
And thou wert still a hope, a love;
Still longed for, never seen.

And I can listen to thee yet; 25
Can lie upon the plain
And listen, till I do beget
That golden time again.

O blessèd Bird! the earth we pace
Again appears to be 30
An unsubstantial faery place,
That is fit home for thee!

SHE WAS A PHANTOM OF DELIGHT

She was a phantom of delight
When first she gleamed upon my sight;
A lovely apparition, sent
To be a moment's ornament;
Her eyes as stars of twilight fair; 5
Like twilight's, too, her dusky hair;
But all things else about her drawn
From May-time and the cheerful dawn;
A dancing shape, an image gay,
To haunt, to startle, and way-lay. 10

I saw her upon nearer view,
A spirit, yet a woman too!
Her household motions light and free,
And steps of virgin-liberty;
A countenance in which did meet 15
Sweet records, promises as sweet;
A creature not too bright or good
For human nature's daily food;
For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles.

And now I see with eye serene
The very pulse of the machine;
A being breathing thoughtful breath,
A traveller between life and death;
The reason firm, the temperate will, 25
Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill;
A perfect woman, nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort, and command;
And yet a spirit still, and bright
With something of angelic light.

I WANDERED LONELY AS A CLOUD

I wandered lonely as a cloud
That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd,
A host, of golden daffodils;
Beside the lake, beneath the trees,
Fluttering and dancing in the breeze. 5

Continuous as the stars that shine
And twinkle on the milky way,
They stretched in never-ending line
Along the margin of a bay: 10
Ten thousand saw I at a glance,
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.

The waves beside them danced; but they
Out-did the sparkling waves in glee:
A poet could not but be gay 15
In such a jocund company:
I gazed—and gazed—but little thought
What wealth the show to me had brought:

For oft, when on my couch I lie
In vacant or in pensive mood, 20
They flash upon that inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude;
And then my heart with pleasure fills,
And dances with the daffodils.

ODE TO DUTY

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
O Duty! if that name thou love
Who art a light to guide, a rod
To check the erring, and reprove;
Thou, who art victory and law 5
When empty terrors overawe;
From vain temptations dost set free;
And calm'st the weary strife of frail humanity!

There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them; who, in love and truth, 10
Where no misgiving is, rely Upon the genial sense of youth:
Glad Hearts! without reproach or blot
Who do thy work, and know it not:
Oh! if through confidence misplaced 15
They fail, thy saving arms, dread Power!
around them cast.

Serene will be our days and bright,
And happy will our nature be,
When love is an unerring light,
And joy its own security.

And they a blissful course may hold
Even now, who, not unwisely bold,
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need.

I, loving freedom, and untried; 25
No sport of every random gust,
Yet being to myself a guide,
Too blindly have reposed my trust:
And oft, when in my heart was heard
Thy timely mandate, I deferred 30
The task, in smoother walks to stray;
But thee I now would serve more strictly,
if I may.

Through no disturbance of my soul,
Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy control; 35
But in the quietness of thought:
Me this unchartered freedom tires;
I feel the weight of chance-desires:
My hopes no more must change their
name;
I long for a repose that ever is the same. 40

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face:
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds 45
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong;
And the most ancient heavens, through thee, are fresh and strong.

'To humbler functions, awful Power!
I call thee: I myself commend 50
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
Oh, let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give; 55
And in the light of truth thy bondman let me live!

CHARACTER OF THE HAPPY WARRIOR

Who is the happy Warrior? Who is he
That every man in arms should wish to be?
It is the generous Spirit, who, when
brought
Among the tasks of real life, hath wrought
Upon the plan that pleased his boyish
thought: 5

Whose high endeavors are an inward light
That makes the path before him always
bright:

Who, with a natural instinct to discern What knowledge can perform, is diligent to learn;

Abides by this resolve, and stops not
there, 10

But makes his moral being his prime care;
Who, doomed to go in company with Pain,

And Fear, and Bloodshed, miserable
train!

Turns his necessity to glorious gain;
In face of these doth exercise a power 15
Which is our human nature's highest
dower;

Controls them and subdues, transmutes,
bereaves,
Of their bad influence, and their good receives;

By objects, which might force the soul to abate

Her feeling, rendered more compassionate;
Is placable—because occasions rise 21
So often that demand such sacrifice;

More skilful in self-knowledge, even more pure,

As tempted more; more able to endure,
As more exposed to suffering and distress; 25

Thence, also more alive to tenderness.
'Tis he whose law is reason; who depends Upon that law as on the best of friends;
Whence, in a state where men are tempted
still

To evil for a guard against worse ill, 30
And what in quality or act is best

Doth seldom on a right foundation rest,
He labors good on good to fix, and owes
To virtue every triumph that he knows;

Who, if he rise to station of command, 35
Rises by open means; and there will stand
On honorable terms, or else retire,
And in himself possess his own desire;

Who comprehends his trust, and to the
same

Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim; 40
And therefore does not stoop, nor lie in wait

For wealth or honors, or for worldly state;
Whom they must follow; on whose head
must fall,

Like showers of manna, if they come at all:

Whose powers shed round him in the common strife, 45

Or mild concerns of ordinary life,
A constant influence, a peculiar grace;
But who, if he be called upon to face
Some awful moment to which Heaven has joined

Great issues, good or bad for human kind,
Is happy as a lover; and attired 51
With sudden brightness, like a man inspired;

And, through the heat of conflict keeps the
law

In calmness made, and sees what he foresaw;

Or if an unexpected call succeed, 55
Come when it will, is equal to the need:
He who though thus endued as with a sense
And faculty for storm and turbulence,
Is yet a soul whose master-bias leans
To homefelt pleasures and to gentle scenes; 60

Sweet images! which, wheresoe'er he be,
Are at his heart; and such fidelity
It is his darling passion to approve;
More brave for this that he hath much to
love:—

'Tis, finally, the man, who, lifted high 65
Conspicuous object in a nation's eye,
Or left unthought-of in obscurity,—

Who, with a toward or untoward lot,
Prosperous or adverse, to his wish or not,
Plays, in the many games of life, that one Where what he most doth value must be won: 71

Whom neither shape of danger can dismay,
Nor thought of tender happiness betray;
Who, not content that former worth stand
fast,

Looks forward, persevering to the last, 75
From well to better, daily self-surpassed:
Who, whether praise of him must walk the
earth

For ever, and to noble deeds give birth,
Or he must fall to sleep without his fame,
And leave a dead unprofitable name, 80
Finds comfort in himself and in his cause;
And, while the mortal mist is gathering,
draws

His breath in confidence of Heaven's applause:

This is the happy Warrior; this is he Whom every man in arms should wish to
be. 85

ODE

INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY FROM RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY CHILDHOOD

"The child is father of the man;
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety."

I

There was a time when meadow, grove and stream,
The earth, and every common sight,
To me did seem Apparelled in celestial light,
The glory and the freshness of a dream. 5
It is not now as it hath been of yore;—
Turn wheresoe'er I may,
By night or day,
The things which I have seen I now can see no more.

II

The Rainbow comes and goes, 10
And lovely is the Rose;
The Moon doth with delight Look round her when the heavens are
bare;
Waters on a starry night
Are beautiful and fair; 15
The sunshine is a glorious birth;
But yet I know, where'er I go,
That there hath passed away a glory from the earth.

III

Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous
song,
And while the young lambs bound 20
As to the tabor's sound,
To me alone there came a thought of
grief;
A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
And I again am strong:
The cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep; 25
No more shall grief of mine the season
wrong;
I hear the echoes through the mountains
throng,

The winds come to me from the fields of
sleep,
And all the earth is gay;
Land and sea 30
Give themselves up to jollity,
And with the heart of May Doth every beast keep holiday;—
Thou child of joy,
Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts,
thou happy shepherd-boy! 35

IV

Ye blessèd creatures, I have heard the call Ye to each other make; I see
The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee:
My heart is at your festival,
My head hath its coronal, 40
The fullness of your bliss, I feel—I feel it
all.
Oh evil day! if I were sullen
While Earth herself is adorning,
This sweet May-morning,
And the children are culling 45
On every side,
In a thousand valleys far and wide,
Fresh flowers; while the sun shines
warm,
And the babe leaps up on his mother's arm:—
I hear, I hear, with joy I hear! 50
—But there's a tree, of many, one,
A single field which I have looked upon,
Both of them speak of something that is
gone:
The pansy at my feet
Doth the same tale repeat: 55
Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

V

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:
The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting, 60
And cometh from afar:
Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home: 65
Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
Shades of the prison-house begin to close Upon the growing boy,

But he beholds the light, and whence it
 " flows,
 He sees it in his joy; 70
 The youth, who daily farther from the east
 Must travel, still is Nature's priest.
 And by the vision splendid
 Is on his way attended;
 At length the man perceives it die away, 75
 And fade into the light of common day.

VI

Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her
 own;
 Yearnings she hath in her own natural
 kind,
 And, even with something of a mother's
 mind,
 And no unworthy aim, 80
 The homely nurse doth all she can
 To make her foster-child, her inmate Man,
 Forget the glories he hath known,
 And that imperial palace whence he came.

VII

Behold the Child among his new-born blisses, 85
 A 'six years' darling of a pigmy size!
 See, where 'mid work of his own hand he
 lies,
 Fretted by sallies of his mother's kisses,
 With light upon him from his father's
 eyes!
 See, at his feet, some little plan or chart, 90
 Some fragment from his dream of human
 life,
 Shaped by himself with newly-learnèd art;
 A wedding or a festival,
 A mourning or a funeral;
 And this hath now his heart, 95
 And unto this he frames his song:
 Then will he fit his tongue
 To dialogues of business, love, or strife;
 But it will not be long Ere this be thrown aside, 100
 And with new joy and pride
 The little actor cons another part;
 Filling from time to time his "humorous
 stage"
 With all the persons, down to palsied Age,
 That Life brings with her in her equipage;
 As if his whole vocation 106
 Were endless imitation.

VIII

Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie
 Thy soul's immensity;
 Thou best philosopher, who yet dost
 keep 110
 Thy heritage, thou eye among the blind,
 That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal
 deep,
 Haunted forever by the eternal mind,— Mighty prophet! Seer blest!
 On whom those truths do rest, 115
 Which we are toiling all our lives to find,
 In darkness lost, the darkness of the
 grave;
 Thou, over whom thy immortality
 Broods like the day, a master o'er a slave,
 A presence which is not to be put by; 120
 Thou little child, yet glorious in the might
 Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's
 height,
 Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke
 The years to bring the inevitable yoke, Thus blindly with thy blessedness at strife? 125
 Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight,
 And custom lie upon thee with a weight,
 Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life!

IX

O joy! that in our embers
 Is something that doth live, 130
 That nature yet remembers
 What was so fugitive!
 The thought of our past years in me doth
 breed
 Perpetual benediction: not indeed
 For that which is most worthy to be
 blest— 135
 Delight and liberty, the simple creed
 Of childhood, whether busy or at rest,
 With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his
 breast:—
 Not for these I raise
 The song of thanks and praise; 140
 But for those obstinate questionings
 Of sense and outward things,
 Fallings from us, vanishings;
 Blank misgivings of a creature
 Moving about in worlds not realised, 145
 High instincts before which our mortal nature

Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised:
 But for those first affections,
 Those shadowy recollections,
 Which, be they what they may, 150
 Are yet the fountain light of all our day,
 Are yet a master light of all our seeing;
 Uphold us, cherish, and have power to
 make
 Our noisy years seem moments in the being
 Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake,
 To perish never; 156
 Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavor,
 Nor man nor boy,
 Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
 Can utterly abolish or destroy! 160
 Hence in a season of calm weather
 Though inland far we be,
 Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
 Which brought us hither,
 Can in a moment travel thither, 165
 And see the children sport upon the shore,
 And hear the mighty waters rolling ever-
 more.

X

Then sing, ye birds, sing, sing a joyous
 song!
 And let the young lambs bound
 As to the tabor's sound! 170
 We in thought will join your throng,
 Ye that pipe and ye that play,
 Ye that through your hearts to-day
 Feel the gladness of the May!
 What though the radiance which was once so bright 175
 Be now forever taken from my sight, Though nothing can bring back the
 hour
 Of splendor in the grass, of glory in the flower;
 We will grieve not, rather find Strength in what remains behind; 180
 In the primal sympathy
 Which having been must ever be;
 In the soothing thoughts that spring
 Out of human suffering; 184
 In the faith that looks through death,
 In years that bring the philosophic mind.

XI

And O ye fountains, meadows, hills, and groves,
 Forebode not any severing of our loves!

Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
 I only have relinquished one delight 190
 To live beneath your more habitual sway.
 I love the brooks which down their channels fret,
 Even more than when I tripped lightly as
 they;
 The innocent brightness of a new-born day
 Is lovely yet; 195
 The clouds that gather round the setting
 sun
 Do take a sober coloring from an eye
 That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality;
 Another race hath been, and other palms are won.
 Thanks to the human heart by which we
 live, 200
 Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears,
 To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

TO A SKY-LARK

Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!
 Dost thou despise the earth where cares
 abound?
 Or, while the wings aspire, are heart and
 eye
 Both with thy nest upon the dewy ground?
 Thy nest which thou canst drop into at
 will, 5
 Those quivering wings composed, that music still!
 Leave to the nightingale her shady wood;
 A privacy of glorious light is thine;
 Whence thou dost pour upon the world a
 flood
 Of harmony, with instinct more divine; 10
 Type of the wise who soar, but never roam;
 True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home!

SONNETS

ON THE EXTINCTION OF THE VENETIAN REPUBLIC

Once did she hold the gorgeous east in fee,
 And was the safeguard of the west: the
 worth
 Of Venice d'd not fall below her birth,

Venice, the eldest child of Liberty.
 She was a maiden city, bright and free; 5
 No guile seduced, no force could violate;
 And, when she took unto herself a mate,
 She must espouse the everlasting sea.
 And what if she had seen those glories
 fade,
 Those titles vanish, and that strength decay; 10
 Yet shall some tribute of regret be paid
 When her long life hath reached its final
 day:
 Men are we, and must grieve when even
 the shade
 Of that which once was great is passed
 away.

LONDON, 1802

Milton! thou should'st be living at this
 hour:
 England hath need of thee: she is a fen
 Of stagnant waters: altar, sword, and pen, Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and
 bower,
 Have forfeited their ancient English
 dower 5
 Of inward happiness. We are selfish men;
 Oh! raise us up, return to us again;
 And give us manners, virtue, freedom,
 power.
 Thy soul was like a Star, and dwelt apart:
 Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like
 the sea: 10
 Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
 So didst thou travel on life's common way,
 In cheerful godliness; and yet thy heart
 The lowliest duties on herself did lay.

COMPOSED UPON WESTMINSTER
BRIDGE, SEPT. 3, 1802

Earth has not anything to show more
 fair:
 Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
 A sight so touching in its majesty:
 This city now doth, like a garment, wear
 The beauty of the morning; silent, bare, 5
 Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
 Open unto the fields, and to the sky;

All bright and glittering in the smokeless
 air.
 Never did sun more beautifully steep
 In his first splendor, valley, rock, or hill;
 Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep! 15
 The river glideth at his own sweet will:
 Dear God! the very houses seem asleep;
 And all that mighty heart is lying still!

ON THE SEA-SHORE NEAR CALAIS

It is a beauteous evening, calm and free,
 The holy time is quiet as a Nun
 Breathless with adoration; the broad sun
 Is sinking down in its tranquillity;
 The gentleness of heaven broods o'er
 the Sea: 5
 Listen! the mighty Being is awake,
 And doth with his eternal motion make
 A sound like thunder—everlastingly.
 Dear Child! dear Girl! that walkest with me here,
 If thou appear untouched by solemn
 thought, 10
 Thy nature is not therefore less divine:
 Thou liest in Abraham's bosom all the
 year;
 And worship'st at the temple's inner shrine,
 God being with thee when we know it not.

THE WORLD IS TOO MUCH WITH US

The world is too much with us: late and soon,
 Getting and spending, we lay waste our
 powers:
 Little we see in Nature that is ours;
 We have given our hearts away, a sordid
 boon!
 This Sea that bares her bosom to the
 moon; 5
 The winds that will be howling at all
 hours,
 And are up-gathered now like sleeping
 flowers;
 For this, for everything, we are out of
 tune;
 It moves us not.—Great God! I'd rather be
 A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn; 10

So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathèd horn.

TO TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE

Toussaint, the most unhappy man of men!
Whether the whistling rustic tend his plough
Within thy hearing, or thy head be now Pillowed in some deep dungeon's earless
den;
O miserable Chieftain! where and when 5
Wilt thou find patience? Yet die not! do
thou
Wear rather in thy bonds a cheerful brow:
Though fallen thyself, never to rise again,
Live, and take comfort. Thou hast left behind
Powers that will work for thee, air, earth, and skies: 10
There's not a breathing of the common
wind
That will forget thee; thou hast great allies;
Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
And love, and man's unconquerable mind.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
(1772-1834)

FRANCE: AN ODE

I

Ye Clouds! that far above me float and
pause,
Whose pathless march no mortal may
control!
Ye Ocean Waves! that, whereso'er ye
roll,
Yield homage only to eternal laws!
Ye Woods! that listen to the night-bird's singing, 5
Midway the smooth and perilous slope
reclined,
Save when your own imperious branches
swinging,
Have made a solemn music of the wind!
Where, like a man beloved of God,
Through glooms, which never woodman
trod, 10

How oft, pursuing fancies holy,
My moonlight way o'er flowering weeds I
wound,
Inspired beyond the guess of folly,
By each rude shape and wild unconquerable sound!
O ye loud Waves! and O ye Forests high! 15
And O ye Clouds that far above me soared!
Thou rising Sun! thou blue rejoicing Sky!
Yea, every thing that is and will be
free!
Bear witness for me, wheresoe'er ye be,
With what deep worship I have still adored 20
The spirit of divinest Liberty.

II

When France in wrath her giant-limbs up-
reared,
And with that oath which smote air,
earth and sea,
Stamped her strong foot and said she would be free, Bear witness for me, how I hoped and
feared! 25
With what a joy my lofty gratulation
Unawed I sang, amid a slavish band:
And when to overwhelm the disenchanted
nation,
Like fiends embattled by a wizard's
wand,
The Monarchs marched in evil day, 30
And Britain joined the dire array;
Though dear her shores and circling ocean,
Though many friendships, many youthful loves
Had sworn the patriot emotion
And flung a magic light o'er all her hills and groves; 35
Yet still my voice, unaltered, sang defeat
To all that braved the tyrant-quelling
lance,
And shame too long delayed and vain retreat!
For ne'er; O Liberty! with partial aim I dimmed thy light or damped thy holy
flame; 40
But blessed the pæans of delivered
France,
And hung my head and wept at Britain's
name.

III

"And what," I said, "though Blasphemy's loud scream
 With that sweet music of deliverance
 strove!
 Though all the fierce and drunken passions wove 45
 A dance more wild than e'er was maniac's
 dream!
 Ye storms, that round the dawning
 east assembled,
 The Sun was rising, though ye hid his
 light!"
 And when to soothe my soul, that hoped and trembled,
 The dissonance ceased, and all seemed calm and bright; 50
 When France her front deep-scarred and gory Concealed with clustering wreaths of glory;
 When, insupportably advancing,
 Her arm made mockery of the warrior's ramp;
 While timid looks of fury glancing, 55
 Domestic treason, crushed beneath her fatal stamp,
 Writhed like a wounded dragon in his
 gore;
 Then I reproached my fears that would not flee;
 "And soon," I said, "shall Wisdom teach her lore
 In the low huts of them that toil and groan; 60
 And, conquering by her happiness alone, Shall France compel the nations to be free, Till Love and Joy look round, and call the earth their own."

IV

Forgive me, Freedom! Oh forgive those dreams!
 I hear thy voice, I hear thy loud lament,
 From bleak Helvetia's icy caverns
 sent— 66
 I hear thy groans upon her blood-stained streams!
 Heroes, that for your peaceful country
 perished,
 And ye, that fleeing, spot your mountain
 snows

With bleeding wounds; forgive me, that I cherished 70
 One thought that ever blessed your cruel
 foes!
 To scatter rage and traitorous guilt
 Where Peace her jealous home had built;
 A patriot-race to disinherit
 Of all that made their stormy wilds so
 dear; 75
 And with inexpiable spirit
 To taint the bloodless freedom of the mountaineer—
 O France, that mockest Heaven, adulterous, blind,
 And patriot only in pernicious toils!
 Are these thy boasts, Champion of human kind? 80
 To mix with Kings in the low lust of
 sway,
 Yell in the hunt, and share the murderous
 prey;
 To insult the shrine of Liberty with spoils
 From freemen torn; to tempt and to betray?

The Sensual and the Dark rebel in
 vain, 85
 Slaves by their own compulsion! In mad game
 They burst their manacles and wear the
 name
 Of Freedom, graven on a heavier chain!
 O Liberty! with profitless endeavor
 Have I pursued thee, many a weary hour;
 But thou nor swell'st the victor's strain, nor ever 91
 Didst breathe thy soul in forms of human
 power.
 Alike from all, howe'er they praise thee, (Nor prayer, nor boastful name delays thee)
 Alike from Priestcraft's harpy minions, 95
 And factious Blasphemy's obscener slaves,
 Thou speedest on thy subtle pinions,
 The guide of homeless winds, and playmate of the waves!
 And there I felt thee!—on that sea-cliff's
 verge,
 Whose pines, scarce travelled by the breeze above, 100
 Had made one murmur with the distant surge!

Yes, while I stood and gazed, my temples
bare,
And shot my being through earth, sea, and
air,
Possessing all things with intensest love,
O Liberty! my spirit felt thee there. 105

KUBLA KHAN: OR, A VISION IN A DREAM

A FRAGMENT

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure-dome decree:
Where Alph, the sacred river, ran Through caverns measureless to man
Down to a sunless sea. 5

So twice five miles of fertile ground
With walls and towers were girdled round:
And there were gardens bright with sinuous rills,
Where blossomed many an incense-bearing
tree;
And here were forests ancient as the hills,
Enfolding sunny spots of greenery. 11

But oh! that deep romantic chasm which slanted
Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover!

A savage place! as holy and enchanted
As e'er beneath a waning moon was haunted 15

By woman wailing for her demon-lover!
And from this chasm, with ceaseless turmoil seething,

As if this earth in fast thick pants were
breathing,

A mighty fountain momentarily was forced:
Amid whose swift half-intermitted burst
Huge fragments vaulted like rebounding
hail, 21

Or chaffy grain beneath the thresher's flail:

And 'mid these dancing rocks at once and ever

It flung up momentarily the sacred river.
Five miles meandering with a mazy motion 25

Through wood and dale the sacred river
ran,

Then reached the caverns measureless to
man,

And sank in tumult to a lifeless ocean:
And 'mid this tumult Kubla heard from far
Ancestral voices prophesying war! 30

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.
It was a miracle of rare device, 35
A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice!

A damsel with a dulcimer
In a vision once I saw:
It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she played, 40
Singing of Mount Abora.
Could I revive within me
Her symphony and song,
To such a deep delight 'twould win
me,

That with music loud and long, 45
I would build that dome in air,
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
And all who heard should see them there,—
And all should cry, Beware! Beware!—
His flashing eyes, his floating hair! 50
Weave a circle round him thrice,
And close your eyes with holy dread,
For he on honey-dew hath fed,
And drunk the milk of Paradise.

THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER

IN SEVEN PARTS

PART I

It is an ancient Mariner, An ancient Mar-
And he stoppeth one of iner meeteth three three. Gallants bidden to a wedding-feast,
and detaineth one

"By thy long gray beard
and glittering eye,
Now wherefore stopp'st
thou me?"

"The Bridegroom's doors are opened wide, 5
And I am next of kin;
The guests are met, the feast is set:
May'st hear the merry din."

He holds him with his skinny hand,
"There was a ship," quoth
he. 10
"Hold off! unhand me, graybeard loon!"
Eftsoons his hand dropt he.

The Wedding-Guest is spell-bound by the eye of the old seafaring man, and constrained to hear his tale.

He holds him with his glittering eye—
The wedding-guest stood
still,
And listens like a three years' child: 15
The Mariner hath his will.

The wedding-guest sat on a stone:
He cannot choose but hear;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner. 20

"The ship was cheered,
the harbor cleared,
Merrily did we drop Below the kirk, below the
hill,
Below the lighthouse top.

The Mariner tells how the ship sailed southward with a good wind and fair weather till it reached the Line.

"The sun came up upon
the left, - 25
Out of the sea came he!
And he shone bright, and on the right
Went down into the sea.

"Higher and higher every
day, Till over the mast at noon—" 30
The wedding-guest here
beat his breast,
For he heard the loud
bassoon.

The Wedding-Guest heareth the bridal music; but the Mariner continueth his tale.

The bride hath paced into the hall,
Red as a rose is she;
Nodding their heads before her goes 35
The merry minstrelsy.

The wedding-guest he beat
his breast,
Yet he cannot choose but
hear;
And thus spake on that
ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner:

"And now the storm-blast came, and he 41
Was tyrannous and strong:
He struck with his o'ertaking wings,
And chased us south along.

The ship driven by a storm toward the south pole.

"With sloping masts and dipping prow, 45
As who pursued with yell and blow
Still treads the shadow of his foe,
And forward bends his head,
The ship drove fast, loud
roared the blast,
And southward aye we fled. 50

"And now there came both mist and snow,
And it grew wondrous cold;
And ice, mast-high, came floating by,
As green as emerald;

"And through the drifts the snowy cliffs 55
Did send a dismal sheen:
Nor shapes of men nor beasts we ken—
The ice was all between.

The land of ice, and of fearful sounds where no living thing was to be seen.

"The ice was here, the ice was there,
The ice was all around: 60
It cracked and growled,
and roared and howled,
Like noises in a swound!

"At length did cross an Albatross:
Thorough the fog it came:
As if it had been a Christian
soul, 65
We hailed it in God's
name.

Till a great sea-bird, called the Albatross, came through the snow-fog, and was received with great joy and hospitality.

"It ate the food it ne'er had eat,
And round and round it
flew.
The ice did split with a thunder-fit;
The helmsman steered us
through! 70

And lo! the Albatross proveth a bird of good omen, and followeth the ship as it returned northward through fog and floating ice.

"And a good south wind sprung up behind;
The Albatross did follow,
And every day, for food or
play,
Came to the mariners'
hollo!

"In mist or cloud, on mast or shroud, 75
It perched for vespers nine;
Whiles all the night,
through fog-smoke
white,
Glimmered the white moonshine."

The ancient Mariner inhospitably killeth the pious bird of good omen.

"God save thee, ancient Mariner!
From the fiends, that plague thee thus!— 80
Why look'st thou so?"—
"With my cross-bow
I shot the Albatross!"

PART II

"The sun now rose upon the right:
Out of the sea came he,
Still hid in mist, and on the left 85
Went down into the sea.

"And the good south wind
still blew behind,
But no sweet bird did follow,
Nor any day, for food or
play,
Came to the mariners'
hollo! 90

His shipmates cry out against the ancient Mariner for killing the bird of good luck.

"And I had done a hellish
thing,
And it would work 'em
woe;

For all averred, I had killed the bird
That made the breeze to
blow.
Ah wretch! said they, the bird to slay 95
That made the breeze to
blow!

"Nor dim nor red, like God's own head,
The glorious sun uprist:
Then all averred, I had killed the bird
That brought the fog and mist. 100
'Twas right, said they, such birds to slay,
That bring the fog and mist.

But when the fog cleared off, they justify the same, and thus make themselves accomplices in the crime

"The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew,
The furrow followed free:
We were the first that ever burst 105
Into that silent sea.

The fair breeze continues; the ship enters the Pacific Ocean, and sails northward, even till it reaches the Line.

"Down dropt the breeze,
the sails dropt down,
'Twas sad as sad could be;
And we did speak only to break
The silence of the sea! 110

The ship hath been suddenly becalmed.

"All in a hot and copper
sky,
The bloody sun, at noon,
Right up above the mast
did stand,
No bigger than the moon.

"Day after day, day after
day, 115
We stuck, nor breath nor motion;
As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

"Water, water, everywhere,
And all the boards did shrink; 120
Water, water, everywhere,
Nor any drop to drink.

And the Albatross begins to be avenged.

"The very deep did rot:
O Christ!
That ever this should be!
Yea, slimy things did crawl with legs 125
Upon the slimy sea.

"About, about, in reel and rout,
The death-fires danced at
night;
The water, like a witch's oils,
Burnt green, and blue, and
white. 130

A Spirit had followed them, one of the invisible inhabitants of this planet, neither departed souls nor angels.

"And some in dreams assured were
Of the spirit that plagued us so:
Nine fathom deep he had followed us,
From the land of mist and
snow.

"And every tongue, through utter drought, 135
Was withered at the root;
We could not speak, no more than if
We had been choked with soot.

The shipmates, in their sore distress, would fain throw the whole guilt on the ancient Mariner. in sign whereof they hang the dead seabird round his neck.

"Ah! well-a-day! what evil
looks
Had I from old and young!
Instead of the cross, the Albatross 141
About my neck was hung.

PART III

"There passed a weary time. Each throat
Was parched, and glazed
each eye.
A weary time! A weary
time! 145
How glazed each weary
eye!
When looking westward I beheld
A something in the sky.

The ancient Mariner beholdeth a sign in the element afar off.

"At first it seemed a little speck,
And then it seemed a mist:
It moved and moved, and took at last 151
A certain shape, I wist.

"A speck, a mist, a shape,
I wist!
And still it neared and neared:
As if it dodged a watersprite, 155
It plunged and tacked and veered.

"With throats unslaked,
with black lips baked,
We could nor laugh nor
wail;
Through utter drought all dumb we stood!
I bit my arm, I sucked the
blood, 160
And cried, 'A sail! a sail!'

At its nearer approach, it seemeth
him to be a ship;
and at a dead ransom he freeth his speech from the bonds of thirst

"With throats unslaked,
with black lips baked,
Agape they heard me call:
Gramercy! they for joy did grin,
And all at once their breath
drew in, 165
As they were drinking all.

A flash of joy;

"See! see (I cried) she tacks no more!
Hither to work us weal;
Without a breeze, without a tide,
She steadies with upright keel!' 170

And horror follows. For can it be a ship that comes onward without wind or tide?

"The western wave was all
a-flame:
The day was well nigh done:
Almost upon the western wave
Rested the broad bright
sun;
When that strange shape drove suddenly 175
Betwixt us and the sun.

It seemeth him
but the skeleton of a ship

"And straight the sun was flecked with bars, (Heaven's Mother send us
grace!)
As if through a dungeon
grate he peered,
With broad and burning
face. 180

"Alas! (thought I, and my heart beat loud)
How fast she nears and nears!
Are those her sails that glance in the sun,
Like restless gossameres?

And its ribs are seen as bars on the face of the setting
sun

"Are those her ribs through which the sun 185
Did peer, as through a grate?

The Spectre-
Woman and her Death-mate, and no other on board
the skeleton-ship.

And is that Woman all her
crew?
Is that a Death? and are there two?
Is Death that woman's mate?

Like vessel, like
crew!

"Her lips were red, her looks were free, 190
Her locks were yellow as
gold:
Her skin was as white as leprosy,
The nightmare Life-in-Death was she,
Who thickens man's blood with cold.

Death and Life-in-Death have dined
for the ship's crew, and she (the latter) winneth the ancient Mariner.

"The naked hulk alongside
came, 195
And the twain were casting dice;

'The game is done! I've won, I've won!'
Quoth she, and whistles thrice.

No twilight within the courts of the
sun.

"The sun's rim dips; the stars rush out:
At one stride comes the dark; 200
With far-heard whisper,
o'er the sea,
Off shot the spectre-bark.

"We listened and looked sideways up!

At the rising of the
moon,

Fear at my heart, as at a cup,

My life-blood seemed to sip! 205

The stars were dim, and thick the night,

The steersman's face by his lamp gleamed white;

From the sails the dew did drip—

Till clomb above the eastern bar

The hornèd moon, with one bright star 210

Within the nether tip.

"One after one, by the stardogged moon,

One after another,

Too quick for groan or sigh,

Each turned his face with a ghastly pang,

And cursed me with his
eye. 215

"Four times fifty living
men,

His shipmates drop down dead

(And I heard nor sigh nor groan)

With heavy thump, a lifeless lump,

They dropped down one by one.

"The souls did from their bodies fly,— 220

But Life-in-Death begins her work on the ancient Mar-
iner.

They fled to bliss or woe!
And every soul, it passed me by,

Like the whizz of my crossbow!"

PART IV

"I fear thee, ancient Mar-
iner!

The Wedding-Guest feareth that a spirit is talking to
him;

I fear thy skinny hand! 225
And thou art long, and lank, and brown,

As is the ribbed sea-sand.

"I fear thee and thy glittering eye,

And thy skinny hand, so brown."—

But the ancient Manner assureth him of his bodily life, and proceedeth to relate his horrible penance

"Fear not, fear not, thou wedding-guest! 230
This body dropt not down.

"Alone, alone, all, all alone,
Alone on a wide, wide sea!
And never a saint took pity on My soul in agony. 235

He despiseth the creatures of the calm,

"The many men, so beautiful!
And they all dead did lie:
And a thousand thousand slimy things
Lived on; and so did I.

And envieth that they should live,
and so many be
dead

"I looked upon the rotting
sea, 240
And drew my eyes away;
I looked upon the rotting
deck,
And there the dead men
lay.

"I looked to heaven, and tried to pray;
But or ever a prayer had gusht, 245
A wicked whisper came, and
made
My heart as dry as dust.

"I closed my lids, and kept them close,
And the balls like pulses
beat;
For the sky and the sea,
and the sea and the
sky, 250
Lay like a load on my weary
eye,
And the dead were at my
feet.

But the curse liveth for him in the eye of the dead
men.

"The cold sweat melted
from their limbs,
Nor rot nor reek did they:
The look with which they looked on me 255
Had never passed away.

"An orphan's curse would drag to hell
A spirit from on high;

But oh! more horrible than
that Is the curse in a dead man's
eye! 260

Seven days, seven nights, I saw that curse,
And yet I could not die.

"The moving moon went up the sky,
And nowhere did abide:
Softly she was going up, 265
And a star or two beside—

"Her beams bemoaned the sultry main,
Like April hoar-frost spread;
But where the ship's huge shadow lay,
The charmed water burnt always 270
A still and awful red.

"Beyond the shadow of the ship,
I watched the water-snakes:
They moved in tracks of shining white,
And when they reared, the elfish light 275
Fell off in hoary flakes.

"Within the shadow of the ship
I watched their rich attire:
Blue, glossy green, and velvet black,
They coiled and swam;
and every track 280
Was a flash of golden fire.

"O happy living things!
no tongue
Their beauty might declare:
A spring of love gushed
from my heart,
And I blessed them unaware! 285
Sure my kind saint took pity on me,
And I blessed them unaware.

"The selfsame moment I could pray;
And from my neck so free

In his loneliness and fixedness he yearneth towards the journeying moon, and the stars
that still sojourn, yet still move onward; and everywhere the blue sky
belongs to them,
and is their appointed rest, and their native country and their own natural homes,
which they enter unannounced, as lords that are certainly expected;
and yet there is a silent joy at their arrival

By the light of the moon he beholdeth God's creatures of the great calm.

Their beauty and their happiness.

He blesseth them
in his heart.

The spell begins to break.

The Albatross fell off, and sank 290
Like lead into the sea.

PART V

"Oh sleep! it is a gentle
thing,
Beloved from pole to pole!
To Mary Queen the praise
be given!
She sent the gentle sleep
from Heaven, 295
That slid into my soul.

"The silly buckets on the deck,
That had so long remained,
I dreamt that they were filled with dew;
And when I awoke, it rained. 300

"My lips were wet, my throat was cold,
My garments all were dank;
Sure I had drunken in my dreams,
And still my body drank.

"I moved, and could not feel my limbs: 305
I was so light—almost
I thought that I had died
in sleep,
And was a blessed ghost.

"And soon I heard a roaring wind:
It did not come anear; 310
But with its sound it shook the sails,
That were so thin and sere.

"The upper air burst into
life!
And a hundred fire-flags
sheen,
To and fro they were hurried about; 315
And to and fro, and in and
out,
The wan stars danced between.

"And the coming wind did roar more loud,
And the sails did sigh like
sedge;
And the rain poured down
from one black cloud;
The moon was at its edge.

"The thick black cloud was cleft, and still 322
The moon was at its side:
Like waters shot from some high crag,
The lightning fell with never a jag, 325
A river steep and wide.

"The loud wind never reached the ship,
Yet now the ship moved on!
Beneath the lightning and the moon
The dead men gave a groan.

"They groaned, they stirred,
they all uprose, 331
Nor spake, nor moved their
eyes;
It had been strange, even in a dream,
To have seen those dead men rise.

"The helmsman steered,
the ship moved on; 335
Yet never a breeze up-blew;
The mariners all 'gan work
the ropes,
Where they were wont to
do:
They raised their limbs like lifeless tools—
We were a ghastly crew.

"The body of my brother's
son 341
Stood by me, knee to knee:
The body and I pulled at one rope,
But he said nought to me."

"I fear thee, ancient Mar-
iner!" 345
"Be calm, thou Wedding-
Guest!

By grace of the Holy Mother, the ancient Mariner is refreshed with rain

He heareth sounds and seeth strange sights and commotions in the sky
and the element.

The bodies of the ship's crew are inspired, and the ship moves on;

But not by the souls of the men, nor by demons of earth or middle air, but by a blessed troop of angelic spirits, sent down by the invocation of the guardian saint

'Twas not those souls that fled in pain,
Which to their corse came
again,
But a troop of spirits blest:

"For when it dawned—they dropped their arms, 350
And clustered round the mast;
Sweet sounds rose slowly
through their mouths,
And from their bodies
passed.

"Around, around, flew each
sweet sound,
Then darted to the sun; 355 Slowly the sounds came back again,
Now mixed, now one by
one.

"Sometimes a-dropping from the sky
I heard the skylark sing;
Sometimes all little birds that arc, 360
How they seemed to fill the sea and air
With their sweet jargoning!

"And now 'twas like all instruments,
Now like a lonely flute;
And now it is an angel's
song, 365
That makes the heavens be mute.

"It ceased; yet still the sails made on
A pleasant noise till noon,
A noise like of a hidden
brook
In the leafy month of June, 370
That to the sleeping woods
all night
Singeth a quiet tune.

"Till noon we quietly sailed
on,
Yet never a breeze did
breathe:

Slowly and smoothly went
the ship, 375
Moved onward from beneath.

"Under the keel nine fathom deep,
From the land of mist and
snow,
The spirit slid; and it was
he
That made the ship to go.
The sails at noon left off their tune, 381
And the ship stood still also.

"The sun, right up above
the mast,
Had fixed her to the ocean;
But in a minute she 'gan
stir, 385
With a short uneasy motion—
Backwards and forwards half her length,
With a short uneasy motion.

"Then like a pawing horse
let go,
She made a sudden bound:
It flung the blood into my
head, 391
And I fell down in a swoond.

"How long in that same fit
I lay,
I have not to declare;
But ere my living life returned, 395
I heard, and in my soul
discerned
Two voices in the air.

"'Is it he?' quoth one,
'is this the man?
By Him who died on cross,
With his cruel bow he laid full low 400
The harmless Albatross.

"The spirit who bideth
by himself
In the land of mist and
snow,

The lonesome Spirit from the south pole carries on the ship as far as the Line, in obedience to the angelic troop, but still requireth vengeance

The Polar Spirit's fellow-demons, the invisible inhabitants of the element.
take part in his wrong, and two of them relate, one to the other, that penance long and heavy for the ancient Mariner hath been accorded to the Polar Spirit, who returneth
southward

He loved the bird that loved the man Who shot him with his bow.' 405

"The other was a softer
voice,
As soft as honey-dew:
Quoth he, 'The man hath penance done,
And penance more will do.'

PART VI

First Voice

"But tell me, tell me!
speak again, 410
Thy soft response renew-
ing—
What makes that ship drive on so fast?
What is the ocean doing?'

Second Voice

"Still as a slave before his lord,
The ocean hath no blast;
His great bright eye most silently 416
Up to the moon is cast—

"If he may know which way to go;
For she guides him, smooth
or grim.
See, brother, see! how graciously 420
She looketh down on him.'

First Voice

"But why drives on that ship so fast,
Without or wave or wind?'

Second Voice

"The air is cut away
before,
And closes from behind.

"Fly, brother, fly! more high, more high! 426
Or we shall be belated:
For slow and slow that ship
will go,
When the Mariner's trance is abated.'

"I woke, and we were sailing on, 430
As in a gentle weather:
'Twas night, calm night,
the moon was high;
The dead men stood together.

"All stood together on the deck,
For a charnel-dungeon fitter:
All fixed on me their stony
eyes, 436
That in the moon did glitter.

"The pang, the curse, with which they died,
Had never passed away:
I could not draw my eyes from theirs, 440
Nor turn them up to pray.

"And now this spell was snapt: once more
I viewed the ocean green,
And looked far forth, yet little saw
Of what had else been seen—

"Like one, that on a lonesome road 446
Doth walk in fear and dread,
And having once turned round, walks on,
And turns no more his
head;
Because he knows a frightful fiend 450
Doth close behind him
tread.

"But soon there breathed
a wind on me,
Nor sound nor motion made:
Its path was not upon the
sea,
In ripple or in shade. 455

"It raised my hair, it
fanned my cheek
Like a meadow-gale of
spring—
It mingled strangely with my fears,
Yet it felt like a welcoming.

The supernatural motion is retarded;
the Mariner awakes, and his penance begins anew

The curse is finally expiated.

The Mariner hath been cast into a trance, for the angelic power causeth
the vessel to drive northward faster than human life could endure

"Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship, 460
Yet she sailed softly too:
Sweetly, sweetly blew the breeze—
On me alone it blew.

And the ancient Mariner beholdeth his native country

"Oh! dream of joy! is this indeed
The lighthouse top I see?
Is this the hill? is this the kirk? 466
Is this mine own countree?

"We drifted o'er the harbor-
bar,
And I with sobs did pray—
'O let me be awake, my God! 470
Or let me sleep away.'

"The harbor-bay was clear as glass,
So smoothly it was strewn!
And on the bay the moonlight lay,
And the shadow of the
moon. 475

"The rock shone bright,
the kirk no less,
That stands above the rock:
The moonlight steeped in silence
The steady weathercock.

The angelic spirits leave the dead bodies,

"And the bay was white with silent light, 480
Till rising from the same, Full many shapes, that shadows were,
In crimson colors came.

And appear in their own forms of light.

"A little distance from the prow
Those crimson shadows
were: 485
I turned my eyes upon the deck—
Oh, Christ! what saw I
there!

"Each corse lay flat, lifeless and flat,
And, by the holy rood!
A man all light, a seraph-
man, 490
On every corse there stood.

"This seraph-band, each
waved his hand:
It was a heavenly sight!
They stood as signals to
the land,
Each one a lovely light:

"This seraph-band, each
waved his hand, 496
No voice did they impart—
No voice; but oh! the silence sank
Like music on my heart.

"But soon I heard the dash of oars, 500
I heard the pilot's cheer;
My head was turned perforce away,
And I saw a boat appear.

"The pilot, and the pilot's
boy,
I heard them coming fast:
Dear Lord in Heaven! it was a joy 506
The dead men could not
blast.

"I saw a third—I heard his
voice:
It is the Hermit good!
He singeth loud his godly hymns 510
That he makes in the wood.
He'll shrieve my soul, he'll wash away
The Albatross's blood.

PART VII

"This Hermit good lives
in that wood
Which slopes down to the
sea. 515
How loudly his sweet voice
he rears!
He loves to talk with marineres
That come from a far countree.

The Hermit of the wood.

"He kneels at morn, and noon, and eve—
He hath a cushion plump:

It is the moss that wholly hides 521
The rotted old oak-stump.

"The skiff-boat neared: I heard them talk,
'Why, this is strange, I
trow!'

Where are those lights so many and fair, 525
That signal made but now?"

Approacheth the ship with wonder.

"'Strange, by my faith!'—
the Hermit said—
'And they answered not our cheer!
The planks look warped!
and see those sails,
How thin they are and sere!
I never saw aught like to
them, 531
Unless perchance it were

"'Brown skeletons of leaves that lag
My forest-brook along:
When the ivy-tod is heavy with snow, 535
And the owlet whoops to the wolf below,
That eats the she-wolf's
young.'

"'Dear Lord! it hath a fiendish look'— (The pilot made reply)
'I am a-feared'—'Push on, push on!' 540
Said the Hermit cheerily.

"The boat came closer to
the ship,
But I nor spake nor stirred;
The boat came close beneath the ship,
And straight a sound was
heard. 545

The ship suddenly sinketh.

"Under the water it rumbled on,
Still louder and more dread:
It reached the ship, it split the bay;
The ship went down like
lead.

"Stunned by that loud and dreadful sound, 550
Which sky and ocean smote,
Like one that hath been seven days drowned,
My body lay afloat;
But swift as dreams, myself I found Within the pilot's boat. 555

"Upon the whirl, where sank the ship,
The boat spun round and
round;
And all was still, save that the hill
Was telling of the sound.

"I moved my lips—the pilot shrieked, 560
And fell down in a fit;
The holy Hermit raised his
eyes,
And prayed where he did sit.

"I took the oars: the pilot's
boy,
Who now doth crazy go,
Laughed loud and long,
and all the while 566
His eyes went to and fro.
'Ha! ha!' quoth he, 'full plain I see,
The Devil knows how to row.'

"And now, all in my own countree, 570
I stood on the firm land!
The Hermit stepped forth
from the boat,
And scarcely he could stand.

"'O shrieve me, shrieve me, holy man!'
The Hermit crossed his
brow. 575
'Say quick,' quoth he, 'I bid thee say—
What manner of man art
thou?'

"Forthwith this frame of mine was wrenched
With a woeful agony,

The ancient Mar-
iner is saved in the Pilot's boat.

The ancient Mar-
iner earnestly entreateth the Hermit to shrieve him;
and the penance of life falls on him.

Which forced me to begin my tale; 580
And then it left me free.

And ever and anon
throughout his future life an agony constraineth him to travel from and to land,

"Since then at an uncertain hour,
That agony returns;
And till my ghastly tale is told,
This heart within me burns.

"I pass, like night, from land to land; 586
I have strange power of speech;
That moment that his face
I see,
I know the man that must hear me:
To him my tale I teach. 590

"What loud uproar bursts from that door:
The wedding-guests are
there;
But in the garden-bower
the bride
And bride-maids singing
are;
And hark the little vesper
bell, 595
Which biddeth me to prayer!

"O Wedding-Guest! this soul hath been Alone on a wide, wide sea:
So lonely 'twas, that God himself Scarce seemèd there to be.

"O sweeter than the marriage-feast, 601
'Tis sweeter far to me,
To walk together to the
kirk
With a goodly company!—

"To walk together to the kirk, 605
And all together pray,
While each to his great Father bends,

Old men, and babes, and loving friends,
And youths and maidens
gay!

"Farewell, farewell! but this I tell 610
To thee, thou Wedding-
Guest!

And to teach, by his own example, love and reverence to all things that God made and loveth.

He prayeth well, who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast.

"He prayeth best, who loveth best
All things both great and small; 615
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all."

The Mariner, whose eye is bright,
Whose beard with age is hoar,
Is gone; and now the Wedding-Guest 620
Turned from the bridegroom's door.

He went like one that hath been stunned,
And is of sense forlorn:
A sadder and a wiser man
He rose the morrow morn.

FROST AT MIDNIGHT

The frost performs its secret ministry,
Unhelped by any wind. The owl's cry Came loud—and hark, again! loud as before.

The inmates of my cottage, all at rest,
Have left me to that solitude, which suits
Abstruser musings: save that at my side
My cradled infant slumbers peacefully.
'Tis calm indeed! so calm, that it disturbs

And vexes meditation with its strange And extreme silentness. Sea, hill, and
wood, 10
This populous village! Sea, and hill, and
wood,

With all the numberless goings on of life
 Inaudible as dreams! the thin blue flame
 Lies on my low-burnt fire, and quivers not;
 Only that film, which fluttered on the
 grate, 15
 Still flutters there, the sole unquiet thing.
 Methinks, its motion in this hush of nature
 Gives it dim sympathies with me who live,
 Making it a companionable form,
 Whose puny flaps and freaks the idling
 Spirit 20
 By its own moods interprets, everywhere
 Echo or mirror seeking of itself,
 And makes a toy of Thought.

But oh! how oft,
 How oft, at school, with most believing
 mind, 25
 Presageful, have I gazed upon the bars,
 To watch that fluttering stranger! and as oft
 With unclosed lids, already had I dreamt
 Of my sweet birth-place, and the old church-tower,
 Whose bells, the poor man's only music,
 rang 30
 From morn to evening, all the hot Fair-
 day,
 So sweetly, that they stirred and haunted
 me
 With a wild pleasure, falling on mine ear
 Most like articulate sounds of things to come!
 So gazed I, till the soothing things I dreamt 35
 Lulled me to sleep, and sleep prolonged my dreams!
 And so I brooded all the following morn,
 Awed by the stern preceptor's face, mine
 eye
 Fixed with mock study on my swimming
 book:
 Save if the door half opened, and I snatched 40
 A hasty glance, and still my heart leaped up
 For still I hoped to see the stranger's face, Townsman, or aunt, or sister more beloved,
 My play-mate when we both were clothed alike!
 Dear babe, that sleepest cradled by my
 side, 45
 Whose gentle breathings, heard in this deep calm,

Fill up the interspersèd vacancies
 And momentary pauses of the thought!
 My babe so beautiful! it thrills my heart
 With tender gladness, thus to look at
 thee, 50
 And think that thou shalt learn far other lore
 And in far other scenes! For I was reared
 In the great city, pent 'mid cloisters dim,
 And saw naught lovely but the sky and
 stars.
 But thou, my babe! shalt wander like a
 breeze 55
 By lakes and sandy shores, beneath the crags
 Of ancient mountain, and beneath the
 clouds,
 Which image in their bulk both lakes and shores
 And mountain crags: so shalt thou see and hear
 The lovely shapes and sounds intelligible
 Of that eternal language, which thy God 60
 Utters, who from eternity doth teach Himself in all, and all things in himself.
 Great universal Teacher! he shall mould
 Thy spirit, and by giving make it ask. 65
 Therefore all seasons shall be sweet to
 thee,
 Whether the summer clothe the general
 earth
 With greenness, or the redbreast sit and
 sing
 Betwixt the tufts of snow on the bare branch
 Of mossy apple-tree, while the nigh thatch 70
 Smokes in the sun-thaw; whether the eavedrops fall
 Heard only in the trances of the blast,
 Or if the secret ministry of frost
 Shall hang them up in silent icicles,
 Quietly shining to the quiet moon. 75

HYMN

BEFORE SUNRISE IN THE VALE
OF CHAMOUNI

Hast thou a charm to stay the morning-
 star
 In his steep course? So long he seems to pause

On thy bald awful head, O sovran Blanc!
The Arve and Arveiron at thy base
Rave ceaselessly; but thou, most awful
Form! 5

Risest from forth thy silent sea of pines,
How silently! Around thee and above Deep is the air and dark, substantial,
black,

An ebon mass: methinks thou piercest it
As with a wedge! But when I look again,
It is thine own calm home, thy crystal
shrine, 11

Thy habitation from eternity!
O dead and silent Mount! I gazed upon
thee,

Till thou, still present to the bodily sense,
Didst vanish from my thought: entranced in prayer 15

I worshipped the Invisible alone.

Yet, like some sweet beguiling melody,
So sweet, we know not we are listening to it,

Thou, the meanwhile, wast blending with
my thought,

Yea, with my life and life's own secret
joy: 20

Till the dilating Soul, enrapt, transfused,
Into the mighty vision passing—there,
As in her natural form, swelled vast to Heaven!

Awake, my soul! not only passive praise
Thou owest! not alone these swelling tears,
Mute thanks and secret ecstasy! Awake, Voice of sweet song! Awake, my heart,
awake! 27

Green vales and icy cliffs, all join my Hymn.

Thou first and chief, sole sovran of the Vale!

O struggling with the darkness all the
night, 30

And visited all night by troops of stars,
Or when they climb the sky or when they sink:

Companion of the morning-star at dawn,
Thyself earth's rosy star, and of the dawn
Co-herald! wake, oh wake, and utter
praise! 35

Who sank thy sunless pillars deep in
Earth?

Who filled thy countenance with rosy
light?

Who made thee parent of perpetual
streams?

And you, ye five wild torrents fiercely glad!

Who called you forth from night and utter
death, 40

From dark and icy caverns called you
forth,

Down those precipitous, black, jagged
rocks,

Forever shattered and the same forever?

Who gave you your invulnerable life,
Your strength, your speed, your fury, and your joy, 45

Unceasing thunder and eternal foam?
And who commanded (and the silence
came),

Here let the billows stiffen, and have rest?
Ye ice-falls! ye that from the mountain's brow

Adown enormous ravines slope amain— 50
Torrents, methinks, that heard a mighty
voice,

And stopped at once amid their maddest plunge!

Motionless torrents! silent cataracts!

Who made you glorious as the gates of
Heaven

Beneath the keen full moon? Who bade
the sun 55

Clothe you with rainbows? Who, with living flowers

Of loveliest blue, spread garlands at your feet?—

God! let the torrents, like a shout of nations,

Answer! and let the ice-plains echo, God!

God! sing, ye meadow-streams, with glad-some voice! 60

Ye pine-groves, with your soft and soul-like sounds!

And they too have a voice, yon piles of
snow,

And in their perilous fall shall thunder,
God!

Ye living flowers that skirt the eternal frost!

Ye wild goats sporting round the eagle's
nest! 65

Ye eagles, play-mates of the mountain-storm!

Ye lightnings, the dread arrows of the clouds!

Ye signs and wonders of the element!

Utter forth God, and fill the hills with
praise!

Thou too, hoar Mount! with thy sky-pointing peaks, 70
 Oft from whose feet the avalanche, un-
 heard,
 Shoots downward, glittering through the pure serene
 Into the depth of clouds that veil thy
 breast—
 Thou too again, stupendous Mountain!
 thou
 That as I raise my head, awhile bowed
 low 75
 In adoration, upward from thy base Slow-travelling with dim eyes diffused with tears,
 Solemnly seemest, like a vapory cloud,
 To rise before me—Rise, oh ever rise,
 Rise like a cloud of incense, from the earth!
 Thou kingly spirit throned among the
 hills, 81
 'Thou dread ambassador from earth to
 heaven,
 Great hierarch! tell thou the silent sky,
 And tell the stars, and tell yon rising
 sun,
 Earth, with her thousand voices, praises
 God. 85

DEJECTION: AN ODE

Late, late yestreen I saw the new Moon
 With the old Moon in her arms;
 And I fear, I fear, my Master dear!
 We shall have a deadly storm.
Ballad of Sir Patrick Spens.

I

Well! If the Bard was weather-wise, who
 made
 The grand old ballad of Sir Patrick
 Spens,
 This night, so tranquil now, will not go
 hence Unroused by winds, that ply a busier
 trade
 Than those which mould yon cloud in lazy flakes, 5
 Or the dull sobbing draft, that moans and rakes
 Upon the strings of this Æolian lute,
 Which better far were mute;
 For lo! the new-moon winter bright!
 And overspread with phantom light, 10

(With swimming phantom light o'er-
 spread
 But rimmed and circled by a silver thread)
 I see the old moon in her lap, foretelling
 The coming-on of rain and squally
 blast.
 And oh! that even now the gust were swelling, 15
 And the slant night-shower driving loud and fast!
 Those sounds which oft have raised me,
 whilst they awed,
 And sent my soul abroad,
 Might now perhaps their wonted impulse
 give,
 Might startle this dull pain, and make it live! 20

II

A grief without a pang, void, dark, and
 drear,
 A stifled, drowsy, unimpassioned grief,
 Which finds no natural outlet, no relief,
 In word, or sigh, or tear—
 O Lady! in this wan and heartless mood, 25
 To other thoughts by yonder throstle wooed,
 All this long eve, so balmy and serene,
 Have I been gazing on the western sky,
 And its peculiar tint of yellow green:
 And still I gaze—and with how blank an
 eye! 30
 And those thin clouds above, in flakes and bars,
 That give away their motion to the stars;
 Those stars, that glide behind them or between,
 Now sparkling, now bedimmed, but always seen:
 Yon crescent moon, as fixed as if it grew 35
 In its own cloudless, starless lake of blue;
 I see them all so excellently fair,
 I see, not feel, how beautiful they are!

III

My genial spirits fail;
 And what can these avail 40
 To lift the smothering weight from off my
 breast?
 It were a vain endeavor,
 Though I should gaze for ever
 On that green light that lingers in the
 west:

I may not hope from outward forms to
win 45
The passion and the life, whose fountains are within.

IV

O Lady, we receive but what we give,
And in our life alone does Nature live:
Ours is her wedding garment, ours her shroud!

And what we ought behold, of higher
worth, 50
Than that inanimate cold world allowed
To the poor loveless ever-anxious crowd,
Ah! from the soul itself must issue forth
A light, a glory, a fair luminous cloud
Enveloping the earth— 55
And from the soul itself must there be sent
A sweet and potent voice, of its own
birth,
Of all sweet sounds the life and element!

V

O pure of heart! thou need'st not ask of
me
What this strong music in the soul may
be! 60
What, and wherein it doth exist,
This light, this glory, this fair luminous
mist,
This beautiful and beauty-making power.
Joy, virtuous Lady! Joy that ne'er was given,
Save to the pure, and in their purest hour,
Life, and Life's effluence, cloud at once and shower, 66
Joy, Lady! is the spirit and the power,
Which wedding Nature to us gives in
dower,
A new earth and new heaven, Undreamt of by the sensual and the proud— 70
Joy is the sweet voice, Joy the luminous
cloud—
We in ourselves rejoice!
And thence flows all that charms or ear
or sight,
All melodies the echoes of that voice,
All colors a suffusion from that light. 75

VI

There was a time when, though my path was rough,
This joy within me dallied with distress,

And all misfortunes were but as the stuff
Whence Fancy made me dreams of happiness:

For hope grew round me, like the twining
vine, 80

And fruits, and foliage, not my own, seemed mine.

But now afflictions bow me down to
earth:

Nor care I that they rob me of my mirth;
But oh! each visitation

Suspends what Nature gave me at my
birth, 85

My shaping spirit of Imagination.

For not to think of what I needs must feel,

But to be still and patient, all I can;

And haply by abstruse research to steal
From my own nature all the natural
man— 90

This was my sole resource, my only plan:

Till that which suits a part infects the
whole,

And now is almost grown the habit of my soul.

VII

Hence, viper thoughts, that coil around
my mind,

Reality's dark dream! 95

I turn from you, and listen to the wind,

Which long has raved unnoticed.

What a scream

Of agony by torture lengthened out

That lute sent forth! Thou Wind, that ravest without,

Bare crag, or mountain-tairn, or blasted
tree, 100

Or pine-grove whither woodman never clomb,

Or lonely house, long held the witches'
home,

Methinks were fitter instruments for
thee,

Mad Lutanist! who in this month of showers,

Of dark-brown gardens, and of peeping
flowers, 105

Makest Devils' yule, with worse than wintry song,

The blossoms, buds, and timorous leaves
among.

Thou Actor, perfect in all tragic sounds!
Thou mighty Poet, even to frenzy bold!

What tell'st thou now about? 110
 'Tis of the rushing of an host in
 rout,
 With groans of trampled men, with smarting wounds—
 At once they groan with pain, and shudder with the cold!
 But hush! there is a pause of deepest
 silence!
 And all that noise, as of a rushing crowd, 115
 With groans and tremulous shuddering—all is over—
 It tells another tale, with sounds less deep and loud!
 A tale of less affright,
 And tempered with delight,
 As Otway's self had framed the tender
 lay; 120
 'Tis of a little child
 Upon a lonesome wild,
 Not far from home, but she hath lost her
 way:
 And now moans low in bitter grief and
 fear,
 And now screams loud, and hopes to make her mother hear. 125

VIII

'Tis midnight, but small thoughts have I of sleep:
 Full seldom may my friend such vigils
 keep!
 Visit her, gentle Sleep! with wings of healing,
 And may this storm be but a mountain
 birth,
 May all the stars hang bright above her dwelling, 130
 Silent as though they watched the sleeping Earth!
 With light heart may she rise,
 Gay fancy, cheerful eyes,
 Joy lift her spirit, joy attune her
 voice;
 To her may all things live, from pole to pole, 135
 Their life the eddying of her living soul!
 O simple spirit, guided from above,
 Dear Lady! friend devoutest of my
 choice,
 Thus mayest thou ever, evermore rejoice.

YOUTH AND AGE

Verse, a breeze mid blossoms straying,
 Where Hope clung feeding, like a bee—
 Both were mine! Life went a-maying
 With Nature, Hope, and Poesy,
 When I was young! 5

When I was young?—Ah, woeful When!
 Ah! for the change 'twixt Now and Then!
 This breathing house not built with
 hands,
 This body that does me grievous wrong,
 O'er aery cliffs and glittering sands, 10
 How lightly then it flashed along:—
 Like those trim skiffs, unknown of yore,
 On winding lakes and rivers wide,
 That ask no aid of sail or oar,
 That fear no spite of wind or tide! 15
 Nought cared this body for wind or weather
 When Youth and I lived in't together.

Flowers are lovely; Love is flower-like;
 Friendship is a sheltering tree;
 Oh! the joys, that came down shower-like, 20
 Of Friendship, Love, and Liberty,
 Ere I was old!

Ere I was old? Ah woeful Ere,
 Which tells me, Youth's no longer here!
 O Youth! for years so many and sweet, 25
 'Tis known, that thou and I were one,
 I'll think it but a fond conceit—
 It cannot be that thou art gone!
 Thy vesper-bell hath not yet tolled:—
 And thou wert aye a masker bold! 30
 What strange disguise hast now put on,
 To make believe, that thou art gone?
 I see these locks in silvery slips,
 This drooping gait, this altered size:
 But Spring-tide blossoms on thy lips, 35
 And tears take sunshine from thine eyes!
 Life is but thought: so think I will
 That Youth and I are house-mates still.

Dew-drops are the gems of morning,
 But the tears of mournful eve! 40
 Where no hope is, life's a warning
 That only serves to make us grieve,
 When we are old:
 That only serves to make us grieve
 With oft and tedious taking-leave, 45

Like some poor nigh-related guest,
That may not rudely be dismissed;
Yet hath out-stayed his welcome while,
And tells the jest without the smile.

WORK WITHOUT HOPE

All Nature seems at work. Slugs leave their lair—
The bees are stirring—birds are on the
wing—
And Winter slumbering in the open air, Wears on his smiling face a dream of
Spring!
And I the while, the sole unbusy thing, . 5 Nor honey make, nor pair, nor build, nor sing.

Yet well I ken the banks where amaranths blow,
Have traced the fount whence streams of nectar flow.
Bloom, O ye amarantths! bloom for whom ye may,
For me ye bloom not! Glide, rich streams,
away! 10
With lips unbrightened, wreathless brow,
I stroll:
And would you learn the spells that drowse my soul?
Work without Hope draws nectar in a sieve,
And Hope without an object cannot live.

From the BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA

CHAPTER XIV

During the first year that Mr. Wordsworth and I were neighbors, our conversations turned frequently on the two cardinal points of poetry, the power of exciting the sympathy of the reader by a faithful adherence to the truth of nature, and the power of giving the interest of novelty by the modifying colors of imagination. The sudden charm, which accidents of light and shade, which 10 moonlight or sunset, diffused over a known and familiar landscape, appeared to represent the practicability of combining both. These are the poetry of nature. The thought suggested itself (to which of us I do not recollect) that a series of poems might be composed of two sorts. In the one, the incidents and agents were to be, in part at least, supernatural; and the excellence aimed at was to consist 20 in the interesting of the affections by the dramatic truth of such emotions as would naturally accompany such situations, supposing them real. And real in this sense they have been to every human being who, from whatever source of delusion, has at any time believed himself under supernatural agency. For the second class, subjects were to be chosen from ordinary life; the characters and 30 incidents were to be such as will be found in every village and its vicinity, where there is a meditative and feeling mind to seek after them, or to notice them when they present themselves.

In this idea originated the plan of the Lyrical Ballads; in which it was agreed that my endeavors should be directed to persons and characters supernatural, or at least romantic; yet so as to transfer 40 from our inward nature a human interest and a semblance of truth sufficient to procure for these shadows of imagination that willing suspension of disbelief for the moment, which constitutes poetic faith. Mr. Wordsworth, on the other hand, was to propose to himself as his object, to give the charm of novelty to things of every day, and to excite a feeling analogous to the supernatural, by 50 awakening the mind's attention from the lethargy of custom, and directing it to the loveliness and the wonders of the world before us; an inexhaustible treasure, but for which, in consequence of the film of familiarity and selfish solicitude, we have eyes, yet see not, ears that hear not, and hearts that neither feel nor understand.

With this view I wrote The Ancient 60 Mariner, and was preparing, among other poems, The Dark Ladie, and the Christabel, in which I should have more nearly realized my ideal than I had done in my first attempt. But Mr. Wordsworth's industry had proved so much more successful, and the number of his poems so much greater, that my compositions, instead of forming a balance, appeared rather an interpolation of heterogeneous [70] matter. Mr. Wordsworth added two or three poems written in his own character, in the impassioned, lofty, and sustained diction which is characteristic of his genius. In this form the Lyrical Ballads were published, and were presented by him, as an experiment, whether subjects, which from their nature rejected the usual ornaments and extra-colloquial style of poems in general, might not [80] be so managed in the language of ordinary life as to produce the pleasurable interest which it is the peculiar business of poetry to impart. To the second edition he added a preface of considerable length; in which, notwithstanding some passages of apparently a contrary import, he was understood to contend for the extension of this style to poetry of all kinds, and to reject as vicious and indefensible all [90] phrases and forms of style that were not included in what he (unfortunately, I think, adopting an equivocal expression,) called the language of real life. From this preface, prefixed to poems in which it was impossible to deny the presence of original genius, however mistaken its direction might be deemed, arose the whole long-continued controversy. For from the conjunction of perceived power [100] with supposed heresy I explain the inveteracy, and in some instances, I grieve to say, the acrimonious passions, with which the controversy has been conducted by the assailants.

Had Mr. Wordsworth's poems been the silly, the childish things, which they were for a long time described as being; had they been really distinguished from the compositions of other poets merely by [110] meanness of language, and inanity of thought; had they indeed contained nothing more than what is found in the parodies and pretended imitations of them; they must have sunk at once, a dead weight, into the slough of oblivion, and have dragged the preface along with them. But year after year increased the number of Mr. Wordsworth's admirers. They were found, too, not in the lower [120] classes of the reading public, but chiefly among young men of strong sensibility and meditative minds; and their admiration (inflamed perhaps in some degree by opposition) was distinguished by its intensity, I might almost say by its religious fervor. These facts, and the intellectual energy of the author, which was more or less consciously felt, where it was outwardly and even boisterously denied, meeting with sentiments of aversion to his opinions, and of alarm at their consequences, produced an eddy of criticism, which would of itself have borne up the poems by the violence with which it whirled them round and round. With many parts of this preface, in the sense attributed to them, and which the words undoubtedly seem to authorize, I never concurred; but, on the contrary, objected to them as erroneous in principle, and as contradictory (in appearance at least) both to other parts of the same preface and to the author's own practice in the greater number of the poems themselves. Mr. Wordsworth, in his recent collection, has, I find, degraded this prefatory disquisition to the end of his second volume, to be read or not at the reader's choice. But he [150] has not, as far as I can discover, announced any change in his poetic creed. At all events, considering it as the source of a controversy, in which I have been honored more than I deserve by the frequent conjunction of my name with his, I think it expedient to declare, once for all, in what points I coincide with his opinions, and in what points I altogether differ. But in order to render myself [160] intelligible, I must previously, in as few words as possible, explain my ideas, first, of a poem; and secondly, of poetry itself, in kind and in essence.

The office of philosophical disquisition consists in just distinction; while it is the privilege of the philosopher to preserve himself constantly aware that distinction is not division. In order to obtain adequate notions of any truth, [170] we must intellectually separate its distinguishable parts; and this is the technical process of philosophy. But having so done, we must then restore them in our conceptions to the unity in which they actually coexist; and this is the result of philosophy. A poem contains the same elements as a prose composition; the difference, therefore, must consist in a different combination of them, in consequence of a different object proposed. According to the difference of the object will be the difference of the combination. It is possible that the object may be merely to facilitate the recollection of any given facts or observations by artificial arrangement; and the composition will be a poem, merely because it is distinguished from prose by meter, or by rime, or by both conjointly. In this, [180 the lowest sense, a man might attribute the name of a poem to the well-known enumeration of the days in the several months:

"Thirty days hath September, April, June, and November," etc., and others of the same class and purpose. And as a particular pleasure is found in anticipating the recurrence of sound and quantities, all compositions [200 that have this charm superadded, whatever be their contents, may be entitled poems.

So much for the superficial form. A difference of object and contents supplies an additional ground of distinction. The immediate purpose may be the communication of truths: either of truth absolute and demonstrable, as in works of science; or of facts experienced and recorded, [210 as in history. Pleasure, and that of the highest and most permanent kind, may result from the attainment of the end; but it is not itself the immediate end. In other works the communication of pleasure may be the immediate purpose; and though truth, either moral or intellectual, ought to be the ultimate end, yet this will distinguish the character of the author, not the class to which the [220 work belongs. . . .

But the communication of pleasure may be the immediate object of a work not metrically composed; and that object may have been in a high degree attained, as in novels and romances. Would then the mere superaddition of meter, with or without rime, entitle these to the name of poems? The answer is, that nothing can permanently please, which does [230 not contain in itself the reason why it is so, and not otherwise. If meter be superadded, all other parts must be made consonant with it. They must be such as to justify the perpetual and distinct attention to each part, which an exact correspondent recurrence of accent and sound are calculated to excite. The final definition then, so deduced, may be thus worded. A poem is that species [240 of composition, which is opposed to works of science, by proposing for its immediate object pleasure, not truth; and from all other species (having this object in common with it) it is discriminated by proposing to itself such delight from the whole, as is compatible with a distinct gratification from each component part.

Controversy is not seldom excited in consequence of the disputants attaching each a different meaning to the same word; and in few instances has this been more striking than in disputes concerning the present subject. If a man chooses to call every composition a poem, which is rime, or measure, or both, I must leave his opinion uncontroverted. The distinction is at least competent to characterize the writer's intention. If it were subjoined, that the whole is likewise [250 entertaining or affecting as a tale, or as a series of interesting reflections, I of course admit this as another fit ingredient of a poem, and an additional merit. But if the definition sought for be that of a legitimate poem, I answer, it must be one the parts of which mutually support and explain each other; all in their proportion harmonizing with, and supporting the purpose and known influences of metrical arrangement. [270 The philosophic critics of all ages coincide with the ultimate judgment of all countries, in equally denying the praises of a just poem, on the one hand, to a series of striking lines or distichs, each of which absorbing the whole attention of the reader to itself, disjoins it from its context, and makes it a separate whole, instead of a harmonizing part; and on [280 the other hand, to an unsustained composition, from which the reader collects rapidly the general result unattracted by the component parts. The reader should be carried forward, not merely or chiefly by the mechanical impulse of curiosity, or by a restless desire to arrive at the final solution; but by the pleasurable activity of mind excited by the attractions of the journey itself. Like the motion of a [290] serpent, which the Egyptians made the emblem of intellectual power; or like the path of sound through the air, at every step he pauses and half recedes, and from the retrogressive movement collects the force which again carries him onward. Præcipitandus est liber spiritus, says Petronius Arbiter most happily. The epithet, liber, here balances the preceding verb: and it is not easy to conceive [300] more meaning condensed in fewer words.

But if this should be admitted as a satisfactory character of a poem, we have still to seek for a definition of poetry. The writings of Plato, and Bishop Taylor, and the Theoria Sacra of Burnet, furnish undeniable proofs that poetry of the highest kind may exist without meter, and even without the contra-distinguishing objects of a poem. The first chap- [310] ter of Isaiah (indeed a very large proportion of the whole book) is poetry in the most emphatic sense; yet it would be not less irrational than strange to assert, that pleasure, and not truth, was the immediate object of the prophet. In short, whatever specific import we attach to the word poetry, there will be found involved in it, as a necessary consequence, that a poem of any length neither can be, [320] nor ought to be, all poetry. Yet if a harmonious whole is to be produced, the remaining parts must be preserved in keeping with the poetry; and this can be no otherwise effected than by such a studied selection and artificial arrangement as will partake of one, though not a peculiar property of poetry. And this again can be no other than the property of exciting a more continuous and equal atten- [330] tion than the language of prose aims at, whether colloquial or written. . . .

What is poetry? is so nearly the same question with, what is a poet? that the answer to the one is involved in the solution of the other. For it is a distinction resulting from the poetic genius itself, which sustains and modifies the images, thoughts, and emotions of the poet's own mind. The poet, described in [340] ideal perfection, brings the whole soul of man into activity, with the subordination of its faculties to each other, according to their relative worth and dignity. He diffuses a tone and spirit of unity, that blends, and (as it were) fuses, each into each, by that synthetic and magical power, to which we have exclusively appropriated the name of imagination. This power, first put [350] in action by the will and understanding, and retained under their irremissive, though gentle and unnoticed, control (laxis effertur habenis), reveals itself in the balance or reconciliation of opposite or discordant qualities: of sameness, with difference; of the general, with the concrete; the idea, with the image; the individual, with the representative; the sense of novelty and freshness, with [360] old and familiar objects; a more than usual state of emotion, with more than usual order; judgment ever awake and steady self-possession with enthusiasm and feeling profound or vehement; and while it blends and harmonizes the natural and the artificial, still subordinates art to nature; the manner to the matter; and our admiration of the poet to our sympathy with the poetry. "Doubt- [370] less," as Sir John Davies observes of the soul (and his words may with slight alteration be applied, and even more appropriately, to the poetic imagination),—

"Doubtless this could not be, but that she turns

Bodies to spirit by sublimation strange,
As fire converts to fire the things it burns,
As we our food into our nature change.

"From their gross matter she abstracts their forms,

And draws a kind of quintessence from things; [380]

Which to her proper nature she transforms
To bear them light on her celestial wings.

"Thus does she, when from individual states

She doth abstract the universal kinds;

Which then re-clothed in divers names and fates Steal access through our senses to our minds."

Finally, good sense is the body of poetic genius, fancy its drapery, motion its life, and imagination the soul that is everywhere, and in each, and forms all into [390
one graceful and intelligent whole.

ROBERT SOUTHEY (1774-1843)

THE INCHCAPE ROCK

No stir in the air, no stir in the sea,
The ship was still as she could be,
Her sails from heaven received no motion,
Her keel was steady in the ocean.

Without either sign or sound of their shock⁵
The waves flowed over the Inchcape Rock;
So little they rose, so little they fell,
They did not move the Inchcape Bell.

The Abbot of Aberbrothok
Had placed that bell on the Inchcape
Rock;¹⁰
On a buoy in the storm it floated and swung,
And over the waves its warning rung.

When the Rock was hid by the surge's swell,
The mariners heard the warning bell;
And then they knew the perilous Rock,¹⁵
And blessed the Abbot of Aberbrothok.

The sun in heaven was shining gay,
All things were joyful on that day;
The sea-birds screamed as they wheeled
round,
And there was joyaunce in their sound.²⁰

The buoy of the Inchcape Bell was seen
A darker speck on the ocean green;
Sir Ralph the Rover walked his deck,
And he fixed his eye on the darker speck.

He felt the cheering power of spring,²⁵
It made him whistle, it made him sing;
His heart was mirthful to excess,
But the Rover's mirth was wickedness.

His eye was on the Inchcape float;
Quoth he, "My men, put out the boat,³⁰
And row me to the Inchcape Rock, And I'll plague the Abbot of Aberbrothok."

The boat is lowered, the boatmen row,
And to the Inchcape Rock they go;
Sir Ralph bent over from the boat,³⁵
And he cut the bell from the Inchcape float.

Down sunk the bell with a gurgling sound,
The bubbles rose and burst around,
Quoth Sir Ralph, "The next who comes to the rock
Won't bless the Abbot of Aberbrothok."⁴⁰

Sir Ralph the Rover sailed away,
He scoured the seas for many a day;
And now grown rich with plundered store
He steers his course for Scotland's shore.

So thick a haze o'erspreads the sky⁴⁵
They cannot see the sun on high;
The wind hath blown a gale all day,
At evening it hath died away.

On deck the Rover takes his stand,
So dark it is they see no land.⁵⁰
Quoth Sir Ralph, "It will be lighter soon,
For there is the dawn of the rising moon."

"Canst hear," said one, "the breakers
roar?
For methinks we should be near the
shore."

"Now where we are I cannot tell,⁵⁵
But I wish I could hear the Inchcape Bell."

They hear no sound, the swell is strong;
Though the wind hath fallen they drift
along,
Till the vessel strikes with a shivering
shock,—

"Oh Christ! it is the Inchcape Rock!"⁶⁰

Sir Ralph the Rover tore his hair;
He cursed himself in his despair;
The waves rush in on every side,
The ship is sinking beneath the tide.

But even in his dying fear⁶⁵
One dreadful sound could the Rover hear,
A sound as if with the Inchcape Bell
The Devil below was ringing his knell.

MY DAYS AMONG THE DEAD ARE PASSED

My days among the Dead are passed;
 Around me I behold,
 Where'er these casual eyes are cast,
 The mighty minds of old;
 My never-failing friends are they,
 With whom I converse day by day. 5

With them I take delight in weal,
 And seek relief in woe;
 And while I understand and feel
 How much to them I owe, 10
 My cheeks have often been bedewed
 With tears of thoughtful gratitude.

My thoughts are with the Dead; with
 them
 I live in long-past years,
 Their virtues love, their faults condemn, 15
 Partake their hopes and fears,
 And from their lessons seek and find Instruction with an humble mind.

My hopes are with the Dead; anon
 My place with them will be, 20
 And I with them will travel on Through all futurity;
 Yet leaving here a name, I trust,
 That will not perish in the dust.

SIR WALTER SCOTT (1771-1832)

From MARMION, CANTO V

LOCHINVAR

O, young Lochinvar is come out of the
 west,
 Through all the wide Border his steed was the best;
 And, save his good broadsword, he weapons had none,
 He rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone.
 So faithful in love, and so dauntless in weal, 5
 There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

He stayed not for brake, and he stopped
 not for stone,
 He swam the Eske River where ford there was none;

But ere he alighted at Netherby gate,
 The bride had consented, the gallant came
 late; 10
 For a laggard in love, and a dastard in
 war,
 Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Loch-invar.

So boldly he entered the Netherby Hall, Among bridesmen, and kinsmen, and brothers, and all.
 Then spoke the bride's father, his hand
 on his sword 15 (For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word),
 "O, come ye in peace here, or come ye in
 war,
 Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord
 Lochinvar?"

"I long wooed your daughter, my suit you
 denied;—
 Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide,— 20
 And now I am come, with this lost love of
 mine,
 To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
 There are maidens in Scotland more lovely by far,
 That would gladly be bride to the young
 Lochinvar."

The bride kissed the goblet; the knight took it up, 25
 He quaffed off the wine, and he threw down the cup.
 She looked down to blush, and she looked up to sigh,
 With a smile on her lips, and a tear in her
 eye.
 He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar,—
 "Now tread we a measure," said young
 Lochinvar. 30

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
 That never a hall such a galliard¹ did
 grace;
 While her mother did fret, and her father
 did fume,
 And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet and plume;

¹ lively dance.

And the bridemaids whispered, "'Twere better by far 35
To have matched our fair cousin with young Lochinvar."

One touch to her hand, and one word in
her ear,
When they reached the hall-door, and the charger stood near;
So light to the croupe the fair lady he swung,
So light to the saddle before her he sprung,
"She is won! we are gone! over bank, bush, and scaur;¹ 41
They'll have fleet steeds that follow," quoth young Lochinvar.

There was mounting 'mong Grames of the Netherby clan;
Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran:
There was racing and chasing on Cannobie Lee, 45
But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see.
So daring in love, and so dauntless in
war,
Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochinvar?

From THE LADY OF THE LAKE

SOLDIER, REST!

Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking;
Dream of battled fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking.
In our isle's enchanted hall, 5
Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,
Fairy strains of music fall,
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Dream of fighting fields no more; 10
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking.

No rude sound shall reach thine ear,
Armor's clang, or war-steed champing,
Trump nor pibroch summon here 15
Mustering clan or squadron tramping.

¹ cliff.

Yet the lark's shrill fife may come
At the daybreak from the fallow,
And the bittorn sound his drum,
Booming from the sedgy shallow. 20
Ruder sounds shall none be near,
Guards nor warders challenge here,
Here's no war-steed's neigh and champ-
ing,
Shouting clans or squadrons stamping.
Huntsman, rest! thy chase is done; 25
While our slumbrous spells assail ye,
Dream not, with the rising sun,
Bugles here shall sound reveillé.
Sleep! the deer is in his den;
Sleep! thy hounds are by thee lying: 30
Sleep! nor dream in yonder glen
How thy gallant steed lay dying.
Huntsman, rest! thy chase is done;
Think not of the rising sun,
For at dawning to assail ye 35
Here no bugles sound reveillé.

BOAT SONG

Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances!
Honored and blessed be the ever-green
Pine!
Long may the tree, in his banner that glances,
Flourish, the shelter and grace of our
line!
Heaven send it happy dew, 5
Earth lend it sap anew,
Gayly to burgeon, and broadly to grow,
While every Highland glen Sends back our shout again,
Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe! 10
Ours is no sapling, chance-sown by the fountain,
Blooming at Beltane, in winter to fade;
When the whirlwind has stripped every leaf on the mountain,
The more shall Clan-Alpine exult in her
shade.
Moored in the rifted rock, 15
Proof to the tempest's shock,
Firmer he roots him the ruder it blow;
Menteith and Breadalbane, then,
Echo his praise again,
Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe! 20

Proudly our pibroch has thrilled in Glen Fruin,
 And Bannochar's groans to our slogan
 replied;
 Glen Luss and Ross-dhu, they are smoking
 in ruin,
 And the best of Loch Lomond lie dead
 on her side.
 Widow and Saxon maid 25
 Long shall lament our raid, Think of Clan-Alpine with fear and with
 woe;
 Lennox and Leven-glen Shake when they hear again,
 Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe! 30

Row, vassals, row, for the pride of the Highlands!
 Stretch to your oars for the ever-green
 Pine!
 O! that the rose-bud that graces yon islands
 Were wreathed in a garland around him to twine!
 O that some seedling gem, 35
 Worthy such noble stem, Honored and blessed in their shadow might grow!
 Loud should Clan-Alpine then Ring from her deepmost glen,
 Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe! 40

CORONACH

He is gone on the mountain,
 He is lost to the forest,
 Like a summer-dried fountain,
 When our need was the sorest.
 The font, reappearing, 5
 From the rain-drops shall borrow,
 But to us comes no cheering,
 To Duncan no morrow!

The hand of the reaper
 Takes the ears that are hoary, 10
 But the voice of the weeper
 Wails manhood in glory.
 The autumn winds rushing
 Waft the leaves that are searest,
 But our flower was in flushing, 15
 When blighting was nearest.

Fleet foot on the correi,
 Sage counsel in cumber,
 Red hand in the foray,
 How sound is thy slumber! 20
 Like the dew on the mountain,
 Like the foam on the river,
 Like the bubble on the fountain,
 Thou art gone, and for ever!

✓ HARP OF THE NORTH

Harp of the North, farewell! The hills grow dark,
 On purple peaks a deeper shade descend-
 ing;
 In twilight copse the glow-worm lights her spark,
 The deer, half-seen, are to the covert
 wending.
 Resume thy wizard elm! the fountain lending, 5
 And the wild breeze, thy wilder minstrelsy;
 Thy numbers sweet with nature's vespers blending,
 With distant echo from the fold and lea,
 And herd-boy's evening pipe, and hum of housing bee.

Yet once again farewell, thou Minstrel harp! 10
 Yet once again forgive my feeble sway,
 And little rack I of the censure sharp
 May idly cavil at an idle lay.
 Much have I owed thy strains on life's long way,
 Through secret woes the world has never known, 15
 When on the weary night dawned wearier
 day,
 And bitterer was the grief devoured
 alone.
 That I o'erlive such woes, Enchantress!
 is thine own.

Hark! as my lingering footsteps slow retire,
 Some Spirit of the Air has waked thy string! 20
 'Tis now a seraph bold, with touch of fire,
 'Tis now the brush of Fairy's frolic
 wing.

Receding now, the dying numbers ring Fainter and fainter down the rugged
 dell,
 And now the mountain breezes scarcely
 bring 25
 A wandering witch-note of the distant spell—
 And now, 'tis silent all!—Enchantress, fare thee well!

JOCK OF HAZELDEAN

"Why weep ye by the tide, ladie?
 Why weep ye by the tide?
 I'll wed ye to my youngest son,
 And ye sall be his bride;
 And ye sall be his bride, ladie, 5
 Sae comely to be seen"—
 But aye she loot the tears down fa'
 For Jock of Hazeldean.

"Now let this wilfu' grief be done,
 And dry that cheek so pale, 10
 Young Frank is chief of Errington,
 And lord of Langley-dale;
 His step is first in peaceful ha',
 His sword in battle keen"—
 But aye she loot the tears down fa' 15
 For Jock of Hazeldean.

"A chain of gold ye sall not lack,
 Nor braid to bind your hair;
 Nor mettled hound, nor managed hawk,
 Nor palfrey fesh and fair; 20
 And you, the foremost o' them a',
 Shall ride our forest queen"—
 But aye she loot the tears down fa'
 For Jock of Hazeldean.

The kirk was decked at morning-tide, 25
 The tapers glimmered fair;
 The priest and bridegroom wait the bride,
 And dame and knight are there.
 They sought her baith by bower and ha';
 The lady was not seen! 30
 She's o'er the Border, and awa' Wi' Jock of Hazeldean.

BRIGNALL BANKS

Oh, Brignall banks are wild and fair,
 And Greta woods are green,
 And you may gather garlands there
 Would grace a summer queen.

And as I rode by Dalton Hall, 5
 Beneath the turrets high,
 A maiden on the castle wall
 Was singing merrily:—
 "Oh, Brignall banks are fesh and fair,
 And Greta woods are green; 10
 I'd rather rove with Edmund there,
 Than reign our English queen."

"If, maiden, thou wouldst wend with me,
 To leave both tower and town,
 Thou first must guess what life lead we 15
 That dwell by dale and down.
 And if thou canst that riddle read,
 As read full well you may,
 Then to the greenwood shalt thou speed,
 As blithe as Queen of May."— 20
 Yet sung she: "Brignall banks are fair,
 And Greta woods are green;
 I'd rather rove with Edmund there,
 Than reign our English queen.

"I read you by your bugle-horn, 25
 And by your palfrey good,
 I read you for a ranger sworn
 To keep the King's greenwood."—
 "A ranger, lady, winds his horn,
 And 'tis at peep of light: 30
 His blast is heard at merry morn,
 And mine at dead of night."—
 Yet sung she: "Brignall banks are fair,
 And Greta woods are gay;
 I would I were with Edmund there, 35
 To reign his Queen of May.

"With burnished brand and musketoon
 So gallantly you come,
 I read you for a bold dragoon
 That lists the tuck of drum."— 40
 "I list no more the tuck of drum,
 No more the trumpet hear,
 But when the beetle sounds his hum,
 My comrades take the spear.
 And oh, though Brignall banks be fair, 45
 And Greta woods be gay,
 Yet mickle must the maiden dare
 Would reign my Queen of May!

"Maiden, a nameless life I lead,
 A nameless death I'll die: 50
 The fiend, whose lantern lights the mead,
 Were better mate than I!
 And when I'm with my comrades met,
 Beneath the greenwood bough,

What once we were we all forget, 55
 Nor think what we are now.
 Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
 And Greta woods are green,
 And you may gather garlands there, -
 Would grace a summer queen." 60

COUNTY GUY

Ah! County Guy, the hour is nigh,
 The sun has left the lea,
 The orange flower perfumes the bower,
 The breeze is on the sea.
 The lark, his lay who thrilled all day, 5
 Sits hushed his partner nigh:
 Breeze, bird, and flower confess the hour,
 But where is County Guy?

The village maid steals through the shade
 Her shepherd's suit to hear; 10
 To beauty shy by lattice high,
 Sings high-born Cavalier.
 The star of Love, all stars above,
 Now reigns o'er earth and sky;
 And high and low the influence know— 15
 But where is County Guy?

BONNY DUNDEE

To the Lords of Convention 't was Claver'se who spoke,
 "Ere the King's crown shall fall there are crowns to be broke;
 So let each Cavalier who loves honor and
 me,
 Come follow the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
 Come fill up my cup, come fill up my
 can, 5
 Come saddle your horses and call up your men;
 Come open the West Port and let me
 gang free,
 And it's room for the bonnets of Bonny Dundee!"

Dundee he is mounted, he rides up the street,
 The bells are rung backward, the drums
 they are beat; 10
 But the provost, douce¹ man, said, "Just e'en let him be,
 The Gude Town is weel quit of that Deil of Dundee."
 Come fill up my cup, etc.

¹ sedate.

As he rode down the sanctified bends of the Bow,
 Ilk carline was flyting and shaking her pow;
 But the young plants of grace they looked couthie and slee, 15
 Thinking, luck to thy bonnet, thou
 Bonny Dundee!
 Come fill up my cup, etc.

With sour-featured Whigs the Grass-market was crammed
 As if half the West had set tryst to be hanged;
 There was spite in each look, there was fear in each e'e,
 As they watched for the bonnets of Bonny
 Dundee. 20
 Come fill up my cup, etc.

These cowls of Kilmarnock had spits and had spears,
 And lang-hafted gullies to kill Cavaliers;
 But they shrunk to close-heads and the causeway was free,
 At the toss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
 Come fill up my cup, etc.

He spurred to the foot of the proud Castle rock, 25
 And with the gay Gordon he gallantly
 spoke;
 "Let Mons Meg and her marrows² speak
 twa words or three,
 For the love of the bonnet of Bonny
 Dundee."
 Come fill up my cup, etc.

The Gordon demands of him which way he goes—
 "Where'er shall direct me the shade of Montrose! 30
 Your Grace in short space shall hear tidings of me,
 Or that low lies the bonnet of Bonny
 Dundee.
 Come fill up my cup, etc.

"There are hills beyond Pentland and lands beyond Forth,
 If there's lords in the Lowlands, there's chiefs in the North;

² companions.

There are wild Duniewassals three thousand times three, 35
Will cry hoigh! for the bonnet of Bonny
Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

"There's brass on the target of barked¹
bull-hide;
There's steel in the scabbard that dangles beside;
The brass shall be burnished, the steel shall flash free,
At a toss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

"Away to the hills, to the caves, to the
rocks— 41
Ere I own an usurer, I'll couch with the fox;
And tremble, false Whigs, in the midst of your glee,
You have not seen the last of my bonnet
and me!"
Come fill up my cup, etc.

He waved his proud hand and the trumpets were blown, 45
The kettle-drums clashed and the horsemen rode on,
Till on Ravelston's cliffs and on Cler-miston's lea
Died away the wild war-notes of Bonny
Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, come fill up my
can,
Come saddle the horses and call up
the men, 50
Come open your gates and let me gae
free,
For it's up with the bonnets of Bonny
Dundee!

Pale grew thy cheek and cold,
Colder thy kiss;
Truly that hour foretold
Sorrow to this.

The dew of the morning
Sunk chill on my brow— 10
It felt like the warning
Of what I feel now.
Thy vows are all broken,
And light is thy fame:
I hear thy name spoken, 15
And share in its shame.

They name thee before me,
A knell to mine ear;
A shudder comes o'er me—
Why wert thou so dear? 20
They know not I knew thee,
Who knew thee too well:—
Long, long shall I rue thee,
Too deeply to tell.

In secret we met— 25
In silence I grieve,
That thy heart could forget,
Thy spirit deceive.
If I should meet thee
After long years, 30
How should I greet thee?—
With silence and tears.

KNOW YE THE LAND?

Know ye the land where the cypress and myrtle
Are emblems of deeds that are done in their clime?
Where the rage of the vulture, the love of the turtle,
Now melt into sorrow, now madden to crime?
Know ye the land of the cedar and vine, 5
Where the flowers ever blossom, the beams ever shine;
Where the light wings of Zephyr, oppressed with perfume,
Wax faint o'er the gardens of Gál in her
bloom;
Where the citron and olive are fairest of fruit,
And the voice of the nightingale never is mute; 10

Where the tints of the earth, and the hues of the sky,
 In color though varied, in beauty may vie,
 And the purple of ocean is deepest in dye;
 Where the virgins are soft as the roses they twine,
 And all, save the spirit of man, is divine? 15
 'Tis the clime of the East; 'tis the land of the Sun—
 Can he smile on such deeds as his children
 have done?
 Oh! wild as the accents of lovers' farewell
 Are the hearts which they bear, and the tales which they tell.

SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY

She walks in beauty, like the night
 Of cloudless climes and starry skies;
 And all that's best of dark and bright
 Meet in her aspect and her eyes:
 Thus mellowed to that tender light 5
 Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
 Had half impaired the nameless grace
 Which waves in every raven tress,
 Or softly lightens o'er her face; 10
 Where thoughts serenely sweet express How pure, how dear, their dwelling-
 place.

And on that cheek, and o'er that brow,
 So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
 The smiles that win, the tints that glow, 15
 But tell of days in goodness spent,
 A mind at peace with all below,
 A heart whose love is innocent!

THE DESTRUCTION OF SENNACHERIB

The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold,
 And his cohorts were gleaming in purple
 and gold;
 And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
 When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee.

Like the leaves of the forest when Summer is green, 5
 That host with their banners at sunset were seen:
 Like the leaves of the forest when Autumn
 hath blown,
 That host on the morrow lay withered and strown.

For the Angel of Death spread his wings
 on the blast,
 And breathed in the face of the foe as he passed; 10
 And the eyes of the sleepers waxed deadly and chill,
 And their hearts but once heaved, and for ever grew still!

And there lay the steed with his nostril all
 wide,
 But through it there rolled not the breath
 of his pride;
 And the foam of his gasping lay white on the turf, 15
 And cold as the spray of the rock-beating surf.

And there lay the rider distorted and pale,
 With the dew on his brow, and the rust on his mail:
 And the tents were all silent, the banners
 alone,
 The lances unlifted, the trumpet un-
 blown. 20.

And the widows of Ashur are loud in their
 wail,
 And the idols are broke in the temple of Baal;
 And the might of the Gentile, unsmeared by
 the sword,
 Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord!

STANZAS FOR MUSIC

There be none of Beauty's daughters
 With a magic like thee;
 And like music on the waters
 Is thy sweet voice to me:
 When, as if its sound were causing
 The charmed ocean's pausing,
 The waves lie still and gleaming,
 And the lulled winds seem dreaming.

And the midnight moon is weaving
 Her bright chain o'er the deep; 10
 Whose breast is gently heaving,
 As an infant's asleep:
 So the spirit bows before thee,
 To listen and adore thee;
 With a full but soft emotion, 15
 Like the swell of Summer's ocean.

SO, WE'LL GO NO MORE A-ROVING

So, we'll go no more a-roving
 So late into the night,
 Though the heart be still as loving,
 And the moon be still as bright.
 For the sword outwears its sheath, 5
 And the soul wears out the breast,
 And the heart must pause to breathe,
 And love itself have rest.
 Though the night was made for loving,
 And the day returns too soon, 10
 Yet we'll go no more a-roving
 By the light of the moon.

MY BOAT IS ON THE SHORE

My boat is on the shore,
 And my bark is on the sea;
 But, before I go, Tom Moore,
 Here's a double health to thee!
 Here's a sigh to those who love me, 5
 And a smile to those who hate;
 And, whatever sky's above me,
 Here's a heart for every fate.
 Though the ocean roar around me,
 Yet it still shall bear me on; 10
 Though a desert should surround me,
 It hath springs that may be won.
 Were't the last drop in the well,
 As I gasped upon the brink,
 Ere my fainting spirit fell, 15
 'Tis to thee that I would drink.
 With that water, as this wine,
 The libation I would pour
 Should be—peace with thine and mine,
 And a health to thee, Tom Moore. 20

SONNET ON CHILLON

Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind!
 Brightest in dungeons, Liberty! thou art,
 For there thy habitation is the heart—
 The heart which love of thee alone can
 bind;
 And when thy sons to fetters are consigned— 5
 To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless
 gloom,
 Their country conquers with their martyrdom,
 And Freedom's fame finds wings on every
 wind.
 Chillon! thy prison is a holy place,
 And thy sad steps an altar—for 't was 10
 trod,
 Until his very steps have left a trace
 Worn, as if thy cold pavement were a sod,
 By Bonnivard! May none those marks efface!
 For they appeal from tyranny to God.

THE PRISONER OF CHILLON

My hair is gray, but not with years;
 Nor grew it white
 In a single night,
 As men's have grown from sudden fears:
 My limbs are bowed, though not with
 toil,
 But rusted with a vile repose, 6
 For they have been a dungeon's spoil,
 And mine has been the fate of those
 To whom the goodly earth and air
 Are banned, and barred—forbidden fare; 10
 But this was for my father's faith
 I suffered chains and courted death:
 That father perished at the stake
 For tenets he would not forsake;
 And for the same his lineal race 15
 In darkness found a dwelling-place.
 We were seven—who now are one;
 Six in youth, and one in age,
 Finished as they had begun,
 Proud of Persecution's rage; 20
 One in fire, and two in field,
 Their belief with blood have sealed
 Dying as their father died,
 For the God their foes denied;—
 Three were in a dungeon cast, 25
 Of whom this wreck is left the last.

There are seven pillars of Gothic mould,
 In Chillon's dungeons deep and old;
 There are seven columns, massy and gray,
 Dim with a dull imprisoned ray, 30
 A sunbeam which hath lost its way,
 And through the crevice and the cleft
 Of the thick wall is fallen and left:
 Creeping o'er the floor so damp,
 Like a marsh's meteor lamp: 35
 And in each pillar there is a ring,
 And in each ring there is a chain;
 That iron is a cankering thing,
 For in these limbs its teeth remain,
 With marks that will not wear away, 40
 Till I have done with this new day,
 Which now is painful to these eyes,
 Which have not seen the sun so rise
 For years—I cannot count them o'er;
 I lost their long and heavy score 45
 When my last brother drooped and died,
 And I lay living by his side.

They chained us each to a column stone,
 And we were three—yet each alone;
 We could not move a single pace, 50
 We could not see each other's face,
 But with that pale and livid light
 That made us strangers in our sight:
 And thus together—yet apart,
 Fettered in hand, but joined in heart, 55
 'Twas still some solace in the dearth
 Of the pure elements of earth,
 To hearken to each other's speech,
 And each turn comforter to each,
 With some new hope, or legend old, 60
 Or song heroically bold;
 But even these at length grew cold.
 Our voices took a dreary tone,
 An echo of the dungeon-stone,
 A grating sound—not full and free 65
 As they of yore were wont to be:
 It might be fancy—but to me
 They never sounded like our own.

I was the eldest of the three;
 And to uphold and cheer the rest 70
 I ought to do—and did—my best,
 And each did well in his degree.
 The youngest, whom my father loved,
 Because our mother's brow was given
 To him—with eyes as blue as heaven,— 75
 For him my soul was sorely moved.
 And truly might it be distressed
 To see such bird in such a nest;

For he was beautiful as day—
 (When day was beautiful to me 80
 As to young eagles, being free)—
 A polar day, which will not see
 A sunset till its summer's gone,
 Its sleepless summer of long light,
 The snow-clad offspring of the sun: 85
 And thus he was as pure and bright,
 And in his natural spirit gay,
 With tears for naught but others' ills,
 And then they flowed like mountain rills,
 Unless he could assuage the woe 90
 Which he abhorred to view below.

The other was as pure of mind,
 But formed to combat with his kind;
 Strong in his frame, and of a mood
 Which 'gainst the world in war had stood,
 And perished in the foremost rank 96
 With joy—but not in chains to pine:
 His spirit withered with their clank,
 I saw it silently decline—
 And so perchance in sooth did mine; 100
 But yet I forced it on to cheer
 Those relics of a home so dear.
 He was a hunter of the hills,
 Had followed there the deer and wolf;
 To him this dungeon was a gulf, 105
 And fettered feet the worst of ills.

Lake Lemán lies by Chillon's walls:
 A thousand feet in depth below
 Its massy waters meet and flow;
 Thus much the fathom line was sent 110
 From Chillon's snow-white battlement,
 Which round about the wave enthralls:
 A double dungeon wall and wave
 Have made—and like a living grave.
 Below the surface of the lake 115
 The dark vault lies wherein we lay;
 We heard it ripple night and day;
 Sounding o'er our heads it knocked;
 And I have felt the winter's spray Wash through the bars when winds were
 high 120

And wanton in the happy sky;
 And then the very rock hath rocked,
 And I have felt it shake, unshocked,
 Because I could have smiled to see
 The death that would have set me free. 125

I said my nearer brother pined,
 I said his mighty heart declined,
 He loathed and put away his food:
 It was not that 'twas coarse and rude

For we were used to hunters' fare, 130
 And for the like had little care:
 The milk drawn from the mountain goat
 Was changed for water from the moat;
 Our bread was such as captives' tears
 Have moistened many a thousand years,
 Since man first pent his fellow-men 136
 Like brutes within an iron den;
 But what were these to us or him?
 These wasted not his heart or limb;
 My brother's soul was of that mould 140
 Which in a palace had grown cold,
 Had his free-breathing been denied
 The range of the steep mountain's side.
 But why delay the truth?—he died.
 I saw, and could not hold his head, 145
 Nor reach his dying hand—nor dead—
 Though hard I strove, but strove in
 vain,
 To rend and gnash my bonds in twain.
 He died—and they unlocked his chain
 And scooped for him a shallow grave 150
 Even from the cold earth of our cave.
 I begged them, as a boon, to lay
 His corse in dust whereon the day
 Might shine—it was a foolish thought,
 But then within my brain it wrought, 155
 That even in death his free-born breast
 In such a dungeon could not rest.
 I might have spared my idle prayer—
 They coldly laughed—and laid him there:
 The flat and turfless earth above 160
 The being we so much did love;
 His empty chain above it leant,
 Such murder's fitting monument!

But he, the favorite and the flower,
 Most cherished since his natal hour, 165
 His mother's image in fair face,
 The infant love of all his race,
 His martyred father's dearest thought,
 My latest care, for whom I sought
 To hoard my life, that his might be 170
 Less wretched now, and one day free;
 He, too, who yet had held untired
 A spirit natural or inspired—
 He, too, was struck, and day by day
 Was withered on the stalk away. 175
 O God! it is a fearful thing
 To see the human soul take wing
 In any shape, in any mood:—
 I've seen it rushing forth in blood,
 I've seen it on the breaking ocean 180
 Strive with a swollen convulsive motion,

I've seen the sick and ghastly bed
 Of Sin delirious with its dread:
 But these were horrors—this was woe
 Unmixed with such,—but sure and slow.
 He faded, and so calm and meek, 186
 So softly worn, so sweetly weak,
 So tearless, yet so tender,—kind,
 And grieved for those he left behind;
 With all the while a cheek whose bloom
 Was as a mockery of the tomb, 191
 Whose tints as gently sunk away
 As a departing rainbow's ray—
 An eye of most transparent light,
 That almost made the dungeon bright, 195
 And not a word of murmur—not
 A groan o'er his untimely lot!
 A little talk of better days,
 A little hope my own to raise,
 For I was sunk in silence—lost 200
 In this last loss, of all the most:
 And then the sighs he would suppress
 Of fainting nature's feebleness,
 More slowly drawn, grew less and less.
 I listened, but I could not hear— 205
 I called, for I was wild with fear;
 I knew 'twas hopeless, but my dread
 Would not be thus admonished;
 I called, and thought I heard a sound—
 I burst my chain with one strong bound,
 And rushed to him;—I found him not; 211
 I only stirred in this black spot,
 I only lived—I only drew
 The accursed breath of dungeon-dew;
 The last,—the sole,—the dearest link 215
 Between me and the eternal brink
 Which bound me to my failing race,
 Was broken in this fatal place.
 One on the earth, and one beneath—
 My brothers—both had ceased to breathe:
 I took that hand which lay so still; 221
 Alas, my own was full as chill;
 I had not strength to stir or strive,
 But felt that I was still alive—
 A frantic feeling, when we know 225
 That what we love shall ne'er be so.
 I know not why
 I could not die;
 I had no earthly hope—but faith,
 And that forbade a selfish death. 230

What next befell me then and there
 I know not well—I never knew:—
 First came the loss of light, and air,
 And then of darkness too:

I had no thought, no feeling—none— 235
 Among the stones I stood a stone,
 And was, scarce conscious what I wist,
 As shrubless crags within the mist;
 For all was blank, and bleak, and gray,
 It was not night—it was not day; 240
 It was not even the dungeon-light,
 So hateful to my heavy sight,
 But vacancy absorbing space,
 And fixedness, without a place:
 There were no stars,—no earth,—no
 time,— 245
 No check,—no change,—no good,—no
 crime,—
 But silence, and a stirless breath
 Which neither was of life nor death;
 A sea of stagnant idleness,
 Blind, boundless, mute, and motionless! 250

A light broke in upon my brain—
 It was the carol of a bird;
 It ceased, and then it came again.
 The sweetest song ear ever heard;
 And mine was thankful, till my eyes 255
 Ran over with the glad surprise.
 And they that moment could not see
 I was the mate of misery;
 But then by dull degrees came back
 My senses to their wonted track, 260
 I saw the dungeon walls and floor
 Close slowly round me as before,
 I saw the glimmer of the sun
 Creeping as it before had done,
 But through the crevice where it came 265
 That bird was perched, as fond and tame,
 And tamer than upon the tree;
 A lovely bird, with azure wings,
 And song that said a thousand things,
 And seemed to say them all for me! 270

I never saw its like before.
 I ne'er shall see its likeness more!
 It seemed, like me, to want a mate,
 But was not half so desolate,
 And it was come to love me when 275
 None lived to love me so again,
 And cheering from my dungeon's brink,
 Had brought me back to feel and think.
 I know not if it late were free,
 Or broke its cage to perch on mine, 280
 But knowing well captivity,
 Sweet bird, I could not wish for thine!
 Or if it were, in wingèd guise,
 A visitant from Paradise;

For—Heaven forgive that thought! the
 while 285
 Which made me both to weep and smile;
 I sometimes deemed that it might be
 My brother's soul come down to me;
 But then at last away it flew,
 And then 'twas mortal—well I knew, 290
 For he would never thus have flown,
 And left me twice so doubly lone—
 Lone,—as the corse within its shroud;
 Lone,—as a solitary cloud,
 A single cloud on a sunny day, 295
 While all the rest of heaven is clear,
 A frown upon the atmosphere,
 That hath no business to appear
 When skies are blue and earth is gay.

A kind of change came in my fate, 300
 My keepers grew compassionate:
 I know not what had made them so,
 They were inured to sights of woe;
 But so it was—my broken chain
 With links unfastened did remain, 305
 And it was liberty to stride
 Along my cell from side to side,
 And up and down, and then athwart,
 And tread it over every part;
 And round the pillars one by one, 310
 Returning where my walk begun,
 Avoiding only, as I trod,
 My brothers' graves without a sod;
 For if I thought with heedless tread
 My step profaned their lowly bed, 315
 My breath came gaspingly and thick,
 And my crushed heart fell blind and sick.

I made a footing in the wall,
 It was not therefrom to escape,
 For I had buried one and all 320
 Who loved me in a human shape;
 And the whole earth would henceforth be
 A wider prison unto me:
 No child—no sire—no kin had I,
 No partner in my misery; 325
 I thought of this, and I was glad,
 For thought of them had made me mad;
 But I was curious to ascend
 To my barred windows, and to bend
 Once more, upon the mountains high, 330
 The quiet of a loving eye.
 I saw them—and they were the same,
 They were not changed like me in frame;
 I saw their thousand years of snow
 On high—their wide long lake below, 335
 And the blue Rhone in fullest flow;

I heard the torrents leap and gush
O'er channeled rock and broken bush;
I saw the white-walled distant town,
And whiter sails go skimming down; 340
And then there was a little isle,
Which in my very face did smile,

The only one in view:

A small green isle, it seemed no more,
Scarce broader than my dungeon floor; 345
But in it there were three tall trees,
And o'er it blew the mountain breeze,
And by it there were waters flowing,
And on it there were young flowers grow-
ing,

Of gentle breath and hue. 350
The fish swam by the castle wall,
And they seemed joyous, each and all;
The eagle rode the rising blast,
Methought he never flew so fast
As then to me he seemed to fly, 355
And then new tears came in my eye,
And I felt troubled—and would fain
I had not left my recent chain;
And when I did descend again,
The darkness of my dim abode 360
Fell on me as a heavy load;
It was as is a new-dug grave,
Closing o'er one we sought to save.
And yet my glance, too much oppressed,
Had almost need of such a rest. 365

It might be months, or years, or days,
I kept no count—I took no note,
I had no hope my eyes to raise,
And clear them of their dreary mote;
At last men came to set me free, 370
I asked not why, and recked not where;
It was at length the same to me,
Fettered or fetterless to be,
I learned to love despair.
And thus, when they appeared at last, 375
And all my bonds aside were cast,
These heavy walls to me had grown
A hermitage—and all my own!
And half I felt as they were come
To tear me from a second home: 380
With spiders I had friendship made,
And watched them in their sullen trade,
Had seen the mice by moonlight play,
And why should I feel less than they?
We were all inmates of one place, 385
And I, the monarch of each race,
Had power to kill—yet, strange to tell!
In quiet we had learned to dwell—

My very chains and I grew friends,
So much a long communion tends 390
To make us what we are:—even I Regained my freedom with a sigh.

CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE

From CANTO III

WATERLOO

There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gathered
then 182
Her Beauty and her Chivalry, and
bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A thousand hearts beat happily; and
when 185
Music arose with its voluptuous swell, Soft eyes looked love to eyes which spake again,
And all went merry as a marriage bell;
But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell!

Did ye not hear it?—No; 'twas but the
wind, 190
Or the car rattling o'er the stony street;
On with the dance! let joy be unconfined;
No sleep till morn, when Youth and Pleasure meet
To chase the glowing Hours with flying feet.—
But hark! that heavy sound breaks in once more, 195
As if the clouds its echo would repeat;
And nearer, clearer, deadlier than before!
Arm! arm! it is!—it is!—the cannon's opening roar!

Within a windowed niche of that high
hall
Sate Brunswick's fated chieftain; he did
hear 200
That sound the first amidst the festival,
And caught its tone with Death's prophetic ear,
And when they smiled because he deemed it near,

His heart more truly knew that peal too well
Which stretched his father on a bloody bier, ²⁰⁵
And roused the vengeance blood alone could quell.
He rushed into the field, and, foremost fighting, fell.

Ah! then and there was hurrying to and
fro,
And gathering tears, and tremblings of
distress,
And cheeks all pale, which but an hour ago ²¹⁰
Blushed at the praise of their own loveliness;
And there were sudden partings, such as press
The life from out young hearts, and choking sighs
Which ne'er might be repeated: who could guess
If ever more should meet those mutual eyes, ²¹⁵
Since upon night so sweet such awful morn could rise!

And there was mounting in hot haste:
the steed,
The mustering squadron, and the clat-tering car,
Went pouring forward with impetuous
speed,
And swiftly forming in the ranks of war; ²²⁰
And the deep thunder peal on peal afar;
And near, the beat of the alarming drum
Roused up the soldier ere the morning
star;
While thronged the citizens with terror
dumb,
Or whispering with white lips—"The foe!
They come! they come!" ²²⁵

And wild and high the "Cameron's Gathering" rose,
The war-note of Lochiel, which Albyn's
hills
Have heard, and heard, too, have her Saxon foes;
How in the noon of night that pibroch thrills
Savage and shrill! But with the breath which fills ²³⁰

Their mountain pipe, so fill the mountaineers
With the fierce native daring which instils
The stirring memory of a thousand
years,
And Evan's, Donald's fame rings in each clansman's ears!

And Ardennes waves above them her green leaves, ²³⁵
Dewy with Nature's tear-drops, as they
pass,
Grieving, if aught inanimate e'er grieves,
Over the unreturning brave,—alas!
Ere evening to be trodden like the grass
Which now beneath them, but above shall grow ²⁴⁰
In its next verdure, when this fiery mass
Of living valor, rolling on the foe,
And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold and low.

Last noon beheld them full of lusty life,
Last eve in Beauty's circle proudly
gay,
The midnight brought the signal-sound of strife, ²⁴⁶
The morn the marshalling in arms—
the day
Battle's magnificently stern array!
The thunder-clouds close o'er it, which when rent
The earth is covered thick with other clay, ²⁵⁰
Which her own clay shall cover, heaped and pent,
Rider and horse—friend, foe,—in one red burial blent!

LAKE LEMAN

Lake Lemman woos me with its crystal
face,
The mirror where the stars and mountains view ⁶⁴⁵
The stillness of their aspect in each
trace
Its clear depth yields of their far height and hue;
There is too much of man here, to look
through
With a fit mind the might which I be-
hold;

But soon in me shall loneliness renew 650
Thoughts hid, but not less cherished than of old,
Ere mingling with the herd had penned me
in their fold.

To fly from, need not be to hate, man-
kind;
All are not fit with them to stir and toil,
Nor is it discontent to keep the mind 655
Deep in its fountain, lest it overboil
In the hot throng, where we become the spoil
Of our infection, till too late and long
We may deplore and struggle with the coil,
In wretched interchange of wrong for
wrong 660
'Midst a contentious world, striving where none are strong.

There, in a moment, we may plunge our
years
In fatal penitence, and in the blight
Of our own soul turn all our blood to
tears.
And color things to come with hues of
night: 665
The race of life becomes a hopeless
flight
To those that walk in darkness; on the
sea
The boldest steer but where their ports invite,
But there are wanderers o'er Eternity Whose bark drives on and on, and anchored ne'er shall be. 670

Is it not better, then, to be alone,
And love Earth only for its earthly sake?
By the blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone,
Or the pure bosom of its nursing lake,
Which feeds it as a mother who doth
make 675
A fair but froward infant her own care,
Kissing its cries away as these awake;—
Is it not better thus our lives to wear,
Than join the crushing crowd, doomed to inflict or bear?

I live not in myself, but I become 680
Portion of that around me: and to me,
High mountains are a feeling, but the hum
Of human cities torture; I can see

Nothing to loathe in Nature, save to be
A link reluctant in a fleshly chain, 685
Classed among creatures, when the soul
can flee,
And with the sky, the peak, the heaving plain
Of ocean, or the stars, mingle, and not in
vain.

And thus I am absorbed, and this is
life:
I look upon the peopled desert past, 690
As on a place of agony and strife,
Where, for some sin, to sorrow I was
cast,
To act and suffer, but remount at last
With a fresh pinion; which I feel to
spring,
Though young, yet waxing vigorous as the blast 695
Which it would cope with, on delighted
wing,
Spurning the clay-cold bonds which round
our being cling.

And when, at length, the mind shall be all free
From what it hates in this degraded
form,
Reft of its carnal life, save what shall
be 700
Existent happier in the fly and worm,—
When elements to elements conform,
And dust is as it should be, shall I
not Feel all I see, less dazzling, but more warm?
The bodiless thought? the Spirit of each spot? 705
Of which, even now, I share at times the immortal lot?

Are not the mountains, waves, and skies, a part
Of me and of my soul, as I of them?
Is not the love of these deep in my
heart
With a pure passion? should I not contemn 710
All objects, if compared with these? and stem
A tide of suffering rather than forego
Such feelings for the hard and worldly phlegm

Of those whose eyes are only turned
below,
Gazing upon the ground, with thoughts which dare not glow? 715

* * * * *

Clear, placid Leman! thy contrasted
lake, 797
With the wild world I dwelt in, is a
thing
Which warns me, with its stillness, to forsake
Earth's troubled waters for a purer
spring. 800
This quiet sail is as a noiseless wing
To waft me from distraction; once I loved Torn ocean's roar, but thy soft murmuring
Sounds sweet as if a sister's voice re-proved
That I with stern delights should e'er have been so moved. 805

It is the hush of night, and all between Thy margin and the mountains, dusk, yet clear,
Mellowed and mingling, yet distinctly
seen,
Save darkened Jura, whose capped heights appear Precipitously steep; and drawing near,
There breathes a living fragrance from
the shore, 811
Of flowers yet fresh with childhood; on
the ear
Drops the light drip of the suspended
oar,
Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night
carol more.

He is an evening reveller, who makes 815
His life an infancy, and sings his fill;
At intervals, some bird from out the brakes
Starts into voice a moment, then is still.
There seems a floating whisper on the
hill,
But that is fancy, for the starlight dews
All silently their tears of love instil, 821 Weeping themselves away, till they infuse Deep into Nature's breast the spirit of her hues.

Ye stars! which are the poetry of heaven!
If in your bright leaves we would read the fate 825
Of men and empires,—'tis to be forgiven,
That in our aspirations to be great,
Our destinies o'erleap their mortal
state,
And claim a kindred with you; for ye
are
A beauty and a mystery, and create 830
In us such love and reverence from afar,
That fortune, fame, power, life, have named themselves a star.

All heaven and earth are still—though not in sleep,
But breathless, as we grow when feeling
most;
And silent, as we stand in thoughts too
deep:— 835
All heaven and earth are still: from the high host
Of stars, to the lulled lake and mountain-coast,
All is concentrated in a life intense,
Where not a beam, nor air, nor leaf is
lost,
But hath a part of being, and a sense 840
Of that which is of all Creator and Defence.

Then stirs the feeling infinite, so felt
In solitude, where we are least alone;
A truth which through our being then doth melt,
And purifies from self: it is a tone, 845
The soul and source of music, which makes known Eternal harmony, and sheds a charm,
Like to the fabled Cytherea's zone,
Binding all things with beauty; 'twould disarm
The spectre Death, had he substantial power to harm. 850

Not vainly did the early Persian make
His altar the high places and the peak Of earth-o'ergazing mountains, and thus take
A fit and unvalled temple, there to seek
The Spirit, in whose honor shrines are weak, 855

Upreaded of human hands. Come, and compare
Columns and idol dwellings, Goth or Greek,
With Nature's realms of worship, earth
and air,
Nor fix on fond abodes to circumscribe thy prayer!

The sky is changed!—and such a change! O night, 860
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,
Yet lovely in your strength, as is the
light
Of a dark eye in woman! Far along,
From peak to peak, the rattling crags
among Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud, 865
But every mountain now hath found a
tongue,
And Jura answers, through her misty
shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud!

And this is in the night:—Most glorious
night! 869
Thou wert not sent for slumber! let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight,—
A portion of the tempest and of thee!
How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the
earth!
And now again 'tis black,—and now,
the glee 875
Of the loud hills shakes with its mountain-mirth,
As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's birth.

From CANTO IV

VENICE

- I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs;
A palace and a prison on each hand:
I saw from out the wave her structures
rise
As from the stroke of the enchanter's
wand:
A thousand years their cloudy wings expand 5

Around me, and a dying glory smiles
O'er the far times, when many a subject
land
Looked to the winged Lion's marble piles, Where Venice sate in state, throned on her hundred isles!

She looks a sea Cybele, fresh from ocean,
Rising with her tiara of proud towers 11
At airy distance, with majestic motion,
A ruler of the waters and their powers;
And such she was; her daughters had their dowers
From spoils of nations, and the exhaust-less East 15
Poured in her lap all gems in sparkling showers.
In purple was she robed, and of her feast Monarchs partook, and deemed their dignity increased.

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more,
And silent rows the songless gondolier;
Her palaces are crumbling to the shore,
And music meets not always now the ear:
Those days are gone—but Beauty still is
here. 23
States fall, arts fade—but Nature doth
not die,
Nor yet forget how Venice once was dear,
The pleasant place of all festivity, 26
The revel of the earth, the masque of Italy!

ROME

O Rome! my country! city of the soul!
The orphans of the heart must turn to
thee, 695
Lone mother of dead empires! and control
In their shut breasts their petty misery.
What are our woes and sufferance?
Come and see
The cypress, hear the owl, and plod your
way
O'er steps of broken thrones and temples, Ye! 700
Whose agonies are evils of a day—
A world is at our feet as fragile as our clay.

The Niobe of nations! there she stands,
Childless and crownless, in her voiceless
woe; 704
An empty urn within her withered hands,
Whose holy dust was scattered long ago;

The Scipios' tomb contains no ashes now;
The very sepulchres lie tenantless
Of their heroic dwellers: dost thou flow,
Old Tiber! through a marble wilderness?
Rise, with thy yellow waves, and mantle
her distress. 711

The Goth, the Christian, Time, War, Flood, and Fire,
Have dealt upon the seven-hilled city's
pride;
She saw her glories star by star expire,
And up the steep barbarian monarchs ride, 715
Where the car¹ climbed the Capitol; far and wide
Temple and tower went down, nor left a site:
Chaos of ruins! who shall trace the void,
O'er the dim fragments cast a lunar light,
And say, "Here was, or is," where all is doubly night? 720

The double night of ages, and of her,
Night's daughter, Ignorance, hath wrapped and wrap
All round us; we but feel our way to err:
The ocean hath his chart, the stars their map,
And Knowledge spreads them on her ample lap; 725
But Rome is as the desert, where we
steer
Stumbling o'er recollections; now we clap
Our hands, and cry "Eureka! it is clear!"—
When but some false mirage of ruin rises near.

Alas! the lofty city! and, alas, 730
The trebly hundred triumphs; and the
day
When Brutus made the dagger's edge surpass
The Conqueror's sword in bearing fame
away!
Alas, for Tully's voice, and Virgil's lay,
And Livy's pictured page;—but these shall be 735
Her resurrection; all beside—decay.
Alas, for Earth, for never shall we see That brightness in her eye she bore when Rome was free!

¹ chariot.

THE COLISEUM

Arches on arches! as it were that Rome,
Collecting the chief trophies of her line,
Would build up all her triumphs in one dome, 1146
Her Coliseum stands; the moonbeams
shine
As 't were its natural torches, for divine
Should be the light which streams here, to illumine
This long-explored but still exhaustless
mine 1150
Of contemplation; and the azure gloom
Of an Italian night, where the deep skies
assume

Hues which have words, and speak to ye
of heaven,
Floats o'er this vast and wondrous monument,
And shadows forth its glory. There is given 1155
Unto the things of earth, which Time hath bent,
A spirit's feeling, and where he hath leant
His hand, but broke his scythe, there is a power
And magic in the ruined battlement,
For which the palace of the present hour Must yield its pomp, and wait till ages are its dower. 1161

* * * * *

And here the buzz of eager nations ran,
In murmured pity, or loud-roared ap-
plause,
As man was slaughtered by his fellow man.
And wherefore slaughtered? wherefore,
but because 1246
Such were the bloody Circus' genial laws,
And the imperial pleasure.—Wherefore
not?
What matters where we fall to fill the maws
Of worms—on battle-plains or listed spot?
Both are but theaters where the chief actors rot. 1251

I see before me the Gladiator lie:
He leans upon his hand—his manly brow
Consents to death, but conquers agony,
And his drooped head sinks gradually
low— " 1255

And through his side the last drops, ebbing slow
 From the red gash, fall heavy, one by one,
 Like the first of a thunder-shower; and now
 The arena swims around him—he is gone, Ere ceased the inhuman shout which hailed the wretch who won. 1260

He heard it, but he heeded not—his eyes
 Were with his heart, and that was far away;
 He recked not of the life he lost nor prize,
 But where his rude hut by the Danubelay,
There were his young barbarians all at play, 1265
There was their Dacian mother—he, their sire,
 Butchered to make a Roman holiday—
 All this rushed with his blood—Shall he expire
 And unavenged? Arise! ye Goths, and glut your ire!

But here, where Murder breathed her bloody steam; 1270
 And here, where buzzing nations choked the ways,
 And roared or murmured like a mountain stream
 Dashing or winding as its torrent strays;
 Here, where the Roman millions' blame or praise
 Was death or life, the playthings of a crowd, 1275
 My voice sounds much—and fall the stars' faint rays
 On the arena void—seats crushed—walls bowed—
 And galleries, where my steps seem echoes strangely loud.

A ruin—yet what ruin! from its mass
 Walls, palaces, half-cities, have been reared; 1280
 Yet oft the enormous skeleton ye pass,
 And marvel where the spoil could have appeared.
 Hath it indeed been plundered, or but cleared?
 Alas! developed, opens the decay, 1284
 When the colossal fabric's form is neared:
 It will not bear the brightness of the day,
 Which streams too much on all, years, man have reft away.

But when the rising moon begins to climb
 Its topmost arch, and gently pauses there;
 When the stars twinkle through the loops of time, 1290
 And the low night-breeze waves along the air
 The garland-forest which the gray walls wear,
 Likelaurels on the bald first Cæsar's head;
 When the light shines serene but doth not glare,
 Then in this magic circle raise the dead:
 Heroes have trod this spot—'tis on their dust ye tread. 1296

"While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
 When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall,
 And when Rome falls—the World." From our own land
 Thus spake the pilgrims o'er this mighty wall 1300
 In Saxon times, which we are wont to call Ancient; and these three mortal things are still
 On their foundations, and unaltered all;
 Rome and her Ruin past Redemption's skill,
 The world, the same wide den—of thieves, or what ye will. 1305

NATURE

Oh that the desert were my dwelling place, 1385
 With one fair spirit for my minister,
 That I might all forget the human race,
 And, hating no one, love but only her!
 Ye Elements, in whose ennobling stir
 I feel myself exalted, can ye not 1390
 Accord me such a being? Do I err
 In deeming such inhabit many a spot,
 Though with them to converse can rarely be our lot?

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods, 1394
 There is a rapture on the lonely shore,
 There is society where none intrudes,
 By the deep sea, and music in its roar:

I love not Man the less, but Nature
more,
From these our interviews, in which I
steal
From all I may be or have been before,
To mingle with the universe, and
feel . 1601
What I can ne'er express, yet can not all conceal.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue Ocean
—roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in
vain;
Man marks the earth with ruin—his control 1605
Stops with the shore;—upon the watery
plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling
groan, 1610
Without a grave, unknelled, uncoffined and unknown.

His steps are not upon thy paths—thy fields
Are not a spoil for him—thou dost arise
And shake him from thee; the vile strength he wields
For earth's destruction thou dost all despise, 1615
Spurning him from thy bosom to the
skies,
And send'st him, shivering in thy playful spray,
And howling, to his Gods, where haply
lies
His petty hope in some near port or bay,
And dashest him again to earth—there let him lay. 1620

The armaments which thunderstrike the walls
Of rock-built cities, bidding nations
quake,
And monarchs tremble in their capitals,
The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs
make
Their clay creator the vain title take 1625
Of lord of thee, and arbiter of war;
These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake,

They melt into thy yeast of waves,
which mar
Alike the Armada's pride, or spoils of Trafalgar.

Thy shores are empires, changed in all save thee— 1630
Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, what are they?
Thy waters washed them power while they were free,
And many a tyrant since; their shores
obey
The stranger, slave or savage; their
decay
Has dried up realms to deserts:—not so
thou, 1635
Unchangeable save to thy wild waves'
play—
Time writes no wrinkle on thine azure
brow—
Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest now.

Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form
Glasses itself in tempests: in all time, 1640 Calm or convulsed—in breeze, or gale, or storm,
Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime Dark-heaving;—boundless, endless, and sublime—
The image of Eternity—the throne
Of the Invisible; even from out thy slime 1645
The monsters of the deep are made;
each zone
Obeys thee; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.

And I have loved thee, Ocean! and my
joy
Of youthful sports was on thy breast
to be Borne, like thy bubbles, onward: from a boy 1650
I wantoned with thy breakers—they to
me
Were a delight; and if the freshening sea
Made them a terror—'twas a pleasing
fear,
For I was as it were a child of thee,
And trusted to thy billows far and near,
And laid my hand upon thy mane—as I do here. 1656

DON JUAN

From the DEDICATION

I

BOB SOUTHEY! You're a poet—Poet-laureate,
 And representative of all the race;
 Although 'tis true that you turned out a Tory at Last,—yours has lately been a common case;
 And now, my Epic Renegade! what are ye at?
 With all the Lakers, in and out of place?
 A nest of tuneful persons, to my eye
 Like "four and twenty Blackbirds in a pye;

II

"Which pye being opened they began to sing"
 (This old song and new simile holds good),
 "A dainty dish to set before the King,"
 Or Regent, who admires such kind of food;—
 And Coleridge, too, has lately taken wing,
 But like a hawk encumbered with his hood,— Explaining metaphysics to the nation—
 I wish he would explain his Explanation.

III

You, Bob! are rather insolent, you know,
 At being disappointed in your wish
 To supersede all warblers here below,
 And be the only Blackbird in the dish;
 And then you overstrain yourself, or so,
 And tumble downward like the flying fish
 Gasping on deck, because you soar too high, Bob,
 And fall, for lack of moisture quite a-dry, Bob!

IV

And Wordsworth, in a rather long "Excursion"
 (I think the quarto holds five hundred pages),
 Has given a sample from the vasty version
 Of his new system to perplex the sages;

'Tis poetry—at least by his assertion,
 And may appear so when the dog-star rages—
 And he who understands it would be able To add a story to the Tower of Babel.

* * * * *

XVII

Meantime, Sir Laureate, I proceed to dedicate
 In honest simple verse, this song to you.
 And, if in flattering strains I do not predicate,
 'Tis that I still retain my "buff and blue";
 My politics as yet are all to educate:
 Apostasy's so fashionable, too,
 To keep one creed's a task grown quite Herculean:
 Is it not so, my Tory, Ultra-Julian?

* * * * *

From CANTO III

THE ISLES OF GREECE

The Isles of Greece, the Isles of Greece!
 Where burning Sappho loved and sung,
 Where grew the arts of war and peace,—
 Where Delos rose, and Phœbus sprung!
 Eternal summer gilds them yet,
 But all, except their sun, is set.

The Scian and the Teian muse,
 The hero's harp, the lover's lute,
 Have found the fame your shores refuse:
 Their place of birth alone is mute
 To sounds which echo further west
 Than your sires' "Islands of the Blest."

The mountains look on Marathon—
 And Marathon looks on the sea;
 And musing there an hour alone,
 I dreamed that Greece might still be free;
 For standing on the Persian's grave,
 I could not deem myself a slave.

A king sate on the rocky brow
 Which looks o'er sea-born Salamis;
 And ships, by thousands, lay below,
 And men in nations;—all were his!
 He counted them at break of day—
 And when the sun set, where were they?

And where are they? and where art thou,
 My country? On thy voiceless shore
 The heroic lay is tuneless now— 715
 The heroic bosom beats no more!
 And must thy lyre, so long divine,
 Degenerate into hands like mine?

'Tis something, in the dearth of fame,
 Though linked among a fettered race,
 To feel at least a patriot's shame, 721
 Even as I sing, suffuse my face;
 For what is left the poet here?
 For Greeks a blush—for Greece a tear.

Must we but weep o'er days more blest?
 Must we but blush?—Our fathers bled.
 Earth! render back from out thy breast 727
 A remnant of our Spartan dead!
 Of the three hundred grant but three,
 To make a new Thermopylæ! 730

What, silent still? and silent all?
 Ah! no; the voices of the dead
 Sound like a distant torrent's fall,
 And answer, "Let one living head,
 But one arise,—we come, we come!" 735
 'Tis but the living who are dumb.

In vain—in vain: strike other chords:
 Fill high the cup with Samian wine!
 Leave battles to the Turkish hordes,
 And shed the blood of Scio's vine! 740
 Hark! rising to the ignoble call—
 How answers each bold Bacchanal!

You have the Pyrrhic dance as yet:
 Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone?
 Of two such lessons, why forget 745
 The nobler and the manlier one?
 You have the letters Cadmus gave—
 Think ye he meant them for a slave?

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
 We will not think of themes like these!
 It made Anacreon's song divine; 751
 He served—but served Polycrates—
 A tyrant; but our masters then
 Were still, at least, our countrymen.

The tyrant of the Chersonese 755
 Was freedom's best and bravest friend;
 That tyrant was Miltiades!
 Oh! that the present hour would lend
 Another despot of the kind!
 Such chains as his were sure to bind. 760

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
 On Suli's rock, and Parga's shore,
 Exists the remnant of a line
 Such as the Doric mothers bore;
 And there, perhaps, some seed is sown, 765
 The Heracleidan blood might own.

Trust not for freedom to the Franks—
 They have a king who buys and sells:
 In native swords and native ranks,
 The only hope of courage dwells; 770
 But Turkish force, and Latin fraud,
 Would break your shield, however broad.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
 Our virgins dance beneath the shade—
 I see their glorious black eyes shine; 775
 But gazing on each glowing maid,
 My own the burning tear-drop laves,
 To think such breasts must suckle slaves.

Place me on Sunium's marbled steep,
 Where nothing, save the waves and I,
 May hear our mutual murmurs sweep; 781
 There, swan-like, let me sing and die:
 A land of slaves shall ne'er be mine—
 Dash down yon cup of Samian wine!

Thus sung, or would, or could, or should have sung, 785
 The modern Greek, in tolerable verse;
 If not like Orpheus quite, when Greece was young,
 Yet in these times he might have done much worse:
 His strain displayed some feeling—right
 or wrong;
 And feeling, in a poet, is the source 790
 Of others' feeling; but they are such liars,
 And take all colors, like the hands of dyers.

But words are things, and a small drop of ink
 Falling, like dew, upon a thought, produces
 That which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think; 795
 'Tis strange, the shortest letter which man uses
 Instead of speech, may form a lasting link
 Of ages; to what straits old Time reduces

Frail man, when paper—even a rag like
this,
Survives himself, his tomb, and all that's
his. 800

And when his bones are dust, his grave a blank,

His station, generation, even his nation,
Become a thing, or nothing, save to rank
In chronological commemoration,
Some dull MS. oblivion long has sank, 805
Or graven stone found in a barrack's station

In digging the foundation of a closet,
May turn his name up as a rare deposit.

And glory long has made the sages smile;
'Tis something, nothing, words, illusion,
wind— 810

Depending more upon the historian's
style,
Than on the name a person leaves behind.

Troy owes to Homer what whist owes to Hoyle:

The present century was growing blind
To the great Marlborough's skill in giving knocks, 815

Until his late Life by Archdeacon Coxe.

Milton's the prince of poets—so we say;
A little heavy, but no less divine:

An independent being in his day—Learned, pious, temperate in love and
wine: 820

But his life falling into Johnson's way,
We're told this great high priest of all the Nine

Was whipt at college,—a harsh sire,—odd spouse,

For the first Mrs. Milton left his house.

All these are, certainly, entertaining facts, 825
Like Shakespeare's stealing deer, Lord
Bacon's bribes;

Like Titus' youth, and Cæsar's earliest acts;

Like Burns (whom Doctor Currie well describes);

Like Cromwell's pranks;—but although truth exacts

These amiable descriptions from the
scribes, 830

As most essential to their hero's story,
They do not much contribute to his glory.

All are not moralists, like Southey, when He prated to the world of "Pantisoc-racy";

Or Wordsworth, unexcised, unhired, who
then 835

Seasoned his peddler poems with democracy:

Or Coleridge, long before his flighty pen
Let to the Morning Post its aristocracy;

When he and Southey, following the same
path,

Espoused two partners (milliners of Bath).

Such names at present cut a convict figure, 841

The very Botany Bay in moral geography;

Their loyal treason, renegado rigor,
Are good manure for their more bare biography.

Wordsworth's last quarto, by the way, is bigger 845

Than any since the birthday of typog-
raphy;

A drowsy, frowsy poem called The Excursion,

Writ in a manner which is my aversion.

* * * * *

But let me to my story: I must own,
If I have any fault, it is digression—

Leaving my people to proceed alone,
While I soliloquize beyond expression;

But these are my addresses from the
throne, 861

Which put off business to the ensuing session,

Forgetting each omission is a loss to
The world, not quite so great as Ariosto.

I know that what our neighbors called longueurs 865

(We've not so good a word, but have the
thing,

In that complete perfection which ensures

An epic from Bob Southey every
spring—)

Form not the true temptation which allures

The reader; but 'twould not be hard to
bring 870

Some fine examples of the épopée
To prove its grand ingredient is ennui.

We learn from Horace, "Homer sometimes sleeps";
We feel without him, Wordsworth sometimes wakes,—
To show with what complacency he creeps,
With his dear "Waggoners," around his lakes. 876
He wishes for "a boat" to sail the deeps—
Of ocean?—No, of air; and then he makes
Another outcry for "a little boat,"
And drivels seas to set it well afloat. 880

If he must fain sweep o'er the ethereal
plain,
And Pegasus runs restive in his "Waggon,"
Could he not beg the loan of Charles's Wain,
Or pray Medea for a single dragon?
Or if too classic for his vulgar brain, 885
He feared his neck to venture such a nag on,
And he must needs mount nearer to the
moon,
Could not the blockhead ask for a balloon?

* * * * *

O Hesperus! thou bringest all good
things— 945
Home to the weary, to the hungry cheer,
To the young bird the parent's brooding
wings,
The welcome stall to the o'erlabored
steer;
Whate'er of peace about our hearthstone clings, Whate'er our household gods protect of dear, 950
Are gathered round us by thy look of rest;
Thou bring'st the child, too, to the mother's breast.

Soft hour! which wakes the wish and melts the heart
Of those who sail the seas, on the first day
When they from their sweet friends are torn apart; 955
Or fills with love the pilgrim on his way
As the far bell of vesper makes him start,
Seeming to weep the dying day's decay;
Is this a fancy which our reason scorns?
Ah! surely nothing dies but something mourns. 960

When Nero perished by the justest doom
Which ever the destroyer yet destroyed,
Amidst the roar of liberated Rome,
Of nations freed, and the world overjoyed,
Some hands unseen strewed flowers upon his tomb; 965
Perhaps the weakness of a heart not void
Of feeling for some kindness done, when
power
Had left the wretch an uncorrupted hour.

But I'm digressing; what on earth has Nero,
Or any such like sovereign buffoons, 970
To do with the transactions of my hero,
More than such madmen's fellow-man—
the moon's?
Sure my invention must be down at zero,
And I grown one of many "wooden spoons"
Of verse (the name with which we Cantabs please 975
To dub the last of honors in degrees).

I feel this tediousness will never do—
'T is being too epic, and I must cut down (In copying) this long canto into two;
They'll never find it out, unless I own 980
The fact, excepting some experienced few;
And then as an improvement 'twill be shown:
I'll prove that such the opinion of the critic is
From Aristotle passim.—See Ποιητικὴς.

CANTO IV

Nothing so difficult as a beginning
In poesy, unless perhaps the end;
For oftentimes, when Pegasus seems winning
The race, he sprains a wing, and down
we tend,
Like Lucifer, when hurled from heaven
for sinning; 5
Our sin the same, and hard as his to
mend,
Being pride, which leads the mind to soar
too far,
Till our own weakness shows us what we
are.

But Time, which brings all beings to their level,
 And sharp Adversity, will teach at
 last 10
 Man, and—as we would hope—perhaps the devil,
 That neither of their intellects are vast:
 While youth's hot wishes in our red veins
 revel,
 We know not this—the blood flows on too fast;
 But as the torrent widens towards the ocean, 15
 We ponder deeply on each past emotion.
 As boy, I thought myself a clever fel-
 low,
 And wished that others held the same opinion;
 They took it up when my days grew more mellow,
 And other minds acknowledged my dominion: 20
 Now my sere fancy "falls into the yellow Leaf," and Imagination droops her pinion,
 And the sad truth which hovers o'er my desk
 Turns what was once romantic to burlesque.
 And if I laugh at any mortal thing, 25
 'T is that I may not weep; and if I
 weep,
 'T is that our nature cannot always bring itself to apathy, for we must steep
 Our hearts first in the depth of Lethe's
 spring,
 Ere what we least wish to behold will
 sleep: 30
 Thetis baptized her mortal son in Styx;
 A mortal mother would on Lethe fix.
 Some have accused me of a strange design Against the creed and morals of the
 land,
 And trace it in this poem every line: 35
 I don't pretend that I quite understand My own meaning when I would be very
 fine;
 But the fact is, that I have nothing planned
 Unless it were to be a moment merry,
 A novel word in my vocabulary. 40

To the kind reader of our sober clime,
 This way of writing will appear exotic:
 Pulci was sire of the half-serious rhyme,
 Who sang when chivalry was more Quixotic,
 And revelled in the fancies of the time, 45
 True knights, chaste dames, huge giants,
 kings despotic;
 But all these, save the last, being obsolete,
 I chose a modern subject as more meet.
 How I have treated it, I do not know;
 Perhaps no better than they have treated me 50
 Who have imputed such designs as show
 Not what they saw, but what they wished to see:
 But if it gives them pleasure, be it so;
 This is a liberal age, and thoughts are
 free:
 Meantime Apollo plucks me by the ear, 55
 And tells me to resume my story here.
 Young Juan and his lady-love were left
 To their own hearts' most sweet society;
 Even Time the pitiless in sorrow cleft
 With his rude scythe such gentle bosoms;
 he 60
 Sighed to behold them of their hours bereft, Though foe to love; and yet they could not be
 Meant to grow old, but die in happy spring,
 Before one charm or hope had taken wing.
 Their faces were not made for wrinkles, their 65
 Pure blood to stagnate, their great hearts to fail;
 The blank gray was not made to blast
 their hair,
 But like the climes that know nor snow nor hail
 They were all summer: lightning might assail
 And shiver them to ashes, but to trail 70
 A long and snake-like life of dull decay
 Was not for them—they had too little clay.
 They were alone once more; for them to be Thus was another Eden; they were never Weary, unless when separate: the tree 75
 Cut from its forest root of years—the river

Dammed from its fountain—the child from the knee

And breast maternal weaned at once for ever,—

Would wither less than these two torn apart;

Alas! there is no instinct like the heart— 80

The heart—which may be broken: happy
they!

Thrice fortunate! who of that fragile
mould,

The precious porcelain of human clay,
Break with the first fall: they can ne'er
behold

The long year linked with heavy day on
day, 85

And all which must be borne, and never told;

While life's strange principle will often
lie

Deepest in those who long the most to die.

"Whom the gods love die young," was said of yore,

And many deaths do they escape by
this: 90

The death of friends, and that which slays even more—

The death of friendship, love, youth,
all that is,

Except mere breath; and since the silent
shore

Awaits at last even those who longest miss

The old archer's shafts, perhaps the early
grave 95

Which men weep over may be meant to save.

* * * * *

They gazed upon the sunset; 'tis an hour
Dear unto all, but dearest to their eyes,
For it had made them what they were: the
power 155

Of love had first o'erwhelmed them from such skies,

When happiness had been their only dower,
And twilight saw them linked in pas-
sion's ties;

Charmed with each other, all things charmed that brought

The past still welcome as the present
thought. 160

* * * * *

Mixed in each other's arms, and heart in
heart,

Why did they not then die?—they had lived too long 210

Should an hour come to bid them breathe
apart;

Years could but bring them cruel things
or wrong;

The world was not for them, nor the world's
art

For beings passionate as Sappho's song;
Love was born with them, in them, so intense 215

It was their very spirit, not a sense.

They should have lived together deep in
woods,

Unseen as sings the nightingale; they
were

Unfit to mix in these thick solitudes

Called social, haunts of hate, and vice,
and care: 220

How lovely every free-born creature
broods!

The sweetest songbirds nestle in a pair;
The eagle soars alone; the gull and crow Flock o'er their carrion, just like men
below.

Now pillowed cheek to cheek, in loving
sleep, 225

Haidée and Juan their siesta took,
A gentle slumber, but it was not deep,

For ever and anon a something shook Juan, and shuddering o'er his frame would creep,

And Haidée's sweet lips murmured like a
brook 230

A wordless music, and her face so fair Stirred with her dream, as rose-leaves with
the air;

Or as the stirring of a deep clear stream
Within an Alpine hollow, when the wind

Walks o'er it, was she shaken by the
dream, 235

The mystical usurper of the mind—
O'erpowering us to be whate'er may seem

Good to the soul which we no more can
bind;

Strange state of being! (for 'tis still to be) Senseless to feel, and with sealed eyes to
see. 240

She dreamed of being alone on the sea-
 shore,
 Chained to a rock; she knew not how,
 but stir
 She could not from the spot, and the loud roar
 Grew, and each wave rose roughly,
 threatening her;
 And o'er her upper lip they seemed to pour, ²⁴⁵
 Until she sobbed for breath, and soon they were Foaming o'er her lone head, so fierce and
 high—
 Each broke to drown her, yet she could not
 die.

 Anon—she was released; and then she
 strayed
 O'er the sharp shingles with her bleeding feet, ²⁵⁰
 And stumbled almost every step she made;
 And something rolled before her in a sheet,
 Which she must still pursue howe'er afraid;
 'Twas white and indistinct, nor stopped to meet
 Her glance nor grasp, for still she gazed, and grasped, ²⁵⁵
 And ran, but it escaped her as she clasped.

 The dream changed:—in a cave she stood,
 its walls
 Were hung with marble icicles, the work
 Of ages on its water-fretted halls,
 Where waves might wash, and seals might breed and lurk; ²⁶⁰
 Her hair was dripping, and the very balls
 Of her black eyes seemed turned to tears, and mirk
 The sharp rocks looked below each drop they caught,
 Which froze to marble as it fell—she
 thought.

 And wet, and cold, and lifeless, at her feet, ²⁶⁵
 Pale as the foam that frothed on his dead brow,
 Which she essayed in vain to clear (how
 sweet
 Were once her cares, how idle seemed they now!)

Lay Juan, nor could aught renew the
 beat
 Of his quenched heart; and the seadirges low ²⁷⁰
 Rang in her sad ears like a mermaid's
 song,
 And that brief dream appeared a life too
 long.

 And gazing on the dead, she thought his
 face
 Faded, or altered into something new—
 Like to her father's features, till each trace ²⁷⁵
 More like and like to Lambro's aspect
 grew—
 With all his keen worn look and Grecian
 grace;
 And starting, she awoke, and what to
 view?
 O Powers of Heaven! what dark eye meets she there?
 'Tis—'tis her father's—fixed upon the pair! ²⁸⁰

 Then shrieking, she arose, and shrieking
 fell,
 With joy and sorrow, hope and fear, to
 see Him whom she deemed a habitant where
 dwell
 The ocean-buried, risen from death, to
 be Perchance the death of one she loved too well: ²⁸⁵
 Dear as her father had been to Haidée,
 It was a moment of that awful kind—
 I have seen such—but must not call to
 mind.

 Up Juan sprang to Haidée's bitter shriek,
 And caught her falling, and from off
 the wall ²⁹⁰
 Snatched down his sabre, in hot haste to wreak Vengeance on him who was the cause of
 all.
 Then Lambro, who till now forbore to
 speak, Smiled scornfully, and said, "Within my call,
 A thousand scimitars await the word; ²⁹⁵
 Put 'up, young man, put up your silly
 sword."

And Haidée clung around him; "Juan,
'tis—

'Tis Lambro—'tis my father! Kneel
with me—

He will forgive us—yes—it must be—
yes.

Oh dearest father, in this agony 300
Of pleasure and of pain—even while I kiss Thy garment's hem with transport, can it be

That doubt should mingle with my filial
joy?

Deal with me as thou wilt, but spare this
boy."

High and inscrutable the old man stood, 305 Calm in his voice, and calm within his
eye—

Not always signs with him of calmest
mood:

He looked upon her, but gave no reply;
Then turned to Juan, in whose cheek the
blood

Oft came and went, as there resolved to
die 310

In arms, at least, he stood in act to spring
On the first foe whom Lambro's call might bring.

"Young man, your sword!" So Lambro
once more said;

Juan replied, "Not while this arm is
free!"

The old man's cheek grew pale, but not with dread, 315

And drawing from his belt a pistol, he Replied, "Your blood be then on your own
head;"

Then looked close at the flint, as if to
see

'Twas fresh—for he had lately used the lock—

And next proceeded quietly to cock. 320

It has a strange, quick jar upon the ear,
That cocking of a pistol, when you know
A moment more will bring the sight to bear

Upon your person, twelve yards off, or
so;

A gentlemanly distance, not too near, 325
If you have got a former friend for foe;

But after being fired at once or twice,
The ear becomes more Irish, and less nice.

Lambro presented, and one instant more Had stopped this canto, and Don Juan's
breath, 330

When Haidée threw herself her boy before;

Stern as her sire, "On me," she cried,
"let death

Descend—the fault is mine; this fatal
shore

He found—but sought not. I have pledged my faith;

I love him—I will die with him: I knew 335
Your nature's firmness—know your daughter's too."

A minute past, and she had been all
tears,

And tenderness, and infancy; but now
She stood as one who championed human fears—

Pale, statue-like, and stern, she wooed the
blow; 340

And tall beyond her sex, and their com-
peers,

She drew up to her height, as if to show
A fairer mark; and with a fixed eye scanned
Her father's face—but never stopped his
hand.

He gazed on her, and she on him; 'twas strange 345

How like they looked! the expression
was the same,

Serenely savage, with a little change
In the large dark eye's mutual-darted
flame;

For she, too, was as one who could avenge,
If cause should be—a lioness, though tame. 350

Her father's blood before her father's face
Boiled up, and proved her truly of his race.

I said they were alike, their features and Their stature differing but in sex and
years;

Even to the delicacy of their hand 355
There was resemblance, such as true blood wears;

And now to see them, thus divided, stand
In fixed ferocity, when joyous tears

And sweet sensations should have welcomed both,

Show what the passions are in their full growth. 360

The father paused a moment, then withdrew
His weapon, and replaced it; but stood
still,
And looking on her, as to look her through,
"Not I," he said, "have sought this stranger's ill;
Not I have made this desolation; few 365
Would bear such outrage, and forbear to kill;
But I must do my duty—how thou hast Done thine, the present vouches for the past.

"Let him disarm; or, by my father's head,
His own shall roll before you like a ball!" 370
He raised his whistle, as the word he
said,
And blew; another answered to the call,
And, rushing in disorderly, though led,
And armed from boot to turban, one
and all,
Some twenty of his train came, rank on rank; 375
He gave the word—"Arrest or slay the Frank!"

Then, with a sudden movement, he withdrew
His daughter; while compressed within his clasp,
'Twixt her and Juan interposed the crew;
In vain she struggled in her father's grasp— 380
His arms were like a serpent's coil: then flew
Upon their prey, as darts an angry asp,
The file of pirates; save the foremost, who Had fallen, with his right shoulder half cut through.

The second had his cheek laid open; but 385
The third, a wary, cool old sworder, took
The blows upon his cutlass, and then put His own well in; so well, ere you could look,
His man was floored, and helpless at his
foot,
With the blood running like a little
brook, 390
From two smart sabre gashes, deep and red—
One on the arm, the other on the head.

And then they bound him where he fell,
and bore
Juan from the apartment: with a sign, Old Lambro bade them take him to the
shore, 395
Where lay some ships which were to sail at nine.
They laid him in a boat, and plied the oar
Until they reached some galliots, placed in line;
On board of one of these, and under hatches,
They stowed him, with strict orders to the watches. 400

The world is full of strange vicissitudes,
And here was one exceedingly unpleasant:
A gentleman so rich in the world's goods, Handsome and young, enjoying all the present,
Just at the very time when he least broods
On such a thing, is suddenly to sea
sent, 406
Wounded and chained, so that he cannot
move,
And all because a lady fell in love.

Here I must leave him, for I grow pathetic, Moved by the Chinese nymph of tears,
green tea! 410
Than whom Cassandra was not more prophetic;
For if my pure libations exceed three,
I feel my heart become so sympathetic,
That I must have recourse to black Bo-hea:
'Tis pity wine should be so deleterious, 415
For tea and coffee leave us much more serious.

* * * * *

I leave Don Juan for the present, safe—425
Not sound, poor fellow, but severely wounded;
Yet could his corporal pangs amount to half
Of those with which his Haidée's bosom bounded?
She was not one to weep, and rave, and chafe,
And then give way, subdued, because surrounded; 430
Her mother was a Moorish maid, from Fez,
Where all is Eden, or a wilderness.

There the large olive rains its amber store
In marble fonts; there grain, and flower, and fruit,

Gush from the earth, until the land runs o'er; 435

But there, too, many a poison tree has
root,

And midnight listens to the lion's roar,
And long, long deserts scorch the camel's
foot,

Or heaving, whelm the helpless caravan;
And as the soil is, so the heart of man. 440

Afric is all the sun's, and as her earth
Her human clay is kindled: full of power
For good or evil, burning from its birth,
The Moorish blood partakes the planet's
hour;

And like the soil beneath, it will bring
forth: 445

Beauty and love were Haidée's mother's
dower;

But her large dark eye showed deep pas-
sion's force,

Though sleeping like a lion near a source.

Her daughter, tempered with a milder ray,
—Like summer's clouds all silvery, smooth, and fair, 450

Till slowly charged with thunder, they display

Terror to earth, and tempest to the air—
Had held till now her soft and milky way,
But, overwrought with passion and de-
spair,

The fire burst forth from her Numidian
veins, 455

Even as the Simoom sweeps the blasted
plains.

The last sight which she saw was Juan's
gore,

And he himself o'ermastered and cut
down;

His blood was running on the very floor,
Where late he trod, her beautiful, her
own; 460

Thus much she viewed an instant, and no
more—

Her struggles ceased with one convul-sive groan;

On her sire's arm, which, until now, scarce
held

Her writhing, fell she like a cedar felled.

A vein had burst, and her sweet lips' pure dyes 465

Were dabbled with the deep blood which ran o'er;

And her head drooped, as when the lily lies O'ercharged with rain: her summoned handmaids bore

Their lady to her couch, with gushing eyes;
Of herbs and cordials they produced their store, 470

But she defied all means they could employ,

Like one life could not hold, nor death destroy.

Days lay she in that state, unchanged,
though chill—

With nothing livid, still her lips were red;
She had no pulse, but death seemed absent still; 475

No hideous sign proclaimed her surely
dead;

Corruption came not in each mind to kill
All hope; to look upon her sweet face bred

New thoughts of life, for it seemed full of
soul—

She had so much, earth could not claim
the whole. 480

The ruling passion, such as marble shows
When exquisitely chiselled, still lay
there,

But fixed as marble's unchanged aspect throws

O'er the fair Venus, but forever fair;
O'er the Laocoön's all eternal throes, 485

And ever-dying Gladiator's air,
Their energy, like life, forms all their fame,
Yet looks not life, for they are still the
same.

She woke at length, but not as sleepers
wake,

Rather the dead, for life seemed something new, 490

A strange sensation which she must partake
Perforce, since whatsoever met her view

Struck not on memory, though a heavy ache

Lay at her heart, whose earliest beat,
still true,

Brought back the sense of pain without the
cause, 495

For, for a while, the furies made a pause.

She looked on many a face with vacant eye,
 On many a token, without knowing what;
 She saw them watch her, without asking
 why,
 And recked not who around her pillow
 sat; 500
 Not speechless, though she spoke not; not a sigh
 Relieved her thoughts; dull silence and quick chat
 Were tried in vain by those who served;
 she gave
 No sign, save breath, of having left the
 grave.

Her handmaids tended, but she heeded
 not; 505
 Her father watched, she turned her eyes
 away;
 She recognized no being, and no spot,
 However dear, or cherished in their day;
 They changed from room to room, but all
 forgot,
 Gentle, but without memory, she lay; 510
 At length those eyes, which they would fain be weaning
 Back to old thoughts, waxed full of fearful meaning.

And then a slave bethought her of a harp;
 The harper came and tuned his instrument;
 At the first notes, irregular and sharp, 515
 On him her flashing eyes a moment bent,
 Then to the wall she turned, as if to warp
 Her thoughts from sorrow through her heart re-sent;
 And he began a long low island song 519
 Of ancient days, ere tyranny grew strong.

Anon her thin wan fingers beat the wall,
 In time to his old tune: he changed the
 theme,
 And sung of love; the fierce name struck through all Her recollection; on her flashed the dream
 Of what she was, and is, if ye could call 525
 To be so being: in a gushing stream
 The tears rushed forth from her o'er-clouded brain,
 Like mountain mists, at length dissolved in rain.

Short solace, vain relief!—thought came too quick,
 And whirled her brain to madness; she arose, 530
 As one who ne'er had dwelt among the sick,
 And flew at all she met, as on her foes;
 But no one ever heard her speak or shriek,
 Although her paroxysm drew towards its close:—
 Hers was a frenzy which disdained to rave, 535
 Even when they smote her, in the hope to save.

Yet she betrayed at times a gleam of sense;
 Nothing could make her meet her father's face,
 Though on all other things with looks intense
 She gazed, but none she ever could retrace. 540
 Food she refused, and raiment; no pretence Availed for either; neither change of
 place,
 Nor time, nor skill, nor remedy, could give
 her Senses to sleep—the power seemed gone forever.

Twelve days and nights she withered thus;
 at last, 545
 Without a groan, or sigh, or glance, to show
 A parting pang, the spirit from her past;
 And they who watched her nearest,
 could not know
 The very instant, till the change that cast
 Her sweet face into shadow, dull and
 slow, 550
 Glazed o'er her eyes—the beautiful, the black—
 Oh! to possess such luster—and then lack!

* * * * *

Thus lived—thus died she; never more on
 her Shall sorrow light, or shame. She was not made T'rough years or moons the inner weight
 to bear,
 Which colder hearts endure till they are
 laid

By age in earth; her days and pleasures
were 565
Brief but delightful—such as had not stayed
Long with her destiny; but she sleeps well
By the sea-shore, whereon she loved to
dwell.

The isle is now all desolate and bare,
Its dwellings down, its tenants passed
away; 570
None but her own and father's grave is
there,
And nothing outward tells of human
clay:
Ye could not know where lies a thing so
fair;
No stone is there to show, no tongue to
say
What was: no dirge, except the hollow
sea's, 575
Mourns o'er the beauty of the Cyclades.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY (1792-1822)

HYMN TO INTELLECTUAL BEAUTY

The awful shadow of some unseen Power Floats though unseen amongst us,— visiting
This various world with as inconstant
wing
As summer winds that creep from flower to flower;—
Like moonbeams that behind some piny mountain shower, 5
It visits with inconstant glance
Each human heart and countenance;
Like hues and harmonies of evening,—
Like clouds in starlight widely
spread,—
Like memory of music fled,— 10
Like aught that for its grace may be
Dear, and yet dearer for its mystery.

Spirit of BEAUTY, that dost consecrate
With thine own hues all thou dost shine upon
Of human thought or form,—where art thou gone? 15
Why dost thou pass away and leave our
state,

This dim vast vale of tears, vacant and desolate?
Ask why the sunlight not forever
Weaves rainbows o'er yon mountain
river,
Why aught should fail and fade that once is shown, 20
Why fear and dream and death and
birth
Cast on the daylight of this earth
Such gloom,—why man has such a scope
For love and hate, despondency and hope?
No voice from some sublimer world hath ever 25
To sage or poet these responses given—Therefore the names of Dæmon, Ghost, and Heaven,
Remain the records of their vain endeavor, Frail spells—whose uttered charm might not avail to sever,
From all we hear and all we see, 30
Doubt, chance, and mutability.
Thy light alone—like mist o'er mountains
driven,
Or music by the night wind sent,
Through strings of some still instrument,
Or moonlight on a midnight stream, 35
Gives grace and truth to life's unquiet
dream.

Love, Hope, and Self-esteem, like clouds depart
And come, for some uncertain moments
lent;
Man were immortal, and omnipotent,
Didst thou, unknown and awful as thou
art, 40
Keep with thy glorious train firm state within his heart.
Thou messenger of sympathies,
That wax and wane in lovers' eyes—
Thou—that to human thought art nourishment,
Like darkness to a dying flame! 45
Depart not as thy shadow came,
Depart not—lest the grave should be,
Like life and fear, a dark reality.

While yet a boy I sought for ghosts, and sped
Through many a listening chamber, cave, and ruin, 54

And starlight wood, with fearful steps pursuing Hopes of high talk with the departed
 dead.
 I called on poisonous names with which our youth is fed;
 I was not heard—I saw them not—
 When musing deeply on the lot 55
 Of life, at the sweet time when winds are wooing
 All vital things that wake to bring News of birds and blossoming,— Sudden, thy shadow fell on me;
 I shrieked, and clasped my hands in ecstasy! 60

I vowed that I would dedicate my powers
 To thee and thine—have I not kept the vow?
 With beating heart and streaming eyes, even now
 I call the phantoms of a thousand hours
 Each from his voiceless grave; they have in visioned bowers 65
 Of studious zeal or love's delight Outwatched with me the envious
 night—
 They know that never joy illumed my
 brow
 Unlinked with hope that thou wouldst
 free
 This world from its dark slavery; 70
 That thou—O awful LOVELINESS, Wouldst give whate'er these words cannot express.

The day becomes more solemn and serene
 When noon is past—there is a harmony
 In autumn, and a lustre in its sky, 75
 Which through the summer is not heard or
 seen,
 As if it could not be, as if it had not been!
 Thus let thy power, which like the
 truth
 Of nature on my passive youth
 Descended, to my onward life supply 80
 Its calm—to one who worships thee,
 And every form containing thee,
 Whom, SPIRIT fair, thy spells did
 bind
 fear himself, and love all human kind.

OZYMANDIAS

I met a traveller from an antique land
 Who said: Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
 Stand in the desert. Near them, on the sand,
 Half sunk, a shattered visage lies, whose
 frown,
 And wrinkled lip, and sneer of cold command, 5
 Tell that its sculptor well those passions
 read
 Which yet survive, (stamped on these lifeless things,)
 The hand that mocked them and the heart that fed:
 And on the pedestal these words appear:
 "My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
 Look on my works, ye Mighty, and de-
 spair!" 11
 Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
 Of that colossal wreck, boundless and
 bare
 The lone and level sands stretch far away.

ODE TO THE WEST WIND

I

O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
 Thou, from whose unseen presence the leaves dead
 Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
 Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic
 red,
 Pestilence-stricken multitudes: O thou, 5
 Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed
 The wingèd seeds, where they lie cold and
 low,
 Each like a corpse within its grave, until Thine azure sister of the spring shall
 blow
 Her clarion o'er the dreaming earth, and fill 10 (Driving sweet buds like flocks to feed in
 air)
 With living hues and odors plain and hill:

Wild Spirit, which art moving everywhere;
Destroyer and preserver; hear, oh hear!

II

Thou on whose stream, 'mid the steep sky's commotion, ¹⁵
Loose clouds like earth's decaying leaves are shed,
Shook from the tangled boughs of Heaven and Ocean,

Angels of rain and lightning: there are
spread

On the blue surface of thine airy surge, ¹⁹
Like the bright hair uplifted from the head

Of some fierce Mænad, even from the dim verge

Of the horizon to the zenith's height
The locks of the approaching storm. Thou dirge

Of the dying year, to which this closing
night

Will be the dome of a vast sepulchre, ²⁵
Vaulted with all thy congregated might

Of vapors, from whose solid atmosphere
Black rain, and fire, and hail will burst:
oh hear!

III

Thou who didst waken from his summer
dreams
The blue Mediterranean, where he lay, ³⁰
Lulled by the coil of his crystalline streams

Beside a pumice isle in Baiæ's bay,
And saw in sleep old palaces and towers
Quivering within the wave's intenser
day,

All overgrown with azure moss and flowers ³⁵

So sweet, the sense faints picturing them!
Thou

For whose path the Atlantic's level
powers

Cleave themselves into chasms, while far below

The sea-blooms and the oozy woods which wear

The sapless foliage of the ocean, know ⁴⁰

Thy voice, and suddenly grow gray with
fear,
And tremble and despoil themselves:
oh hear!

IV

If I were a dead leaf thou mightest bear;
If I were a swift cloud to fly with thee;
A wave to pant beneath thy power, and share ⁴⁵

The impulse of thy strength, only less
free

Than thou, O uncontrollable! If even
I were as in my boyhood, and could be

The comrade of thy wanderings over
heaven,

As then, when to outstrip thy skyey speed ⁵⁰

Scarce seemed a vision; I would ne'er have striven

As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh! lift me as a wave, a leaf, a cloud!

I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!

A heavy weight of hours has chained and bowed ⁵⁵

One too like thee: tameless, and swift,
and proud.

V

Make me thy lyre, even as the forest is:
What if my leaves are falling like its own!
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies

Will take from both a deep, autumnal tone, ⁶⁰

Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, spirit
fierce,

My spirit! Be thou me, impetuous one!

Drive my dead thoughts over the universe
Like withered leaves to quicken a new birth!

And, by the incantation of this verse, ⁶⁵

Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!

Be through my lips to unawakened earth

The trumpet of a prophecy! O wind, ⁶⁹
If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?

THE INDIAN SERENADE

I arise from dreams of thee
 In the first sweet sleep of night,
 When the winds are breathing low,
 And the stars are shining bright:
 I arise from dreams of thee, 5
 And a spirit in my feet Hath led me—who knows how?
 To thy chamber window, Sweet!

The wandering airs they faint
 On the dark, the silent stream— 10
 The Champak odors fail
 Like sweet thoughts in a dream;
 The nightingale's complaint,
 It dies upon her heart;—
 As I must on thine, 15
 Oh! belovèd as thou art!

Oh lift me from the grass!
 I die! I faint! I fail!
 Let thy love in kisses rain
 On my lips and eyelids pale. 20
 My cheek is cold and white, alas!
 My heart beats loud and fast;—
 Oh! press it to thine own again.
 Where it will break at last.

THE CLOUD

I bring fresh showers for the thirsting
 flowers,
 From the seas and the streams;
 I bear light shade for the leaves when laid
 In their noon-day dreams.
 From my wings are shaken the dews that waken 5
 The sweet buds every one,
 When rocked to rest on their mother's
 breast,
 As she dances about the sun.
 I wield the flail of the lashing hail,
 And whiten the green plains under,
 And then again I dissolve it in rain, 11
 And laugh as I pass in thunder.
 I sift the snow on the mountains below,
 And their great pines groan aghast;
 And all the night 'tis my pillow white, 15 While I sleep in the arms of the blast.

Sublime on the towers of my skyey bowers,
 Lightning my pilot sits;
 In a cavern under is fettered the thunder,—
 It struggles and howls at fits; 20
 Over earth and ocean, with gentle motion,
 This pilot is guiding me,
 Lured by the love of the genii that move
 In the depths of the purple sea:
 Over the rills, and the crags, and the hills;
 Over the lakes and the plains, 26
 Wherever he dream, under mountain or
 stream,
 The Spirit he loves remains;
 And I all the while bask in heaven's blue smile,
 Whilst he is dissolving in rains. 30
 The sanguine sunrise, with his meteor eyes,
 And his burning plumes outspread,
 Leaps on the back of my sailing rack,
 When the morning star shines dead,
 As on the jag of a mountain crag, 35
 Which an earthquake rocks and swings,
 An eagle alit one moment may sit
 In the light of its golden wings.
 And when sunset may breathe, from the lit sea beneath,
 It ardors of rest and of love, 40
 And the crimson pall of eve may fall
 From the depth of heaven above,
 With wings folded I rest, on mine airy
 nest,
 As still as a brooding dove.

That orbèd maiden with white fire laden,
 Whom mortals call the moon, 46 Glides glimmering o'er my fleece-like
 floor,
 By the midnight breezes strewn;
 And wherever the beat of her unseen feet,
 Which only the angels hear, 50
 May have broken the woof of my tent's thin roof,
 The stars peep behind her and peer;
 And I laugh to see them whirl and flee,
 Like a swarm of golden bees,
 When I widen the rent in my wind-built
 tent, 55
 Till the calm rivers, lakes, and seas,
 Like strips of the sky fallen through me on
 high,
 Are each paved with the moon and
 these.

I bind the sun's throne with a burning zone,
 And the moon's with a girdle of pearl; 60
 The volcanoes are dim, and the stars reel
 and swim,
 When the whirlwinds my banner
 unfurl.
 From cape to cape, with a bridge-like
 shape,
 Over a torrent sea,
 Sunbeam-proof, I hang like a roof, 65
 The mountains its columns be.
 The triumphal arch through which I march
 With hurricane, fire, and snow,
 When the powers of the air are chained to my chair,
 Is the million-colored bow; 70
 The sphere-fire above its soft colors wove,
 While the moist earth was laughing
 below.
 I am the daughter of earth and water,
 And the nursling of the sky;
 I pass through the pores of the ocean and
 shores; 75
 I change, but I cannot die.
 For after the rain when with never a stain
 The pavilion of heaven is bare,
 And the winds and sunbeams with their convex gleams
 Build up the blue dome of air, 80
 I silently laugh at my own cenotaph,
 And out of the caverns of rain,
 Like a child from the womb, like a ghost
 from the tomb,
 I arise and unbuild it again.

TO A SKYLARK

Hail to thee, blithe spirit!
 Bird thou never wert,
 That from heaven, or near it,
 Pourest thy full heart
 In profuse strains of unpremeditated art. 5

Higher still and higher
 From the earth thou springest
 Like a cloud of fire;
 The blue deep thou wingest,
 And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singest. 10

In the golden lightning
 Of the sunken sun,
 O'er which clouds are bright'ning,
 Thou dost float and run;
 Like an unbodied joy whose race is just begun. 15

The pale purple even Melts around thy flight;
 Like a star of heaven
 In the broad day-light
 Thou art unseen, but yet I hear thy shrill delight, 20

Keen as are the arrows
 Of that silver sphere,
 Whose intense lamp narrows
 In the white dawn clear, 24
 Until we hardly see, we feel that it is there.

All the earth and air
 With thy voice is loud,
 As, when night is bare,
 From one lonely cloud
 The moon rains out her beams, and heaven is overflowed. 30

What thou art we know not;
 What is most like thee?
 From rainbow clouds there flow not Drops so bright to see As from thy presence showers a rain of melody. 35

Like a poet hidden
 In the light of thought,
 Singing hymns unbidden,
 Till the world is wrought
 To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not: 40

Like a high-born maiden
 In a palace tower,
 Soothing her love-laden
 Soul in secret hour
 With music sweet as love, which overflows her bower: 45

Like a glow-worm golden
 In a dell of dew,
 Scattering unbeholden
 Its aerial hue
 Among the flowers and grass which screen it from the view: 50

Like a rose embowered
 In its own green leaves,
 By warm winds deflowered,
 Till the scent it gives Makes faint with too much sweet these heavy-winged thieves. 55

Sound of vernal showers
 On the twinkling grass,
 Rain-awakened flowers,
 All that ever was Joyous, and clear, and fresh, thy music doth surpass. 60

Teach us, sprite or bird,
 What sweet thoughts are thine,
 I have never heard
 Praise of love or wine
 That panted forth a flood of rapture so divine: 65

Chorus Hymenæal,
 Or triumphal chant,
 Matched with thine would be all
 But an empty vaunt,
 A thing wherein we feel there is some hidden want. 70

What objects are the fountains
 Of thy happy strain?
 What fields, or waves, or mountains?
 What shapes of sky or plain?
 What love of thine own kind? what ignorance of pain? 75

With thy clear keen joyance Languor cannot be:
 Shadow of annoyance
 Never came near thee:
 Thou lovest, but ne'er knew love's sad satiety. 80

Waking or asleep,
 Thou of death must deem Things more true and deep
 Than we mortals dream,
 Or how could thy notes flow in such a crystal stream? 85

We look before and after,
 And pine for what is not:
 Our sincerest laughter
 With some pain is fraught;
 Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought. 90

Yet if we could scorn
 Hate, and pride, and fear;
 If we were things born
 Not to shed a tear,
 I know not how thy joy we ever should come near. 95

Better than all measures
 Of delightful sound,
 Better than all treasures
 That in books are found, Thy skill to poet were, thou scorner of the
 ground! 100

Teach me half the gladness
 That thy brain must know,
 Such harmonious madness
 From my lips would flow,
 The world should listen then, as I am listening now. 105

TO ———

Music, when soft voices die,
 Vibrates in the memory—
 Odors, when sweet violets sicken,
 Live within the sense they quicken.
 Rose-leaves, when the rose is dead, 5
 Are heaped for the beloved's bed;
 And so thy thoughts, when thou art gone,
 Love itself shall slumber on.

STANZAS

WRITTEN IN DEJECTION NEAR NAPLES

The sun is warm, the sky is clear,
 The waves are dancing fast and
 bright,
 Blue isles and snowy mountains wear
 The purple noon's transparent might;
 The breath of the moist earth is light, 5
 Around its unexpanded buds;
 Like many a voice of one delight,
 The winds, the birds, the ocean floods,
 The City's voice itself is soft like Solitude's.

I see the Deep's untrampled floor 10
 With green and purple seaweeds
 strown;

I see the waves upon the shore,
 Like light dissolved in star-showers,
 thrown:
 I sit upon the sands alone;
 The lightning of the noon-tide ocean 15
 Is flashing round me, and a tone
 Arises from its measured motion, How sweet! did any heart now share in my emotion.

Alas! I have nor hope nor health,
 Nor peace within nor calm around, 20
 Nor that content surpassing wealth
 The sage in meditation found,
 And walked with inward glory
 crowned—
 Nor fame, nor power, nor love, nor leisure.
 Others I see whom these surround—25
 Smiling they live, and call life pleasure;—
 To me that cup has been dealt in another measure.

Yet now despair itself is mild,
 Even as the winds and waters are;
 I could lie down like a tired child, 30
 And weep away the life of care
 Which I have borne and yet must
 bear,
 Till death like sleep might steal on me,
 And I might feel in the warm air
 My cheek grow cold, and hear the sea
 Breathe o'er my dying brain its last monotony. 35

Some might lament that I were cold,
 As I, when this sweet day is gone,
 Which my lost heart, too soon grown old,
 Insults with this untimely moan; 40
 They might lament—for I am one Whom men love not,—and yet regret,
 Unlike this day, which, when the sun
 Shall on its stainless glory set,
 Will linger, though enjoyed, like joy in memory yet. 45

THE WORLD'S WANDERERS

Tell me, thou Star, whose wings of light
 Speed thee in thy fiery flight,
 In what cavern of the night
 Will thy pinions close now?

Tell me, Moon, thou pale and gray 5
 Pilgrim of Heaven's homeless way,
 In what depth of night or day
 Seekest thou repose now?

Weary Wind, who wanderest
 Like the world's rejected guest, 1.
 Hast thou still some secret nest
 On the tree or billow?

TIME

Unfathomable Sea! whose wayes are years,
 Ocean of Time, whose waters of deep
 woe
 Are brackish with the salt of human tears!
 Thou shoreless flood, which in thy ebb and flow
 Claspest the limits of mortality, 5
 And sick of prey, yet howling on for
 more, Vomitest thy wrecks on its inhospitable
 shore;
 Treacherous in calm, and terrible in storm,
 Who shall put forth on thee,
 Unfathomable Sea? 10

TO NIGHT

Swiftly walk o'er the western wave, Spirit of Night!
 Out of the misty eastern cave,
 Where all the long and lone daylight
 Thou wovest dreams of joy and fear, 5
 Which make thee terrible and dear,—
 . Swift be thy flight!

Wrap thy form in a mantle gray,
 Star in-wrought!
 Blind with thine hair the eyes of Day: 10
 Kiss her until she be wearied out;
 Then wander o'er city, and sea, and land,
 Touching all with thine opiate wand—
 Come, long sought!

When I arose and saw the dawn, 15
 I sighed for thee;
 When light rode high, and the dew was
 gone,
 And noon lay heavy on flower and tree,
 And the weary Day turned to his rest,
 Lingered like an unloved guest, 20
 I sighed for thee.

Thy brother Death came, and cried,
 Wouldst thou me?
 Thy sweet child Sleep, the filmy-eyed,
 Murmured like a noon-tide bee, 25
 Shall I nestle near thy side?
 Wouldst thou me?—And I replied,
 No, not thee!

Death will come when thou art dead,
 Soon, too soon— 30
 Sleep will come when thou art fled;
 Of neither would I ask the boon
 I ask of thee, beloved Night—
 Swift be thine approaching flight,
 Come soon, soon! 35

TO ———

One word is too often profaned
 For me to profane it,
 One feeling too falsely disdained
 For thee to disdain it.
 One hope is too like despair 5
 For prudence to smother,
 And pity from thee more dear
 Than that from another.

* I can give not what men call love,
 But wilt thou accept not 10
 The worship the heart lifts above
 And the Heavens reject not,—
 The desire of the moth for the star,
 Of the night for the morrow,
 The devotion to something afar 15
 From the sphere of our sorrow?

PROMETHEUS UNBOUND

From ACT II, SCENES IV AND V

Spirit of the Hour: My coursers are fed with the lightning,
 They drink of the whirlwind's stream,
 And when the red morning is bright'ning
 They bathe in the fresh sunbeam;
 They have strength for their swiftness
 I deem, 5
 Then ascend with me, daughter of Ocean.

* I desire: and their speed makes night
 kindle;
 I fear: they outstrip the Typhoon;

Ere the cloud piled on Atlas can dwindle
 We encircle the earth and the moon: 10
 We shall rest from long labors at noon:
 Then ascend with me, daughter of Ocean.
 On the brink of the night and the morning
 My coursers are wont to respire;
 But the earth has just whispered a warn-
 ing 15
 That their flight must be swifter than
 fire:
 They shall drink the hot speed of desire!

From ACT II, SCENE V

Voice in the Air, singing: Life of Life! thy lips enkindle
 With their love the breath between
 them;
 And thy smiles before they dwindle
 Make the cold air fire, then screen them
 In those looks, where whoso gazes 5
 Faints, entangled in their mazes.
 Child of Light! thy limbs are burning 5
 Through the vest which seems to hide
 them;
 As the radiant lines of morning
 Through the clouds ere they divide
 them; 10
 And this atmosphere divinest
 Shrouds thee whereso'er thou shinest.
 Fair are others; none beholds thee,
 But thy voice sounds low and tender
 Like the fairest, for it folds thee 15
 From the sight, that liquid splendor,
 And all feel, yet see thee never,
 As I feel now, lost for ever!

Lamp of Earth! where'er thou movest
 Its dim shapes are clad with brightness,
 And the souls of whom thou lovest 21
 Walk upon the winds with lightness,
 Till they fail, as I am failing,
 Dizzy, lost, yet unbewailing!

From ACT IV

SONG

Here, oh, here
 We bear the bier
 Of the Father of many a cancelled year!
 Spectres we
 Of the dead Hours be, 5
 We bear Time to his tomb in eternity.

Strew, oh, strew
Hair, not yew!
Wet the dusty pall with tears, not dew!
Be the faded flowers 10
Of Death's bare bowers
Spread on the corpse of the King of Hours!

Haste, oh, haste!
As shades are chased Trembling, by day, from heaven's blue
waste. 15
We melt away
Like dissolving spray
From the children of a diviner day,
With the lullaby
Of winds that die 20
On the bosom of their own harmony!

From ACT IV

Demogorgon: This is the day, which down the void abysm
At the Earth-born's spell yawns for Heaven's despotism,
And Conquest is dragged captive
through the deep:
Love, from its awful throne of patient
power
In the wise heart, from the last giddy
hour 5
Of dead endurance, from the slippery,
steep,
And narrow verge of crag-like agony,
springs
And folds over the world its healing wings.

Gentleness, Virtue, Wisdom, and Endurance,
These are the seals of that most firm assurance 10
Which bars the pit over Destruction's
strength;
And if, with infirm hand, Eternity,
Mother of many acts and hours, should free
The serpent that would clasp her with his length;
These are the spells by which to re-assume
An empire o'er the disentangled doom. 16

To suffer woes which Hope thinks infinite;
To forgive wrongs darker than death or
night;
To defy Power, which seems omnipo-
tent;

To love, and bear; to hope till Hope creates 20
From its own wreck the thing it contemplates;
Neither to change, nor falter, nor
repent;
This, like thy glory, Titan, is to be Good, great, and joyous, beautiful, and
free;
This is alone Life, Joy, Empire, and Victory. 25

ADONAIIS

I weep for Adonais—he is dead!
Oh, weep for Adonais! though our tears
Thaw not the frost which binds so dear
a head!
And thou, sad Hour, selected from all
years
To mourn our loss, rouse thy obscure compeers, 5
And teach them thine own sorrow! Say:
"With me
Died Adonais; till the Future dares Forget the Past, his fate and fame shall
be
An echo and a light unto eternity!"

Where wert thou, mighty Mother, when
he lay,
When thy Son lay, pierced by the shaft which flies
In darkness? where was lorn Urania
When Adonais died? With veiled eyes,
'Mid listening Echoes, in her Paradise
She sate, while one, with soft enamored
breath, 15
Rekindled all the fading melodies,
With which, like flowers that mock the corse beneath,
He had adorned and hid the coming bulk of death.

Oh, weep for Adonais—he is dead!
Wake, melancholy Mother, wake and
weep! 20
Yet wherefore? Quench within their burning bed
Thy fiery tears, and let thy loud heart
keep Like his, a mute and uncomplaining
sleep;

For he is gone where all things wise and
fair
Descend;—oh, dream not that the amorous Deep²⁵
Will yet restore him to the vital air;
Death feeds on his mute voice, and laughs
at our despair.

Most musical of mourners, weep again!
Lament anew, Urania!—He died,—
Who was the Sire of an immortal strain, Blind, old, and lonely, when his country's pride,³¹
The priest, the slave, and the liberticide, Trampled and mocked with many a loathèd rite
Of lust and blood; he went, unterrified,
Into the gulf of death; but his clear
Sprite³⁵
Yet reigns o'er earth; the third among the sons of light.

Most musical of mourners, weep anew!
Not all to that bright station dared to climb;
And happier they their happiness who
knew,
Whose tapers yet burn through that night of time⁴⁰
In which suns perished; others more
sublime,
Struck by the envious wrath of man or
God,
Have sunk, extinct in their refulgent
prime;
And some yet live, treading the thorny
road,
Which leads, through toil and hate, to Fame's serene abode.⁴⁵

But now, thy youngest, dearest one has
perished,
The nursling of thy widowhood, who
grew,
Like a pale flower by some sad maiden cherished,
And fed with true love tears, instead of dew;
Most musical of mourners, weep anew!
Thy extreme¹ hope, the loveliest and the last,⁵¹
The bloom, whose petals, nipped before they blew,

Died on the promise of the fruit, is
waste;
The broken lily lies—the storm is overpast.

To that high Capital, where kingly
Death⁵⁵
Keeps his pale court in beauty and
decay.
He came; and bought, with price of purest breath,
A grave among the eternal.—Come
away!
Haste, while the vault of blue Italian
day
Is yet his fitting charnel-roof! while still⁶⁰
He lies, as if in dewy sleep he lay;
Awake him not! surely he takes his fill
Of deep and liquid rest, forgetful of all ill.

He will awake no more, oh, never
more!— Within the twilight chamber spreads apace,⁶⁵
The shadow of white Death, and at the
door
Invisible Corruption waits to trace
His extreme way to her dim dwelling-
place;
The eternal Hungers sits, but pity and awe Soothe her pale rage, nor dares she to deface⁷⁰
So fair a prey, till darkness, and the law
Of change, shall o'er his sleep the mortal curtain draw.

Oh, weep for Adonais!—The quick
Dreams,
The passion-wingèd Ministers of
thought,
Who were his flocks, whom near the living streams⁷⁵
Of his young spirit he fed, and whom he taught
The love which was its music, wander
not,— Wander no more, from kindling brain to brain,
But droop there, whence they sprung;
and mourn their lot Round the cold heart, where, after their sweet pain,⁸⁰
They ne'er will gather strength, or find a home again.

And one with trembling hands clasps
 his cold head,
 And fans him with her moonlight
 wings, and cries:
 "Our love, our hope, our sorrow, is not dead;
 See, on the silken fringe of his faint
 eyes, 85
 Like dew upon a sleeping flower, there
 lies
 A tear some Dream has loosened from his brain."
 Lost Angel of a ruined Paradise!
 She knew not 'twas her own; as with no stain
 She faded, like a cloud which had outwept its rain. 90

One from a lucid urn of starry dew
 Washed his light limbs as if embalming
 them;
 Another clipped her profuse locks, and threw
 The wreath upon him, like an anadem,¹
 Which frozen tears instead of pearls
 begem; 95
 Another in her wilful grief would break
 Her bow and wingèd reeds, as if to stem
 A greater loss with one which was more
 weak;
 And dull the barbèd fire against his frozen cheek.

Another Splendor on his mouth alit, 100
 That mouth, whence it was wont to draw the breath
 Which gave it strength to pierce the guarded wit,
 And pass into the panting heart beneath With lightning and with music: the damp death 104
 Quenched its caress upon his icy lips;
 And, as a dying meteor stains a wreath
 Of moonlight vapor, which the cold night clips,
 flushed through his pale limbs, and passed to its eclipse.

And others came . . . Desires and Adorations,
 Wingèd Persuasions and veiled Destinies, 110

¹ chaplet.

Splendours, and Glooms, and glimmering Incarnations
 Of hopes and fears, and twilight Phantasies;
 And Sorrow, with her family of Sighs,
 And Pleasure, blind with tears, led by the gleam
 Of her own dying smile instead of eyes,
 Came in slow pomp,—the moving pomp might seem 116
 Like pageantry of mist on an autumnal
 stream.

All he had loved, and moulded into
 thought,
 From shape, and hue, and odor, and
 sweet sound,
 Lamented Adonais. Morning sought
 Her eastern watch-tower, and her hair unbound, 121
 Wet with the tears which should adorn
 the ground,
 Dimmed the aërial eyes that kindle day;
 Afar the melancholy thunder moaned,
 Pale Ocean in unquiet slumber lay; 125
 And the wild winds flew round, sobbing in their dismay.

Lost Echo sits amid the voiceless mountains,
 And feeds her grief with his remembered
 lay,
 And will no more reply to winds or fountains,
 Or amorous birds perched on the young green spray, 130
 Or herdsman's horn, or bell at closing
 day;
 Since she can mimic not his lips, more
 dear
 Than those for whose disdain she pined away
 Into a shadow of all sounds:—a drear Murmur, between their songs, is all the woodmen hear. 135

Grief made the young Spring wild, and she threw down
 Her kindling buds, as if she Autumn
 were,
 Or they dead leaves; since her delight
 is flown,
 For whom should she have waked the sullen year?

To Phœbus was not Hyacinth so dear
 Nor to himself Narcissus, as to both ¹⁴¹ Thou, Adonais: wan they stand and sere
 Amid the faint companions of their
 youth,
 With dew all turned to tears; odor, to sighing ruth.

Thy spirit's sister, the lorn nightingale, Mourns not her mate with such melodious pain; ¹⁴⁶
 Not so the eagle, who like thee could scale
 Heaven, and could nourish in the sun's domain
 Her mighty youth with morning, doth complain
 Soaring and screaming round her empty nest, ¹⁵⁰
 As Albion wails for thee: the curse of Cain
 Light on his head who pierced thy innocent breast,
 And scared the angel soul that was its earthly guest!

Ah, woe is me! Winter is come and gone,
 But grief returns with the revolving year; ¹⁵⁵
 The airs and streams renew their joyous tone;
 The ants, the bees, the swallows re-
 appear;
 Fresh leaves and flowers deck the dead
 Seasons' bier;
 The amorous birds now pair in every brake,
 And build their mossy homes in field
 and brere;¹ ¹⁶⁰
 And the green lizard, and the golden snake,
 Like unimprisoned flames, out of their trance awake.

Through wood and stream and field and hill and ocean
 A quickening life from the Earth's heart has burst
 As it has ever done, with change and motion ¹⁶⁵
 From the great morning of the world when first

¹ briar.

God dawned on Chaos; in its stream immersed
 The lamps of Heaven flash with a softer
 light;
 All baser things pant with life's sacred thirst;
 Diffuse themselves; and spend in love's delight ¹⁷⁰
 The beauty and the joy of their renewed
 night.

The leprous corpse touched by this spirit tender
 Exhales itself in flowers of gentle
 breath;
 Like incarnations of the stars, when splendor
 Is changed to fragrance, they illumine death ¹⁷⁵
 And mock the merry worm that wakes
 beneath;
 Naught we know, dies. Shall that alone which knows
 Be as a sword consumed before the sheath
 By sightless² lightning?—th' intense atom glows
 A moment, then is quenched in a most cold repose. ¹⁸⁰

Alas! that all we loved of him should be,
 But for our grief, as if it had not been,
 And grief itself be mortal! Woe is me!
 Whence are we, and why are we? of what scene
 The actors or spectators? Great and mean
 Meet massed in death, who lends what life must borrow. ¹⁸⁶
 As long as skies are blue, and fields are
 green,
 Evening must usher night, night urge the morrow,
 Month follow month with woe, and year
 wake year to sorrow.

He will awake no more, oh, never more!
 "Wake thou," cried Misery, "childless Mother, rise ¹⁹¹
 Out of thy sleep, and slake, in thy heart's core,
 A wound more fierce than his with tears and sighs."

² invisible.

And all the Dreams that watched Urania's eyes,
 And all the Echoes whom their sister's song ¹⁹⁵
 Had held in holy silence, cried:
 "Arise!"
 Swift as a Thought by the snake
 Memory stung,
 From her ambrosial rest the fading
 Splendor sprung.

She rose like an autumnal Night, that
 springs
 Out of the East, and follows wild and drear ²⁰⁰
 The golden Day, which, on eternal
 wings,
 Even as a ghost abandoning a bier,
 Had left the Earth a corpse. Sorrow and fear
 So struck, so roused, so rapt Urania;
 So saddened round her like an atmosphere ²⁰⁵
 Of stormy mist, so swept her on her
 way
 Even to the mournful place where Adonais
 lay.

Out of her secret Paradise she sped, Through camps and cities rough with stone, and steel,
 And human hearts, which to her æry
 tread ²¹⁰
 Yielding not, wounded the invisible Palms of her tender feet where'er they
 fell:
 And barbèd tongues, and thoughts more sharp than they,
 Rent the soft Form they never could repel,
 Whose sacred blood, like the young tears of May, ²¹⁵
 Paved with eternal flowers that unde-serving way.

In the death chamber for a moment
 Death,
 Shamed by the presence of that living
 Might,
 Blushed to annihilation, and the breath
 Revisited those lips, and life's pale
 light ²²⁰
 Flashed through those limbs so late her dear delight.

"Leave me not wild and drear and comfortless,
 As silent lightning leaves the starless
 night!
 Leave me not!" cried Urania: her distress
 Roused Death: Death rose and smiled, and met her vain caress. ²²⁵

"Stay yet awhile! speak to me once
 again;
 Kiss me, so long but as a kiss may live;
 And in my heartless breast and burning brain
 That word, that kiss, shall all thoughts else survive,
 With food of saddest memory kept alive, ²³⁰
 Now thou art dead, as if it were a part Of thee, my Adonais! I would give
 All that I am to be as thou now art!
 But I am chained to Time, and cannot thence depart!

"Oh gentle child, beautiful as thou wert, ²³⁵
 Why didst thou leave the trodden paths of men
 Too soon, and with weak hands though mighty heart
 Dare the unpastured dragon in his den?
 Defenceless as thou wert, oh where was then Wisdom the mirrored shield, or scorn
 the spear? ²⁴⁰
 Or hadst thou waited the full cycle,
 when Thy spirit should have filled its crescent
 sphere,
 The monsters of life's waste had fled from thee like deer.

"The herded wolves, bold only to pursue;
 The obscene ravens, clamorous o'er the dead; ²⁴⁵
 The vultures to the conqueror's banner
 true,
 Who feed where Desolation first has
 fed,
 And whose wings rain contagion;—how they fled,
 When like Apollo, from his golden bow,
 The Pythian of the age one arrow sped

And smiled!—The spoilers tempt no second blow; 251
They fawn on the proud feet that spurn them lying low.

“The sun comes forth, and many reptiles spawn;
He sets, and each ephemeral insect
then
Is gathered into death without a
dawn, 255
And the immortal stars awake again;
So is it in the world of living men:
A godlike mind soars forth, in its de-
light
Making earth bare and veiling heaven, and when
It sinks, the swarms that dimmed or shared its light 260 Leave to its kindred lamps the spirit’s awful night.”

Thus ceased she: and the mountain shepherds came,
Their garlands sere, their magic mantles rent;
The Pilgrim of Eternity, whose fame Over his living head like Heaven is bent, 265
An early but enduring monument, Came, veiling all the lightnings of his
song
In sorrow; from her wilds Ierne sent
The sweetest lyrist of her saddest
wrong,
And love taught grief to fall like music
from his tongue. 270

Midst others of less note, came one frail Form,
A phantom among men, companion-
less
As the last cloud of an expiring storm Whose thunder is its knell; he, as I guess,
Had gazed on Nature’s naked loveli-
ness, 275
Actæon-like, and now he fled astray
With feeble steps o’er the world’s wilderness,
And his own thoughts, along that rugged way,
Pursued, like raging hounds, their father and their prey.

A pardlike¹ Spirit beautiful and swift—
A Love in desolation masked;—a
Power 281
Girt round with weakness;—it can scarce uplift
The weight of the superincumbent
hour;
It is a dying lamp, a falling shower,
A breaking billow;—even whilst we
speak 285
Is it not broken? On the withering
flower
The killing sun smiles brightly; on a cheek
The life can burn in blood, even while the heart may break.

His head was bound with pansies over-
blown,
And faded violets, white, and pied, and
blue; 290
And a light spear topped with a cypress
cone,
Round whose rude shaft dark ivy tresses
grew
Yet dripping with the forest’s noonday
dew,
Vibrated, as the ever-beating heart
Shook the weak hand that grasped it;
of that crew 295
He came the last, neglected and apart;
A herd-abandoned deer, struck by the hunter’s dart.

All stood aloof, and at his partial moan Smiled through their tears; well knew that gentle band 299
Who in another’s fate now wept his own;
As, in the accents of an unknown land,
He sung new sorrow; sad Uralia scanned
The Stranger’s mien, and murmured:
“Who art thou?”
He answered not, but with a sudden
hand
Made bare his branded and ensanguined
brow, 305
Which was like Cain’s or Christ’s—Oh!
that it should be so!

What softer voice is hushed over the
dead?
Athwart what brow is that dark mantle thrown?

¹ leopardlike.

What form leans sadly o'er the white death-bed,
 In mockery of monumental stone, 310
 The heavy heart heaving without a
 moan?
 If it be He, who, gentlest of the wise, Taught, soothed, loved, honored the departed one,
 Let me not vex with inharmonious sighs
 The silence of that heart's accepted sacrifice. 315

Our Adonais has drunk poison—oh!
 What deaf and viperous murderer could crown
 Life's early cup with such a draught of
 woe?
 The nameless worm would now itself
 disown:
 It felt, yet could escape the magic tone Whose prelude held all envy, hate, and
 wrong, 321
 But what was howling in one breast
 alone,
 Silent with expectation of the song, .
 Whose master's hand is cold, whose silver lyre unstrung.

Live thou, whose infamy is not thy
 fame! 325
 Live! fear no heavier chastisement from
 me,
 Thou noteless blot on a remembered
 name!
 But be thyself, and know thyself to
 be!
 And ever at thy season be thou free
 To spill the venom when thy fangs o'er-
 flow: 330
 Remorse and Self-contempt shall cling
 to thee;
 Hot Shame shall burn upon thy secret
 brow,
 And like a beaten hound tremble thou shalt—as now.

Nor let us weep that our delight is fled Far from these carrion kites that scream
 below; 335
 He wakes or sleeps with the enduring
 dead;
 Thou canst not soar where he is sitting
 now.—

Dust to the dust! but the pure spirit shall flow
 Back to the burning fountain whence
 it came,
 A portion of the Eternal, which must
 glow 340
 Through time and change, unquench-ably the same,
 Whilst thy cold embers choke the sordid hearth of shame.

Peace, peace! he is not dead, he doth not sleep—
 He hath awakened from the dream of life—
 'Tis we who, lost in stormy visions,
 keep 345
 With phantoms an unprofitable strife,
 And in mad trance strike with our spirit's knife
 Invulnerable nothings.—We decay Like corpses in a charnel; fear and grief
 Convulse us and consume us day by
 day, 350
 And cold hopes swarm like worms within our living clay

He has outsoared the shadow of our
 night;
 Envy and calumny and hate and pain,
 And that unrest which men miscall de-
 light,
 Can touch him not and torture not
 again; 355
 From the contagion of the world's slow
 stain
 He is secure, and now can never mourn
 A heart grown cold, a head grown grey
 in vain;
 Nor, when the spirit's self has ceased to burn,
 With sparkless ashes load an unlamented
 urn. 360

He lives, he wakes—'tis Death is dead,
 not he;
 Mourn not for Adonais.—Thou young
 Dawn,
 Turn all thy dew to splendor, for from
 thee
 The spirit thou lamentest is not gone;
 Ye caverns and ye forests, cease to
 moan! 365

Cease, ye faint flowers and fountains,
and thou Air,
Which like a mourning veil thy scarf hadst thrown O'er the abandoned Earth, now leave it bare Even to the joyous stars which smile on its despair!

He is made one with Nature: there is
heard 370
His voice in all her music, from the
moan
Of thunder, to the song of night's sweet bird;
He is a presence to be felt and known
In darkness and in light, from herb and
stone,
Spreading itself where'er that Power
may move 375
Which has withdrawn his being to its
own;
Which wields the world with neverwearied love,
Sustains it from beneath, and kindles it
above.

He is a portion of the loveliness Which once he made more lovely: he doth bear 380
His part, while the one Spirit's plastic stress Sweeps through the dull dense world, compelling there
All new successions to the forms they
wear;
Torturing th' unwilling dross that checks its flight
To its own likeness, as each mass may
bear; 385
And bursting in its beauty and its
might
From trees and beasts and men into the Heaven's light.

The splendors of the firmament of time
May be eclipsed, but are extinguished
not;
Like stars to their appointed height
they climb, 390
And death is a low mist which cannot blot
The brightness it may veil. When lofty thought

Lifts a young heart above its mortal lair,
And love and life contend in it, for what Shall be its earthly doom, the dead live
there 395
And move like winds of light on dark and stormy air.

The inheritors of unfulfilled renown
Rose from their thrones, built beyond mortal thought,
Far in the Unapparent. Chatterton
Rose pale, his solemn agony had not 400
Yet faded from him; Sidney, as he fought
And as he fell and as he lived and loved,
Sublimely mild, a Spirit without spot,
Arose; and Lucan, by his death approved;
Oblivion, as they rose, shrank like a thing
reproved. 405

And many more, whose names on Earth
are dark,
But whose transmitted effluence cannot
die
So long as fire outlives the parent spark,
Rose, robed in dazzling immortality.
"Thou art become as one of us," they
cry, 410
"It was for thee yon kingless sphere has
long
Swung blind in unascended majesty,
Silent alone amid an Heaven of Song.
Assume thy winged throne, thou Vesper of our throng!"

Who mourns for Adonais? Oh come
forth, 415
Fond wretch! and know thyself and him aright,
Clasp with thy panting soul the pendulous Earth;
As from a centre, dart thy spirit's light Beyond all worlds, until its spacious
might Sate the void circumference: then shrink 420
Even to a point within our day and
night;
And keep thy heart light, lest it make thee sink,
When hope has kindled hope, and lured thee to the brink.

Or go to Rome, which is the sepulchre,
 Oh! not of him, but of our joy: 'tis naught⁴²⁵
 That ages, empires, and religions there Lie buried in the ravage they have
 wrought;
 For such as he can lend,—they borrow
 not Glory from those who made the world their prey;
 And he is gathered to the kings of thought⁴³⁰
 Who waged contention with their time's
 decay,
 And of the past are all that cannot pass
 away.

Go thou to Rome,—at once the Paradise,
 The grave, the city, and the wilderness;
 And where its wrecks like shattered mountains rise,⁴³⁵
 And flowering weeds and fragrant cospes
 dress
 The bones of Desolation's nakedness Pass, till the Spirit of the spot shall lead
 Thy footsteps to a slope of green access Where, like an infant's smile, over the dead⁴⁴⁰
 A light of laughing flowers along the grass is spread.

And grey walls moulder round, on which dull Time Feeds, like slow fire upon a hoary
 brand;
 And one keen pyramid with wedge sub-
 lime,
 Pavilions the dust of him who planned⁴⁴⁵
 This refuge for his memory, doth stand Like flame transformed to marble; and
 beneath,
 A field is spread, on which a newer band
 Have pitched in Heaven's smile their camp of death,
 Welcoming him we lose with scarce extinguished breath.⁴⁵⁰

Here pause: these graves are all too young as yet
 To have outgrown the sorrow which consigned

Its charge to each; and if the seal is set,
 Here, on one fountain of a mourning
 mind,
 Break it not thou! too surely shalt thou find⁴⁵⁵
 Thine own well full, if thou returnest
 home,
 Of tears and gall. From the world's bitter wind
 Seek shelter in the shadow of the tomb.
 What Adonais is, why fear we to become?

The One remains, the many change and pass;⁴⁶⁰
 Heaven's light forever shines, Earth's shadows fly;
 Life, like a dome of many-colored glass,
 Stains the white radiance of Eternity,
 Until Death tramples it to fragments.—
 Die,
 If thou wouldst be with that which thou dost seek!⁴⁶⁵
 Follow where all is fled!—Rome's azure
 sky,
 Flowers, ruins, statues, music, words,
 are weak
 The glory they transfuse with fitting truth to speak.

Why linger, why turn back, why shrink,
 my Heart?
 Thy hopes are gone before: from all things here⁴⁷⁰
 They have departed; thou shouldst now
 depart!
 A light is past from the revolving
 year,
 And man, and woman; and what still is
 dear
 Attracts to crush, repels to make thee wither.
 The soft sky smiles,—the low wind whispers near;⁴⁷⁵
 'Tis Adonais calls! oh, hasten thither,
 No more let Life divide what Death can join together.

That Light whose smile kindles the Universe,
 That Beauty in which all things work
 and move,

That Benediction which the eclipsing
Curse 480
Of birth can quench not, that sustaining
Love
Which, through the web of being blindly wove
By man and beast and earth and air and
sea,
Burns bright or dim, as each are mirrors of
The fire for which all thirst, now beams
on me, 485
Consuming the last clouds of cold mortality.

The breath whose might I have invoked in song
Descends on me; my spirit's bark is driven
Far from the shore, far from the trembling throng
Whose sails were never to the tempest
given; 490
The massy earth and spherèd skies are riven!
I am borne darkly, fearfully, afar;
Whilst, burning through the inmost veil of Heaven,
The soul of Adonais, like a star, 494
Beacons from the abode where the Eternal
are.

FINAL CHORUS FROM HELLAS

The world's great age begins anew,
The golden years return,
The earth doth like a snake renew
Her winter weeds outworn:
Heaven smiles, and faiths and empires
gleam, 5
Like wrecks of a dissolving dream.

A brighter Hellas rears its mountains
From waves serener far;
A new Peneus rolls his fountains
Against the morning-star. 10
Where fairer Tempes bloom, there sleep
Young Cyclads on a sunnier deep:

A loftier Argo cleaves the main,
Fraught with a later prize;
Another Orpheus sings again, 15
And loves, and weeps, and dies.

A new Ulysses leaves once more Calypso for his native shore.

Oh, write no more the tale of Troy,
If earth Death's scroll must be! 20
Nor mix with Laian rage the joy
Which dawns upon the free:
Although a subtler Sphinx renew Riddles of death Thebes never knew.

Another Athens shall arise, 25
And to remoter time
Bequeath, like sunset to the skies,
The splendor of its prime;
And leave, if naught so bright may live,
All earth can take or Heaven can give. 30

Saturn and Love their long repose
Shall burst, more bright and good Than all who fell, than One who rose,
Than many unsubdued:
Not gold, not blood, their altar dowers, 35
But votive tears and symbol flowers.

Oh, cease! must hate and death return?
Cease! must men kill and die?
Cease! drain not to its dregs the urn
Of bitter prophecy. 40
The world is weary of the past,
Oh, might it die or rest at last!

WHEN THE LAMP IS SHATTERED

When the lamp is shattered,
The light in the dust lies dead;
When the cloud is scattered,
The rainbow's glory is shed.
When the lute is broken, 5
Sweet tones are remembered not;
When the lips have spoken,
Loved accents are soon forgot.

As music and splendor
Survive not the lamp and the lute, 10
The heart's echoes render
No song when the spirit is mute:—
No song but sad dirges,
Like the wind through a ruined cell,
Or the mournful surges 15
That ring the dead seaman's knell.

When hearts have once mingled,
Love first leaves the well-built nest;
The weak one is singled 20
To endure what it once possessed.

O Love! who bewailest
The frailty of all things here,
Why choose you the frailest
For your cradle, your home, and your bier?

Its passions will rock thee 25
As the storms rock the ravens on high:
Bright reason will mock thee,
Like the sun from a wintry sky.
From thy nest every rafter 30
Will rot, and thine eagle home
Leave thee naked to laughter,
When leaves fall and cold winds come.

WITH A GUITAR, TO JANE

Ariel to Miranda:—Take
This slave of Music, for the sake
Of him who is the slave of thee,
And teach it all the harmony
In which thou canst, and only thou, 5
Make the delighted spirit glow,
Till joy denies itself again,
And, too intense, is turned to pain;
For by permission and command
Of thine own Prince Ferdinand, 10
Poor Ariel sends this silent token
Of more than ever can be spoken;
Your guardian spirit, Ariel, who,
From life to life, must still pursue
Your happiness;—for thus alone 15
Can Ariel ever find his own.
From Prospero's enchanted cell,
As the mighty verses tell,
To the throne of Naples, he Lit you o'er the trackless sea, 20
Flitting on, your prow before,
Like a living meteor.
When you die, the silent Moon,
In her interlunar swoon,
Is not sadder in her cell 25
Than deserted Ariel.
When you live again on earth,
Like an unseen star of birth,
Ariel guides you o'er the sea
Of life from your nativity. 30
Many changes have been run,
Since Ferdinand and you begun
Your course of love, and Ariel still Has tracked your steps, and served your
will;

Now, in humbler, happier lot, 35
This is all remembered not;
And now, alas! the poor sprite is Imprisoned, for some fault of his,
In a body like a grave;—
From you he only dares to crave, 40
For his service and his sorrow,
A smile to-day, a song to-morrow.

The artist who this idol wrought,
To echo all harmonious thought,
Felled a tree, while on the steep 45
The woods were in their winter sleep,
Rocked in that repose divine
On the wind-swept Apennine;
And dreaming, some of Autumn past,
And some of Spring approaching fast, 50
And some of April buds and showers,
And some of songs in July bowers,
And all of love; and so this tree,—
Oh, that such our death may be!—

Died in sleep, and felt no pain, 55
To live in happier form again:
From which, beneath Heaven's fairest
star,

The artist wrought this loved Guitar,
And taught it justly to reply,
To all who question skilfully, 60
In language gentle as thine own;
Whispering in enamored tone
Sweet oracles of woods and dells,
And summer winds in sylvan cells;
For it had learned all harmonies 65
Of the plains and of the skies,
Of the forests and the mountains,
And the many-voiced fountains;
The clearest echoes of the hills,
The softest notes of falling rills, 70
The melodies of birds and bees,
The murmuring of summer seas,
And pattering rain, and breathing dew,
And airs of evening; and it knew
That seldom-heard mysterious sound, 75
Which, driven on its diurnal round,
As it floats through boundless day,
Our world enkindles on its way—
All this it knows, but will not tell 80
To those who cannot question well
The spirit that inhabits it;
It talks according to the wit
Of its companions; and no more
Is heard than has been felt before,
By those who tempt it to betray 85
These secrets of an elder day:

But sweetly as its answers will Flatter hands of perfect skill,
 It keeps its highest, holiest tone
 For our beloved Jane alone. 90

JOHN KEATS (1795-1821)

From SLEEP AND POETRY

Is there so small a range
 In the present strength of manhood, that the high Imagination cannot freely fly
 As she was wont of old? prepare her steeds,
 Paw up against the light, and do strange
 deeds 5
 Upon the clouds? Has she not shown us
 all?
 From the clear space of ether, to the small Breath of new buds unfolding? From the meaning
 Of Jove's large eyebrow, to the tender greening 9
 Of April meadows? Here her altar shone,
 E'en in this isle; and who could paragon
 The fervid choir that lifted up a noise
 Of harmony, to where it aye will poise
 Its mighty self of convoluting sound,
 Huge as a planet, and like that roll round,
 Eternally around a dizzy void? 16
 Ay, in those days the muses were nigh
 cloyed
 With honors; nor had any other care
 Than to sing out and soothe their wavy
 hair.
 Could all this be forgotten? Yes, a schirm 20
 Nurtured by foppery and barbarism,
 Made great Apollo blush for this his land.
 Men were thought wise who could not understand
 His glories; with a puling infant's force
 They swayed about upon a rocking-horse,
 And thought it Pegasus. Ah, dismal-souled! 26
 The winds of heaven blew, the ocean
 rolled
 Its gathering waves—ye felt it not. The blue
 Bared its eternal bosom, and the dew
 Of summer nights collected still to make 30
 The morning precious: beauty was awake!

Why were ye not awake? But ye were
 dead
 To things ye knew not of,—were closely wed
 To musty laws lined out with wretched
 rule
 And compass vile: so that ye taught a school 35
 Of dolts to smooth, inlay, and clip, and fit,
 Till, like the certain wands of Jacob's wit,
 Their verses tallied. Easy was the task:
 A thousand handicraftsmen wore the mask
 Of Poesy. Ill-fated, impious race! 40 That blasphemed the bright Lyrist to
 his face,
 And did not know it,—no, they went
 about,
 Holding a poor, decrepit standard out, Marked with most flimsy mottoes, and in large
 The name of one Boileau! 45

From ENDYMION, BOOK I

A thing of beauty is a joy for ever:
 Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
 A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
 Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet
 breathing. 5
 Therefore, on every morrow, are we wreathing
 A flowery band to bind us to the earth,
 Spite of despondence, of the inhuman
 dearth
 Of noble natures, of the gloomy days,
 Of all the unhealthy and o'er-darkened
 ways 10
 Made for our searching: yes, in spite of
 all,
 Some shape of beauty moves away the pall From our dark spirits. Such the sun, the
 moon,
 Trees old and young, sprouting a shady
 boon
 For simple sheep: and such are daffodils 15
 With the green world they live in; and clear rills
 That for themselves a cooling covert make 'Gainst the hot season; the mid-forest
 brake,

Rich with a sprinkling of fair musk-rose blooms:

And such too is the grandeur of the dooms
We have imagined for the mighty dead; 21
All lovely tales that we have heard or
read:

An endless fountain of immortal drink,
Pouring unto us from the heaven's brink.

Nor do we merely feel these essences 25
For one short hour, no, even as the trees
That whisper round a temple become soon
Dear as the temple's self, so does the moon,
The passion poesy, glories infinite,
Haunt us till they become a cheering light
Unto our souls, and bound to us so fast, 31
That, whether there be shine, or gloom
o'ercast,

They always must be with us, or we die.

Therefore, 'tis with full happiness that I
Will trace the story of Endymion. 35

The very music of the name has gone
Into my being, and each pleasant scene
Is growing fresh before me as the green
Of our own valleys: so I will begin
Now while I cannot hear the city's din; 40
Now while the early budders are just new,
And run in mazes of the youngest hue
About old forests; while the willow trails
Its delicate amber; and the dairy pails Bring home increase of milk. And, as the year 45

Grows lush in juicy stalks, I'll smoothly
steer

My little boat, for many quiet hours,
With streams that deepen freshly into
bowers.

Many and many a verse I hope to write,
Before the daisies, vermeil rimmed and
white, 50

Hide in deep herbage; and ere yet the bees
Hum about globes of clover and sweet peas,

I must be near the middle of my story.

O may no wintry season, bare and hoary,
See it half finished: but let Autumn bold, 55
With universal tinge of sober gold,
Be all about me when I make an end.

And now at once, adventuresome, I send
My herald thought into a wilderness:
There let its trumpet blow, and quickly
dress 60

My uncertain path with green, that I may speed

Easily onward, thorough flowers and weed.

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI

O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms,
Alone and palely loitering?
The sedge has withered from the lake,
And no birds sing.

O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms, 5
So haggard and so woe-begone?
The squirrel's granary is full,
And the harvest's done.

I see a lily on thy brow
With anguish moist and fever dew; 10
And on thy cheeks a fading rose Fast withereth too.

"I met a lady in the meads,
Full beautiful—a faery's child;
Her hair was long, her foot was light, 15
And her eyes were wild.

"I made a garland for her head,
And bracelets too, and fragrant zone;¹
She looked at me as she did love,
And made sweet moan. 20

"I set her on my pacing steed,
And nothing else saw all day long;
For sideways would she lean, and sing
A faery's song.

"She found me roots of relish sweet, 25
And honey wild, and manna-dew,
And sure in language strange she said—
'I love thee true.'

"She took me to her elfin grot,
And there she wept, and sighed full sore, 30
And there I shut her wild, wild eyes,
With kisses four.

"And there she lullèd me asleep,
And there I dreamed—ah! woe betide!—
The latest dream I ever dreamed 35
On the cold hill's side.

"I saw pale kings and princes too,
Pale warriors, death-pale were they all,
Who cried—'La Belle Dame sans Merci
Hath thee in thrall!'

"I saw their starved lips in the gloam,
With horrid warning gapèd wide;
And I awoke, and found me here
On the cold hill's side.

"And this is why I sojourn here, 45
Alone and palely loitering,
Though the sedge is withered from the lake,
And no birds sing."

ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE

My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness
pains

My sense, as though of hemlock I had drunk,

Or emptied some dull opiate to the drains
One minute past, and Lethe-wards had sunk:

'Tis not through envy of thy happy lot, 5
But being too happy in thine happiness,—

That thou, light-wingèd Dryad of the trees,

In some melodious plot
Of beechen green, and shadows number-
less,

Singest of summer in full-throated
ease. 10

O for a draught of vintage! that hath been Cooled a long age in the deep-delvèd
earth,

Tasting of Flora and the country green, Dance, and Provençal song, and sunburnt mirth!

O for a beaker full of the warm South, 15
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene,

With beaded bubbles winking at the brim,

And purple-stainèd mouth;
That I might drink, and leave the world
unseen,

And with thee fade away into the forest dim: 20

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget What thou among the leaves has never
known,

The weariness, the fever, and the fret
Here, where men sit and hear each other
groan;

Where palsy shakes a few, sad, last grey
hairs, 25

Where youth grows pale, and spectrethin, and dies;

Where but to think is to be full of sorrow

And leaden-eyed despairs,

Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous
eyes,

Or new Love pine at them beyond tomorrow. 30

Away! away! for I will fly to thee,
Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards,¹

But on the viewless² wings of Poesy,
Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:

Already with thee! tender is the night, 35
And haply the Queen-Moon is on her
throne,

Clustered around by all her starry
Fays;

But here there is no light,

Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown

Through verdurous glooms and winding mossy ways. 40

I cannot see what flowers are at my feet, Nor what soft incense hangs upon the boughs,

But, in embalmèd darkness, guess each
sweet

Wherewith the seasonable month endows

The grass, the thicket, and the fruit-tree
wild; 45

White hawthorn, and the pastoral eglantine;

Fast fading violets covered up in
leaves;

And mid-May's eldest child,
The coming musk-rose, full of dewy
wine,

The murmurous haunt of flies on summer eves. 50

Darkling I listen; and, for many a time
I have been half in love with easeful
Death,

Called him soft names in many a musèd
rhyme,

To take into the air my quiet breath;

¹ leopards.

² invisible.

Now more than ever seems it rich to die, 55
 To cease upon the midnight with no
 pain,
 While thou art pouring forth thy soul
 abroad
 In such an ecstasy!
 Still wouldst thou sing, and I have ears
 in vain—
 To thy high requiem become a sod. 60

Thou wast not born for death, immortal
 Bird!
 No hungry generations tread thee down;
 The voice I hear this passing night was
 heard
 In ancient days by emperor and clown:
 Perhaps the self-same song that found a path 65
 Through the sad heart of Ruth, when,
 sick for home,
 She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
 The same that oft-times hath Charmed magic casements, opening on the foam
 Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn. 70

Forlorn! the very word is like a bell
 To toll me back from thee to my sole self!
 Adieu! the fancy cannot cheat so well
 As she is famed to do, deceiving elf.
 Adieu! adieu! thy plaintive anthem fades 75 Past the near meadows, over the still
 stream,
 Up the hill-side; and now 'tis buried
 deep
 In the next valley-glades:
 Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
 Fled is that music:—Do I wake or
 sleep? 80

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN

Thou still unravished bride of quietness, Thou foster-child of silence and slow
 time,
 Sylvan historian, who canst thus express
 A flowery tale more sweetly than our
 rhyme:
 What leaf-fringed legend haunts about thy shape 5
 Of deities or mortals, or of both,
 In Tempe or the dales of Arcady?

What men or gods are these? What maidens loth?
 What mad pursuit? What struggle to escape?
 What pipes and timbrels? What wild ecstasy? 10

Heard melodies are sweet, but those un-
 heard
 Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
 Not to the sensual ear, but, more endeared,
 Pipe to the spirit ditties of no tone:
 Fair youth, beneath the trees, thou canst not leave 15
 Thy song, nor ever can those trees be
 bare;
 Bold Lover, never, never canst thou
 kiss,
 Though winning near the goal—yet, do not grieve;
 She cannot fade, though thou hast not thy bliss,
 Forever wilt thou love, and she be
 fair! 20

Ah, happy, happy boughs! that cannot shed
 Your leaves, nor ever bid the Spring adieu:
 And, happy melodist, unwearied,
 Forever piping songs forever new;
 More happy love! more happy, happy
 love! 25
 Forever warm and still to be enjoyed,
 Forever panting, and forever young;
 All breathing human passion far above,
 That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and
 cloyed,
 A burning forehead, and a parching
 tongue. 30

Who are these coming to the sacrifice?
 To what green altar, O mysterious priest,
 Lead'st thou that heifer lowing at the skies,
 And all her silken flanks with garlands
 dressed?
 What little town by river or sea shore, 35
 Or mountain-built with peaceful citadel,
 Is emptied of this folk, this pious
 morn?
 And, little town, thy streets for evermore
 Will silent be; and not a soul to tell Why thou art desolate, can e'er return. 40

O Attic shape! Fair attitude! with brede¹
 Of marble men and maidens over-
 wrought,
 With forest branches and the trodden
 weed;
 Thou, silent form, dost tease us out of
 thought
 As doth eternity: Cold Pastoral! 45
 When old age shall this generation
 waste,
 Thou shalt remain, in midst of other
 woe
 Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,
 "Beauty is truth, truth beauty,"—that is all Ye know on earth, and all ye need to
 know. 50

ODE ON MELANCHOLY

No, no! go not to Lethe, neither twist Wolf's-bane, tight-rooted, for its poisonous wine;
 Nor suffer thy pale forehead to be kissed
 By nightshade, ruby grape of Proser-
 pine;
 Make not your rosary of yew-berries, 5
 Nor let the beetle, nor the death-moth
 be
 Your mournful Psyche, nor the downy owl
 A partner in your sorrow's mysteries;
 For shade to shade will come too
 drowsily,
 And drown the wakeful anguish of the
 soul. 10

But when the melancholy fit shall fall
 Sudden from heaven like a weeping
 cloud,
 That fosters the droop-headed flowers all,
 And hides the green hills in an April
 shroud;
 Then glut thy sorrow on a morning rose, 15
 Or on the rainbow of the salt-sand wave,
 Or on the wealth of globèd peonies;
 Or if thy mistress some rich anger shows, Emprison her soft hand, and let her
 rave,
 And feed deep, deep upon her peerless eyes. 20

¹ embroidery.

She dwells with Beauty—Beauty that must die;
 And Joy, whose hand is ever at his lips
 Bidding adieu; and aching Pleasure
 nigh,
 Turning to poison while the bee-mouth
 sips.
 Ay, in the very temple of Delight 25
 Veiled Melancholy has her sovran
 shrine,
 Though seen of none save him whose strenuous tongue
 Can burst Joy's grape against his palate
 fine:
 His soul shall taste the sadness of her
 might,
 And be among her cloudy trophies hung. 30

TO AUTUMN

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
 Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
 Conspiring with him how to load and bless With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;
 To bend with apples the mossed cottage-
 trees, 5
 And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
 To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
 With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
 And still more, later flowers for the bees, Until they think warm days will never cease, 10
 For Summer has o'er-brimmed their clammy cells.

Who hath not seen thee oft amid thy
 store?
 Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
 Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
 Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing
 wind; 15
 Or on a half-reaped furrow sound asleep,
 Drowsed with the fume of poppies,
 while thy hook
 Spares the next swath and all its twinèd flowers:

And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep Steady thy laden head across a brook; 20
Or by a cider-press, with patient look,
Thou watchest the last oozy hours
by hours.

Where are the songs of Spring? Ay, where
are they?
Think not of them, thou hast thy music
too,—
While barrèd clouds bloom the soft-dying
day, 25
And touch the stubble-plains with rosy
hue;
Then in a wailful choir the small gnats
mourn
Among the river shallows, borne aloft Or sinking as the light wind lives or
dies;
And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly bourn; 30
Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The red-breast whistles from a garden-croft;
And gathering swallows twitter in the
skies.

LINES ON THE MERMAID TAVERN

Souls of Poets dead and gone,
What Elysium have ye known,
Happy field or mossy cavern,
Choicer than the Mermaid Tavern?
Have ye tippled drink more fine 5
Than mine host's Canary wine?
Or are fruits of Paradise
Sweeter than those dainty pies
Of venison? O generous food!
Dressed as though bold Robin Hood 10
Would, with his maid Marian,
Sup and bouse from horn and can.

I have heard that on a day
Mine host's sign-board flew away,
Nobody knew whither, till 15
An astrologer's old quill
To a sheepskin gave the story,
Said he saw you in your glory,
Underneath a new-old sign
Sipping beverage divine, 20
And pledging with contented smack
The Mermaid in the Zodiac.

Souls of Poets dead and gone,
What Elysium have ye known,
Happy field or mossy cavern, 25
Choicer than the Mermaid Tavern?

ROBIN HOOD

No! those days are gone away,
And their hours are old and gray,
And their minutes buried all Under the down-trodden pall
Of the leaves of many years: 5
Many times have winter's shears,
Frozen North, and chilling East,
Sounded tempests to the feast
Of the forest's whispering fleeces,
Since men knew nor rent nor leases. 10

No, the bugle sounds no more,
And the twanging bow no more;
Silent is the ivory shrill
Past the heath and up the hill;
There is no mid-forest laugh, 15
Where lone Echo gives the half
To some wight, amazed to hear
Jesting, deep in forest drear.

On the fairest time of June
You may go, with sun or moon, 20
Or the seven stars to light you,
Or the polar ray to right you;
But you never may behold
Little John, or Robin bold;
Never one, of all the clan, 25
Thrumming on an empty can
Some old hunting ditty, while
He doth his green way beguile
To fair hostess Merriment,
Down beside the pasture Trent; 30
For he left the merry tale
Messenger for spicy ale.

Gone, the merry morris din;
Gone, the song of Gamelyn;
Gone, the tough-belted outlaw 35
Idling in the "grenè shawe";
All are gone away and past!
And if Robin should be cast
Sudden from his turfèd grave,
And if Marian should have 40
Once again her forest days,
She would weep, and he would craze:

He would swear, for all his oaks,
 Fallen beneath the dockyard strokes,
 Have rotted on the briny seas; 45
 She would weep that her wild bees
 Sang not to her—strange! that honey
 Can't be got without hard money!

So it is: yet let us sing,
 Honor to the old bow-string! 50
 Honor to the bugle-horn!
 Honor to the woods unshorn!
 Honor to the Lincoln green!
 Honor to the archer keen!
 Honor to tight Little John, 55
 And the horse he rode upon!
 Honor to bold Robin Hood,
 Sleeping in the underwood!
 Honor to Maid Marian,
 And to all the Sherwood-clan! 60
 Though their days have hurried by,
 Let us two a burden¹ try.

THE EVE OF ST. AGNES

St. Agnes' Eve—Ah, bitter chill it was!
 The owl, for all his feathers, was a-cold;
 The hare limped trembling through the frozen grass,
 And silent was the flock in woolly fold:
 Numb were the Beadsman's fingers, while he told 5
 His rosary, and while his frosted breath,
 Like pious incense from a censer old, Seemed taking flight for heaven, without a death,
 Past the sweet Virgin's picture, while his prayer he saith.
 His prayer he saith, this patient, holy
 man; 10
 Then takes his lamp, and riseth from his knees,
 And back returneth, meagre, barefoot,
 wan,
 Along the chapel aisle by slow degrees:
 The sculptured dead, on each side, seem to freeze,
 Emprisoned in black, purgatorial rails:
 Knights, ladies, praying in dumb orat'ries, 16
 He passeth by; and his weak spirit fails
 To think how they may ache in icy hoods and mails.

¹ chorus.

Northward he turneth through a little
 door,
 And scarce three steps, ere Music's
 golden tongue 20
 Flattered to tears this aged man and
 poor;
 But no—already had his deathbell
 rung;
 The joys of all his life were said and
 sung:
 His was harsh penance on St. Agnes'
 Eve:
 Another way he went, and soon among 25
 Rough ashes sat he for his soul's repriev,
 And all night kept awake, for sinners' sake to grieve.

That ancient Beadsman heard the prelude soft;
 And so it chanced, for many a door was
 wide,
 From hurry to and fro. Soon, up aloft,
 The silver, snarling trumpets 'gan to chide: 31
 The level chambers, ready with their
 pride,
 Were glowing to receive a thousand guests:
 The carved angels, ever eager-eyed,
 Stared, where upon their heads the cornice rests, 35
 With hair blown back, and wings put crosswise on their breasts.

At length burst in the argent revelry,
 With plume, tiara, and all rich array,
 Numerous as shadows haunting fairly
 The brain, new stuffed, in youth, with triumphs gay 40
 Of old romance. These let us wish
 away,
 And turn, sole-thoughted, to one Lady
 there,
 Whose heart had brooded, all that wintry day,
 On love, and winged St. Agnes' saintly
 care,
 As she had heard old dames full many times declare. 45

They told her how, upon St. Agnes' Eve, Young virgins might have visions of
 delight,

And soft adorings from their loves receive
 Upon the honeyed middle of the night,
 If ceremonies due they did aright: 50
 As, supperless to bed they must retire,
 And couch supine their beauties, lily
 white;
 Nor look behind, nor sideways, but require
 Of Heaven with upward eyes for all that they desire.

Full of this whim was thoughtful Madeline:
 line: 55
 The music, yearning like a God in
 pain,
 She scarcely heard: her maiden eyes
 divine,
 Fixed on the floor, saw many a sweeping
 train
 Pass by—she heeded not at all: in vain
 Came many a tiptoe, amorous cavalier,
 And back retired; not cooled by high disdain, 61
 But she saw not: her heart was other-
 where:
 She sighed for Agnes' dreams, the sweetest of the year.

She danced along with vague, regardless
 eyes,
 Anxious her lips, her breathing quick and short: 65
 The hallowed hour was near at hand:
 she sighs
 Amid the timbrels, and the thronged resort
 Of whisperers in anger, or in sport; - 'Mid looks of love, defiance, hate, and
 scorn,
 Hoodwinked with faery fancy; all amort,¹ 70
 Save to St. Agnes and her lambs unshorn,
 And all the bliss to be before to-morrow
 morn.

So, purposing each moment to retire,
 She lingered still. Meantime, across the moors,
 Had come young Porphyro, with heart
 on fire 75
 For Madeline. Beside the portal doors,

¹ deadened.

Buttressed from moonlight, stands he,
 and implores
 All saints to give him sight of Madeline,
 But for one moment in the tedious hours,
 That he might gaze and worship all un-
 seen; 80
 Perchance speak, kneel, touch, kiss—in sooth such things have been.

He ventures in: let no buzzed whisper
 tell:
 All eyes be muffled, or a hundred swords
 Will storm his heart, Love's fev'rous
 citadel:
 For him, those chambers held barbarian hordes, 85
 Hyena foemen, and hot-blooded lords,
 Whose very dogs would execrations howl
 Against his lineage: not one breast affords
 Him any mercy, in that mansion foul, Save one old beldame, weak in body and in soul. 90

Ah, happy chance! the aged creature
 came,
 Shuffling along with ivory-headed wand,
 To where he stood, hid from the torch's
 flame,
 Behind a broad hall-pillar, far beyond
 The sound of merriment and chorus
 bland: 95
 He startled her; but soon she knew his
 face,
 And grasped his fingers in her palsied
 hand, Saying, "Mercy, Porphyro! hie thee
 from this place;
 They are all here to-night, the whole bloodthirsty race!

"Get hence! get hence! there's dwarfish
 Hildebrand; 100
 He had a fever late, and in the fit
 He cursèd thee and thine, both house
 and land:
 Then there's that old Lord Maurice, not a whit
 More tame for his gray hairs—Alas me!
 flit!
 Flit like a ghost away."—"Ah, Gossip
 dear, 105
 We're safe enough; here in this armchair sit,

And tell me how"—"Good Saints! not here, not here;
Follow me, child, or else these stones will be thy bier."

He followed through a lowly archèd way,
Brushing the cobwebs with his lofty plume;
And as she muttered "Well-a-day!"
He found him in a little moonlight room,
Pale, latticed, chill, and silent as a tomb.
"Now tell me where is Madeline," said he,
"O tell me, Angela, by the holy loom¹¹⁵
Which none but secret sisterhood may see,
When they St. Agnes' wool are weaving piously."

"St. Agnes! Ah! it is St. Agnes' Eve—
Yet men will murder upon holy days:
Thou must hold water in a witch's sieve,
And be liege-lord of all the Elves and Fays,
To venture so: it fills me with amaze
To see thee, Porphyro!—St. Agnes' Eve!
God's help! my lady fair the conjurer plays
This very night: good angels her deceive!
But let me laugh awhile, I've mickle time to grieve."

Feebly she laugheth in the languid moon,
While Porphyro upon her face doth look,
Like puzzled urchin on an aged crone
Who keepeth closed a wond'rous riddle-book,
As spectacled she sits in chimney nook.
But soon his eyes grew brilliant, when she told
His lady's purpose; and he scarce could brook¹
Tears, at the thought of those enchantments cold,
And Madeline asleep in lap of legends old.

¹ check.

Sudden a thought came like a full-blown rose,
Flushing his brow, and in his painèd heart
Made purple riot: then doth he propose
A stratagem, that makes the beldame start:
"A cruel man and impious thou art: ¹⁴⁰
Sweet lady, let her pray, and sleep, and dream
Alone with her good angels, far apart
From wicked men like thee. Go, go!—
I deem
Thou canst not surely be the same that thou didst seem."

"I will not harm her, by all saints I swear," Quoth Porphyro: "O may I ne'er find ¹⁴⁵
grace
When my weak voice shall whisper its last prayer,
If one of her soft ringlets I displace,
Or look with ruffian passion in her face:
Good Angela, believe me by these tears;
Or I will, even in a moment's space, ¹⁵¹
Awake, with horrid shout, my foemen's ears,
And beard them, though they be more fanged than wolves and bears."

"Ah! why wilt thou affright a feeble soul?
A poor, weak, palsy-stricken, church-yard thing,—
Whose passing-bell may ere the mid-night toll;
Whose prayers for thee, each morn and evening,
Were never missed."—Thus plaining, doth she bring
A gentler speech from burning Porphyro;
So woeful, and of such deep sorrowing,
That Angela gives promise she will do
Whatever he shall wish, betide her weal or woe.

Which was, to lead him, in close secrecy,
Even to Madeline's chamber, and there hide
Him in a closet, of such privacy ¹⁶⁵
That he might see her beauty unespied,

And win perhaps that night a peerless
bride,
While legioned fairies paced the coverlet,
And pale enchantment held her sleepy-
eyed.
Never on such a night have lovers met, ¹⁷⁰
Since Merlin paid his Demon all the monstrous debt.

"It shall be as thou wishest," said the
dame:
"All cates and dainties shall be stored
there Quickly on this feast-night: by the tambour frame
Her own lute thou wilt see: no time to spare, ¹⁷⁵
For I am slow and feeble, and scarce dare
On such a catering trust my dizzy head.
Wait here, my child, with patience;
kneel in prayer
The while. Ah! thou must needs the lady wed,
Or may I never leave my grave among the dead." ¹⁸⁰

So saying, she hobbled off with busy
fear.
The lover's endless minutes slowly
passed;
The dame returned, and whispered in
his ear
To follow her; with agèd eyes aghast From fright of dim espial. Safe at last, ¹⁸⁵
Through many a dusky gallery, they
gain
The maiden's chamber, silken, hushed,
and chaste;
Where Porphyro took covert, pleased amain.
His poor guide hurried back with agues in her brain.

Her falt'ring hand upon the balustrade,
Old Angela was feeling for the stair, ¹⁹¹
When Madeline, St. Agnes' charmed
maid,
Rose, like a missioned spirit, unaware:
With silver taper's light, and pious
care,

She turned, and down the agèd gossip led ¹⁹⁵
To a safe level matting. Now prepare,
Young Porphyro, for gazing on that bed;
She comes, she comes again, like ring-dove
frayed¹ and fled.

Out went the taper as she hurried in;
Its little smoke, in pallid moonshine,
died: ²⁰⁰
She closed the door, she panted, all akin
To spirits of the air, and visions wide:
No uttered syllable, or, woe betide!
But to her heart, her heart was voluble,
Paining with eloquence her balmy side;
As though a tongueless nightingale should swell ²⁰⁶
Her throat in vain, and die, heart-stifled, in her dell.

A casement high and triple-arched there
was,
All garlanded with carven imag'ries
Of fruits, and flowers, and bunches of knot-grass, ²¹⁰
And diamonded with panes of quaint device,
Innumerable of stains and splendid dyes,
As are the tiger-moth's deep-damasked
wings;
And in the midst, 'mong thousand heraldries,
And twilight saints, and dim em-
blazonings, ²¹⁵
A shielded scutcheon blushed with blood of queens and kings.

Full on this casement shone the wintry
moon,
And threw warm gules² on Madeline's fair breast,
As down she knelt for heaven's grace and
boon;
Rose-bloom fell on her hands, together pressed, ²²⁰
And on her silver cross soft amethyst,
And on her hair a glory, like a saint:
She seemed a splendid angel, newly
dressed,
Save wings, for heaven:—Porphyro grew
faint:
She knelt, so pure a thing, so free from mortal taint. ²²⁵

¹ frightened.² red.

Anon his heart revives: her vespers
done,
Of all its wreathèd pearls her hair she frees;
Unclasps her warmèd jewels one by one;
Loosens her fragrant bodice; by degrees
Her rich attire creeps rustling to her knees: 230
Half-hidden, like a mermaid in seaweed,
Pensive awhile she dreams awake, and sees,
In fancy, fair St. Agnes in her bed,
But dares not look behind, or all the charm is fled.

Soon, trembling in her soft and chilly
nest, 235
In sort of wakeful swoon, perplexed
she lay,
Until the poppièd warmth of sleep
oppressed
Her soothèd limbs, and soul fatigued
away;
Flown, like a thought, until the morrow-day;
Blissfully havened both from joy and
pain; 240
Clasped like a missal where swart¹
Paynims pray;
Blinded alike from sunshine and from rain,
As though a rose should shut, and be a bud again.

Stol'n to this paradise, and so entranced,
Porphyro gazed upon her empty dress,
And listened to her breathing, if it
chanced 246
To wake into a slumberous tenderness;
Which when he heard, that minute did he bless,
And breathed himself: then from the closet crept,
Noiseless as fear in a wide wilderness, 250
And over the hushed carpet, silent, stepped,
And 'tween the curtains peeped, where,
lo!—how fast she slept.

Then by the bedside, where the faded
moon
Made a dim, silver twilight, soft he set

¹ black.

A table, and, half anguished, threw thereon 255
A cloth of woven crimson, gold, and jet:—
O for some drowsy Morphean amulet!
The boisterous, midnight, festive clarion,
The kettle-drum, and far-heard clarionet,
Affray his ears, though but in dying tone:— 260
The hall door shuts again, and all the noise
is gone.

And still she slept an azure-lidded sleep,
In blanchèd linen, smooth, and lav-endered,
While he from forth the closet brought a heap
Of candied apple, quince, and plum, and gourd; 265
With jellies soother than the creamy
curd,
And lucent syrups, tinct with cinnamon;
Manna and dates, in argosy transferred From Fez; and spicèd dainties, every
one,
From silken Samarcand to cedared Lebanon. 270

These delicacies he heaped with glowing
hand
On golden dishes and in baskets bright
Of wreathèd silver: sumptuous they
stand
In the retired quiet of the night,
Filling the chilly room with perfume
light.— 275
“And now, my love, my seraph fair,
awake!
Thou art my heaven, and I thine
eremite:
Open thine eyes, for meek St. Agnes’
sake,
Or I shall drowse beside thee, so my soul
doth ache.”

Thus whispering, his warm, unnervèd
arm 280
Sank in her pillow. Shaded was her dream
By the dusk curtains:—’twas a midnight charm
Impossible to melt as icèd stream:

The lustrous salvers in the moonlight
gleam;
Broad golden fringe upon the carpet
lies: 285
It seemed he never, never could redeem
From such a steadfast spell his lady's
eyes;
So mused awhile, entailed in woofed
phantasies.

Awakening up, he took her hollow lute.—
Tumultuous,—and, in chords that tenderest be, 290
He played an ancient ditty, long since
mute,
In Provence called, “La belle dame sans merci,”
Close to her ear touching the melody;—
Wherewith disturbed she uttered a soft
moan:
He ceased—she panted quick—and suddenly 295
Her blue affrayed eyes wide open
shone:
Upon his knees he sank, pale as smoothsculptured stone.

Her eyes were open, but she still be-
held,
Now wide awake, the vision of her
sleep:
There was a painful change, that nigh expelled 300
The blisses of her dream so pure and
deep,
At which fair Madeline began to weep,
And moan forth witless words with many a sigh;
While still her gaze on Porphyro would
keep;
Who knelt, with joined hands and piteous eye, 305
Fearing to move or speak, she looked so dreamingly.

“Ah, Porphyro!” said she, “but even
now
Thy voice was at sweet tremble in mine
ear,
Made tunable with every sweetest
vow;
And those sad eyes were spiritual and
clear: 310

How changed thou art! how pallid,
chill, and drear!
Give me that voice again, my Porphyro,
Those looks immortal, those complain-
ings dear!
Oh leave me not in this eternal woe,
For if thou diest, my Love, I know not where to go.” 315

Beyond a mortal man impassioned far
At these voluptuous accents, he arose, Ethereal, flushed, and like a throbbing
star
Seen ’mid the sapphire heaven’s deep
repose;
Into her dream he melted, as the rose 320
Blendeth its odor with the violet,— Solution sweet: meantime the frost-wind blows
Like Love’s alarum, pattering the sharp sleet Against the window-panes; St. Agnes’ moon hath set.

’Tis dark: quick pattereth the flaw-blown sleet: 325
“This is no dream, my bride, my Madeline!”
’Tis dark: the icèd gusts still rave and
beat:
“No dream, alas! alas! and woe is mine!
Porphyro will leave me here to fade and pine.— Cruel! what traitor could thee hither
bring? 330
I curse not, for my heart is lost in thine,
Though thou forsakest a deceived
thing;—
A dove forlorn and lost with sick unpruned wing.”

“My Madeline! sweet dreamer! lovely
bride!
Say, may I be for aye thy vassal blest?
Thy beauty’s shield, heart-shaped and vermeil dyed? 335
Ah, silver shrine, here will I take my rest
After so many hours of toil and quest,
A famished pilgrim,—saved by miracle.
Though I have found, I will not rob thy
nest 340
Saving of thy sweet self; if thou think’st
well
To trust, fair Madeline, to no rude infidel.

"Hark! 'tis an elfin-storm from faery
land,
Of haggard seeming, but a boon indeed:
Arise—arise! the morning is at hand,—
The bloated wassailers will never heed:—³⁴⁶
Let us away, my love, with happy
speed;
There are no ears to hear, or eyes to
see,— Drowned all in Rhenish and the sleepy
mead:
Awake! arise! my love, and fearless be,
For o'er the southern moors I have a home for thee."³⁵¹

She hurried at his words, beset with
fears,
For there were sleeping dragons all
around,
At glaring watch, perhaps, with ready spears—
Down the wide stairs a darkling way they found.—³⁵⁵
In all the house was heard no human sound.
A chain-drooped lamp was flickering by each door;
The arras, rich with horseman, hawk,
and hound,
Fluttered in the besieging wind's up-
roar;
And the long carpets rose along the gusty floor.³⁶⁰

They glide, like phantoms, into the wide hall;
Like phantoms, to the iron porch they
glide;
Where lay the Porter, in uneasy sprawl,
With a huge empty flagon by his side:
The wakeful bloodhound rose, and shook his hide,³⁶⁵
But his sagacious eye an inmate owns:
By one, and one, the bolts full easy slide:—
The chains lie silent on the footworn
stones;—
The key turns, and the door upon its hinges groans.

And they are gone: ay, ages long ago³⁷⁰
These lovers fled away into the storm.

That night the Baron dreamt of many a woe,
And all his warrior-guests, with shade and form
Of witch, and demon, and large coffin-worm,
Were long be-nightmared. Angela the old³⁷⁵
Died palsy-twitched, with meagre face
deform;
The Beadsman, after thousand avè's
told,
For aye unsought for slept among his ashes cold.

HYPERION

A FRAGMENT

BOOK I

Deep in the shady sadness of a vale Far sunken from the healthy breath of
morn,
Far from the fiery noon, and eve's one
star,
Sat gray-haired Saturn, quiet as a stone,
Still as the silence round about his lair; 5
Forest on forest hung about his head Like cloud on cloud. No stir of air was
there,
Not so much life as on a summer's day
Robs not one light seed from the feathered grass,
But where the dead leaf fell, there did it rest.¹⁰
A stream went voiceless by, still deadened
more
By reason of his fallen divinity Spreading a shade: the Naiad 'mid her reeds
Pressed her cold finger closer to her lips.
Along the margin-sand large footmarks went,¹⁵
No further than to where his feet had
strayed,
And slept there since. Upon the sodden
ground
His old right hand lay nerveless, listless,
dead,
Unscattered; and his realmless eyes were closed;
While his bowed head seemed listening to the Earth,²⁰
His ancient mother, for some comfort yet.

It seemed no force could wake him from his place;
 But there came one, who with a kindred
 hand
 Touched his wide shoulders, after bending
 low
 With reverence, though to one who knew it
 not. 25
 She was a Goddess of the infant world;
 By her in stature the tall Amazon Had stood a pigmy's height: she would have ta'en
 Achilles by the hair and bent his neck;
 Or with a finger stayed Ixion's wheel. 30
 Her face was large as that of Memphian sphinx,
 Pedestaled haply in a palace court,
 When sages looked to Egypt for their lore.
 But oh! how unlike marble was that face;
 How beautiful, if sorrow had not made 35
 Sorrow more beautiful than Beauty's self.
 There was a listening fear in her regard,
 As if calamity had but begun;
 As if the vanward clouds of evil days
 Had spent their malice, and the sullen
 rear 40
 Was with its storèd thunder laboring up.
 One hand she pressed upon that aching
 spot
 Where beats the human heart, as if just
 there,
 Though an immortal, she felt cruel pain;
 The other upon Saturn's bended neck 45
 She laid, and to the level of his ear Leaning with parted lips, some words she
 spake
 In solemn tenor and deep organ tone:
 Some mourning words, which in our feeble
 tongue
 Would come in these like accents; oh how frail 50
 To that large utterance of the early Gods!
 "Saturn, look up!—though wherefore,
 poor old King?
 I have no comfort for thee, no, not one:
 I cannot say, 'O wherefore sleepest thou?'
 For heaven is parted from thee, and the
 earth 55
 Knows thee not, thus afflicted, for a
 God;
 And ocean too, with all its solemn noise,
 Has from thy scepter passed; and all the
 air
 Is emptied of thine hoary majesty.

Thy thunder, conscious of the new command, 60
 Rumbles reluctant o'er our fallen house;
 And thy sharp lightning in unpractised
 hands
 Scorches and burns our once serene do-
 main.
 O aching time! O moments big as years!
 All as ye pass swell out the monstrous
 truth, 65
 And press it so upon our weary griefs
 That unbelief has not a space to breathe.
 Saturn, sleep on:—O thoughtless, why did I
 Thus violate thy slumbrous solitude?
 Why should I ope thy melancholy eyes? 70
 Saturn, sleep on! while at thy feet I weep."
 As when, upon a trancèd summer night,
 Those green-robed senators of mighty
 woods,
 Tall oaks, branch-charmèd by the earnest
 stars,
 Dream, and so dream all night without a stir, 75
 Save from one gradual solitary gust
 Which comes upon the silence, and dies
 off,
 As if the ebbing air had but one wave:
 So came these words and went; the while in tears
 She touched her fair large forehead to the
 ground, 80
 Just where her falling hair might be out-
 spread
 A soft and silken mat for Saturn's feet.
 One moon, with alteration slow, had shed
 Her silver seasons four upon the night,
 And still these two were postured motion-
 less, 85
 Like natural sculpture in cathedral cavern;
 The frozen God still couchant on the
 earth,
 And the sad Goddess weeping at his feet:
 Until at length old Saturn lifted up His faded eyes, and saw his kingdom
 gone, 90
 And all the gloom and sorrow of the place,
 And that fair kneeling Goddess; and then
 spake,
 As with a palsied tongue, and while his beard
 Shook horrid with such aspen-malady:
 "O tender spouse of gold Hyperion, 95
 Thea, I feel thee ere I see thy face;

Look up, and let me see our doom in it;
Look up, and tell me if this feeble shape
Is Saturn's; tell me, if thou hear'st the voice

Of Saturn; tell me, if this wrinkling brow,
Naked and bare of its great diadem, 101 Peers like the front of Saturn. Who had
power

To make me desolate? whence came the strength?

How was it nurtured to such bursting
forth,

While Fate seemed strangled in my nervous grasp? 105

But it is so; and I am smothered up,
And buried from all godlike exercise
Of influence benign on planets pale,
Of admonitions to the winds, and seas,
Of peaceful sway above man's harvest-
ing, 110

And all those acts which Deity supreme Doth ease its heart of love in.—I am gone Away from my own bosom: I have left
My strong identity, my real self,
Somewhere between the throne, and where I sit 115

Here on this spot of earth. Search, Thea, search!

Open thine eyes eterne, and sphere them
round

Upon all space: space starred, and lorn of
light;

Space regioned with life-air; and barren
void;

Spaces of fire, and all the yawn of hell. 120
Search, Thea, search! and tell me, if thou seest

A certain shape or shadow, making way
With wings or chariot fierce to repossess
A heaven he lost erewhile: it must—it must

Be of ripe progress—Saturn must be
King. 125

Yes, there must be a golden victory;
There must be Gods thrown down, and trumpets blown

Of triumph calm, and hymns of festival
Upon the gold clouds metropolitan,
Voices of soft proclaim, and silver stir 130
Of strings in hollow shells; and there shall be

Beautiful things made new, for the surprise
Of the sky-children; I will give command:

Thea! Thea! Thea! where is Saturn?"

This passion lifted him upon his feet, 135
And made his hands to struggle in the air,
His Druid locks to shake and ooze with
sweat,

His eyes to fever out, his voice to cease.
He stood, and heard not Thea's sobbing
deep; 139

A little time, and then again he snatched Utterance thus:—"But cannot I create?
Cannot I form? Cannot I fashion forth
Another world, another universe,
To overbear and crumble this to nought?
Where is another chaos? Where?"—That
word 145

Found way unto Olympus, and made quake

The rebel three.—Thea was startled up,
And in her bearing was a sort of hope,
As thus she quick-voiced spake, yet full of awe:

"This cheers our fallen house: come to our friends, 150

O Saturn! come away, and give them
heart;

I know the covert, for thence came I hither."

Thus brief; then with beseeching eyes she went

With backward footing through the shade
a space:

He followed, and she turned to lead the
way 155

Through agèd boughs, that yielded like the mist

Which eagles cleave upmounting from their nest.

Meanwhile in other realms big tears
were shed,

More sorrow like to this, and such like woe, Too huge for mortal tongue or pen of scribe; 160

The Titans fierce, self-hid, or prison-
bound,

Groaned for the old allegiance once more,
And listened in sharp pain for Saturn's
voice.

But one of the whole mammoth-brood still kept

His sovereignty, and rule, and majesty; 165
Blazing Hyperion on his orbèd fire

Still sat, snuffed the incense, teeming up
From man to the sun's God; yet un-
secure:

For as among us mortals omens drear
 Fright and perplex, so also shuddered
 he,— 170
 Not at dog's howl, or gloom-bird's hated screech,
 Or the familiar visiting of one
 Upon the first toll of his passing-bell,
 Or prophesyings of the midnight lamp;
 But horrors, portioned to a giant nerve, 175
 Oft made Hyperion ache. His palace
 bright,
 Bastioned with pyramids of glowing gold,
 And touched with shade of bronzed obelisks,
 Glared a blood-red through all its thousand courts,
 Arches, and domes, and fiery galleries; 180
 And all its curtains of Aurorian clouds Flushed angrily: while sometimes eagle's
 wings,
 Unseen before by Gods or wondering men, Darkened the place; and neighing steeds
 were heard,
 Not heard before by Gods or wondering
 men. 185
 Also, when he would taste the spicy wreaths
 Of incense, breathed aloft from sacred
 hills,
 Instead of sweets, his ample palate took Savor of poisonous brass and metal sick:
 And so, when harbored in the sleepy
 west, 190
 After the full completion of fair day,—
 For rest divine upon exalted couch
 And slumber in the arms of melody,
 He paced away the pleasant hours of ease
 With stride colossal, on from hall to hall;
 While far within each aisle and deep recess, 196
 His winged minions in close clusters stood,
 Amazed and full of fear; like anxious men
 Who on wide plains gather in panting troops,
 When earthquakes jar their battlements and towers. 200
 Even now, while Saturn, roused from icy
 trance,
 Went step for step with Thea through the woods,
 Hyperion, leaving twilight in the rear,
 Came slope upon the threshold of the west;
 Then, as was wont, his palace-door flew ope 205

In smoothest silence, save what solemn tubes,
 Blown by the serious Zephyrs, gave of
 sweet
 And wandering sounds, slow-breathed melodies;
 And like a rose in vermeil tint and shape,
 In fragrance soft, and coolness to the eye,
 That inlet to severe magnificence 211
 Stood full blown, for the God to enter in.
 He entered, but he entered full of wrath;
 His flaming robes streamed out beyond his
 heels,
 And gave a roar, as if of earthly fire. 215
 That scared away the meek ethereal
 Hours
 And made their dove-wings tremble. On he flared,
 From stately nave to nave, from vault to vault,
 Through bowers of fragrant and en-
 wreathed light,
 And diamond-paved lustrous long arcades, 220
 Until he reached the great main cupola;
 There standing fierce beneath, he stamped his foot,
 And from the basements deep to the high towers
 Jarred his own golden region; and before The quavering thunder thereupon had ceased, 225
 His voice leapt out, despite of godlike curb,
 To this result: "O dreams of day and
 night!
 O monstrous forms! O effigies of pain!
 O specters busy in a cold, cold gloom!
 O lank-eared Phantoms of black-weeded pools! 230
 Why do I know ye? why have I seen ye?
 why
 Is my eternal essence thus distraught
 To see and to behold these horrors new?
 Saturn is fallen; am I too to fall?
 Am I to leave this haven of my rest, 235
 This cradle of my glory, this soft clime,
 This calm luxuriance of blissful light,
 These crystalline pavilions, and pure fanes,
 Of all my lucent empire? It is left Deserted, void, nor any haunt of mine. 240
 The blaze, the splendor, and the symmetry,
 I cannot see—but darkness, death and darkness.

Even here, into my center of repose,
 The shady visions come to domineer, Insult, and blind, and stifle up my pomp.—²⁴⁵
 Fall!—No, by Tellus and her briny robes!
 Over the fiery frontier of my realms
 I will advance a terrible right arm,
 Shall scare that infant thunderer, rebel
 Jove,
 And bid old Saturn take his throne again.”—²⁵⁰
 He spake and ceased, the while a heavier threat
 Held struggle with his throat, but came not forth;
 For as in theatres of crowded men
 Hubbub increases more they call out “Hush!”
 So at Hyperion’s words the Phantoms
 pale²⁵⁵
 Bestirred themselves, thrice horrible and
 cold;
 And from the mirrored level where he stood
 A mist arose, as from a scummy marsh.
 At this, through all his bulk an agony Crept gradual, from the feet unto the crown,²⁶⁰
 Like a lithe serpent vast and muscular Making slow way, with head and neck con-vulsed
 From over-strained might. Released, he fled
 To the eastern gates, and full six dewy
 hours
 Before the dawn in season due should blush,²⁶⁵
 He breathed fierce breath against the sleepy portals,
 Cleared them of heavy vapors, burst them
 wide
 Suddenly on the ocean’s chilly streams.
 The planet orb of fire, whereon he rode Each day from east to west the heavens through,²⁷⁰
 Spun round in sable curtaining of clouds;
 Not therefore veiled quite, blindfold, and hid,
 But ever and anon the glancing spheres,
 Circles, and arcs, and broad-belted colure, Glowed through, and wrought upon the muffling dark²⁷⁵
 Sweet-shaped lightnings from the nadir
 deep
 Up to the Zenith,—hieroglyphics old,

Which sages and keen-eyed astrologers
 Then living on the earth, with laboring
 thought
 Won from the gaze of many centuries:²⁸⁰
 Now lost, save what we find on remnants huge
 Of stone, or marble swart; their import
 gone,
 Their wisdom long since fled.—Two wings
 this orb
 Possessed for glory, two fair argent wings,
 Ever exalted at the God’s approach:²⁸⁵
 And now, from forth the gloom their plumes immense
 Rose, one by one, till all outspreaded were;
 While still the dazzling globe maintained
 eclipse,
 Awaiting for Hyperion’s command.
 Fain would he have commanded, fain took throne²⁹⁰
 And bid the day begin, if but for change.
 He might not:—No, though a primeval
 God:
 The sacred seasons might not be disturbed.
 Therefore the operations of the dawn Stayed in their birth, even as here ’tis told.²⁹⁵
 Those silver wings expanded sisterly,
 Eager to sail their orb; the porches wide
 Opened upon the dusk demesnes of night;
 And the bright Titan, frenzied with new
 woes,
 Unused to bend, by hard compulsion
 bent³⁰⁰
 His spirit to the sorrow of the time;
 And all along a dismal rack of clouds,
 Upon the boundaries of day and night,
 He stretched himself in grief and radiance
 faint.
 There as he lay, the Heaven with its stars³⁰⁵
 Looked down on him with pity, and the voice
 Of Cœlus, from the universal space, Thus whispered low and solemn in his
 ear:
 “O brightest of my children dear, earth-
 born
 And sky-engendered, Son of Mysteries³¹⁰
 All unrevealed even to the powers
 Which met at thy creating; at whose joys
 And palpitations sweet, and pleasures soft,
 I, Cœlus, wonder, how they came and
 whence;

And at the fruits thereof what shapes they be, ³¹⁵
 Distinct, and visible; symbols divine, Manifestations of that beauteous life
 Diffused unseen throughout eternal space;
 Of these new-formed art thou, O brightest
 child!
 Of these, thy brethren and the Goddesses! ³²⁰
 There is sad feud among ye, and rebellion
 Of son against his sire. I saw him fall,
 I saw my first-born tumbled from his
 throne!
 To me his arms were spread, to me his
 voice
 Found way from forth the thunders round his head! ³²⁵
 Pale wax I, and in vapors hid my face.
 Art thou, too, near such doom? vague fear
 there is:
 For I have seen my sons most unlike Gods.
 Divine ye were created, and divine
 In sad demeanor, solemn, undisturbed, ³³⁰ Unruffled like high Gods, ye lived and ruled:
 Now I behold in you fear, hope, and wrath, Actions of rage and passion; even as I see them, on the mortal world beneath,
 In men who die.—This is the grief, O
 Son! ³³⁵
 Sad sign of ruin, sudden dismay, and fall!
 Yet do thou strive; as thou art capable,
 As thou canst move about, an evident
 God;
 And canst oppose to each malignant hour
 Ethereal presence:—I am but a voice; ³⁴⁰
 My life is but the life of winds and tides;
 No more than winds and tides can I avail:—
 But thou canst.—Be thou therefore in the van
 Of circumstance; yea, seize the arrow's barb
 Before the tense string murmur.—To the earth! ³⁴⁵
 For there thou wilt find Saturn, and his woes.
 Meantime I will keep watch on thy bright
 sun,
 And of thy seasons be a careful nurse."—
 Ere half this region-whisper had come
 down,
 Hyperion arose, and on the stars ³⁵⁰
 Lifted his curvèd lids, and kept them wide

Until it ceased; and still he kept them
 wide:
 And still they were the same bright,
 patient stars.
 Then with a slow incline of his broad
 breast,
 Like to a diver in the pearly seas, ³⁵⁵
 Forward he stooped over the airy shore,
 And plunged all noiseless into the deep
 night.

SONNETS

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER

Much have I travelled in the realms of
 gold,
 And many goodly states and kingdoms
 seen;
 Round many western islands have I been
 Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.
 Oft of one wide expanse had I been told;
 That deep-browed Homer ruled as his demesne;
 Yet did I never breathe its pure serene Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and
 bold:
 Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
 When a new planet swims into his ken; ¹⁰
 Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes
 He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
 Looked at each other with a wild surmise—
 Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

WHEN I HAVE FEARS THAT I MAY CEASE TO BE

When I have fears that I may cease to be Before my pen has gleaned my teeming
 brain,
 Before high pilèd books, in charact'ry,
 Hold like rich garners the full-ripened grain;
 When I behold, upon the night's starred face, ⁵
 Huge cloudy symbols of a high romance,
 And think that I may never live to trace Their shadows, with the magic hand of
 chance;

And when I feel, fair creature of an hour!
 That I shall never look upon thee
 more, 10
 Never have relish in the faery power
 Of unreflecting love!—then on the shore
 Of the wide world I stand alone, and think Till love and fame to nothingness do sink.

BRIGHT STAR! WOULD I WERE STEADFAST AS THOU ART

Bright star! would I were steadfast as thou art—
 Not in lone splendor hung aloft the
 night,
 And watching, with eternal lids apart,
 Like Nature's patient sleepless Eremité,
 The moving waters at their priestlike task 5
 Of pure ablution round earth's human
 shores,
 Or gazing on the new soft fallen mask
 Of snow upon the mountains and the moors—
 No—yet still steadfast, still unchangeable, Pillowed upon my fair love's ripening
 breast, 10
 To feel forever its soft fall and swell,
 Awake forever in a sweet unrest,
 Still, still to hear her tender-taken breath,
 And so live ever—or else swoon to death.

THOMAS CAMPBELL (1777–1844)

YE MARINERS OF ENGLAND

A NAVAL ODE

Ye mariners of England
 That guard our native seas,
 Whose flag has braved a thousand years
 The battle and the breeze!
 Your glorious standard launch again 5
 To match another foe,
 And sweep through the deep,
 While the stormy winds do blow;
 While the battle rages loud and long,
 And the stormy winds do blow. 10

The spirits of your fathers
 Shall start from every wave!—
 For the deck it was their field of fame,
 And Ocean was their grave:

Where Blake and mighty Nelson fell 15
 Your manly hearts shall glow,
 As ye sweep through the deep,
 While the stormy winds do blow;
 While the battle rages loud and long,
 And the stormy winds do blow. 20

Britannia needs no bulwark,
 No towers along the steep;
 Her march is o'er the mountain waves,
 Her home is on the deep.
 With thunders from her native oak 25
 She quells the floods below—
 As they roar on the shore,
 When the stormy winds do blow;
 When the battle rages loud and long,
 And the stormy winds do blow. 30

The meteor flag of England
 Shall yet terrific burn,
 Till danger's troubled night depart
 And the star of peace return.
 Then, then, ye ocean-warriors! 35
 Our song and feast shall flow
 To the fame of your name,
 When the storm has ceased to blow;
 When the fiery fight is heard no more,
 And the storm has ceased to blow. 40

THOMAS MOORE (1779–1852)

THE TIME I'VE LOST IN WOOING

The time I've lost in wooing,
 In watching and pursuing
 The light that lies
 In woman's eyes,
 Has been my heart's undoing. 5
 Though Wisdom oft has sought me,
 I scorned the lore she brought me,
 My only books
 Were woman's looks,
 And folly's all they've taught me. 10

Her smile when Beauty granted,
 I hung with gaze enchanted,
 Like him the Sprite,
 Whom maids by night
 Oft meet in glen that's haunted. 15
 Like him, too, Beauty won me,
 But while her eyes were on me;
 If once their ray
 Was turned away,
 Oh, winds could not outrun me. 20

And are those follies going?
 And is my proud heart growing Too cold or wise
 For brilliant eyes
 Again to set it glowing? 25
 No, vain, alas! th' endeavor
 From bonds so sweet to sever;
 Poor Wisdom's chance
 Against a glance
 Is now as weak as ever. 30

OFT IN THE STILLY NIGHT

Oft, in the stilly night,
 Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
 Fond Memory brings the light
 Of other days around me;
 The smiles, the tears, 5
 Of boyhood's years,
 The words of love then spoken;
 The eyes that shone,
 Now dimmed and gone,
 The cheerful hearts now broken! 10
 Thus, in the stilly night,
 Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
 Sad Memory brings the light
 Of other days around me.

When I remember all 15
 The friends, so linked together,
 I've seen around me fall,
 Like leaves in wintry weather;
 I feel like one
 Who treads alone 20
 Some banquet-hall deserted,
 Whose lights are fled,
 Whose garlands dead,
 And all but he departed!
 Thus, in the stilly night, 25
 Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
 Sad Memory brings the light
 Of other days around me.

THE HARP THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S HALLS

The harp that once through Tara's halls
 The soul of music shed,
 Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
 As if that soul were fled.

So sleeps the pride of former days, 5
 So glory's thrill is o'er,
 And hearts that once beat high for praise
 Now feel that pulse no more!

No more to chiefs and ladies bright
 The harp of Tara swells; 10
 The chord alone that breaks at night
 Its tale of ruin tells.
 Thus Freedom now so seldom wakes,
 The only throb she gives
 Is when some heart indignant breaks, 15
 To show that still she lives.

OH, BREATHE NOT HIS NAME!

ROBERT EMMET

Oh, breathe not his name! let it sleep in the
 shade,
 Where cold and unhonored his relics are
 laid;
 Sad, silent, and dark be the tears that we
 shed,
 As the night-dew that falls on the grass
 o'er his head.

But the night-dew that falls, though in silence it weeps, 5 Shall brighten with verdure the grave
 where he sleeps;
 And the tear that we shed, though in secret
 it rolls,
 Shall long keep his memory green in our souls.

CHARLES WOLFE (1791-1823)

THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE
AT CORUNNA

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
 As his corse to the rampart we hurried;
 Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
 O'er the grave where our hero we buried.

We buried him darkly at dead of night, 5
 The sods with our bayonets turning;
 By the struggling moonbeam's misty light,
 And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin enclosed his breast,
 Not in sheet nor in shroud we wound
 him, 10
 But he lay like a warrior taking his rest
 With his martial cloak around him.

Few and short were the prayers we said,
 And we spoke not a word of sorrow;
 But we steadfastly gazed on the face that was dead, 15
 And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought as we hollowed his narrow
 bed,
 And smoothed down his lonely pillow,
 That the foe and the stranger would tread
 o'er his head,
 And we far away on the billow! 20

Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's
 gone,
 And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him,—
 But little he'll reck, if they let him sleep
 on
 In the grave where a Briton has laid
 him.

But half of our weary task was done 25
 When the clock struck the hour for retiring;
 And we heard the distant and random gun
 That the foe was sullenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down,
 From the field of his fame fresh and gory; 30
 We carved not a line, and we raised not a
 stone—
 But we left him alone with his glory.

THOMAS HOOD (1789–1845)

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS

One more Unfortunate, Weary of breath,
 Rashly importunate,
 Gone to her death!

Take her up tenderly, 5
 Lift her with care;
 Fashioned so slenderly,
 Young, and so fair!

Look at her garments
 Clinging like cerements; 10
 Whilst the wave constantly
 Drips from her clothing;
 Take her up instantly,
 Loving, not loathing.

Touch her not scornfully; 15
 Think of her mournfully,
 Gently and humanly,
 Not of the stains of her;
 All that remains of her
 Now is pure womanly. 20

Make no deep scrutiny
 Into her mutiny
 Rash and undutiful:
 Past all dishonor,
 Death has left on her 25
 Only the beautiful.

Still, for all slips of hers,
 One of Eve's family—
 Wipe those poor lips of hers
 Oozing so clammy. 30

Loop up her tresses Escaped from the comb,
 Her fair auburn tresses;
 Whilst wonderment guesses
 Where was her home? 35

Who was her father?
 Who was her mother?
 Had she a sister?
 Had she a brother?
 Or was there a dearer one 40
 Still, and a nearer one Yet, than all other?

Alas! for the rarity
 Of Christian charity
 Under the sun! 45
 Oh, it was pitiful!
 Near a whole city full,
 Home she had none.

Sisterly, brotherly,
 Fatherly, motherly 50
 Feelings had changed:
 Love, by harsh evidence,
 Thrown from its eminence;
 Even God's providence
 Seeming estranged. 55

Where the lamps quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light
From window to casement,
From garret to basement,
She stood with amazement,
Houseless by night.

60

The bleak wind of March
Made her tremble and shiver;
But not the dark arch,
Or the black flowing river:
Mad from life's history,
Glad to death's mystery,
Swift to be hurled—
Anywhere, anywhere
Out of the world!

65

70

In she plunged boldly—
No matter how coldly
The rough river ran—
Over the brink of it,
Picture it—think of it,
Dissolute Man!
Lave in it, drink of it,
Then, if you can!

75

Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashioned so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

80

Ere her limbs frigidly
Stiffen too rigidly, Decently, kindly,
Smooth and compose them;
And her eyes, close them,
Staring so blindly!

85

Dreadfully staring
Through muddy impurity,
As when with the daring
Last look of despairing
Fixed on futurity.

90

Perishing gloomily,
Spurred by contumely,
Cold inhumanity,
Burning insanity,
Into her rest.—
Cross her hands humbly,
As if praying dumbly,
Over her breast!

95

100

Owning her weakness,
Her evil behavior,
And leaving with meekness,
Her sins to her Savior!

105

THE SONG OF THE SHIRT

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat, in unwomanly rags,
Plying her needle and thread—
Stitch! stitch! stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
And still with a voice of dolorous pitch
She sang the "Song of the Shirt."

5

"Work! work! work!
While the cock is crowing aloof!
And work—work—work,
Till the stars shine through the roof!
It's Oh! to be a slave
Along with the barbarous Turk,
Where woman has never a soul to save,
If this is Christian work!

10

15

"Work—work—work,
Till the brain begins to swim;
Work—work—work,
Till the eyes are heavy and dim!
Seam, and gusset, and band,
Band, and gusset, and seam,
Till over the buttons I fall asleep,
And sew them on in a dream!

20

"Oh, Men, with Sisters dear!
Oh, Men, with Mothers and Wives!
It is not linen you're wearing out
But human creatures' lives!
Stitch—stitch—stitch,
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
Sewing at once, with a double thread,
A Shroud as well as a Shirt.

25

30

"But why do I talk of Death?
That Phantom of grisly bone,
I hardly fear its terrible shape,
It seems so like my own—
It seems so like my own,
Because of the fasts I keep;
Oh, God! that bread should be so dear,
And flesh and blood so cheap!

35

40

"Work—work—work!
 My labor never flags;
 And what are its wages? A bed of straw,
 A crust of bread—and rags.
 That shattered roof—this naked floor— 45
 A table—a broken chair—
 And a wall so blank, my shadow I thank
 For sometimes falling there!

"Work—work—work!
 From weary chime to chime, 50
 Work—work—work,
 As prisoners work for crime!
 Band, and gusset, and seam,
 Seam, and gusset, and band,
 Till the heart is sick, and the brain benumbed, 55
 As well as the weary hand.

"Work—work—work,
 In the dull December light,
 And work—work—work,
 When the weather is warm and bright—
 While underneath the eaves 61
 The brooding swallows cling
 As if to show me their sunny backs
 And twit me with the spring.

"Oh! but to breathe the breath 65
 Of the cowslip and primrose sweet—
 With the sky above my head,
 And the grass beneath my feet;
 For only one short hour
 To feel as I used to feel, 70
 Before I knew the woes of want
 And the walk that costs a meal.

"Oh! but for one short hour!
 A respite however brief!
 No blessed leisure for Love or Hope, 75
 But only time for Grief!
 A little weeping would ease my heart,
 But in their briny bed
 My tears must stop, for every drop Hinders needle and thread!" 80

With fingers weary and worn,
 With eyelids heavy and red,
 A woman sat, in unwomanly rags,
 Plying her needle and thread—
 Stitch! stitch! stitch! 85

In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
 And still with a voice of dolorous pitch,—
 Would that its tone could reach the Rich!—

She sang this "Song of the Shirt!"

CHARLES LAMB (1775–1834)

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL FIVE AND THIRTY YEARS AGO

In Mr. Lamb's "Works," published a year or two since, I find a magnificent eulogy on my old school,¹ such as it was, or now appears to him to have been, between the years 1782 and 1789. It happens, very oddly, that my own standing at Christ's was nearly corresponding with his; and, with all gratitude to him for his enthusiasm for the cloisters, I think he has contrived to bring to- 10 gether whatever can be said in praise of them, dropping all the other side of the argument most ingeniously.

I remember L. at school; and can well recollect that he had some peculiar advantages, which I and others of his school-fellows had not. His friends lived in town, and were near at hand; and he had the privilege of going to see them, almost as often as he wished, through some 20 invidious distinction, which was denied to us. The present worthy sub-treasurer to the Inner Temple can explain how that happened. He had his tea and hot rolls in a morning, while we were battenning upon our quarter of a penny loaf—our crug—moistened with attenuated small beer, in wooden piggins, smacking of the pitched leathern jack it was poured from. Our Monday's milk porritch, blue 30 and tasteless, and the pease soup of Saturday, coarse and choking, were enriched for him with a slice of "extraordinary bread and butter," from the hot-loaf of the Temple. The Wednesday's mess of millet, somewhat less repugnant—(we had three banyan to four meat days in the week)—was endeared to his palate with a lump of double-refined, and a smack of ginger (to make it go down the 40 more glibly) or the fragrant cinnamon. In lieu of our half-pickled Sundays, or quite fresh boiled beef on Thursdays (strong as caro equina), with detestable marigolds floating in the pail to poison the broth—our scanty mutton crags on Fridays—and rather more savory, but grudging, portions of the same flesh, rotten-roasted or rare, on the Tuesdays (the only dish which excited our appe- [50] tites, and disappointed our stomachs, in almost equal proportion)—he had his hot plate of roast veal, or the more tempting griskin (exotics unknown to our palates), cooked in the paternal kitchen (a great thing), and brought him daily by his maid or aunt! I remember the good old relative (in whom love forbade pride) squatting down upon some odd stone in a by-nook of the cloisters, disclosing the [60] viands (of higher regale than those cates which the ravens ministered to the Tishbite); and the contending passions of L. at the unfolding. There was love for the bringer; shame for the thing brought, and the manner of its bringing; sympathy for those who were too many to share in it; and, at top of all, hunger (eldest, strongest of the passions!) predominant, breaking down the stony fences of [70] shame, and awkwardness, and a troubling over-consciousness.

¹ Recollections of Christ's Hospital.

I was a poor friendless boy. My parents, and those who should care for me, were far away. Those few acquaintances of theirs, which they could reckon upon being kind to me in the great city, after a little forced notice, which they had the grace to take of me on my first arrival in town, soon grew tired of my holiday [80] visits. They seemed to them to recur too often, though I thought them few enough; and, one after another, they all failed me, and I felt myself alone among six hundred playmates.

O the cruelty of separating a poor lad from his early homestead! The yearnings which I used to have towards it in those unfledged years! How, in my dreams, would my native town (far in the west) [90] come back, with its church, and trees, and faces! How I would wake weeping, and in the anguish of my heart exclaim upon sweet Calne in Wiltshire!

To this late hour of my life, I trace impressions left by the recollection of those friendless holidays. The long warm days of summer never return but they bring with them a gloom from the haunting memory of those whole-day-leaves, [100] when, by some strange arrangement, we were turned out, for the live-long day, upon our own hands, whether we had friends to go to, or none. I remember those bathing excursions to the New River, which L. recalls with such relish, better, I think, than he can—for he was a home-seeking lad, and did not much care for such water-pastimes:—How merrily we would sally forth into the [110] fields; and strip under the first warmth of the sun; and wanton like young dace in the streams; getting us appetites for noon, which those of us that were penniless (our scanty morning crust long since exhausted) had not the means of allaying—while the cattle, and the birds, and the fishes, were at feed about us, and we had nothing to satisfy our cravings—the very beauty of the day, and the exercise [120] of the pastime, and the sense of liberty, setting a keener edge upon them!—How faint and languid, finally, we would return, towards nightfall, to our desired morsel, half-rejoicing, half-reluctant, that the hours of our uneasy liberty had expired!

It was worse in the days of winter, to go prowling about the streets objectless—shivering at cold windows of print- [130] shops, to extract a little amusement; or haply, as a last resort, in the hope of a little novelty, to pay a fifty-times repeated visit (where our individual faces should be as well known to the warden as those of his own charges) to the Lions in the Tower—to whose levée, by courtesy immemorial, we had a prescriptive title to admission.

L.'s governor (so we called the pa- [140] tron who presented us to the foundation) lived in a manner under his paternal roof. Any complaint which he had to make was sure of being attended to. This was understood at Christ's, and was an effectual screen to him against the severity of masters, or worse tyranny of the monitors. The oppressions of these young brutes are heart-sickening to call to recollection. I have been called out of [150] my bed, and waked for the purpose, in the coldest winter nights—and this not once, but night after night—in my shirt, to receive the discipline of a leathern thong, with eleven other sufferers, because it pleased my callow overseer, when there has been any talking heard after we were gone to bed, to make the six last beds in the dormitory, where the youngest children of us slept, answerable for an [160] offence they neither dared to commit, nor had the power to hinder.—The same execrable tyranny drove the younger part of us from the fires, when our feet were perishing with snow; and under the cruellest penalties, forbade the indulgence of a drink of water, when we lay in sleepless summer nights, fevered with the season, and the day's sports.

There was one H——, who, I [170] learned, in after days, was seen expiating some maturer offence in the hulks. (Do I flatter myself in fancying that this might be the planter of that name, who suffered—at Nevis, I think, or St. Kitts, —some few years since? My friend Tobin was the benevolent instrument of bringing him to the gallows.) This petty Nero actually branded a boy who had offended him, with a red-hot iron; and [180] nearly starved forty of us, with exacting contributions, to the one half of our bread, to pamper a young ass, which, incredible as it may seem, with the connivance of the nurse's daughter (a young flame of his) he had contrived to smuggle in, and keep upon the leads of the ward, as they called our dormitories. This game went on for better than a week, till the foolish beast, not able to fare well but he [190] must cry roast meat—happier than Caligula's minion, could he have kept his own counsel—but, foolisher, alas! than any of his species in the fables—waxing fat, and kicking, in the fulness of bread, one unlucky minute would needs proclaim his good fortune to the world below; and, laying out his simple throat, blew such a ram's horn blast, as (toppling down the walls of his own Jericho) set con- [200] cealment any longer at defiance. The client was dismissed, with certain attentions, to Smithfield; but I never understood that the patron underwent any censure on the occasion. This was in the stewardship of L.'s admired Perry.

Under the same facile administration, can L. have forgotten the cool impunity with which the nurses used to carry away openly, in open platters, for their own [210] tables, one out of two of every hot joint, which the careful matron had been seeing scrupulously weighed out for our dinners? These things were daily practised in that magnificent apartment, which L. (grown connoisseur since, we presume) praises so highly for the grand paintings "by Verrio, and others," with which it is "hung round and adorned." But the sight of sleek, well-fed blue-coat boys [220] in pictures was, at that time, I believe, little consolatory to him, or us, the living ones, who saw the better part of our provisions carried away before our faces by harpies; and ourselves reduced (with the Trojan in the hall of Dido)

"To feed our mind with idle portraiture."

L. has recorded the repugnance of the school to gags, or the fat of fresh beef boiled; and sets it down to some super- [230] stition. But these unctuous morsels are never grateful to young palates (children are universally fat-haters) and in strong, coarse, boiled meats, unsalted, are detestable. A gag-eater in our time was equivalent to a goul, and held in equal detestation. — suffered under the imputation.

"——"Twas said,
He ate strange flesh."

240

He was observed, after dinner, carefully to gather up the remnants left at his table (not many, nor very choice fragments, you may credit me)—and, in an especial manner, these disreputable morsels, which he would convey away, and secretly stow in the settle that stood at his bed-side. None saw when he ate them. It was rumored that he privately devoured them in the night. He was [250] watched, but no traces of such midnight practices were discoverable. Some reported, that, on leave-days, he had been seen to carry out of the bounds a large blue check handkerchief, full of something. This then must be the accursed thing. Conjecture next was at work to imagine how he could dispose of it. Some said he sold it to the beggars. This belief generally prevailed. He went [260] about moping. None spake to him. No one would play with him. He was excommunicated; put out of the pale of the school. He was too powerful a boy to be beaten, but he underwent every mode of that negative punishment, which is more grievous than many stripes. Still he persevered. At length he was observed by two of his school-fellows, who were determined to get at the secret, [270 and had traced him one leave-day for that purpose, to enter a large worn-out building, such as there exist specimens of in Chancery Lane, which are let out to various scales of pauperism, with open door, and a common staircase. After him they silently slunk in, and followed by stealth up four flights, and saw him tap at a poor wicket, which was opened by an aged woman, meanly clad. [280 Suspicion was now ripened into certainty. The informers had secured their victim. They had him in their toils. Accusation was formally preferred, and retribution most signal was looked for. Mr. Hathaway, the then steward (for this happened a little after my time), with that patient sagacity which tempered all his conduct, determined to investigate the matter, before he proceeded to sentence. [290 The result was, that the supposed mendicants, the receivers or purchasers of the mysterious scraps, turned out to be the parents of —, an honest couple come to decay,—whom this seasonable supply had, in all probability, saved from mendicancy; and that this young stork, at the expense of his own good name, had all this while been only feeding the old birds!—The governors on this occa- [300 sion, much to their honor, voted a present relief to the family of —, and presented him with a silver medal. The lesson which the steward read upon RASH JUDGMENT, on the occasion of publicly delivering the medal to —, I believe, would not be lost upon his auditory.—I had left school then, but I well remember —. He was a tall, shambling youth, with a cast in his eye, not at all calculated [310 to conciliate hostile prejudices. I have since seen him carrying a baker's basket. I think I heard he did not do quite so well by himself, as he had done by the old folks.

I was a hypochondriac lad; and the sight of a boy in fetters, upon the day of my first putting on the blue clothes, was not exactly fitted to assuage the natural terrors of initiation. I was of tender [320 years, barely turned of seven; and had only read of such things in books, or seen them but in dreams. I was told he had run away. This was the punishment for the first offence.—As a novice I was soon after taken to see the dungeons. These were little, square, Bedlam cells, where a boy could just lie at his length upon straw and a blanket—a mattress, I think, was afterwards substituted—with a [330 peep of light, let in askance, from a prison-orifice at top, barely enough to read by. Here the poor boy was locked in by himself all day, without sight of any but the porter who brought him his bread and water—who might not speak to him;—or of the beadle, who came twice a week to call him out to receive his periodical chastisement, which was almost welcome, because it separated him for a brief [340 interval from solitude:—and here he was shut up by himself of nights, out of the reach of any sound, to suffer whatever horrors the weak nerves, and superstition incident to his time of life, might subject him to.¹ This was the penalty for the second offence.—Wouldst thou like, reader, to see what became of him in the next degree?

The culprit, who had been a third [350 time an offender, and whose expulsion was at this time deemed irreversible, was brought forth, as at some solemn auto da fe, arrayed in uncouth and most appalling attire—all trace of his late “watchet weeds” carefully effaced, he was exposed in a jacket, resembling those which London lamplighters formerly delighted in, with a cap of the same. The effect of this divestiture was such as the in- [360 genious devisers of it could have anticipated. With his pale and frightened features, it was as if some of those disfigurements in Dante had seized upon him.

¹ One or two instances of lunacy, or attempted suicide, accordingly, at length convinced the governors of the impolicy of this part of the sentence, and the midnight torture to the spirits was dispensed with.—This fancy of dungeons for children was a sprout of Howard's brain; for which (saving the reverence due to Holy Paul), methinks, I could willingly spit upon his statue. [Howard's statue was in St Paul's Cathedral.]

In this disguise he was brought into the hall (L.'s favorite state-room), where awaited him the whole number of his schoolfellows, whose joint lessons and sports he was thenceforth to share no more; the awful presence of the steward, to be seen for the last time; of the executioner beadle, clad in his state robe for the occasion; and of two faces more, of direr import, because never but in these extremities visible. These were governors; two of whom, by choice, or charter, were always accustomed to officiate at these Ultima Supplicia; not to mitigate (so at least we understood it), but to enforce the uttermost stripe. Old Bamber [380] Gascoigne, and Peter Aubert, I remember, were colleagues on one occasion, when the beadle turning rather pale, a glass of brandy was ordered to prepare him for the mysteries. The scourging was, after the old Roman fashion, long and stately. The lictor accompanied the criminal quite round the hall. We were generally too faint with attending to the previous disgusting circumstances, to make accurate report with our eyes of the degree of corporal suffering inflicted. Report, of course, gave out the back knotty and livid. After scourging, he was made over, in his San Benito, to his friends, if he had any (but commonly such poor runagates were friendless), or to his parish officer, who, to enhance the effect of the scene, had his station allotted to him on the outside of the hall gate. [400]

These solemn pageantries were not played off so often as to spoil the general mirth of the community. We had plenty of exercise and recreation after school hours; and, for myself, I must confess, that I was never happier, than in them. The Upper and Lower Grammar Schools were held in the same room; and an imaginary line only divided their bounds. Their character was as different as [410] that of the inhabitants on the two sides of the Pyrenees. The Rev. James Boyer was the Upper Master; but the Rev. Matthew Field presided over that portion of the apartment, of which I had the good fortune to be a member. We lived a life as careless as birds. We talked and did just what we pleased, and nobody molested us. We carried an accidence, or a grammar, for form; but, for any [420] trouble it gave us, we might take two years in getting through the verbs deponent, and another two in forgetting all that we had learned about them. There was now and then the formality of saying a lesson, but if you had not learned it, a brush across the shoulders (just enough to disturb a fly) was the sole remonstrance. Field never used the rod; and in truth he wielded the cane with no great good will— [430] holding it "like a dancer." It looked in his hands rather like an emblem than an instrument of authority; and an emblem, too, he was ashamed of. He was a good easy man, that did not care to ruffle his own peace, nor perhaps set any great consideration upon the value of juvenile time. He came among us, now and then, but often stayed away whole days from us; and when he came, it made no difference to us—he had his private room to retire to, the short time he stayed, to be out of the sound of our noise. Our mirth and uproar went on. We had classics of our own, without being beholden to "insolent Greece or haughty Rome," that passed current among us—Peter Wilkins—the Adventures of the Hon. Capt. Robert Boyle—the Fortunate Blue Coat Boy—and the like. Or we cultivated a turn for mechanic or scientific operation; making little sun-dials of paper; or weaving those ingenious parentheses, called cat-cradles; or making dry peas to dance upon the end of a tin pipe; or studying the art military over that laudable game "French and English," and a hundred other such devices to pass away the time—mixing the useful with the agreeable—as would have made the souls [460] of Rousseau and John Locke chuckle to have seen us.

Matthew Field belonged to that class of modest divines who affect to mix in equal proportion the gentleman, the scholar, and the Christian; but, I know not how, the first ingredient is generally found to be the predominating dose in the composition. He was engaged in gay parties, or with his courtly bow at some episcopal levée, when he should have been attending upon us. He had for many years the classical charge of a hundred children, during the four or five first years of their education; and his very highest form seldom proceeded further than two or three of the introductory fables of Phædrus. How things were suffered to go on thus, I cannot guess. Boyer, who was the proper person to have remembered these abuses, always affected, perhaps felt, a delicacy in interfering in a province not strictly his own. I have not been without my suspicions, that he was not altogether displeased at the contrast we presented to his end of the school. We were a sort of Helots to his young Spartans. He would sometimes, with ironic deference, send to borrow a rod of the Under Master, and then, with [490] sardonic grin, observe to one of his upper boys, "how neat and fresh the twigs looked." While his pale students were battering their brains over Xenophon and Plato, with a silence as deep as that enjoined by the Samite, we were enjoying ourselves at our ease in our little Goshen. We saw a little into the secrets of his discipline, and the prospect did but the more reconcile us to our lot. His thunders [500] rolled innocuous for us; his storms came near, but never touched us; contrary to Gideon's miracle, while all around were drenched, our fleece was dry. His boys turned out the better scholars; we, I suspect, have the advantage in temper. His pupils cannot speak of him without something of terror allaying their gratitude; the remembrance of Field comes back with all the soothing images of indolence, and [510] summer slumbers, and work like play, and innocent idleness, and Elysian exemptions, and life itself a "playing holiday."

Though sufficiently removed from the jurisdiction of Boyer, we were near enough (as I have said) to understand a little of his system. We occasionally heard sounds of the Ululantes, and caught glances of Tartarus. B. was a rabid pedant. His English style was [520] cramped to barbarism. His Easter anthems (for his duty obliged him to those periodical flights) were grating as scranell pipes.¹—He would laugh, ay, and heartily,

¹ In this and every thing B. was the antipodes of his coadjutor. While the former was digging his brains for crude anthems, worth a pig-nut, F. would be recreating his gentle-

but then it must be at Flaccus's quibble about Rex—or at the tristis severitas in vultu, or inspicere in patinas, of Terence—thin jests, which at their first broaching could hardly have had vis enough to move a Roman muscle.—He had two [530] wigs, both pedantic, but of different omen. The one serene, smiling, fresh powdered, betokening a mild day. The other, an old, discolored, unkempt, angry caxon, denoting frequent and bloody execution. Woe to the school, when he made his morning appearance in his passy, or passionate wig. No comet expounded surer.—J. B. had a heavy hand. I have known him double his knotty [540] fist at a poor trembling child (the maternal milk hardly dry upon its lips) with a "Sirrah, do you presume to set your wits at me?"—Nothing was more common than to see him make a headlong entry into the schoolroom, from his inner recess, or library, and, with turbulent eye, singling out a lad, roar out, "Od's my life, Sirrah" (his favorite adjuration), "I have a great mind to whip you,"— [550] then, with as sudden a retracting impulse, fling back into his lair—and, after a cooling lapse of some minutes (during which all but the culprit had totally forgotten the context) drive headlong out again, piecing out his imperfect sense, as if it had been some Devil's Litany, with the expletory yell—"and I WILL too."—In his gentler moods, when the rabidus furor was assuaged, he had resort to an ingenious method, peculiar, for what I have heard, to himself, of whipping the boy, and reading the Debates, at the same time; a paragraph, and a lash between; which in those times, when parliamentary oratory was most at a height and flourishing in these realms, was not calculated to impress the patient with a veneration for the diffuser graces of rhetoric.

Once, and but once, the uplifted [570] rod was known to fall ineffectual from his hand—when droll squinting W—— having been caught putting the inside of the manly fancy in the more flowery walks of the Muses. A little dramatic effusion of his, under the name of Vertumnus and Pomona, is not yet forgotten by the chroniclers of that sort of literature. It was accepted by Garrick, but the town did not give it their sanction.—B. used to say of it, in a way of half-compliment, half-irony, that it was too classical for representation (Lamb) master's desk to a use for which the architect had clearly not designed it, to justify himself, with great simplicity averred, that he did not know that the thing had been forewarned. This exquisite irrecognition of any law antecedent to the oral or declaratory struck so irresistibly upon the fancy of all who heard it (the pedagogue himself not excepted) that remission was unavoidable.

L. has given credit to B.'s great merits as an instructor. Coleridge, in his literary life, has pronounced a more intelligible and ample encomium on them. The author of the Country Spectator doubts not to compare him with the ablest teachers of antiquity. Perhaps we cannot dismiss him better than with the pious ejaculation of C.—when he heard that his old master was on his death-bed—"Poor J. B.!—may all his faults be forgiven; and may he be wafted to bliss by little cherub boys, all head and wings, with no bottoms to reproach his sublunary infirmities."

Under him were many good and sound scholars bred.—First Grecian of my time was Lancelot Pepys Stevens, kindest of boys and men, since Co-grammar-master (and inseparable companion) with Dr. T——e. What an edifying spectacle did this brace of friends present to those who remembered the anti-socialities of their predecessors!—You never met the one by chance in the street without a wonder, which was quickly dissipated by the almost immediate sub-appearance of the other. Generally arm in arm, these kindly coadjutors lightened for each other the toilsome duties of their profession, and when, in advanced age, one found it convenient to retire, the other was not long in discovering that it suited him to lay down the fasces also. Oh, it is pleasant, as it is rare, to find the same arm linked in yours at forty, which at thirteen helped it to turn over the Cicero De Amicitia, or some tale of Antique Friendship, which the young heart even then was burning to anticipate!—Co-Grecian with S. was Th——, who has since executed with ability various diplomatic unctious at the Northern courts. Th—— was a tall, dark, saturnine youth, sparing of speech, with raven locks.—Thomas Fanshaw Middleton followed him (now Bishop of Calcutta) a scholar and a gentleman in his teens. He has the reputation of an excellent critic; and is author (besides the Country Spectator) of a Treatise on the Greek Article, against Sharpe—M. is said to bear his mitre high in India, where the regni novitas (I dare say) sufficiently justifies the bearing. A humility quite as primitive as that of Jewel or Hooker might not be exactly fitted to impress the minds of those Anglo-Asiatic diocesans with a reverence for home institutions, and the church which those fathers watered. The manners of M. at school, though firm, were mild and unassuming.—Next to M. (if not senior to him) was Richards, author of the Aboriginal Britons, the most spirited of the Oxford Prize Poems; a pale, studious Grecian.—Then followed poor S——, ill-fated M——! of these the Muse is silent.

"Finding some of Edward's race Unhappy, pass their annals by."

Come back into memory, like as thou wert in the dayspring of thy fancies, with hope like a fiery column before thee—the dark pillar not yet turned—Samuel Taylor Coleridge—Logician, Metaphysician, Bard!—How have I seen the casual passer through the Cloisters stand still, entranced with admiration (while he weighed the disproportion between the speech and the garb of the young Mirandula), to hear thee unfold, in thy deep and sweet intonations, the mysteries of Jamblichus, or Plotinus (for even in those years thou waxedst not pale at such philosophic draughts), or reciting Homer in his Greek, or Pindar—while the walls of the old Grey Friars re-echoed to the accents of the inspired charity-boy! Many were the "wit-combats" (to dally awhile with the words of old Fuller) between him and C. V. Le G——, "which two I behold like a Spanish great gallion, and an English man-of-war; Master Coleridge, like the former, was built far higher in learning, solid, but slow in his performances. C.

V. L., with the English man-of-war, [680 lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his wit and invention.]

Nor shalt thou, their compeer, be quickly forgotten, Allen, with the cordial smile, and still more cordial laugh, with which thou wert wont to make the old Cloisters shake, in thy cognition of some poignant jest of theirs; or the antic- [690 pation of some more material, and, peradventure, practical one, of thine own. Extinct are those smiles, with that beautiful countenance, with which (for thou wert the Nireus formosus of the school), in the days of thy maturer waggery, thou didst disarm the wrath of infuriated town-damsel, who, incensed by provoking pinch, turning tigress-like round, suddenly converted by thy angel-look, ex- [700 changed the half-formed terrible "bl—," for a gentler greeting— "bless thy hand—some facet"

Next follow two, who ought to be now alive, and the friends of Elia—the junior Le G—— and F——; who, impelled, the former by a roving temper, the latter by too quick a sense of neglect—ill capable of enduring the slights poor Sizars are sometimes subject to in our seats of learn- [710 ing—exchanged their Alma Mater for the camp; perishing, one by climate, and one on the plains of Salamanca:—Le G—— sanguine, volatile, sweet-natured; F—— dogged, faithful, anticipative of insult, warm-hearted, with something of the old Roman height about him.

Fine, frank-hearted Fr——, the present master of Hertford, with Marmaduke T——, mildest of Missionaries—and [720 both my good friends still—close the catalogue of Grecians in my time.

DREAM-CHILDREN; A REVERIE

Children love to listen to stories about their elders, when they were children; to stretch their imagination to the conception of a traditionary great-uncle or grandame, whom they never saw. It was in this spirit that my little ones crept about me the other evening to hear about their great-grandmother Field, who lived in a great house in Norfolk (a hundred times bigger than that in which they [10 and papa lived) which had been the scene—so at least it was generally believed in that part of the country—of the tragic incidents which they had lately become familiar with from the ballad of the Children in the Wood. Certain it is that the whole story of the children and their cruel uncle was to be seen fairly carved out in wood upon the chimney-piece of the great hall, [20 the whole story down to the Robin Redbreasts, till a foolish rich person pulled it down to set up a marble one of modern invention in its stead, with no story upon it. Here Alice put out one of her dear mother's looks, too tender to be called upbraiding. Then I went on to say how religious and how good their great-grandmother Field was, how [30 beloved and respected by every body though she was not indeed the mistress of this great house, but had only the charge of it (and yet in some respects she might be said to be the mistress of it too) committed to her by the owner, who preferred living in a newer and more fashionable mansion which he had purchased somewhere in the adjoining county but still she lived in it in a manner [40 as if it had been her own, and kept up the dignity of the great house in a sort while she lived, which afterwards came to decay, and was nearly pulled down, and all its old ornaments stripped and carried away to the owner's other house, where they were set up, and looked as awkward as if some one were to carry away the old tombs they had seen lately at the Abbey, and stick them up in Lady C.'s tawdry gilt [50 drawing-room. Here John smiled, as much as to say, "that would be foolish indeed." And then I told how, when she came to die, her funeral was attended by a concourse of all the poor, and some of the gentry too, of the neighborhood for many miles round, to show their respect for her memory, because she had been such a good and religious woman; so good indeed that she knew all the Psalter [60

by heart, ay, and a great part of the Testament besides. Here little Alice spread her hands. Then I told what a tall, upright, graceful person their great-grandmother Field once was; and how in her youth she was esteemed the best dancer—here Alice's little right foot played an involuntary movement, till upon my looking grave, it desisted—the best dancer, I was saying, in the county, till a [70] cruel disease, called a cancer, came, and bowed her down with pain; but it could never bend her good spirits, or make them stoop, but they were still upright, because she was so good and religious. Then I told how she was used to sleep by herself in a lone chamber of the great lone house; and how she believed that an apparition of two infants was to be seen at midnight gliding up and down the great stair—[80] case near where she slept, but she said “those innocents would do her no harm;” and how frightened I used to be, though in those days I had my maid to sleep with me, because I was never half so good or religious as she—and yet I never saw the infants. Here John expanded all his eyebrows and tried to look courageous. Then I told how good she was to all her grand-children, having us to the great [90] house in the holidays, where I in particular used to spend many hours by myself, in gazing upon the old busts of the Twelve Cæsars, that had been Emperors of Rome, till the old marble heads would seem to live again, or I to be turned into marble with them; how I never could be tired with roaming about that huge mansion, with its vast empty rooms, with their worn-out hangings, fluttering [100] tapestry, and carved oaken panels, with the gilding almost rubbed out—sometimes in the spacious old-fashioned gardens, which I had almost to myself, unless when now and then a solitary gardening man would cross me—and how the nectarines and peaches hung upon the walls, without my ever offering to pluck them, because they were forbidden fruit, unless now and then,—and because I had more [110] pleasure in strolling about among the old melancholy-looking yew trees, or the firs, and picking up the red berries, and the fir apples, which were good for nothing but to look at—or in lying about upon the fresh grass, with all the fine garden smells around me—or basking in the orangery, till I could almost fancy myself ripening too along with the oranges and the limes in that grateful warmth [120] —or in watching the dace that darted to and fro in the fish-pond, at the bottom of the garden, with here and there a great sulky pike hanging midway down the water in silent state, as if it mocked at their impertinent friskings,—I had more pleasure in these busy-idle diversions than in all the sweet flavors of peaches, nectarines, oranges, and such like common baits of children. Here John silyly [130] deposited back upon the plate a bunch of grapes, which, not unobserved by Alice, he had meditated dividing with her, and both seemed willing to relinquish them for the present as irrelevant. Then in somewhat a more heightened tone, I told how, though their great-grandmother Field loved all her grand-children, yet in an especial manner she might be said to love their uncle, John L—, because he [140] was so handsome and spirited a youth, and a king to the rest of us; and, instead of moping about in solitary corners, like some of us, he would mount the most mettlesome horse he could get, when but an imp no bigger than themselves, and make it carry him half over the county in a morning, and join the hunters when there were any out—and yet he loved the old great house and gardens too, but [150] had too much spirit to be always pent up within their boundaries—and how their uncle grew up to man's estate as brave as he was handsome, to the admiration of everybody, but of their great-grandmother Field most especially; and how he used to carry me upon his back when I was a lame-footed boy—for he was a good bit older than me—many a mile when I could not walk for pain;—and how in after [160] life he became lame-footed too, and I did not always (I fear) make allowances enough for him when he was impatient, and in pain, nor remember sufficiently how considerate he had been to me when I was lame-footed; and how when he died, though he had not been dead an hour, it seemed as if he had died a great while ago, such a distance there is betwixt life and death; and how I bore his [170 death as I thought pretty well at first, but afterwards it haunted and haunted me; and though I did not cry or take it to heart as some do, and as I think he would have done if I had died, yet I missed him all day long, and knew not till then how much I had loved him. I missed his kindness, and I missed his crossness, and wished him to be alive again, to be quarrelling with him (for we quarrelled [180 sometimes), rather than not have him again, and was as uneasy without him, as he their poor uncle must have been when the doctor took off his limb. Here the children fell a-crying, and asked if their little mourning which they had on was not for uncle John, and they looked up, and prayed me not to go on about their uncle, but to tell them some stories about their pretty dead mother. Then I [190 told how for seven long years, in hope sometimes, sometimes in despair, yet persisting ever, I courted the fair Alice W——n; and, as much as children could understand, I explained to them what coyness, and difficulty, and denial meant in maidens—when suddenly, turning to Alice, the soul of the first Alice looked out at her eyes with such a reality of re-presentment, that I became in [200 doubt which of them stood there before me, or whose that bright hair was; and while I stood gazing, both the children gradually grew fainter to my view, receding, and still receding till nothing at last but two mournful features were seen in the uttermost distance, which, without speech, strangely impressed upon me the effects of speech; “We are not of Alice, nor of thee, nor are we children at all. [210 The children of Alice call Bartrum father. We are nothing; less than nothing, and dreams. We are only what might have been, and must wait upon the tedious shores of Lethe millions of ages before we have existence, and a name”—and immediately awaking, I found myself quietly seated in my bachelor armchair, where I had fallen asleep, with the faithful Bridget unchanged by my side—but [220 John L. (or James Elia) was gone for ever.

THE PRAISE OF CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS

I like to meet a sweep—understand me—not a grown sweeper—old chimney-sweepers are by no means attractive—but one of those tender novices, blooming through their first nigritude, the maternal washings not quite effaced from the cheek—such as come forth with the dawn, or somewhat earlier, with their little professional notes sounding like the peep peep of a young sparrow; or [10 liker to the matin lark should I pronounce them, in their aerial ascents not seldom anticipating the sun-rise?

I have a kindly yearning toward these dim specks—poor blots—innocent blacknesses—

I reverence these young Africans of our own growth—these almost clergy imps, who sport their cloth without assumption; and from their little pulpits (the tops [20 of chimneys), in the nipping air of a December morning, preach a lesson of patience to mankind.

When a child, what a mysterious pleasure it was to witness their operation! to see a chit no bigger than one's self enter, one knew not by what process, into what seemed the fauces Averni—to pursue him in imagination, as he went sounding on through so many dark stifling caverns, [30 horrid shades!—to shudder with the idea that “now, surely, he must be lost for ever!”—to revive at hearing his feeble shout of discovered day-light—and then (O fulness of delight) running out of doors, to come just in time to see the sable phenomenon emerge in safety, the brandished weapon of his art victorious like some flag waved over a conquered citadel! I seem to remember having been told, [40 that a bad sweep was once left in a stack with his brush, to indicate which way the wind blew. It was an awful spectacle certainly; not much unlike the old stage direction in Macbeth, where the “Apparition of a child crowned with a tree in his hand rises.”

Reader, if thou meetest one of these small gentry in thy early rambles, it is good to give him a penny. It is better [50 to give him two-pence. If it be starving weather, and to the proper troubles of his hard occupation, a pair of kibed heels (no unusual accompaniment) be super-added, the demand on thy humanity will surely rise to a tester.

There is a composition, the ground-work of which I have understood to be the sweet wood 'yclept sassafras. This wood boiled down to a kind of tea, and [60 tempered with an infusion of milk and sugar, hath to some tastes a delicacy beyond the China luxury. I know not how thy palate may relish it; for myself, with every deference to the judicious Mr. Read, who hath time out of mind kept open a shop (the only one he avers in London) for the vending of this "whole-some and pleasant beverage," on the south side of Fleet Street, as thou approach- [70 est Bridge Street—the only Salopian house,—I have never yet ventured to dip my own particular lip in a basin of his commended ingredients—a cautious premonition to the olfactories constantly whispering to me, that my stomach must infallibly, with all due courtesy, decline it. Yet I have seen palates, otherwise not uninstructed in dietetical elegances, sup it up with avidity. [80

I know not by what particular conformation of the organ it happens, but I have always found that this composition is surprisingly gratifying to the palate of a young chimney-sweeper—whether the oily particles (sassafras is slightly oleaginous) do attenuate and soften the fuliginous concretions, which are sometimes found (in dissections) to adhere to the roof of the mouth in these unfledged practitioners; or whether Nature, sensible that she had mingled too much of bitter wood in the lot of these raw victims, caused to grow out of the earth her sassafras for a sweet lenitive—but so it is, that no possible taste or odor to the senses of a young chimney-sweeper can convey a delicate excitement comparable to this mixture. Being penniless, they will yet hang their black heads over the ascending steam, to gratify one sense if possible, seemingly no less pleased than those domestic animals—cats—when they purr over a new-found sprig of valerian. There is something more in these sympathies than philosophy can inculcate.

Now albeit Mr. Read boasteth, not without reason, that his is the only Salopian house; yet be it known to thee, reader—if thou art one who keepest [110 what are called good hours, thou art haply ignorant of the fact—he hath a race of industrious imitators, who from stalls, and under open sky, dispense the same savory mess to humbler customers, at that dead time of the dawn, when (as extremes meet) the rake, reeling home from his midnight cups, and the hard-handed artisan leaving his bed to resume the premature labors of the day, [120 jostle, not unfrequently to the manifest disconcerting of the former, for the honors of the pavement. It is the time when, in summer, between the expired and the not yet relumined kitchen-fires, the kennels of our fair metropolis give forth their least satisfactory odors. The rake, who wisheth to dissipate his o'er-night vapors in more grateful coffee, curses the ungenial fume, as he passeth; but the artisan [130 stops to taste, and blesses the fragrant breakfast.

This is Saloop—the precocious herb-woman's darling—the delight of the early gardener, who transports his smoking cabbages by break of day from Hammer-smith to Covent Garden's famed piazzas—the delight, and, oh I fear, too often the envy, of the unpennied sweep. Him shouldst thou haply encounter, with [140 his dim visage pendent over the grateful steam, regale him with a sumptuous basin (it will cost thee but three half-pennies) and a slice of delicate bread and butter (an added halfpenny)—so may thy culinary fires, eased of the o'er-charged secretions from thy worse-placed hospitalities, curl up a lighter volume to the welkin—so may the descending soot never taint thy costly well-ingredienced soups— [150 nor the odious cry, quick-reaching from street to street, of the fired chimney, invite the rattling engines from ten adjacent parishes, to disturb for a casual scintillation thy peace and pocket!

I am by nature extremely susceptible of street affronts; the jeers and taunts of the populace; the low-bred triumph they display over the casual trip, or splashed stocking, of a gentleman. Yet can I [160 endure the jocularity of a young sweep with something more than forgiveness.—In the last winter but one, pacing along Cheapside with my accustomed precipitation when I walk westward, a treacherous slide brought me upon my back in an instant. I scrambled up with pain and shame enough—yet outwardly trying to face it down, as if nothing had happened—when the roguish grin of one of these [170 young wits encountered me. There he stood, pointing me out with his dusky finger to the mob, and to a poor woman (I suppose his mother) in particular, till the tears for the exquisiteness of the fun (so he thought it) worked themselves out at the corners of his poor red eyes, red from many a previous weeping, and soot-inflamed, yet twinkling through all with such a joy, snatched out of desolation, [180 that Hogarth—but Hogarth has got him already (how could he miss him?) in the March to Finchley, grinning at the pie-man—there he stood, as he stands in the picture, irremovable, as if the jest was to last for ever—with such a maximum of glee, and minimum of mischief, in his mirth—for the grin of a genuine sweep hath absolutely no malice in it—that I could have been content, if the honor of a gentle- [190 man might endure it, to have remained his butt and his mockery till midnight.

I am by theory obdurate to the seductiveness of what are called a fine set of teeth. Every pair of rosy lips (the ladies must pardon me) is a casket, presumably holding such jewels; but, methinks, they should take leave to “air” them as frugally as possible. The fine lady, or fine gentleman, who show me their teeth, [200 show me bones. Yet must I confess, that from the mouth of a true sweep a display (even to ostentation) of those white and shining ossifications, strikes me as an agreeable anomaly in manners, and an allowable piece of foppery. It is, as when

“A sable cloud
Turns forth her silver lining on the night.”

It is like some remnant of gentry not [210 quite extinct; a badge of better days; a hint of nobility:—and, doubtless, under the obscuring darkness and double night of their forlorn disguisement, oftentimes lurketh good blood, and gentle conditions, derived from lost ancestry, and a lapsed pedigree. The premature apprenticeships of these tender victims give but too much encouragement, I fear, to clandestine, and almost infantile ab- [220 ductions; the seeds of civility and true courtesy, so often discernible in these young grafts (not otherwise to be accounted for) plainly hint at some forced adoptions; many noble Rachels mourning for their children, even in our days, countenance the fact; the tales of fairy-spiriting may shadow a lamentable verity, and the recovery of the young Montagu be but a solitary instance of good for- [230 tune, out of many irreparable and hopeless defiliations.

In one of the state-beds at Arundel Castle, a few years since—under a ducal canopy—(that seat of the Howards is an object of curiosity to visitors, chiefly for its beds, in which the late duke was especially a connoisseur)—encircled with curtains of delicatest crimson, with starry coronets inwoven—folded between a [240 pair of sheets whiter and softer than the lap where Venus lulled Ascanius—was discovered by chance, after all methods of search had failed, at noon-day, fast asleep, a lost chimney sweeper. The little creature, having somehow confounded his passage among the intricacies of those lordly chimneys, by some unknown aperture had alighted upon this magnificent chamber; and, tired with [250 his tedious explorations, was unable to resist the delicious invitemment to repose, which he there saw exhibited; so, creeping between the sheets very quietly, laid his black head upon the pillow, and slept like a young Howard.

Such is the account given to the visitors at the Castle.—But I cannot help seeming to perceive a confirmation of what I have just hinted at in this story. A high [260 instinct was at work in the case, or I am mistaken. Is it probable that a poor child of that description, with whatever weariness he might be visited, would have ventured, under such a penalty, as he would be taught to expect, to uncover the sheets of a Duke's bed, and deliberately to lay himself down between them, when the rug, or the carpet, presented an obvious couch, still far above his pre- [270] tensions—is this probable, I would ask, if the great power of nature, which I contend for, had not been manifested within him, prompting to the adventure? Doubtless this young nobleman (for such my mind misgives me that he must be) was allured by some memory, not amounting to full consciousness, of his condition in infancy, when he was used to be lapt by his mother, or his nurse, in just [280] such sheets as he there found, into which he was but now creeping back as into his proper incunabula, and resting-place.—By no other theory, than by this sentiment of a pre-existent state (as I may call it), can I explain a deed so venturous, and, indeed, upon any other system, so indecorous, in this tender, but unseasonable, sleeper.

My pleasant friend JEM WHITE was [290] so impressed with a belief of metamorphoses like this frequently taking place, that in some sort to reverse the wrongs of fortune in these poor changelings, he instituted an annual feast of chimney-sweepers, at which it was his pleasure to officiate as host and waiter. It was a solemn supper held in Smithfield, upon the yearly return of the fair of St. Bartholomew. Cards were issued a week be- [300] fore to the master-sweeps in and about the metropolis, confining the invitation to their younger fry. Now and then an elderly stripling would get in among us, and be good-naturedly winked at; but our main body were infantry. One unfortunate wight, indeed, who, relying upon his dusky suit, had intruded himself into our party, but by tokens was providentially discovered in time to be no [310] chimney-sweeper (all is not soot which looks so), was quitted out of the presence with universal indignation, as not having on the wedding garment; but in general the greatest harmony prevailed. The place chosen was a convenient spot among the pens, at the north side of the fair, not so far distant as to be impervious to the agreeable hubbub of that vanity; but remote enough not to be obvious to [320] the interruption of every gaping spectator in it. The guests assembled about seven. In those little temporary parlors three tables were spread with napery, not so fine as substantial, and at every board a comely hostess presided with her pan of hissing sausages. The nostrils of the young rogues dilated at the savor. JAMES WHITE, as head waiter, had charge of the first table; and myself, with our [330] trusty companion BRID, ordinarily ministered to the other two. There was clambering and jostling, you may be sure, who should get at the first table—for Rochester in his maddest days could not have done the humors of the scene with more spirit than my friend. After some general expression of thanks for the honor the company had done him, his inaugural ceremony was to clasp the greasy [340] waist of old dame Ursula (the fattest of the three), that stood frying and fretting, half-blessing, half-cursing “the gentleman,” and imprint upon her chaste lips a tender salute, whereat the universal host would set up a shout that tore the concave, while hundreds of grinning teeth startled the night with their brightness. O it was a pleasure to see the sable youngers lick in the unctuous meat, [350] with his more unctuous sayings—how he would fit the tit-bits to the puny mouths, reserving the lengthier links for the seniors—how he would intercept a morsel even in the jaws of some young desperado, declaring it “must to the pan again to be browned, for it was not fit for a gentleman's eating”—how he would recommend this slice of white bread, or that piece of kissing-crust, to a ten- [360] der juvenile, advising them all to have a care of cracking their teeth, which were their best patrimony,—how genteelly he would deal about the small ale, as if it were wine, naming the brewer, and protesting, if it were not good he should lose their custom; with a special recommendation to wipe the lip before drinking. Then we had our toasts—“The King,”—the “Cloth,”—which, whether they un- [370] derstood or not, was equally diverting and flattering;—and for a crowning sentiment, which never failed, “May the Brush supersede the Laurel." All these, and fifty other fancies, which were rather felt than comprehended by his guests, would he utter, standing upon tables, and prefacing every sentiment with a "Gentlemen, give me leave to propose so and so," which was a prodigious comfort [380 to those young orphans; every now and then stuffing into his mouth (for it did not do to be squeamish on these occasions) indiscriminate pieces of those reeking sausages, which pleased them mightily, and was the savoriest part, you may believe, of the entertainment.

"Golden lads and lasses must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust"—

James White is extinct, and with [390 him these suppers have long ceased. He carried away with him half the fun of the world when he died—of my world at least. His old clients look for him among the pens; and, missing him, reproach the altered feast of St. Bartholomew, and the glory of Smithfield departed for ever.

A DISSERTATION UPON ROAST PIG

Mankind, says a Chinese manuscript, which my friend M. was obliging enough to read and explain to me, for the first seventy thousand ages ate their meat raw, clawing or biting it from the living animal, just as they do in Abyssinia to this day. This period is not obscurely hinted at by their great Confucius in the second chapter of his Mundane Mutations, where he designates a [10 kind of golden age by the term Cho-fang, literally the Cook's Holiday. The manuscript goes on to say, that the art of roasting, or rather broiling (which I take to be the elder brother) was accidentally discovered in the manner following. The swine-herd, Ho-ti, having gone out into the woods one morning, as his manner was, to collect mast for his hogs, left his cottage in the care of his eldest son [20 Bo-bo, a great lubberly boy, who being fond of playing with fire, as youngers of his age commonly are, let some sparks escape into a bundle of straw, which kindling quickly, spread the conflagration over every part of their poor mansion, till it was reduced to ashes. Together with the cottage (a sorry antediluvian make-shift of a building, you may think it), what was of much more importance, a fine litter of new-farrowed pigs, no less than nine in number, perished. China pigs have been esteemed a luxury all over the East from the remotest periods that we read of. Bo-bo was in the utmost consternation, as you may think, not so much for the sake of the tenement, which his father and he could easily build up again with a few dry branches, and the labor of an hour or two, at any [40 time, as for the loss of the pigs. While he was thinking what he should say to his father, and wringing his hands over the smoking remnants of one of those untimely sufferers, an odor assailed his nostrils, unlike any scent which he had before experienced. What could it proceed from?—not from the burnt cottage—he had smelt that smell before—indeed this was by no means the first acci- [50 dent of the kind which had occurred through the negligence of this unlucky young fire-brand. Much less did it resemble that of any known herb, weed, or flower. A premonitory moistening at the same time overflowed his nether lip. He knew not what to think. He next stooped down to feel the pig, if there were any signs of life in it. He burnt his fingers, and to cool them he applied them in [60 his booby fashion to his mouth. Some of the crumbs of the scorched skin had come away with his fingers, and for the first time in his life (in the world's life indeed, for before him no man had known it) he tasted—crackling! Again he felt and fumbled at the pig. It did not burn him so much now, still he licked his fingers from a sort of habit. The truth at length broke into his slow under- [70 standing, that it was the pig that smelt so, and the pig that tasted so delicious; and, surrendering himself up to the newborn pleasure, he fell to tearing up whole handfuls of the scorched skin with the flesh next it, and was cramming it down his throat in his beastly fashion, when his sire entered amid the smoking rafters, armed with retributory cudgel, and finding how affairs stood, began to rain [80 blows upon the young rogue's shoulders, as thick as hailstones, which Bo-bo heeded not any more than if they had been flies. The tickling pleasure, which he experienced in his lower regions, had rendered him quite callous to any inconveniences he might feel in those remote quarters. His father might lay on, but he could not beat him from his pig, till he had fairly made an end of it, [90 when, becoming a little more sensible of his situation, something like the following dialogue ensued.

"You graceless whelp, what have you got there devouring? Is it not enough that you have burnt me down three houses with your dog's tricks, and be hanged to you, but you must be eating fire, and I know not what—what have you got there, I say?" [100

"O, father, the pig, the pig, do come and taste how nice the burnt pig eats."

The ears of Ho-ti tingled with horror. He cursed his son, and he cursed himself that ever he should beget a son that should eat burnt pig.

Bo-bo, whose scent was wonderfully sharpened since morning, soon raked out another pig, and fairly rending it asunder, thrust the lesser half by main force [110 into the fists of Ho-ti, still shouting out "Eat, eat, eat the burnt pig, father, only taste—O Lord,"—with such-like barbarous ejaculations, cramming all the while as if he would choke.

Ho-ti trembled every joint while he grasped the abominable thing, wavering whether he should not put his son to death for an unnatural young monster, when the crackling scorching his fin- [120 gers, as it had done his son's, and applying the same remedy to them, he in his turn tasted some of its flavor, which, make what sour mouths he would for a pretence, proved not altogether displeasing to him. In conclusion (for the manuscript here is a little tedious) both father and son fairly sat down to the mess, and never left off till they had despatched all that remained of the litter. [130

Bo-bo was strictly enjoined not to let the secret escape, for the neighbors would certainly have stoned them for a couple of abominable wretches, who could think of improving upon the good meat which God had sent them. Nevertheless, strange stories got about. It was observed that Ho-ti's cottage was burnt down now more frequently than ever. Nothing but fires from this time forward. Some [140 would break out in broad day, others in the night-time. As often as the sow farrowed, so sure was the house of Ho-ti to be in a blaze; and Ho-ti himself, which was the more remarkable, instead of chastising his son, seemed to grow more indulgent to him than ever. At length they were watched, the terrible mystery discovered, and father and son summoned to take their trial at Pekin, [150 then an inconsiderable assize town. Evidence was given, the obnoxious food itself produced in court, and verdict about to be pronounced, when the foreman of the jury begged that some of the burnt pig, of which the culprits stood accused, might be handed into the box. He handled it, and they all handled it, and burning their fingers, as Bo-bo and his father had done before them, and na- [160 ture prompting to each of them the same remedy, against the face of all the facts, and the clearest charge which judge had ever given,—to the surprise of the whole court, townsfolk, strangers, reporters, and all present—without leaving the box, or any manner of consultation whatever, they brought in a simultaneous verdict of Not Guilty.

The judge, who was a shrewd fel- [170 low, winked at the manifest iniquity of the decision and, when the court was dismissed, went privily, and bought up all the pigs that could be had for love or money. In a few days his Lordship's town house was observed to be on fire. The thing took wing, and now there was nothing to be seen but fires in every direction. Fuel and pigs grew enormously dear all over the district. The insurance offices one and all shut up shop. People built slighter and slighter every day, until it was feared that the very science of architecture would in no long time be lost to the world. Thus this custom of firing houses continued, till in process of time, says my manuscript, a sage arose, like our Locke, who made a discovery, that the flesh of swine, or indeed of any other animal, might be [190] cooked (burnt, as they called it) without the necessity of consuming a whole house to dress it. Then first began the rude form of a gridiron. Roasting by the string, or spit, came in a century or two later, I forget in whose dynasty. By such slow degrees, concludes the manuscript, do the most useful, and seemingly the most obvious arts, make their way among mankind.— [200]

Without placing too implicit faith in the account above given, it must be agreed, that if a worthy pretext for so dangerous an experiment as setting houses on fire (especially in these days) could be assigned in favor of any culinary object, that pretext and excuse might be found in ROAST PIG.

Of all the delicacies in the whole mundus edibilis, I will maintain it to be the [210] most delicate—princeps obsoniorum.

I speak not of your grown porkers—things between pig and pork—those hobbydehoys—but a young and tender suckling—under a moon old—guiltless as yet of the sty—with no original speck of the amor immunditiæ, the hereditary failing of the first parent, yet manifest—his voice as yet not broken, but something between a childish treble and a grum- [220] ble—the mild forerunner, or præludium, of a grunt.

He must be roasted. I am not ignorant that our ancestors ate them seethed, or boiled—but what a sacrifice of the exterior tegument!

There is no flavor comparable, I will contend, to that of the crisp, tawny, well-watched, not over-roasted, crackling, as it is well called—the very teeth [230] are invited to their share of the pleasure at this banquet in overcoming the coy, brittle resistance—with the adhesive oleaginous—O call it not fat—but an indefinable sweetness growing up to it—the tender blossoming of fat—fat cropped in the bud—taken in the shoot—in the first innocence—the cream and quintessence of the child-pig's yet pure food—

the lean, no lean, but a kind of animal [240] manna—or, rather, fat and lean (if it must be so) so blended and running into each other, that both together make but one ambrosian result, or common substance.

Behold him, while he is doing—it seemeth rather a refreshing warmth, than a scorching heat, that he is so passive to. How equably he twirleth round the string!—Now he is just done. To [250] see the extreme sensibility of that tender age, he hath wept out his pretty eyes—radiant jellies—shooting stars—

See him in the dish, his second cradle, how meek he lieth!—wouldst thou have had this innocent grow up to the grossness and indocility which too often accompany maturer swinehood? Ten to one he would have proved a glutton, a sloven, an obstinate, disagreeable [260] animal—wallowing in all manner of filthy conversation—from these sins he is happily snatched away—

“Ere sin could blight, or sorrow fade, Death came with timely care”—

his memory is odoriferous—no clown curseth, while his stomach half rejecteth, the rank bacon—no coalheaver bolteth him in reeking sausages—he hath a fair sepulchre in the grateful stomach of [270] the judicious epicure—and for such a tomb might be content to die.

He is the best of Savors. Pine-apple is great. She is indeed almost too transcendent—a delight, if not sinful, yet so like to sinning, that really a tender-conscionable person would do well to pause—too ravishing for mortal taste, she woundeth and excoriateth the lips that approach her—like lovers' kisses, she biteth— [280] she is a pleasure bordering on pain from the fierceness and insanity of her relish—but she stoppeth at the palate—she meddleth not with the appetite—and the coarsest hunger might barter her consistently for a mutton chop.

Pig—let me speak his praise—is no less provocative of the appetite, than he is satisfactory to the criticalness of the censorious palate. The strong man [290] may batten on him, and the weakling refuseth not his mild juices.

Unlike to mankind's mixed characters, a bundle of virtues and vices, inexplicably intertwined, and not to be unravelled without hazard, he is—good throughout. No part of him is better or worse than another. He helpeth, as far as his little means extend, all around. He is the least envious of banquets. He is all [300 neighbors' fare.

I am one of those, who freely and ungrudgingly impart a share of the good things of this life which fall to their lot (few as mine are in this kind) to a friend. I protest I take as great an interest in my friend's pleasures, his relishes, and proper satisfactions, as in mine own. "Presents," I often say, "endear Absents." Hares, pheasants, part- [310 ridges, snipes, barn-door chickens (those "tame villatic fowl"), capons, plovers, brawn, barrels of oysters, I dispense as freely as I receive them. I love to taste them, as it were, upon the tongue of my friend. But a stop must be put somewhere. One would not, like Lear, "give everything." I make my stand upon pig. Methinks it is an ingratitude to the Giver of all good flavors, to extra-domicili- [320 ate, or send out of the house, slightly (under pretext of friendship, or I know not what) a blessing so particularly adapted, predestined, I may say, to my individual palate—it argues an insensibility.

I remember a touch of conscience in this kind at school. My good old aunt, who never parted from me at the end of a holiday without stuffing a sweet- [330 meat, or some nice thing, into my pocket, had dismissed me one evening with a smoking plum-cake, fresh from the oven. In my way to school (it was over London Bridge) a gray-headed old beggar saluted me (I have no doubt at this time of day that he was a counterfeit). I had no pence to console him with, and in the vanity of self-denial, and the very coxcombry of charity, school-boy-like, [340 I made him a present of—the whole cake! I walked on a little, buoyed up, as one is on such occasions, with a sweet soothing of self-satisfaction; but before I had got to the end of the bridge, my better feelings returned, and I burst into tears, thinking how ungrateful I had been to my good aunt, to go and give her good gift away to a stranger, that I had never seen before, and who might be a bad man for [350 aught I knew, and then I thought of the pleasure my aunt would be taking in thinking that I—I myself, and not another—would eat her nice cake—and what should I say to her the next time I saw her—how naughty I was to part with her pretty present—and the odor of that spicy cake came back upon my recollection, and the pleasure and the curiosity I had taken in seeing her make it, and [360 her joy when she sent it to the oven, and how disappointed she would feel that I had never had a bit of it in my mouth at last—and I blamed my impertinent spirit of alms-giving, and out-of-place hypocrisy of goodness, and above all I wished never to see the face again of that insidious, good-for-nothing, old gray impostor.

Our ancestors were nice in their [370 method of sacrificing these tender victims. We read of pigs whipped to death with something of a shock, as we hear of any other obsolete custom. The age of discipline is gone by, or it would be curious to inquire (in a philosophical light merely) what effect this process might have towards intenerating and dulcifying a substance, naturally so mild and dulcet as the flesh of young pigs. It looks [380 like refining a violet. Yet we should be cautious, while we condemn the inhumanity, how we censure the wisdom of the practice. It might impart a gusto—

I remember an hypothesis, argued upon by the young students, when I was at St. Omer's, and maintained with much learning and pleasantry on both sides, "Whether, supposing that the flavor of a pig who obtained his death by [390 whipping (per flagellationem extremam) superadded a pleasure upon the palate of a man more intense than any possible suffering we can conceive in the animal, is man justified in using that method of putting the animal to death?" I forget the decision.

His sauce should be considered. Decidedly, a few bread crumbs, done up with his liver and brains, and a dash [400 of mild sage. But, banish, dear Mrs. Cook, I beseech you, the whole onion tribe. Barbecue your whole hogs to your palate, steep them in shalots, stuff them out with plantations of the rank and guilty garlic; you cannot poison them, or make them stronger than they are—but consider, he is a weakling—a flower.

THE SUPERANNUATED MAN

Sera tamen respexit Libertas. VIRGIL.

A Clerk I was in London gay.
O'KEEFE.

If peradventure, Reader, it has been thy lot to waste the golden years of thy life—thy shining youth—in the irksome confinement of an office; to have thy prison days prolonged through middle age down to decrepitude and silver hairs, without hope of release or respite; to have lived to forget that there are such things as holidays, or to remember them but as the prerogatives of childhood; [10 then, and then only, will you be able to appreciate my deliverance.

It is now six and thirty years since I took my seat at the desk in Mincing Lane. Melancholy was the transition at fourteen from the abundant playtime, and the frequently intervening vacations of school days, to the eight, nine, and sometimes ten hours' a-day attendance at a counting-house. But time par- [20 tially reconciles us to anything. I gradually became content—doggedly content, as wild animals in cages.

It is true I had my Sundays to myself; but Sundays, admirable as the institution of them is for purposes of worship, are for that very reason the very worst adapted for days of unbending and recreation. In particular, there is a gloom for me attendant upon a city Sunday, a [30 weight in the air. I miss the cheerful cries of London, the music, and the ballad-singers—the buzz and stirring murmur of the streets. Those eternal bells depress me. The closed shops repel me. Prints, pictures, all the glittering and endless succession of knacks and gew-gaws, and ostentatiously displayed wares of tradesmen, which make a weekday saunter through the less busy parts [40 of the metropolis so delightful—are shut out. No book-stalls deliciously to idle over—No busy faces to recreate the idle man who contemplates them ever passing by—the very face of business a charm by contrast to his temporary relaxation from it. Nothing to be seen but unhappy countenances—or half-happy at best—of emancipated 'prentices and little trades-folks, with here and there a servant [50 maid that has got leave to go out, who, slaving all the week, with the habit has lost almost the capacity of enjoying a free hour; and lively expressing the hollowness of a day's pleasuring. The very strollers in the fields on that day looked anything but comfortable.

But besides Sundays I had a day at Easter, and a day at Christmas, with a full week in the summer to go and air [60 myself in my native fields of Hertfordshire. This last was a great indulgence; and the prospect of its recurrence, I believe, alone kept me up through the year, and made my durance tolerable. But when the week came round, did the glittering phantom of the distance keep touch with me? or rather was it not a series of seven uneasy days, spent in restless pursuit of pleasure, and a wearisome anxiety to [70 find out how to make the most of them? Where was the quiet, where the promised rest? Before I had a taste of it, it was vanished. I was at the desk again, counting upon the fifty-one tedious weeks that must intervene before such another snatch would come. Still the prospect of its coming threw something of an illumination upon the darker side of my captivity. Without it, as I have said, I could [80 scarcely have sustained my thralldom.

Independently of the rigors of attendance, I have ever been haunted with a sense (perhaps a mere caprice) of incapacity for business. This, during my latter years, had increased to such a degree, that it was visible in all the lines of my countenance. My health and my good spirits flagged. I had perpetually a dread of some crisis, to which I should [90

be found unequal. Besides my daylight servitude, I served over again all night in my sleep, and would awake with terrors of imaginary false entries, errors in my accounts, and the like. I was fifty years of age, and no prospect of emancipation presented itself. I had grown to my desk, as it were; and the wood had entered into my soul.

My fellows in the office would [100 sometimes rally me upon the trouble legible in my countenance; but I did not know that it had raised the suspicions of any of my employers, when on the 5th of last month, a day ever to be remembered by me, L—, the junior partner in the firm, calling me on one side, directly taxed me with my bad looks, and frankly inquired the cause of them. So taxed, I honestly made confession of [110 my infirmity, and added that I was afraid I should eventually be obliged to resign his service. He spoke some words of course to hearten me, and there the matter rested. A whole week I remained laboring under the impression that I had acted imprudently in my disclosure; that I had foolishly given a handle against myself, and had been anticipating my own dismissal. A week passed in [120 this manner, the most anxious one, I verily believe, in my whole life, when on the evening of the 12th of April, just as I was about quitting my desk to go home (it might be about eight o'clock) I received an awful summons to attend the presence of the whole assembled firm in the formidable back parlor. I thought now my time is surely come, I have done for myself, I am going to be told [130 that they have no longer occasion for me. L—, I could see, smiled at the terror I was in, which was a little relief to me,—when to my utter astonishment B—, the eldest partner, began a formal harangue to me on the length of my services, my very meritorious conduct during the whole of the time (the deuce, thought I, how did he find out that? I protest I never had the confidence to [140 think as much). He went on to descant on the expediency of retiring at a certain time of life (how my heart panted!), and asking me a few questions as to the amount of my own property, of which I have a little, ended with a proposal, to which his three partners nodded a grave assent, that I should accept from the house, which I had served so well, a pension for life to the amount of two- [150 thirds of my accustomed salary—a magnificent offer! I do not know what I answered between surprise and gratitude, but it was understood that I accepted their proposal, and I was told that I was free from that hour to leave their service. I stammered out a bow, and at just ten minutes after eight I went home—for ever. This noble benefit—gratitude forbids me to conceal their names—I owe [160 to the kindness of the most munificent firm in the world—the house of Boldero, Merryweather, Bosanquet, and Lacy.

Esto perpetua!

For the first day or two I felt stunned, overwhelmed. I could only apprehend my felicity; I was too confused to taste it sincerely. I wandered about, thinking I was happy, and knowing that I was not. I was in the condition of a prisoner in [170 the Old Bastile, suddenly let loose after a forty years' confinement. I could scarce trust myself with myself. It was like passing out of Time into Eternity—for it is a sort of Eternity for a man to have his Time all to himself. It seemed to me that I had more time on my hands than I could ever manage. From a poor man, poor in Time, I was suddenly lifted up into a vast revenue; I could see no [180 end of my possessions; I wanted some steward, or judicious bailiff, to manage my estates in Time for me. And here let me caution persons grown old in active business, not lightly, nor without weighing their own resources, to forego their customary employment all at once, for there may be danger in it. I feel it by myself, but I know that my resources are sufficient; and now that those first [190 giddy raptures have subsided, I have a quiet home-feeling of the blessedness of my condition. I am in no hurry. Having all holidays, I am as though I had none. If Time hung heavy upon me, I could walk it away; but I do not walk all day long, as I used to do in those old transient holidays, thirty miles a day, to make the most of them. If Time were troublesome, I could read it away, [200 but I do not read in that violent measure, with which, having no Time my own but candlelight Time, I used to weary out my head and eye-sight in by-gone winters. I walk, read, or scribble (as now) just when the fit seizes me. I no longer hunt after pleasure; I let it come to me. I am like the man “that’s born, and has his years come to him,

In some green desert.” [210

“Years,” you will say; “what is this superannuated simpleton calculating upon? He has already told us he is past fifty.”

I have indeed lived nominally fifty years, but deduct out of them the hours which I have lived to other people, and not to myself, and you will find me still a young fellow. For that is the only true Time, which a man can properly call his own, that which he has all to himself; [220 the rest, though in some sense he may be said to live it, is other people’s time, not his. The remnant of my poor days, long or short, is at least multiplied for me threefold. My ten next years, if I stretch so far, will be as long as any preceding thirty. ’Tis a fair rule-of-three sum.

Among the strange fantasies which beset me at the commencement of my freedom, and of which all traces are [230 not yet gone, one was, that a vast tract of time had intervened since I quitted the Counting House. I could not conceive of it as an affair of yesterday. The partners, and the clerks with whom I had for so many years, and for so many hours in each day of the year been so closely associated—being suddenly removed from them—they seemed as dead to me. There is a fine passage, which may serve to [240 illustrate this fancy, in a tragedy by Sir Robert Howard, speaking of a friend’s death:—

“’Twas but just now he went away;
I have not since had time to shed a tear;
And yet the distance does the same appear
As if he had been a thousand years from me.
Time takes no measure in Eternity.”

To dissipate this awkward feeling, I have been fain to go among them [250 once or twice since; to visit my old desk-fellows—my co-brethren of the quill—that I had left below in the state militant. Not all the kindness with which they received me could quite restore to me that pleasant familiarity, which I had heretofore enjoyed among them. We cracked some of our old jokes, but methought they went off but faintly. My old desk; the peg where I hung my hat, were ap- [260 propriated to another. I knew it must be, but I could not take it kindly. D—I take me if I did not feel some remorse—beast, if I had not,—at quitting my old compeers, the faithful partners of my toils for six and thirty years, that smoothed for me with their jokes and conundrums the ruggedness of my professional road. Had it been so rugged then after all? or was I a coward [270 simply? Well, it is too late to repent; and I also know, that these suggestions are a common fallacy of the mind on such occasions. But my heart smote me. I had violently broken the bands betwixt us. It was at least not courteous. I shall be some time before I get quite reconciled to the separation. Farewell, old cronies, yet not for long, for again and again I will come among ye, if I [280 shall have your leave. Farewell, Ch—, dry, sarcastic, and friendly! Do—, mild, slow to move, and gentlemanly! Pl—, officious to do, and to volunteer, good services!—and thou, thou dreary pile, fit mansion for a Gresham or a Whittington of old stately House of Merchants; with thy labyrinthine passages, and light-excluding, pent-up offices, where candles for one half the year sup- [290 plied the place of the sun’s light; unhealthy contributor to my weal, stern fosterer of my living, farewell! In thee remain, and not in the obscure collection of some wandering bookseller, my “works!” There let them rest, as I do from my labors, piled on thy massy shelves, more MSS. in folio than ever Aquinas left, and full as useful! My mantle I bequeath among ye.

A fortnight has passed since the [300 date of my first communication. At that period I was approaching to tranquillity, but had not reached it. I boasted of a calm indeed, but it was comparative only. Something of the first flutter was left; an unsettling sense of novelty; the dazzle to weak eyes of unaccustomed light. I missed my old chains, forsooth, as if they had been some necessary part of my apparel. I was a poor Carthusian, [310 from strict cellular discipline suddenly by some revolution returned upon the world. I am now as if I had never been other than my own master. It is natural to me to go where I please, to do what I please. I find myself at eleven o'clock in the day in Bond Street, and it seems to me that I have been sauntering there at that very hour for years past. I digress into Soho, to explore a book-stall. [320 Methinks I have been thirty years a collector. There is nothing strange nor new in it. I find myself before a fine picture in the morning. Was it ever otherwise? What is become of Fish Street Hill? Where is Fenchurch Street? Stones of old Mincing Lane which I have worn with my daily pilgrimage for six and thirty years, to the footsteps of what toil-worn clerk are your everlasting [330 flints now vocal? I indent the gayer flags of Pall Mall. It is 'Change time, and I am strangely among the Elgin marbles. It was no hyperbole when I ventured to compare the change in my condition to a passing into another world. Time stands still in a manner to me. I have lost all distinction of season. I do not know the day of the week, or of the month. Each day used to be indi- [340 vidually felt by me in its reference to the foreign post days; in its distance from, or propinquity to the next Sunday. I had my Wednesday feelings, my Saturday nights' sensations. The genius of each day was upon me distinctly during the whole of it, affecting my appetite, spirits, &c. The phantom of the next day, with the dreary five to follow, sate as a load upon my poor Sabbath recrea- [350 tions. What charm has washed the Ethiop white? What is gone of Black

Monday? All days are the same. Sunday itself—that unfortunate failure of a holiday as it too often proved, what with my sense of its fugitiveness, and over-care to get the greatest quantity of pleasure out of it—is melted down into a week day. I can spare to go to church now, without grudging the huge [360 cantle which it used to seem to cut out of the holiday. I have Time for everything. I can visit a sick friend. I can interrupt the man of much occupation when he is busiest. I can insult over him with an invitation to take a day's pleasure with me to Windsor this fine May-morning. It is Lucretian pleasure to behold the poor drudges, whom I have left behind in the world, carking and [370 caring; like horses in a mill, drudging on in the same eternal round—and what is it all for? A man can never have too much Time to himself, nor too little to do. Had I a little son, I would christen him NOTHING-TO-DO; he should do nothing. Man, I verily believe, is out of his element, as long as he is operative. I am altogether for the life contemplative. Will no kindly earthquake come and [380 swallow up those accursed cotton mills? Take me that lumber of a desk there, and bowl it down

As low as to the fiends.

I am no longer —, clerk to the firm of, &c. I am Retired Leisure. I am to be met with in trim gardens. I am already come to be known by my vacant face and careless gesture, perambulating at no fixed pace nor with any settled pur- [390 pose. I walk about; not to and from. They tell me, a certain cum dignitate air, that has been buried so long with my other good parts, has begun to shoot forth in my person. I grow into gentility perceptibly. When I take up a newspaper it is to read the state of the opera. Opus operatum est. I have done all that I came into this world to do. I have worked task-work, and have the rest of the [400 day to myself.

WILLIAM HAZLITT (1778-1830)

THE FIGHT

"—The fight, the fight's the thing
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the King."

Where there's a will, there's a way.—I said so to myself, as I walked down Chancery-lane, about half-past six o'clock on Monday the roth of December, to inquire at Jack Randall's where the fight the next day was to be, and I found "the proverb" nothing "musty" in the present instance. I was determined to see this fight, come what would, and see it I did, in great style. It was my first fight, [10 yet it more than answered my expectations. Ladies! it is to you I dedicate this description; nor let it seem out of character for the fair to notice the exploits of the brave. Courage and modesty are the old English virtues; and may they never look cold and askance on one another! Think, ye fairest of the fair, loveliest of the lovely kind, ye practisers of soft enchantment, how many more ye kill [20 with poisoned baits than ever fell in the ring; and listen with subdued air and without shuddering, to a tale tragic only in appearance, and sacred to the FANCY!

I was going down Chancery-lane, thinking to ask at Jack Randall's where the fight was to be, when looking through the glass door of the Hole in The Wall, I heard a gentleman asking the same question at Mrs. Randall, as the [30 author of Waverley would express it. Now Mrs. Randall stood answering the gentleman's question, with the authenticity of the lady of the Champion of the Light Weights. Thinks I, I'll wait till this person comes out, and learn from him how it is. For to say a truth, I was not fond of going into this house of call for heroes and philosophers, ever since the owner of it (for Jack is no gentle- [40 man) threatened once upon a time to kick me out of doors for wanting a mutton-chop at his hospitable board, when the conqueror in thirteen battles was more full of blue ruin than of good manners. I was the more mortified at this repulse, inasmuch as I had heard Mr. James Simpkins, hosier in the Strand, one day when the character of the Hole in the Wall was brought in question, [50 observe—"The house is a very good house, and the company quite genteel: I have been there myself!" Remembering this unkind treatment of mine host, to which mine hostess was also a party, and not wishing to put her in unquiet thoughts at a time jubilant like the present, I waited at the door, when who should issue forth but my friend Jo. Toms, and turning suddenly up Chancery- [60 lane with that quick jerk and impatient stride which distinguishes a lover of the FANCY, I said, "I'll be hanged if that fellow is not going to the fight, and is on his way to get me to go with him." So it proved in effect, and we agreed to adjourn to my lodgings to discuss matters with that cordiality which makes old friends like new, and new friends like old, on great occasions. We are cold [70 to others only when we are dull in ourselves, and have neither thoughts nor feelings to impart to them. Give a man a topic in his head, a throb of pleasure in his heart, and he will be glad to share it with the first person he meets. Toms and I, though we seldom meet, were an alter idem on this memorable occasion, and had not an idea that we did not candidly impart; and "so carelessly [80 did we fleet the time," that I wish no better, when there is another fight, than to have him for a companion on my journey down, and to return with my friend Jack Pigott, talking of what was to happen or of what did happen, with a noble subject always at hand, and liberty to digress to others whenever they offered. Indeed, on my repeating the lines from Spenser in an involuntary fit of en- [90 thusiasm,

"What more felicity can fall to creature Than to enjoy delight with liberty?"

my last-named ingenious friend stopped me by saying that this, translated into the vulgate, meant "Going to see a fight."

Jo. Toms and I could not settle about the method of going down. He said there was a caravan, he understood, to start from Tom Belcher's at two, which [100 would go there right out and back again the next day. Now I never travel all night, and said I should get a cast to Newbury by one of the mails. Jo. swore the thing was impossible, and I could only answer that I had made up my mind to it. In short, he seemed to me to waver, said he only came to see if I was going, had letters to write, a cause coming on the day after, and faintly said at [110 parting (for I was bent on setting out that moment)—“Well, we meet at Philippi!” I made the best of my way to Piccadilly. The mail coach stand was bare. “They are all gone,” said I—“this is always the way with me—in the instant I lose the future—if I had not stayed to pour out that last cup of tea, I should have been just in time”—and cursing my folly and ill-luck to- [120 gether, without inquiring at the coach-office whether the mails were gone or not, I walked on in despite, and to punish my own dilatoriness and want of determination. At any rate, I would not turn back: I might get to Hounslow, or perhaps farther, to be on my road the next morning. I passed Hyde Park Corner (my Rubicon), and trusted to fortune. Suddenly I heard the clat- [130 tering of a Brentford stage, and the fight rushed full upon my fancy. I argued (not unwisely) that even a Brentford coachman was better company than my own thoughts (such as they were just then), and at his invitation mounted the box with him. I immediately stated my case to him—namely, my quarrel with myself for missing the Bath or Bristol mail, and my determination to get [140 on in consequence as well as I could, without any disparagement or insulting comparison between longer or shorter stages. It is a maxim with me that stage-coaches and consequently stage-coachmen, are respectable in proportion to the distance they have to travel, so I said nothing on that subject to my Brentford friend. Any incipient tendency to an abstract proposition, or (as he might have con- [150 strued it) to a personal reflection of this kind, was however nipped in the bud; for I had no sooner declared indignantly that I had missed the mails, than he flatly denied that they were gone along, and lo! at the instant three of them drove by in rapid, provoking, orderly succession, as if they would devour the ground before them. Here again I seemed in the contradictory situation of the [160 man in Dryden who exclaims:

“I follow Fate, which does too hard pursue!”

If I had stopped to inquire at the White Horse Cellar, which would not have taken me a minute, I should now have been driving down the road in all the dignified unconcern and ideal perfection of mechanical conveyance. The Bath mail I had set my mind upon, and I had missed it, as I missed every- [170 thing else, by my own absurdity, in putting the will for the deed, and aiming at ends without employing means. “Sir,” said he of the Brentford, “the Bath mail will be up presently; my brother-in-law drives it, and I will engage to stop him if there is a place empty.” I almost doubted my good genius; but, sure enough, up it drove like lightning, and stopped directly at the call of the Brentford [180 Jehu. I would not have believed this possible, but the brother-in-law of a mail-coach driver is himself no mean man. I was transferred without loss of time from the top of one coach to that of the other, desired the guard to pay my fare to the Brentford coachman for me as I had no change, was accommodated with a great-coat, put up my umbrella to keep off a drizzling mist, and we began to cut [190 through the air like an arrow. The milestones disappeared one after another, the rain kept off; Tom Turtle, the trainer, sat before me on the coach-box, with whom I exchanged civilities as a gentleman going to the fight; the passion that had transported me an hour before was subdued to pensive regret and conjectural musing on the next day's battle; I was promised a place inside at Read- [200 ing, and upon the whole, I thought myself a lucky fellow. Such is the force of imagination! On the outside of any other coach on the 10th of December, with a Scotch mist drizzling through the cloudy moonlight air, I should have been cold, comfortless, impatient and, no doubt, wet through; but seated on the Royal mail, I felt warm and comfortable, the air did me good, the ride did me [210 good, I was pleased with the progress we had made, and confident that all would go well through the journey. When I got inside at Reading, I found Turtle and a stout valetudinarian, whose costume bespoke him one of the FANCY, and who had risen from a three months' sick bed to get into the mail to see the fight. They were intimate, and we fell into a lively discourse. My friend the [220 trainer was confined in his topics to fighting dogs and men, to bears and badgers; beyond this he was "quite chap-fallen," had not a word to throw at a dog, or indeed very wisely fell asleep, when any other game was started. The whole art of training (I, however, learned from him) consists in two things, exercise and abstinence, abstinence and exercise, repeated alternately and without end. [230 A yolk of an egg with a spoonful of rum in it is the first thing in a morning, and then a walk of six miles till breakfast. This meal consists of a plentiful supply of tea and toast and beef-steaks. Then another six or seven miles till dinner-time, and another supply of solid beef or mutton with a pint of porter, and perhaps, at the utmost, a couple of glasses of sherry. Martin trains on water, but this in- [240 creases his infirmity on another very dangerous side. The Gas-man takes now and then a chirping glass (under the rose) to console him, during a six weeks' probation, for the absence of Mrs. Hickman—an agreeable woman, with (I understand) a pretty fortune of two hundred pounds. How matter presses on me! What stubborn things are facts! How inexhaustible is nature and art! "It is well," as [250 I once heard Mr. Richmond observe, "to see a variety." He was speaking of cock-fighting as an edifying spectacle. I cannot deny that one learns more of what is (I do not say of what ought to be) in this desultory mode of practical study, than from reading the same book twice over, even though it should be a moral treatise. Where was I? I was sitting at dinner with the candidate for the [260 honors of the ring, "where good digestion waits on appetite, and health on both." Then follows an hour of social chat and native glee; and afterwards, to another breathing over heathy hill or dale. Back to supper, and then to bed, and up by six again.—Our hero

"Follows so the ever-running sun
With profitable ardor"— to the day that brings him victory [270 or defeat in the green fairy circle. Is not this life more sweet than mine? I was going to say; but I will not libel any life by comparing it to mine, which is (at the date of these presents) bitter as coloquintida and the dregs of aconitum!

The invalid in the Bath mail soared a pitch above the trainer, and did not sleep so sound, because he had "more figures and more fantasies." We talked the [280 hours away merrily. He had faith in surgery, for he had had three ribs set right, that had been broken in a turn-up at Belcher's, but thought physicians old women, for they had no antidote in their catalogue for brandy. An indigestion is an excellent common-place for two people that never met before. By way of ingratiating myself, I told him the story of my doctor, who, on my earnestly rep- [290 resenting to him that I thought his regimen had done me harm, assured me that the whole pharmacopeia contained nothing comparable to the prescription he had given me; and, as a proof of its undoubted efficacy, said that "he had had one gentleman with my complaint under his hands for the last fifteen years." This anecdote made my companion shake the rough sides of his three great- [300 coats with boisterous laughter; and Turtle, starting out of his sleep, swore he knew how the fight would go, for he had had a dream about it. Sure enough the rascal told us how the first three rounds went off, but his "dream," like others, "denoted a foregone conclusion." He knew his men. The moon now rose in silver state, and I ventured, with some hesitation, to point out this object of [310 placid beauty, with the blue serene beyond, to the man of science, to which his ear he "seriously inclined," the more as it gave promise d'un beau jour for the morrow, and showed the ring undrenched by envious showers, arrayed in sunny smiles. Just then, all going on well, I thought on my friend Toms, whom I had left behind, and said innocently, "There was a blockhead of a fellow [320 I left in town, who said there was no possibility of getting down by the mail, and talked of going by a caravan from Belcher's at two in the morning, after he had written some letters." "Why," said he of the lapels, "I should not wonder if that was the very person we saw running about like mad from one coach-door to another, and asking if any one had seen a friend of his, a gentleman going to [330 the fight, whom he had missed stupidly enough by staying to write a note." "Pray, sir," said my fellow traveller, "had he a plaid cloak on?"—"Why, no," said I, "not at the time I left him, but he very well might afterwards, for he offered to lend me one." The plaid cloak and the letter decided the thing. Joe, sure enough, was in the Bristol mail, which preceded us by about fifty [340 yards. This was droll enough. We had now but a few miles to our place of destination, and the first thing I did on alighting at Newbury, both coaches stopping at the same time, was to call out, "Pray, is there a gentleman in that mail of the name of Toms?" "No," said Joe, borrowing something of the vein of Gilpin, "for I have just got out." "Well!" says he, "this is lucky; but you don't [350 know how vexed I was to miss you; for," added he, lowering his voice, "do you know when I left you I went to Belcher's to ask about the caravan, and Mrs. Belcher said very obligingly she couldn't tell about that, but there were two gentlemen who had taken places by the mail and were gone on in a landau, and she could frank us. It's a pity I didn't meet with you; we could then have got [360 down for nothing. But mum's the word." It's the devil for any one to tell me a secret, for it's sure to come out in print. I do not care so much to gratify a friend, but the public ear is too great a temptation to me.

Our present business was to get beds and a supper at an inn; but this was no easy task. The public-houses were full, and where you saw a light at a private [370 house, and people poking their heads out of the casement to see what was going on, they instantly put them in and shut the window, the moment you seemed advancing with a suspicious overture for accommodation. Our guard and coachman thundered away at the outer gate of the Crown for some time without effect—such was the greater noise within; and when the doors were unbarred, and [380 we got admittance, we found a party assembled in the kitchen round a good hospitable fire, some sleeping, others drinking, others talking on politics and on the fight. A tall English yeoman (something like Matthews in the face, and quite as great a wag)—

"A lusty man to ben an abbot able"

was making such a prodigious noise about rent and taxes, and the price of corn [390 now and formerly, that he had prevented us from being heard at the gate. The first thing I heard him say was to a shuffling fellow who wanted to be off a bet for a shilling glass of brandy and water—"Confound it, man, don't be insipid!" Thinks I, that is a good phrase. It was a good omen. He kept it up so all night, nor flinched with the approach of morning. He was a fine fellow, with [400 sense, wit, and spirit, a hearty body and a joyous mind, free-spoken, frank, convivial—one of that true English breed that went with Harry the Fifth to the siege of Harfleur—"standing like grayhounds in the slips," &c. We ordered tea and eggs (beds were soon found to be out of the question) and this fellow's conversation was sauce piquante. It did one's heart good to see him brandish [410 his oaken towel and to hear him talk. He made mince-meat of a drunken, stupid, red-faced, quarrelsome, frowsy farmer, whose nose "he moralized into a thousand similes," making it out a firebrand like Bardolph's. "I'll tell you what, my friend," says he, "the landlady has only to keep you here to save fire and candle. If one was to touch your nose, it would go off like a piece of charcoal." At [420 this the other only grinned like an idiot, the sole variety in his purple face being his little peering gray eyes and yellow teeth; called for another glass, swore he would not stand it; and after many attempts to provoke his humorous antagonist to single combat, which the other turned off (after working him up to a ludicrous pitch of choler) with great adroitness, he fell quietly asleep with [430 a glass of liquor in his hand, which he could not lift to his head. His laughing persecutor made a speech over him, and turning to the opposite side of the room, where they were all sleeping in the midst of this "loud and furious fun," said, "There's a scene for Hogarth to paint. I think he and Shakespeare were our two best men at copying life." This confirmed me in my good opinion of him. Ho- [440 garth, Shakespeare, and Nature, were just enough for him (indeed for any man) to know. I said, "You read Cobbett, don't you? At least," says I, "you talk just as well as he writes." He seemed to doubt this. But I said, "We have an hour to spare: if you'll get pen, ink, and paper, and keep on talking, I'll write down what you say; and if it doesn't make a capital 'Political Register' [450 I'll forfeit my head. You have kept me alive to-night, however. I don't know what I should have done without you." He did not dislike this view of the thing, nor my asking if he was not about the size of Jem Belcher; and told me soon afterwards, in the confidence of friendship, that "the circumstance which had given him nearly the greatest concern in his life, was Cribb's beating Jem after he [460 had lost his eye by racket-playing."—The morning dawns; that dim but yet clear light appears, which weighs like solid bars of metal on the sleepless eyelids; the guests drop down from their chambers one by one—but it was too late to think of going to bed now (the clock was on the stroke of seven), we had nothing for it but to find a barber's (the pole that glittered in the morning sun [470 lighted us to his shop), and then a nine miles' march to Hungerford. The day was fine, the sky was blue, the mists were retiring from the marshy ground, the path was tolerably dry, the sitting-up all night had not done us much harm—at least the cause was good; we talked of this and that with amicable difference, roving and sipping of many subjects, but still invariably we returned to the [480 fight. At length, a mile to the left of Hungerford, on a gentle eminence, we saw the ring surrounded by covered carts, gigs, and carriages, of which hundreds had passed us on the road; Toms gave a youthful shout, and we hastened down a narrow lane to the scene of action.

Reader, have you ever seen a fight? If not, you have a pleasure to come, at least if it is a fight like that between [490 the Gas-man and Bill Neate. The crowd was very great when we arrived on the spot; open carriages were coming up, with streamers flying and music playing; and the country people were pouring in over hedge and ditch in all directions, to see their hero beat or be beaten. The odds were still on Gas, but only about five to four. Gully had been down to try Neate, and had backed him con- [500 siderably, which was a damper to the sanguine confidence of the adverse party. About two hundred thousand pounds were pending. The Gas says he has lost 3000*l.* which were promised him by different gentlemen if he had won. He had presumed too much on himself, which had made others presume on him. This spirited and formidable young fellow seems to have taken for his motto [510 the old maxim, that "there are three things necessary to success in life—Impudence! Impudence! Impudence!" It is so in matters of opinion, but not in the FANCY, which is the most practical of all things, though even here confidence is half the battle, but only half. Our friend had vaped and swaggered too much, as if he wanted to grin and bully his adversary out of the fight. "Ala! the [520 Bristol man was not so tamed!" "This is the grave-digger" (would Tom Hickman exclaim in the moments of intoxication from gin and success, showing his tremendous right hand), "this will send many of them to their long homes; I haven't done with them yet!" Why should he—though he had licked four of the best men within the hour, yet why should he threaten to inflict dis- [530 honorable chastisement on my old master Richmond, a veteran going off the stage, and who had borne his sable honors meekly? Magnanimity, my dear Tom, and bravery, should be inseparable. Or why should he go up to his antagonist, the first time he ever saw him at the Fives Court, and measuring him from head to foot with a glance of contempt, as Achilles surveyed Hector, say to [540 him, "What, are you Bill Neate? I'll knock more blood out of that great carcass of thine, this day fortnight, than you ever knocked out of a bullock's!" It was not manly, 'twas not fighter-like. If he was sure of the victory (as he was not), the less said about it the better. Modesty should accompany the FANCY as its shadow. The best men were always the best behaved. Jem Belcher, the [550 Game Chicken, (before whom the Gas-man could not have lived) were civil, silent men. So is Cribb, so is Tom Belcher, the most elegant of sparrers, and not a man for every one to take by the nose. I enlarged on this topic in the mail (while Turtle was asleep), and said very wisely (as I thought) that impertinence was a part of no profession. A boxer was bound to beat his man, but not to [560 thrust his fist, either actually or by implication, in every one's face. Even a highwayman, in the way of trade, may blow out your brains, but if he uses foul language at the same time, I should say he was no gentleman. A boxer, I would infer, need not be a blackguard or a coxcomb, more than another. Perhaps I press this point too much on a fallen man—Mr. Thomas Hickman has by [570 this time learnt that first of all lessons, "That man was made to mourn." He has lost nothing by the late fight but his presumption; and that every man may do as well without! By an over-display of this quality, however, the public had been prejudiced against him, and the knowing-ones were taken in. Few but those who had bet on him wished Gas to win. With my own prepossessions [580 on the subject, the result of the 11th of December appeared to me as fine a piece of poetical justice as I had ever witnessed. The difference of weight between the two combatants (14 stone to 12) was nothing to the sporting men. Great, heavy, clumsy, long-armed Bill Neate kicked the beam in the scale of the Gas-man's vanity. The amateurs were frightened at his big words, and thought that [590 they would make up for the difference of six feet and five feet nine. Truly, the FANCY are not men of imagination. They judge of what has been, and cannot conceive of anything that is to be. The Gas-man had won hitherto; therefore he must beat a man half as big again as himself—and that to a certainty. Besides, there are as many feuds, factions, prejudices, pedantic notions in the [600 FANCY as in the state or in the schools. Mr. Gully is almost the only cool, sensible man among them, who exercises an unbiased discretion, and is not a slave to his passions in these matters. But enough of reflections, and to our tale. The day, as I have said, was fine for a December morning. The grass was wet, and the ground miry, and ploughed up with multitudinous feet, except that, within [610 the ring itself, there was a spot of virgin-green closed in and unprofaned by vulgar feet, that shone with dazzling brightness in the mid-day sun. For it was now noon, and we had an hour to wait. This is the trying time. It is then the heart sickens, as you think what the two champions are about, and how short a time will determine their fate. After the first blow is struck, there is no oppor- [620 tunity for nervous apprehensions; you are swallowed up in the immediate interest of the scene—but

"Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream."

I found it so as I felt the sun's rays clinging to my back, and saw the white wintry clouds sink below the verge of the horizon. "So," I thought, "my fairest hopes [630 have faded from my sight!—so will the Gas-man's glory, or that of his adversary, vanish in an hour." The swells were parading in their white box-coats, the outer ring was cleared with some bruises on the heads and shins of the rustic assembly (for the cockneys had been distanced by the sixty-six miles); the time drew near, I had got a good stand; a bustle, a buzz, ran through the crowd, [640 and from the opposite side entered Neate, between his second and bottle-holder. He rolled along, swathed in his loose great-coat, his knock-knees bending under his huge bulk; and with a modest, cheerful air, threw his hat into the ring. He then just looked round, and began quietly to undress; when from the other side there was a similar rush and an opening made, and the Gas-man came forward with [650 a conscious air of anticipated triumph, too much like the cock-of-the-walk. He strutted about more than became a hero, sucked oranges with a supercilious air, and threw away the skin with a toss of his head, and went up and looked at Neate, which was an act of supererogation. The only sensible thing he did was, as he strode away from the modern Ajax, to fling out his arms, as if he wanted [660 to try whether they would do their work that day. By this time they had stripped, and presented a strong contrast in appearance. If Neate was like Ajax, "with Atlantean shoulders, fit to bear" the pugilistic reputation of all Bristol, Hickman might be compared to Diomed, light, vigorous, elastic, and his back glistened in the sun, as he moved about, like a panther's hide. There was now a [670 dead pause—attention was awe-struck. Who, at that moment, big with a great event, did not draw his breath short, did not feel his heart throb? All was ready. They tossed up for the sun, and the Gas-man won. They were led up to the scratch—shook hands, and went at it.

In the first round every one thought it was all over. After making play a short time, the Gas-man flew at his [680 adversary like a tiger, struck five blows in as many seconds, three first, and then following him as he staggered back, two more, right and left, and down he fell, a mighty ruin. There was a shout, and I said, "There is no standing this." Neate seemed like a lifeless lump of flesh and bone, round which the Gas-man's blows played with the rapidity of electricity or lightning, and you imag- [690 ined he would only be lifted up to be knocked down again. It was as if Hickman held a sword or a fire in that right hand of his, and directed it against an unarmed body. They met again, and Neate seemed, not cowed, but particularly cautious. I saw his teeth clenched together and his brows knit close against the sun. He held out both his arms at full length straight before him, like [700 two sledge-hammers, and raised his left an inch or two higher. The Gas-man could not get over this guard—they struck mutually and fell, but without advantage on either side. It was the same in the next round; but the balance of power was thus restored—the fate of the battle was suspended. No one could tell how it would end. This was the only moment in which opinion was divided; for, [710 in the next, the Gas-man aiming a mortal blow at his adversary's neck, with his right hand, and failing from the length he had to reach, the other returned it with his left at full swing, planted a tremendous blow on his cheek-bone and eyebrow, and made a red ruin of that side of his face. The Gas-man went down, and there was another shout—a roar of triumph as the waves of fortune rolled [720 tumultuously from side to side. This was a settler. Hickman got up, and "grinned horrible a ghastly smile," yet he was evidently dashed in his opinion of himself; it was the first time he had ever been so punished; all one side of his face was perfect scarlet, and his right eye was closed in dingy blackness, as he advanced to the fight, less confident but still determined. After one or two [730 rounds, not receiving another such remembrancer, he rallied and went at it with his former impetuosity. But in vain. His strength had been weakened,—his blows could not tell at such a distance,—he was obliged to fling himself at his adversary, and could not strike from his feet; and almost as regularly as he flew at him with his right hand, Neate warded the blow, or drew back out of its [740 reach, and felled him with the return of his left. There was little cautious sparring—no half-hits—no tapping and trifling, none of the petit-maitreship of the art—they were almost all knockdown blows:—the fight was a good stand-up fight. The wonder was the half-minute time. If there had been a minute or more allowed between each round, it would have been intelligible how they should by de- [750] grees recover strength and resolution; but to see two men smashed to the ground, smeared with gore, stunned, senseless, the breath beaten out of their bodies, and then, before you recover from the shock, to see them rise up with new strength and courage, stand ready to inflict or receive mortal offence, and rush upon each other “like two clouds over the Caspian”—this is the most as- [760] tonishing thing of all:—this is the high and heroic state of man! From this time forward the event became more certain every round; and about the twelfth it seemed as if it must have been over. Hickman generally stood with his back to me; but in the scuffle he had changed positions, and Neate just then made a tremendous lunge at him, and hit him full in the face. It was doubtful [770] whether he would fall backwards or forwards, he hung suspended for a second or two, and then fell back, throwing his hands in the air, and with his face lifted up to the sky. I never saw anything more terrific than his aspect just before he fell. All traces of life, of natural expression, were gone from him. His face was like a human skull, a death’s head, spouting blood. The eyes were filled [780] with blood, the nose streamed with blood, the mouth gaped blood. He was not like an actual man, but like a preternatural, spectral appearance, or like one of the figures in Dante’s Inferno. Yet he fought on after this for several rounds, still striking the first desperate blow, and Neate standing on the defensive, and using the same cautious guard to the last, as if he had still all his work [790] to do; and it was not until the Gas-man was so stunned in the seventeenth or eighteenth round that his senses forsook him and he could not come to time, that the battle was declared over.¹ Ye who despise the Fancy, do something to show as much pluck, or as much self-possession as this, before you assume a superiority which you have never given a single proof of by any one action in the whole [800] course of your lives!—When the Gas-man came to himself the first words he uttered were, “Where am I? What is the matter?” “Nothing is the matter, Tom,—you have lost the battle, but you are the bravest man alive.” And Jackson whispered to him, “I am collecting a purse for you, Tom.”—Vain sounds, and unheard at that moment! Neate instantly went up and shook him cordially by [810] the hand, and seeing some old acquaintance, began to flourish with his fists, calling out, “Ah, you always said I couldn’t fight—What do you think now?” But all in good humor, and without any appearance of arrogance; only it was evident Bill Neate was pleased that he had won the fight. When it was over I asked Cribb if he did not think it was a good one. He said, “Pretty well!” [820] The carrier-pigeons now mounted into the air, and one of them flew with the news of her husband’s victory to the bosom of Mrs. Neate. Alas for Mrs. Hickman!

¹ Scroggins said of the Gas-man, that he thought he was

Mais au revoir, as Sir Fopling Flutter says. I went down with Toms; I returned with Jack Pigott, whom I met on the ground. Toms is a rattle brain; Pigott is a sentimentalist. Now, under favor, [830] I am a sentimentalist too—therefore I say nothing but that the interest of the excursion did not flag as I came back. Pigott and I marched along the causeway leading from Hungerford to Newbury, now observing the effect of a brilliant sun on the tawny meads or moss-colored cottages, now exulting in the fight, now digressing to some topic of general and elegant literature. My friend was [840] dressed in character for the occasion, or like one of the FANCY: that is, with a double portion of great-coats, clogs, and overhauls; and just as we had agreed with a couple of country lads to carry a man of that courage that if his hands were cut off, he would still fight on with the stumps—like that of Widington,—

“In doleful dumps,
Who, when his legs were smitten off
Still fought upon his stumps.”—(Hazlitt’s Note).

his superfluous wearing-apparel to the next town, we were overtaken by a return post-chaise, into which I got. Pigott preferring a seat on the bar. There were two strangers already in the chaise, [850 and on their observing they supposed I had been to the fight, I said I had, and concluded they had done the same. They appeared, however, a little shy and sore on the subject; and it was not till after several hints dropped, and questions put, that it turned out that they had missed it. One of these friends had undertaken to drive the other there in his gig: they had set out, to make [860 sure work, the day before at three in the afternoon. The owner of the one-horse vehicle scorned to ask his way, and drove right on to Bagshot, instead of turning off at Hounslow; there they stopped all night, and set off the next day across the country to Reading, from whence they took coach, and got down within a mile or two of Hungerford, just half an hour after the fight was over. This might [870 be safely set down as one of the miseries of human life. We parted with these two gentlemen who had been to see the fight, but had returned as they went, at Wolhampton, where we were promised beds (an irresistible temptation, for Pigott had passed the preceding night at Hungerford as we had done at Newbury), and we turned into an old bow-windowed parlor with a carpet and a snug fire; [880 and after devouring a quantity of tea, toast, and eggs, sat down to consider, during an hour of philosophic leisure, what we should have for supper. In the midst of an Epicurean deliberation between a roasted fowl and mutton chops with mashed potatoes, we were interrupted by an inroad of Goths and Vandals—O procul este profani—not real flash-men, but interlopers, noisy [890 pretenders, butchers from Tothill-fields, brokers from Whitechapel, who called immediately for pipes and tobacco, hoping it would not be disagreeable to the gentlemen, and began to insist that it was a cross. Pigott withdrew from the smoke and noise into another room, and left me to dispute the point with them for a couple of hours sans intermis- sion by the dial. The next morning [900 we rose refreshed; and on observing that Jack had a pocket volume in his hand, in which he read in the intervals of our discourse, I inquired what it was, and learned to my particular satisfaction that it was a volume of the New Eloise. Ladies, after this will you contend that a love for the FANCY is incompatible with the cultivation of sentiment?—We jogged on as before, my friend setting me up in a [910 genteel drab great-coat and green silk handkerchief (which I must say became me exceedingly), and after stretching our legs for a few miles, and seeing Jack Randall, Ned Turner, and Scroggins pass on the top of one of the Bath coaches, we engaged with the driver of the second to take us to London for the usual fee. I got inside, and found three other passengers. One of them was an old gentle- [920 man with an aquiline nose, powdered hair, and a pigtail, and who looked as if he had played many a rubber at the Bath rooms. I said to myself, he is very like Mr. Windham; I wish he would enter into conversation, that I might hear what fine observations would come from those finely-turned features. However, nothing passed, till, stopping to dine at Reading, some inquiry was made by [930 the company about the fight, and I gave (as the reader may believe) an eloquent and animated description of it. When we got into the coach again the old gentleman, after a graceful exordium, said he had when a boy been to a fight between the famous Broughton and George Stevenson, who was called the Fighting Coachman, in the year 1770, with the late Mr. Windham. This beginning flattered [940 the spirit of prophecy within me and riveted my attention. He went on—"George Stevenson was coachman to a friend of my father's. He was an old man when I saw him some years afterwards. He took hold of his own arm and said 'there was muscle here once, but now it is no more than this young gentleman's.' He added, 'well, no matter; I have been here long, I am willing to go hence, and I hope I [950 have done no more harm than another man.' Once," said my unknown companion, "I asked him if he had ever beat

Broughton? He said yes; that he had fought with him three times, and the last time he fairly beat him, though the world did not allow it. 'I'll tell you how it was, master. When the seconds lifted us up in the last round, we were so exhausted that neither of us could stand, and we fell [960 upon one another, and as Master Broughton fell uppermost the mob gave it in his favor, and he was said to have won the battle. But,' says he, 'the fact was, that as his second (John Cuthbert) lifted him up, he said to him, "I'll fight no more, I've had enough;" which,' says Stevenson, 'you know gave me the victory. And to prove to you that this was the case, when John Cuthbert was on [970 his death-bed, and they asked him if there was anything on his mind which he wished to confess, he answered, "Yes, that there was one thing he wished to set right, for that certainly Master Stevenson won that last fight with Master Broughton; for he whispered him as he lifted him up in the last round of all, that he had had enough." This,' said the Bath gentleman, "was a bit of hu- [980 man nature;" and I have written this account of the fight on purpose that it might not be lost to the world. He also stated as a proof of the candor of mind in this class of men, that Stevenson acknowledged that Broughton could have beat him in his best day; but that he (Broughton) was getting old in their last encounter. When we stopped in Piccadilly I wanted to ask the gentleman some [990 questions about the late Mr. Windham, but had not courage. I got out, resigned my coat and green silk handkerchief to Pigott (loth to part with these ornaments of life), and walked home in high spirits.

P. S. Toms called upon me the next day, to ask me if I did not think the fight was a complete thing. I said I thought it was. I hope he will relish my account of it.

ON GOING A JOURNEY

One of the pleasantest things in the world is going a journey; but I like to go by myself. I can enjoy society in a room; but out of doors, nature is company enough for me. I am then never less alone than when alone.

"The fields his study, nature was his book."

I cannot see the wit of walking and talking at the same time. When I am in the country I wish to vegetate like [10 the country. I am not for criticising hedgerows and black cattle. I go out of town in order to forget the town and all that is in it. There are those who for this purpose go to watering-places, and carry the metropolis with them. I like more elbow-room and fewer encumbrances. I like solitude, when I give myself up to it, for the sake of solitude; nor do I ask for "a friend in my retreat, [20 Whom I may whisper solitude is sweet."

The soul of a journey is liberty, perfect liberty, to think, feel, do just as one pleases. We go a journey chiefly to be free of all impediments and of all inconveniences; to leave ourselves behind, much more to get rid of others. It is because I want a little breathing-space to muse on indifferent matters, where Contemplation

"May plume her feathers and let grow her wings, [30 That in the various bustle of resort Were all too ruffled, and sometimes impaired," that I absent myself from the town for a while, without feeling at a loss the moment I am left by myself. Instead of a friend in a post-chaise or in a Tilbury, to exchange good things with, and vary the same stale topics over again, for once let me have a truce with impertinence. Give me the clear blue sky over my [40 head, and the green turf beneath my feet, a winding road before me, and a three hours' march to dinner—and then to thinking! It is hard if I cannot start some game on these lone heaths. I laugh, I run, I leap, I sing for joy. From the point of yonder rolling cloud I plunge into my past being, and revel there, as the sun-burnt Indian plunges headlong into the wave that wafts him to his [50 native shore. Then long-forgotten things, like "sunken wrack and sumless treasuries," burst upon my eager sight, and I begin to feel, think, and be myself again. Instead of an awkward silence, broken by attempts at wit or dull common-places, mine is that undisturbed silence of the heart which alone is perfect eloquence. No one likes puns, alliterations, antitheses, argument, and analysis [60 better than I do; but I sometimes had rather be without them. "Leave, oh, leave me to my repose!" I have just now other business in hand, which would seem idle to you, but is with me "very stuff o' the conscience." 'Is not this wild rose sweet without a comment? Does not this daisy leap to my heart, set in its coat of emerald? Yet if I were to explain to you the circumstance that has so [70 endeared it to me, you would only smile. Had I not better then keep it to myself, and let it serve me to brood over, from here to yonder craggy point, and from thence onward to the far-distant horizon? I should be but bad company all that way, and therefore prefer being alone. I have heard it said that you may, when the moody fit comes on, walk or ride on by yourself, and indulge your reveries. [80 But this looks like a breach of manners, a neglect of others, and you are thinking all the time that you ought to rejoin your party. "Out upon such half-faced fellowship," say I. I like to be either entirely to myself, or entirely at the disposal of others; to talk or be silent, to walk or sit still, to be sociable or solitary. I was pleased with an observation of Mr. Cobbett's, that "he thought it [90 a bad French custom to drink our wine with our meals, and that an Englishman ought to do only one thing at a time." So I cannot talk and think, or indulge in melancholy musing and lively conversation by fits and starts. "Let me have a companion of my way," says Sterne, "were it but to remark how the shadows lengthen as the sun declines." It is beautifully said; but, in my opinion, this [100 continual comparing of notes interferes with the involuntary impression of things upon the mind, and hurts the sentiment. If you only hint what you feel in a kind of dumb show, it is insipid; if you have to explain it, it is making a toil of a pleasure. You cannot read the book of nature without being perpetually put to the trouble of translating it for the benefit of others. I am for the synthetical [110 method on a journey in preference to the analytical. I am content to lay in a stock of ideas then, and to examine and anatomise them afterwards. I want to see my vague notions float like the down of the thistle before the breeze, and not to have them entangled in the briars and thorns of controversy. For once, I like to have it all my own way; and this is impossible unless you are alone, or [120 in such company as I do not covet. I have no objection to argue a point with any one for twenty miles of measured road, but not for pleasure. If you remark the scent of a bean-field crossing the road, perhaps your fellow-traveller has no smell. If you point to a distant object, perhaps he is short-sighted, and has to take out his glass to look at it. There is a feeling in the air, a tone in [130 the color of a cloud, which hits your fancy, but the effect of which you are unable to account for. There is then no sympathy, but an uneasy craving after it, and a dissatisfaction which pursues you on the way, and in the end probably produces ill-humor. Now I never quarrel with myself, and take all my own conclusions for granted till I find it necessary to defend them against objections. It is [140 not merely that you may not be of accord on the objects and circumstances that present themselves before you—these may recall a number of objects, and lead to associations too delicate and refined to be possibly communicated to others. Yet these I love to cherish, and sometimes still fondly clutch them, when I can escape from the throng to do so. To give way to our feelings before com- [150 pany seems extravagance or affectation; and, on the other hand, to have to unravel this mystery of our being at every turn, and to make others take an equal interest in it (otherwise the end is not answered), is a task to which few are competent. We must "give it an understanding, but no tongue." My old friend C—, however, could do both. He could go on in the most delightful explan- [160

atory way over hill and dale, a summer's day, and convert a landscape into a didactic poem or a Pindaric ode. "He talked far above singing." If I could so clothe my ideas in sounding and flowing words, I might perhaps wish to have some one with me to admire the swelling theme; or I could be more content, were it possible for me still to hear his echoing voice in the woods of All-Foxden. They [170 had "that fine madness in them which our first poets had"; and if they could have been caught by some rare instrument, would have breathed such strains as the following:

"Here be woods as green
As any, air likewise as fresh and sweet
As when smooth Zephyrus plays on the fleet
Face of the curled stream, with flow'rs as many
As the young spring gives, and as choice as any;
Here be all new delights, cool streams and wells, [180
Arbors o'ergrown with woodbines, caves
and dells;
Choose where thou wilt, whilst I sit by
and sing,
Or gather rushes to make many a ring
For thy long fingers; tell thee tales of love,
How the pale Phœbe, hunting in a grove,
First saw the boy Endymion, from whose
eyes
She took eternal fire that never dies;
How she conveyed him softly in a sleep,
His temples bound with poppy, to the steep
Head of old Latmos, where she stoops
each night, [190
Gilding the mountain with her brother's
light,
To kiss her sweetest."

Had I words and images at command like these, I would attempt to wake the thoughts that lie slumbering on golden ridges in the evening clouds: but at the sight of nature my fancy, poor as it is, droops and closes up its leaves, like flowers at sunset. I can make nothing out on the spot: I must have time to [200 collect myself.

In general, a good thing spoils out-of-door prospects: it should be reserved for Table-talk. L— is for this reason, I take it, the worst company in the world out of doors; because he is the best within. I grant there is one subject on which it is pleasant to talk on a journey, and that is, what one shall have for supper when we get to our inn at night. [210 The open air improves this sort of conversation or friendly altercation, by setting a keener edge on appetite. Every mile of the road heightens the flavor of the viands we expect at the end of it. How fine it is to enter some old town, walled and turreted, just at approach of nightfall, or to come to some straggling village, with the lights streaming through the surrounding gloom; and then, after [220 inquiring for the best entertainment that the place affords, to "take one's ease at one's inn!" These eventful moments in our lives' history are too precious, too full of solid, heartfelt happiness to be frittered and dribbled away in imperfect sympathy. I would have them all to myself, and drain them to the last drop: they will do to talk of or to write about afterwards. What a delicate specula- [230 tion it is, after drinking whole goblets of tea—

"The cups that cheer, but not inebriate"— and letting the fumes ascend into the brain, to sit considering what we shall have for supper—eggs and a rasher, a rabbit smothered in onions, or an excellent veal cutlet! Sancho in such a situation once fixed on cow-heel; and his choice, though he could not help it, is not to [240 be disparaged. Then, in the intervals of pictured scenery and Shandean contemplation, to catch the preparation and the stir in the kitchen. Procul, O procul este profani! These hours are sacred to silence and to musing, to be treasured up in the memory, and to feed the source of smiling thoughts hereafter. I would not waste them in idle talk; or if I must have the integrity of fancy broken [250 in upon, I would rather it were by a stranger than a friend. A stranger takes his hue and character from the time and place; he is a part of the furniture and costume of an inn. If he is a Quaker, or from the West Riding of Yorkshire, so much the better. I do not even try to sympathise with him, and he breaks no squares. I associate nothing with my travelling companion but present [260] objects and passing events. In his ignorance of me and my affairs, I in a manner forget myself. But a friend reminds one of other things, rips up old grievances, and destroys the abstraction of the scene. He comes in ungraciously between us and our imaginary character. Something is dropped in the course of conversation that gives a hint of your profession and pursuits; or from having some one [270] with you that knows the less sublime portions of your history, it seems that other people do. You are no longer a citizen of the world; but your "unhoused free condition is put into circumspection and confine." The incognito of an inn is one of its striking privileges—"lord of one's self, uncumbered with a name." Oh! it is great to shake off the trammels of the world and of public opinion—to lose [280] our importunate, tormenting, everlasting personal identity in the elements of nature, and become the creature of the moment, clear of all ties—to hold to the universe only by a dish of sweetbreads, and to owe nothing but the score of the evening—and no longer seeking for applause and meeting with contempt, to be known by no other title than the Gentleman in the parlor! One may take [290] one's choice of all characters in this romantic state of uncertainty as to one's real pretensions, and become indefinitely respectable and negatively right worshipful. We baffle prejudice and disappoint conjecture; and from being so to others, begin to be objects of curiosity and wonder even to ourselves. We are no more those hackneyed common-places that we appear in the world, an inn [300] restores us to the level of nature, and quits scores with society! I have certainly spent some enviable hours at inns—sometimes when I have been left entirely to myself, and have tried to solve some metaphysical problem, as once at Witham Common, where I found out the proof that likeness is not a case of the association of ideas—at other times, when there have been pictures in the room, as at [310] St. Neot's (I think it was,) where I first met with Gribelin's engravings of the Cartoons, into which I entered at once, and at a little inn on the borders of Wales, where there happened to be hanging some of Westall's drawings, which I compared triumphantly (for a theory that I had, not for the admired artist) with the figure of a girl who had ferried me over the Severn, standing up in a boat be- [320] tween me and the twilight—at other times I might mention luxuriating in books, with a peculiar interest in this way, as I remember sitting up half the night to read Paul and Virginia, which I picked up at an inn at Bridgewater, after being drenched in the rain all day; and at the same place I got through two volumes of Madame d'Arblay's Camilla. It was on the 10th of April, 1798, that [330] I sat down to a volume of the New Eloise, at the inn at Llangollen, over a bottle of sherry and a cold chicken. The letter I chose was that in which St. Preux describes his feelings as he first caught a glimpse from the heights of the Jura of the Pays de Vaud, which I had brought with me as a bon bouche to crown the evening with. It was my birthday, and I had for the first time come from a [340] place in the neighborhood to visit this delightful spot. The road to Llangollen turns off between Chirk and Wrexham; and on passing a certain point you come all at once upon the valley, which opens like an amphitheatre, broad, barren hills rising in majestic state on either side, with "green upland swells that echo to the bleat of flocks" below, and the river Dee babbling over its stony bed in [350] the midst of them. The valley at this time "glittered green with sunny showers," and a budding ash-tree dipped its tender branches in the chiding stream. How proud, how glad I was to walk along the high road that overlooks the delicious prospect, repeating the lines which I have just quoted from Mr. Coleridge's poems! But besides the prospect which opened beneath my feet, another [360] also opened to my inward sight, a heavenly vision, on which were written, in letters large as Hope could make them, these four words, LIBERTY, GENIUS, LOVE, VIRTUE; which have since faded into the light of common day, or mock my idle gaze.

"The beautiful is vanished, and returns not."

Still I would return some time or other to this enchanted spot; but I would [370] return to it alone. What other self could I find to share that influx of thoughts, of regret, and delight, the fragments of which I could hardly conjure up to myself, so much have they been broken and defaced. I could stand on some tall rock, and overlook the precipice of years that separates me from what I then was. I was at that time going shortly to visit the poet whom I have above named. [380] Where is he now? Not only I myself have changed; the world, which was then new to me, has become old and incorrigible. Yet will I turn to thee in thought, O sylvan Dee, in joy, in youth and gladness as thou then wert; and thou shalt always be to me the river of Paradise, where I will drink of the waters of life freely!

There is hardly anything that shows [390] the shortsightedness or capriciousness of the imagination more than travelling does. With change of place we change our ideas; nay, our opinions and feelings. We can by an effort indeed transport ourselves to old and long-forgotten scenes, and then the picture of the mind revives again; but we forget those that we have just left. It seems that we can think but of one place at a time. The canvas [400] of the fancy is but of a certain extent, and if we paint one set of objects upon it, they immediately efface every other. We cannot enlarge our conceptions, we only shift our point of view. The landscape bares its bosom to the enraptured eye, we take our fill of it, and seem as if we could form no other image of beauty or grandeur. We pass on, and think no more of it: the horizon that shuts it [410] from our sight also blots it from our memory like a dream. In travelling through a wild barren country I can form no idea of a woody and cultivated one. It appears to me that all the world must be barren, like what I see of it. In the country we forget the town, and in town we despise the country. "Beyond Hyde Park," says Sir Fopling Flutter, "all is a desert." All that part of the map [420] that we do not see before us is blank. The world in our conceit of it is not much bigger than a nutshell. It is not one prospect expanded into another, county joined to county, kingdom to kingdom, land to seas, making an image voluminous and vast;—the mind can form no larger idea of space than the eye can take in at a single glance. The rest is a name written in a map, a calculation of [430] arithmetic. For instance, what is the true signification of that immense mass of territory and population known by the name of China to us? An inch of pasteboard on a wooden globe, of no more account than a China orange! Things near us are seen of the size of life: things at a distance are diminished to the size of the understanding. We measure the universe by ourselves, and even com- [440] prehend the texture of our own being only piecemeal. In this way, however, we remember an infinity of things and places. The mind is like a mechanical instrument that plays a great variety of tunes, but it must play them in succession. One idea recalls another, but it at the same time excludes all others. In trying to renew old recollections, we cannot as it were unfold the whole web of our existence; [450] we must pick out the single threads. So in coming to a place where we have formerly lived, and with which we have intimate associations, every one must have found that the feeling grows more vivid the nearer we approach the spot, from the mere anticipation of the actual impression: we remember circumstances, feelings, persons, faces, names that we had not thought of for years; but for [460] the time all the rest of the world is forgotten!—To return to the question I have quitted above:—

I have no objection to go to see ruins, aqueducts, pictures, in company with a friend or a party, but rather the contrary, for the former reason reversed. They are intelligible matters, and will bear talking about. The sentiment here is not tacit, but communicable and [470] overt. Salisbury Plain is barren of criticism, but Stonehenge will bear a discussion antiquarian, picturesque, and philosophical. In setting out on a party of pleasure, the first consideration always is where we shall go to: in taking a solitary ramble, the question is what we shall meet with by the way. "The mind is its own place"; nor are we anxious to arrive at the end of our journey. I can myself do the honors indifferently well to works of art and curiosity. I once took a party to Oxford with no mean éclat—showed them that seat of the Muses at a distance,

"With glistening spires and pinnacles adorned," descanted on the learned air that breathes from the grassy quadrangles and stone walls of halls and colleges—was at home in the Bodleian; and at Blenheim [490] quite superseded the powdered Cicerone that attended us, and that pointed in vain with his wand to commonplace beauties in matchless pictures. As another exception to the above reasoning, I should not feel confident in venturing on a journey in a foreign country without a companion. I should want at intervals to hear the sound of my own language. There is an involuntary antipathy in [500] the mind of an Englishman to foreign manners and notions that requires the assistance of social sympathy to carry it off. As the distance from home increases, this relief, which was at first a luxury, becomes a passion and an appetite. A person would almost feel stifled to find himself in the deserts of Arabia without friends and countrymen: there must be allowed to be something in the view [510] of Athens or old Rome that claims the utterance of speech; and I own that the Pyramids are too mighty for any single contemplation. In such situations, so opposite to all one's ordinary train of ideas, one seems a species by one's-self, a limb torn off from society, unless one can meet with instant fellowship and support. Yet I did not feel this want or craving very pressing once, when I [520] first set my foot on the laughing shores of France. Calais was peopled with novelty and delight. The confused, busy murmur of the place was like oil and wine poured into my ears; nor did the mariners' hymn, which was sung from the top of an old crazy vessel in the harbor, as the sun went down, send an alien sound into my soul. I only breathed the air of general humanity. I walked over [530] "the vine-covered hills and gay regions of France," erect and satisfied; for the image of man was not cast down and chained to the foot of arbitrary thrones. I was at no loss for language, for that of all the great schools of painting was open to me. The whole is vanished like a shade. Pictures, heroes, glory, freedom, all are fled: nothing remains but the Bourbons and the French people!— [540] There is undoubtedly a sensation in travelling into foreign parts that is to be had nowhere else; but it is more pleasing at the time than lasting. It is too remote from our habitual associations to be a common topic of discourse or reference, and, like a dream or another state of existence, does not piece into our daily modes of life. It is an animated but a momentary hallucination. It demands an effort to [550] exchange our actual for our ideal identity; and to feel the pulse of our old transports revive very keenly, we must "jump" all our present comforts and connections. Our romantic and itinerant character is not to be domesticated. Dr. Johnson remarked how little foreign travel added to the facilities of conversation in those who had been abroad. In fact, the time we have spent there is both delightful, [560] and in one sense instructive; but it appears to be cut out of our substantial, downright existence, and never to join kindly on to it. We are not the same, but another, and perhaps more enviable individual, all the time we are out of our own country. We are lost to ourselves, as well as our friends. So the poet somewhat quaintly sings:

"Out of my country and myself I go." [570]

Those who wish to forget painful thoughts, do well to absent themselves for a while from the ties and objects that recall them; but we can be said only to fulfil our destiny in the place that gave us birth. I should on this account like well enough to spend the whole of my life in travelling abroad, if I could anywhere borrow another life to spend afterwards at home!

ON FAMILIAR STYLE

It is not easy to write a familiar style. Many people mistake a familiar for a vulgar style, and suppose that to write without affectation is to write at random. On the contrary, there is nothing that requires more precision, and, if I may so say, purity of expression, than the style I am speaking of. It utterly rejects not only all unmeaning pomp, but all low, cant [10] phrases, and loose, unconnected, slipshod allusions. It is not to take the first word that offers, but the best word in common use; it is not to throw words together in any combinations we please, but to follow and avail ourselves of the true idiom of the language. To write a genuine familiar or truly English style is to write as any one would speak in common conversation [20] who had a thorough command and choice of words, or who could discourse with ease, force, and perspicuity, setting aside all pedantic and oratorical flourishes. Or, to give another illustration, to write naturally is the same thing in regard to common conversation as to read naturally is in regard to common speech. It does not follow that it is an easy thing to give the true accent and inflection to the [30] words you utter, because you do not attempt to rise above the level of ordinary life and colloquial speaking. You do not assume, indeed, the solemnity of the pulpit, or the tone of stage-declamation; neither are you at liberty to gabble on at a venture, without emphasis or discretion, or to resort to vulgar dialect or clownish pronunciation. You must steer a middle course. You are tied down [40] to a given and appropriate articulation, which is determined by the habitual associations between sense and sound, and which you can only hit by entering into the author's meaning, as you must find the proper words and style to express yourself by fixing your thoughts on the subject you have to write about. Any one may mouth out a passage with a theatrical cadence, or get upon stilts [50] to tell his thoughts; but to write or speak with propriety and simplicity is a more difficult task. Thus it is easy to affect a pompous style, to use a word twice as big as the thing you want to express: it is not so easy to pitch upon the very word that exactly fits it. Out of eight or ten words equally common, equally intelligible, with nearly equal pretensions, it is a matter of some nicety and dis- [60] crimination to pick out the very one the preferableness of which is scarcely perceptible, but decisive. The reason why I object to Dr. Johnson's style is that there is no discrimination, no selection, no variety in it. He uses none but "tall, opaque words," taken from the "first row of the rubric;"—words with the greatest number of syllables, or Latin phrases with merely English termina- [70] tions. If a fine style depended on this sort of arbitrary pretension, it would be fair to judge of an author's elegance by the measurement of his words, and the substitution of foreign circumlocutions (with no precise associations) for the mother-tongue.¹ How simple it is to be dignified without ease, to be pompous without meaning! Surely, it is but a mechanical rule for avoiding what [80] is low, to be always pedantic and affected. It is clear you cannot use a vulgar English word if you never use a common English word at all. A fine tact is shown in adhering to those which are perfectly common, and yet never falling into any expressions which are debased by disgusting circumstances, or which owe their signification and point to technical or professional [90] allusions. A truly natural or familiar style can never be quaint or vulgar, for this reason, that it is of universal force and applicability, and that quaintness

¹ I have heard of such a thing as an author who makes it a rule never to admit a monosyllable into his vapid verse. Yet the charm and sweetness of Marlowe's lines depended often on their being made up almost entirely of monosyllables. [Hazlitt.]

and vulgarity arise out of the immediate connection of certain words with coarse and disagreeable or with confined ideas. The last form what we understand by cant or slang phrases.—To give an example of what is not very clear in the [100] general statement. I should say that the phrase To cut with a knife, or To cut a piece of wood, is perfectly free from vulgarity, because it is perfectly common; but To cut an acquaintance is not quite unexceptionable, because it is not perfectly common or intelligible, and has hardly yet escaped out of the limits of slang phraseology. I should hardly, therefore, use the word in this [110] sense without putting it in italics as a license of expression, to be received cum grano salis. All provincial or bye-phrases come under the same mark of reprobation—all such as the writer transfers to the page from his fireside or a particular coterie, or that he invents for his own sole use and convenience. I conceive that words are like money, not the worse for being common, but that it is the stamp [120] of custom alone that gives them circulation or value. I am fastidious in this respect, and would almost as soon coin the currency of the realm as counterfeit the King's English. I never invented or gave a new and unauthorised meaning to any word but one single one (the term impersonal applied to feelings), and that was in an abstruse metaphysical discussion to express a very difficult dis- [130] tinction. I have been (I know) loudly accused of revelling in vulgarisms and broken English. I cannot speak to that point; but so far I plead guilty to the determined use of acknowledged idioms and common elliptical expressions. I am not sure that the critics in question know the one from the other, that is, can distinguish any medium between formal pedantry and the most barbarous solecism. As an [140] author I endeavor to employ plain words and popular modes of construction, as, were I a chapman and dealer, I should common weights and measures.

The proper force of words lies not in the words themselves, but in their application. A word may be a fine-sounding word, of an unusual length, and very imposing from its learning and novelty, and yet in the connection in which it is [150] introduced may be quite pointless and irrelevant. It is not pomp or pretension, but the adaptation of the expression to the idea, that clenches a writer's meaning;—as it is not the size or glossiness of the materials, but their being fitted each to its place, that gives strength to the arch; or as the pegs and nails are as necessary to the support of the building as the larger timbers, and more so than [160] the mere showy, unsubstantial ornaments. I hate anything that occupies more space than it is worth. I hate to see a load of bandboxes go along the street, and I hate to see a parcel of big words without anything in them. A person who does not deliberately dispose of all his thoughts alike in cumbrous draperies and flimsy disguises may strike out twenty varieties of familiar everyday language, each [170] coming somewhat nearer to the feeling he wants to convey, and at last not hit upon that particular and only one which may be said to be identical with the exact impression in his mind. This would seem to show that Mr. Cobbett is hardly right in saying that the first word that occurs is always the best. It may be a very good one; and yet a better may present itself on reflection or from time to time. [180] It should be suggested naturally, however, and spontaneously, from a fresh and lively conception of the subject. We seldom succeed by trying at improvement, or by merely substituting one word for another that we are not satisfied with, as we cannot recollect the name of a place or person by merely plaguing ourselves about it. We wander farther from the point by persisting in a wrong scent; but it [190] starts up accidentally in the memory when we least expected it, by touching some link in the chain of previous association.

There are those who hoard up and make a cautious display of nothing but rich and rare phraseology;—ancient medals, obscure coins, and Spanish pieces of eight. They are very curious to inspect; but I myself would neither offer nor take [200] them in the course of exchange. A sprinkling of archaisms is not amiss; but a tissue of obsolete expressions is more fit for keep than wear. I do not say I would not use any phrase that had been brought into fashion before the middle or the end of the last century; but I should be shy of using any that had not been employed by any approved author during the whole of that time. Words, like clothes, get [210] old-fashioned, or mean and ridiculous, when they have been for some time laid aside. Mr. Lamb is the only imitator of old English style I can read with pleasure; and he is so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of his authors that the idea of imitation is almost done away. There is an inward unction, a marrowy vein both in the thought and feeling, an intuition, deep and lively, of his subject, that carries [220] off any quaintness or awkwardness arising from an antiquated style and dress. The matter is completely his own, though the manner is assumed. Perhaps his ideas are altogether so marked and individual as to require their point and pungency to be neutralised by the affectation of a singular but traditional form of conveyance. Tricked out in the prevailing costume, they would probably seem more [230] startling and out of the way. The old English authors, Burton, Fuller, Coryate, Sir Thomas Browne, are a kind of mediators between us and the more eccentric and whimsical modern, reconciling us to his peculiarities. I do not, however, know how far this is the case or not, till he condescends to write like one of us. I must confess that what I like best of his papers under the signature of Elia (still I [240] do not presume, amidst such excellence, to decide what is most excellent) is the account of "Mrs. Battle's Opinions on Whist," which is also the most free from obsolete allusions and turns of expression—

"A well of native English undefiled."

To those acquainted with his admired prototypes, these Essays of the ingenious and highly gifted author have the same [250] sort of charm and relish that Erasmus's Colloquies or a fine piece of modern Latin have to the classical scholar. Certainly, I do not know any borrowed pencil that has more power or felicity of execution than the one of which I have here been speaking.

It is as easy to write a gaudy style without ideas as it is to spread a pallet of showy colors or to smear in a flaunting transparency. "What do you read?" "Words, words, words."—"What is the matter?" "Nothing," it might be answered. The florid style is the reverse of the familiar. The last is employed as an unvarnished medium to convey ideas; the first is resorted to as a spangled veil to conceal the want of them. When there is nothing to be set down but words, it costs little to have them fine. Look [270] through the dictionary, and cull out a florilegium, rival the tulippomania. Rouge high enough, and never mind the natural complexion. The vulgar, who are not in the secret, will admire the look of preternatural health and vigor; and the fashionable, who regard only appearances, will be delighted with the imposition. Keep to your sounding generalities, your tinkling phrases, and all will be well. [280] Swell out an unmeaning truism to a perfect tympany of style. A thought, a distinction, is the rock on which all this brittle cargo of verbiage splits at once. Such writers have merely verbal imaginations, that retain nothing but words. Or their puny thoughts have dragon-wings all green and gold. They soar far above the vulgar failing of the sermo humi abrepens—their most ordinary speech [290] is never short of an hyperbole, splendid, imposing, vague, incomprehensible, magniloquent, a cento of sounding commonplaces. If some of us, whose "ambition is more lowly," pry a little too narrowly into nooks and corners to pick up a number of "unconsidered trifles," they never once direct their eyes or lift their hands to seize on any but the most gorgeous, tarnished, threadbare, patchwork set [300] of phrases, the left-off finery of poetic extravagance, transmitted down through successive generations of barren pretenders. If they criticise actors and actresses, a huddled phantasmagoria of feathers, spangles, floods of light, and oceans of sound float before their morbid sense, which they paint in the style of Ancient Pistol. Not a glimpse can you get of the merits or defects of the per- [310]

formers: they are hidden in a profusion of barbarous epithets and wilful rhodomontade. Our hypercritics are not thinking of these little fantoccini beings—

“That strut and fret their hour upon the stage”—

but of tall phantoms of words, abstractions, genera and species, sweeping clauses, periods that unite the Poles, forced al-literations, astounding antitheses— [319]

“And on their pens Fustian sits plumed.”

If they describe kings and queens, it is an Eastern pageant. The Coronation at either House is nothing to it. We get at four repeated images—a curtain, a throne, a sceptre, and a foot-stool. These are with them the wardrobe of a lofty imagination; and they turn their servile strains to servile uses. Do we read a description of pictures? It is not a reflection of tones and hues which “nature’s own sweet [330] and cunning hand laid on,” but piles of precious stones, rubies, pearls, emeralds, Golconda’s mines, and all the blazonry of art. Such persons are in fact besotted with words, and their brains are turned with the glittering but empty and sterile phantoms of things. Personifications, capital letters, seas of sunbeams, visions of glory, shining inscriptions, the figures of a transparency, Britannia with her [340]
shield, or Hope leaning on an anchor, make up their stock in trade. They may be considered as hieroglyphical writers.
Images stand out in their minds isolated and important merely in themselves, without any groundwork of feeling—there is no context in their imaginations. Words affect them in the same way, by the mere sound, that is, by their possible, not by their actual application to the subject [350] in hand. They are fascinated by first appearances, and have no sense of consequences. Nothing more is meant by them than meets the ear: they understand or feel nothing more than meets their eye. The web and texture of the universe, and of the heart of man, is a mystery to them: they have no faculty that strikes a chord in unison with it.
They cannot get beyond the daubings [360] of fancy, the varnish of sentiment. Objects are not linked to feelings, words to things, but images revolve in splendid mockery, words represent themselves in their strange rhapsodies. The categories of such a mind are pride and ignorance—pride in outside show, to which they sacrifice everything, and ignorance of the true worth and hidden structure both of words and things. With a sovereign con- [370] tempt for what is familiar and natural,

they are the slaves of vulgar affectation—of a routine of high-flown phrases. Scorning to imitate realities, they are unable to invent anything, to strike out one original idea. They are not copyists of nature, it is true; but they are the poorest of all plagiarists, the plagiarists of words.
All is far-fetched, dear-bought, artificial,
oriental in subject and allusion; [380]
all is mechanical, conventional, vapid, formal, pedantic in style and execution.
They startle and confound the understanding of the reader by the remoteness and obscurity of their illustrations; they soothe the ear by the monotony of the same everlasting round of circuitous metaphors. They are the mock-school in poetry and prose. They flounder about between fustian in expression and bathos [390] in sentiment. They tantalise the fancy, but never reach the head nor touch the heart. Their Temple of Fame is like a shadowy structure raised by Dulness to Vanity, or like Cowper’s description of the Empress of Russia’s palace of ice, “as worthless as in show ’twas glitter-
ing”—

“It smiled, and it was cold!”

THOMAS DE QUINCEY (1785–1859)

From CONFESSIONS OF AN ENG-LISH OPIUM-EATER

I have often been asked how I came to be a regular opium eater; and have suffered, very unjustly, in the opinion of my acquaintance, from being reputed to have brought upon myself all the sufferings which I shall have to record, by a long course of indulgence in this practice purely for the sake of creating an artificial state of pleasurable excitement. This, however, is a misrepresentation of [10 my case. True it is, that for nearly ten years I did occasionally take opium for the sake of the exquisite pleasure it gave me: but, so long as I took it with this view, I was effectually protected from all material bad consequences, by the necessity of interposing long intervals between the several acts of indulgence, in order to renew the pleasurable sensations. It was not for the purpose of [20 creating pleasure, but of mitigating pain in the severest degree, that I first began to use opium as an article of daily diet. In the twenty-eighth year of my age, a most painful affection of the stomach, which I had first experienced about ten years before, attacked me in great strength. This affection had originally been caused by extremities of hunger, suffered in my boyish days. During the season of [30 hope and redundant happiness which succeeded (that is, from eighteen to twenty-four) it had slumbered; for the three following years it had revived at intervals; and now, under unfavorable circumstances, from depression of spirits, it attacked me with a violence that yielded to no remedies but opium. As the youthful sufferings, which first produced this derangement of the stomach, were in- [40 teresting in themselves, and in the circumstances that attended them, I shall here briefly retrace them.

My father died when I was about seven years old, and left me to the care of four guardians. I was sent to various schools, great and small; and was very early distinguished for my classical attainments, especially for my knowledge of Greek. At thirteen I wrote Greek with ease; [50 and at fifteen my command of that language was so great, that I not only composed Greek verses in lyric meters, but could converse in Greek fluently and without embarrassment—an accomplishment which I have not since met with in any scholar of my times, and which, in my case, was owing to the practice of daily reading off the newspapers into the best Greek I could furnish extempore; [60 for the necessity of ransacking my memory and invention, for all sorts and combinations of periphrastic expressions, as equivalents for modern ideas, images, relations of things, etc., gave me a compass of diction which would never have been called out by a dull translation of moral essays, etc. "That boy," said one of my masters, pointing the attention of a stranger to me, "that boy could harangue [70 an Athenian mob, better than you and I could address an English one." He who honored me with this eulogy was a scholar, "and a ripe and good one;" and of all my tutors, was the only one whom I loved or revered. Unfortunately for me (and, as I afterwards learned, to this worthy man's great indignation) I was transferred to the care, first of a block-head, who was in a perpetual panic [80 lest I should expose his ignorance; and finally, to that of a respectable scholar, at the head of a great school on an ancient foundation. This man had been appointed to his situation by — College, Oxford; and was a sound, well-built scholar, but like most men whom I have known from that college, coarse, clumsy, and inelegant. A miserable contrast he presented, in my eyes, to the Etonian bril- [90 liancy of my favorite master; and besides, he could not disguise from my hourly notice, the poverty and meagerness of his understanding. It is a bad thing for a boy to be, and to know himself, far beyond his tutors, whether in knowledge or in power of mind. This was the case, so far as regarded knowledge at least, not with myself only; for the two boys who jointly with myself composed [100 the first form were better Grecians than the head-master, though not more elegant scholars, nor at all more accustomed to sacrifice to the graces. When I first entered, I remember that we read Sophocles; and it was a constant matter of triumph to us, the learned triumvirate of the first form, to see our "Archididas-calus," as he loved to be called, conning our lessons before we went up, and [110 laying a regular train, with lexicon and grammar, for blowing up and blasting, as it were, any difficulties he found in the choruses; whilst we never condescended to open our books until the moment of going up, and were generally employed in writing epigrams upon his wig, or some such important matter. My two class-fellows were poor, and dependent for their future prospects at the univer- [120] sity on the recommendation of the head-master; but I, who had a small patrimonial property, the income of which was sufficient to support me at college, wished to be sent thither immediately. I made earnest representations on the subject to my guardians, but all to no purpose. One, who was more reasonable, and had more knowledge of the world than the rest, lived at a distance; two [130] of the other three resigned all their authority into the hands of the fourth; and this fourth with whom I had to negotiate, was a worthy man, in his way, but haughty, obstinate, and intolerant of all opposition to his will. After a certain number of letters and personal interviews, I found that I had nothing to hope for, not even a compromise of the matter, from my guardian; uncondi- [140] tional submission was what he demanded; and I prepared myself, therefore, for other measures. Summer was now coming on with hasty steps, and my seventeenth birthday was fast approaching; after which day I had sworn within myself that I would no longer be numbered amongst school-boys. Money being what I chiefly wanted, I wrote to a woman of high rank, who, though young herself, had known [150] me from a child, and had latterly treated me with great distinction, requesting that she would "lend" me five guineas. For upwards of a week no answer came; and I was beginning to despond, when, at length, a servant put into my hands a double letter, with a coronet on the seal. The letter was kind and obliging: the fair writer was on the sea-coast, and in that way the delay had arisen; [160] she enclosed double of what I had asked, and good-naturedly hinted that if I should never repay her, it would not absolutely ruin her. Now then, I was prepared for my scheme; ten guineas, added to about two which I had remaining from my pocket money, seemed to me sufficient for an indefinite length of time; and at that happy age, if no definitive boundary can be assigned to [170] one's power, the spirit of hope and pleasure makes it virtually infinite.

It is a just remark of Dr. Johnson's, and, what cannot often be said of his remarks, it is a very feeling one, that we never do anything consciously for the last time—of things, that is, which we have long been in the habit of doing—without sadness of heart. This truth I felt deeply, when I came to leave —, [180] a place which I did not love, and where I had not been happy. On the evening before I left — forever, I grieved when the ancient and lofty school-room resounded with the evening service, performed for the last time in my hearing, and at night, when the muster-roll of names was called over, and mine, as usual, was called first, I stepped forward, and, passing the head-master, who [190] was standing by, I bowed to him, and looked earnestly in his face, thinking to myself, "He is old and infirm, and in this world I shall not see him again." I was right: I never did see him again, nor ever shall. He looked at me complacently, smiled good-naturedly, returned my salutation, or rather, my valediction, and we parted, though he knew it not, forever. I could not reverence him [200] intellectually; but he had been uniformly kind to me, and had allowed me many indulgences; and I grieved at the thought of the mortification I should inflict upon him.

The morning came which was to launch me into the world, and from which my whole succeeding life has, in many important points, taken its coloring. I lodged in the head-master's house, and [210] had been allowed, from my first entrance, the indulgence of a private room, which I used both as a sleeping room and a study. At half after three I rose, and gazed with deep emotion at the ancient towers of —, "dressed in earliest light," and beginning to crimson with the radiant luster of a cloudless July morning. I was firm and immovable in my purpose; but yet agitated by anticipation of [220] uncertain danger and troubles; and, if I could have foreseen the hurricane and perfect hail-storm of affliction which soon fell upon me, well might I have been agitated. To this agitation the deep peace of the morning presented an affecting contrast, and in some degree a medicine. The silence was more profound than that of midnight; and to me the silence of a summer morning is [230 more touching than all other silence, because, the light being broad and strong, as that of noon-day at other seasons of the year, it seems to differ from perfect day chiefly because man is not yet abroad; and thus, the peace of nature, and of the innocent creatures of God, seems to be secure and deep only so long as the presence of man, and his restless and unquiet spirit, are not there to trouble [240 its sanctity. I dressed myself, took my hat and gloves, and lingered a little in the room. For the last year and a half this room had been my "pensive citadel;" here I had read and studied through all the hours of night; and though true it was that for the latter part of this time I, who was framed for love and gentle affections, had lost my gaiety and happiness, during the strife and fever of [250 contention with my guardian; yet, on the other hand, as a boy so passionately fond of books, and dedicated to intellectual pursuits, I could not fail to have enjoyed many happy hours in the midst of general dejection. I wept as I looked round on the chair, hearth, writing-table, and other familiar objects, knowing too certainly that I looked upon them for the last time. Whilst I write this, it [260 is eighteen years ago; and yet, at this moment, I see distinctly, as if it were yesterday, the lineaments and expression of the object on which I fixed my parting gaze; it was a picture of the lovely —, which hung over the mantelpiece; the eyes and mouth of which were so beautiful, and the whole countenance so radiant with benignity and divine tranquillity, that I had a thousand times laid down [270 my pen, or my book, to gather consolation from it, as a devotee from his patron saint. Whilst I was yet gazing upon it, the deep tones of — clock proclaimed that it was four o'clock. I went up to the picture, kissed it, and then gently walked out, and closed the door for ever!

* * * * *

If any man, poor or rich, were to say that he would tell us what had been the happiest day in his life, and the why [280 and the wherefore, I suppose that we should all cry out—Hear him! hear him! As to the happiest day, that must be very difficult for any wise man to name; because any event that could occupy so distinguished a place in a man's retrospect of his life, or be entitled to have shed a special felicity on any one day, ought to be of such an enduring character as that, accidents apart, it should [290 have continued to shed the same felicity, or one not distinguishably less, on many years together. To the happiest lustrum, however, or even to the happiest year, it may be allowed to any man to point without discountenance from wisdom. This year, in my case, reader, was the one which we have now reached; though it stood, I confess, as a parenthesis between years of a gloomier character. [300 It was a year of brilliant water, to speak after the manner of jewelers, set as it were, and insulated, in the gloom and cloudy melancholy of opium. Strange as it may sound, I had a little before this time descended suddenly, and without any considerable effort, from 320 grains of opium (i. e., eight¹ thousand drops of laudanum) per day to forty grains, or one-eighth part. Instantaneously, [310 and as if by magic, the cloud of profoundest melancholy which rested upon my brain, like some black vapors that I have seen roll away from the summits of mountains, drew off in one day (νυχθήμερον), passed off with its murky banners as simultaneously as a ship that has been stranded, and is floated off by a spring tide—

"That moveth altogether, if it move at all." [320

Now, then, I was again happy; I now took only 1,000 drops of laudanum per day; and what was that? A latter spring had come to close up the season of youth; my brain performed its functions as healthily as ever before; I read Kant again, and again I understood him, or fancied that I did. Again my feelings of pleasure expanded themselves to all around me; and if any man from Oxford or Cambridge, or from neither, had been announced to me in my unpretending cottage, I should have welcomed him with as sumptuous a reception as so poor a man could offer. Whatever else was wanting to a wise man's happiness,—of laudanum I would have given him as much as he wished, and in a golden cup. And, by the way, now that I speak of giving laudanum away, I remember, [340 about this time, a little incident, which I mention, because, trifling as it was, the reader will soon meet it again in my dreams, which it influenced more fearfully than could be imagined. One day a Malay knocked at my door. What business a Malay could have to transact amongst English mountains, I cannot conjecture; but possibly he was on his road to a seaport about forty miles [350 distant.

¹ I here reckon twenty-five drops of laudanum as equivalent to one grain of opium, which, I believe, is the common estimate. However, as both may be considered variable quantities (the crude opium varying much in strength, and the tincture still more), I suppose that no infinitesimal accuracy can be had in such a calculation. Teaspoons vary as much in size as opium in strength. Small ones hold about 100 drops, so that 8,000 drops are about eighty times a teaspoonful. The reader sees how much I kept within Dr. Buchan's indulgent allowance. [De Quincey.]

The servant who opened the door to him was a young girl born and bred amongst the mountains, who had never seen an Asiatic dress of any sort; his turban, therefore, confounded her not a little; and, as it turned out, that his attainments in English were exactly of the same extent as hers in the Malay, there seemed to be an impassable gulf fixed [360 between all communication of ideas, if either party had happened to possess any. In this dilemma, the girl, recollecting the reputed learning of her master, and doubtless giving me credit for a knowledge of all the languages of the earth, besides, perhaps, a few of the lunar ones, came and gave me to understand that there was a sort of demon below, whom she clearly imagined that my [370 art could exorcise from the house. I did not immediately go down; but, when I did, the group which presented itself, arranged as it was by accident, though not very elaborate, took hold of my fancy and my eye in a way that none of the statuesque attitudes exhibited in the ballets at the Opera House, though so ostentatiously complex, had ever done. In a cottage kitchen, but panelled [380 on the wall with dark wood that from age and rubbing resembled oak, and looking more like a rustic hall of entrance than a kitchen, stood the Malay—his turban and loose trousers of dingy white relieved upon the dark panelling, he had placed himself nearer to the girl than she seemed to relish; though her native spirit of mountain intrepidity contended with the feeling of simple awe which her [390 countenance expressed as she gazed upon the tiger-cat before her. And a more striking picture there could not be imagined, than the beautiful English face of the girl, and its exquisite fairness, together with her erect and independent attitude, contrasted with the sallow and bilious skin of the Malay, enamelled or veneered with mahogany by marine air, his small, fierce, restless eyes, thin lips, slavish [400 gestures, and adorations. Half-hidden by the ferocious-looking Malay, was a little child from a neighboring cottage who had crept in after him, and was now in the act of reverting its head, and gazing upwards at the turban, and the fiery eyes beneath it, whilst with one hand he caught at the dress of the young woman for protection. My knowledge of the Oriental tongues is not remarkably [410 extensive, being indeed confined to two words—the Arabic word for barley, and the Turkish for opium (madjoon), which I have learned from Anastasius. And, as I had neither a Malay dictionary, nor even Adelung's Mithridates, which might have helped me to a few words, I addressed him in some lines from the Iliad; considering that, of such languages as I possessed, Greek, in point of longitude, [420 came geographically nearest to an Oriental one. He worshipped me in a most devout manner, and replied in what I suppose was Malay. In this way I saved my reputation with my neighbors; for the Malay had no means of betraying the secret. He lay down upon the floor for about an hour, and then pursued his journey. On his departure I presented him with a piece of opium. To him, [430

as an Orientalist, I concluded that opium must be familiar; and the expression of his face convinced me that it was. Nevertheless, I was struck with some little consternation when I saw him suddenly raise his hand to his mouth, and, in the school-boy phrase, bolt the whole, divided into three pieces, at one mouthful. The quantity was enough to kill three dragons and their horses; and I felt [440 some alarm for the poor creature; but what could be done? I had given him the opium in compassion for his solitary life, on recollecting that if he had travelled on foot from London, it must be nearly three weeks since he could have exchanged a thought with any human being. I could not think of violating the laws of hospitality, by having him seized and drenched with an emetic, and [450 thus frightening him into a notion that we were going to sacrifice him to some English idol. No: there was clearly no help for it;—he took his leave, and for some days I felt anxious; but as I never heard of any Malay being found dead, I became convinced that he was used to opium; and that I must have done him the service I designed, by giving him one night of respite from the pains of [460 wandering.

* * * * *

I now pass to what is the main subject of these latter Confessions, to the history and journal of what took place in my dreams; for these were the immediate and proximate cause of my acutest suffering.

The first notice I had of any important change going on in this part of my physical economy, was from the re-awakening [470 of a state of eye generally incident to childhood, or exalted states of irritability. I know not whether my reader is aware that many children, perhaps most, have a power of painting, as it were, upon the darkness, all sorts of phantoms; in some, that power is simply a mechanic affection of the eye; others have a voluntary, or semi-voluntary power to dismiss or to summon them; or, as a child once [480 said to me when I questioned him on this matter, "I can tell them to go, and they go; but sometimes they come, when I don't tell them to come." Whereupon I told him that he had almost as unlimited a command over apparitions as a Roman centurion over his soldiers. In the middle of 1817, I think it was, that this faculty became positively distressing to me: at night, when I lay awake in bed, [490 vast processions passed along in mournful pomp; friezes of never-ending stories, that to my feelings were as sad and solemn as if they were stories drawn from times before Œdipus or Priam—before Tyre—before Memphis. And, at the same time, a corresponding change took place in my dreams; a theatre seemed suddenly opened and lighted up within my brain, which presented nightly [500 spectacles of more than earthly splendor. And the four following facts may be mentioned, as noticeable at this time:

1. That as the creative state of the eye increased, a sympathy seemed to arise between the waking and the dreaming states of the brain in one point—that whatsoever I happened to call up and to trace by a voluntary act upon the darkness was very apt to transfer itself to [510 my dreams; so that I feared to exercise this faculty; for, as Midas turned all things to gold, that yet baffled his hopes and defrauded his human desires, so whatsoever things capable of being visually represented I did but think of in the darkness, immediately shaped themselves into phantoms of the eye; and, by a process apparently no less inevitable, when thus once traced in faint and visionary [520 colors, like writings in sympathetic ink, they were drawn out by the fierce chemistry of my dreams, into insufferable splendor that fretted my heart.

2. For this, and all other changes in my dreams, were accompanied by deep-seated anxiety and gloomy melancholy, such as are wholly incommunicable by words. I seemed every night to descend, not metaphorically, but literally to [530 descend, into chasms and sunless abysses, depths below depths, from which it seemed hopeless that I could ever re-ascend. Nor did I, by waking, feel that I had re-ascended. This I do not dwell upon; because the state of gloom which attended these gorgeous spectacles, amounting at last to utter darkness, as of some suicidal despondency, cannot be approached by words. [540]

3. The sense of space, and, in the end, the sense of time, were both powerfully affected. Buildings, landscapes, etc., were exhibited in proportions so vast as the bodily eye is not fitted to receive. Space swelled, and was amplified to an extent of unutterable infinity. This, however, did not disturb me so much as the vast expansion of time; I sometimes seemed to have lived for seventy or a hundred [550] years in one night; nay, sometimes had feelings representative of a millennium passed in that time, or, however, of a duration far beyond the limits of any human experience.

4. The minutest incidents of childhood, or forgotten scenes of later years, were often revived; I could not be said to recollect them; for if I had been told of them when waking, I should not have [560] been able to acknowledge them as parts of my past experience. But placed as they were before me, in dreams like intuitions, and clothed in all their evanescent circumstances and accompanying feelings, I recognised them instantaneously. I was once told by a near relative of mine, that having in her childhood fallen into a river, and being on the very verge of death but for the critical as- [570] sistance which reached her, she saw in a moment her whole life, in its minutest incidents, arrayed before her simultaneously as in a mirror; and she had a faculty developed as suddenly for comprehending the whole and every part. This, from some opium experiences of mine, I can believe; I have, indeed, seen the same thing asserted twice in modern books, and accompanied by a remark [580] which I am convinced is true—viz., that the dread book of account, which the Scriptures speak of, is, in fact, the mind itself of each individual. Of this, at least, I feel assured, that there is no such thing as forgetting possible to the mind; a thousand accidents may and will interpose a veil between our present consciousness and the secret inscriptions on the mind; accidents of the same sort [590] will also rend away this veil; but alike, whether veiled or unveiled, the inscription remains for ever; just as the stars seem to withdraw before the common light of day, whereas, in fact, we all know that it is the light which is drawn over them as a veil, and that they are waiting to be revealed when the obscuring daylight shall have withdrawn.

Having noticed these four facts as [600] memorably distinguishing my dreams from those of health, I shall now cite a case illustrative of the first fact; and shall then cite any others that I remember, either in their chronological order, or any other that may give them more effect as pictures to the reader.

I had been in youth, and even since, for occasional amusement, a great reader of Livy, whom, I confess, that I pre- [610] fer, both for style and matter, to any other of the Roman historians; and I had often felt as most solemn and appalling sounds, and most emphatically representative of the majesty of the Roman people, the two words so often occurring in Livy—Consul Romanus; especially when the consul is introduced in his military character. I mean to say that the words king—sultan—regent, etc., or [620] any other titles of those who embody in their own persons the collective majesty of a great people, had less power over my reverential feelings. I had also, though no great reader of history, made myself minutely and critically familiar with one period of English history—viz., the period of the Parliamentary War—having been attracted by the moral grandeur of some who figured in that day, and [630] by the many interesting memoirs which survive those unquiet times. Both these parts of my lighter reading, having furnished me often with matter of reflection, now furnished me with matter for my dreams. Often I used to see, after painting upon the blank darkness a sort of rehearsal whilst waking, a crowd of ladies, and perhaps a festival, and dances. And I heard it said, or I said to myself, [640] “These are English ladies from the unhappy times of Charles I. These are the wives and the daughters of those who met in peace, and sat at the same tables, and were allied by marriage or by blood; and yet, after a certain day in August, 1642, never smiled upon each other again, nor met but in the field of battle; and at Marston Moor, at Newbury, or at Naseby, cut asunder all ties of love [650 by the cruel sabre, and washed away in blood the memory of ancient friendship." The ladies danced, and looked as lovely as the court of George IV. Yet I knew, even in my dreams, that they had been in the grave for nearly two centuries. This pageant would suddenly dissolve; and, at a clapping of hands, would be heard the heart-quaking sound of Consul Romanus; and immediately came [660 "sweeping by," in gorgeous paludaments, Paulus or Marius, girt round by a company of centurions, with the crimson tunic hoisted on a spear, and followed by the alalagmos of the Roman legions.

* * * * *

And now came a tremendous change, which, unfolding itself slowly like a scroll, through many months, promised an abiding torment; and, in fact, it never left me until the winding up of my [670 case. Hitherto the human face had mixed often in my dreams, but not despotically, nor with any special power of tormenting. But now that which I have called the tyranny of the human face began to unfold itself. Perhaps some part of my London life might be answerable for this. Be that as it may, now it was that upon the rocking waters of the ocean the human face began to [680 appear: the sea appeared paved with innumerable faces, upturned to the heavens; faces imploring, wrathful, despairing, surged upwards by thousands, by myriads, by generations, by centuries:—my agitation was infinite,—my mind tossed and surged with the ocean.

May, 1818.

The Malay has been a fearful enemy for months. I have been every night, through his means, transported into [690 Asiatic scenes. I know not whether others share in my feelings on this point; but I have often thought that if I were compelled to forego England, and to live in China, and among Chinese manners and modes of life and scenery, I should go mad. The causes of my horror lie deep, and some of them must be common to others. Southern Asia, in general, is the seat of awful images and asso- [700 ciations. As the cradle of the human race, it would alone have a dim and reverential feeling connected with it. But there are other reasons. No man can pretend that the wild, barbarous, and capricious superstitions of Africa, or of savage tribes elsewhere, affect him in the way that he is affected by the ancient, monumental, cruel, and elaborate religions of Indostan, etc. The mere [710 antiquity of Asiatic things, of their institutions, histories, modes of faith, etc., is so impressive, that to me the vast age of the race and name overpowers the sense of youth in the individual. A young Chinese seems to me an antediluvian man renewed. Even Englishmen, though not bred in any knowledge of such institutions, cannot but shudder at the mystic sublimity of castes that [720 have flowed apart, and refused to mix, through such immemorial tracts of time; nor can any man fail to be awed by the names of the Ganges, or the Euphrates. It contributes much to these feelings, that southern Asia is, and has been for thousands of years, the part of the earth most swarming with human life; the great officina gentium. Man is a weed in those regions. The vast empires also, into [730 which the enormous population of Asia has always been cast, give a further sublimity to the feelings associated with all oriental names or images. In China, over and above what it has in common with the rest of southern Asia, I am terrified by the modes of life, by the manners, and the barrier of utter abhorrence, and want of sympathy, placed between us by feelings deeper than I can [740 analyse. I could sooner live with lunatics, or brute animals. All this, and much more than I can say, or have time to say, the reader must enter into before he can comprehend the unimaginable horror which these dreams of oriental imagery, and mythological tortures, impressed upon me. Under the connecting feeling of tropical heat and vertical sunlights, I brought together all creatures, birds, [750 beasts, reptiles, all trees and plants, usages and appearances, that are found in all tropical regions, and assembled them together in China or Indostan. From kindred feelings, I soon brought Egypt and all her gods under the same law. I was stared at, hooted at, grinned at, chattered at, by monkeys, by paroquets, by cockatoos. I ran into pagodas: and was fixed, for centuries, [760 at the summit, or in secret rooms; I was the idol; I was the priest; I was worshipped; I was sacrificed. I fled from the wrath of Brahma through all the forests of Asia: Vishnu hated me: Seeva laid wait for me. I came suddenly upon Isis and Osiris: I had done a deed, they said, which the ibis and the crocodile trembled at. I was buried, for a thousand years, in stone coffins, with mummies [770 and sphinxes, in narrow chambers at the heart of eternal pyramids. I was kissed, with cancerous kisses, by crocodiles; and laid, confounded with all unutterable slimy things, amongst reeds and Nilotic mud.

I thus give the reader some slight abstraction of my oriental dreams, which always filled me with such amazement at the monstrous scenery, that [780 horror seemed absorbed, for a while, in sheer astonishment. Sooner or later, came a reflux of feeling that swallowed up the astonishment, and left me, not so much in terror, as in hatred and abomination of what I saw. Over every form, and threat, and punishment, and dim sightless incarceration, brooded a sense of eternity and infinity that drove me into an oppression as of madness. Into [790 these dreams only, it was, with one or two slight exceptions, that any circumstances of physical horror entered. All before had been moral and spiritual terrors. But here the main agents were ugly birds, or snakes, or crocodiles; especially the last. The cursed crocodile became to me the object of more horror than almost all the rest. I was compelled to live with him; and (as was [800 always the case almost in my dreams) for centuries. I escaped sometimes, and found myself in Chinese houses, with cane tables, etc. All the feet of the tables, sofas, etc., soon became instinct with life: the abominable head of the crocodile, and his leering eyes, looked out at me, multiplied into a thousand repetitions: and I stood loathing and fascinated. And so often did this hideous [810 reptile haunt my dreams, that many times the very same dream was broken up in the very same way: I heard gentle voices speaking to me (I hear everything when I am sleeping); and instantly I awoke: it was broad noon; and my children were standing, hand in hand, at my bed-side; come to show me their colored shoes, or new frocks, or to let me see them dressed for going out. I protest that so [820 awful was the transition from the damned crocodile, and the other unutterable monsters and abortions of my dreams, to the sight of innocent human natures and of infancy, that, in the mighty and sudden revulsion of mind, I wept, and could not forbear it, as I kissed their faces.

ON THE KNOCKING AT THE GATE IN MACBETH

From my boyish days I had always felt a great perplexity on one point in Macbeth. It was this:—the knocking at the gate which succeeds to the murder of Duncan produced to my feelings an effect for which I could never account. The effect was that it reflected back upon the murderer a peculiar awfulness and a depth of solemnity; yet however obstinately I endeavored with my un- [10 derstanding to comprehend this, for many years I never could see why it should produce such an effect.

* * * * *

My understanding could furnish no reason why the knocking at the gate in Macbeth should produce any effect, direct or reflected. In fact, my understanding said positively that it could not produce any effect. But I knew better; I felt that it did; and I waited and clung to the [20 problem until further knowledge should enable me to solve it. At length, in 1812,

Mr. Williams made his début on the stage of Ratcliffe Highway, and executed those unparalleled murders which have procured for him such a brilliant and undying reputation. On which murders, by the way, I must observe that in one respect they have had an ill effect, by making the connoisseur in murder very fastidious [30 in his taste, and dissatisfied by anything that has been since done in that line. All other murders look pale by the deep crimson of his; and, as an amateur once said to me in a querulous tone, "There has been absolutely nothing doing since his time, or nothing that's worth speaking of." But this is wrong; for it is unreasonable to expect all men to be great artists, and born with the genius of [40 Mr. Williams. Now, it will be remembered that in the first of these murders (that of the Marrs) the same incident (of a knocking at the door soon after the extermination was complete) did actually occur which the genius of Shakespeare has invented, and all good judges, and the most eminent dilettanti, acknowledged the felicity of Shakespeare's suggestion as soon as it was actually [50 realized. Here, then, was a fresh proof that I was right in relying on my own feeling, in opposition to my understanding; and again I set myself to study the problem. At length I solved it to my own satisfaction; and my solution is this:—Murder, in ordinary cases, where the sympathy is wholly directed to the case of the murdered person, is an incident of coarse and vulgar horror; and for [60 this reason,—that it flings the interest exclusively upon the natural but ignoble instinct by which we cleave to life: an instinct which, as being indispensable to the primal law of self-preservation, is the same in kind (though different in degree) amongst all living creatures. This instinct, therefore, because it annihilates all distinctions, and degrades the greatest of men to the level of "the [70 poor beetle that we tread on," exhibits human nature in its most abject and humiliating attitude. Such an attitude would little suit the purposes of the poet. What then must he do? He must throw the interest on the murderer. Our sympathy must be with him (of course I mean a sympathy of comprehension, a sympathy by which we enter into his feelings, and are made to understand [80 them,—not a sympathy of pity or approbation). In the murdered person, all strife of thought, all flux and reflux of passion and of purpose, are crushed by one overwhelming panic; the fear of instant death smites him "with its petrific mace." But in the murderer, such a murderer as a poet will condescend to, there must be raging some storm of passion,—jealousy, ambition, vengeance, [90 hatred,—which will create a hell within him; and into this hell we are to look.

In Macbeth, for the sake of gratifying his own enormous and teeming faculty of creation, Shakespeare has introduced two murderers: and, as usual in his hands, they are remarkably discriminated: but,—though in Macbeth the strife of mind is greater than in his wife, the tiger spirit not so awake, and his feelings caught [100 chiefly by contagion from her,—yet, as both were finally involved in the guilt of murder, the murderous mind of necessity is finally to be presumed in both. This was to be expressed; and, on its own account, as well as to make it a more proportionable antagonist to the unoffending nature of their victim, "the gracious Duncan," and adequately to expound "the deep damnation of his taking [110 off," this was to be expressed with peculiar energy. We were to be made to feel that the human nature,—i. e., the divine nature of love and mercy, spread through the hearts of all creatures, and seldom utterly withdrawn from man,—was gone, vanished, extinct, and that the fiendish nature had taken its place. And, as this effect is marvellously accomplished in the dialogues and soliloquies [120 themselves, so it is finally consummated by the expedient under consideration; and it is to this that I now solicit the reader's attention. If the reader has ever witnessed a wife, daughter, or sister, in a fainting fit, he may chance to have observed that the most affecting moment in such a spectacle is that in which a sigh and a stirring announce the commencement of suspended life. Or, if [130

the reader has ever been present in a vast metropolis on the day when some great national idol was carried in funeral pomp to his grave, and, chancing to walk near the course through which it passed, has felt powerfully, in the silence and desertion of the streets, and in the stagnation of ordinary business, the deep interest which at that moment was possessing the heart of man,—if all at once he [140 should hear the death-like stillness broken up by the sound of wheels rattling away from the scene, and making known that the transitory vision was dissolved, he will be aware that at no moment was his sense of the complete suspension and pause in ordinary human concerns so full and affecting as at that moment when the suspension ceases, and the goings-on of human life are suddenly [150 resumed. All action in any direction is best expounded, measured, and made apprehensible, by reaction. Now, apply this to the case in Macbeth. Here, as I have said, the retiring of the human heart and the entrance of the fiendish heart was to be expressed and made sensible. Another world has stepped in; and the murderers are taken out of the region of human things, human purposes, hu- [160 man desires. They are transfigured: Lady Macbeth is "unsexed;" Macbeth has forgot that he was born of woman; both are conformed to the image of devils; and the world of devils is suddenly revealed. But how shall this be conveyed and made palpable? In order that a new world may step in, this world must for a time disappear. The murderers and the murder must be in- [170 sulated—cut off by an immeasurable gulf from the ordinary tide and succession of human affairs—locked up and sequestered in some deep recess; we must be made sensible that the world of ordinary life is suddenly arrested, laid asleep, tranced, racked into a dread armistice; time must be annihilated, relation to things without abolished; and all must pass self-withdrawn into a deep [180 syncope and suspension of earthly passion. Hence it is that, when the deed is done, when the work of darkness is perfect, then the world of darkness passes away like a pageantry in the clouds: the knocking at the gate is heard, and it makes known audibly that the reaction has commenced; the human has made its reflux upon the fiendish; the pulses of life are beginning to beat again; and the [190 re-establishment of the goings-on of the world in which we live first makes us profoundly sensible of the awful parenthesis that had suspended them.

O mighty poet! Thy works are not as those of other men, simply and merely great works of art, but are also like the phenomena of nature, like the sun and the sea, the stars and the flowers, like frost and snow, rain and dew, hail- [200 storm and thunder, which are to be studied with entire submission of our own faculties, and in the perfect faith that in them there can be no too much or too little, nothing useless or inert, but that, the farther we press in our discoveries, the more we shall see proofs of design and self-supporting arrangement where the careless eye had seen nothing but accident!

LEVANA AND OUR LADIES OF SORROW

From SUSPIRIA DE PROFUNDIS

Oftentimes at Oxford I saw Levana in my dreams. I knew her by her Roman symbols. Who is Levana? Reader, that do not pretend to have leisure for very much scholarship, you will not be angry with me for telling you. Levana was the Roman goddess that performed for the new-born infant the earliest office of ennobling kindness,—typical, by its mode, of that grandeur which belongs to [10 man everywhere, and of that benignity in powers invisible which even in Pagan worlds sometimes descends to sustain it. At the very moment of birth, just as the infant tasted for the first time the atmosphere of our troubled planet, it was laid on the ground. That might bear different interpretations. But immediately, lest so grand a creature should grovel there for more than one instant, either the [20 paternal hand, as proxy for the goddess Levana, or some near kinsman, as proxy for the father, raised it upright, bade it look erect as the king of all this world, and presented its forehead to the stars, saying, perhaps, in his heart, "Behold what is greater than yourselves!" This symbolic act represented the function of Levana. And that mysterious lady, who never revealed her face (except to me [30 in dreams]), but always acted by delegation, had her name from the Latin verb (as still it is the Italian verb) levare, to raise aloft.

This is the explanation of Levana, and hence it has arisen that some people have understood by Levana the tutelary power that controls the education of the nursery. She, that would not suffer at his birth even a prefigurative or mimic [40 degradation for her awful ward, far less could be supposed to suffer the real degradation attaching to the non-development of his powers. She therefore watches over human education. Now the word edūco, with the penultimate short, was derived (by a process often exemplified in the crystallisation of languages) from the world edūco, with the penultimate long. Whatsoever educes, or develops, [50 educates. By the education of Levana, therefore, is meant,—not the poor machinery that moves by spelling-books and grammars, but that mighty system of central forces hidden in the deep bosom of human life, which by passion, by strife, by temptation, by the energies of resistance, works for ever upon children,—resting not day or night, any more than the mighty wheel of day and night [60 themselves, whose moments, like restless spokes, are glimmering for ever as they revolve.

If, then, these are the ministries by which Levana works, how profoundly must she reverence the agencies of grief! But you, reader, think that children generally are not liable to grief such as mine. There are two senses in the word generally,—the sense of Euclid, where [70 it means universally (or in the whole extent of the genus), and a foolish sense of this word, where it means usually. Now, I am far from saying that children universally are capable of grief like mine. But there are more than you ever heard of who die of grief in this island of ours. I will tell you a common case. The rules of Eton require that a boy on the foundation should be there twelve years: [80 he is superannuated at eighteen, consequently he must come at six. Children torn away from mothers and sisters at that age not unfrequently die. I speak of what I know. The complaint is not entered by the registrar as grief; but that it is. Grief of that sort, and at that age, has killed more than ever have been counted amongst its martyrs.

Therefore it is that Levana often [90 communes with the powers that shake man's heart: therefore it is that she dotes upon grief. "These ladies," said I softly to myself, on seeing the ministers with whom Levana was conversing, "these are the Sorrows; and they are three in number, as the Graces are three, who dress man's life with beauty; the Parcae are three, who weave the dark arras of man's life in their mysterious loom, [100 always with colors sad in part, sometimes angry with tragic crimson and black; the Furies are three, who visit with retributions called from the other side of the grave offences that walk upon this; and once even the Muses were but three, who fit the harp, the trumpet, or the lute, to the great burdens of man's impassioned creations. These are the Sorrows, all three of whom I know." The last [110 words I say now; but in Oxford I said, "One of whom I know, and the others too surely I shall know." For already, in my fervent youth, I saw (dimly relieved upon the dark background of my dreams) the imperfect lineaments of the awful sisters. These sisters—by what name shall we call them? If I say simply, "The Sorrows," there will be a chance of mistaking the term; it might be [120 understood of individual sorrow,—separate cases of sorrow,—whereas I want a term expressing the mighty abstractions that incarnate themselves in all individual sufferings of man's heart; and I wish to have these abstractions presented as impersonations, that is, as clothed with human attributes of life, and with functions pointing to flesh. Let us call them, therefore, Our Ladies of Sorrow. [130

I know them thoroughly, and have walked in all their kingdoms. Three sisters they are, of one mysterious household; and their paths are wide apart; but of their dominion there is no end. Them I saw often conversing with Levana, and sometimes about myself. Do they talk, then? Oh, no! Mighty phantoms like these disdain the infirmities of language. They may utter voices through the [140] organs of man when they dwell in human hearts, but amongst themselves is no voice nor sound, eternal silence reigns in their kingdoms. They spoke not, as they talked with Levana; they whispered not; they sang not; though oftentimes methought they might have sung: for I upon earth had heard their mysteries oftentimes deciphered by harp and timbrel, by dulcimer and organ. Like God, [150] whose servants they are, they utter their pleasure, not by sounds that perish, or by words that go astray, but by signs in heaven, by changes on earth, by pulses in secret rivers, heraldries painted on darkness, and hieroglyphics written on the tablets of the brain. They wheeled in mazes; I spelled the steps. They telegraphed from afar; I read the signals. They conspired together; and on the [160] mirrors of darkness my eye traced the plots. Theirs were the symbols; mine are the words.

What is it the sisters are? What is it that they do? Let me describe their form, and their presence: if form it were that still fluctuated in its outline, or presence it were that for ever advanced to the front, or for ever receded amongst shades. [170]

The eldest of the three is named Mater Lachrymarum, Our Lady of Tears. She it is that night and day raves and moans, calling for vanished faces. She stood in Rama, where a voice was heard of lamentation,—Rachel weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted. She it was that stood in Bethlehem on the night when Herod's sword swept its nurseries of Innocents, and the little [180] feet were stiffened for ever, which, heard at times as they tottered along floors overhead, woke pulses of love in household hearts that were not unmarked in heaven.

Her eyes are sweet and subtle, wild and sleepy, by turns; oftentimes rising to the clouds, oftentimes challenging the heavens. She wears a diadem round her head. And I knew by childish memories that she could go abroad upon the winds, [190] when she heard the sobbing of litanies or the thundering of organs, and when she beheld the mustering of summer clouds. This sister, the eldest, it is that carries keys more than papal at her girdle, which open every cottage and every palace. She, to my knowledge, sat all last summer by the bedside of the blind beggar, him that so often and so gladly I talked with, whose pious daughter, [200] eight years old, with the sunny countenance, resisted the temptations of play and village mirth to travel all day long on dusty roads with her afflicted father. For this did God send her a great reward. In the spring-time of the year, and whilst yet her own spring was budding, He recalled her to himself. But her blind father mourns for ever over her; still he dreams at midnight that the little [210] guiding hand is locked within his own; and still he wakens to a darkness that is now within a second and a deeper darkness. This Mater Lachrymarum also has been sitting all this winter of 1844-5 within the bed-chamber of the Czar, bringing before his eyes a daughter (not less pious) that vanished to God not less suddenly, and left behind her a darkness not less profound. By the power of the [220] keys it is that Our Lady of Tears glides a ghostly intruder into the chambers of sleepless men, sleepless women, sleepless children, from Ganges to Nile, from Nile to Mississippi. And her, because she is the first-born of her house, and has the widest empire, let us honor with the title of "Madonna!"

The second sister is called Mater Suspiriorum—Our Lady of Sighs. She [230] never scales the clouds, nor walks abroad upon the winds. She wears no diadem. And her eyes, if they were ever seen, would be neither sweet nor subtle; no man could read their story; they would be found filled with perishing dreams, and with wrecks of forgotten delirium. But she raises not her eyes; her head, on which sits a dilapidated turban, droops for ever, for ever fastens on the dust. [240 She weeps not. She groans not. But she sighs inaudibly at intervals. Her sister, Madonna, is oftentimes stormy and frantic, raging in the highest against heaven, and demanding back her darlings. But Our Lady of Sighs never clamors, never defies, dreams not of rebellious aspirations. She is humble to abjectness. Hers is the meekness that belongs to the hopeless. Murmur she may, but it is in [250 her sleep. Whisper she may, but it is to herself in the twilight. Mutter she does at times, but it is in solitary places that are desolate as she is desolate, in ruined cities, and when the sun has gone down to his rest. This sister is the visitor of the Pariah, of the Jew, of the bondsman to the oar in the Mediterranean galleys; and of the English criminal in Norfolk Island, blotted out from the books of remem- [260 brance in sweet far-off England; of the baffled penitent reverting his eyes for ever upon a solitary grave, which to him seems the altar overthrown of some past and bloody sacrifice, on which altar no oblations can now be availing, whether towards pardon that he might implore, or towards reparation that he might attempt. Every slave that at noonday looks up to the tropical sun with timid re- [270 proach, as he points with one hand to the earth, our general mother, but for him a stepmother,—as he points with the other hand to the Bible, our general teacher, but against him sealed and sequestered;—every woman sitting in darkness, without love to shelter her head, or hope to illumine her solitude, because the heaven-born instincts kindling in her nature germs of holy affections which God [280 implanted in her womanly bosom, having been stifled by social necessities, now burn sullenly to waste, like sepulchral lamps amongst the ancients; every nun defrauded of her unreturning May-time by wicked kinsman, whom God will judge; every captive in every dungeon; all that are betrayed and all that are rejected; outcasts by traditionary law, and children of hereditary disgrace,— [290 all these walk with Our Lady of Sighs. She also carries a key; but she needs it little. For her kingdom is chiefly amongst the tents of Shem, and the houseless vagrant of every clime. Yet in the very highest ranks of man she finds chapels of her own; and even in glorious England there are some that, to the world, carry their heads as proudly as the reindeer, who yet secretly have received her [300 mark upon their foreheads.

But the third sister, who is also the youngest —! Hush, whisper whilst we talk of her! Her kingdom is not large, or else no flesh should live; but within that kingdom all power is hers. Her head, turreted like that of Cybele, rises almost beyond the reach of sight. She droops not; and her eyes rising so high might be hidden by distance; but, being what [310 they are, they cannot be hidden; through the treble veil of crape which she wears, the fierce light of a blazing misery, that rests not for matins or for vespers, for noon of day or noon of night, for ebbing or for flowing tide, may be read from the very ground. She is the defier of God. She also is the mother of lunacies, and the suggestress of suicides. Deep lie the roots of her power; but narrow is the [320 nation that she rules. For she can approach only those in whom a profound nature has been upheaved by central convulsions; in whom the heart trembles, and the brain rocks under conspiracies of tempest from without and tempest from within. Madonna moves with uncertain steps, fast or slow, but still with tragic grace. Our Lady of Sighs creeps timidly and stealthily. But [330 this youngest sister moves with incalculable motions, bounding, and with tiger's leaps. She carries no key; for, though coming rarely amongst men, she storms all doors at which she is permitted to enter at all. And her name is Mater Tenebrarum—Our Lady of Darkness.

These were the Semnai Theai, or Sublime Goddesses, these were the Eumenides, or Gracious Ladies (so called by antiquity in shuddering propitiation), of my Oxford dreams. Madonna spoke. She spoke by her mysterious hand. Touching my head, she beckoned to Our Lady of Sighs; and what she spoke, translated out of the signs which (except in dreams) no man reads, was this:—

“Lo! here is he, whom in childhood I dedicated to my altars. This is he [350 that once I made my darling. Him I led astray, him I beguiled, and from heaven I stole away his young heart to mine. Through me did he become idolatrous; and through me it was, by languishing desires, that he worshipped the worm, and prayed to the wormy grave. Holy was the grave to him; lovely was its darkness; saintly its corruption. Him, this young idolater, I have seasoned for [360 thee, dear gentle Sister of Sighs! Do thou take him now to thy heart, and season him for our dreadful sister. And thou,”—turning to the Mater Tenebrarum, she said,—“wicked sister, that temptest and hatest, do thou take him from her. See that thy sceptre lie heavy on his head. Suffer not woman and her tenderness to sit near him in his darkness. Banish the frailties of hope, wither the relenting [370 of love, scorch the fountains of tears, curse him as only thou canst curse. So shall he be accomplished in the furnace, so shall he see the things that ought not to be seen, sights that are abominable, and secrets that are unutterable. So shall he read elder truths, sad truths, grand truths, fearful truths. So shall he rise again before he dies, and so shall our commission be accomplished which from [380 God we had,—to plague his heart until we had unfolded the capacities of his spirit.”

THE VICTORIAN AGE

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR
(1775-1864)

ROSE AYLMER

Ah what avails the sceptred race,
Ah what the form divine!
What every virtue, every grace!
Rose Aylmer, all were thine.
Rose Aylmer, whom these wakeful eyes 5
May weep, but never see,
A night of memories and of sighs
I consecrate to thee.

THE DEATH OF ARTEMIDORA

"Artemidora! Gods invisible, While thou art lying faint along the couch,
Have tied the sandal to thy slender feet
And stand beside thee, ready to convey Thy weary steps where other rivers flow. 5
Refreshing shades will waft thy weariness Away, and voices like thy own come near
And nearer, and solicit an embrace."

Artemidora sighed, and would have pressed
The hand now pressing hers, but was too
weak. 10
Iris stood over her dark hair unseen While thus Elpenor spake. He looked into Eyes that had given light and life ere-
while
To those above them, but now dim with tears
And wakefulness. Again he spake of joy 15 Eternal. At that word, that sad word,
joy,
Faithful and fond her bosom heaved once
more:
Her head fell back; and now a loud deep sob
Swelled through the darkened chamber;
'twas not hers,

SAPPHO TO HESPERUS

I have beheld thee in the morning hour
A solitary star, with thankless eyes,
Ungrateful as I am! who bade thee rise
When sleep all night had wandered from my bower.
Can it be true that thou art he 5
Who shinest now above the sea
Amid a thousand, but more bright?
Ah yes! the very same art thou
That heard me then and hearest now—Thou seemest, star of love! to throb with
light. 10

ONE YEAR AGO

One year ago my path was green,
My footstep light, my brow serene;
Alas! and could it have been so
One year ago?

There is a love that is to last 5
When the hot days of youth are past:
Such love did a sweet maid bestow
One year ago.

I took a leaflet from her braid
And gave it to another maid. 10
Love! broken should have been thy bow
One year ago.

TO ROBERT BROWNING

There is delight in singing, though none
hear
Beside the singer; and there is delight
In praising, though the praiser sit alone
And see the praised far off him, far above.
Shakespeare is not our poet, but the world's, 5
Therefore on him no speech! and brief for
thee, Browning! Since Chaucer was alive and hale, .

No man hath walked about our roads with step
 So active, so inquiring eye, or tongue
 So varied in discourse. But warmer climes ¹⁰
 Give brighter plumage, stronger wing: the breeze
 Of Alpine heights thou playest with, borne on Beyond Sorrento and Amalfi, where
 The Siren waits thee, singing song for song.

ON THE HELLENICS

Come back, ye wandering Muses, come back home,
 Ye seem to have forgotten where it lies:
 Come, let us walk upon the silent sands
 Of Simois, where deep footmarks show long strides;
 Thence we may mount, perhaps, to higher ground, ⁵
 Where Aphroditè from Athenè won
 The golden apple, and from Herè too,
 And happy Ares shouted far below.
 Or would ye rather choose the grassy
 vale
 Where flows Anapos through anemones, ¹⁰
 Hyacinths, and narcissuses, that bend
 To show their rival beauty in the stream?
 Bring with you each her lyre, and each in turn Temper a graver with a lighter song.

IPHIGENEIA AND AGAMEMNON

Iphigeneia, when she heard her doom
 At Aulis, and when all beside the King Had gone away, took his right hand, and
 said,
 "O father! I am young and very happy.
 I do not think the pious Calchas heard ⁵ Distinctly what the goddess spake. Old age Obscures the senses. If my nurse, who knew
 My voice so well, sometimes misunder-
 stood
 While I was resting on her knee both arms
 And hitting it to make her mind my words,
 And looking in her face, and she in mine, ¹¹

Might he not also hear one word amiss, Spoken from so far off, even from Olym-pus?"
 The father placed his cheek upon her
 head,
 And tears dropped down it, but the king of men ¹⁵
 Replied not. Then the maiden spake once
 more.
 "O father! sayst thou nothing? Hear'st thou not
 Me, whom thou ever hast, until this hour,
 Listened to fondly, and awakened me
 To hear my voice amid the voice of birds, ²⁰
 When it was inarticulate as theirs,
 And the down deadened it within the
 nest?"
 He moved her gently from him, silent still,
 And this, and this alone, brought tears
 from her,
 Although she saw fate nearer: then with sighs, ²⁵
 "I thought to have laid down my hair
 before
 Benignant Artemis, and not have dimmed
 Her polished altar with my virgin blood;
 I thought to have selected the white
 flowers
 To please the Nymphs, and to have asked of each ³⁰
 By name, and with no sorrowful regret, Whether, since both my parents willed the
 change,
 I might at Hymen's feet bend my clipped
 brow;
 And (after those who mind us girls the most)
 Adore our own Athena, that she would ³⁵
 Regard me mildly with her azure eyes.
 But father! to see you no more, and see
 Your love, O father! go ere I am gone—" Gently he moved her off, and drew her back,
 Bending his lofty head far over hers, ⁴⁰
 And the dark depths of nature heaved and burst.
 He turned away; not far, but silent still.
 She now first shuddered; for in him, so
 nigh,
 So long a silence seemed the approach of
 death,
 And like it. Once again she raised her voice. ⁴⁵
 "O father! if the ships are now detained,

And all your vows move not the Gods above,
 When the knife strikes me there will be one
 prayer
 The less to them: and purer can there be Any, or more fervent than the daughter's
 prayer 50
 For her dear father's safety and success?"
 A groan that shook him shook not his resolve.
 An aged man now entered, and without One word, stepped slowly on, and took the wrist
 Of the pale maiden. She looked up and saw 55
 The fillet of the priest and calm cold eyes.
 Then turned she where her parent stood,
 and cried
 "O father! grieve no more: the ships can sail."

TO YOUTH

Where art thou gone, light-ankled Youth?
 With wing at either shoulder,
 And smile that never left thy mouth
 Until the Hours grew colder:

Then somewhat seemed to whisper near 5
 That thou and I must part;
 I doubted it: I felt no fear,
 No weight upon the heart:

If aught befell it, Love was by
 And rolled it off again; 10
 So, if there ever was a sigh,
 'Twas not a sigh of pain.

I may not call thee back; but thou
 Returnest when the hand
 Of gentle Sleep waves o'er my brow 15
 His poppy-crested wand;

Then smiling eyes bend over mine,
 Then lips once pressed invite;
 But Sleep hath given a silent sign,
 And both, alas! take flight. 20

TO AGE

Welcome, old friend! These many years
 Have we lived door by door:
 The fates have laid aside their shears
 Perhaps for some few more.

I was indocile at an age 5
 When better boys were taught,
 But thou at length hast made me sage,
 If I am sage in aught.

Little I know from other men,
 Too little they from me, 10
 But thou hast pointed well the pen
 That writes these lines to thee.

Thanks for expelling Fear and Hope,
 One vile, the other vain;
 One's scourge, the other's telescope, 15
 I shall not see again;

Rather what lies before my feet
 My notice shall engage—
 He who hath braved Youth's dizzy heat
 Dreads not the frost of Age. 20

ON HIS SEVENTY-FIFTH BIRTH-DAY

I strove with none, for none was worth my strife,
 Nature I loved, and next to Nature,
 Art;
 I warmed both hands before the fire of
 life,
 It sinks, and I am ready to depart.

TO MY NINTH DECADE

To my ninth decade I have tottered on,
 And no soft arm bends now my steps
 to steady;
 She, who once led me where she would,
 is gone,
 So when he calls me, Death shall find me ready.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON
 (1809-1892)

THE LADY OF SHALOTT

PART I

On either side the river lie
 Long fields of barley and of rye,
 That clothe the wold and meet the sky;
 And through the field the road runs by
 To many-towered Camelot; 5

And up and down the people go,
Gazing where the lilies blow
Round an island there below,
The island of Shalott.

Willows whiten, aspens quiver, 10
Little breezes dusk and shiver
Through the wave that runs for ever
By the island in the river
Flowing down to Camelot.

Four gray walls, and four gray towers, 15
Overlook a space of flowers,
And the silent isle imbowers
The Lady of Shalott.

By the margin, willow-veiled,
Slide the heavy barges trailed 20
By slow horses; and unhailed
The shallop flitteth silken-sailed
Skimming down to Camelot;
But who hath seen her wave her hand?
Or at the casement seen her stand? 25
Or is she known in all the land,
The Lady of Shalott?

Only reapers, reaping early
In among the bearded barley,
Hear a song that echoes cheerly 30
From the river winding clearly,
Down to towered Camelot;
And by the moon the reaper weary,
Piling sheaves in uplands airy,
Listening, whispers "'Tis the fairy 35
Lady of Shalott."

PART II

There she weaves by night and day
A magic web with colors gay.
She has heard a whisper say,
A curse is on her if she stay 40
To look down to Camelot.
She knows not what the curse may be,
And so she weaveth steadily,
And little other care hath she,
The Lady of Shalott. 45

And moving through a mirror clear
That hangs before her all the year,
Shadows of the world appear.
There she sees the highway near Winding down to Camelot; 50
There the river eddy whirls,
And there the surly village-churls,
And the red cloaks of market girls,
Pass onward from Shalott.

Sometimes a troop of damsels glad, 55
An abbot on an ambling pad,
Sometimes a curly shepherd-lad,
Or long-haired page in crimson clad,
Goes by to towered Camelot;
And sometimes through the mirror blue 60
The knights come riding two and two:
She hath no loyal knight and true,
The Lady of Shalott.

But in her web she still delights
To weave the mirror's magic sights, 65
For often through the silent nights
A funeral, with plumes and lights
And music, went to Camelot;
Or when the moon was overhead,
Came two young lovers lately wed; 70
"I am half sick of shadows," said
The Lady of Shalott.

PART III

A bow-shot from her bower-eaves,
He rode between the barley-sheaves,
The sun came dazzling through the 75
leaves,
And flamed upon the brazen greaves
Of bold Sir Lancelot.
A red-cross knight for ever kneeled,
To a lady in his shield,
That sparkled on the yellow field, 80
Beside remote Shalott.

The gemmy bridle glittered free,
Like to some branch of stars we see
Hung in the golden Galaxy.
The bridle bells rang merrily 85
As he rode down to Camelot;
And from his blazoned baldric slung
A mighty silver bugle hung,
And as he rode his armor rung,
Beside remote Shalott. 90

All in the blue unclouded weather
Thick-jeweled shone the saddle-leather,
The helmet and the helmet-feather
Burned like one burning flame together,
As he rode down to Camelot; 95
As often through the purple night,
Below the starry clusters bright,
Some bearded meteor, trailing light,
Moves over still Shalott. 99

His broad clear brow in sunlight glowed;
On burnished hooves his war-horse trode;

From underneath his helmet flowed
His coal-black curls as on he rode,
 As he rode down to Camelot.
From the bank and from the river 105
He flashed into the crystal mirror,
"Tirra lirra," by the river Sang Sir Lancelot.

She left the web, she left the loom,
She made three paces through the room,
She saw the water-lily bloom, 111
She saw the helmet and the plume,
 She looked down to Camelot.
Out flew the web and floated wide;
The mirror cracked from side to side; 115
"The curse is come upon me," cried
The Lady of Shalott.

PART IV

In the stormy east-wind straining,
The pale yellow woods were waning,
The broad stream in his banks complain- 120
ing,
Heavily the low sky raining
Over towered Camelot;
Down she came and found a boat
Beneath a willow left afloat,
And round about the prow she wrote 125
The Lady of Shalott.

And down the river's dim expanse
Like some bold seer in a trance,
Seeing all his own mischance—
With a glassy countenance 130
 Did she look to Camelot.
And at the closing of the day
She loosed the chain, and down she lay;
The broad stream bore her far away,
The Lady of Shalott. 135

Lying robed in snowy white
That loosely flew to left and right—
The leaves upon her falling light—
Through the noises of the night 140
 She floated down to Camelot;
And as the boat-head wound along
The willowy hills and fields among,
They heard her singing her last song,
The Lady of Shalott.

For ere she reached upon the tide 150
The first house by the water-side,
Singing in her song she died,
 The Lady of Shalott.

Under tower and balcony,
By garden-wall and gallery, 155
A gleaming shape she floated by,
Dead-pale between the houses high,
 Silent into Camelot.
Out upon the wharfs they came,
Knight and burgher, lord and dame, 160
And round the prow they read her name,
The Lady of Shalott.

Who is this? and what is here?
And in the lighted palace near Died the sound of royal cheer; 165
And they crossed themselves for fear,
 All the knights at Camelot;
But Lancelot mused a little space;
He said, "She has a lovely face;
God in his mercy lend her grace, 170
 The Lady of Shalott."

ÆNONE

There lies a vale in Ida, lovelier
Than all the valleys of Ionian hills.
The swimming vapor slopes athwart the glen,
Purs forth an arm, and creeps from pine
to pine,
And loiters, slowly drawn. On either hand
The lawns and meadow-ledges midway
down 6
Hang rich in flowers, and far below them roars
The long brook falling through the cloven ravine
In cataract after cataract to the sea.
Behind the valley topmost Gargarus 10 Stands up and takes the morning; but in front
The gorges, opening wide apart, reveal Troas and Ilion's columned citadel,
The crown of Troas.

 Hither came at noon
Mournful Ænone, wandering forlorn 15
Of Paris, once her playmate on the hills.
Her cheek had lost the rose, and round her neck
Floated her hair or seemed to float in rest.

She, leaning on a fragment twined with
vine,
Sang to the stillness, till the mountain-
shade 20
Sloped downward to her seat from the upper cliff.

"O mother Ida, many fountained Ida,
Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
For now the noonday quiet holds the hill;
The grasshopper is silent in the grass; 25
The lizard, with his shadow on the stone, Rests like a shadow, and the winds are
dead.
The purple flower droops, the golden bee
Is lily-cradled: I alone awake. 29
My eyes are full of tears, my heart of love,
My heart is breaking and my eyes are dim,
And I am all weary of my life.

"O mother Ida, many-fountained Ida,
Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
Hear me, O earth, hear me, O hills, O
caves 35
That house the cold crowned snake! O mountain brooks,
I am the daughter of a River-God,
Hear me, for I will speak, and build up all
My sorrow with my song, as yonder walls
Rose slowly to a music slowly breathed, 40
A cloud that gathered shape; for it may be
That, while I speak of it, a little while
My heart may wander from its deeper woe.

"O mother Ida, many-fountained Ida,
Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die. 45
I waited underneath the dawning hills;
Aloft the mountain-lawn was dewy-dark,
And dewy-dark aloft the mountain-pine.
Beautiful Paris, evil-hearted Paris,
Leading a jet-black goat, white-horned,
white-hooved, 50
Came up from reedy Simois all alone.

"O mother Ida, harken ere I die.
Far off the torrent called me from the cleft;
Far up the solitary morning smote
The streaks of virgin snow. With down-dropped eyes 55
I sat alone; white-breasted like a star
Fronting the dawn he moved; a leopard
skin
Drooped from his shoulder, but his sunny
hair

Clustered about his temples like a God's;
And his cheek brightened as the foam-bow brightens 60
When the wind blows the foam, and all my
heart
Went forth to embrace him coming ere he came.

"Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
He smiled, and opening out his milk-white palm
Disclosed a fruit of pure Hesperian gold, 65
That smelled ambrosially, and while I looked
And listened, the full-flowing river of speech
Came down upon my heart:

'My own Cēnone,
Beautiful-browed Cēnone, my own soul, Behold this fruit, whose gleaming rind in-
graven 70
For the most fair, would seem to award it
thine
As lovelier than whatever Oread haunt
The knolls of Ida, loveliest in all grace
Of movement, and the charm of married
brows.'

"Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die. 75
He pressed the blossom of his lips to mine,
And added, 'This was cast upon the board,
When all the full-faced presence of the Gods

Ranged in the halls of Peleus; whereupon Rose feud, with question unto whom 'twere
due; 80
But light-foot Iris brought it yester-eve,
Delivering, that to me, by common voice
Elected umpire, Here comes to-day,
Pallas and Aphrodite, claiming each This meed of fairest. Thou, within the cave 85
Behind yon whispering tuft of oldest pine,
Mayst well behold them unbeheld, unheard Hear all, and see thy Paris judge of Gods.'

"Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
It was the deep midnight, one silvery cloud
Had lost his way between the piny sides 91
Of this long glen. Then to the bower they
came,
Naked they came to that smooth-swarded
bower,
And at their feet the crocus brake like fire,

Violet, amaracus, and asphodel, 95
 Lotos and lilies; and a wind arose,
 And overhead the wandering ivy and vine,
 This way and that, in many a wild festoon
 Ran riot, garlanding the gnarled boughs
 With bunch and berry and flower through and through. 100

"O mother Ida, harken ere I die.
 On the tree-tops a crested peacock lit,
 And o'er him flowed a golden cloud, and leaned
 Upon him, slowly dropping fragrant dew.
 Then first I heard the voice of her to whom Coming through heaven, like a light that grows 106
 Larger and clearer, with one mind the Gods
 Rise up for reverence She to Paris made Proffer of royal power, ample rule
 Unquestioned, overflowing revenue 110
 Wherewith to embellish state, 'from many a vale
 And river-sundered champaign clothed with corn,
 Or labored mine undrainable of ore.
 Honor,' she said, 'and homage, tax and toll,
 From many an inland town and haven
 large, 115
 Mast-thronged beneath her shadowing
 citadel
 In glassy bays among her tallest towers.'

"O mother Ida, harken ere I die.
 Still she spake on and still she spake of
 power,
 'Which in all action is the end of all; 120
 Power fitted to the season; wisdom-bred
 And throned of wisdom—from all neighbor crowns
 Alliance and allegiance, till thy hand Fail from the sceptre-staff. Such boon
 from me,
 From me, heaven's queen, Paris, to thee
 king-born, 125
 A shepherd all thy life but yet king-born,
 Should come most welcome, seeing men,
 in power
 Only, are likest Gods, who have attained
 Rest in a happy place and quiet seats
 Above the thunder, with undying bliss 130
 In knowledge of their own supremacy.'

"Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
 She ceased, and Paris held the costly fruit
 Out at arm's-length, so much the thought of power
 Flattered his spirit; but Pallas where she stood 135
 Somewhat apart, her clear and bare limbs
 O'erthwarted with the brazen-headed spear
 Upon her pearly shoulder leaning cold,
 The while, above, her full and earnest eye
 Over her snow-cold breast and angry cheek Kept watch, waiting decision, made reply: 141
 'Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control,
 These three alone lead life to sovereign
 power.
 Yet not for power (power of herself Would come uncalled for) but to live by law, 145
 Acting the law we live by without fear;
 And, because right is right, to follow right
 Were wisdom in the scorn of consequence.'

"Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
 Again she said: 'I woo thee not with gifts.
 Sequel of guerdon could not alter me 151
 To fairer. Judge thou me by what I am,
 So shalt thou find me fairest.

Yet, indeed,
 If gazing on divinity disrobed
 Thy mortal eyes are frail to judge of fair,
 Unbiased by self-profit, O, rest thee sure That I shall love thee well and cleave to
 thee, 157
 So that my vigor, wedded to thy blood,
 Shall strike within thy pulses, like a
 God's,
 To push thee forward through a life of shocks, 160
 Dangers, and deeds, until endurance grow Sinewed with action, and the full-grown
 will,
 Circled through all experiences, pure law,
 Commensure perfect freedom.'

Here she ceased,
 And Paris pondered and I cried, 'O Paris,
 Give it to Pallas!' but he heard me not, 166
 Or hearing would not hear me, woe is me!

"O mother Ida, many-fountained Ida,
 Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.
 Idalian Aphrodite beautiful, 170
 Fresh as the foam, new-bathed in Paphian
 wells,

With rosy slender fingers backward drew
From her warm brows and bosom her deep hair

Ambrosial, golden round her lucid throat
And shoulder; from the violets her light foot ¹⁷⁵

Shone rosy-white, and o'er her rounded
form

Between the shadows of the vine-bunches Floated the glowing sunlights, as she moved.

"Dear mother Ida, harken ere I die.

She with a subtle smile in her mild eyes,
The herald of her triumph, drawing nigh Half-whispered in his ear, 'I promise thee ¹⁸²

The fairest and most loving wife in Greece.'
She spoke and laughed; I shut my sight
for fear;

But when I looked, Paris had raised his arm, ¹⁸⁵

And I beheld great Herè's angry eyes,
As she withdrew into the golden cloud,
And I was left alone within the bower;
And from that time to this I am alone,
And I shall be alone until I die. ¹⁹⁰

"Yet, mother Ida, harken ere I die.

Fairest—why fairest wife? am I not fair?
My love hath told me so a thousand times.
Methinks I must be fair, for yesterday,
When I passed by, a wild and wanton pard,¹ ¹⁹⁵

Eyed like the evening star, with playful tail

Crouched fawning in the weed. Most loving is she?

Ah me, my mountain shepherd, that my
arms

Were wound about thee, and my hot lips
pressed

Close, close to thine in that quick-falling dew ²⁰⁰

Of fruitful kisses, thick as autumn rains
Flash in the pools of whirling Simois!

"O mother, hear me yet before I die.

They came, they cut away my tallest pines,
My tall dark pines, that plumed the craggy ledge ²⁰⁵

High over the blue gorge, and all between
The snowy peak and snow-white cataract

¹ leopard.

Fostered the callow eaglet—from beneath Whose thick mysterious boughs in the dark
morn

The panther's roar came muffled, while I sat ²¹⁰

Low in the valley. Never, never more Shall lone Cēnone see the morning mist Sweep through them, never see them over-
laid

With narrow moonlit slips of silver cloud, Between the loud stream and the trembling stars. ²¹⁵

"O mother, hear me yet before I die.

I wish that somewhere in the ruined folds,
Among the fragments tumbled from the glens,

Or the dry thickets, I could meet with her
The Abominable, that uninvited came ²²⁰
Into the fair Peleian banquet-hall,

And cast the golden fruit upon the board,
And bred this change; that I might speak
my mind,

And tell her to her face how much I hate Her presence, hated both of Gods and men. ²²⁵

"O mother, hear me yet before I die.

Hath he not sworn his love a thousand
times,

In this green valley, under this green hill,
Even on this hand, and sitting on this
stone?

Sealed it with kisses? watered it with tears? ²³⁰

O happy tears, and how unlike to these!
O happy heaven, how canst thou see my
face?

O happy earth, how canst thou bear my weight?

O death, death, death, thou ever-floating cloud, ²³⁴

There are enough unhappy on this earth,
Pass by the happy souls, that love to live;
I pray thee, pass before my light of life,
And shadow all my soul, that I may die.
Thou weighest heavy on the heart within,
Weigh heavy on my eyelids; let me die. ²⁴⁰

"O mother, hear me yet before I die.

I will not die alone, for fiery thoughts
Do shape themselves within me, more and
more,

Whereof I catch the issue, as I hear

Dead sounds at night come from the inmost hills, 245
Like footsteps upon wool. I dimly see
My far-off doubtful purpose, as a mother
Conjectures of the features of her child Ere it is born. Her child!—a shudder comes

Across me: never child be born of me 250
Unblest, to vex me with his father's eyes!

"O mother, hear me yet before I die.
Hear me, O earth. I will not die alone,
Lest their shrill happy laughter come to me
Walking the cold and starless road of death
Uncomforted, leaving my ancient love 256
With the Greek woman. I will rise and go Down into Troy, and ere the stars come
forth

Talk with the wild Cassandra, for she says
A fire dances before her, and a sound 260
Rings ever in her ears of armed men.

What this may be I know not, but I know
That, whereso'er I am by night and day,
All earth and air seem only burning fire."

THE LOTOS-EATERS

"Courage!" he said, and pointed toward
the land,

"This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon."

In the afternoon they came unto a land
In which it seemèd always afternoon.

All round the coast the languid air did swoon, 5

Breathing like one that hath a weary
dream.

Full-faced above the valley stood the
moon;

And, like a downward smoke, the slender
stream

Along the cliff to fall and pause and fall did seem.

A land of streams! some, like a downward
smoke, 10

Slow-dropping veils of thinnest lawn, did go;
And some through wavering lights and shadows broke,

Rolling a slumbrous sheet of foam below.
They saw the gleaming river seaward flow
From the inner land; far off, three mountain-tops, 15

Three silent pinnacles of aged snow, Stood sunset-flushed; and, dewed with showery drops,
Up-clomb the shadowy pine above the woven copse.

The charmed sunset lingered low adown
In the red West; through mountain clefts
the dale 20

Was seen far inland, and the yellow down Bordered with palm, and many a winding
vale

And meadow, set with slender galingale;¹
A land where all things always seemed
the same!

And round about the keel with faces
pale, 25

Dark faces pale against that rosy flame,
The mild-eyed melancholy Lotos-eaters
came.

Branches they bore of that enchanted
stem,

Laden with flower and fruit, whereof they gave

To each, but whoso did receive of them 30
And taste, to him the gushing of the wave

Far far away did seem to mourn and rave

On alien shores; and if his fellow spake,
His voice was thin, as voices from the
grave;

And deep-asleep he seemed, yet all awake,
And music in his ears his beating heart
did make. 36

They sat them down upon the yellow
sand,

Between the sun and moon upon the shore;
And sweet it was to dream of Fatherland,
Of child, and wife, and slave; but ever-
more 40

Most weary seemed the sea, weary the
oar,

Weary the wandering fields of barren
foam.

Then some one said, "We will return no
more;"

And all at once they sang, "Our island
home

Is far beyond the wave; we will no longer roam." 45

¹ reeds, sedge.

A DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN

I read, before my eyelids dropped their
 shade,
 "The Legend of Good Women," long ago Sung by the morning-star of song, who
 made
 His music heard below;
 Dan Chaucer, the first warbler, whose sweet breath
 Preluded those melodious bursts that fill
 The spacious times of great Elizabeth
 With sounds that echo still.
 And, for a while, the knowledge of his art
 Held me above the subject, as strong gales
 Hold swollen clouds from raining, though
 my heart,
 Brimful of those wild tales, Charged both mine eyes with tears. In every land
 I saw, wherever light illumineth,
 Beauty and anguish walking hand in hand
 The downward slope to death.
 Those far-renowned brides of ancient song Peopled the hollow dark, like burning
 stars,
 And I heard sounds of insult, shame, and
 wrong,
 And trumpets blown for wars;
 And clattering flints battered with clang-
 ing hoofs;
 And I saw crowds in columned sanctuaries;
 And forms that passed at windows and on roofs
 Of marble palaces;
 Corpses across the threshold; heroes tall
 Dislodging pinnacle and parapet
 Upon the tortoise creeping to the wall;
 Lances in ambush set;
 And high shrine-doors burst through with heated blasts
 That run before the fluttering tongues
 of fire;
 White surf wind-scattered over sails and masts,
 And ever climbing higher;

Squadrons and squares of men in brazen
 plates,
 Scaffolds, still sheets of water, divers
 woes,
 Ranges of glimmering vaults with iron grates,
 And hushed seraglios.

So shape chased shape as swift as, when to
 land

Bluster the winds and tides the self-same
 way,
 Crisp foam-flakes scud along the level sand
 Torn from the fringe of spray.

I started once, or seemed to start in pain,
 Resolved on noble things, and strove to
 speak,
 As when a great thought strikes along the brain,
 And flushes all the cheek.

And once my arm was lifted to hew down
 A cavalier from off his saddle-bow,
 That bore a lady from a leaguered town;
 And then, I know not how,

All those sharp fancies, by down-lapsing
 thought Streamed onward, lost their edges, and did creep
 Rolled on each other, rounded, smoothed, and brought
 Into the gulfs of sleep.

At last methought that I had wandered far
 In an old wood: fresh-washed in coolest
 dew
 The maiden splendors of the morning star
 Shook in the steadfast blue.

Enormous elm-tree-boles did stoop and lean
 Upon the dusky brushwood underneath Their broad curved branches, fledged with clearest green,
 New from its silken sheath.

The dim red morn had died, her journey
 done,
 And with dead lips smiled at the twilight plain,
 Half-fallen across the threshold of the sun,
 Never to rise again.

There was no motion in the dumb dead
 air, 65
 Not any song of bird or sound of rill;
 Gross darkness of the inner sepulchre
 Is not so deadly still

As that wide forest. Growths of jasmine turned
 Their humid arms festooning tree to
 tree, 70
 And at the root through lush green grasses burned
 The red anemone.

I knew the flowers, I knew the leaves, I
 knew
 The tearful glimmer of the languid
 dawn
 On those long, rank, dark wood-walks drenched in dew, 75
 Leading from lawn to lawn.

The smell of violets, hidden in the green, Poured back into my empty soul and
 frame
 The times when I remember to have been Joyful and free from blame. 80

And from within me a clear undertone Thrilled through mine ears in that un-blissful clime,
 "Pass freely through: the wood is all thine
 own,
 Until the end of time."

At length I saw a lady within call, 85
 Still than chiselled marble, standing
 there;
 A daughter of the gods, divinely tall,
 And most divinely fair.

Her loveliness with shame and with surprise
 Froze my swift speech: she, turning on my face 90
 The star-like sorrows of immortal eyes,
 Spoke slowly in her place:

"I had great beauty: ask thou not my
 name:
 No one can be more wise than destiny.
 Many drew swords and died. Where'er
 I came 95
 I brought calamity."

"No marvel, sovereign lady: in fair field Myself for such a face had boldly died,"
 I answered free; and turning I appealed
 To one that stood beside. 100

But she, with sick and scornful look averse,
 To her full height her stately stature
 draws;
 "My youth," she said, "was blasted with a curse:
 " This woman was the cause.

"I was cut off from hope in that sad
 place 105
 Which men called Aulis in those iron
 years;
 My father held his hand upon his face;
 I, blinded with my tears,

"Still strove to speak: my voice was thick with sighs
 As in a dream. Dimly I could descry 110
 The stern black-bearded kings with wolfish
 eyes,
 Waiting to see me die.

"The high masts flickered as they lay afloat;
 The crowds, the temples, wavered, and
 the shore;
 The bright death quivered at the victim's throat— 115
 Touched—and I knew no more."

Whereto the other with a downward brow:
 "I would the white cold heavy-plunging
 foam,
 Whirled by the wind, had rolled me deep
 below,
 Then when I left my home." 120

Her slow full words sank through the silence drear,
 As thunder-drops fall on a sleeping sea:
 Sudden I heard a voice that cried, "Come
 here,
 That I may look on thee."

I turning saw, throned on a flowery rise, 125
 One sitting on a crimson scarf unrolled:
 A queen, with swarthy cheeks and bold
 black eyes,
 Brow-bound with burning gold.

She, flashing forth a haughty smile, began:

"I governed men by change, and so I swayed 130
All moods. 'Tis long since I have seen a
man.

Once, like the moon, I made

"The ever-shifting currents of the blood
According to my humor ebb and flow.
I have no men to govern in this wood: 135
That makes my only woe.

"Nay—yet it chafes me that I could not bend
One will; nor tame and tutor with mine
eye
That dull, cold-blooded Cæsar. Prythee,
friend,
Where is Mark Antony? 140

"The man, my lover, with whom I rode
sublime
On Fortune's neck; we sat as God by
God;
The Nilus would have risen before his time
And flooded at our nod.

"We drank the Libyan Sun to sleep, and lit 145
Lamps which out-burned Canopus. Oh, my life
In Egypt! Oh, the dalliance and the wit,
The flattery and the strife,

"And the wild kiss, when fresh from war's alarms,
My Hercules, my Roman Antony, 150
My mailed Bacchus leaped into my arms,
Contented there to die!

"And there he died: and when I heard my
name
Sighed forth with life, I would not brook
my fear
Of the other; with a worm I balked his
fame. 155
What else was left? look here!"—

With that she tore her robe apart, and half
The polished argent of her breast to sight Laid bare. Thereto she pointed with a laugh,
Showing the aspic's bite.— 160

"I died a Queen. The Roman soldier found Me lying dead, my crown about my
brows,
A name for ever!—lying robed and crowned Worthy a Roman spouse."

Her warbling voice, a lyre of widest range Struck by all passion, did fall down and glance 166
From tone to tone, and glided through all change
Of liveliest utterance.

When she made pause I knew not for de-
light;
Because with sudden motion from the
ground 170
She raised her piercing orbs, and filled with light
The interval of sound.

Still with their fires Love tipped his keenest darts:
As once they drew into two burning rings
All beams of Love, melting the mighty
hearts 175
Of captains and of kings.

Slowly my sense undazzled. Then I heard A noise of some one coming through the lawn,
And singing clearer than the crested bird
That claps his wings at dawn: 180

"The torrent brooks of hallowed Israel
From craggy hollows pouring, late and
soon,
Sound all night long, in falling through
the dell,
Far-heard beneath the moon.

"The balmy moon of blessed Israel 185 Floods all the deep-blue gloom with beams divine;
All night the splintered crags that wall
the dell
With spires of silver shine."

As one that museth where broad sunshine laves
The lawn by some cathedral, through the door 190
Hearing the holy organ rolling waves
Of sound on roof and floor

Within, and anthem sung, is charmed and tied

To where he stands,—so stood I, when that flow

Of music left the lips of her that died 195
To save her father's vow;

The daughter of the warrior Gileadite,
A maiden pure; as when she went along
From Mizpah's towered gate with welcome light,
With timbrel and with song. 200

My words leapt forth: "Heaven heads the count of crimes
With that wild oath." She rendered answer high:

"Not so, nor once alone; a thousand times
I would be born and die.

"Single I grew, like some green plant, whose root 205
Creeps to the garden water-pipes beneath,
Feeding the flower; but ere my flower to fruit
Changed, I was ripe for death.

"My God, my land, my father—these did
move
Me from my bliss of life, that Nature
gave, 210
Lowered softly with a threefold cord of
love
Down to a silent grave.

"And I went mourning, 'No fair Hebrew
boy
Shall smile away my maiden blame
among
The Hebrew mothers'—emptied of all joy,
Leaving the dance and song, 216

"Leaving the olive-gardens far below,
Leaving the promise of my bridal bower,
The valleys of grape-loaded vines that glow
Beneath the battled tower. 220

"The light white cloud swam over us.
Anon
We heard the lion roaring from his den,
We saw the large white stars rise one by
one,
Or, from the darkened glen,

"Saw God divide the night with flying
flame, 225
And thunder on the everlasting hills.
I heard Him, for He spake, and grief be-
came
A solemn scorn of ills.

"When the next moon was rolled into the
sky,
Strength came to me that equalled my desire. 230
How beautiful a thing it was to die
For God and for my sire!

"It comforts me in this one thought to
dwell,
That I subdued me to my father's
will;
Because the kiss he gave me, ere I fell, 235
Sweetens the spirit still.

"Moreover it is written that my race
Hewed Ammon, hip and thigh, from Aroer
On Arnon unto Minneth." Here her face
Glowed, as I looked at her. 240

She locked her lips: she left me where I
stood:
"Glory to God," she sang, and passed
afar, Thridding the sombre boskage¹ of the
wood,
Toward the morning-star.

Losing her carol I stood pensively, 245
As one that from a casement leans his
head,
When midnight bells cease ringing suddenly,
And the old year is dead.

"Alas! alas!" a low voice, full of care, Murmured beside me. "Turn and look
on me: 250
I am that Rosamond, whom men call fair,
If what I was I be.

"Would I had been some maiden coarse and poor!
O me, that I should ever see the light!
Those dragon eyes of angered Eleanor 255
Do hunt me, day and night."

¹ undergrowth.

She ceased in tears, fallen from hope and trust;
 To whom the Egyptian: "Oh, you tamely died
 You should have clung to Fulvia's waist, and thrust
 The dagger through her side." 260

With that sharp sound the white dawn's creeping beams, Stolen to my brain, dissolved the mystery
 Of folded sleep. The captain of my dreams Ruled in the eastern sky.

Morn broadened on the borders of the dark 265
 Ere I saw her who clasped in her last trance
 Her murdered father's head, or Joan of Arc,
 A light of ancient France;

Or her who knew that Love can vanquish Death,
 Who kneeling with one arm about her king, 270
 Drew forth the poison with her balmy breath,
 Sweet as new buds in Spring.

No memory labors longer from the deep
 Gold-mines of thought to lift the hidden ore
 That glimpses, moving up, than I from sleep 275
 To gather and tell o'er

Each little sound and sight. With what dull pain
 Compassed, how eagerly I sought to strike
 Into that wondrous track of dreams again
 But no two dreams are like. 280

As when a soul laments, which hath been blest,
 Desiring what is mingled with past years,
 In yearnings that can never be expressed
 By signs or groans or tears;

Because all words, though culled with choicest art, 285
 Failing to give the bitter of the sweet,
 Wither beneath the palate, and the heart
 Faints, faded by its heat.

YOU ASK ME, WHY, THOUGH ILL AT EASE

You ask me, why, though ill at ease,
 Within this region I subsist,
 Whose spirits falter in the mist,
 And languish for the purple seas.

It is the land that freemen till, 5
 That sober-suited Freedom chose,
 The land, where girt with friends or foes
 A man may speak the thing he will;

A land of settled government,
 A land of just and old renown, 10
 Where Freedom slowly broadens down
 From precedent to precedent;

Where faction seldom gathers head,
 But, by degrees to fullness wrought,
 The strength of some diffusive thought 15
 Hath time and space to work and spread.

Should banded unions persecute Opinion, and induce a time
 When single thought is civil crime,
 And individual freedom mute, 20

Though power should make from land to land
 The name of Britain trebly great—
 Though every channel of the State Should fill and choke with golden sand—

Yet waft me from the harbor-mouth, 25
 Wild wind! I seek a warmer sky,
 And I will see before I die
 The palms and temples of the South.

MORTE D'ARTHUR

So all day long the noise of battle rolled
 Among the mountains by the winter sea,
 Until King Arthur's table, man by man,
 Had fallen in Lyonesse about their Lord,

King Arthur: then, because his wound was deep, 5

The bold Sir Bedivere uplifted him,
Sir Bedivere, the last of all his knights,
And bore him to a chapel nigh the field,
A broken chancel with a broken cross,
That stood on a dark strait of barren land.
On one side lay the Ocean, and on one 11
Lay a great water, and the moon was full.

Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere:

"The sequel of to-day unsolders all
The goodliest fellowship of famous knights Whereof this world holds record. Such a sleep 16

They sleep—the men I loved. I think that we Shall never more, at any future time,

Delight our souls with talk of knightly
deeds,

Walking about the gardens and the halls 20
Of Camelot, as in the days that were.

I perish by this people which I made,— Though Merlin sware that I should come
again

To rule once more—but let what will be,
be; 24

I am so deeply smitten through the helm
That without help I cannot last till morn.
Thou therefore take my brand Excalibur,
Which was my pride; for thou remember-est how

In those old days, one summer noon, an arm

• Rose up from out the bosom of the lake, 30 Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,

Holding the sword—and how I rowed across

And took it, and have worn it, like a king;
And, wheresoever I am sung or told

In aftertime, this also shall be known. 35
But now delay not; take Excalibur,

And fling him far into the middle mere;¹
Watch what thou seest, and lightly² bring me word."

To him replied the bold Sir Bedivere:

"It is not meet, Sir King, to leave thee
thus, 40

Aidless, alone, and smitten through the helm.

A little thing may harm a wounded man.
Yet I thy hest will all perform at full,

¹ sea, lake.

² quickly.

Watch what I see, and lightly bring thee
word."

So saying, from the ruined shrine he stepped 45

And in the moon athwart the place of
tombs,

Where lay the mighty bones of ancient
men,

Old knights, and over them the sea-wind sang

Shrill, chill, with flakes of foam. He, stepping down

By zigzag paths and juts of pointed rock, 50
Came on the shining levels of the lake.

There drew he forth the brand Excalibur,

And o'er him, drawing it, the winter moon,
Brightening the skirts of a long cloud, ran
forth

And sparkled keen with frost against the hilt: 55

For all the haft twinkled with diamond
sparks,

Myriads of topaz-lights, and jacinth work
Of subtlest jewellery. He gazed so long

That both his eyes were dazzled, as he stood,

This way and that dividing the swift
mind, 60

In act to throw; but at the last it seemed Better to leave Excalibur concealed

There in the many-knotted waterflags,
That whistled stiff and dry about the marge.

So strode he back slow to the wounded
King. 65

Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere:
"Hast thou performed my mission which I gave?

What is it thou hast seen, or what hast
heard?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere:
"I heard the ripple-washing in the reeds, 70
And the wild water lapping on the crag."

To whom replied King Arthur, faint and
pale:

"Thou hast betrayed thy nature and thy
name,

Not rendering true answer, as beseemed
Thy fealty, nor like a noble knight; 75

For surer sign had followed, either hand,
Or voice, or else a motion of the mere.

This is a shameful thing for men to lie.
Yet now, I charge thee, quickly go again

As thou art lief¹ and dear, and do the thing
I bade thee, watch, and lightly bring me
word." 81

Then went Sir Bedivere the second time Across the ridge, and paced beside the mere,

Counting the dewy pebbles, fixed in
thought;

But when he saw the wonder of the hilt, 85
How curiously and strangely chased, he smote

His palms together, and he cried aloud:

"And if indeed I cast the brand away,
Surely a precious thing, one worthy note,
Should thus be lost forever from the
earth, 90

Which might have pleased the eyes of many men.

What good should follow this, if this were
done?

What harm, undone? deep harm to dis-
obey,

Seeing obedience is the bond of rule.

Were it well to obey then, if a king demand
An act unprofitable, against himself? 96
The King is sick, and knows not what he does.

What record, or what relic of my lord
Should be to aftertime, but empty breath
And rumors of a doubt? but were this kept, 100

Stored in some treasure-house of mighty
kings,

Some one might show it at a joust of
arms,

Saying, 'King Arthur's sword, Excalibur, Wrought by the lonely maiden of the Lake;

Nine years she wrought it, sitting in the deeps 105

Upon the hidden bases of the hills.'

So might some old man speak in the after-
time

To all the people, winning reverence;

But now much honor and much fame were
lost."

So spake he, clouded with his own conceit, 110

And hid Excalibur the second time,

And so strode back slow to the wounded
King.

Then spoke King Arthur, breathing heavily:

¹ loved.

"What is it thou hast seen, or what hast
heard?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedi-vere: 115

"I heard the water lapping on the crag,
And the long ripple washing in the reeds."

To whom replied King Arthur, much in wrath:

"Ah, miserable and unkind, untrue,
Unknightly, traitor-hearted! Woe is me!

Authority forgets a dying king, 121
Laid widowed of the power in his eye

That bowed the will. I see thee what thou
art,

For thou, the latest-left of all my knights,
In whom should meet the offices of all, 125

Thou wouldst betray me for the precious
hilt;

Either from lust of gold, or like a girl

Valuing the giddy pleasure of the eyes.

Yet, for a man may fail in duty twice,
And the third time may prosper, get thee
hence; 130

But, if thou spare to fling Excalibur,
I will arise and slay thee with my hands."

Then quickly rose Sir Bedivere, and ran,
And, leaping down the ridges lightly, plunged

Among the bulrush-beds, and clutched the
sword, 135

And strongly wheeled and threw it. The great brand

Made lightnings in the splendor of the
moon,

And flashing round and round, and whirled
in an arch,

Shot like a streamer of the northern morn,
Seen where the moving isles of winter
shock 140

By night, with noises of the northern sea.
So flashed and fell the brand Excalibur;

But ere he dipped the surface, rose an arm Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,

And caught him by the hilt, and brandished him 145

Three times, and drew him under in the mere.

And lightly went the other to the king.

Then spoke King Arthur, drawing thicker breath:

"Now see I by thine eyes that this is done.
Speak out; what is it thou hast heard, or
seen?" 150

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere:

"Sir King, I closed mine eyelids, lest the gems

Should blind my purpose, for I never saw,
Nor shall see, here or elsewhere, till I die,
Not though I live three lives of mortal
men, 155

So great a miracle as yonder hilt.

Then with both hands I flung him, wheeling him;

But when I looked again, behold an arm,
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,

That caught him by the hilt, and bran-
dished him 160

Three times, and drew him under in the
mere."

And answer made King Arthur, breathing hard:

"My end draws nigh; 'tis time that I were
gone.

Make broad thy shoulders to receive my weight,

And bear me to the margin; yet I fear 165
My wound hath taken cold, and I shall
die."

So saying, from the pavement he half
rose,

Slowly, with pain, reclining on his arm,
And looking wistfully with wide blue eyes
As in a picture. Him Sir Bedivere 170

Remorsefully regarded through his tears,
And would have spoken, but he found not
words,

Then took with care, and kneeling on one
knee,

O'er both his shoulders drew the languid
hands,

And rising bore him through the place of
tombs. 175

But, as he walked, King Arthur panted
hard,

Like one that feels a nightmare on his
bed

When all the house is mute. So sighed the
king,

Muttering and murmuring at his ear,
"Quick, quick!

I fear it is too late, and I shall die." 180

But the other swiftly strode from ridge to ridge,

Clothed with his breath, and looking, as he walked,

Larger than human on the frozen hills.
He heard the deep behind him, and a cry

Before. His own thought drove him, like a goad. 185

Dry clashed his harness in the icy caves
And barren chasms, and all to left and right

The bare black cliff clanged round him, as he based

His feet on juts of slippery crag that rang Sharp-smitten with the dint of armed heels— 190

And on a sudden, lo! the level lake,
And the long glories of the winter moon.

Then saw they how there hove a dusky
barge,

Dark as a funeral scarf from stem to stern, Beneath them; and descending they were ware 195

That all the decks were dense with stately forms

Black-stoled, black-hooded, like a dream—by these

Three Queens with crowns of gold—and from them rose

A cry that shivered to the tingling stars,
And, as it were one voice, an agony 200

Of lamentation, like a wind that shrills
All night in a waste land, where no one comes,

Or hath come, since the making of the
world.

Then murmured Arthur, "Place me in the barge,"

And to the barge they came. There those three Queens 205

Put forth their hands, and took the King, and wept.

But she that rose the tallest of them all
And fairest, laid his head upon her lap,

And loosed the shattered casque, and chafed his hands,

And called him by his name, complaining
loud, 210

And dropping bitter tears against his
brow

Striped with dark blood; for all his face was white

And colorless, and like the withered moon
Smote by the fresh beam of the springing
east;

And all his greaves¹ and cuisses² dashed with drops 215

Of onset; and the light and lustrous curls—
That made his forehead like a rising sun

¹ leg guards.

² thigh guards.

High from the dais-throne—were parched with dust;
Or, clotted into points and hanging loose,
Mixed with the knightly growth that fringed his lips. ²²⁰
So like a shattered column lay the King;
Not like that Arthur who, with lance in
rest,
From spur to plume a star of tournament, Shot through the lists at Camelot, and charged
Before the eyes of ladies and of kings. ²²⁵
Then loudly cried the bold Sir Bedivere:
“Ah! my Lord Arthur, whither shall I go?
Where shall I hide my forehead and my
eyes?
For now I see the true old times are dead,
When every morning brought a noble chance, ²³⁰
And every chance brought out a noble knight.
Such times have been not since the light that led
The holy Elders with the gift of myrrh.
But now the whole ROUND TABLE is dissolved
Which was an image of the mighty world;
And I, the last, go forth companionless, ²³⁶
And the days darken round me, and the
years,
Among new men, strange faces, other
minds.”
And slowly answered Arthur from the
barge:
“The old order changeth, yielding place
to new, ²⁴⁰
And God fulfils Himself in many ways, Lest one good custom should corrupt the
world.
Comfort thyself: what comfort is in me?
I have lived my life, and that which I have
done
May He within Himself make pure! but thou, ²⁴⁵
If thou shouldst never see my face again,
Pray for my soul. More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and
day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats ²⁵⁰
That nourish a blind life within the brain,

If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God. ²⁵⁵
But now farewell. I am going a long way
With these thou seest—if indeed I go—
For all my mind is clouded with a doubt—
To the island-valley of Avilion;
Where falls not hail, or rain, or any snow,
Nor ever wind blows loudly, but it lies ²⁶¹
Deep-meadowed, happy, fair with orchard-lawns
And bowery hollows crowned with summer
sea,
Where I will heal me of my grievous
wound.”
So said he, and the barge with oar and sail ²⁶⁵
Moved from the brink, like some full-breasted swan
That, fluting a wild carol ere her death, Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the
flood
With swarthy webs. Long stood Sir Bedivere
Revolving many memories, till the hull Looked one black dot against the verge of dawn, ²⁷¹
And on the mere the wailing died away.

ULYSSES

It little profits that an idle king,
By this still hearth, among these barren
crag,
Matched with an agèd wife, I mete and dole
Unequal laws unto a savage race,
That hoard, and sleep, and feed, and know not me. ⁵
I cannot rest from travel; I will drink
Life to the lees. All times I have enjoyed Greatly, have suffered greatly, both with those
That loved me, and alone; on shore, and when
Through scudding drifts the rainy Hyades
Vexed the dim sea. I am become a name;
For always roaming with a hungry heart ¹² Much have I seen and known,—cities of
men,

And manners, climates, councils, governments,
Myself not least, but honored of them
all,— 15
And drunk delight of battle with my peers,
Far on the ringing plains of windy Troy.
I am a part of all that I have met,
Yet all experience is an arch wherethrough Gleams that untravelled world, whose margin fades 20

Forever and forever when I move.
How dull it is to pause, to make an end,
To rust unburnished, not to shine in use!
As though to breathe were life! Life piled on life

Were all too little, and of one to me 25
Little remains: but every hour is saved
From that eternal silence, something more,
A bringer of new things, and vile it were
For some three suns to store and hoard myself,

And this gray spirit yearning in desire 30
To follow knowledge like a sinking star, Beyond the utmost bound of human
thought.

This is my son, mine own Telemachus,
To whom I leave the sceptre and the isle—
Well-loved of me, discerning to fulfil 35
This labor, by slow prudence to make mild
A rugged people, and through soft degrees
Subdue them to the useful and the good.
Most blameless is he, centred in the sphere
Of common duties, decent not to fail 40
In offices of tenderness, and pay Meet adoration to my household gods,
When I am gone. He works his work, I
mine.

There lies the port; the vessel puffs her
sail;

There gloom the dark broad seas. My mariners, 45
Souls that have toiled, and wrought, and thought with me,—

That ever with a frolic welcome took The thunder and the sunshine, and opposed

Free hearts, free foreheads,—you and I are
old;

Old age hath yet his honor and his toil. 50
Death closes all; but something ere the end,
Some work of noble note, may yet be done,
Not unbecoming men that strove with Gods.

The lights begin to twinkle from the rocks;

The long day wanes; the slow moon climbs; the deep 55
Moans round with many voices. Come,
my friends,

'Tis not too late to seek a newer world.
Push off, and sitting well in order smite
The sounding furrows; for my purpose holds

To sail beyond the sunset, and the baths 60
Of all the western stars, until I die.

It may be that the gulfs will wash us
down;

It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,
And see the great Achilles, whom we
knew.

Though much is taken, much abides; and though 65

We are not now that strength which in old
days

Moved earth and heaven; that which we are, we are;

One equal temper of heroic hearts,
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in
will

To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.

LOCKSLEY HALL

Comrades, leave me here a little, while as yet 'tis early morn:

Leave me here, and when you want me,
sound upon the bugle-horn.

'Tis the place, and all around it, as of old,
the curlews call,

Dreary gleams about the moorland flying over Locksley Hall;

Locksley Hall, that in the distance overlooks the sandy tracts, 5

And the hollow ocean-ridges roaring into cataracts.

Many a night from yonder ivied casement,
ere I went to rest,

Did I look on great Orion sloping slowly to the West.

Many a night I saw the Pleiads, rising through the mellow shade,

Glitter like a swarm of fire-flies tangled in a silver braid. 10

Here about the beach I wandered, nourish- ing a youth sublime With the fairy tales of science, and the long result of time; When the centuries behind me like a fruit- ful land reposed; When I clung to all the present for the promise that it closed; When I dipped into the future far as human eye could see; 15 Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be.— In the spring a fuller crimson comes upon the robin's breast; In the spring the wanton lapwing gets him- self another crest; In the spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished dove; In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. 20 Then her cheek was pale and thinner than should be for one so young, And her eyes on all my motions with a mute observance hung. And I said, "My cousin Amy, speak, and speak the truth to me, Trust me, cousin, all the current of my being sets to thee." On her pallid cheek and forehead came a color and a light, 25 As I have seen the rosy red flushing in the northern night. And she turned—her bosom shaken with a sudden storm of sighs— All the spirit deeply dawning in the dark of hazel eyes— Saying, "I have hid my feelings, fearing they should do me wrong;" Saying, "Dost thou love me, cousin?" weeping, "I have loved thee long." 30 Love took up the glass of Time, and turned it in his glowing hands; * Every moment, lightly shaken, ran itself in golden sands.	Love took up the harp of Life, and smote on all the chords with might; Smote the chord of Self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight. Many a morning on the moorland did we hear the copses ring, 35 And her whisper thronged my pulses with the fulness of the spring. Many an evening by the waters did we watch the stately ships, And our spirits rushed together at the touching of the lips. O my cousin, shallow-hearted! O my Amy, mine no more! O the dreary, dreary moorland! O the barren, barren shore! 40 Falser than all fancy fathoms, falser than all songs have sung, Puppet to a father's threat, and servile to a shrewish tongue! Is it well to wish thee happy? having known me—to decline On a range of lower feelings and a nar- rower heart than mine! Yet it shall be; thou shalt lower to his level day by day, 45 What is fine within thee growing coarse to sympathize with clay. As the husband is, the wife is; thou art mated with a clown, And the grossness of his nature will have weight to drag thee down. He will hold thee, when his passion shall have spent its novel force, Something better than his dog, a little dearer than his horse. 50 What is this? his eyes are heavy; think not they are glazed with wine. Go to him, it is thy duty; kiss him, take his hand in thine. It may be my lord is weary, that his brain is overwrought; Soothe him with thy finer fancies, touch him with thy lighter thought.
---	--

He will answer to the purpose, easy things to understand— 55
Better thou wert dead before me, though
I slew thee with my hand!

Better thou and I were lying, hidden from the heart's disgrace, Rolled in one another's arms, and silent in a last embrace.

Cursèd be the social wants that sin against the strength of youth!
Cursèd be the social lies that warp us from the living truth! 60

Cursèd be the sickly forms that err from honest Nature's rule!
Cursèd be the gold that gilds the straitened forehead of the fool!

Well—'tis well that I should bluster!— hadst thou less unworthy proved—Would to God—for I had loved thee more than ever wife was loved.

Am I mad, that I should cherish that which bears but bitter fruit? 65
I will pluck it from my bosom, though my heart be at the root.

Never, though my mortal summers to such length of years should come As the many-wintered crow that leads the clanging rookery home.

Where is comfort? in division of the records of the mind?
Can I part her from herself, and love her,
as I knew her, kind? 70

I remember one that perished; sweetly
did she speak and move;
Such a one do I remember, whom to look at was to love.

Can I think of her as dead, and love her for the love she bore?
No—she never loved me truly; love is love for evermore.

Comfort? comfort scorned of devils! this is truth the poet sings, 75
That a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things.

Drug thy memories, lest thou learn it,
lest thy heart be put to proof,
In the dead unhappy night, and when the rain is on the roof.

Like a dog, he hunts in dreams, and thou art staring at the wall,
Where the dying night-lamp flickers, and the shadows rise and fall. 80

Then a hand shall pass before thee, pointing to his drunken sleep,
To thy widowed marriage-pillows, to the tears that thou wilt weep.

Thou shalt hear the "Never, never," whispered by the phantom years,
And a song from out the distance in the ringing of thine ears;

And an eye shall vex thee, looking ancient kindness on thy pain. 85 Turn thee, turn thee on thy pillow; get thee to thy rest again.

Nay, but Nature brings thee solace; for a tender voice will cry.
'T is a purer life than thine, a lip to drain thy trouble dry.

Baby lips will laugh me down; my latest rival brings thee rest.
Baby fingers, waxen touches, press me from the mother's breast. 90

Oh, the child too clothes the father with a deariness not his due.
Half is thine and half is his; it will be worthy of the two.

Oh, I see thee old and formal, fitted to thy petty part,
With a little hoard of maxims preaching down a daughter's heart.

"They were dangerous guides, the feelings
—she herself was not exempt— 95 Truly, she herself had suffered"—Perish in thy self-contempt!

Overlive it—lower yet—be happy! wherefore should I care?
I myself must mix with action, lest I wither
by despair.

What is that which I should turn to, lighting upon days like these?
Every door is barred with gold, and opens
but to golden keys. 100

Every gate is thronged with suitors, all the markets overflow.
I have but an angry fancy; what is that which I should do?

I had been content to perish, falling on the foeman's ground,
When the ranks are rolled in vapor, and the winds are laid with sound.

But the jingling of the guinea helps the hurt that Honor feels, 105
And the nations do but murmur, snarling at each other's heels.

Can I but relive in sadness? I will turn that earlier page.
Hide me from my deep emotion, O thou wondrous Mother-Age!

Make me feel the wild pulsation that I felt before the strife,
When I heard my days before me and the tumult of my life; 110

Yearning for the large excitement that the coming years would yield, Eager-hearted as a boy when first he leaves his father's field,

And at night along the dusky highway near and nearer drawn, Sees in heaven the light of London flaring
like a dreary dawn;

And his spirit leaps within him to be gone before him then, 115 Underneath the light he looks at, in among the throngs of men;

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new;
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do.

For I dipped into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be; 120

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails, Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nation's airy navies grappling
in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the southwind rushing warm, 125
With the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunder-storm;

Till the war-drum throbbed no longer,
and the battle-flags were furled
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world.

There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapped
in universal law. 130

So I triumphed ere my passion sweeping through me left me dry, Left me with the palsied heart, and left me with the jaundiced eye;

Eye, to which all order festers, all things here are out of joint.
Science moves, but slowly, slowly, creeping on from point to point;

Slowly comes a hungry people, as a lion,
creeping nigher, 135 Glares at one that nods and winks behind a slowly-dying fire.

Yet I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns.

What is that to him that reaps not harvest of his youthful joys,
Though the deep heart of existence beat for ever like a boy's? 140

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and
I linger on the shore,
And the individual withers, and the world is more and more.

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and
 he bears a laden breast, Full of sad experience, moving toward the stillness of his rest.

Hark, my merry comrades call me, sounding on the bugle-horn, 145
 They to whom my foolish passion were a target for their scorn.

Shall it not be scorn to me to harp on such a mouldered string?
 I am shamed through all my nature to have loved so slight a thing.

Weakness to be wroth with weakness!
 woman's pleasure, woman's pain—
 Nature made them blinder motions bounded in a shallower brain: 150

Woman is the lesser man, and all thy passions, matched with mine,
 Are as moonlight unto sunlight and as water unto wine—

Here, at least, where nature sickens, nothing. Ah, for some retreat Deep in yonder shining Orient, where my life began to beat,

Where in wild Mahratta-battle fell my father evil-starred;— 155
 I was left a trampled orphan, and a selfish uncle's ward.

Or to burst all links of habit—there to wander far away,
 On from island unto island at the gateways of the day.

Larger constellations burning, mellow
 moons and happy skies, Breadths of tropic shade and palms in cluster, knots of Paradise. 160

Never comes the trader, never floats an European flag,
 Slides the bird o'er lustrous woodland,
 swings the trailer from the crag;

Droops the heavy-blossomed bower, hangs
 the heavy-fruited tree—Summer isles of Eden lying in dark purple spheres of sea.

There methinks would be enjoyment more than in this march of mind, 165
 In the steamship, in the railway, in the thoughts that shake mankind.

There the passions cramped no longer shall have scope and breathing space;
 I will take some savage woman, she shall rear my dusky race.

Iron-jointed, supple-sinewed, they shall dive, and they shall run, Catch the wild goat by the hair, and hurl their lances in the sun; 170

Whistle back the parrot's call, and leap
 the rainbows of the brooks,
 Not with blinded eyesight poring over miserable books—

Fool, again the dream, the fancy! but I know my words are wild,
 But I count the gray barbarian lower than the Christian child.

I, to herd with narrow foreheads, vacant of our glorious gains, 175
 Like a beast with lower pleasures, like a beast with lower pains!

Mated with a squalid savage—what to me were sun or clime!
 I the heir of all the ages, in the foremost files of time—

I that rather held it better men should perish one by one,
 Than that earth should stand at gaze like Joshua's moon in Ajalon! 180

Not in vain the distance beacons. Forward, forward let us range, Let the great world spin for ever down
 the ringing grooves of change.

Through the shadow of the globe we sweep into the younger day;
 Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.

Mother-Age,— for mine I knew not,— help me as when life begun; 185 Rift the hills, and roll the waters, flash
 the lightnings, weigh the sun.

Oh, I see the crescent promise of my spirit hath not set.
Ancient founts of inspiration well through all my fancy yet.

Howsoever these things be, a long farewell to Locksley Hall!

Now for me the woods may wither, now for me the roof-tree fall. 190

Comes a vapor from the margin, blackening over heath and holt, Cramming all the blast before it, in its breast a thunderbolt.

Let it fall on Locksley Hall, with rain or hail, or fire or snow;
For the mighty wind arises, roaring seaward, and I go.

BREAK, BREAK, BREAK

Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O Sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

O well for the fisherman's boy, 5
That he shouts with his sister at play!
O well for the sailor lad,
That he sings in his boat on the bay!

And the stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill; 10
But O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Break, break, break,
At the foot of thy crags, O Sea!
But the tender grace of a day that is
dead 15
Will never come back to me.

SONGS from THE PRINCESS

BUGLE SONG

The splendor falls on castle walls
And snowy summits old in story;
The long light shakes across the lakes,
And the wild cataract leaps in glory.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes fly-
ing, 5
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O, hark, O, hear! how thin and clear,
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O, sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing! 10
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying;
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying,
dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky,
They faint on hill or field or river;
Our echoes roll from soul to soul, 15
And grow for ever and for ever.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes fly-
ing,
And answer, echoes, answer, dying, dying,
dying.

TEARS, IDLE TEARS

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine
despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no
more. 5

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a
sail,
That brings our friends up from the under-
world,
Sad as the last which reddens over one That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no
more. 10

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering
square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no
more. 15

Dear as remembered kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy
feigned
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
O Death in Life, the days that are no
more!

HOME THEY BROUGHT HER WAR-RIOR DEAD

Home they brought her warrior dead;
 She nor swooned nor uttered cry:
 All her maidens, watching, said,
 "She must weep or she will die."

Then they praised him, soft and low, 5
 Called him worthy to be loved,
 Truest friend and noblest foe;
 Yet she neither spoke nor moved.

Stole a maiden from her place,
 Lightly to the warrior stepped, 10
 Took the face-cloth from the face;
 Yet she neither moved nor wept.

Rose a nurse of ninety years,
 Set his child upon her knee—
 Like summer tempest came her tears— 15
 "Sweet my child, I live for thee."

IN MEMORIAM A. H. H.

OBIIT MDCCCXXXIII

Strong Son of God, immortal Love, Whom we, that have not seen thy
 face,
 By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
 Believing where we cannot prove;

Thine are these orbs of light and shade; 5
 Thou madest Life in man and brute;
 Thou madest Death; and lo, thy foot
 Is on the skull which thou hast made.

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
 Thou madest man, he knows not why, 10
 He thinks he was not made to die;
 And thou hast made him: thou art just.

Thou seemest human and divine,
 The highest, holiest manhood, thou.
 Our wills are ours, we know not how; 15
 Our wills are ours, to make them thine.

We have but faith: we cannot know;
 For knowledge is of things we see;
 And yet we trust it comes from thee,
 A beam in darkness: let it grow.

Let knowledge grow from more to more, 25
 But more of reverence in us dwell;
 That mind and soul, according well,
 May make one music as before,

But vaster. We are fools and slight;
 We mock thee when we do not fear: 30
 But help thy foolish ones to bear;
 Help thy vain worlds to bear thy light.

Forgive what seemed my sin in me;
 What seemed my worth since I began;
 For merit lives from man to man, 35
 And not from man, O Lord, to thee.

Forgive my grief for one removed,
 Thy creature, whom I found so fair.
 I trust he lives in thee, and there
 I find him worthier to be loved. 40

Forgive these wild and wandering cries,
 Confusions of a wasted youth;
 Forgive them where they fail in
 truth,
 And in thy wisdom make me wise.

LXXXVI

Sweet after showers, ambrosial air,
 That rollest from the gorgeous gloom
 Of evening over brake and bloom
 And meadow, slowly breathing bare

The round of space, and rapt below 5
 Through all the dewy tasselled wood,
 And shadowing down the horned
 flood
 In ripples, fan my brows and blow

The fever from my cheek, and sigh
 The full new life that feeds thy breath 10
 Throughout my frame, till Doubt and
 Death,
 Ill brethren, let the fancy fly

From belt to belt of crimson seas
 On leagues of odor streaming far.
 To where in yonder orient star 15
 A hundred spirits whisper "Peace."

LXXXVIII

Wild bird, whose warble, liquid sweet,
Rings Eden through the budded quicks,
O tell me where the senses mix,
O tell me where the passions meet,

Whence radiate: fierce extremes employ 5
Thy spirits in the darkening leaf,
And in the midmost heart of grief
Thy passion clasps a secret joy;

And I—my harp would prelude woe—
I cannot all command the strings; 10
The glory of the sum of things
Will flash along the chords and go.

CVI

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light:
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new, 5
Ring, happy bells, across the snow:
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more; 10
Ring out the feud of rich and poor;
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life, 15
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in. 20

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease; 25
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand; 30
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

CXV

Now fades the last long streak of snow,
Now burgeons¹ every maze of quick
About the flowering squares,² and thick
By ashen roots the violets blow.

Now rings the woodland loud and long, 5
The distance takes a lovelier hue,
And drowned in yonder living blue
The lark becomes a sightless song.

Now dance the lights on lawn and lea,
The flocks are whiter down the vale, 10
And milkier every milky sail
On winding stream or distant sea;

Where now the seamew pipes, or dives
In yonder greening gleam, and fly
The happy birds, that change their sky 15
To build and brood; that live their lives

From land to land; and in my breast
Spring wakens too, and my regret Becomes an April violet,
And buds and blossoms like the rest. 20

CXXVI

Love is and was my lord and king,
And in his presence I attend
To hear the tidings of my friend,
Which every hour the couriers bring.

Love is and was my king and lord, 5
And will be, though as yet I keep Within the court on earth, and sleep
Encompassed by his faithful guard,

And hear at times a sentinel
Who moves about from place to place, 10
And whispers to the worlds of space,
In the deep night, that all is well.

CXXXI

O living will that shalt endure
When all that seems shall suffer shock,
Rise in the spiritual rock,
Flow through our deeds and make them
pure,

¹ blossoms.

That we may lift from out of dust 5
 A voice as unto him that hears,
 A cry above the conquered years
 To one that with us works, and trust,
 With faith that comes of self-control,
 The truths that never can be proved 10
 Until we close with all we loved,
 And all we flow from, soul in soul.

THE EAGLE

He clasps the crag with crooked hands;
 Close to the sun in lonely lands,
 Ringed with the azure world, he stands.

The wrinkled sea beneath him crawls;
 He watches from his mountain walls, 5
 And like a thunderbolt he falls.

From MAUD

XVIII

I have led her home, my love, my only
 friend.
 There is none like her, none.
 And never yet so warmly ran my blood
 And sweetly, on and on Calming itself to the long-wished-for end, 5
 Full to the banks, close on the promised good.

None like her, none.
 Just now the dry-tongued laurels' pattering talk Seemed her light foot along the garden walk,
 And shook my heart to think she comes
 once more; 10
 But even then I heard her close the door;
 The gates of Heaven are closed, and she
 is gone.

There is none like her, none,
 Nor will be when our summers have deceased.
 O, art thou sighing for Lebanon 15
 In the long breeze that streams to thy delicious East,

Upon a pastoral slope as fair,
 And looking to the South, and fed 20
 With honeyed rain and delicate air,
 And haunted by the starry head
 Of her whose gentle will has changed my
 fate,
 And made my life a perfumed altar-
 flame,
 And over whom thy darkness must have
 spread 25
 With such delight as theirs of old, thy great
 Forefathers of the thornless garden, there Shadowing the snow-limbed Eve from whom she came?

Here will I lie, while these long branches
 sway,
 And you fair stars that crown a happy day
 Go in and out as if at merry play, 31
 Who am no more so all forlorn,
 As when it seemed far better to be born
 To labor and the mattock-hardened hand Than nursed at ease and brought to understand 35
 A sad astrology, the boundless plan
 That makes you tyrants in your iron skies,
 Innumerable, pitiless, passionless eyes,
 Cold fires, yet with power to burn and
 brand
 His nothingness into man. 40

But now shine on, and what care I,
 Who in this stormy gulf have found a pearl
 The countercharm of space and hollow sky,
 And do accept my madness, and would
 die
 To save from some slight shame one simple girl?— 45

Would die; for sullen-seeming Death may give
 More life to Love than is or ever was In our low world, where yet 'tis sweet to live.
 Let no one ask me how it came to pass;
 It seems that I am happy, that to me 50
 A livelier emerald twinkles in the grass,
 A purer sapphire melts into the sea.

Not die; but live a life of truest breath,
 And teach true life to fight with mortal wrongs.

O, why should Love, like men in drinking
songs, 55
Spice his fair banquet with the dust of
death?
Make answer, Maud my bliss, Maud made my Maud by that long loving
kiss;
Life of my life, wilt thou not answer this?
"The dusky strand of Death inwoven here
With dear Love's tie, makes Love himself more dear." 61

Is that enchanted moan only the swell
Of the long waves that roll in yonder bay?
And hark the clock within, the silver knell
Of twelve sweet hours that passed in bridal
white, 65
And died to live, long as my pulses play;
But now by this my love has closed her
sight,
And given false death her hand, and stolen
away
To dreamful wastes where footless fancies
dwell
Among the fragments of the golden day.
May nothing there her maiden grace af-
fright! 71
Dear heart, I feel with thee the drowsy
spell.
My bride to be, my evermore delight,
My own heart's heart, my ownest own,
farewell;
It is but for a little space I go, 75
And ye meanwhile far over moor and fell
Beat to the noiseless music of the night!
Has our whole earth gone nearer to the
glow
Of your soft splendors that you look so
bright?
I have climbed nearer out of lonely Hell.
Beat, happy stars, timing with things be-
low, 81
Beat with my heart more blest than heart can tell,
Blest, but for some dark undercurrent woe
That seems to draw—but it shall not be
so;
Let all be well, be well. 85

XXII

Come into the garden, Maud,
For the black bat, night, has flown;
Come into the garden, Maud,
I am here at the gate alone;

And the woodbine spices are wafted
abroad, 5
And the musk of the rose is blown.

For a breeze of morning moves,
And the planet of love is on high,
Beginning to faint in the light that she loves
On a bed of daffodil sky, 10
To faint in the light of the sun she loves,
To faint in his light, and to die.

All night have the roses heard
The flute, violin, bassoon;
All night has the casement jessamine stirred 15
To the dancers dancing in tune;
Till a silence fell with the waking bird,
And a hush with the setting moon.

I said to the lily, "There is but one,
With whom she has heart to be gay. 20
When will the dancers leave her alone?
She is weary of dance and play."
Now half to the setting moon are gone,
And half to the rising day;
Low on the sand and loud on the stone 25
The last wheel echoes away.

I said to the rose, "The brief night goes
In babble and revel and wine.
O young lord-lover, what sighs are those,
For one that will never be thine? 30
But mine, but mine," so I sware to the
rose,
"For ever and ever, mine."

And the soul of the rose went into my
blood,
As the music clashed in the hall;
And long by the garden lake I stood, 35
For I heard your rivulet fall From the lake to the meadow and on to the wood,
Our wood, that is dearer than all;

From the meadow your walks have left so sweet
That whenever a March-wind sighs 40
He sets the jewel-print of your feet
In violets blue as your eyes,
To the woody hollows in which we meet
And the valleys of Paradise.

The slender acacia would not shake 45
 One long milk-bloom on the tree;
 The white lake-blossom fell into the lake
 As the pimpernel dozed on the lea;
 But the rose was awake all night for your
 sake,
 Knowing your promise to me; 50
 The lilies and roses were all awake,
 They sighed for the dawn and thee.

Queen rose of the rosebud garden of girls,
 Come hither, the dances are done,
 In gloss of satin and glimmer of pearls, 55
 Queen lily and rose in one;
 Shine out, little head, sunning over with curls,
 To the flowers, and be their sun.

There has fallen a splendid tear
 From the passion-flower at the gate, 60
 She is coming, my dove, my dear;
 She is coming, my life, my fate.
 The red rose cries, "She is near, she is near;"
 And the white rose weeps, "She is late;"
 The larkspur listens, "I hear, I hear;" 65
 And the lily whispers, "I wait."

She is coming, my own, my sweet;
 Were it ever so airy a tread,
 My heart would hear her and beat,
 Were it earth in an earthy bed; 70
 My dust would hear her and beat,
 Had I lain for a century dead,
 Would start and tremble under her feet,
 And blossom in purple and red.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE

Half a league, half a league,
 Half a league onward,
 All in the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.
 "Forward, the Light Brigade!" 5
 Charge for the guns!" he said.
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

"Forward, the Light Brigade!"
 Was there a man dismayed? 10
 Not though the soldier knew
 Some one had blundered.

Theirs not to make reply,
 Theirs not to reason why,
 Theirs but to do and die. 15
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them,
 Cannon in front of them 20
 Volleyed and thundered;
 Stormed at with shot and shell,
 Boldly they rode and well,
 Into the jaws of Death,
 Into the mouth of Hell 25
 Rode the six hundred.

Flashed all their sabres bare,
 Flashed as they turned in air
 Sabring the gunners there,
 Charging an army, while 30
 All the world wondered:
 Plunged in the battery-smoke
 Right through the line they broke;
 Cossack and Russian Reeled from the sabre-stroke 35
 Shattered and sundered.
 Then they rode back, but not,
 Not the six hundred.

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them, 40
 Cannon behind them
 Volleyed and thundered;
 Stormed at with shot and shell,
 While horse and hero fell,
 They that had fought so well 45
 Came through the jaws of Death,
 Back from the mouth of Hell,
 All that was left of them,
 Left of six hundred.

When can their glory fade? 50
 O the wild charge they made!
 All the world wondered.
 Honor the charge they made!
 Honor the Light Brigade,
 Noble six hundred! 55

NORTHERN FARMER

OLD STYLE

Wheer 'asta beän saw long and meä liggin'¹
 'ere aloän?
 Noörse? thourt nowt o' a noorse; whoy,
 Doctor's abeän an' agoän;
¹ lying.

Says that I moänt 'a naw moor aäle, but I
beänt a fool;
Git ma my aäle, fur I beänt a-gawin' to breäk my rule.

Doctors, they knaws nowt, fur a says
what's nawways true;
Naw soort o' koind o' use to saäy the things that a do.
I've 'ed my point o' aäle ivry noight sin' I beän ere,
An' I've 'ed my quart ivry market-noight for foorty year.

Parson's a beän loikewise, an' a sittin'
ere o' my bed.
"The Amoighty's a taäkin o' you to 'issén,¹ my friend," a said,
An' a tow'd ma my sins, an' 's toithe were due, an' I gied it in hond;
I done moy duty boy 'um, as I 'a doné boy
the lond.

Larn'd a ma' beä. I reckons I 'annot sa mooch to larn.
But a cast oop, thot a did, 'bout Bessy
Marris's barne.²
Thaw a knaws I hallus voated wi' Squoire
an' choorch an' staäte,
An' i' the woost o' toimes I wur niver agin
the raäte.³

An' I hallus coom'd to's choorch afor
moy Sally wur deä'd,
An' 'eärd 'um a bummin' awaäy loike a buzzard-clock⁴ ower my 'eä'd,
An' I niver knaw'd whot a meän'd but I
thowt a 'ad summut to saäy,
An' I thowt a said whot a owt to 'a said,
an' I coom'd awaäy.

Bessy Marris's barne! tha knaws she laäid
it to meä.

Mowt a beän, mayhap, for she wur a bad
un, sheä.
'Siver,⁵ I kep 'um, I kep 'um, my lass, tha
mun understand;
I done moy duty boy 'um, as I 'a done boy
the lond.

But Parson a cooms an' a goäs, an' a says
it eäsy an' freeä:
"The Amoighty's a taäkin o' you to 'issén,
my friend," says 'eä.

¹ himself.
⁴ cockchafer.

² bairn, child.
⁵ howsoever.

³ tax.

I weänt saäy men be loiars, thaw summun
said it in 'aäste;
But 'e reaäds wonn sarmin a weeäk, an' I
'a stubb'd⁶ Thurnaby waäste.

D' ya moind the waäste, my lass? naw,
naw, tha was not born then;
Theer wur a boggle⁷ in it, I often 'eärd
'um mysén;
Moäst loike a butter-bump,⁸ fur I 'eärd
'um about an' about,
But I stubb'd 'um oop wi' the lot, an'
raaved⁹ an' rembled¹⁰ 'um out.

Keäper's it wur; fo' they fun 'um theer
a-laäid of 'is faace Down i' the woild 'enemies¹¹ äfoor I coom'd to the plaäce.
Noäks or Thimbleby—toäner¹² 'ed shot
'um as deä'd as a naäil.
Noäks wur 'ang'd for it oop at 'soize¹³—
but git ma my aäle.

Dubbut looök at the waäste; theer
warn't not feeä'd for a cow;
Nowt at all but bracken an' fuzz,¹⁴ an'
looök at it now—
Warn't worth nowt a haäcre, an' now
theer's lots o' feeä'd, Fourscoor yows¹⁵ upon it, an' some on it down i' seeä'd.

Nobbut a bit on it's left, an' I meän'd to
'a stubb'd it at fall, Done it ta-year¹⁶ I meän'd, an' runn'd plow thruff it an' all,
If Godamoighty an' parson 'ud nobbut
let ma aloän,— Meä, wi' haäte hoonderd haäcre o'
Squoire's, an lond o' my oän.

Do Godamoighty know what a's doing a-taäkin' o' meä?
I beänt wonn as saws 'ere a beän an yonder
a peä;
An' Squoire u'll be sa mad an' all—a' dear,
a' dear!
And I 'a managed for Squoire coom Michaelmas thutty year.

⁶ cleared.

⁹ tore up

¹¹ anemones

¹³ the assizes.

¹⁵ ewes.

⁷ bogle, ghost.

⁸ bittern.

¹⁰ routed out

¹² one or the other

¹⁴ furze.

¹⁶ this year.

A mowt 'a taäen owd Joänes, as 'ant not a
'ääpoth¹ o' sense,
Or a mowt a' taäen young Robins—a niver mended a fence; 50
But Godamoighty a moost taäke meä an'
taäke ma now,
Wi' aäf the cows to cauve an' Thurnaby hoalms² to plow!

Looök 'ow quoloty smoiles when they secäs
ma a passin' boy, Says to thessén, naw doubt, "What a man a beä sewerloy!"
Fur they knaws what I beän to Squoire sin' fust a coom'd to the 'All; 55
I done moy duty by Squoire an' I done
moy duty boy hall.

Squoire's i' Lunnon, an' summun I reckons
'ull 'a to wroite,
For whoä's to howd the lond ater meä thot
muddles³ ma quoit;
Sartin-sewer I beä thot a weänt niver give it to Joänes,
Naw, nor a moänt to Robins—a niver
rembles the stoäns. 60

But summun 'ull come ater meä mayhap
wi' 'is kittle o' steäm Huzzin'⁴ an' maäzin'⁵ the blessed feälds
wi' the Divil's oän teäm.
Sin' I mun doy I mun doy, thaw loife
they says is sweet,
But sin' I mun doy I mun doy, for I couldn abeär to see it.

What atta stannin' theer fur, an' doesn bring ma the aäle? 65 Doctor's a 'toättler,⁶ lass, an a's hallus i'
the owd taäle;
I weänt breäk rules fur Doctor, a knaws
naw moor nor a floy;
Git ma my aäle, I tell tha, an' if I mun
doy I mun doy.

THE HIGHER PANTHEISM

The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas,
the hills and the plains—
Are not these, O Soul, the Vision of Him who reigns?

¹ halfpennyworth
⁴ buzzing.

² river-flats.
⁵ amazing.

³ perplexes.
⁶ a "tee-totaller."

Is not the Vision He, though He be not that which He seems?
Dreams are true while they last, and do we not live in dreams?

Earth, these solid stars, this weight of body and limb, 5
Are they not sign and symbol of thy division from Him?

Dark is the world to thee; thyself art
the reason why;
For is He not all but thou, that hast power to feel "I am I"?

Glory about thee, without thee; and thou fulfillest thy doom, Making Him broken gleams, and a stifled splendor and gloom. 10

Speak to Him, thou, for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet—Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

God is law, say the wise; O Soul, and let us rejoice,
For if He thunder by law the thunder is yet His voice.

Law is God, say some: no God at all, says
the fool; 15
For all we have power to see is a straight staff bent in a pool;

And the ear of man cannot hear, and the eye of man cannot see;
But if we could see and hear, this Vision—
were it not He?

FLOWER IN THE CRANNIED WALL

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
I hold you here, root and all, in my
hand,
Little flower—but if I could understand What you are, root and all, and all in
all, 5
I should know what God and man is.

THE REVENGE

A BALLAD OF THE FLEET

I

At Flores in the Azores Sir Richard Grenville lay,
 And a pinnace, like a fluttered bird, came flying from far away:
 "Spanish ships of war at sea! we have sighted fifty-three!"
 Then swore Lord Thomas Howard: "'Fore God, I am no coward;
 But I cannot meet them here, for my ships are out of gear,
 And the half my men are sick. I must fly, but follow quick.
 We are six ships of the line; can we fight with fifty-three?"

II

Then spake Sir Richard Grenville: "I know you are no coward;
 You fly them for a moment to fight with them again.
 But I've ninety men and more that are lying sick ashore.
 I should count myself the coward if I left them, my Lord Howard,
 To these Inquisition dogs and the devil-doms of Spain."

III

So Lord Howard passed away with five ships of war that day, Till he melted like a cloud in the silent summer heaven;
 But Sir Richard bore in hand all his sick men from the land
 Very carefully and slow,
 Men of Bideford in Devon,
 And we laid them on the ballast down below:
 For we brought them all aboard,
 And they blessed him in their pain, that they were not left to Spain,
 To the thumb-screw and the stake, for the glory of the Lord.

IV

He had only a hundred seamen to work the ship and to fight,
 And he sailed away from Flores till the Spaniard came in sight,
 With his huge sea-castles heaving upon the weather bow.

"Shall we fight or shall we fly?
 Good Sir Richard, tell us now,
 For to fight is but to die!
 There'll be little of us left by the time this sun be set."
 And Sir Richard said again: "We be all good English men.
 Let us bang these dogs of Seville, the children of the devil,
 For I never turned my back upon Don or devil yet."

V

Sir Richard spoke and he laughed, and we roared a hurrah, and so
 The little Revenge ran on sheer into the heart of the foe,
 With her hundred fighters on deck, and her ninety sick below;
 For half of their fleet to the right and half to the left were seen,
 And the little Revenge ran on through the long sea-lane between.

VI

Thousands of their soldiers looked down from their decks and laughed,
 Thousands of their seamen made mock at the mad little craft
 Running on and on, till delayed
 By their mountain-like San Philip that, of fifteen hundred tons,
 And up-shadowing high above us with her yawning tiers of guns,
 Took the breath from our sails, and we stayed.

VII

And while now the great San Philip hung above us like a cloud Whence the thunderbolt will fall
 Long and loud,
 Four galleons drew away
 From the Spanish fleet that day,
 And two upon the larboard and two upon the starboard lay,
 And the battle-thunder broke from them all.

VIII

But anon the great San Philip, she be-thought herself and went,
 Having that within her womb that had left her ill content;

And the rest they came aboard us, and they fought us hand to hand,
For a dozen times they came with their pikes and musqueteers,
And a dozen times we shook 'em off as a dog that shakes his ears 54
When he leaps from the water to the land.

IX

And the sun went down, and the stars came out far over the summer sea,
But never a moment ceased the fight of the one and the fifty-three.
Ship after ship, the whole night long, their high-built galleons came,
Ship after ship, the whole night long, with her battle-thunder and flame:
Ship after ship, the whole night long, drew back with her dead and her shame. 60
For some were sunk and many were shattered, and so could fight no more—God of battles, was ever a battle like this in the world before?

X

For he said, "Fight on! fight on!"
Though his vessel was all but a wreck;
And it chanced that, when half of the short summer night was gone, 65
With a grisly wound to be dressed he had left the deck,
But a bullet struck him that was dressing
it suddenly dead,
And himself he was wounded again in the side and the head,
And he said, "Fight on! fight on!"

XI

And the night went down, and the sun smiled out far over the summer sea, 70
And the Spanish fleet with broken sides lay round us all in a ring;
But they dared not touch us again, for they feared that we still could sting,
So they watched what the end would be.
And we had not fought them in vain,
But in perilous plight were we, 75
Seeing forty of our poor hundred were slain,
And half of the rest of us maimed for life
In the crash of the cannonades and the desperate strife:
And the sick men down in the hold were most of them stark and cold,

And the pikes were all broken or bent,
and the powder was all of it spent; 80
And the masts and the rigging were lying over the side;
But Sir Richard cried in his English
pride:

"We have fought such a fight for a day and a night

As may never be fought again!

We have won great glory, my men! 85

And a day less or more

At sea or ashore,

We die—does it matter when?

Sink me the ship, Master Gunner—sink her, split her in twain!

Fall into the hands of God, not into the hands of Spain!" 90

XII

And the gunner said, "Ay, ay," but the seamen made reply:

"We have children, we have wives,

And the Lord hath spared our lives.

We will make the Spaniard promise, if we yield, to let us go;

We shall live to fight again and to strike
another blow." 95

And the lion there lay dying, and they yielded to the foe.

XIII

And the stately Spanish men to their flagship bore him then,

Where they laid him by the mast, old Sir
Richard caught at last,

And they praised him to his face with their courtly foreign grace;

But he rose upon their decks, and he cried:
"I have fought for Queen and Faith like a valiant man and true; 101

I have only done my duty as a man is bound to do.

With a joyful spirit I Sir Richard Grenville die!"

And he fell upon their decks, and he died.

XIV

And they stared at the dead that had been so valiant and true, 105

And had holden the power and glory of Spain so cheap

That he dared her with one little ship and his English few;

Was he devil or man? He was devil for aught they knew,

But they sank his body with honor down into the deep,
 And they manned the Revenge with a swarthier alien crew, ¹¹⁰
 And away she sailed with her loss and longed for her own;
 When a wind from the lands they had ruined awoke from sleep,
 And the water began to heave and the weather to moan,
 And or ever that evening ended a great
 gale blew,
 And a wave like the wave that is raised by an earthquake grew, ¹¹⁵
 Till it smote on their hulls and their sails and their masts and their flags,
 And the whole sea plunged and fell on the shot-shattered navy of Spain,
 And the little Revenge herself went down
 by the island crags
 To be lost evermore in the main.

RIZPAH

17—

I

Wailing, wailing, wailing, the wind over land and sea—
 And Willy's voice in the wind, "O mother, come out to me!"
 Why should he call me to-night, when he knows that I cannot go?
 For the downs are as bright as day, and the full moon stares at the snow.

II

We should be seen, my dear; they would spy us out of the town. ⁵
 The loud black nights for us, and the storm rushing over the down,
 When I cannot see my own hand, but am led by the creak of the chain,
 And grovel and grope for my son till I find myself drenched with the rain.

III

Anything fallen again? nay—what was there left to fall?
 I have taken them home, I have numbered the bones, I have hidden them all. ¹⁰
 What am I saying? and what are you? do you come as a spy?
 Falls? what falls? who knows? As the tree falls so must it lie.

IV

Who let her in? how long has she been?
 you—what have you heard?
 Why did you sit so quiet? you never have spoken a word.
 O—to pray with me—yes—a lady—none of their spies— ¹⁵
 But the night has crept into my heart,
 and begun to darken my eyes.

V

Ah—you, that have lived so soft, what should you know of the night,
 The blast and the burning shame and the bitter frost and the fright?
 I have done it, while you were asleep—
 you were only made for the day.
 I have gathered my baby together—and now you may go your way. ²⁰

VI

Nay—for it's kind of you, madam, to sit by an old dying wife.
 But say nothing hard of my boy, I have only an hour of life.
 I kissed my boy in the prison, before he went out to die.
 "They dared me to do it," he said, and he never has told me a lie.
 I whipped him for robbing an orchard once when he was but a child— ²⁵
 "The farmer dared me to do it," he said;
 he was always so wild—
 And idle—and couldn't be idle—my Willy
 —he never could rest.
 The King should have made him a soldier,
 he would have been one of his best.

VII

But he lived with a lot of wild mates, and they never would let him be good;
 They swore that he dare not rob the mail,
 and he swore that he would; ³⁰
 And he took no life, but he took one purse, and when all was done
 He flung it among his fellows—"I'll none of it," said my son.

VIII

I came into court to the judge and the lawyers. I told them my tale, God's own truth—but they killed him,
 they killed him for robbing the mail.

They hanged him in chains for a show—
 we had always borne a good name—35
 To be hanged for a thief—and then put away—isn't that enough shame?
 Dust to dust—low down—let us hide! but they set him so high That all the ships of the world could stare at him, passing by.
 God 'ill pardon the hell-black raven and horrible fowls of the air,
 But not the black heart of the lawyer who killed him and hanged him there. 40

IX

And the jailer forced me away. I had bid him my last good-bye;
 They had fastened the door of his cell.
 "O mother!" I heard him cry.
 I couldn't get back though I tried, he had something further to say,
 And now I never shall know it. The jailer forced me away.

X

Then since I couldn't but hear that cry of my boy that was dead, 45
 They seized me and shut me up: they fastened me down on my bed.
 "Mother, O mother!"—he called in the dark to me year after year—
 They beat me for that, they beat me—
 you know that I couldn't but hear;
 And then at the last they found I had grown so stupid and still They let me abroad again—but the creatures had worked their will. 50

XI

Flesh of my flesh was gone, but bone of my bone was left—
 I stole them all from the lawyers—and you, will you call it a theft?—
 My baby, the bones that had sucked me, the bones that had laughed and had
 cried—
 Theirs? O, no! they are mine—not theirs
 —they had moved in my side.

XII

Do you think I was scared by the bones? I kissed 'em, I buried 'em all— 55
 I can't dig deep, I am old—in the night by the churchyard wall.

My Willy 'ill rise up whole when the trumpet of judgment 'ill sound,
 But I charge you never to say that I laid him in holy ground.

XIII

They would scratch him up—they would hang him again on the cursèd tree.
 Sin? O, yes, we are sinners, I know—let all that be, 60
 And read me a Bible verse of the Lord's goodwill toward men—
 "Full of compassion and mercy, the Lord"—let me hear it again;
 "Full of compassion and mercy—long-suffering." Yes, O, yes!
 For the lawyer is born but to murder—
 the Savior lives but to bless.
 He 'll never put on the black cap except for the worst of the worst, 65
 And the first may be last—I have heard it in church—and the last may be first.
 Suffering—O, long-suffering—yes, as the Lord must know,
 Year after year in the mist and the wind
 and the shower and the snow.

XIV

Heard, have you? what? they have told you he never repented his sin.
 How do they know it? are they his mother?
 are you of his kin? 70 Heard! have you ever heard, when the storm on the downs began,
 The wind that 'ill wail like a child and the sea that 'ill moan like a man?

XV

Election, Election, and Reprobation—it's all very well.
 But I go to-night to my boy, and I shall not find him in hell.
 For I cared so much for my boy that the Lord has looked into my care, 75
 And He means me I'm sure to be happy with Willy, I know not where.

XVI

And if he be lost—but to save my soul, that is all your desire—
 Do you think that I care for my soul if my boy be gone to the fire?

I have been with God in the dark—go, go,
 you may leave me alone—
 You never have borne a child—you are just as hard as a stone. 80

XVII

Madam, I beg your pardon! I think that you mean to be kind,
 But I cannot hear what you say for my Willy's voice in the wind—
 The snow and the sky so bright—he used but to call in the dark,
 And he calls to me now from the church
 and not from the gibbet—for hark!
 Nay—you can hear it yourself—it is coming—shaking the walls— 85 Willy—the moon 's in a cloud—Goodnight. I am going. He calls.

BY AN EVOLUTIONIST

The Lord let the house of a brute to the soul of a man,
 And the man said, "Am I your debtor?"
 And the Lord—"Not yet: but make it as clean as you can,
 And then I will let you a better."

I

If my body come from brutes, my soul uncertain or a fable, 5
 Why not bask amid the senses while the sun of morning shines,
 I, the finer brute rejoicing in my hounds,
 and in my stable,
 Youth and health, and birth and wealth,
 and choice of women and of wines?

II

What hast thou done for me, grim Old Age,
 save breaking my bones on the rack?
 Would I had passed in the morning that looks so bright from afar! 10

OLD AGE

Done for thee? starved the wild beast that was linked with thee eighty years back.
 Less weight now for the ladder of heaven that hangs on a star.

I

If my body come from brutes, though somewhat finer than their own,
 I am heir, and this my kingdom. Shall the royal voice be mute?
 No, but if the rebel subject seek to drag me from the throne, 15 Hold the sceptre, Human Soul, and rule thy province of the brute.

II

I have climbed to the snows of Age, and
 I gazed at a field in the Past, Where I sank with the body at times in the sloughs of a low desire,
 But I hear no yelp of the beast, and the Man is quiet at last
 As he stands on the heights of his life with a glimpse of a height that is higher. 20

MERLIN AND THE GLEAM

I

O young Mariner,
 You from the haven
 Under the sea-cliff,
 You that are watching
 The gray Magician 5
 With eyes of wonder,
 I am Merlin,
 And I am dying,
 I am Merlin
 Who follow The Gleam. 10

II

Mighty the Wizard
 Who found me at sunrise
 Sleeping, and woke me
 And learned me Magic!
 Great the Master, 15
 And sweet the Magic,
 When over the valley,
 In early summers,
 Over the mountain,
 On human faces, 20
 And all around me,
 Moving to melody,
 Floated The Gleam.

III

Once at the croak of a Raven who crossed it,
 A barbarous people, 25
 Blind to the magic,

And deaf to the melody,
 Snarled at and cursed me.
 A demon vexed me,
 The light retreated, 30
 The landskip¹ darkened,
 The melody deadened,
 The Master whispered
 "Follow The Gleam."

IV

Then to the melody, 35
 Over a wilderness
 Gliding, and glancing at Elf of the woodland,
 Gnome of the cavern,
 Griffin and Giant, 40
 And dancing of Fairies
 In desolate hollows,
 And wraiths of the mountain,
 And rolling of dragons
 By warble of water, 45
 Or cataract music
 Of falling torrents, Flitted The Gleam.

V

Down from the mountain
 And over the level, 50
 And streaming and shining on Silent river,
 Silvery willow,
 Pasture and plowland,
 Horses and oxen, 55
 Innocent maidens,
 Garrulous children,
 Homestead and harvest,
 Reaper and gleaner,
 And rough-ruddy faces 60
 Of lowly labor,
 Slided The Gleam.—

VI

Then, with a melody
 Stronger and statelier,
 Led me at length 65
 To the city and palace
 Of Arthur the king;
 Touched at the golden
 Cross of the churches,
 Flashed on the Tournament 70
 Flickered and bickered
 From helmet to helmet,

¹ landscape.

And last on the forehead
 Of Arthur the blameless Rested The Gleam. 75

VII

Clouds and darkness
 Closed upon Camelot;
 Arthur had vanished
 I knew not whither,
 The king who loved me, 80
 And cannot die;
 For out of the darkness
 Silent and slowly
 The Gleam, that had waned to a wintry glimmer
 On icy fallow 85
 And faded forest,
 Drew to the valley
 Named of the shadow,
 And slowly brightening
 Out of the glimmer, 90
 And slowly moving again to a melody
 Yearningly tender,
 Fell on the shadow,
 No longer a shadow,
 But clothed with The Gleam. 95

VIII

And broader and brighter
 The Gleam flying onward,
 Wed to the melody,
 Sang through the world;
 And slower and fainter, 100
 Old and weary,
 But eager to follow,
 I saw, whenever
 In passing it glanced upon Hamlet or city, 105
 That under the Crosses
 The dead man's garden,
 The mortal hillock,
 Would break into blossom;
 And so to the land's 110
 Last limit I came—
 And can no longer,
 But die rejoicing,
 For through the Magic
 Of Him the Mighty, 115
 Who taught me in childhood,
 There on the border
 Of boundless Ocean,
 And all but in Heaven
 Hovers The Gleam. 120

IX

Not of the sunlight,
 Not of the moonlight,
 Not of the starlight!
 O young Mariner,
 Down to the haven,
 Call your companions,
 Launch your vessel,
 And crowd your canvas,
 And, ere it vanishes
 Over the margin,
 After it, follow it,
 Follow The Gleam.

125

130

CROSSING THE BAR

Sunset and evening star,
 And one clear call for me!
 And may there be no moaning of the bar,
 When I put out to sea,

But such a tide as moving seems asleep, 5
 Too full for sound and foam,
 When that which drew from out the boundless deep Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
 And after that the dark! 10
 And may there be no sadness of farewell,
 When I embark;

For though from out our bourne of Time and Place
 The flood may bear me far,
 I hope to see my Pilot face to face 15
 When I have crossed the bar.

ROBERT BROWNING (1812-1889)

SONG from PIPPA PASSES

The year's at the spring
 And day's at the morn;
 Morning's at seven;
 The hillside's dew-pearled;
 The lark's on the wing;
 The snail's on the thorn;
 God's in his heaven—
 All's right with the world!

5

CAVALIER TUNES

I. MARCHING ALONG

Kentish Sir Byng stood for his King,
 Bidding the crop-headed Parliament swing:
 And, pressing¹ a troop unable to stoop
 And see the rogues flourish and honest folk droop,
 Marched them along, fifty-score strong, 5 Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this
 song.

God for King Charles! Pym and such carles²
 To the Devil that prompts 'em their treasonous parles!³
 Cavaliers, up! Lips from the cup, Hands from the pasty, nor bite take, nor sup, 10 Till you're—

CHORUS.—Marching along, fifty-score
 strong,
 Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song!

Hampden to hell, and his obsequies' knell Serve Hazelrig, Fiennes, and young Harry,
 as well!

England, good cheer! Rupert is near! 15
 Kentish and loyalists, keep we not here,

CHO.—Marching along, fifty-score
 strong,
 Great-hearted gentlemen, singing
 this song?

Then, God for King Charles! Pym and his snarls

To the Devil that pricks on such pestilent carles! 20

Hold by the right, you double your might;
 So, onward to Nottingham, fresh for the
 fight,

CHO.—March we along, fifty-score
 strong,
 Great-hearted gentlemen, singing
 this song!

II. GIVE A ROUSE

King Charles, and who 'll do him right
 now?

King Charles, and who 's ripe for fight
 now?

Give a rouse; here's, in hell's despite now,
 King Charles!

¹ pressing into service² churls, knaves.³ parleyings, debates.

Who gave me the goods that went since? 5
 Who raised me the house that sank once?
 Who helped me to gold I spent since?
 Who found me in¹ wine you drank once?

CHO.—King Charles, and who'll do him
 right now?

King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now? 10

Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,

King Charles!

To whom used my boy George quaff else,
 By the old fool's side that begot him?
 For whom did he cheer and laugh else, 15
 While Noll's² damned troopers shot him?

CHO.—King Charles, and who'll do him
 right now?

King Charles, and who's ripe for
 fight now?

Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,

King Charles! 20

III. BOOT AND SADDLE

Boot, saddle, to horse and away!
 Rescue my castle before the hot day
 Brightens to blue from its silvery gray.

CHO.—Boot, saddle, to horse and away!

Ride past the suburbs, asleep as you'd say;
 Many's the friend there, will listen and
 pray 6
 "God's luck to gallants that strike up the
 lay—

CHO.—Boot, saddle, to horse, and
 away!"

Forty miles off, like a roebuck at bay,
 Flouts Castle Brancepeth the Roundheads'
 array: 10
 Who laughs, "Good fellows ere this, by my fay,

CHO.—Boot, saddle, to horse, and
 away!"

Who? My wife Gertrude; that, honest and gay,
 Laughs when you talk of surrendering,
 "Nay!

I've better counsellors; what counsel they?

CHO.—Boot, saddle, to horse, and
 away!" 16

¹ supplied me with.

² Oliver Cromwell's.

THE LOST LEADER

Just for a handful of silver he left us,
 Just for a riband to stick in his coat—
 Found the one gift of which fortune bereft
 us,

Lost all the others she lets us devote;
 They, with the gold to give, doled him out silver, 5

So much was theirs who so little allowed:
 How all our copper had gone for his service!

Rags—were they purple, his heart had been proud!

We that had loved him so, followed him,
 honored him,

Lived in his mild and magnificent eye, 10 Learned his great language, caught his clear accents,

Made him our pattern to live and to die!
 Shakespeare was of us, Milton was for us, Burns, Shelley, were with us,—they watch from their graves!

He alone breaks from the van and the free-
 men, 15

—He alone sinks to the rear and the slaves!

We shall march prospering,—not through his presence;

Songs may inspirit us,—not from his lyre;
 Deeds will be done,—while he boasts his quiescence,

Still bidding crouch whom the rest bade aspire; 20

Blot out his name, then, record one lost soul more,

One task more declined, one more footpath untrod,

One more devil's-triumph and sorrow for angels,

One wrong more to man, one more insult to God!

Life's night begins: let him never come back to us! 25

There would be doubt, hesitation and
 pain,

Forced praise on our part—the glimmer of
 twilight,

Never glad confident morning again!
 Best fight on well, for we taught him—
 strike gallantly,

Menace our heart ere we master his
 own; 30

Then let him receive the new knowledge and wait us,
Pardoned in heaven, the first by the
throne!

HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS FROM GHENT TO AIX

I sprang to the stirrup, and Joris, and he;
I galloped, Dirck galloped, we galloped all
three;
"Good speed!" cried the watch, as the gate-bolts undrew;
"Speed!" echoed the wall to us galloping
through;
Behind shut the postern, the lights sank to rest, 5
And into the midnight we galloped abreast.

Not a word to each other; we kept the great pace Neck by neck, stride by stride, never changing our place;
I turned in my saddle and made its girths tight,
Then shortened each stirrup, and set the pique¹ right, 10
Rebuckled the cheek-strap, chained slacker
the bit,
Nor galloped less steadily Roland a whit.

'Twas moonset at starting; but while we drew near Lokeren, the cocks crew and twilight
dawned clear;
At Boom, a great yellow star came out to see; 15
At Düffeld, 'twas morning as plain as could be;
And from Mecheln church-steeple we heard the half-chime,
So Joris broke silence with, "Yet there is time!"

At Aershot, up leaped of a sudden the sun,
And against him the cattle stood black every one, 20
To stare through the mist at us galloping past,
And I saw my stout galloper Roland at
last,

¹ peak, pommel.

With resolute shoulders, each butting
away
The haze, as some bluff river headland its spray:

And his low head and crest, just one sharp ear bent back 25
For my voice, and the other pricked out on his track;
And one eye's black intelligence,—ever that glance
O'er its white edge at me, his own master, askance!
And the thick heavy spume-flakes which aye and anon 29
His fierce lips shook upwards in galloping on.

By Hasselt, Dirck groaned; and cried Joris, "Stay spur!
Your Roos galloped bravely, the fault's not in her.
We'll remember at Aix"—for one heard the quick wheeze
Of her chest, saw the stretched neck and staggering knees,
And sunk tail, and horrible heave of the flank, 35
As down on her haunches she shuddered
and sank.

So, we were left galloping, Joris and I, Past Looz and past Tongres, no cloud in
the sky;
The broad sun above laughed a pitiless
laugh,
'Neath our feet broke the brittle bright stubble like chaff; 40
Till over by Dalhem a dome-spire sprang
white,
And "Gallop," gasped Joris, "for Aix is in sight!"

"How they'll greet us!"—and all in a moment his roan
Rolled neck and croup over, lay dead as a
stone;
And there was my Roland to bear the whole weight 45
Of the news which alone could save Aix
from her fate,
With his nostrils like pits full of blood
to the brim,
And with circles of red for his eye-sockets'
rim.

Then I cast loose my buffcoat, each holster let fall,
Shook off both my jack-boots, let go belt
and all, 50
Stood up in the stirrup, leaned, patted
his ear,
Called my Roland his pet-name, my horse without peer;
Clapped my hands, laughed and sang,
any noise, bad or good,
Till at length into Aix Roland galloped and stood.

And all I remember is—friends flocking
round 55
As I sat with his head 'twixt my knees on
the ground;
And no voice but was praising this Roland
of mine,
As I poured down his throat our last measure of wine,
Which (the burgesses voted by common consent)
Was no more than his due who brought good news from Ghent. 60

MEETING AT NIGHT

The gray sea and the long black land;
And the yellow half-moon large and low;
And the startled little waves that leap
In fiery ringlets from their sleep,
As I gain the cove with pushing prow, 5
And quench its speed i' the slushy sand.

Then a mile of warm sea-scented beach;
Three fields to cross till a farm appears;
A tap at the pane, the quick sharp scratch
And blue spurt of a lighted match, 10
And a voice less loud, through its joys and fears,
Than the two hearts beating each to each!

PARTING AT MORNING

Round the cape of a sudden came the sea,
And the sun looked over the mountain's
rim:
And straight was a path of gold for him,
And the need of a world of men for me.

SOLILOQUY OF THE SPANISH CLOISTER

Gr-r-r—there go, my heart's abhorrence!
Water your damned flower-pots, do!
If hate killed men, Brother Lawrence,
God's blood, would not mine kill you!
What? your myrtle-bush wants trimming?
Oh, that rose has prior claims— 6
Needs its leaden vase filled brimming?
Hell dry you up with its flames!

At the meal we sit together:
Salve tibi! I must hear 10
Wise talk of the kind of weather,
Sort of season, time of year:
Not a plenteous cork-crop: scarcely Dare we hope oak-galls, I doubt:
What's the Latin name for "parsley"? 15
What's the Greek name for Swine's Snout?

Whew! We'll have our platter burnished,
Laid with care on our own shelf!
With a fire-new spoon we're furnished,
And a goblet for ourself, 20
Rinsed like something sacrificial Ere 'tis fit to touch our chaps—
Marked with L for our initial!
(He-he! There his lily snaps!)

Saint, forsooth! While brown Dolores 25
Squats outside the Convent bank
With Sanchicha, telling stories,
Steeping tresses in the tank,
Blue-black, lustrous, thick like horse-hairs,
—Can't I see his dead eye glow, 30
Bright as 'twere a Barbary corsair's?
(That is, if he'd let it show!)

When he finishes refection,
Knife and fork he never lays Cross-wise, to my recollection, 35
As do I, in Jesu's praise.
I the Trinity illustrate,
Drinking watered orange-pulp—
In three sips the Arian frustrate;
While he drains his at one gulp. 40

Oh, those melons! If he's able We're to have a feast! so nice!
One goes to the Abbot's table,
All of us get each a slice.

How go on your flowers? None double? 45
 Not one fruit-sort can you spy?
 Strange!—And I, too, at such trouble
 Keep them close-nipped on the sly!

There's a great text in Galatians,
 Once you trip on it, entails 50
 Twenty-nine distinct damnations,
 One sure, if another fails:
 If I trip him just a-dying,
 Sure of heaven as sure can be,
 Spin him round and send him flying 55
 Off to hell, a Manichee!

Or, my scrofulous French novel
 On gray paper with blunt type!
 Simply glance at it, you grovel
 Hand and foot in Belial's gripe: 60
 If I double down its pages
 At the woeful sixteenth print,
 When he gathers his greengages,
 Ope a sieve and slip it in't?

Or, there's Satan! one might venture 65
 Pledge one's soul to him, yet leave
 Such a flaw in the indenture
 As he'd miss till, past retrieve,
 Blasted lay that rose-acacia
 We're so proud of! Hy, Zy, Hine . . . 70
 'St, there's Vespers! Plena gratiâ,
Ave, Virgol Gr-r-r—you swine!

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM ABROAD

Oh, to be in England
 Now that April 's there,
 And whoever wakes in England
 Sees, some morning, unaware,
 That the lowest boughs and the brushwood sheaf 5
 Round the elm-tree bole are in tiny leaf,
 While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough
 In England—now!

And after April, when May follows,
 And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallows! 10
 Hark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge
 Leans to the field and scatters on the clover Blossoms and dewdrops—at the bent spray's edge—

That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over,
 Lest you should think he never could recapture 15
 The first fine careless rapture!
 And though the fields look rough with hoary dew,
 All will be gay when noontide wakes anew
 The buttercups, the little children's dower —Far brighter than this gaudy melon-
 flower! 20

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM THE SEA

Nobly, nobly Cape Saint Vincent to the Northwest died away;
 Sunset ran, one glorious blood-red, reeking into Cadiz Bay;
 Bluish 'mid the burning water, full in face
 Trafalgar lay;
 In the dimmest Northeast distance dawned
 Gibraltar grand and gray;
 "Here and here did England help me: how can I help England?"—say, 5 Whoso turns as I, this evening, turn to God to praise and pray,
 While Jove's planet rises yonder, silent over Africa.

SAUL

I

Said Abner, "At last thou art come! Ere
 I tell, ere thou speak, Kiss my cheek, wish me well!" Then I wished it, and did kiss his cheek.
 And he: "Since the King, O my friend, for thy countenance sent,
 Neither drunken nor eaten have we; nor until from his tent
 Thou return with the joyful assurance the King liveth yet, 5
 Shall our lip with the honey be bright, with the water be wet.
 For out of the black mid-tent's silence, a space of three days,
 Not a sound hath escaped to thy servants,
 of prayer nor of praise,
 To betoken that Saul and the Spirit have ended their strife,
 And that, faint in his triumph, the monarch sinks back upon life. 10

II

"Yet now my heart leaps, O beloved!
 God's child with his dew
 On thy gracious gold hair, and those lilies still living and blue
 Just broken to twine round thy harp-strings, as if no wild heat
 Were now raging to torture the desert!"

III

Then I, as was meet, Knelt down to the God of my fathers, and rose on my feet, 15
 And ran o'er the sand burnt to powder.
 The tent was unlooped;
 I pulled up the spear that obstructed, and under I stooped;
 Hands and knees on the slippery grass-
 patch, all withered and gone,
 That extends to the second enclosure, I groped my way on Till I felt where the foldskirts fly open.
 Then once more I prayed, 20
 And opened the foldskirts and entered,
 and was not afraid
 But spoke, "Here is David, thy servant!"
 And no voice replied.
 At the first I saw naught but the blackness; but soon I descried
 A something more black than the blackness—the vast, the upright
 Main prop which sustains the pavilion;
 and slow into sight 25 Grew a figure against it, gigantic and blackest of all.
 Then a sunbeam, that burst through the tent roof, showed Saul.

IV

He stood as erect as that tent-prop, both arms stretched out wide
 On the great cross-support in the center,
 that goes to each side;
 He relaxed not a muscle, but hung there as, caught in his pangs 30
 And waiting his change, the king serpent
 all heavily hangs,
 Far away from his kind, in the pine, till deliverance come
 With the spring-time,—so agonized Saul, drear and stark, blind and dumb.

V

Then I tuned my harp,—took off the lilies
 we twine round its chords Lest they snap 'neath the stress of the noon-tide—those sunbeams like swords! 35
 And I first played the tune all our sheep know, as, one after one,
 So docile they come to the pen-door till folding be done.
 They are white and untorn by the bushes,
 for lo, they have fed
 Where the long grasses stifle the water within the stream's bed;
 And now one after one seeks its lodging, as star follows star 40
 Into eve and the blue far above us,—so blue and so far!

VI

—Then the tune, for which quails on the cornland will each leave his mate
 To fly after the player; then, what makes the crickets elate
 Till for boldness they fight one another;
 and then, what has weight
 To set the quick jerboa a-musing outside his sand-house— 45
 There are none such as he for a wonder,
 half bird and half mouse!
 God made all the creatures and gave them
 our love and our fear,
 To give sign, we and they are his children,
 one family here.

VII

Then I played the help-tune of our reapers, their wine-song, when hand Grasps at hand, eye lights eye in good friendship, and great hearts expand 50
 And grow one in the sense of this world's life.—And then, the last song
 When the dead man is praised on his journey—"Bear, bear him along With his few faults shut up like dead flowerets! Are balm-seeds not here To console us? The land has none left such as he on the bier. 54 Oh, would we might keep thee, my brother!"—And then, the glad chaunt
 Of the marriage,—first go the young maidens, next, she whom we vaunt

As the beauty, the pride of our dwelling.
 —And then, the great march Wherein man runs to man to assist him and buttress an arch
 Naught can break; who shall harm them, our friends?—Then, the chorus intoned
 As the Levites go up to the altar in glory
 enthroned. 60
 But I stopped here: for here in the darkness Saul groaned.

VIII

And I paused, held my breath in such silence, and listened apart;
 And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered: and sparkles 'gan dart
 From the jewels that woke in his turban,
 at once with a start,
 All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart. 65
 So the head: but the body still moved not,
 still hung there erect.
 And I bent once again to my playing, pursued it unchecked,
 As I sang:—

IX

“Oh, our manhood's prime vigor! No spirit feels waste,
 Not a muscle is stopped in its playing nor sinew unbraced.
 Oh, the wild joys of living! the leaping from rock up to rock, 70
 The strong rending of boughs from the fir-tree, the cool silver shock
 Of the plunge in a pool's living water, the hunt of the bear,
 And the sultriness showing the lion is couched in his lair.
 And the meal, the rich dates yellowed over with gold dust divine,
 And the locust-flesh steeped in the pitcher,
 the full draft of wine, 75
 And the sleep in the dried river-channel where bulrushes tell That the water was wont to go warbling
 so softly and well.
 How good is man's life, the mere living!
 how fit to employ
 All the heart and the soul and the senses forever in joy!
 Hast thou loved the white locks of thy father, whose sword thou didst guard

When he trusted thee forth with the armies, for glorious reward? 81 Didst thou see the thin hands of thy mother, held up as men sung
 The low song of the nearly-departed, and hear her faint tongue
 Joining in while it could to the witness,
 'Let one more attest
 I have lived, seen God's hand through a lifetime, and all was for best?' 85
 Then they sung through their tears in strong triumph, not much, but the
 rest.

And thy brothers, the help and the contest, the working whence grew Such result as, from seething grape-bundles, the spirit strained true:
 And the friends of thy boyhood—that boy-hood of wonder and hope, Present promise and wealth of the future
 beyond the eye's scope,— 90 Till lo, thou art grown to a monarch; a people is thine;
 And all gifts, which the world offers singly,
 on one head combine!
 On one head, all the beauty and strength,
 love and rage (like the throe
 That, a-work in the rock, helps its labor and lets the gold go),
 High ambition and deeds which surpass it,
 fame crowning them,—all 95
 Brought to blaze on the head of one creature—King Saul!”

X

And lo, with that leap of my spirit,—heart,
 hand, harp and voice,
 Each lifting Saul's name out of sorrow,
 each bidding rejoice Saul's fame in the light it was made for—
 as when, dare I say,
 The Lord's army, in rapture of service,
 strains through its array, 100
 And upsoareth the cherubim-chariot—
 “Saul!” cried I, and stopped,
 And waited the thing that should follow.
 Then Saul, who hung propped
 By the tent's cross-support in the center, was struck by his name.
 Have ye seen when Spring's arrowy summons goes right to the aim,
 And some mountain, the last to withstand her, that held (he alone, 105

While the vale laughed in freedom and flowers) on a broad bust of stone
 A year's snow bound about for a breast-plate,—leaves grasp of the sheet?
 Fold on fold all at once it crowds thunder-
 ously down to his feet,
 And there fronts you, stark, black, but alive yet, your mountain of old,
 With his rents, the successive bequeathings of ages untold—¹¹⁰
 Yea, each harm got in fighting your battles, each furrow and scar
 Of his head thrust 'twixt you and the tempest—all hail, there they are!
 —Now again to be softened with verdure,
 again hold the nest
 Of the dove, tempt the goat and its young to the green on his crest
 For their food in the ardors of summer.
 One long shudder thrilled¹¹⁵
 All the tent till the very air tingled, then sank and was stilled
 At the King's self left standing before me, released and aware.
 What was gone, what remained? All to traverse 'twixt hope and despair; Death was past, life not come: so he waited. Awhile his right hand Held the brow, helped the eyes left too vacant, forthwith to remand¹²⁰ To their place what new objects should enter: 't was Saul as before.
 I looked up, and dared gaze at those eyes,
 nor was hurt any more Than by slow pallid sunsets in autumn, ye watch from the shore,
 At their sad level gaze o'er the ocean—a sun's slow decline
 Over hills which, resolved in stern silence, o'erlap and entwine¹²⁵ Base with base to knit strength more intensely; so, arm folded arm
 O'er the chest whose slow heavings subsided.

XI

What spell or what charm,
 (For a while there was trouble within me,) what next should I urge To sustain him where song had restored him?—Song filled to the verge His cup with the wine of this life, pressing all that it yields¹³⁰
 Of mere fruitage, the strength and the beauty: beyond, on what fields,

Glean a vintage more potent and perfect to brighten the eye
 And bring blood to the lip, and commend them the cup they put by?
 He saith, "It is good;" still he drinks not:
 he lets me praise life,
 Gives assent, yet would die for his own part.

XII

Then fancies grew rife¹³⁵
 Which had come long ago on the pasture,
 when round me the sheep Fed in silence—above, the one eagle wheeled slow as in sleep;
 And I lay in my hollow and mused on the world that might lie
 'Neath his ken, though I saw but the strip
 'twixt the hill and the sky:
 And I laughed—"Since my days are ordained to be passed with my flocks,¹⁴⁰ Let me people, at least with my fancies, the plains and the rocks, Dream the life I am never to mix with, and image the show
 Of mankind as they live in those fashions
 I hardly shall know!
 Schemes of life, its best rules and right
 uses, the courage that gains,
 And the prudence that keeps what men strive for." And now these old trains Of vague thought came again; I grew surer; so once more the string¹⁴⁶
 Of my harp made response to my spirit, as thus—

XIII

"Yea, my King,"
 I began—"thou dost well in rejecting mere comforts that spring
 From the mere mortal life held in common by man and by brute:
 In our flesh grows the branch of this life,
 in our soul it bears fruit.¹⁵⁰
 Thou hast marked the slow rise of the tree,
 —how its stem trembled first Till it passed the kid's lip, the stag's antler; then safely outburst
 The fan-branches all round; and thou mindest when these too, in turn Broke a-bloom and the palm-tree seemed perfect: yet more was to learn, E'en the good that comes in with the palm-fruit. Our dates shall we slight,¹⁵⁵
 When their juice brings a cure for all sorrow? or care for the plight

Of the palm's self whose slow growth produced them? Not so! stem and branch
 Shall decay, nor be known in their place, while the palm wine shall stanch Every wound of man's spirit in winter. I pour thee such wine.
 Leave the flesh to the fate it was fit for!
 the spirit be thine! 160
 By the spirit, when age shall o'ercome thee, thou still shalt enjoy
 More indeed, than at first when incon-scious, the life of a boy.
 Crush that life, and behold its wine running! Each deed thou hast done Dies, revives, goes to work in the world;
 until e'en as the sun
 Looking down on the earth, though clouds spoil him, though tempests efface, 165
 Can find nothing his own deed produced not, must everywhere trace
 The results of his past summer-prime,— so, each ray of thy will,
 Every flash of thy passion and prowess, long over, shall thrill
 Thy whole people, the countiess, with ardor, till they too give forth
 A like cheer to their sons; who in turn, fill the South and the North 170 With the radiance thy deed was the germ
 of. Carouse in the past!
 But the license of age has its limit; thou diest at last:
 As the lion when age dims his eyeball, the rose at her height,
 So with man—so his power and his beauty
 for ever take flight.
 No! Again a long draft of my soul-wine!
 Look forth o'er the years! 175
 Thou hast done now with eyes for the actual; begin with the seer's!
 Is Saul dead? In the depth of the vale make his tomb—bid arise
 A gray mountain of marble heaped foursquare, till built to the skies, Let it mark where the great First King slumbers: whose fame would ye
 know?
 Up above see the rock's naked face, where the record shall go 180
 In great characters cut by the scribe,—
 Such was Saul, so he did;
 With the sages directing the work, by the poplance child;—

For not half, they'll affirm, is comprised there! Which fault to amend,
 In the grove with his kind grows the cedar,
 whereon they shall spend (See, in tablets 't is level before them) their praise, and record 185
 With the gold of the graver, Saul's story,
 —the statesman's great word Side by side with the poet's sweet comment. The river's a-wave With smooth paper-reeds grazing each other when prophet-winds rave:
 So the pen gives unborn generations their due and their part
 In thy being! Then, first of the mighty, thank God that thou art!" 190

XIV

And behold while I sang . . . but O Thou who didst grant me that day,
 And before it not seldom hast granted thy help to essay,
 Carry on, and complete an adventure,— my shield and my sword
 In that act where my soul was thy servant,
 thy word was my word,— Still be with me, who then at the summit of human endeavor 195
 And scaling the highest, man's thought could, gazed hopeless as ever On the new stretch of heaven above me—till, mighty to save,
 Just one lift of thy hand cleared that distance—God's throne from man's
 grave!
 Let me tell out my tale to its ending—my voice to my heart
 Which can scarce dare believe in what mar-vels last night I took part, 200
 As this morning I gather the fragments, alone with my sheep,
 And still fear lest the terrible glory evanish like sleep!
 For I wake in the gray dewy covert, while Hebron upheaves
 The dawn struggling with night on his shoulder, and Kidron retrieves Slow the damage of yesterday's sunshine. 205

XV

I say then,—my song
 While I sang thus, assuring the monarch, and, ever more strong,

Made a proffer of good to console him—
 he slowly resumed
 His old motions and habitudes kingly.
 The right hand replumed
 His black locks to their wonted composure, adjusted the swathes
 Of his turban, and see—the huge sweat that his countenance bathes, ²¹⁰
 He wipes off with the robe; and he girds
 now his loins as of yore,
 And feels slow for the armlets of price,
 with the clasp set before.
 He is Saul, ye remember in glory,—ere error had bent
 The brow from the daily communion; and still, though much spent
 Be the life and the bearing that front you,
 the same, God did choose, ²¹⁵
 To receive what a man may waste, desecrate, never quite lose.
 So sank he along by the tent-prop, till,
 stayed by the pile
 Of his armor and war-cloak and garments,
 he leaned there awhile,
 And sat out my singing,—one arm round
 the tent-prop, to raise His bent head, and the other hung slack—
 till I touched on the praise ²²⁰
 I foresaw from all men in all time, to the man patient there;
 And thus ended, the harp falling forward.
 Then first I was 'ware
 That he sat, as I say, with my head just above his vast knees
 Which were thrust out on each side around me, like oak roots which please To encircle a lamb when it slumbers. I looked up to know ²²⁵
 If the best I could do had brought solace:
 he spoke not, but slow Lifted up the hand slack at his side, till he laid it with care
 Soft and grave, but in mild settled will,
 on my brow: through my hair
 The large fingers were pushed, and he bent back my head, with kind power—
 All my face back, intent to peruse it, as men do a flower. ²³⁰
 Thus held he me there with his great eyes that scrutinized mine—
 And oh, all my heart how it loved him!
 but where was the sign?
 I yearned—"Could I help thee, my father,
 inventing a bliss,

I would add, to that life of the past, both the future and this;
 I would give thee new life altogether, as good, ages hence, ²³⁵
 As this moment,—had love but the warrant love's heart to dispense!"

XVI

Then the truth came upon me. No harp more—no song more! outbroke—

XVII

"I have gone the whole round of creation:
 I saw and I spoke:
 I, a work of God's hand for that purpose, received in my brain
 And pronounced on the rest of his handwork—returned him again ²⁴⁰
 His creation's approval or censure: I spoke as I saw,
 I report, as a man may of God's work—
 all's love, yet all's law.
 Now I lay down the judgeship he lent me.
 Each faculty tasked
 To perceive him has gained an abyss,
 where a dewdrop was asked.
 Have I knowledge? confounded it shrivels
 at Wisdom laid bare. ²⁴⁵ Have I forethought? how purblind, how blank, to the Infinite Care!
 Do I task any faculty highest, to image success?
 I but open my eyes,—and perfection, no
 more and no less,
 In the king I imagined, full-fronts me,
 and God is seen God
 In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod. ²⁵⁰
 And thus looking within and around me,
 I ever renew (With that stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too)
 The submission of man's nothing-perfect
 to God's all-complete,
 As by each new obeisance in spirit, I climb to his feet.
 Yet with all this abounding experience,
 this deity known, ²⁵⁵
 I shall dare to discover some province,
 some gift of my own.
 There's a faculty pleasant to exercise, hard to hoodwink,

I am fain to keep still in abeyance (I laugh as I think)
Lest, insisting to claim and parade in it, wot ye, I worst E'en the Giver in one gift.—Behold, I could love if I durst! 260
But I sink the pretension as fearing a man may o'ertake
God's own speed in the one way of love:
I abstain for love's sake.
—What, my soul? see thus far and no farther? when doors great and small,
Nine-and-ninety flew ope at our touch,
should the hundredth appal?
In the least things have faith, yet distrust in the greatest of all? 265
Do I find love so full in my nature, God's ultimate gift,
That I doubt his own love can compete with it? Here, the parts shift?
Here, the creature surpass the Creator,—
the end, what Began?
Would I fain in my impotent yearning
do all for this man,
And dare doubt he alone shall not help him,
who yet alone can? 270
Would it ever have entered my mind, the bare will, much less power,
To bestow on this Saul what I sang of,
the marvelous dower
Of the life he was gifted and filled with?
to make such a soul,
Such a body, and then such an earth for insphering the whole?
And doth it not enter my mind (as my warm tears attest), 275
These things being given, to go on, and give one more, the best?
Ay, to save and redeem and restore him,
maintain at the height
This perfection,—succeed with life's day-spring, death's minute of night?
Interpose at the difficult minute, snatch
Saul the mistake,
Saul the failure, the ruin he seems now,
—and bid him awake 280
From the dream, the probation, the prelude, to find himself set Clear and safe in new light and new life,
—a new harmony yet
To be run and continued, and ended—
who knows?—or endure!
The man taught enough by life's dream, of the rest to make sure;

By the pain-throb, triumphantly winning intensified bliss, 285
And the next world's reward and repose, by the struggles in this.

XVIII

"I believe it! 'Tis thou, God, that givest,
'tis I who receive:
In the first is the last, in thy will is my power to believe.
All's one gift: thou canst grant it moreover,
as prompt to my prayer
As I breathe out this breath, as I open these arms to the air. 290
From thy will, stream the worlds, life and nature, thy dread Sabaoth:
I will?—the mere atoms despise me! Why am I not loth
To look that, even that in the face too?
Why is it I dare
Think but lightly of such impuissance?
What stops my despair?
This,—'tis not what man Does which exalts him, but what man Would do!
See the King—I would help him but cannot, the wishes fall through. 296 Could I wrestle to raise him from sorrow, grow poor to enrich,
To fill up his life, starve my own out, I would—knowing which,
I know that my service is perfect. Oh, speak through me now!
Would I suffer for him that I love? So wouldst thou—so wilt thou! 300
So shall crown thee the topmost, ineffa-blest, uttermost crown—
And thy love fill infinitude wholly, nor leave up nor down
One spot for the creature to stand in! It is by no breath,
Turn of eye, wave of hand, that salvation
joins issue with death!
As thy Love is discovered almighty, almighty be proved 305 Thy power, that exists with and for it, of being Beloved!
He who did most, shall bear most; the strongest shall stand the most weak.
'Tis the weakness in strength, that I cry for! my flesh, that I seek
In the Godhead! I seek and I find it. O
Saul, it shall be

A Face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me, ³¹⁰
 Thou shalt love and be loved by, for ever;
 a Hand like this hand Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee! See the Christ stand!"

XIX

I know not too well how I found my way home in the night.
 There were witnesses, cohorts about me, to left and to right, Angels, powers, the unuttered, unseen, the alive, the aware: ³¹⁵
 I repressed, I got through them as hardly,
 as strugglingly there,
 As a runner beset by the populace famished for news—
 Life or death. The whole earth was awakened, hell loosed with her crews;
 And the stars of night beat with emotion,
 and tingled and shot
 Out in fire the strong pain of pent knowledge: but I fainted not, ³²⁰ For the Hand still impelled me at once and supported, suppressed
 All the tumult, and quenched it with quiet,
 and holy behest,
 Till the rapture was shut in itself, and the earth sank to rest.
 Anon at the dawn, all that trouble had withered from earth—
 Not so much, but I saw it die out in the day's tender birth; ³²⁵
 In the gathered intensity brought to the gray of the hills;
 In the shuddering forests' held breath; in the sudden wind-thrills;
 In the startled wild beasts that bore off,
 each with eye sidling still,
 Though averted with wonder and dread;
 in the birds stiff and chill
 That rose heavily as I approached them, made stupid with awe: ³³⁰ E'en the serpent that slid away silent,—
 he felt the new law.
 The same stared in the white humid faces upturned by the flowers;
 The same worked in the heart of the cedar and moved the vine-bowers:
 And the little brooks witnessing murmured, persistent and low,
 With their obstinate, all but hushed voices
 —"E'en so, it is so!" ³³⁵

LOVE AMONG THE RUINS

Where the quiet-colored end of evening
 smiles
 Miles and miles
 On the solitary pastures where our sheep
 Half-asleep
 Tinkle homeward through the twilight, stray or stop
 As they crop—
 Was the site once of a city great and gay
 (So they say),
 Of our country's very capital, its prince Ages since ¹⁰
 Held his court in, gathered councils, wielding far Peace or war.

Now,—the country does not even boast a
 tree,
 As you see,
 To distinguish slopes of verdure, certain rills ¹⁵
 From the hills Intersect and give a name to (else they run Into one),
 Where the domed and daring palace shot its spires
 Up like fires ²⁰
 O'er the hundred-gated circuit of a wall
 Bounding all,
 Made of marble, men might march on nor be pressed,
 Twelve abreast.

And such plenty and perfection, see, of grass ²⁵
 Never was!
 Such a carpet as, this summer-time, o'erspreads
 And embeds
 Every vestige of the city, guessed alone,
 Stock or stone— ³⁰
 Where a multitude of men breathed joy and woe
 Long ago;
 Lust of glory pricked their hearts up, dread of shame
 Struck them tame;
 And that glory and that shame alike, the gold ³⁵
 Bought and sold.

Now,—the single little turret that remains
 On the plains,
 By the caper overrooted, by the gourd
 Overscored, 40
 While the patching houseleek's head of blossom winks
 Through the chinks—Marks the basement whence a tower in ancient time
 Sprang sublime,
 And a burning ring, all round, the chariots traced 45
 As they raced,
 And the monarch and his minions and his dames
 Viewed the games.

And I know—while thus the quiet-colored eve
 Smiles to leave 50
 To their folding, all our many tinkling fleece
 In such peace,
 And the slopes and rills in undistinguished
 gray
 Melt away—
 That a girl with eager eyes and yellow
 hair 55
 Waits me there
 In the turret whence the charioteers caught soul
 For the goal,
 When the king looked, where she looks now, breathless, dumb
 Till I come. 60

But he looked upon the city, every side,
 Far and wide,
 All the mountains topped with temples,
 all the glades'
 Colonnades,
 All the causeys,¹ bridges, aqueducts,—and
 then, 65
 All the men!
 When I do come, she will speak not, she will stand,
 Either hand
 On my shoulder, give her eyes the first embrace
 Of my face, 70
 Ere we rush, ere we extinguish sight and speech
 Each on each.

¹ causeways.

In one year they sent a million fighters
 forth
 South and North,
 And they built their gods a brazen pillar
 high 75
 As the sky,
 Yet reserved a thousand chariots in full force—
 Gold, of course.
 Oh heart! oh blood that freezes, blood that burns!
 Earth's returns 80
 For whole centuries of folly, noise and sin!
 Shut them in,
 With their triumphs and their glories and the rest!
 Love is best.

MEMORABILIA

Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,
 And did he stop and speak to you,
 And did you speak to him again?
 How strange it seems and new!

But you were living before that, 5
 And also you are living after;
 And the memory I started at—
 My starting moves your laughter!

I crossed a moor, with a name of its own
 And a certain use in the world no
 doubt, 10
 Yet a hand's-breadth of it shines alone
 'Mid the blank miles round about:

For there I picked up on the heather
 And there I put inside my breast
 A moulted feather, an eagle-feather! 15
 Well, I forget the rest.

MY LAST DUCHESS

FERRARA

That's my last Duchess painted on the wall
 Looking as if she were alive. I call That piece a wonder, now: Frà Pandolf's
 hands
 Worked busily a day, and there she stands.

Will 't please you sit and look at her? I
 said 5
 "Frà Pandolf" by design, for never read Strangers like you that pictured countenance,
 The depth and passion of its earnest
 glance,
 But to myself they turned (since none puts by
 The curtain I have drawn for you, but I) 10
 And seemed as they would ask me, if they durst,
 How such a glance came there; so, not the first
 Are you to turn and ask thus. Sir, 'twas
 not
 Her husband's presence only, called that spot
 Of joy into the Duchess' cheek: perhaps 15
 Frà Pandolf chanced to say, "Her mantle laps
 Over my lady's wrist too much," or "Paint
 Must never hope to reproduce the faint Half-flush that dies along her throat:"
 such stuff
 Was courtesy, she thought, and cause
 enough 20
 For calling up that spot of joy. She had A heart—how shall I say?—too soon made glad,
 Too easily impressed; she liked whate'er
 She looked on, and her looks went everywhere. 24
 Sir, 'twas all one! My favor at her breast,
 The dropping of the daylight in the West,
 The bough of cherries some officious fool Broke in the orchard for her, the white mule
 She rode with round the terrace—all
 and each
 Would draw from her alike the approving speech, 30
 Or blush, at least. She thanked men,— good! but thanked Somehow—I know not how—as if she ranked
 My gift of a nine-hundred-years-old name With anybody's gift. Who'd stoop to blame
 This sort of trifling? Even had you skill 35
 In speech—(which I have not)—to make your will

Quite clear to such an one, and say, "Just
 this
 Or that in you disgusts me: here you miss,
 Or there exceed the mark"—and if she let Herself be lessoned so, nor plainly set 40
 Her wits to yours, forsooth, and made excuse.
 —E'en then would be some stooping; and I choose
 Never to stoop. Oh, sir, she smiled, no
 doubt,
 Whene'er I passed her; but who passed without Much the same smile? This grew; I gave commands; 45
 Then all smiles stopped together. There she stands
 As if alive. Will 't please you rise? We'll meet
 The company below then. I repeat,
 The Count your master's known munificence
 Is ample warrant that no just pretence 50
 Of mine for dowry will be disallowed;
 Though his fair daughter's self, as I avowed
 At starting, is my object. Nay, we'll go Together down, sir. Notice Neptune,
 though,
 Taming a sea-horse, thought a rarity, 55
 Which Claus of Innsbruck cast in bronze for me!

IN A GONDOLA

He sings

I send my heart up to thee, all my heart
 In this my singing.
 For the stars help me, and the sea bears
 part;
 The very night is clinging Closer to Venice' streets to leave one space 5
 Above me, whence thy face
 May light my joyous heart to thee its dwelling place.

She speaks

Say after me, and try to say
 My very words, as if each word
 Came from you of your own accord, 10
 In your own voice, in your own way:

"This woman's heart and soul and brain
Are mine as much as this gold chain
She bids me wear; which" (say again)
"I choose to make by cherishing 15
A precious thing, or choose to fling
Over the boat-side, ring by ring."
And yet once more say . . . no word
more!

Since words are only words. Give o'er!

Unless you call me, all the same, 20
Familiarly by my pet name,
Which if the Three should hear you call,
And me reply to, would proclaim
At once our secret to them all.
Ask of me, too, command me, blame,— 25
Do, break down the partition-wall
'Twixt us, the daylight world beholds
Curtained in dusk and splendid folds!
What's left but—all of me to take?
I am the Three's: prevent them, slake 30
Your thirst! 'Tis said, the Arab sage,
In practising with gems, can loose
Their subtle spirit in his cruce¹
And leave but ashes: so, sweet mage,
Leave them my ashes when thy use 35
Sucks out my soul, thy heritage!

He sings

Past we glide, and past, and past!
What's that poor Agnese doing
Where they make the shutters fast?
Gray Zanobi's just a-wooing 40
To his couch the purchased bride:
Past we glide!

Past we glide, and past, and past!
Why's the Pucci Palace flaring
Like a beacon to the blast? 45
Guests by hundreds, not one caring
If the dear host's neck were wried:
Past we glide!

She sings

The moth's kiss, first!
Kiss me as if you made believe 50
You were not sure, this eve,
How my face, your flower, had pursed
Its petals up; so, here and there
You brush it, till I grow aware
Who wants me, and wide ope I burst. 55

¹ crucible.

The bee's kiss, now!
Kiss me as if you entered gay
My heart at some noonday,
A bud that dares not disallow
The claim, so all is rendered up, 60
And passively its shattered cup
Over your head to sleep I bow.

He sings

What are we two?
I am a Jew,
And carry thee, farther than friends can
pursue, 65
To a feast of our tribe;
Where they need thee to bribe
The devil that blasts them unless he imbibe Thy . . . Scatter the vision forever! And
now,
As of old, I am I, thou art thou! 70

Say again, what we are?
The sprite of a star,
I lure thee above where the destinies bar
My plumes their full play
Till a ruddier ray 75
Than my pale one announce there is withering away
Some . . . Scatter the vision forever! And
now,
As of old, I am I, thou art thou!

He muses

Oh, which were best, to roam or rest?
The land's lap or the water's breast? 80
To sleep on yellow millet-sheaves,
Or swim in lucid shallows just Eluding water-lily leaves,
An inch from Death's black fingers,
thrust
To lock you, whom release he must; 85
Which life were best on summer eves?

He speaks, musing

Lie back; could thought of mine improve
you?
From this shoulder let there spring
A wing; from this, another wing;
Wings, not legs and feet, shall move you!
Snow-white must they spring, to blend 91
With your flesh, but I intend
They shall deepen to the end,

Broader, into burning gold,
Till both wings crescent-wise enfold 95
Your perfect self, from 'neath your feet
To o'er your head, where, lo, they meet
As if a million sword-blades hurled Defiance from you to the world!

Rescue me thou, the only real! 100
And scare away this mad ideal
That came, nor motions to depart!
Thanks! Now, stay ever as thou art!

Still he muses

What if the Three should catch at last Thy serenader? While there's cast 105
Paul's cloak about my head, and fast
Gian pinions me, Himself has passed
His stylet¹ through my back; I reel;
And . . . is it thou I feel?

They trail me, these three godless knaves,
Past every church that saints and saves,
Nor stop till, where the cold sea raves 112
By Lido's wet accursed graves,
They scoop mine, roll me to its brink,
And . . . on thy breast I sink! 115

She replies, musing

Dip your arm o'er the boat-side, elbow-
deep,
As I do: thus: were death so unlike sleep, Caught this way? Death's to fear from flame or steel,
Or poison doubtless; but from water—
feel!
Go find the bottom! Would you stay me?
There! 120
Now pluck a great blade of that ribbon-
grass
To plait in where the foolish jewel was,
I flung away: since you have praised my
hair,
'Tis proper to be choice in what I wear.

He speaks

Row home? must we row home? Too surely Know I where its front's demurely 126
Over the Giudecca piled;
Window just with window mating,
Door on door exactly waiting,
All's the set face of a child: 130
But behind it, where's a trace

¹ stiletto.

Of the staidness and reserve,
And formal lines without a curve,
In the same child's playing-face?
No two windows look one way 135
O'er the small sea-water thread
Below them. Ah, the autumn day
I, passing, saw you overhead!
First, out a cloud of curtain blew,
Then a sweet cry, and last came you— 140
To catch your lory² that must needs
Escape just then, of all times then,
To peck a tall plant's fleecy seeds,
And make me happiest of men.
I scarce could breathe to see you reach 145
So far back o'er the balcony
To catch him ere he climbed too high Above you in the Smyrna peach, That quick the round smooth cord of
gold,
This coiled hair on your head, unrolled, 150
Fell down you like a gorgeous snake
The Roman girls were wont, of old,
When Rome there was, for coolness' sake
To let lie curling o'er their bosoms.
Dear lory, may his beak retain 155
Ever its delicate rose stain
As if the wounded lotus-blossoms
Had marked their thief to know again!

Stay longer yet, for others' sake
Than mine! What should your chamber do?
—With all its rarities that ache 161
In silence while day lasts, but wake
At night-time and their life renew,
Suspended just to pleasure you 164
Who brought against their will together
These objects, and, while day lasts, weave Around them such a magic tether
That dumb they look: your harp, believe,
With all the sensitive tight strings
Which dare not speak, now to itself 170
Breathes slumberously, as if some elf
Went in and out the chords, his wings
Make murmur wheresoe'er they graze,
As an angel may, between the maze
Of midnight palace-pillars, on 175
And on, to sow God's plagues, have gone
Through guilty glorious Babylon.
And while such murmurs flow, the nymph
Bends o'er the harp-top from her shell
As the dry limpet for the lymph³ 180
Come with a tune he knows so well.
And how your statues' hearts must swell!

² parrot.

³ spring.

And how your pictures must descend
 To see each other, friend with friend!
 Oh, could you take them by surprise, 185
 You'd find Schidone's eager Duke
 Doing the quaintest courtesies
 To that prim saint by Haste-thee-Luke!
 And, deeper into her rock den,
 Bold Castelfranco's Magdalen 190
 You'd find retreated from the ken
 Of that robed counsel-keeping Ser¹—
 As if the Tizian thinks of her,
 And is not, rather, gravely bent
 On seeing for himself what toys 195
 Are these, his progeny invent,
 What litter now the board employs Whereon he signed a document
 That got him murdered! Each enjoys
 Its night so well, you cannot break 200
 The sport up, so, indeed must make
 More stay with me, for others' sake.

She speaks

To-morrow, if a harp-string, say,
 Is used to tie the jasmine back
 That overfloods my room with sweets, 205
 Contrive your Zorzi somehow meets
 My Zanze! If the ribbon's black,
 The Three are watching: keep away!

Your gondola—let Zorzi wreath
 A mesh of water-weeds about 210
 Its prow, as if he unaware
 Had struck some quay or bridge-foot stair!
 That I may throw a paper out
 As you and he go underneath.

There's Zanze's vigilant taper; safe are
 we. 215
 Only one minute more to-night with me?
 Resume your past self of a month ago!
 Be you the bashful gallant, I will be
 The lady with the colder breast than snow.
 Now bow you, as becomes, nor touch my
 hand 220
 More than I touch yours when I step to
 land,
 And say, "All thanks, Siora!" --
 Heart to heart
 And lips to lips! Yet once more, ere we
 part,
 Clasp me and make me thine, as mine
 thou art! 224

[He is surprised, and stabbed.

¹ Sir.

He speaks

It was ordained to be so, sweet!—and
 best
 Comes now, beneath thine eyes, upon thy
 breast.
 Still kiss me! Care not for the cowards!
 Care
 Only to put aside thy beauteous hair
 My blood will hurt! The Three, I do not
 scorn
 To death, because they never lived:
 but I 230
 Have lived indeed, and so—(yet one more kiss)—can die!

A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL

SHORTLY AFTER THE REVIVAL OF LEARN-ING IN EUROPE

Let us begin and carry up this corpse,
 Singing together.
 Leave we the common crofts,¹ the vulgar
 thorpes²
 Each in its tether
 Sleeping safe on the bosom of the plain, 5
 Cared-for till cock-crow:
 Look out if yonder be not day again
 Rimming the rock-row!
 That's the appropriate country; there,
 men's thought,
 Rarer, intenser, 10
 Self-gathered for an outbreak, as it ought,
 Chafes in the censer.
 Leave we the unlettered plain its herd and crop;
 Seek we sepulture
 On a tall mountain, citied to the top, 15
 Crowded with culture!
 All the peaks soar, but one the rest excels;
 Clouds overcome³ it;
 No! yonder sparkle is the citadel's
 Circling its summit. 20 Thither our path lies; wind we up the
 heights;
 Wait ye the warning?
 Our low life was the level's and the night's;
 He's for the morning.
 Step to a tune, square chests, erect each
 head, 25
 'Ware the beholders!
 This is our master, famous, calm and dead,
 Borne on our shoulders.

¹ small farm enclosures.

² overshadow, conceal.

³ villages

Sleep, crop and herd! sleep, darkling thorpe and croft,
 Safe from the weather! 30
 He, whom we convoy to his grave aloft,
 Singing together,
 He was a man born with thy face and throat.
 Lyric Apollo!
 Long he lived nameless: how should Spring take note 35
 Winter would follow?
 Till lo, the little touch, and youth was gone!
 Cramped and diminished.
 Moaned he, "New measures, other feet
 anon!
 My dance is finished"? 40
 No, that's the world's way: (keep the mountain-side,
 Make for the city!)
 He knew the signal, and stepped on with
 pride
 Over men's pity;
 Left play for work, and grappled with
 the world 45
 Bent on escaping:
 "What's in the scroll," quoth he, "thou
 keepest furred?
 Show me their shaping,
 Theirs who most studied man, the bard and sage,— Give!"—So, he gowned him, 50 Straight got by heart that book to its last page:
 Learned, we found him.
 Yea, but we found him bald too, eyes
 like lead,
 Accents uncertain:
 "Time to taste life," another would have
 said, 55
 "Up with the curtain!"
 This man said rather, "Actual life comes next?
 Patience a moment!
 Grant I have mastered learning's crabbed text,
 Still there's the comment. 60 Let me know all! Prate not of most or least,
 Painful or easy!
 Even to the crumbs I'd fain eat up the feast,
 Ay, nor feel queasy."
 Oh, such a life as he resolved to live, 65
 When he had learned it,

When he had gathered all books had to give!
 Sooner, he spurned it.
 Image the whole, then execute the parts—
 Fancy the fabric 70
 Quite, ere you build, ere steel strike fire from quartz,
 Ere mortar dab brick!

(Here's the town-gate reached: there's the market-place Gaping before us.)
 Yea, this in him was the peculiar grace 75
 (Hearten our chorus!)
 That before living he'd learn how to live—
 No end to learning:
 Earn the means first—God surely will contrive
 Use for our earning. 80
 Others mistrust and say, "But time escapes:
 Live now or never!"
 He said, "What's time? Leave Now for dogs and apes!
 Man has Forever."
 Back to his book then: deeper drooped
 his head: 85
*Calculus*¹ racked him: Leaden before, his eyes grew dross of
 lead:
*Tussis*² attacked him.
 "Now, master, take a little rest!"—not
 he!
 (Caution redoubled, 90
 Step two abreast, the way winds narrowly!)
 Not a whit troubled,
 Back to his studies, fresher than at first,
 Fierce as a dragon
 He (soul-hydroptic³ with a sacred thirst) 95
 Sucked at the flagon.
 Oh, if we draw a circle premature,
 Heedless of far gain,
 Greedy for quick returns of profit, sure
 Bad is our bargain! 100
 Was it not great? did not he throw on God,
 (He loves the burthen)—
 God's task to make the heavenly period
 Perfect the earthen?

¹ gall stones.² a cough.³ thirsty, as in the disease of dropsy.

Did not he magnify the mind, show
clear 105
Just what it all meant?
He would not discount life, as fools do
here,
Paid by instalment.
He ventured neck or nothing—heaven's success
Found, or earth's failure: 110
"Wilt thou trust death or not?" He answered "Yes!
Hence with life's pale lure!"
That low man seeks a little thing to do,
Sees it and does it:
This high man, with a great thing to pursue, 115
Dies ere he knows it.
That low man goes on adding one to
one,
His hundred's soon hit:
This high man, aiming at a million,
Misses an unit. 120
That, has the world here—should he need the next,
Let the world mind him!
This, throws himself on God, and un-perplexed
Seeking shall find him.
So, with the throttling hands of death at strife, 125
Ground he at grammar;
Still, through the rattle, parts of speech
were rife:
While he could stammer
He settled Hoti's business—let it be!— Properly based Oun— 130
Gave us the doctrine of the enclitic De,
Dead¹ from the waist down.
Well, here's the platform, here's the proper
place:
Hail to your purlieus,²
All ye highfliers of the feathered race, 135
Swallows and curlews!
Here's the top-peak; the multitude below
Live, for they can, there:
This man decided not to Live but Know—
Bury this man there? 140
Here—here's his place, where meteors shoot, clouds form,
Lightnings are loosened, Stars come and go! Let joy break with
the storm,
Peace let the dew send!

¹ paralyzed.² haunts.

Lofty designs must close in like effects: 145
Loftily lying,
Leave him—still loftier than the world suspects,
Living and dying.

THE BISHOP ORDERS HIS TOMB AT SAINT PRAXED'S CHURCH

ROME, 15—

Vanity, saith the preacher, vanity!
Draw round my bed: is Anselm keeping
back?
Nephews—sons mine . . . ah God, I know not! Well—
She, men would have to be your mother
once,
Old Gandolf envied me, so fair she was! 5
What's done is done, and she is dead be-
side,
Dead long ago, and I am Bishop since,
And as she died so must we die ourselves,
And thence ye may perceive the world's a dream.
Life, how and what is it? As here I lie 10
In this state-chamber, dying by degrees,
Hours and long hours in the dead night,
I ask
"Do I live, am I dead?" Peace, peace seems all.
Saint Praxed's ever was the church for
peace;
And so, about this tomb of mine. I fought 15
With tooth and nail to save my niche, ye know:
—Old Gandolf cozened³ me, despite my
care;
Shrewd was that snatch from out the corner South
He graced his carrion with, God curse the
same!
Yet still my niche is not so cramped but thence 20
One sees the pulpit o' the epistle-side,
And somewhat of the choir, those silent seats,
And up into the aëry dome where live
The angels, and a sunbeam's sure to lurk:
And I shall fill my slab of basalt there, 25
And 'neath my tabernacle take my rest,

³ cheated.

With those nine columns round me, two and two,
The odd one at my feet where Anselm
stands:
Peach-blossom marble all, the rare, the ripe²⁹
As fresh-poured red wine of a mighty pulse.
—Old Gandolf with his paltry onion-stone, Put me where I may look at him! True peach,
Rosy and flawless: how I earned the prize!
Draw close: that conflagration of my church
—What then? So much was saved if ought were missed!³⁵
My sons, ye would not be my death? Go dig
The white-grape vineyard where the oil-press stood,
Drop water gently till the surface sink,
And if ye find . . . Ah God, I know not,
I! . . .
Bedded in store of rotten fig-leaves soft,⁴⁰
And corded up in a tight olive-frail,¹
Some lump, ah God, of lapis lazuli,
Big as a Jew's head cut off at the nape,
Blue as a vein o'er the Madonna's
breast . . .
Sons, all have I bequeathed you, villas,
all,⁴⁵
That brave Frascati villa with its bath,
So, let the blue lump poise between my
knees,
Like God the Father's globe on both his
hands
Ye worship in the Jesu Church so gay,
For Gandolf shall not choose but see and burst!⁵⁰
Swift as a weaver's shuttle fleet our years:
Man goeth to the grave, and where is he?
Did I say basalt for my slab, sons? Black—'Twas ever antique-black I meant! How else
Shall ye contrast my frieze to come beneath?⁵⁵
The bas-relief in bronze ye promised me,
Those Pans and Nymphs ye wot of, and perchance
Some tripod, thyrsus, with a vase or so,
The Savior at his sermon on the mount,
Saint Praxed in a glory, and one Pan⁶⁰
Ready to twitch the Nymph's last gar-

And Moses with the tables . . . but I
know
Ye mark me not! What do they whisper
thee,
Child of my bowels, Anselm? Ah, ye hope
To revel down my villas while I gasp⁶⁵ Bricked o'er with beggar's mouldy traver-tine²
Which Gandolf from his tomb-top chuckles at!
Nay, boys, ye love me—all of jasper, then!
'Tis jasper ye stand pledged to, lest I grieve
My bath must needs be left behind, alas!⁷⁰
One block, pure green as a pistachio-nut, There's plenty jasper somewhere in the
world—
And have I not Saint Praxed's ear to
pray
Horses for ye, and brown Greek manuscripts,
And mistresses with great smooth marbly limbs?⁷⁵
—That's if ye carve my epitaph aright, Choice Latin, picked phrase, Tully's every
word,
No gaudy ware like Gandolf's second
line—Tully, my masters? Ulpian serves his need!
And then how I shall lie through centuries,⁸⁰
And hear the blessed mutter of the mass,
And see God made and eaten all day
long,
And feel the steady candle-flame, and taste
Good, strong, thick, stupefying incense-
smoke!
For as I lie here, hours of the dead night,⁸⁵
Dying in state and by such slow degrees,
I fold my arms as if they clapsed a crook,
And stretch my feet forth straight as stone can point,
And let the bedclothes, for a mortcloth,³ drop Into great laps and folds of sculptor'swork:⁹⁰
And as yon tapers dwindle, and strange
thoughts
Grow, with a certain humming in my
ears,
About the life before I lived this life,

*a cheap limestone.

*pall.

And this life too, popes, cardinals and priests,
Saint Praxed at his sermon on the mount,
Your tall pale mother with her talking
eyes, 96
And new-found agate urns as fresh as day,
And marble's language, Latin pure, discreet,
—Aha, ELUCESCEBAT quoth our friend?
No Tully, said I, Ulpian at the best! 100
Evil and brief hath been my pilgrimage.
All lapis, all, sons! Else I give the Pope
My villas! Will ye ever eat my heart?
Ever your eyes were as a lizard's quick,
They glitter like your mother's for my
soul, 105
Or ye would heighten my impoverished frieze,
Piece out its starved design, and fill my vase
With grapes, and add a visor and a Term,
And to the tripod ye would tie a lynx
That in his struggle throws the thyrsus
down, 110
To comfort me on my entablature
Whereon I am to lie till I must ask
"Do I live, am I dead?" There, leave me, there!
For ye have stabbed me with ingratitude
To death—ye wish it—God, ye wish it!
Stone— 115
Gristone, a-crumble! Clammy squares which sweat
As if the corpse they keep were oozing
through—
And no more lapis to delight the world!
Well, go! I bless ye. Fewer tapers there,
But in a row: and, going, turn your backs
—Ay, like departing altar-ministrants, 121
And leave me in my church, the church for peace,
That I may watch at leisure if he leers—
Old Gandolf—at me, from his onion-
stone,
As still he envied me, so fair she was! 125

ANDREA DEL SARTO

CALLED "THE FAULTLESS PAINTER"

But do not let us quarrel any more,
No, my Lucrezia; bear with me for once:
Sit down and all shall happen as you wish.
You turn your face, but does it bring your
heart?

I'll work then for your friend's friend,
never fear, 5
Treat his own subject after his own way,
Fix his own time, accept too, his own
price,
And shut the money into this small hand
When next it takes mine. Will it? tenderly?
Oh, I'll content him,—but to-morrow,
Love! 10
I often am much wearier than you think,
This evening more than usual, and it seems
As if—forgive now—should you let me
sit Here by the window with your hand in mine
And look a half-hour forth on Fiesole, 15
Both of one mind, as married people use,
Quietly, quietly the evening through,
I might get up to-morrow to my work
Cheerful and fresh as ever. Let us try.
To-morrow, how you shall be glad for
this! 20
Your soft hand is a woman of itself,
And mine the man's bared breast she curls inside.
Don't count the time lost, neither; you must serve
For each of the five pictures we require:
It saves a model. So! keep looking so— 25
My serpentine beauty, rounds on rounds!
—How could you ever prick those perfect
ears,
Even to put the pearl there! oh, so sweet—
My face, my moon, my everybody's moon,
Which everybody looks on and calls his, 30
And, I suppose, is looked on by in turn, While she looks—no one's: very dear, no
less.
You smile? why, there's my picture ready
made,
There's what we painters call our harmony!
A common grayness silvers everything,—
All in a twilight, you and I alike 36
—You, at the point of your first pride in
me (That's gone you know),—but I, at every point;
My youth, my hope, my art, being all toned down
To yonder sober pleasant Fiesole. 40
There's the bell clinking from the chapel-
top;

That length of convent-wall across the
 way
 Holds the trees safer, huddled more in-
 side;
 The last monk leaves the garden; days decrease,
 And autumn grows, autumn in everything. 45
 Eh? the whole seems to fall into a shape
 As if I saw alike my work and self
 And all that I was born to be and do,
 A twilight-piece. Love, we are in God's
 hand.
 How strange now looks the life he makes us lead; 50
 So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!
 I feel he laid the fetter: let it lie!
 This chamber for example—turn your
 head—
 All that's behind us! You don't understand
 Nor care to understand about my art, 55
 But you can hear at least when people
 speak:
 And that cartoon, the second from the
 door
 —It is the thing, Love! so such thing should be—
 Behold Madonna!—I am bold to say.
 I can do with my pencil what I know, 60
 What I see, what at bottom of my heart
 I wish for, if I ever wish so deep—
 Do easily, too—when I say, perfectly,
 I do not boast, perhaps: yourself are judge,
 Who listened to the Legate's talk last week, 65
 And just as much they used to say in France.
 At any rate, 'tis easy, all of it!
 No sketches first, no studies, that's long
 past:
 I do what many dream of all their lives,
 —Dream? strive to do, and agonize to
 do, 70
 And fail in doing. I could count twenty
 such
 On twice your fingers, and not leave this town,
 Who strive—you don't know how the others strive
 To paint a little thing like that you smeared
 Carelessly passing with your robes afloat,— Yet do much less, so much less, Someone says, 76

(I know his name, no matter)—so much
 less!
 Well, less is more, Lucrezia: I am judged.
 There burns a truer light of God in them,
 In their vexed beating stuffed and stopped-up brain, 80
 Heart, or whate'er else, than goes on to prompt
 This low-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand of mine.
 Their works drop groundward, but themselves, I know,
 Reach many a time a heaven that's shut
 to me,
 Enter and take their place there sure
 enough, 85
 Though they come back and cannot tell
 the world.
 My works are nearer heaven, but I sit
 here.
 The sudden blood of these men! at a
 word—
 Praise them, it boils, or blame them, it boils too.
 I, painting from myself, and to myself, 90
 Know what I do, am unmoved by men's blame
 Or their praise either. Somebody remarks
 Morello's outline there is wrongly traced,
 His hue mistaken; what of that? or else,
 Rightly traced and well ordered; what of
 that? 95
 Speak as they please, what does the mountain care?
 Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
 Or what's a heaven for? All is silver-
 gray,
 Placid and perfect with my art: the
 worse!
 I know both what I want and what might
 gain, 100
 And yet how profitless to know, to sigh
 "Had I been two, another and myself,
 Our head would have o'erlooked the world!" No doubt.
 Yonder's a work now, of that famous youth
 The Urbinate who died five years ago. 105
 ('Tis copied, George Vasari sent it me.)
 Well, I can fancy how he did it all, Pouring his soul, with kings and popes
 to see,
 Reaching, that heaven might so replenish
 him,

Above and through his art—for it gives way; ¹¹⁰
 That arm is wrongly put—and there
 again—
 A fault to pardon in the drawing's lines,
 Its body, so to speak: its soul is right,
 He means right—that, a child may understand.
 Still, what an arm! and I could alter it: ¹¹⁵
 But all the play, the insight and the stretch—
 Out of me, out of me! And wherefore
 out?
 Had you enjoined them on me, given me
 soul,
 We might have risen to Rafael, I and you!
 Nay, Love, you did give all I asked, I think— ¹²⁰
 More than I merit, yes, by many times.
 But had you—oh, with the same perfect
 brow,
 And perfect eyes, and more than perfect
 mouth,
 And the low voice my soul hears, as a bird
 The fowler's pipe, and follows to the snare— ¹²⁵
 Had you, with these the same, but brought a mind!
 Some women do so. Had the mouth there urged
 "God and the glory! never care for gain.
 The present by the future, what is that?
 Live for fame, side by side with Agnolo! ¹³⁰
 Rafael is waiting: up to God, all three!"
 I might have done it for you. So it seems:
 Perhaps not. All is as God overrules.
 Beside, incentives come from the soul's
 self;
 The rest avail not. Why do I need you? ¹³⁵
 What wife had Rafael, or has Agnolo?
 In this world, who can do a thing, will
 not;
 And who would do it, cannot, I perceive:
 Yet the will's somewhat—somewhat, too,
 the power—
 And thus we half-men struggle. At the end, ¹⁴⁰
 God, I conclude, compensates, punishes.
 'Tis safer for me, if the award be strict,
 That I am something underrated here,
 Poor this long while, despised, to speak the truth.

I dared not, do you know, leave home all day, ¹⁴⁵
 For fear of chancing on the Paris lords.
 The best is when they pass and look aside;
 But they speak sometimes; I must bear it
 all.
 Well may they speak! That Francis, that first time,
 And that long festal year at Fontainebleau! ¹⁵⁰
 I surely then could sometimes leave the
 ground,
 Put on the glory, Rafael's daily wear,
 In that humane great monarch's golden
 look,—
 One finger in his beard or twisted curl
 Over his mouth's good mark that made the smile, ¹⁵⁵
 One arm about my shoulder, round my
 neck,
 The jingle of his gold chain in my ear,
 I painting proudly with his breath on me,
 All his court round him, seeing with his
 eyes,
 Such frank French eyes, and such a fire of souls ¹⁶⁰
 Profuse, my hand kept plying by those
 hearts,—
 And, best of all, this, this, this face beyond,
 This in the background, waiting on my work,
 To crown the issue with a last reward! ¹⁶⁴
 A good time, was it not, my kingly days?
 And had you not grown restless . . .
 but I know—
 'Tis done and past; 'twas right, my instinct said;
 Too live the life grew, golden and not gray,
 And I'm the weak-eyed bat no sun should tempt
 Out of his grange whose four walls make his world. ¹⁷⁰
 How could it end in any other way?
 You called me, and I came home to your
 heart.
 The triumph was—to reach and stay there; since
 I reached it ere the triumph, what is
 lost?
 Let my hands frame your face in your hair's gold, ¹⁷⁵
 You beautiful Lucrezia that are mine!
 "Rafael did this, Andrea painted that;

The Roman's is the better when you pray,
 But still the other's Virgin was his wife"—
 Men will excuse me. I am glad to judge Both pictures in your presence; clearer
 grows 181
 My better fortune, I resolve to think.
 For, do you know, Lucrezia, as God lives,
 Said one day Agnolo, his very self,
 To Rafael . . . I have known it all these
 years . . . 185
 (When the young man was flaming out his thoughts
 Upon a palace-wall for Rome to see,
 Too lifted up in heart because of it)
 "Friend, there's a certain sorry little scrub Goes up and down our Florence, none cares how, 190
 Who, were he set to plan and execute
 As you are, pricked on by your popes and
 kings,
 Would bring the sweat into that brow of yours!" To Rafael's!—And indeed the arm is
 wrong.
 I hardly dare . . . yet, only you to
 see, 195
 Give the chalk here—quick, thus the line should go!
 Ay, but the soul! he's Rafael! rub it out!
 Still, all I care for, if he spoke the truth
 (What he? why, who but Michel Agnolo?
 Do you forget already words like those?), 200
 If really there was such a chance, so lost,—
 Is, whether you're—not grateful—but more pleased.
 Well, let me think so. And you smile indeed!
 This hour has been an hour! Another
 smile?
 If you would sit thus by me every night
 I should work better, do you comprehend? 206
 I mean that I should earn more, give you
 more.
 See, it is settled dusk now; there's a star;
 Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the
 wall,
 The cue-owls speak the name we call them by. 210
 Come from the window, Love,—come in,
 at last.

We built to be so gay with. God is just.
 King Francis may forgive me; oft at nights,
 When I look up from painting, eyes tired
 out, 215
 The walls become illumined, brick from brick Distinct, instead of mortar, fierce bright
 gold,
 That gold of his I did cement them with!
 Let us but love each other. Must you
 go?
 That Cousin here again? he waits outside?
 Must see you—you, and not with me?
 Those loans? 221
 More gaming debts to pay? you smiled for that?
 Well, let smiles buy me! have you more to spend?
 While hand and eye and something of a
 heart
 Are left me, work's my ware, and what's it worth? 225
 I'll pay my fancy. Only let me sit
 The gray remainder of the evening out,
 Idle, you call it, and muse perfectly How I could paint, were I but back in France,
 One picture, just one more—the Virgin's
 face, 230
 Not yours this time! I want you at my
 side
 To hear them—that is, Michel Agnolo—
 Judge all I do and tell you of its worth.
 Will you? To-morrow, satisfy your friend.
 I take the subjects for his corridor, 235
 Finish the portrait out of hand—there,
 there,
 And throw him in another thing or two
 If he demurs; the whole should prove
 enough
 To pay for this same Cousin's freak. Be-
 side,
 What's better and what's all I care about,
 Get you the thirteen scudi for the ruff! 241 Love, does that please you? Ah, but what does he,
 The Cousin! what does he to please you
 more?

I am grown peaceful as old age to-night.
 I regret little, I would change still less. 245
 Since there my past life lies, why alter it?
 The very wrong to Francis!—it is true

I took his coin, was tempted and complied,
 And built this house and sinned, and all is said. ²⁴⁹
 My father and my mother died of want.
 Well, had I riches of my own? you see How one gets rich! Let each one bear his lot.
 They were born poor, lived poor, and poor
 they died:
 And I have labored somewhat in my time
 And not been paid profusely. Some good son ²⁵⁵
 Paint my two hundred pictures—let him
 try!
 No doubt, there's something strikes a balance. Yes,
 You loved me quite enough, it seems to-
 night.
 This must suffice me here. What would one have?
 In heaven, perhaps, new chances, one more chance— ²⁶⁰
 Four great walls in the New Jerusalem,
 Meted on each side by the angel's reed,
 For Leonard, Rafael, Agnolo and me
 To cover—the three first without a wife, While I have mine! So—still they overcome ²⁶⁵
 Because there's still Lucrezia,—as I
 choose.
 Again the Cousin's whistle! Go, my Love.

PROSPICE

Fear death? to feel the fog in my throat,
 The mist in my face,
 When the snows begin, and the blasts denote
 I am nearing the place,
 The power of the night, the press of the storm, ⁵
 The post of the foe;
 Where he stands, the Arch Fear in a visible form,
 Yet the strong man must go:
 For the journey is done and the summit attained,
 And the barriers fall, ¹⁰
 Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained,
 The reward of it all.

I was ever a fighter, so—one fight more,
 The best and the last!
 I would hate that death bandaged my eyes, and forbore, ¹⁵
 And bade me creep past.
 No! let me taste the whole of it, fare like my peers
 The heroes of old,
 Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
 Of pain, darkness and cold. ²⁰
 For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
 The black minute's at end,
 And the elements' rage, the fiend-voices that rave,
 Shall dwindle, shall blend,
 Shall change, shall become first a peace
 out of pain, ²⁵
 Then a light, then thy breast,
 O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee
 again,
 And with God be the rest!

ABT VOGLER

AFTER HE HAS BEEN EXTEMPORIZING
 UPON THE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT OF HIS INVENTION

Would that the structure brave, the man-ifold music I build,
 Bidding my organ obey, calling its keys
 to their work, Claiming each slave of the sound, at a touch, as when Solomon willed Armies of angels that soar, legions of demons that lurk,
 Man, brute, reptile, fly,—alien of end and of aim, ⁵
 Adverse, each from the other heaven-high, hell-deep removed,— Should rush into sight at once as he named
 the ineffable Name,
 And pile him a palace straight, to pleasure the princess he loved!
 Would it might tarry like his, the beautiful building of mine,
 This which my keys in a crowd pressed and importuned to raise! ¹⁰ Ah, one and all, how they helped, would dispart now and now combine,

Zealous to hasten the work, heighten their master his praise!
 And one would bury his brow with a blind
 plunge down to hell, Burrow awhile and build, broad on the roots of things, Then up again swim into sight, having based me my palace well, 15 Founded it, fearless of flame, flat on the nether springs.

And another would mount and march,
 like the excellent minion he was,
 Ay, another and yet another, one crowd
 but with many a crest, Raising my rampired¹ walls of gold as transparent as glass, Eager to do and die, yield each his place
 to the rest: 20
 For higher still and higher (as a runner
 tips with fire,
 When a great illumination surprises a festal night—
 Outlining round and round Rome's dome from space to spire)
 Up, the pinnaced glory reached, and the pride of my soul was in sight.

In sight? Not half! for it seemed, it was certain, to match man's birth, 25 Nature in turn conceived, obeying an impulse as I;
 And the emulous heaven yearned down,
 made effort to reach the earth,
 As the earth had done her best, in my passion, to scale the sky:
 Novel splendors burst forth, grew familiar and dwelt with mine,
 Not a point nor peak but found and fixed its wandering star; 30 Meteor-moons, balls of blaze: and they did not pale nor pine,
 For earth had attained to heaven, there was no more near nor far.

Nay more; for there wanted not who walked in the glare and glow, Presences plain in the place; or, fresh from the Protoplast, Furnished for ages to come, when a kindlier wind should blow, 35
 Lured now to begin and live, in a house to their liking at last;

¹ furnished with ramparts.

Or else the wonderful Dead who have passed through the body and gone, But were back once more to breathe in an old world worth their new:
 What never had been, was now; what was,
 as it shall be anon;
 And what is,—shall I say, matched both? for I was made perfect too. 40

All through my keys that gave their sounds to a wish of my soul,
 All through my soul that praised as its wish flowed visibly forth,
 All through music and me! For think,
 had I painted the whole,
 Why, there it had stood, to see, nor the process so wonder-worth:
 Had I written the same, made verse—still effect proceeds from cause, 45 Ye know why the forms are fair, ye hear how the tale is told;
 It is all triumphant art, but art in obedience to laws,
 Painter and poet are proud in the artist-list enrolled:—

But here is the finger of God, a flash of the will that can,
 Existent behind all laws, that made them and, lo, they are! 50
 And I know not if, save in this, such gift be allowed to man
 That out of three sounds he frame, not a fourth sound, but a star.
 Consider it well: each tone of our scale in itself is naught:
 It is everywhere in the world—loud,
 soft, and all is said:
 Give it to me to use! I mix it with two in my thought: 55
 And there! Ye have heard and seen:
 consider and bow the head!

Well, it is gone at last, the palace of music
 I reared; Gone! and the good tears start, the praises that come too slow;
 For one is assured at first, one scarce can say that he feared,
 That he even gave it a thought, the gone thing was to go. 60 Never to be again! But many more of the kind
 As good, nay, better perchance: is this your comfort to me?

To me, who must be saved because I cling with my mind

To the same, same self, same love, same God: ay, what was, shall be.

Therefore to whom turn I but to thee,
the ineffable Name? 65

Builder and maker, thou, of houses not made with hands!

What, have fear of change from thee who art ever the same?

Doubt that thy power can fill the heart
that thy power expands?

There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;

The evil is null, is naught, is silence implying sound; 70

What was good shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more;

On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven a perfect round.

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;

Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty,
nor good, nor power

Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist 75

When eternity affirms the conception of an hour.

The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,

The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,

Are music sent up to God by the lover and
the bard;

Enough that he heard it once: we shall hear it by and by. 80

And what is our failure here but a tri-umph's evidence

For the fullness of the days? Have we withered or agonized?

Why else was the pause prolonged but that singing might issue thence?

Why rushed the discords in, but that harmony should be prized?

Sorrow is hard to bear, and doubt is slow to clear, 85

Each sufferer says his say, his scheme
of the weal and woe:

But God has a few of us whom he whispers
in the ear;

The rest may reason and welcome: 'tis we musicians know.

Well, it is earth with me; silence resumes
her reign:

I will be patient and proud, and soberly
acquiesce. 90

Give me the keys. I feel for the common chord again,

Sliding by semitones till I sink to the minor,—yes,—

And I blunt it into a ninth, and I stand on alien ground,

Surveying awhile the heights I rolled from into the deep;

Which, hark, I have dared and done, for my resting-place is found, 95

The C Major of this life: so, now I will try to sleep.

RABBI BEN EZRA

Grow old along with me!

The best is yet to be,

The last of life, for which the first was
made:

Our times are in his hand

Who saith, "A whole I planned, 5

Youth shows but half; trust God: see all,
nor be afraid!"

Not that, amassing flowers,

Youth sighed, "Which rose make ours,

Which lily leave and then as best recall?"

Not that, admiring stars, 10

It yearned, "Nor Jove, nor Mars;

Mine be some figured flame which blends, transcends them all!"

Not for such hopes and fears

Annuling youth's brief years,

Do I remonstrate: folly wide the mark! 15

Rather I prize the doubt

Low kinds exist without,

Finished and finite clods, untroubled by a spark.

Poor vaunt of life indeed,

Were man but formed to feed 20

On joy, to solely seek and find and feast;

Such feasting ended, then

As sure an end to men;

Irks care the crop-full bird? Frets doubt the maw-crammed beast?

Rejoice we are allied 25
 To that which doth provide
 And not partake, effect and not receive!
 A spark disturbs our clod;
 Nearer we hold of God Who gives, than of his tribes that take, I must believe. 30

Then, welcome each rebuff
 That turns earth's smoothness rough,
 Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but
 go!
 Be our joys three-parts pain!
 Strive, and hold cheap the strain; 35
 Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!

For thence,—a paradox
 Which comforts while it mocks,—
 Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail:
 What I aspired to be, 40
 And was not, comforts me:
 A brute I might have been, but would not sink i' the scale.

What is he but a brute
 Whose flesh has soul to suit,
 Whose spirit works lest arms and legs want play? 45
 To man, propose this test—
 Thy body at its best,
 How far can that project thy soul on its lone way?

Yet gifts should prove their use:
 I own the Past profuse 50
 Of power each side, perfection every turn:
 Eyes, ears took in their dole,
 Brain treasured up the whole;
 Should not the heart beat once, "How good to live and learn?"

Not once beat, "Praise be thine! 55
 I see the whole design,
 I, who saw power, see now Love perfect too;
 Perfect I call thy plan:
 Thanks that I was a man!
 Maker, remake, complete,—I trust what thou shalt do!" 60

For pleasant is this flesh;
 Our soul, in its rose-mesh ~~Pulled over to the earth, still yearns for~~
 rest:

Would we some prize might hold
 To match those manifold 65 Possessions of the brute,—gain most, as we did best!

Let us not always say,
 "Spite of this flesh to-day
 I strove, made head, gained ground upon
 the whole!"
 As the bird wings and sings, 70
 Let us cry, "All good things
 Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul!"

Therefore I summon age
 To grant youth's heritage, Life's struggle having so far reached its term: 75
 Thence shall I pass, approved¹
 A man, for aye removed From the developed brute; a God though in the germ.

And I shall thereupon
 Take rest, ere I be gone 80 Once more on my adventure brave and
 new:
 Fearless and unperplexed,
 When I wage battle next,
 What weapons to select, what armor to indue.²

Youth ended, I shall try 85
 My gain or loss thereby;
 Leave the fire ashes, what survives is gold:
 And I shall weigh the same,
 Give life its praise or blame:
 Young, all lay in dispute; I shall know,
 being old. 90

For note, when evening shuts,
 A certain moment cuts
 The deed off, calls the glory from the
 gray:
 A whisper from the west
 Shoots—"Add this to the rest, 95
 Take it and try its worth: here dies another day."

So, still within this life,
 Though lifted o'er its strife,
 Let me discern, compare, pronounce at
 last,

¹ proved.² put on.

"This rage was right i' the main, 100
That acquiescence vain:
The Future I may face now I have proved the Past."

For more is not reserved
To man, with soul just nerved
To act to-morrow what he learns to-
day: 105
Here, work enough to watch
The Master work, and catch Hints of the proper craft, tricks of the tool's true play.

As it was better, youth
Should strive, through acts uncouth, 110 Toward making, than repose on aught found made:
So, better, age, exempt
From strife, should know, than tempt Further. Thou waitedst age: wait death
nor be afraid!

Enough now, if the Right 115
And Good and Infinite
Be named here, as thou callest thy hand thine own,
With knowledge absolute,
Subject to no dispute
From fools that crowded youth, nor let thee feel alone. 120

Be there, for once and all,
Severed great minds from small,
Announced to each his station in the Past!
Was I, the world arraigned,
Were they, my soul disdained, 125 Right? Let age speak the truth and give us peace at last!

Now, who shall arbitrate?
Ten men love what I hate,
Shun what I follow, slight what I receive;
Ten, who in ears and eyes 130
Match me: we all surmise,
They this thing, and I that: whom shall my soul believe?

Not on the vulgar mass
Called "work," must sentence pass, Things done, that took the eye and had the price; 135

O'er which, from level stand,
The low world laid its hand, Found straightway to its mind, could value in a trice:

But all the world's coarse thumb
And finger failed to plumb, 140
So passed in making up the main account;
All instincts immature,
All purposes unsure,
That weighed not as his work, yet swelled
the man's amount:

Thoughts hardly to be packed 145
Into a narrow act, Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
All I could never be,
All, men ignored in me,
This I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped. 150

Ay, note that Potter's wheel,
That metaphor! and feel Why time spins fast, why passive lies our clay,—
Thou, to whom fools propound,
When the wine makes its round, 155
"Since life fleets, all is change; the Past gone, seize to-day!"

Fool! All that is, at all,
Lasts ever, past recall;
Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure:
What entered into thee, 160
That was, is, and shall be:
Time's wheel runs back or stops: Potter and clay endure.

He fixed thee 'mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest: 165
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

What though the earlier grooves,
Which ran the laughing loves 170 Around thy base, no longer pause and press?

What though, about thy rim,
Skull-things in order grim Grow out, in graver mood, obey the sterner stress?

Look not thou down but up! 175
To uses of a cup,
The festal board, lamp's flash and trum-
pet's peal,
The new wine's foaming flow,
The Master's lips aglow!
Thou, heaven's consummate cup, what needst thou with earth's wheel? 180

But I need, now as then,
Thee, God, who moulded men;
And since, not even while the whirl was worst,
Did I—to the wheel of life
With shapes and colors rife, 185
Bound dizzily—mistake my end, to slake thy thirst:

So, take and use thy work,
Amend what flaws may lurk,
What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past the aim!
My times be in thy hand! 190
Perfect the cup as planned!
Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same!

EPILOGUE TO ASOLANDO

At the midnight in the silence of the sleep-
time,
When you set your fancies free,
Will they pass to where—by death, fools think, imprisoned—
Low he lies who once so loved you, whom you loved so,— —Pity me? 5

Oh, to love so, be so loved, yet so mistaken!
What had I on earth to do With the slothful, with the mawkish, the unmanly?
Like the aimless, helpless, hopeless, did I drivel
—Being—who? 10

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake. 15

No, at noonday in the bustle of man's work-time
Greet the unseen with a cheer!
Bid him forward, breast and back as either should be,
"Strive and thrive!" cry "Speed,—fight on, fare ever
There as here!" 20

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING (1806–1861)

SONNETS FROM THE PORTUGUESE

I

I thought once how Theocritus had sung
Of the sweet years, the dear and wished-for years,
Who each one in a gracious hand appears
To bear a gift for mortals, old or young:
And, as I mused it in his antique tongue, 5
I saw in gradual vision through my tears,
The sweet, sad years, the melancholy
years,
Those of my own life, who by turns had flung
A shadow across me. Straightway I was
'ware,
So weeping, how a mystic Shape did move Behind me, and drew me backward by
the hair; 11
And a voice said in mastery while I
strove,
"Guess now who holds thee?"—"Death!"
I said. But there,
The silver answer rang: "Not Death, but Love."

VII

The face of all the world is changed, I think,
Since first I heard the footsteps of thy
soul

Move still, oh, still, beside me as they stole Betwixt me and the dreadful outer brink
 Of obvious death, where I, who thought to sink, 5
 Was caught up into love and taught the whole
 Of life in a new rhythm. The cup of dole
 God gave for baptism, I am fain to drink,
 And praise its sweetness, Sweet, with thee
 anear.
 The names of country, heaven, are changed away 10
 For where thou art or shalt be, there or
 here;
 And this—this lute and song—loved
 yesterday,
 (The singing angels know) are only dear Because thy name moves right in what they say.

XXIV

If thou must love me, let it be for nought
 Except for love's sake only. Do not say,
 "I love her for her smile—her look—her
 way
 Of speaking gently,—for a trick of thought
 That falls in well with mine, and certes
 brought 5
 A sense of pleasant ease on such a day;"—
 For these things in themselves, Beloved,
 may
 Be changed, or change for thee,—and love,
 so wrought,
 May be unwrought so. Neither love me for Thine own dear pity's wiping my cheeks
 dry: 10
 A creature might forget to weep, who bore
 Thy comfort long, and lose thy love thereby.
 But love me for love's sake, that evermore
 Thou may'st love on through love's eternity.

XXVI

I lived with visions for my company,
 Instead of men and women, years ago,
 And found them gentle mates, nor thought to know
 A sweeter music than they played to me.
 But soon their trailing purple was not free
 Of this world's dust—their lutes did silent grow, 6
 And I myself grew faint and blind below

Their vanishing eyes. Then THOU didst come—to be,
 Beloved, what they seemed. Their shining fronts,
 Their songs, their splendors (better, yet
 the same, 10
 As river water, hallowed into fonts)
 Met in thee, and from out thee overcame
 My soul with satisfaction of all wants—Because God's gifts put man's best dreams to shame.

XLIII

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
 I love thee to the depth and breadth and
 height
 My soul can reach, when feeling out of sight
 For the ends of Being and Ideal Grace.
 I love thee to the level of everyday's 5
 Most quiet need, by sun and candle-
 light.
 I love thee freely, as men strive for Right;
 I love thee purely, as they turn from Praise.
 I love thee with the passion put to use
 In my old griefs, and with my childhood's faith. 10
 I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
 With my lost saints,—I love thee with the breath,
 Smiles, tears, of all my life!—and, if God
 choose,
 I shall but love thee better after death.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN

Do ye hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
 Ere the sorrow comes with years?
 They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
 And that cannot stop their tears.
 The young lambs 'are bleating in the meadows, 5
 The young birds are chirping in the
 nest,
 The young fawns are playing with the shadows,
 The young flowers are blowing toward the west—

But the young, young children, O my
 brothers,
 They are weeping bitterly! 10
 They are weeping in the playtime of the others,
 In the country of the free.

Do you question the young children in the sorrow

Why their tears are falling so?
 The old man may weep for his tomorrow 15

Which is lost in Long Ago;
 The old tree is leafless in the forest,
 The old year is ending in the frost,
 The old wound, if stricken, is the sorest,
 The old hope is hardest to be lost: 20
 But the young, young children, O my
 brothers,

Do you ask them why they stand Weeping sore before the bosoms of their mothers,
 In our happy Fatherland?

They look up with their pale and sunken faces, 25

And their looks are sad to see,
 For the man's hoary anguish draws and presses

Down the cheeks of infancy;
 "Your old earth," they say, "is very dreary;

Our young feet," they say, "are very weak; 30

Few paces have we taken, yet are weary—
 Our grave-rest is very far to seek:

Ask the aged why they weep, and not the children,

For the outside earth is cold,
 And we young ones stand without, in our bewildering, 35

And the graves are for the old.
 True," say the children, "it may happen

That we die before our time:
 Little Alice died last year, her grave is shapen

Like a snowball, in the rime.¹ 40

"We looked into the pit prepared to take
 her:

Was no room for any work in the close clay!

¹ frost.

From the sleep wherein she lieth none will wake her

Crying, 'Get up, little Alice! it is day.'
 If you listen by that grave, in sun and shower, 45

With your ear down, little Alice never
 cries;

Could we see her face, be sure we should not know her,

For the smile has time for growing in her eyes:

And merry go her moments, lulled and stilled in

The shroud by the kirk-chime. 50

It is good when it happens," say the children,

"That we die before our time."

Alas, alas, the children! they are seeking Death in life, as best to have:

They are binding up their hearts away from breaking, 55

With a cerement from the grave.
 Go out, children, from the mine and from the city,

Sing out, children, as the little thrushes do;

Pluck your handfuls of the meadowcowslips pretty,

Laugh aloud, to feel your fingers let them through! 60

But they answer, "Are your cowslips of the meadows

Like our weeds anear the mine?

Leave us quiet in the dark of the coal-
 shadows,

From your pleasures fair and fine!

"For oh," say the children, "we are weary, 65

And we cannot run or leap;

If we cared for any meadows, it were merely

To drop down in them and sleep.

Our knees tremble sorely in the stooping,

We fall upon our faces, trying to go; 70

And, underneath our heavy eyelids droop-
 ing,

The reddest flower would look as pale as snow.

For, all day, we drag our burden tiring,
 Through the coal-dark, underground;

Or, all day, we drive the wheels of iron 75
 In the factories, round and round.

"For, all day, the wheels are droning, turning;

Their wind comes in our faces,
Till our hearts turn our heads, with pulses burning,

And the walls turn in their places: 80
Turns the sky in the high window, blank and reeling,

Turns the long light that drops adown
the wall,
Turn the black flies that crawl along the ceiling:

All are turning, all the day, and we
with all.
And all day the iron wheels are dron-
ing: 85

And sometimes we could pray,
'O ye wheels,' (breaking out in a mad moaning)
'Stop! be silent for to-day!'"

Ay, be silent! Let them hear each other breathing

For a moment, mouth to mouth! 90
Let them touch each other's hands, in a fresh wreathing

Of their tender human youth!
Let them feel that this cold metallic motion
Is not all the life God fashions or reveals:

Let them prove their living souls against the notion 95
That they live in you, or under you,
O wheels!

Still, all day, the iron wheels go onward,
Grinding life down from its mark;
And the children's souls, which God is calling sunward,
Spin on blindly in the dark. 100

Now tell the poor young children, O my brothers,

To look up to Him and pray;
So the blessed One who blesseth all the others,

Will bless them another day.
They answer, "Who is God that He should hear us, 105

While the rushing of the iron wheels is stirred?

When we sob aloud, the human creatures near us

Pass by, hearing not, or answer not a word.

And we hear not (for the wheels in their resounding)

Strangers speaking at the door: 110
Is it likely God, with angels singing round
Him,

Hears our weeping any more?

"Two words, indeed, of praying we remember;

And at midnight's hour of harm,
'Our Father,' looking upward in the chamber, 115

We say softly for a charm.
We know no other words, except 'Our Father,'

And we think that, in some pause of angels' song,

God may pluck them with the silence
sweet to gather,

And hold both within His right hand which is strong. 120

'Our Father!' If He heard us, He would surely

(For they call Him good and mild) Answer, smiling down the steep world very purely,

'Come and rest with me, my child.'

"But no!" say the children, weeping faster, 125

"He is speechless as a stone:
And they tell us, of His image is the master

Who commands us to work on.
Go to!" say the children,—“Up in Heaven,

Dark, wheel-like, turning clouds are all we find: 130

Do not mock us; grief has made us unbelieving:

We look up for God, but tears have made us blind."

Do you hear the children weeping and disproving,

O my brothers, what ye preach?
For God's possible is taught by His world's loving, 135

And the children doubt of each.

And well may the children weep before
you!

They are weary ere they run;
They have never seen the sunshine, nor the glory

Which is brighter than the sun: 140

They know the grief of man, without its wisdom;
 They sink in man's despair, without its calm;
 And slaves, without the liberty in Christ-
 dom,
 Are martyrs, by the pang without the palm:
 Are worn as if with age, yet unretriev-ingly ¹⁴⁵
 The harvest of its memories cannot reap,—
 Are orphans of the earthly love and heavenly.
 Let them weep! let them weep!

They look up with their pale and sunken
 faces,
 And their look is dread to see, ¹⁵⁰
 For they mind you of their angels in high places,
 With eyes turned on Deity.
 "How long," they say, "how long, O cruel
 nation,
 Will you stand, to move the world,
 on a child's heart,— Stifle down with a mailed heel its palpitation, ¹⁵⁵
 And tread onward to your throne
 amid the mart?
 Our blood splashes upward, O gold-heaper,
 And your purple shows your path!
 But the child's sob in the silence curses deeper
 Than the strong man in his wrath." ¹⁶⁰

A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

What was he doing, the great god Pan,
 Down in the reeds by the river?
 Spreading ruin and scattering ban,
 Splashing and paddling with hoofs of a goat,
 And breaking the golden lilies afloat ⁵
 With the dragon-fly on the river?

He tore out a reed, the great god Pan,
 From the deep cool bed of the river;
 The limpid water turbidly ran
 And the broken lilies a-dying lay, ¹⁰
 And the dragon-fly had fled away,
 Ere he brought it out of the river.

High on the shore sat the great god Pan,
 While turbidly flowed the river;
 And hacked and hewed as a great god can ¹⁵
 With his hard bleak steel at the patient
 reed,
 Till there was not a sign of the leaf indeed
 To prove it fresh from the river.

He cut it short, did the great god Pan,
 (How tall it stood in the river!), ²⁰
 Then drew the pith, like the heart of a
 man,
 Steadily from the outside ring,
 And notched the poor dry empty thing
 In holes, as he sat by the river.

"This is the way," laughed the great god
 Pan ²⁵
 (Laughed while he sat by the river),
 "The only way, since gods began
 To make sweet music, they could succeed."
 Then dropping his mouth to a hole in the
 reed,
 He blew in power by the river. ³⁰

Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan!
 Piercing sweet by the river!
 Blinding sweet, O great god Pan!
 The sun on the hill forgot to die,
 And the lilies revived, and the dragonfly ³⁵
 Came back to dream on the river.

Yet half a beast is the great god Pan
 To laugh, as he sits by the river,
 Making a poet out of a man: ³⁹
 The true gods sigh for the cost and pain—
 For the reed which grows never more again
 As a reed with the reeds of the river.

EDWARD FITZGERALD (1809–1883)

RUBÁIYÁT OF OMAR KHAYYÁM

I

Wake! For the Sun, who scatter'd into flight
 The Stars before him from the Field of
 Night,
 Drives Night along with them from Heav'n, and strikes
 The Sultán's Turret with a Shaft of Light.

II

Before the phantom of False morning
died,
Methought a Voice within the Tavern
cried,
"When all the Temple is prepared
within,
Why nods the drowsy Worshipper outside?"

III

And, as the Cock crew, those who stood
before
The Tavern shouted—"Open then the Door!
You know how little while we have to stay,
And, once departed, may return no more."

IV

Now the New Year reviving old Desires,
The thoughtful Soul to Solitude retires,
Where the WHITE HAND OF MOSES ON the Bough Puts out, and Jesus from the Ground suspires.

V

Iram indeed is gone with all his Rose,
And Jamshyd's Sev'n-ring'd Cup where no one knows;
But still a Ruby kindles in the Vine,
And many a Garden by the Water blows.

VI

And David's lips are lockt; but in divine High-piping Pehlevi, with "Wine! Wine!
Wine!
Red Wine!"—the Nightingale cries to
the Rose
That sallow cheek of hers to incarnadine.

VII

Come, fill the Cup, and in the fire of
Spring
Your Winter-garment of Repentance fling:
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the Bird is on the Wing.

VIII

Whether at Naishápúr or Babylon, Whether the Cup with sweet or bitter
run,

The Wine of Life keeps oozing drop by drop,
The Leaves of Life keep falling one by one

IX

Each Morn a thousand Roses brings, you
say;
Yes, but where leaves the Rose of Yester-
day?
And this first Summer month that brings the Rose Shall take Jamshyd and Kaikobád away.

X

Well, let it take them! What have we to do
With Kaikobád the Great, or Kaikhosrú?
Let Zál and Rustum bluster as they
will,
Or Hâtim call to Supper—heed not you.

XI

With me along the strip of Herbage strown
That just divides the desert from the sown,
Where name of Slave and Sultán is
forgot—
And Peace to Mahmúd on his golden Throne!

XII

A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and
Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

XIII

Some for the Glories of This World; and some Sigh for the Prophet's Paradise to come; 50
Ah, take the Cash, and let the Credit
go,
Nor heed the rumble of a distant Drum!

XIV

Look to the blowing Rose about us—"Lo, Laughing," she says, "into the world I
blow,
At once the silken tassel of my Purse 55
Tear, and its Treasure on the Garden throw."

XV

And those who husbanded the Golden
Grain,
And those who flung it to the winds like
Rain,
Alike to no such aureate Earth are
turn'd
As, buried once, Men want dug up again.⁶⁰

XVI

The Worldly Hope men set their Hearts
upon
Turns Ashes—or it prospers; and anon,
Like Snow upon the Desert's dusty
Face,
Lighting a little hour or two—was gone.

XVII

Think, in this batter'd Caravanserai¹ 65 Whose Portals are alternate Night and
Day,
How Sultán after Sultán with his Pomp Abode his destin'd Hour, and went his way.

XVIII

They say the Lion and the Lizard keep The Courts where Jamshyd gloried and drank deep: 70
And Bahrám, that great Hunter—the Wild Ass
Stamps o'er his Head, but cannot break his Sleep.

XIX

I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Cæsar bled;
That every Hyacinth the Garden wears Dropt in her Lap from some once lovely
Head. 76

XX

And this reviving Herb whose tender
Green
Fledges the River-Lip on which we lean—
Ah, lean upon it lightly! for who knows
From what once lovely Lip it springs unseen! 80

XXI

Ah, my Beloved, fill the Cup that clears
To-day of past Regrets and future Fears:

¹ Inn.

To-morrow!—Why, To-morrow I may
be Myself with Yesterday's Sev'n thousand Years.

XXII

For some we loved, the loveliest and the
best 85
That from his Vintage rolling Time hath prest,
Have drunk their Cup a Round or two
before,
And one by one crept silently to rest.

XXIII

And we that now make merry in the Room
They left, and Summer dresses in new bloom, 90
Ourselves must we beneath the Couch of Earth
Descend—ourselves to make a couch—for whom?

XXIV

Ah, make the most of what we yet may spend,
Before we too into the Dust descend;
Dust into Dust, and under Dust to lie, 95 Sans Wine, sans Song, sans Singer, and—sans End!

XXV

Alike for those who for To-day prepare,
And those that after some To-morrow stare,
A Muezzin from the Tower of Darkness
cries,
"Fools! your Reward is neither Here nor
There." 100

XXVI

Why, all the Saints and Sages who dis-cuss'd
Of the Two Worlds so wisely—they are thrust
Like foolish Prophets forth; their Words to Scorn
Are scatter'd, and their Mouths are stopt with Dust.

XXVII

Myself when young did eagerly frequent Doctor and Saint, and heard great argument 106
About it and about: but evermore Came out by the same door where in I went.

XXVIII

With them the seed of Wisdom did I sow,
And with mine own hand wrought to make it grow; 110
And this was all the Harvest that I reap'd—
"I came like Water, and like Wind I go."

XXIX

Into this Universe, and Why not knowing Nor Whence, like Water willy-nilly flowing;
And out of it, as Wind along the Waste,
I know not Whither, willy-nilly, blowing.

XXX

What, without asking, hither hurried Whence? 117
And, without asking, Whither hurried
hence?
Oh, many a Cup of this forbidden Wine
Must drown the memory of that insolence!

XXXI

Up from Earth's Centre through the Seventh Gate 121
I rose, and on the Throne of Saturn sate,
And many a Knot unravell'd by the Road;
But not the Master-knot of Human Fate.

XXXII

There was the Door to which I found no
Key; 125
There was the Veil through which I might not see:
Some little talk awhile of ME and THEE
There was—and then no more of THEE
and ME.

XXXIII

Earth could not answer; nor the Seas that mourn
In flowing Purple, of their Lord forlorn; 130
Nor rolling Heaven, with all his Signs reveal'd
And hidden by the sleeve of Night and Morn.

XXXIV

Then of the THEE IN ME who works behind
The Veil, I lifted up my hands to find

A Lamp amid the Darkness; and I
heard, 135
As from Without—"THE ME WITHIN THEE BLIND!"

XXXV

Then to the Lip of this poor earthen Urn
I lean'd, the Secret of my Life to learn:
And Lip to Lip it murmur'd—"While you live,
Drink!—for, once dead, you never shall return." 140

XXXVI

I think the Vessel, that with fugitive Articulation answer'd, once did live,
And drink; and Ah! the passive Lip I kiss'd,
How many Kisses might it take—and give!

XXXVII

For I remember stopping by the way 145
To watch a Potter thumping his wet Clay:
And with its all-obiterated Tongue
It murmur'd—"Gently, Brother, gently, pray!"

XXXVIII

And has not such a Story from of Old Down Man's successive generations roll'd
Of such a clod of saturated Earth 151
Cast by the Maker into Human mould?

XXXIX

And not a drop that from our Cups we throw
For Earth to drink of, but may steal below
To quench the fire of Anguish in some
Eye 155
There hidden—far beneath, and long ago.

XL

As then the Tulip for her morning sup
Of Heav'nly Vintage from the soil looks
up,
Do you devoutly do the like, till Heav'n
To Earth invert you—like an empty
Cup. 160

XLI

Perplext no more with Human or Divine,
To-morrow's tangle to the winds resign,
And lose your fingers in the tresses of
The Cypress-slender Minister of Wine.

XLII

And if the Wine you drink, the Lip you press,¹⁶⁵
End in what All begins and ends in—Yes;
Think then you are TO-DAY what
YESTERDAY
You were—TO-MORROW you shall not be less.

XLIII

So when the Angel of the darker Drink
At last shall find you by the river-brink,¹⁷⁰
And, offering his Cup, invite your Soul Forth to your Lips to quaff—you shall not shrink.

XLIV

Why, if the Soul can fling the Dust aside,
And naked on the Air of Heaven ride,
Were 't not a Shame—were 't not a Shame for him¹⁷⁵
In this clay carcase crippled to abide?

XLV

'Tis but a Tent where takes his one day's
rest
A Sultân to the realm of Death address;
The Sultân rises, and the dark Ferrâsh¹
Strikes, and prepares it for another Guest.

XLVI

And fear not lest Existence closing your¹⁸¹
Account, and mine, should know the like no more;
The Eternal Sâki² from that Bowl has pour'd
Millions of Bubbles like us, and will pour.

XLVII

When You and I behind the Veil are past,¹⁸⁵
Oh, but the long, long while the World shall last
Which of our Coming and Departure
heeds
As the Sea's self should heed a pebble-cast.

XLVIII

A Moment's Halt—a momentary taste
Of Being from the Well amid the Waste—

² wine-bearer.

And Lo!—the phantom Caravan has reach'd¹⁹¹
The NOTHING it set out from—Oh, make haste!

XLIX

Would you that spangle of Existence spend
About THE SECRET—quick about it, Friend!
A Hair perhaps divides the False and True—¹⁹⁵
And upon what, prithee, does life depend?

L

A Hair perhaps divides the False and True;
Yes; and a single Alif³ were the clue—
Could you but find it—to the Treasure-
house,
And peradventure to THE MASTER too; ²⁰⁰

LI

Whose secret Presence, through Creation's
veins
Running Quicksilver-like eludes your
pains;
Taking all shapes from Mâh to Mâhi;⁴
and They change and perish all—but He remains;

LII

A moment guess'd—then back behind the Fold²⁰⁵
Immerst of Darkness round the Drama
roll'd
Which, for the Pastime of Eternity,
He doth Himself contrive, enact, behold.

LIII

But if in vain, down on the stubborn floor
Of Earth, and up to Heav'n's unopening Door,²¹⁰
You gaze TO-DAY, while You are You—how then
TO-MORROW, when You shall be You no
more?

LIV

Waste not your Hour, nor in the vain pursuit
Of This and That endeavor and dispute;
Better be jocund with the fruitful Grape
Than sadden after none, or bitter,
Fruit.²¹⁶

³ the letter A.⁴ from fish to moon.

LV

You know, my Friends, with what a brave
Carouse
I made a Second Marriage in my house;
Divorced old barren Reason from my
Bed,
And took the Daughter of the Vine to Spouse. 220

LVI

For "Is" and "Is-NOT" though with Rule and Line,
And "UP-AND-DOWN" by Logic I define,
Of all that one should care to fathom, I
Was never deep in anything but—Wine.

LVII

Ah, but my Computations, People say, ²²⁵
Reduced the Year to better reckoning?—
Nay,
'Twas only striking from the Calendar
Unborn To-morrow, and dead Yesterday.

LVIII

And lately, by the Tavern Door agape, Came shining through the Dusk an Angel
Shape 230
Bearing a Vessel on his Shoulder; and He bid me taste of it; and 't was—the Grape!

LIX

The Grape that can with Logic absolute
The Two-and-Seventy jarring Sects con-fute:
The sovereign Alchemist that in a trice 235
Life's leaden metal into Gold transmute:

LX

The mighty Mahmūd, Allah-breathing
Lord,
That all the misbelieving and black Horde
Of Fears and Sorrows that infest the
Soul
Scatters before him with his whirlwind Sword. 240

LXI

Why, be this Juice the growth of God, who dare
Blasphe me the twisted tendril as a Snare?

A Blessing, we should use it, should we
not?

And if a Curse—why, then, Who set it
there?

LXII

I must abjure the Balm of Life, I must, ²⁴⁵ Scared by some After-reckoning ta'en on trust,
Or lured with Hope of some Diviner
Drink,
To fill the Cup—when crumbled into Dust!

LXIII

Oh, threats of Hell and Hopes of Paradise!
One thing at least is certain—This Life
flies; 250
One thing is certain and the rest is Lies;
The Flower that once has blown for ever dies.

LXIV

Strange, is it not? that of the myriads who Before us pass'd the door of Darkness
through,
Not one returns to tell us of the Road,
Which to discover we must travel too. 256

LXV

The Revelations of Devout and Learn'd
Who rose before us, and as Prophets burn'd,
Are all but Stories, which, awoke from
Sleep
They told their comrades, and to Sleep re-turn'd. 260

LXVI

I sent my Soul through the Invisible,
Some letter of that After-life to spell:
And by and by my Soul return'd to me,
And answer'd "I Myself am Heav'n and Hell!"

LXVII

Heav'n but the Vision of fulfill'd Desire, ²⁶⁵
And Hell the Shadow from a Soul on fire, Cast on the Darkness into which Our-
selves,
So late emerged from, shall so soon expire.

LXVIII

We are no other than a moving row
Of Magic Shadow-shapes that come and
go 270

Round with the Sun-illumin'd Lantern
held
In Midnight by the Master of the Show;

LXX

But helpless Pieces of the Game He plays
Upon this Chequer-board of Nights and
Days;
Hither and thither moves, and checks,
and slays,²⁷⁵
And one by one back in the Closet lays.

LXX

The Ball no question makes of Ayes and Noes,
But Here or There as strikes the Player
goes;
And He that toss'd you down into the Field,
He knows about it all—HE knows—HE knows!²⁸⁰

LXXI

The Moving Finger writes; and, having
writ,
Moves on: nor all your Piety nor Wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

LXXII

And that inverted Bowl they call the Sky,²⁸⁵
Whereunder crawling coop'd we live and
die,
Lift not your hands to It for help—for
It
As impotently moves as you or I.

LXXIII

With Earth's first Clay They did the Last Man knead,
And there of the Last Harvest sow'd the Seed:²⁹⁰
And the first Morning of Creation wrote
What the Last Dawn of Reckoning shall read.

LXXIV

YESTERDAY This Day's Madness did prepare;
To-morrow's Silence, Triumph, or De-
spair:

Drink! for you know not whence you came, nor why:²⁹⁵
Drink! for you know not why you go, nor where.

LXXV

I tell you this—When, started from the Goal,
Over the flaming shoulders of the Foal
Of Heav'n Parwin and Mushtari¹ they flung,
In my predestined Plot of Dust and Soul³⁰⁰

LXXVI

The Vine had struck a fibre: which about
If clings my Being—let the Dervish flout;
Of my Base metal may be filed a Key,
That shall unlock the Door he howls without.

LXXVII

And this I know: whether the one True
Light³⁰⁵
Kindle to Love, or Wrath-consume me quite,
One Flash of It within the Tavern caught
Better than in the Temple lost outright.

LXXVIII

What! out of senseless Nothing to provoke A conscious Something to resent the yoke³¹⁰
Of unpermitted Pleasure, under pain
Of Everlasting Penalties, if broke!

LXXIX

What! from his helpless Creature be repaid
Pure Gold for what he lent him dross-allay'd—
Sue for a Debt we never did contract,³¹⁵
And cannot answer—Oh, the sorry trade!

LXXX

Oh Thou, who didst with pitfall and with gin
Beset the Road I was to wander in,
Thou wilt not with Predestined Evil
round
Enmesh, and then impute my Fall to Sin!³²⁰

¹ The Pleiads and Jupiter.

LXXXI

Oh Thou, who Man of baser Earth didst
make,
And ev'n with Paradise devise the Snake:
For all the Sin wherewith the Face of
Man
Is blacken'd—Man's forgiveness give—and take!

.

LXXXII

As under cover of departing Day 325
Slunk hunger-stricken Ramazan away,
Once more within the Potter's house
alone
I stood, surrounded by the Shapes of Clay.

LXXXIII

Shapes of all Sorts and Sizes, great and small,
That stood along the floor and by the wall;
And some loquacious Vessels were; and
some Listen'd perhaps, but never talk'd at all.

LXXXIV

Said one among them—"Surely not in
vain
My substance of the common Earth was ta'en
And to this Figure moulded, to be broke,
Or trampled back to shapeless Earth
again."

LXXXV

Then said a Second—"Ne'er a peevish
Boy
Would break the Bowl from which he drank in joy;
And He that with his hand the Vessel
made
Will surely not in after Wrath destroy." 340

LXXXVI

After a momentary silence spake
Some Vessel of a more ungainly Make:
"They sneer at me for leaning all awry:
What! did the Hand then of the Potter shake?"

LXXXVII

Whereat some of the loquacious Lot— 345
I think a Sufi pipkin—waxing hot—
"All this of Pot and Potter—Tell me
then,
Who is the Potter, pray, and who the Pot?"

LXXXVIII

"Why," said another, "Some there are who tell
Of one who threatens he will toss to Hell 350
The luckless Pots he marr'd in making—Pish!
He's a Good Fellow, and 't will all be well."

LXXXIX

"Well," murmur'd one, "Let whoso make or buy,
My Clay with long Oblivion is gone dry:
But fill me with the old familiar Juice, 355
Methinks I might recover by and by."

XC

So while the Vessels one by one were speaking,
The little Moon look'd in that all were seeking:
And then they jogg'd each other,
"Brother! Brother!
Now for the Porter's shoulder-knot a-creaking!" 360

.

XCI

Ah, with the Grape my fading Life provide,
And wash the Body whence the Life has
died,
And lay me, shrouded in the living Leaf,
By some not unfrequented Garden-side.

XCII

That ev'n my buried Ashes such a snare 365
Of Vintage shall fling up into the Air
As not a True-believer passing by But shall be overtaken unaware.

XCIII

Indeed the Idols I have loved so long Have done my credit in this World much
wrong: 370

Have drown'd my Glory in a shallow Cup,
And sold my Reputation for a Song.

XCIV

Indeed, indeed, Repentance oft before
I swore—but was I sober when I swore?
And then and then came Spring, and Rose-in-hand 375
My thread-bare Penitence apieces tore.

XCV

And much as Wine has play'd the Infidel,
And robb'd me of my Robe of Honor—
Well,
I wonder often what the Vintners buy
One half so precious as the stuff they sell. 380

XCVI

Yet Ah, that Spring should vanish with
the Rose!
That Youth's sweet-scented manuscript should close!
The Nightingale that in the branches
sang,
Ah whence, and whither flown again, who knows!

XCVII

Would but the Desert of the Fountain
yield 385
One glimpse—if dimly, yet indeed, reveal'd,
To which the fainting Traveller might
spring,
As springs the trampled herbage of the field.

XCVIII

Would but some wingéd Angel ere too
late
Arrest the yet unfolded Roll of Fate, 390
And make the stern Recorder otherwise
Enregister, or quite obliterate!

XCIX

Ah Love! could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of Things
Entire,
Would not we shatter it to bits—and
then 395
Re-mould it nearer to the Heart's desire!

C

Yon rising Moon that looks for us again—
How oft hereafter will she wax and wane;
How oft hereafter rising look for us Through this same Garden—and for one in vain! 400

CI

And when like her, oh Sáki, you shall pass Among the Guests Star-scatter'd on the Grass,
And in your joyous errand reach the spot
Where I made One—turn down an empty Glass!

TAMAM¹

THOMAS CARLYLE (1795–1881)

From SARTOR RESARTUS

Book III, Chapter 8

NATURAL SUPERNATURALISM

It is in his stupendous Section, headed Natural Supernaturalism, that the Professor first becomes a Seer; and, after long effort, such as we have witnessed, finally subdues under his feet the refractory Clothes-Philosophy, and takes victorious possession thereof. Phantasms enough he has had to struggle with; "Cloth-webs and Cob-webs," of Imperial Mantles, Superannuated Symbols, and what [10 not; yet still did he courageously pierce through. Nay, worst of all, two quite mysterious, world embracing Phantasms, TIME and SPACE, have ever hovered round him, perplexing and bewildering; but with these also he now resolutely grapples, these also he victoriously rends asunder. In a word, he has looked fixedly on Existence, till, one after the other, its earthly hulls and garnitures have all [20 melted away; and now, to his rapt vision, the interior celestial Holy of Holies lies disclosed.

. . . This stupendous Section we, after long painful meditation, have found not to be unintelligible; but, on the contrary, to grow clear, nay radiant, and all-illuminating. Let the reader, turning on it what utmost force of speculative intellect is in him, do his part; as we, [30 by judicious selection and adjustment, shall study to do ours:

¹ the end.

"Deep has been, and is, the significance of Miracles," thus quietly begins the Professor; "far deeper perhaps than we imagine. Meanwhile, the question of questions were: What specially is a Miracle? To that Dutch King of Siam, an icicle had been a miracle; whoso had carried with him an air-pump and [40 vial of vitriolic ether, might have worked a miracle. To my Horse, again, who unhappily is still more unscientific, do not I work a miracle, and magical 'Open sesame!' every time I please to pay twopence and open for him an impassable Schlagbaum, or shut Turnpike?

"But is not a real Miracle simply a violation of the Laws of Nature?" ask several. Whom I answer by this [50 new question: what are the Laws of Nature? To me perhaps the rising of one from the dead were no violation of these Laws, but a confirmation; were some far deeper Law, now first penetrated into, and by Spiritual Force, even as the rest have all been, brought to bear on us with its Material Force.

* * * * *

"But is it not the deepest Law of Nature that she be constant?" cries an [60 illuminated class: 'Is not the Machine of the Universe fixed to move by unalterable rules?' Probable enough, good friends: nay, I, too, must believe that the God, whom ancient inspired men assert to be 'without variableness or shadow of turning,' does indeed never change; that Nature, that the Universe, which no one whom it so pleases can be prevented from calling a Machine, [70 does move by the most unalterable rules. And now of you too I make the old inquiry: What those same unalterable rules, forming the complete Statute-Book of Nature, may possibly be?

"They stand written in our Works of Science, say you; in the accumulated records of man's Experience?—Was man with his Experience present at the Creation, then, to see how it all went on? [80 Have any deepest scientific individuals yet dived down to the foundations of the Universe, and gauged everything there? Did the Maker take them into His counsel; that they read His ground-plan of the incomprehensible All, and can say, This stands marked therein, and no more than this? Alas! not in anywise! These scientific individuals have been nowhere but where we also are; have seen some [90 handbreadths deeper than we see into the Deep that is infinite, without bottom as without shore.

* * * * *

"System of Nature! To the wisest man, wide as is his vision, Nature remains of quite infinite depth, of quite infinite expansion; and all Experience thereof limits itself to some few computed centuries, and measured square-miles. The course of Nature's phases, on this our [100 little fraction of a Planet, is partially known to us: but who knows what deeper courses these depend on; what infinitely larger Cycle (of causes) our little Epicycle revolves on? To the Minnow every cranny and pebble, and quality and accident, of its little native Creek may have become familiar: but does the Minnow understand the Ocean Tides and periodic Currents, the Trade-winds, and Mon- [110 soons, and Moon's Eclipses,—by all which the condition of its little Creek is regulated, and may, from time to time (unmiraculously enough), be quite overset and reversed? Such a minnow is Man; his Creek this Planet Earth; his Ocean the immeasurable All; his Monsoons and periodic Currents the mysterious Course of Providence through Æons of Æons.

"We speak of the Volume of Na- [120 ture: and truly a Volume it is,—whose Author and Writer is God. To read it! Dost thou, does man, so much as well know the Alphabet thereof? . . .

"Innumerable are the illusions and legerdemain-tricks of Custom: but of all these perhaps the cleverest is her knack of persuading us that the Miraculous, by simple repetition, ceases to be Miraculous. True, it is by this means [130 we live; for man must work as well as wonder: and herein is Custom so far a kind nurse, guiding him to his true benefit. But she is a fond foolish nurse, or rather we are false foolish nurslings, when, in our resting and reflecting hours, we prolong the same deception. . . .

"But deepest of all illusory Appearances, for hiding Wonder, as for many other ends, are your two grand funda- [140] mental world-enveloping Appearances, SPACE and TIME. These, as spun and woven for us from before Birth itself, to clothe our celestial ME for dwelling here, and yet to blind it,—lie all-embracing, as the universal canvas, or warp and woof, whereby all minor Illusions, in this Phantasm Existence, weave and paint themselves. In vain, while here on Earth, shall you endeavor to strip them off; [150] you can, at best, but rend them asunder for moments, and look through.

"Fortunatus had a wishing Hat, which when he put on, and wished himself Anywhere, behold he was There. By this means had Fortunatus triumphed over Space, he had annihilated Space; for him there was no Where, but all was Here. Were a Hatter to establish himself, in the Wahngasse of Weissnichtwo, and [160] make felts of this sort for all mankind, what a world we should have of it! Still stranger, should, on the opposite side of the street, another Hatter establish himself; and, as his fellow-craftsman made Space-annihilating Hats, make Time-annihilating! Of both would I purchase, were it with my last groschen, but chiefly of this latter. To clap-on your felt, and, simply by wishing that you were [170] Anywhere, straightway to be There! Next to clap-on your other felt, and simply by wishing that you were Anywhen, straightway to be Then! This were indeed the grander: shooting at will from the Fire-Creation of the World to its Fire-Consummation; here historically present in the First Century, conversing face to face with Paul and Seneca; there prophetically in the Thirty-first, con- [180] versing also face to face with other Pauls and Senecas, who as yet stand hidden in the depth of that late Time!

"Or thinkest thou, it were impossible, unimaginable? Is the Past annihilated, then, or only past; is the Future non-extant or only future? Those mystic faculties of thine, Memory and Hope, already answer: already through those mystic avenues, thou the Earth- [190] blinded summonest both Past and Future, and communest with them, though as yet darkly, and with mute beckonings. The curtains of Yesterday drop down, the curtains of To-morrow roll up; but Yesterday and To-morrow both are. Pierce through the Time-Element, glance into the Eternal. Believe what thou findest written in the sanctuaries of Man's Soul, even as all Thinkers, in all [200] ages, have devoutly read it there: that Time and Space are not God, but creations of God; that with God as it is a universal HERE, so is it an everlasting Now.

"And seest thou therein any glimpse of IMMORTALITY?—O Heaven! Is the white Tomb of our Loved One, who died from our arms, and had to be left behind us there, which rises in the distance, like [210] a pale, mournfully receding Milestone, to tell how many toilsome uncheered miles we have journeyed on alone,—but a pale spectral Illusion! Is the lost Friend still mysteriously Here, even as we are Here mysteriously with God!—Know of a truth that only the Time-shadows have perished, or are perishable; that the real Being of whatever was, and whatever is, and whatever will be, is even now and [220] forever. This, should it unhappily seem new, thou mayst ponder at thy leisure; for the next twenty years, or the next twenty centuries: believe it thou must; understand it thou canst not.

"That the Thought-forms, Space and Time, wherein, once for all, we are sent into this Earth to live, should condition and determine our whole Practical reasonings, conceptions, and imagings or [230] imaginings,—seems altogether fit, just, and unavoidable. But that they should, furthermore, usurp such sway over pure spiritual Meditation, and blind us to the wonder everywhere lying close on us, seems nowise so. Admit Space and Time to their due rank as Forms of Thought; nay, even, if thou wilt, to their quite undue rank of Realities: and consider, then, with thyself how their [240 thin disguises hide from us the brightest God-effulgences! Thus, were it not miraculous, could I stretch forth my hand and clutch the Sun? Yet thou seest me daily stretch forth my hand, and therewith clutch many a thing, and swing it hither and thither. Art thou a grown baby, then, to fancy that the Miracle lies in miles of distance, or in pounds avoird-upois of weight; and not to see that [250

the true inexplicable God-revealing Miracle lies in this, that I can stretch forth my hand at all; that I have free Force to clutch aught therewith? Innumerable other of this sort are the deceptions, and wonder-hiding stupefactions, which Space practices on us.

"Still worse is it with regard to Time.
Your grand anti-magician, and universal wonder-hider, is this same lying Time. [260
Had we but the Time-annihilating Hat, to put on for once only, we should see ourselves in a World of Miracles, wherein all fabled or authentic Thaumaturgy, and feats of Magic, were outdone. But unhappily we have not such a Hat; and man, poor fool that he is, can seldom and scantly help himself without one.

"Were it not wonderful, for instance, had Orpheus, or Amphion, built the [270 walls of Thebes by the mere sound of his Lyre? Yet tell me, Who built these walls of Weissnichtwo; summoning out all the sandstone rocks, to dance along from the Stein-bruch (now a huge Troglodyte Chasm, with frightful green-mantled pools); and shape themselves into Doric and Ionic pillars, squared ashlar houses, and noble streets? Was it not the still higher Orpheus, or Orpheuses, who, in past [280 centuries, by the divine Music of Wisdom, succeeded in civilizing man? Our highest Orpheus walked in Judea, eighteen hundred years ago: his sphere-melody, flowing in wild native tones, took captive the ravished souls of men; and, being of a truth sphere-melody, still flows and sounds, though now with thousandfold accomplishments, and rich symphonies, through all our hearts; and modulates, and divinely [290 leads them. Is that a wonder, which happens in two hours; and does it cease to be wonderful if happening in two million?

Not only was Thebes built by the music of an Orpheus; but without the music of some inspired Orpheus was no city ever built,
no work that man glories in ever done.

"Sweep away the Illusion of Time;
glance, if thou have eyes, from the near moving-cause to its far-distant Mover: [300
The stroke that came transmitted through a whole galaxy of elastic balls, was it less a stroke than if the last ball only had been struck, and sent flying? Oh, could I (with the Time-annihilating Hat) transport thee direct from the Beginnings to the Endings, how were thy eyesight unsealed, and thy heart set flaming in the Light-sea of celestial wonder! Then sawest thou that this fair Universe, [310 were it in the meanest province thereof, is in very deed the star-domed City of God; that through every star, through every grass-blade, and most through every Living Soul, the glory of a present God still beams. But Nature, which is the Time-vesture of God, and reveals Him to the wise, hides Him from the foolish.

"Again, could anything be more miraculous than an actual authentic Ghost? [320
The English Johnson longed, all his life, to see one; but could not, though he went to Cock Lane, and thence to the churchvaults, and tapped on coffins. Foolish Doctor! Did he never, with the mind's eye as well as with the body's, look round him into that full tide of human Life he so loved; did he never so much as look into Himself? The good Doctor was a Ghost, as actual and authentic as [330 heart could wish; well-nigh a million of Ghosts were travelling the streets by his side. Once more I say, sweep away the illusion of Time; compress the threescore years into three minutes: what else was he, what else are we? Are we not Spirits, that are shaped into a body, into an Appearance; and that fade away again into air, and Invisibility? This is no metaphor, it is a simple scientific fact; we [340 start out of Nothingness, take figure, and are Apparitions; round us, as round the veriest spectre, is Eternity; and to Eternity minutes are as years and æons. Come there not tones of Love and Faith, as from celestial harp-strings, like the Song of beatified Souls? And again, do not we squeak and gibber (in our discordant, screech-owlish debates and recriminations); and glide bodeful and feeble, [350 and fearful; or uproar (poltern), and revel in our mad Dance of the Dead,—till the scent of the morning-air summons us to our still Home; and dreamy Night becomes awake and Day? Where now is Alexander of Macedon: does the steel Host, that yelled in fierce battle-shouts, at Issus and Arbela, remain behind him; or have they all vanished utterly, even as perturbed Goblins must? Napoleon [360 too, and his Moscow Retreats and Austerlitz Campaigns! Was it all other than the veriest Spectre-hunt; which has now, with its howling tumult that made night hideous, flitted away?—Ghosts! There are nigh a thousand million walking the Earth openly at noontide; some half-hundred have vanished from it, some half-hundred have arisen in it, ere thy watch ticks once. [370

“O Heaven, it is mysterious, it is awful to consider that we not only carry each a future Ghost within him; but are, in very deed, Ghosts! These Limbs, whence had we them; this stormy Force; this life-blood with its burning Passion? They are dust and shadow; a Shadow-system gathered round our ME; wherein through some moments or years, the Divine Essence is to be revealed in the [380 Flesh. That warrior on his strong war-horse, fire flashes through his eyes; force dwells in his arm and heart; but warrior and war-horse are a vision; a revealed Force, nothing more. Stately they tread the Earth, as if it were a firm substance: fool! the Earth is but a film; it cracks in twain, and warrior and war-horse sink beyond plummet’s sounding. Plummet’s? Fantasy herself will not follow them. [390 A little while ago they were not; a little while and they are not, their very ashes are not.

“So has it been from the beginning, so will it be to the end. Generation after generation takes to itself the Form of a Body; and forth-issuing from Cimmerian Night, on Heaven’s mission APPEARS. What Force and Fire is in each he expects: one grinding in the mill of In- [400 dustry; one hunter-like climbing the giddy Alpine heights of Science; one madly dashed in pieces on the rocks of Strife, in war with his fellow:—and then the Heaven-sent is recalled; his earthly Vesture falls away, and soon even to Sense becomes a Vanished Shadow. Thus, like some wild-flaming, wild-thundering train of Heaven’s Artillery, does this mysterious MANKIND thunder and [410 flame, in long-drawn, quick-succeeding grandeur, through the unknown Deep. Thus, like a God-created, fire-breathing Spirit-host, we emerge from the Inane; haste stormfully across the astonished Earth; then plunge again into the Inane. Earth’s mountains are levelled, and her seas filled up, in our passage: can the Earth, which is but dead and a vision, resist Spirits which have reality and [420 are alive? On the hardest adamant some footprint of us is stamped-in; the last Rear of the host will read traces of the earliest Van. But whence?—O Heaven, whither? Sense knows not; Faith knows not; only that it is through Mystery to Mystery, from God and to God.

‘We are such stuff

As Dreams are made on, and our little
Life [430
Is rounded with a sleep!’”

From PAST AND PRESENT

Book III, Chapter XI

LABOR

For there is a perennial nobleness, and even sacredness, in Work. Were he never so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works: in Idleness alone is there perpetual despair. Work, never so Mammonish, mean, is in communication with Nature; the real desire to get Work done will itself lead one more and more to truth, to Nature’s ap- [10 pointments and regulations, which are truth.

The latest Gospel in this world is, Know thy work and do it. “Know thyself”: long enough has that poor “self” of thine tormented thee; thou wilt never get to "know" it, I believe! Think it not thy business, this of knowing thyself; thou art an unknowable individual: know what thou canst work at; and work [20 at it, like a Hercules! That will be thy better plan.

It has been written, "an endless significance lies in Work"; a man perfects himself by working. Foul jungles are cleared away, fair seedfields rise instead, and stately cities; and withal the man himself first ceases to be a jungle and foul unwholesome desert thereby. Consider how, even in the meanest sorts of [30 Labor, the whole soul of a man is composed into a kind of real harmony, the instant he sets himself to work! Doubt, Desire, Sorrow, Remorse, Indignation, Despair itself, all these like hell-dogs lie beleaguering the soul of the poor day-worker as of every man: but he bends himself with free valor against his task, and all these are stilled, all these shrink murmuring far off into their caves. [40 The man is now a man. The blessed glow of Labor in him, is it not as purifying fire, wherein all poison is burnt up, and of sour smoke itself there is made bright blessed flame!

Destiny, on the whole, has no other way of cultivating us. A formless Chaos, once set it revolving, grows round and ever rounder; ranges itself, by mere force of gravity, into strata, spherical [50 courses; is no longer a Chaos, but a round compacted World. What would become of the Earth, did she cease to revolve? In the poor old Earth, so long as she revolves, all inequalities, irregularities disperse themselves; all irregularities are incessantly becoming regular. Hast thou looked on the Potter's wheel,—one of the venerablest objects; old as the Prophet Ezekiel and far older? Rude lumps of [60 clay, how they spin themselves up, by mere quick whirling, into beautiful circular dishes. And fancy the most assiduous Potter, but without his wheel; reduced to make dishes, or rather amorphous botches, by mere kneading and baking! Even such a Potter were Destiny, with a human soul that would rest and lie at ease, that would not work and spin! Of an idle unrevolving man [70

the kindest Destiny, like the most assiduous Potter without wheel, can bake and knead nothing other than a botch; let her spend on him what expensive coloring, what gilding and enamelling she will, he is but a botch. Not a dish; no, a bulging, kneaded, crooked, shambling, squint-cornered, amorphous botch,—a mere enamelled vessel of dishonor! Let the idle think of this. [80

Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. He has a work, a life-purpose; he has found it, and will follow it! How, as a free-flowing channel, dug and torn by noble force through the sour mud-swamp of one's existence, like an ever-deepening river there, it runs and flows;—draining-off the sour festering water, gradually from the root of the remotest grass- [90 blade; making, instead of pestilential swamp, a green fruitful meadow with its clear-flowing stream. How blessed for the meadow itself, let the stream and its value be great or small! Labor is Life; from the inmost heart of the Worker rises his god-given Force, the sacred celestial Life-essence breathed into him by Almighty God; from his inmost heart awakens him to all nobleness,—to all knowledge, [100 "self-knowledge" and much else, so soon as Work fitly begins. Knowledge? The knowledge that will hold good in working, cleave thou to that; for Nature herself accredits that, says Yea to that. Properly thou hast no other knowledge but what thou hast got by working: the rest is yet all a hypothesis of knowledge; a thing to be argued of in schools, a thing floating in the clouds, in endless logic-vortices, [110 till we try it and fix it. "Doubt, of whatever kind, can be ended by Action alone."

And again, hast thou valued Patience, Courage, Perseverance, Openness to light; readiness to own thyself mistaken, to do better next time? All these, all virtues, in wrestling with the dim brute Powers of Fact, in ordering of thy fellows in such wrestle, there and elsewhere not at all, thou wilt continually learn. [120 Set down a brave Sir Christopher in the middle of black ruined Stone-heaps, of foolish unarchitectural Bishops, red-tape

Officials; idle Nell-Gwyn Defenders of the Faith; and see whether he will ever raise a Paul's Cathedral out of all that, yea or no! Rough, rude, contradictory are all things and persons, from the mutinous masons and Irish hodmen, up to the idle Nell-Gwyn Defenders, to blustering red-tape Officials, foolish unarchitectural Bishops. All these things and persons are there not for Christopher's sake and his Cathedral's; they are there for their own sake mainly! Christopher will have to conquer and constrain all these,—if he be able. All these are against him. Equitable Nature herself, who carries her mathematics and architectonics not on the face of her, but deep in the hidden heart of her,—Nature herself is but partially for him; will be wholly against him, if he constrain her not! His very money, where is it to come from? The pious munificence of England lies far-scattered, distant, unable to speak, and say, "I am here";—must be spoken to before it can speak. Pious munificence, and all help, is so silent, invisible like the gods; impediment, contradictions manifold, are so loud and near! O brave Sir Christopher, trust thou in those notwithstanding, and front all these; understand all these; by valiant patience, noble effort, insight, by man's strength, vanquish and compel all these,—and, on the whole, strike down victoriously the last topstone of that Paul's Edifice; thy monument for certain centuries, the stamp "Great Man" impressed very legibly on Portland-stone there!—

Yes, all manner of help, and pious response from Men or Nature, is always what we call silent; cannot speak or come to light, till it be seen, till it be spoken to. Every noble work is at first "impossible." In very truth, for every noble work the possibilities will lie diffused through Immensity; inarticulate, undiscoverable except to faith. Like Gideon thou shalt spread out thy fleece at the door of thy tent; see whether under the wide arch of Heaven there be any bounteous moisture, or none. Thy heart and life-purpose shall be as a miraculous Gideon's fleece, spread out in silent appeal to Heaven: and from the kind Immensities, what from the poor unkind Localities and town and country Parishes there never could, blessed dew-moisture to suffice thee shall have fallen!

Work is of a religious nature:—work is of a brave nature; which it is the aim of all religion to be. All work of man is as the swimmer's: a waste ocean threatens to devour him; if he front it not bravely, it will keep its word. By incessant wise defiance of it, lusty rebuke and buffet of it, behold how it loyally supports him, bears him as its conqueror along. "It is so," says Goethe, "with all things that man undertakes in this world."

Brave Sea-captain, Norse Sea-king,—Columbus, my hero, royalest Sea-king of all! it is no friendly environment this of thine, in the waste deep waters; around thee mutinous discouraged souls, behind thee disgrace and ruin, before thee the unpenetrated veil of Night. Brother, these wild water-mountains, bounding from their deep bases (ten miles deep, I am told), are not entirely there on thy behalf! Meseems they have other work than floating thee forward:—and the huge Winds, that sweep from Ursa Major to the Tropics, and Equators, dancing their giant-waltz through the kingdoms of Chaos and Immensity, they care little about filling rightly or filling wrongly the small shoulder-of-mutton sails in this cockle-skiff of thine! Thou art not among articulate-speaking friends, my brother; thou art among immeasurable dumb monsters, tumbling, howling wide as the world here. Secret, far off, invisible to all hearts but thine, there lies a help in them: see how thou wilt get at that. Patiently thou wilt wait till the mad Southwester spend itself, saving thyself by dextrous science of defence, the while: valiantly, with swift decision, wilt thou strike in, when the favoring East, the Possible, springs up. Mutiny of men thou wilt sternly repress; weakness, despondency, thou wilt cheerily encourage: thou wilt swallow down complaint, unreason, weariness, weakness of others and thyself;—how much wilt thou swallow down! There shall be a depth of Silence in thee, deeper than this Sea, which is but ten miles deep: a Silence unsoundable;

known to God only. Thou shalt be a Great Man. Yes, my World-Soldier, thou of the World Marine-service,—thou wilt have to be greater than this tumultuous unmeasured World here round thee is; thou, in thy strong soul, as with wrestler's arms, shalt embrace it, harness it down; and make it bear thee on,—to new Americas, or whither God wills! [240

Chapter XII

REWARD

"Religion," I said; for, properly speaking, all true Work is Religion: and whatsoever Religion is not Work may go and dwell among the Brahmins, Antinomians, Spinning Dervishes, or where it will; with me it shall have no harbor. Admirable was that of the old Monks, "Laborare est Orare, Work is Worship."

Older than all preached Gospels was this unpreached, inarticulate, but in- [10 eradicable, forever-enduring Gospel: Work, and therein have wellbeing. Man, Son of Earth and of Heaven, lies there not, in the innermost heart of thee, a Spirit of Active Method, a Force for Work;—and burns like a painfully-smoldering fire, giving thee no rest till thou unfold it, till thou write it down in beneficent Facts around thee! What is immethodic, waste, thou shalt make methodic, regulated, [20 arable; obedient and productive to thee. Wheresoever thou findest Disorder, there is thy eternal enemy; attack him swiftly, subdue him; make Order of him, the subject not of Chaos, but of Intelligence, Divinity, and Thee! The thistle that grows in thy path, dig it out, that a blade of useful grass, a drop of nourishing milk, may grow there instead. The waste cotton-shrub, gather its waste white [30 down, spin it, weave it; that, in place of idle litter, there may be folded webs, and the naked skin of man be covered.

But above all, where thou findest Ignorance, Stupidity, Brute-mindedness,—yes, there, with or without Church-tithes and Shovel-hat, with or without Talfourd-Mahon copyrights, or were it with mere dungeons and gibbets and crosses, attack it, I say; smite it wisely, unweariedly, [40 and rest not while thou livest and it lives;

but smite, smite, in the name of God! The Highest God, as I understand it, does audibly so command thee; still audibly, if thou have ears to hear. He, even He, with his unspoken voice, awfulest than any Sinai thunders or syllabled speech of Whirlwinds; for the SILENCE of deep Eternities, of Worlds from beyond the morning-stars, does it not [50 speak to thee? The unborn Ages; the old Graves, with their long-moldering dust, the very tears that wetted it now all dry,—do not these speak to thee, what ear hath not heard? The deep Deathkingdoms, the Stars in their never-resting courses, all Space and all Time, proclaim it to thee in continual silent admonition. Thou too, if ever man should, shalt work while it is called To-day. For the [60 Night cometh, wherein no man can work.

All true Work is sacred; in all true Work, were it but true hand-labor, there is something of divineness. Labor, wide as the Earth, has its summit in Heaven. Sweat of the brow; and up from that to sweat of the brain, sweat of the heart; which includes all Kepler calculations, Newton meditations, all Sciences, all spoken Epics, all acted Heroisms, [70 Martyrdoms,—up to that "Agony of bloody sweat," which all men have called divine! O brother, if this is not "worship," then I say, the more pity for worship; for this is the noblest thing yet discovered under God's sky. Who art thou that complainest of thy life of toil? Complain not. Look up, my wearied brother; see thy fellow Workmen there, in God's Eternity; surviving there, [80 they alone surviving: sacred Band of the Immortals, celestial Bodyguard of the Empire of Mankind. Even in the weak Human Memory they survive so long, as saints, as heroes, as gods; they alone surviving; peopling, they alone, the unmeasured solitudes of Time! To thee Heaven, though severe, is not unkind; Heaven is kind,—as a noble Mother; as that Spartan Mother, saying while [90 she gave her son his shield, "With it, my son, or upon it!" Thou too shalt return home in honor; to thy far-distant Home, in honor; doubt it not,—if in the battle thou keep thy shield! Thou, in the Eternities and deepest Death-kingdoms, art not an alien; thou everywhere art a denizen! Complain not; the very Spartans did not complain.

And who art thou that braggest of [100 thy life of Idleness; complacently showest thy bright gilt equipages; sumptuous cushions; appliances for folding of the hands to mere sleep? Looking up, looking down, around, behind or before, discernest thou, if it be not in Mayfair alone, any idle hero, saint, god, or even devil? Not a vestige of one. In the Heavens, in the Earth, in the Waters under the Earth, is none like unto thee. Thou art an [110 original figure in this Creation; a denizen in Mayfair alone, in this extraordinary Century or Half-Century alone! One monster there is in the world: the idle man. What is his "Religion"? That Nature is a Phantasm, where cunning beggary or thievery may sometimes find good victual. That God is a lie; and that Man and his Life are a lie.—Alas, alas, who of us is there that can say, I [120 have worked? The faithfulest of us are unprofitable servants; the faithfulest of us know that best. The faithfulest of us may say, with sad and true old Samuel, "Much of my life has been trifled away!" But he that has, and except "on public occasions" professes to have, no function but that of going idle in a graceful or graceless manner; and of begetting sons to go idle; and to address Chief Spin- [130 ners and Diggers, who at least are spinning and digging, "Ye scandalous persons who produce too much"—My Corn-Law friends, on what imaginary still richer Eldorados, and true iron-spikes with law of gravitation, are ye rushing!

As to the Wages of Work there might innumerable things be said; there will and must yet innumerable things be said and spoken, in St. Stephen's and out [140 of St. Stephen's; and gradually not a few things be ascertained and written, on Law-parchment, concerning this very matter:—"Fair day's-wages for a fair day's-work" is the most unrefusable demand! Money-wages "to the extent of keeping your worker alive that he may work more:" these, unless you mean to dismiss him straightway out of this world, are indispensable alike to the noblest [150 Worker and to the least noble:

One thing only I will say here, in special reference to the former class, the noble and noblest; but throwing light on all the other classes and their arrangements of this difficult matter: The "wages" of every noble Work do yet lie in Heaven or else Nowhere. Not in Bank-of-England bills, in Owen's Labor-bank, or any the most improved establishment [160 of banking and money-changing, needest thou, heroic soul, present thy account of earnings. Human banks and labor-banks know thee not; or know thee after generations and centuries have passed away, and thou art clean gone from "rewarding,"—all manner of bank-drafts, shop-tills, and Downing-street Exchequers lying very invisible, so far from thee! Nay, at bottom, dost thou need any [170 reward? Was it thy aim and life-purpose to be filled with good things for thy heroism; to have a life of pomp and ease, and be what men call "happy," in this world, or in any other world? I answer for thee deliberately, No. The whole spiritual secret of the new epoch lies in this, that thou canst answer for thyself, with thy whole clearness of head and heart, deliberately, No! [180

My brother, the brave man has to give his Life away. Give it, I advise thee;—thou dost not expect to sell thy Life in an adequate manner? What price, for example, would content thee? The just price of thy LIFE to thee,—why, God's entire Creation to thyself, the whole Universe of Space, the whole Eternity of Time, and what they hold: that is the price which would content thee; that, [190 and if thou wilt be candid, nothing short of that! It is thy all; and for it thou wouldst have all. Thou art an unreasonable mortal;—or rather thou art a poor infinite mortal, who, in thy narrow clay-prison here, seemest so unreasonable! Thou wilt never sell thy Life, or any part of thy Life, in a satisfactory manner. Give it, like a royal heart; let the price be Nothing: thou hast then, in a certain [200 sense, got All for it! The heroic man,—and is not every man, God be thanked, a potential hero?—has to do so, in all times and circumstances. In the most heroic age, as in the most unheroic, he will have to say, as Burns said proudly and humbly of his little Scottish Songs, little dewdrops of Celestial Melody in an age when so much was unmelodious: "By Heaven, they shall either be in- [210] valuable or of no value; I do not need your guineas for them." It is an element which should, and must, enter deeply into all settlements of wages here below. They never will be "satisfactory" otherwise; they cannot, O Mammon Gospel, they never can! Money for my little piece of work "to the extent that will allow me to keep working;" yes, this,—unless you mean that I shall go my [220] ways before the work is all taken out of me: but as to "wages"—!

On the whole, we do entirely agree with those old Monks, Laborare est Orare. In a thousand senses, from one end of it to the other, true Work is Worship. He that works, whatsoever be his work, he bodies forth the form of Things Unseen; a small Poet every Worker is. The idea, were it but of his [230] poor Delf Platter, how much more of his Epic Poem, is as yet "seen," half-seen, only by himself; to all others it is a thing unseen, impossible; to Nature herself it is a thing unseen, a thing which never hitherto was;—very "impossible," for it is as yet a No-thing! The Unseen Powers had need to watch over such a man; he works in and for the Unseen. Alas, if he look to the Seen Powers [240] only, he may as well quit the business; his No-thing will never rightly issue as a Thing, but as a Deceptivity, a Sham-thing,—which it had better not do!

Thy No-thing of an Intended Poem, O Poet who hast looked merely to reviewers, copyrights, booksellers, popularities, behold it has not yet become a Thing; for the truth is not in it! Though printed, hotpressed, reviewed, celebrated, sold [250] to the twentieth edition: what is all that? The Thing, in philosophical uncommercial language, is still a No-thing, mostly semblance and deception of the sight;—benign Oblivion incessantly gnawing at it, impatient till Chaos, to which it belongs, do reabsorb it!—

He who takes not counsel of the Unseen and Silent, from him will never come real visibility and speech. Thou [260] must descend to the Mothers, to the Manes, and Hercules-like long suffer and labor there, wouldst thou emerge with victory into the sunlight. As in battle and the shock of war,—for is not this a battle?—thou too shalt fear no pain or death, shalt love no ease or life; the voice of festive Lubberlands, the noise of greedy Acheron, shall alike lie silent under thy victorious feet. Thy work, like Dante's, shall [270] "make thee lean for many years." The world and its wages, its criticisms, counsels, helps, impediments, shall be as a waste ocean-flood; the chaos through which thou art to swim and sail. Not the waste waves and their weedy gulfs, shalt thou take for guidance: thy star alone,—"Se tu segui tua stella" Thy star alone, now clear-beaming over Chaos, nay now by fits gone out, dis- [280] astrously eclipsed: this only shalt thou strive to follow. O, it is a business, as I fancy, that of weltering your way through Chaos and the murk of Hell, Green-eyed dragons watching you, three-headed Cerberuses,—not without sympathy of their sort! "Eccovi l' uom ch' è stato all' Inferno." For in fine, as Poet Dryden says, you do walk hand in hand with sheer Madness, all the way,— [290] who is by no means pleasant company! You look fixedly into Madness, and her undiscovered, boundless, bottomless Night-empire; that you may extort new Wisdom out of it, as an Eurydice from Tartarus. The higher the Wisdom, the closer was its neighborhood and kindred with mere Insanity; literally so;—and thou wilt, with a speechless feeling, observe how highest Wisdom, struggling up into this world, [300] has oftentimes carried such tinctures and adhesions of Insanity still cleaving to it hither!

All Works, each in their degree, are a making of Madness sane;—truly enough a religious operation; which 'cannot be carried on without religion. You have not work otherwise; you have eye-service, greedy grasping of wages, swift and ever swifter manufacture of semblances [310] to get hold of wages. Instead of better felt-hats to cover your head, you have bigger lath-and-plaster hats set traveling the streets on wheels. Instead of heavenly and earthly Guidance for the souls of men, you have "Black or White Surplice" Controversies, stuffed hair-and-leather Popes;—terrestrial Law-wards, Lords and Law-bringers, "organizing Labor" in these years, by passing [320 Corn-Laws. With all which, alas, this distracted Earth is now full, nigh to bursting. Semblances most smooth to the touch and eye; most accursed, nevertheless, to body and soul. Semblances, be they of Sham-woven Cloth or of Dilettante Legislation, which are not real wool or substance, but Devil's-dust, accursed of God and man! No man has worked, or can work, except religiously; not even the poor day-laborer, the weaver of your coat, the sewer of your shoes. All men, if they work not as in a Great Taskmaster's eye, will work wrong, work unhappily for themselves and you.

Industrial work, still under bondage to Mammon, the rational soul of it not yet awakened, is a tragic spectacle. Men in the rapidest motion and self-motion; restless, with convulsive energy, as if [340 driven by Galvanism, as if possessed by a Devil; tearing asunder mountains,—to no purpose, for Mammonism is always Midas-eared! This is sad, on the face of it. Yet courage: the beneficent Destinies, kind in their sternness, are apprising us that this cannot continue. Labor is not a devil, even while encased in Mammonism; Labor is ever an imprisoned god, writhing unconsciously or consciously to escape out of Mammonism! Plugson of Undershot, like Taillefer of Normandy, wants victory; how much happier will even Plugson be to have a Chivalrous victory than a Choctaw one! The unredeemed ugliness is that of a slothful People. Show me a People energetically busy; heaving, struggling, all shoulders at the wheel; their heart pulsing, every muscle swelling, with [360 man's energy and will;—I show you a People of whom great good is already predicable; to whom all manner of good is yet certain, if their energy endure. By very working, they will learn; they have, Antæus-like, their foot on Mother Fact: how can they but learn?

The vulgarest Plugson of a Master-Worker, who can command Workers, and get work out of them, is already [370 a considerable man. Blessed and thrice-blessed symptoms I discern of Master-Workers who are not vulgar men; who are Nobles, and begin to feel that they must act as such: all speed to these, they are England's hope at present! But in this Plugson himself, conscious of almost no nobleness whatever, how much is there! Not without man's faculty, insight, courage, hard energy, is this [380 rugged figure. His words none of the wisest; but his actings cannot be altogether foolish. Think, how were it, stoodst thou suddenly in his shoes! He has to command a thousand men. And not imaginary commanding; no, it is real, incessantly practical. The evil passions of so many men (with the Devil in them, as in all of us) he has to vanquish; by manifold force of speech and of silence, [390 to repress or evade. What a force of silence, to say nothing of the others, is in Plugson! For these his thousand men he has to provide raw-material, machinery, arrangement, houseroom; and ever at the week's end, wages by due sale. No Civil-List, or Goulburn-Baring Budget has he to fall back upon, for paying of his regiment; he has to pick his supplies from the confused face of the whole [400 Earth and Contemporaneous History, by his dexterity alone. There will be dry eyes if he fail to do it!—He exclaims, at present, "black in the face," near strangled with Dilettante Legislation: "Let me have elbow-room, throat-room, and I will not fail! No, I will spin yet, and conquer like a giant: what 'sinews of war' lie in me, untold resources towards the Conquest of this Planet, if, [410 instead of hanging me, you husband them, and help me!"—My indomitable friend, it is true; and thou shalt and must be helped.

This is not a man I would kill and strangle by Corn-Laws, even if I could! No, I would fling my Corn-Laws and shot-belts to the Devil; and try to help this man. I would teach him, by noble precept and law-precept, by noble [420 example most of all, that Mammonism was not the essence of his or of my station in God's Universe; but the adscititious excrescence of it; the gross, terrene, godless embodiment of it; which would have to become, more or less, a godlike one. By noble real legislation, by true, noble's-work, by unwearied, valiant, and were it wageless effort, in my Parliament and in my Parish, I would aid, con- [430 strain, encourage him to effect more or less this blessed change. I should know that it would have to be effected; that unless it were in some measure effected, he and I and all of us, I first and soonest of all, were doomed to perdition!—Effected it will be; unless it were a Demon that made this Universe; which I, for my own part, do at no moment, under no form, in the least believe. [440

May it please your Serene Highnesses, your Majesties, Lordships and Law-wardships, the proper Epic of this world is not now "Arms and the Man", how much less, "Shirt-frills and the Man": no, it is now "Tools and the Man": that, henceforth to all time, is now our Epic;—and you, first of all others, I think, were wise to take note of that!

From CROMWELL'S LETTERS AND SPEECHES

THE BATTLE OF DUNBAR

"The Lord General about four o'clock," say the old Pamphlets, "went into the Town to take some refreshment," a hasty late dinner, or early supper, whichever we may call it; "and very soon returned back,"—having written Sir Arthur's Letter, I think, in the interim. Coursing about the field, with enough of things to order; walking at last with Lambert in the Park or Garden of Brocks-mouth [10 House, he discerns that Lesley is astir on the Hillside; altering his position somewhat. That Lesley, in fact, is coming wholly down to the basis of the Hill, where his horse had been since sunrise: coming wholly down to the edge of the Brook and glen, among the sloping harvest-fields there; and also is bringing up his left wing of horse, most part of it, towards his right; edging himself, "shogging," [20 as Oliver calls it, his whole line more and more to the right! His meaning is, to get hold of Brocks-mouth House and the pass of the Brook there; after which it will be free to him to attack us when he will!—Lesley, in fact, considers, or at least the Committee of Estates and Kirk consider, that Oliver is lost; that, on the whole, he must not be left to retreat, but must be attacked and annihilated [30 here. A vague story, due to Bishop Burnet, the watery source of many such, still circulates about the world, That it was the Kirk Committee who forced Lesley down against his will; that Oliver, at sight of it, exclaimed, "The Lord hath delivered," etc.; which nobody is in the least bound to believe. It appears, from other quarters, that Lesley was advised or sanctioned in this attempt by the [40 Committee of Estates and Kirk, but also that he was by no means hard to advise; that, in fact, lying on the top of Doon Hill, shelterless in such weather, was no operation to spin out beyond necessity;—and that if anybody pressed too much upon him with advice to come down and fight, it was likeliest to be Royalist Civil Dignitaries, who had plagued him with their cavilings at his cunctations, [50 at his "secret fellow-feeling for the Sec-tarians and Regicides" ever since this war began. The poor Scotch Clergy have enough of their own to answer for in this business; let every back bear the burden that belongs to it. In a word, Lesley descends, has been descending all day, and "shogs" himself to the right,—urged, I believe, by manifold counsel, and by the nature of the case; and, [60 what is equally important for us, Oliver sees him, and sees through him, in this movement of his.

At the sight of this movement, Oliver suggests to Lambert standing by him, Does it not give us an advantage, if we, instead of him, like to begin the attack? Here is the Enemy's right wing coming out to the open space, free to be attacked on any side; and the main-battle, [70 hampered in narrow sloping ground between Doon Hill and the Brook, has no room to maneuver or assist: beat this right wing where it now stands; take it in flank and front with an overpowering force,—it is driven upon its own main-battle, the whole Army is beaten? Lambert eagerly assents, “had meant to say the same thing.” Monk, who comes up at this moment, likewise assents; as [80 the other officers do, when the case in set before them. It is the plan resolved upon for battle. The attack shall begin tomorrow before dawn.

And so the soldiers stand to their arms, or lie within instant reach of their arms, all night; being upon an engagement very difficult indeed. The night is wild and wet;—2d of September means 12th by our calendar: the Harvest [90 Moon wades deep among clouds of sleet and hail. Whoever has a heart for prayer, let him pray now, for the wrestle of death is at hand. Pray,—and withal keep his powder dry! And be ready for extremities, and quit himself like a man!—Thus they pass the night; making that Dunbar Peninsula and Brock Rivulet long memorable to me. We English have some tents; the Scots have [100 none. The hoarse sea moans bodeful, swinging low and heavy against these whinstone bays; the sea and the tempests are abroad, all else asleep but we,—and there is One that rides on the wings of the wind.

Towards three in the morning the Scotch foot, by order of a Major-General say some, extinguish their matches, all but two in a company; cower under [110 the corn-shocks, seeking some imperfect shelter and sleep. Be wakeful, ye English; watch, and pray, and keep your powder dry. About four o’clock comes order to my pudding-headed Yorkshire friend, that his regiment must mount and march straightway; his and various other regiments march, pouring swiftly to the left to Broom’smouth House, to the Pass over the Brock. With over- [120 powering force let us storm the Scots right wing there; beat that, and all is beaten. Major Hodgson riding along, heard, he says, “a Cornet praying in the night;” a company of poor men, I think, making worship there, under the void

Heaven, before battle joined: Major Hodgson, giving his charge to a brother Officer, turned aside to listen for a minute, and worship and pray along [130 with them; haply his last prayer on this Earth, as it might prove to be. But no: this Cornet prayed with such effusion as was wonderful; and imparted strength to my Yorkshire friend, who strengthened his men by telling them of it. And the Heavens, in their mercy, I think, have opened us a way of deliverance!—The Moon gleams out, hard and blue, riding among hail-clouds; and over St. Abb’s [140 Head a streak of dawn is rising.

And now is the hour when the attack should be, and no Lambert is yet here, he is ordering the line far to the right yet; and Oliver occasionally, in Hodgson’s hearing, is impatient for him. The Scots too, on this wing, are awake; thinking to surprise us; there is their trumpet sounding, we heard it once; and Lambert, who was to lead the attack, is [150 not here. The Lord General is impatient;—behold Lambert at last! The trumpets peal, shattering with fierce clangor Night’s silence; the cannons awaken along all the Line: “The Lord of Hosts! The Lord of Hosts!” On, my brave ones, on!—

The dispute “on this right wing was hot and stiff, for three quarters of an hour.” Plenty of fire, from field- [160 pieces, snap-hances, matchlocks, entertains the Scotch main-battle across the Brock;—poor stiffened men, roused from the corn-shocks with their matches all out! But here on the right, their horse, “with lancers in the front rank,” charge desperately; drive us back across the hollow of the Rivulet;—back a little; but the Lord gives us courage, and we storm home again, horse and foot, [170 upon them, with a shock like tornado tempests; break them, beat them, drive them all adrift. “Some fled towards Copperspath, but most across their own foot.” Their own poor foot, whose matches were hardly well alight yet! Poor men, it was a terrible awakening for them: field-pieces and charge of foot across the Brockburn; and now here is their own horse in mad panic tramp- [180

ling them to death. Above three thousand killed upon the place: "I never saw such a charge of foot and horse," says one; nor did I. Oliver was still near to Yorkshire Hodgson where the shock succeeded; Hodgson heard him say, "They run, I profess they run!" And over St. Abb's Head and the German Ocean, just then, bursts the first gleam of the level Sun upon us, "and I heard Nol say, in [190 the words of the Psalmist, 'Let God arise, let His enemies be scattered,'"—or in Rous's meter—

"Let God arise, and scattered Let all his enemies be;
And let all those that do him hate
Before his presence flee!"

Even so. The Scotch Army is shivered to utter ruin; rushes in tumultuous wreck, hither, thither; to Belhaven, or, in [200 their distraction, even to Dunbar; the chase goes as far as Haddington; led by Hacker. "The Lord general made a halt," says Hodgson, "and sang the Hundred-and-seventeenth Psalm," till our horse could gather for the chase. Hundred-and-seventeenth Psalm, at the foot of Doon Hill; there we uplift it, to the tune of Bangor, or some still higher score, and roll it strong and great against the [210 sky:—

"Oh give ye praise unto the Lord,
All nati-ons that be;
Likewise ye people all, accord
His name to magnify!
For great to-us-ward ever are
His loving-kindnesses;
His truth endures for evermore:
The Lord oh do ye bless!"

And now, to the chase again. [220

JOHN RUSKIN (1819-1900)

From MODERN PAINTERS

SUNRISE AND SUNSET IN THE ALPS

Stand upon the peak of some isolated mountain at daybreak, when the night mists first rise from off the plains, and watch their white and lake-like fields, as they float in level bays and winding gulfs about the islanded summits of the lower hills, untouched yet by more than dawn, colder and more quiet than a windless sea under the moon of midnight; watch when the first sunbeam is sent upon [10 the silver channels, how the foam of their undulating surface parts and passes away, and down under their depths the glittering city and green pasture lie like Atlantis, between the white paths of winding rivers; the flakes of light falling every moment faster and broader among the starry spires, as the wreathed surges break and vanish above them, and the confused crests and ridges of the dark hills shorten their [20 gray shadows upon the plain. . . . Wait a little longer, and you shall see those scattered mists rallying in the ravines, and floating up towards you, along the winding valleys, till they crouch in quiet masses, iridescent with the morning light, upon the broad breasts of the higher hills, whose leagues of massy undulation will melt back and back into that robe of material light, until they fade away, [30 lost in its lustre, to appear again above, in the serene heaven, like a wild, bright, impossible dream, foundationless and inaccessible, their very bases vanishing in the unsubstantial and mocking blue of the deep lake below. . . . Wait yet a little longer, and you shall see those mists gather themselves into white towers, and stand like fortresses along the promontories, massy and motionless, [40 only piled with every instant higher and higher into the sky, and casting longer shadows athwart the rocks; and out of the pale blue of the horizon you will see forming and advancing a troop of narrow, dark, pointed vapors, which will cover the sky, inch by inch, with their gray network, and take the light off the landscape with an eclipse which will stop the singing of the birds and the mo- [50 tion of the leaves, together; and then you will see horizontal bars of black shadow forming under them, and lurid wreaths create themselves, you know not how, along the shoulders of the hills; you never see them form, but when you look back to a place which was clear an instant ago, there is a cloud on it, hanging by the precipices, as a hawk pauses over his prey. . . . And then you will [60 hear the sudden rush of the awakened wind, and you will see those watch-towers of vapor swept away from their foundations, and waving curtains of opaque rain let down to the valleys, swinging from the burdened clouds in black bending fringes, or pacing in pale columns along the lake level, grazing its surface into foam as they go. And then, as the sun sinks, you shall see the storm drift for [70 an instant from off the hills, leaving their broad sides smoking, and loaded yet with snow-white, torn, steam-like rags of capricious vapor, now gone, now gathered again; while the smouldering sun, seeming not far away, but burning like a red-hot ball beside you, and as if you could reach it, plunges through the rushing wind and rolling cloud with headlong fall, as if it meant to rise no more, [80 dyeing all the air about it with blood. . . . And then you shall hear the fainting tempest die in the hollow of the night, and you shall see a green halo kindling on the summit of the eastern hills, brighter—brighter yet, till the large white circle of the slow moon is lifted up among the barred clouds, step by step, line by line; star after star she quenches with her kindling light, setting in their stead [90 an army of pale, impenetrable, fleecy wreaths in the heaven, to give light upon the earth, which move together, hand in hand, company by company, troop by troop, so measured in their unity of motion, that the whole heaven seems to roll with them, and the earth to reel under them. . . . And then wait yet for one hour, until the east again becomes purple, and the heaving mountains, [100 rolling against it in darkness, like waves of a wild sea, are drowned one by one in the glory of its burning; watch the white glaciers blaze in their winding paths about the mountains, like mighty serpents with scales of fire: watch the columnar peaks of solitary snow, kindling downwards, chasm by chasm, each in itself a new morning; their long avalanches cast down in keen streams brighter than [110 the lightning, sending each his tribute of driven snow, like altar-smoke, up to the heaven; the rose-light of their silent domes flushing that heaven about them and above them, piercing with purer light through its purple lines of lifted cloud, casting a new glory on every wreath as it passes by, until the whole heaven, one scarlet canopy, is interwoven with a roof of waving flame, and tossing, [120 vault beyond vault, as with the drifted wings of many companies of angels: and then, when you can look no more for gladness, and when you are bowed down with fear and love of the Maker and Doer of this, tell me who has best delivered this His message unto men!

THE TWO BOYHOODS

Born half-way between the mountains and the sea—that young George of Castel-franco—of the Brave Castle—Stout George they called him, George of Georges, so goodly a boy he was—Giorgione.

Have you ever thought what a world his eyes opened on—fair, searching eyes of youth? What a world of mighty life, from those mountain roots to the shore;—of loveliest life, when he went down, [10 yet so young, to the marble city—and became himself as a fiery heart to it?

A city of marble, did I say? nay, rather a golden city, paved with emerald. For truly, every pinnacle and turret glanced or glowed, overlaid with gold, or bossed with jasper. Beneath, the unsullied sea drew in deep breathing, to and fro, its eddies of green wave. Deep-hearted, majestic, terrible as the sea,—the [20 men of Venice moved in sway of power and war; pure as her pillars of alabaster, stood her mothers and maidens; from foot to brow, all noble, walked her knights; the low bronzed gleaming of sea-rusted armor shot angrily under their blood-red mantle-folds. Fearless, faithful, patient, impenetrable, implacable,—every word a fate—sat her senate. In hope and honor, lulled by flowing of wave [30 around their isles of sacred sand, each with his name written and the cross graved at his side, lay her dead. A wonderful piece of world. Rather, itself a world. It lay along the face of the waters, no larger, as its captains saw it from their masts at evening, than a bar of sunset that could not pass away; but for its power, it must have seemed to them as if they were sailing in the expanse of [40 heaven, and this a great planet, whose orient edge widened through ether. A world from which all ignoble care and petty thoughts were banished, with all the common and poor elements of life. No foulness, nor tumult, in those tremulous streets, that filled, or fell, beneath the moon; but rippled music of majestic change, or thrilling silence. No weak walls could rise above them; no low- [50 roofed cottage, nor straw-built shed. Only the strength as of rock, and the finished setting of stones most precious. And around them, far as the eye could reach, still the soft moving of stainless waters, proudly pure; as not the flower, so neither the thorn nor the thistle, could grow in the glancing fields. Ethereal strength of Alps, dreamlike, vanishing in high procession beyond the Torcellan [60 shore, blue islands of Paduan hills, poised in the golden west. Above, free winds and fiery clouds ranging at their will;—brightness out of the north, and balm from the south, and the stars of the evening and morning clear in the limitless light of arched heaven and circling sea.

Such was Giorgione's school—such Titian's home.

Near the south-west corner of Covent Garden, a square brick pit or well is formed by a close-set block of houses, to the back windows of which it admits a few rays of light. Access to the bottom of it is obtained out of Maiden Lane, through a low archway and an iron gate; and if you stand long enough under the archway to accustom your eyes to the darkness you may see on the left hand a narrow door, which formerly gave [80 quiet access to a respectable barber's shop, of which the front window, looking into Maiden Lane, is still extant, filled, in this year (1860), with a row of bottles, connected, in some defunct manner, with a brewer's business. A more fashionable neighborhood, it is said, eighty years ago than now—never certainly a cheerful one—wherein a boy being born on St. George's day, 1775, began soon after [90 to take interest in the world of Covent Garden, and put to service such spectacles of life as it afforded.

No knights to be seen there, nor, I imagine, many beautiful ladies; their costume at least disadvantageous, depending much on incumbency of hat and feather, and short waists; the majesty of men founded similarly on shoebuckles and wigs;—impressive enough when [100 Reynolds will do his best for it; but not suggestive of much ideal delight to a boy.

"Bello ovile dov' io dormii agnello"; of things beautiful, besides men and women, dusty sunbeams up or down the street on summer mornings; deep furrowed cabbage-leaves at the greengrocer's; magnificence of oranges in wheelbarrows round the corner; and Thames' shore within three minutes' race. [110

None of these things very glorious; the best, however, that England, it seems, was then able to provide for a boy of gift: who, such as they are, loves them—never, indeed, forgets them. The short waists modify to the last his visions of Greek ideal. His foregrounds had always a succulent cluster or two of greengrocery at the corners. Enchanted oranges gleam in Covent Gardens of the Hesperides; [120 and great ships go to pieces in order to scatter chests of them on the waves. That mist of early sunbeams in the London dawn crosses, many and many a time, the clearness of Italian air; and by Thames' shore, with its stranded barges and glidings of red sail, dearer to us than Lucerne lake or Venetian lagoon,—by Thames' shore we will die.

With such circumstance round [130 him in youth, let us note what necessary effects followed upon the boy. I assume him to have had Giorgione's sensibility (and more than Giorgione's, if that be possible) to color and form. I tell you farther, and this fact you may receive trustfully, that his sensibility to human affection and distress was no less keen than even his sense for natural beauty—heart-sight deep as eyesight. [140

Consequently, he attaches himself with the faithfulest child-love to everything that bears an image of the place he was born in. No matter how ugly it is,—has it anything about it like Maiden Lane, or like Thames' shore? If so, it shall be painted for their sake. Hence, to the very close of life, Turner could endure ugliness which no one else, of the same sensibility, would have borne with [150 for an instant. Dead brick walls, blank square windows, old clothes, market-womanly types of humanity—anything fishy and muddy, like Billingsgate or Hungerford Market, had great attraction for him; black barges, patched sails, and every possible condition of fog.

You will find these tolerations and affections guiding or sustaining him to the last hour of his life; the notablest [160 of all such endurances being that of dirt. No Venetian ever draws anything foul; but Turner devoted picture after picture to the illustration of effects of dinginess, smoke, soot, dust, and dusty texture; old sides of boats, weedy roadside vegetation, dunghills, straw-yards, and all the soilings and stains of every common labor.

And more than this, he not only could endure, but enjoyed and looked for [170 litter, like Covent Garden wreck after the market. His pictures are often full of it, from side to side; their foregrounds differ from all others in the natural way that things have of lying about in them. Even his richest vegetation, in ideal work, is confused; and he delights in shingle, débris, and heaps of fallen stones. The last words he ever spoke to me about a picture were in gentle exultation [180 about his St. Gothard: "that litter of stones which I endeavored to represent."

The second great result of this Covent Garden training was understanding of and regard for the poor, whom the Venetians, we saw, despised; whom, contrarily, Turner loved, and more than loved—understood. He got no romantic sight of them, but an infallible one, as he prowled about the end of his lane, watching [190 night effects in the wintry streets; nor sight of the poor alone, but of the poor in direct relations with the rich. He knew, in good and evil, what both classes thought of, and how they dwelt with, each other.

Reynolds and Gainsborough, bred in country villages, learned there the country boy's reverential theory of "the squire," and kept it. They painted the squire [200 and the squire's lady as centres of the movements of the universe, to the end of their lives. But Turner perceived the younger squire in other aspects about his lane, occurring prominently in its night scenery, as a dark figure, or one of two, against the moonlight. He saw also the working of city commerce, from endless warehouse, towering over Thames, to the back shop in the lane, with its stale [210 herrings—highly interesting these last; one of his father's best friends, whom he often afterwards visited affectionately at Bristol, being a fishmonger and glue-boiler; which gives us a friendly turn of mind towards herring-fishing, whaling, Calais poissardes, and many other of our choicest subjects in after life; all this being connected with that mysterious forest below London Bridge on one [220 side;—and, on the other, with these masses of human power and national wealth which weigh upon us, at Covent Garden here, with strange compression, and crush us into narrow Hand Court.

"That mysterious forest below London Bridge"—better for the boy than wood of pine, or grove of myrtle. How he must have tormented the watermen, beseeching them to let him crouch anywhere in [230 the bows, quiet as a log, so only that he might get floated down there among the ships, and round and round the ships, and with the ships, and by the ships, and under the ships, staring, and clambering;—these the only quite beautiful things he can see in all the world, except the sky; but these, when the sun is on their sails, filling or falling, endlessly disordered by sway of tide and stress of anchorage, [240 beautiful unspeakably; which ships also are inhabited by glorious creatures—red-faced sailors, with pipes, appearing over the gunwales, true knights, over their castle parapets—the most angelic beings in the whole compass of London world. And Trafalgar happening long before we can draw ships, we, nevertheless, coax all current stories out of the wounded sailors, do our best at pres- [250 ent to show Nelson's funeral streaming up the Thames; and vow that Trafalgar shall have its tribute of memory some day. Which, accordingly, is accomplished—once, with all our might, for its death; twice, with all our might, for its victory; thrice, in pensive farewell to the old Téméraire, and, with it, to that order of things.

Now this fond accompanying with [260] sailors must have divided his time, it appears to me, pretty equally between Covent Garden and Wapping (allowing for incidental excursions to Chelsea on one side, and Greenwich on the other), which time he would spend pleasantly, but not magnificently, being limited in pocket-money, and leading a kind of "Poor-Jack" life on the river.

In some respects, no life could be [270] better for a lad. But it was not calculated to make his ear fine to the niceties of language, nor form his moralities on an entirely regular standard. Picking up his first scraps of vigorous English chiefly at Deptford and in the markets, and his first ideas of female tenderness and beauty among nymphs of the barge and the barrow,—another boy might, perhaps, have become what people usually term [280] "vulgar." But the original make and frame of Turner's mind being not vulgar, but as nearly as possible a combination of the minds of Keats and Dante, joining capricious waywardness, and intense openness to every fine pleasure of sense, and hot defiance of formal precedent, with a quite infinite tenderness, generosity, and desire of justice and truth—this kind of mind did not become vulgar, but [290] very tolerant of vulgarity, even fond of it in some forms; and on the outside, visibly infected by it, deeply enough; the curious result, in its combination of elements, being to most people wholly incomprehensible. It was as if a cable had been woven of blood-crimson silk, and then tarred on the outside. People handled it, and the tar came off on their hands; red gleams were seen through [300] the black, underneath, at the places where it had been strained. Was it ochre?—said the world—or red lead?

Schooled thus in manners, literature, and general moral principles at Chelsea and Wapping, we have finally to inquire concerning the most important point of all. We have seen the principal differences between this boy and Giorgione, as respects sight of the beautiful, [310] understanding of poverty, of commerce, and of order of battle; then follows another cause of difference in our training—not slight,—the aspect of religion, namely, in the neighborhood of Covent Garden. I say the aspect; for that was all the lad could judge by. Disposed, for the most part, to learn chiefly by his eyes, in this special matter he finds there is really no other way of learning. His father had [320] taught him "to lay one penny upon another." Of mother's teaching, we hear of none; of parish pastoral teaching, the reader may guess how much.

I chose Giorgione rather than Veronese to help me in carrying out this parallel; because I do not find in Giorgione's work any of the early Venetian monarchist element. He seems to me to have belonged more to an abstract contemplative [330] school. I may be wrong in this; it is no matter;—suppose it were so, and that he came down to Venice somewhat recusant, or insentient, concerning the usual priestly doctrines of his day,—how would the Venetian religion, from an outer intellectual standing-point, have looked to him?

He would have seen it to be a religion indisputably powerful in human affairs; often very harmfully so; sometimes [340] devouring widows' houses, and consuming the strongest and fairest from among the young; freezing into merciless bigotry the policy of the old: also, on the other hand, animating national courage, and raising souls, otherwise sordid, into heroism: on the whole, always a real and great power; served with daily sacrifice of gold, time, and thought; putting forth its claims, if hypocritically, at least [350] in bold hypocrisy, not waiving any atom of them in doubt or fear; and, assuredly, in large measure, sincere, believing in itself, and believed: a goodly system, moreover, in aspect; gorgeous, harmonious, mysterious;—a thing which had either to be obeyed or combated, but could not be scorned. A religion towering over all the city—many-buttressed—luminous in marble stateliness, as the dome [360] of our Lady of Safety shines over the sea; many-voiced also, giving, over all the eastern seas, to the sentinel his watchword, to the soldier his war-cry; and, on the lips of all who died for Venice, shaping the whisper of death.

I suppose the boy Turner to have regarded the religion of his city also from an external intellectual standing-point.

What did he see in Maiden Lane? [370

Let not the reader be offended with me; I am willing to let him describe, at his own pleasure, what Turner saw there; but to me, it seems to have been this. A religion maintained occasionally, even the whole length of the lane, at point of constable's staff; but, at other times, placed under the custody of the beadle, within certain black and unstately iron railings of St. Paul's, Covent Garden. [380 Among the wheelbarrows and over the vegetables, no perceptible dominance of religion; in the narrow, disquieted streets, none; in the tongues, deeds, daily ways of Maiden Lane, little. Some honesty, indeed, and English industry, and kindness of heart, and general idea of justice; but faith, of any national kind, shut up from one Sunday to the next, not artistically beautiful even in those Sab- [390 batical exhibitions; its paraphernalia being chiefly of high pews, heavy elocution, and cold grimness of behavior.

What chiaroscuro belongs to it—(dependent mostly on candlelight),—we will, however, draw considerably; no goodliness of escutcheon, nor other respectability being omitted, and the best of their results confessed, a meek old woman and a child being let into a pew, for whom [400 the reading by candlelight will be beneficial.

For the rest, this religion seems to him discreditable—discredited—not believing in itself; putting forth its authority in a cowardly way, watching how far it might be tolerated, continually shrinking, disclaiming, fencing, finessing; divided against itself, not by stormy rents, but by thin fissures, and splittings of plaster [410 from the walls. Not to be either obeyed, or combated, by an ignorant, yet clear-sighted youth; only to be scorned. And scorned not one whit the less, though also the dome dedicated to it looms high over distant winding of the Thames; as St. Mark's campanile rose, for goodly landmark, over mirage of lagoon. For St. Mark ruled over life; the Saint of London over death; St. Mark over St. [420 Mark's Place, but St. Paul over St. Paul's Churchyard.

Under these influences pass away the first reflective hours of life, with such conclusion as they can reach. In consequence of a fit of illness, he was taken—I cannot ascertain in what year—to live with an aunt, at Brentford; and here, I believe, received some schooling, which he seems to have snatched vigor- [430 ously; getting knowledge, at least by translation, of the more picturesque classical authors, which he turned presently to use, as we shall see. Hence also, walks about Putney and Twickenham in the summer time acquainted him with the look of English meadow-ground in its restricted states of paddock and park; and with some round-headed appearances of trees, and stately entrances to [440 houses of mark: the avenue at Bushy, and the iron gates and carved pillars of Hampton, impressing him apparently with great awe and admiration; so that in after life his little country house is,—of all places in the world,—at Twickenham! Of swans and reedy shores he now learns the soft motion and the green mystery, in a way not to be forgotten.

And at last fortune wills that the [450 lad's true life shall begin; and one summer's evening, after various wonderful stage-coach experiences on the north road, which gave him a love of stage-coaches ever after, he finds himself sitting alone among the Yorkshire hills. For the first time, the silence of Nature round him, her freedom sealed to him, her glory opened to him. Peace at last; no roll of cart-wheel, nor mutter of sullen [460 voices in the back shop; but curlew-cry in space of heaven, and welling of bell-toned streamlet by its shadowy rock. Freedom at last. Dead-wall, dark railing, fenced field, gated garden, all passed away like the dream of a prisoner; and behold, far as foot or eye can race or range, the moor, and cloud. Loveliness at last. It is here, then, among these deserted vales! Not among men. Those pale, [470 poverty-struck, or cruel faces;—that multitudinous, marred humanity—are not the only things that God has made. Here is something He has made which no one has marred. Pride of purple rocks, and river pools of blue, and tender wilderness of glittering trees, and misty lights of evening on immeasurable hills.

Beauty, and freedom, and peace; and yet another teacher, graver than [480 these. Sound preaching at last here, in Kirkstall crypt, concerning fate and life. Here, where the dark pool reflects the chancel pillars, and the cattle lie in unhindered rest, the soft sunshine on their dappled bodies, instead of priests' vestments; their white furry hair ruffled a little, fitfully, by the evening wind, deep-scented from the meadow thyme.

Consider deeply the import to him of [490 this, his first sight of ruin, and compare it with the effect of the architecture that was around Giorgione. There were indeed aged buildings, at Venice, in his time, but none in decay. All ruin was removed, and its place filled as quickly as in our London; but filled always by architecture loftier and more wonderful than that whose place it took, the boy himself happy to work upon the [500 walls of it; so that the idea of the passing away of the strength of men and beauty of their works never could occur to him sternly. Brighter and brighter the cities of Italy had been rising and broadening on hill and plain, for three hundred years. He saw only strength and immortality, could not but paint both; conceived the form of man as deathless, calm with power, and fiery with life. [510

Turner saw the exact reverse of this. In the present work of men, meanness, aimlessness, unsightliness: thin-walled, lath-divided, narrow-garreted houses of clay; booths of a darksome Vanity Fair, busily base.

But on Whitby Hill, and by Bolton Brook, remained traces of other handiwork. Men who could build had been there; and who also had wrought, not [520 merely for their own days. But to what purpose? Strong faith, and steady hands, and patient souls—can this, then, be all you have left! this the sum of your doing on the earth!—a nest whence the night-owl may whimper to the brook, and a ribbed skeleton of consumed arches, looming above the bleak banks of mist, from its cliff to the sea?

As the strength of men to Giorgione, [530 to Turner their weakness and vileness, were alone visible. They themselves, unworthy or ephemeral; their work, despicable, or decayed. In the Venetian's eyes, all beauty depended on man's presence and pride; in Turner's, on the solitude he had left, and the humiliation he had suffered.

And thus the fate and issue of all his work were determined at once. He [540 must be a painter of the strength of nature, there was no beauty elsewhere than in that; he must paint also the labor and sorrow and passing away of men: this was the great human truth visible to him.

Their labor, their sorrow, and their death. Mark the three. Labor: by sea and land, in field and city, at forge and furnace, helm and plough. No [550 pastoral indolence nor classic pride shall stand between him and the troubling of the world; still less between him and the toil of his country,—blind, tormented, unwearyed, marvellous England.

Also their Sorrow: Ruin of all their glorious work, passing away of their thoughts and their honor, mirage of pleasure, FALLACY OF HOPE; gathering of weed on temple step; gaining of wave [560 on deserted strand; weeping of the mother for the children, desolate by her breathless first-born in the streets of the city, desolate by her last sons slain, among the beasts of the field.

And their Death. That old Greek question again;—yet unanswered. The unconquerable spectre still fitting among the forest trees at twilight; rising ribbed out of the sea-sand;—white, a [570 strange Aphrodite,—out of the sea-foam; stretching its gray, cloven wings among the clouds; turning the light of their sunsets into blood. This has to be looked upon, and in a more terrible shape than ever Salvator or Dürer saw it. The wreck of one guilty country does not infer the ruin of all countries, and need not cause general terror respecting the laws of the universe. Neither did the orderly and [580 narrow succession of domestic joy and sorrow in a small German community bring the question in its breadth, or in any unresolvable shape, before the mind of Dürer. But the English death—the European death of the nineteenth century—was of another range and power; more terrible a thousandfold in its merely physical grasp and grief; more terrible, incalculably, in its mystery and shame. [590 What were the robber's casual pang, or the range of the flying skirmish, compared to the work of the axe, and the sword, and the famine, which was done during this man's youth on all the hills and plains of the Christian earth, from Moscow to Gibraltar? He was eighteen years old when Napoleon came down on Arcola. Look on the map of Europe and count the blood-stains on it, between [600 Arcola and Waterloo.

Not alone those blood-stains on the Alpine snow, and the blue of the Lombard plain. The English death was before his eyes also. No decent, calculable, consoled dying; no passing to rest like that of the aged burghers of Nuremberg town. No gentle processions to churchyards among the fields, the bronze crests bossed deep on the memorial tab- [610 lets, and the skylark singing above them from among the corn. But the life trampled out in the slime of the street, crushed to dust amidst the roaring of the wheel, tossed countless away into howling winter wind along five hundred leagues of rock-fanged shore. Or, worst of all, rotted down to forgotten graves through years of ignorant patience, and vain seeking for help from man, for hope in [620 God—infirm, imperfect yearning, as of motherless infants starving at the dawn; oppressed royalties of captive thought, vague ague-fits of bleak, amazed despair.

A goodly landscape this, for the lad to paint, and under a goodly light. Wide enough the light was, and clear; no more Salvator's lurid chasm on jagged horizon, nor Dürer's spotted rest of sunny gleam on hedgerow and field; but light [630 over all the world. Full shone now its awful globe, one pallid charnel-house,—a ball strewn bright with human ashes, glaring in poised sway beneath the sun, all blinding-white with death from pole to pole,—death, not of myriads of poor bodies only, but of will, and mercy, and conscience; death, not once inflicted on the flesh, but daily, fastening on the spirit; death, not silent or patient, wait- [640 ing his appointed hour, but voiceful, venomous; death with the taunting word, and burning grasp, and infixed sting.

"Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe." The word is spoken in our ears continually to other reapers than the angels,—to the busy skeletons that never tire for stooping. When the measure of iniquity is full, and it seems that another day might bring repentance and [650 redemption,—"Put ye in the sickle." When the young life has been wasted all away, and the eyes are just opening upon the tracks of ruin, and faint resolution rising in the heart for nobler things,—"Put ye in the sickle." When the roughest blows of fortune have been borne long and bravely, and the hand is just stretched to grasp its goal,—"Put ye in the sickle." And when there are but [660 a few in the midst of a nation, to save it, or to teach, or to cherish; and all its life is bound up in those few golden ears,—"Put ye in the sickle, pale reapers, and pour hemlock for your feast of harvest home."

This was the sight which opened on the young eyes, this the watchword sounding within the heart of Turner in his youth. [670

So taught, and prepared for his life's labor, sat the boy at last alone among his fair English hills; and began to paint, with cautious toil, the rocks, and fields, and trickling brooks, and soft white clouds of heaven.

From THE STONES OF VENICE

ST. MARK'S

"And so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus." If as the shores of Asia lessened upon his sight, the spirit of prophecy had entered into the heart of the weak disciple who had turned back when his hand was on the plough, and who had been judged, by the chiefest of Christ's captains, unworthy thenceforward to go forth with him to the work, how wonderful would he have thought [10 it, that by the lion symbol in future ages he was to be represented among men! how woful, that the war-cry of his name should so often reanimate the rage of the soldier, on those very plains where he himself had failed in the courage of the Christian, and so often dye with fruitless blood that very Cypriot Sea, over whose waves, in repentance and shame, he was following the Son of Consola- [20 tion!

That the Venetians possessed themselves of his body in the ninth century, there appears no sufficient reason to doubt, nor that it was principally in consequence of their having done so, that they chose him for their patron saint. There exists, however, a tradition that before he went into Egypt he had founded the church at Aquileia, and was thus [30 in some sort the first bishop of the Venetian isles and people. I believe that this tradition stands on nearly as good grounds as that of St. Peter having been the first bishop of Rome; but, as usual, it is enriched by various later additions and embellishments, much resembling the stories told respecting the church of Murano. Thus we find it recorded by the Santo Padre who compiled the Vite de' Santi [40 spettanti alle Chiese di Venezia, that "St. Mark having seen the people of Aquileia well grounded in religion, and being called to Rome by St. Peter, before setting off took with him the holy bishop Hermagoras, and went in a small boat to the marshes of Venice. There were at that period some houses built upon a certain high bank called Rialto, and the boat being driven by the wind was an- [50 chored in a marshy place, when St. Mark, snatched into ecstasy, heard the voice of an angel saying to him: 'Peace be to thee, Mark; here shall thy body rest.'" The angel goes on to foretell the building of "una stupenda, ne più veduta Città", but the fable is hardly ingenious enough to deserve farther relation.

But whether St. Mark was first bishop of Aquileia or not, St. Theodore was [60 the first patron of the city, nor can he yet be considered as having entirely abdicated his early right, as his statue, standing on a crocodile, still companions the winged lion on the opposing pillar of the piazzetta. A church erected to this Saint is said to have occupied, before the ninth century, the site of St. Mark's; and the traveller, dazzled by the brilliancy of the great square, ought not [70 to leave it without endeavoring to imagine its aspect in that early time, when it was a green field cloister-like and quiet, divided by a small canal, with a line of trees on each side; and extending between the two churches of St. Theodore and St. Gemanium, as the little piazza of Torcello lies between its "palazzo" and cathedral.

But in the year 813, when the seat of [80 government was finally removed to the Rialto, a Ducal Palace, built on the spot where the present one stands, with a Ducal Chapel beside it, gave a very different character to the Square of St. Mark; and fifteen years later, the acquisition of the body of the Saint, and its deposition in the Ducal Chapel, perhaps not yet completed, occasioned the investiture of that chapel with all pos- [90 sible splendor. St. Theodore was deposed from his patronship, and his church destroyed, to make room for the aggrandizement of the one attached to the Ducal Palace, and thenceforward known as "St. Mark's."

This first church was, however, destroyed by fire, when the Ducal Palace was burned in the revolt against Candiano, in 976. It was partly rebuilt by his [100 successor, Pietro Orseolo, on a larger scale; and, with the assistance of Byzantine architects, the fabric was carried on under successive Doges for nearly a hundred years; the main building being completed in 1071, but its incrustation with marble not till considerably later. It was consecrated on the 8th of October, 1085, according to Sansovino and the author of the Chiesa Ducale di S. [110 Marco, in 1094 according to Lazari, but certainly between 1084 and 1096, those years being the limits of the reign of Vital Falier; I incline to the supposition that it was soon after his accession to the throne in 1085, though Sansovino writes, by mistake, Ordelafo instead of Vital Falier. But, at all events, before the close of the eleventh century the great consecration of the church took place. [120 It was again injured by fire in 1106, but repaired; and from that time to the fall of Venice there was probably no Doge who did not in some slight degree embellish or alter the fabric, so that few parts of it can be pronounced boldly to be of any given date. Two periods of interference are, however, notable above the rest: the first, that in which the Gothic school had superseded the Byzantine to- [130 wards the close of the fourteenth century, when the pinnacles, upper archivolts, and window traceries were added to the exterior, and the great screen with various chapels and tabernacle-work, to the interior; the second, when the Renaissance school superseded the Gothic, and the pupils of Titian and Tintoret substituted, over one half of the church, their own compositions for the Greek mosaics [140 with which it was originally decorated; happily, though with no good will, having left enough to enable us to imagine and lament what they destroyed. Of this irreparable loss we shall have more to say hereafter; meantime, I wish only to fix in the reader's mind the succession of periods of alterations as firmly and simply as possible.

We have seen that the main body of [150 the church may be broadly stated to be of the eleventh century, the Gothic additions of the fourteenth, and the restored mosaics of the seventeenth. . . .

This, however, I only wish him to recollect in order that I may speak generally of the Byzantine architecture of St. Mark's, without leading him to suppose the whole church to have been built and decorated by Greek artists. Its later [160 portions, with the single exception of the seventeenth-century mosaics, have been so dexterously accommodated to the original fabric that the general effect is still that of a Byzantine building; and I shall not, except when it is absolutely necessary, direct attention to the discordant points, or weary the reader with anatomical criticism. Whatever in St. Mark's arrests the eye, or affects the [170 feelings, is either Byzantine, or has been modified by Byzantine influence; and our inquiry into its architectural merits need not therefore be disturbed by the anxieties of antiquarianism, or arrested by the obscurities of chronology.

And now I wish that the reader, before I bring him into St. Mark's Place, would imagine himself for a little time in a quiet English cathedral town, and walk [180 with me to the west front of its cathedral. Let us go together up the more retired street, at the end of which we can see the pinnacles of one of the towers, and then through the low gray gateway, with its battlemented top and small latticed window in the centre, into the inner private-looking road or close, where nothing goes in but the carts of the tradesmen who supply the bishop and the chap- [190 ter, and where there are little shaven grassplots, fenced in by neat rails, before old-fashioned groups of somewhat diminutive and excessively trim houses, with little oriel and bay windows jutting out here and there, and deep wooden cornices and eaves painted cream color and white, and small porches to their doors in the shape of cockle-shells, or little, crooked, thick, indescribable wooden gables [200 warped a little on one side; and so forward till we come to larger houses, also old-fashioned, but of red brick, and with gardens behind them, and fruit walls, which show here and there, among the nectarines, the vestiges of an old cloister arch or shaft, and looking in front on the cathedral square itself, laid out in rigid divisions of smooth grass and gravel walk, yet not uncheerful, especially [210 on the sunny side, where the canons' children are walking with their nursery-maids. And so, taking care not to tread on the grass, we will go along the straight walk to the west front, and there stand for a time, looking up at its deep-pointed porches and the dark places between their pillars where there were statues once, and where the fragments, here and there, of a stately figure are still left, which [220 has in it the likeness of a king, perhaps indeed a king on earth, perhaps a saintly king long ago in heaven; and so higher and higher up to the great mouldering wall of rugged sculpture and confused arcades, shattered, and gray, and grisly with heads of dragons and mocking fiends, worn by the rain and swirling winds into yet unseemlier shape, and colored on their stony scales by the [230] deep russet-orange lichen, melancholy gold; and so, higher still, to the bleak towers, so far above that the eye loses itself among the bosses of their traceries, though they are rude and strong, and only sees like a drift of eddying black points, now closing, now scattering, and now settling suddenly into invisible places among the bosses and flowers, the crowd of restless birds that fill the whole [240] square with that strange clangor of theirs, so harsh and yet so soothing, like the cries of birds on a solitary coast between the cliffs and sea.

Think for a little while of that scene, and the meaning of all its small formalisms, mixed with its serene sublimity. Estimate its secluded, continuous, drowsy felicities, and its evidence of the sense and steady performance of such kind [250] of duties as can be regulated by the cathedral clock; and weigh the influence of those dark towers on all who have passed through the lonely square at their feet for centuries, and on all who have seen them rising far away over the wooded plain, or catching on their square masses the last rays of the sunset, when the city at their feet was indicated only by the mist at the bend of the river. And [260] then let us quickly recollect that we are in Venice, and land at the extremity of the Calla Lunga San Moisè, which may be considered as there answering to the secluded street that led us to our English cathedral gateway.

We find ourselves in a paved alley, some seven feet wide where it is widest, full of people, and resonant with cries of itinerant salesmen,—a shriek in their [270] beginning, and dying away into a kind of brazen ringing, all the worse for its confinement between the high houses of the passage along which we have to make our way. Over-head, an inextricable confusion of rugged shutters, and iron balconies and chimney flues, pushed out on brackets to save room, and arched windows with projecting sills of Istrian stone, and gleams of green leaves [280] here and there where a fig-tree branch escapes over a lower wall from some inner cortile, leading the eye up to the narrow stream of blue sky high over all. On each side, a row of shops, as densely set as may be, occupying, in fact, intervals between the square stone shafts, about eight feet high, which carry the first floors: intervals of which one is narrow and serves as a door; the other is, in [290] the more respectable shops, wainscotted to the height of the counter and glazed above, but in those of the poorer tradesmen left open to the ground, and the wares laid on benches and tables in the open air, the light in all cases entering at the front only, and fading away in a few feet from the threshold into a gloom which the eye from without cannot penetrate, but which is generally broken [300] by a ray or two from a feeble lamp at the back of the shop, suspended before a print of the Virgin. The less pious shopkeeper sometimes leaves his lamp unlighted, and is contented with a penny print; the more religious one has his print colored and set in a little shrine with a gilded or figured fringe, with perhaps a faded flower or two on each side, and his lamp burning brilliantly. Here, at the [310] fruiterer's, where the dark-green watermelons are heaped upon the counter like cannon balls, the Madonna has a tabernacle of fresh laurel leaves; but the pewterer next door has let his lamp out, and there is nothing to be seen in his shop but the dull gleam of the studded patterns on the copper pans, hanging from his roof in the darkness. Next comes a "Vendita Frittole e Liquori," [320] where the Virgin, enthroned in a very humble manner beside a tallow candle on a back shelf, presides over certain ambrosial morsels of a nature too ambiguous to be defined or enumerated. But a few steps farther on, at the regular wine-shop of the calle, where we are offered "Vino Nostrani a Soldi 28.32," the Madonna is in great glory, enthroned above ten or a dozen large red casks of three- [330] year-old vintage, and flanked by goodly ranks of bottles of Maraschino, and two crimson lamps; and for the evening, when the gondoliers will come to drink out, under her auspices, the money they have gained during the day, she will have a whole chandelier.

A yard or two farther, we pass the hostelry of the Black Eagle, and, glancing as we pass through the square door [340] of marble, deeply moulded, in the outer wall, we see the shadows of its pergola of vines resting on an ancient well, with a pointed shield carved on its side, and so presently emerge on the bridge and Campo San Moisè, whence to the entrance into St. Mark's Place, called the Bocca di Piazza (mouth of the square), the Venetian character is nearly destroyed, first by the frightful façade of San Moisè, [350] which we will pause at another time to examine, and then by the modernizing of the shops as they near the piazza, and the mingling with the lower Venetian populace of lounging groups of English and Austrians. We will push fast through them into the shadow of the pillars at the end of the "Bocca di Piazza," and then we forget them all; for between those pillars there opens a great light, and, [360] in the midst of it, as we advance slowly, the vast tower of St. Mark seems to lift itself visibly forth from the level field of chequered stones; and, on each side, the countless arches prolong themselves into ranged symmetry, as if the rugged and irregular houses that pressed together above us in the dark alley had been struck back into sudden obedience and lovely order, and all their rude casements [370] and broken walls had been transformed into arches charged with goodly sculpture, and fluted shafts of delicate stone.

And well may they fall back, for beyond those troops of ordered arches there rises a vision out of the earth, and all the great square seems to have opened from it in a kind of awe, that we may see it far away;—a multitude of pillars and white domes, clustered into a long [380] low pyramid of colored light; a treasure-heap, it seems, partly of gold, and partly

of opal and mother-of-pearl, hollowed beneath into five great vaulted porches, ceiled with fair mosaic, and beset with sculpture of alabaster, clear as amber and delicate as ivory,—sculpture fantastic and involved, of palm leaves and lilies, and grapes and pomegranates, and birds clinging and fluttering among [390] the branches, all twined together into an endless network of buds and plumes; and, in the midst of it, the solemn forms of angels, sceptred, and robed to the feet, and leaning to each other across the gates, their figures indistinct among the gleaming of the golden ground through the leaves beside them, interrupted and dim, like the morning light as it faded back among the branches of Eden, [400] when first its gates were angel-guarded long ago. And round the walls of the porches there are set pillars of variegated stones, jasper and porphyry, and deep-green serpentine spotted with flakes of snow, and marbles, that half refuse and half yield to the sunshine, Cleopatra-like, "their bluest veins to kiss"—the shadow, as it steals back from them, revealing line after line of azure un- [410] dulation, as a receding tide leaves the waved sand; their capitals rich with interwoven tracery, rooted knots of herbage, and drifting leaves of acanthus and vine, and mystical signs, all beginning and ending in the Cross; and above them, in the broad archivolts, a continuous chain of language and of life—angels, and the signs of heaven, and the labors of men, each in its appointed season [420] upon the earth; and above these, another range of glittering pinnacles, mixed with white arches edged with scarlet flowers,—a confusion of delight, amidst which the breasts of the Greek horses are seen blazing in their breadth of golden strength, and the St. Mark's Lion, lifted on a blue field covered with stars, until at last, as if in ecstasy, the crests of the arches break into a marble foam, and toss them- [430] selves far into the blue sky in flashes and wreaths of sculptured spray, as if the breakers on the Lido shore had been frost-bound before they fell, and the sea-nymphs had inlaid them with coral and amethyst.

Between that grim cathedral of England and this, what an interval! There is a type of it in the very birds that haunt them; for, instead of the restless [440 crowd, hoarse-voiced and sable-winged, drifting on the bleak upper air, the St. Mark's porches are full of doves, that nestle among the marble foliage, and mingle the soft iridescence of their living plumes, changing at every motion, with the tints, hardly less lovely, that have stood unchanged for seven hundred years.

And what effect has this splendor [450 on those who pass beneath it? You may walk from sunrise to sunset, to and fro, before the gateway of St. Mark's, and you will not see an eye lifted to it, nor a countenance brightened by it. Priest and layman, soldier and civilian, rich and poor, pass by it alike regardlessly. Up to the very recesses of the porches, the meanest tradesmen of the city push their counters; nay, the foundations of its [460 pillars are themselves the seats—not "of them that sell doves" for sacrifice, but of the vendors of toys and caricatures. Round the whole square in front of the church there is almost a continuous line of cafés, where the idle Venetians of the middle classes lounge, and read empty journals; in its centre the Austrian hands play during the time of vespers, their martial music jarring with the [470 organ notes,—the march drowning the miserere, and the sullen crowd thickening round them,—a crowd, which, if it had its will, would stiletto every soldier that pipes to it. And in the recesses of the porches, all day long, knots of men of the lowest classes, unemployed and listless, lie basking in the sun like lizards; and unregarded children,—every heavy glance of their young eyes full of des- [480 peration and stony depravity, and their throats hoarse with cursing,—gamble, and fight, and snarl, and sleep, hour after hour, clashing their bruised centesimi upon the marble ledges of the church porch. And the images of Christ and His angels look down upon it continually.

From TIME AND TIDE

Letter XV

THE NATURE OF THEFT BY UNJUST PROFITS.—CRIME CAN FINALLY BE ARRESTED ONLY BY EDUCATION

The first methods of polite robbery, by dishonest manufacture, and by debt, of which we have been hitherto speaking, are easily enough to be dealt with and ended, when once men have a mind to end them. But the third method of polite robbery, by dishonest acquisition, has many branches, and is involved among honest arts of acquisition, so that it is difficult to repress the one with- [10 out restraining the other.

Observe, first, large fortunes cannot honestly be made by the work of one man's hands or head. If his work benefits multitudes, and involves position of high trust, it may be (I do not say that it is) expedient to reward him with great wealth or estate; but fortune of this kind is freely given in gratitude for benefit, not as repayment for labor. Also, men [20 of peculiar genius in any art, if the public can enjoy the product of their genius, may set it at almost any price they choose; but this, I will show you when I come to speak of art, is unlawful on their part, and ruinous to their own powers. Genius must not be sold; the sale of it involves, in a transcendental, but perfectly true sense, the guilt both of simony and prostitution. Your labor only [30 may be sold; your soul must not.

Now, by fair pay for fair labor, according to the rank of it, a man can obtain means of comfortable, or if he needs it, refined life. But he cannot obtain large fortune. Such fortunes as are now the prizes of commerce can be made only in one of three ways:—

1. By obtaining command over the labor of multitudes of other men, and [40 taxing it for our own profit.
2. By treasure-trove,—as of mines, useful vegetable products, and the like,—in circumstances putting them under our own exclusive control.
3. By speculation (commercial gambling). The first two of these means of obtaining riches are, in some forms and within certain limits, lawful, and advantageous to the State. The third is [50 entirely detrimental to it; for in all cases of profit derived from speculation, at best, what one man gains another loses; and the net result to the State is zero (pecuniarily), with the loss of time and ingenuity spent in the transaction; besides the disadvantage involved in the discouragement of the losing party, and the corrupted moral natures of both. This is the result of speculation at its [60 best. At its worst, not only B. loses what A. gains (having taken his fair risk of such loss for his fair chance of gain), but C. and D., who never had any chance at all, are drawn in by B.'s fall, and the final result is that A. sets up his carriage on the collected sum which was once a means of living to a dozen families.

Nor is this all. For while real commerce is founded on real necessities or [70 uses, and limited by these, speculation, of which the object is merely gain, seeks to excite imaginary necessities and popular desires, in order to gain its temporary profit from the supply of them. So that not only the persons who lend their money to it will be finally robbed, but the work done with their money will be for the most part useless, and thus the entire body of the public injured as [80 well as the persons concerned in the transaction. Take, for instance, the architectural decorations of railways throughout the kingdom,—representing many millions of money for which no farthing of dividend can ever be forthcoming. The public will not be induced to pay the smallest fraction of higher fare to Rochester or Dover because the iron-work of the bridge which carries them [90 over the Thames is covered with floral cockades, and the piers of it edged with ornamental cornices. All that work is simply put there by the builders that they may put the percentage upon it into their own pockets; and the rest of the money being thrown into that floral form, there is an end of it, as far as the shareholders are concerned. Millions upon millions have thus been spent, [100 within the last twenty years, on ornamental arrangements of zigzag bricks, black and blue tiles, cast-iron foliage, and the like; of which millions, as I said, not a penny can ever return into the shareholders' pockets, nor contribute to public speed or safety on the line. It is all sunk forever in ornamental architecture, and (trust me for this!) all that architecture is bad. As such, it had [110 incomparably better not have been built. Its only result will be to corrupt what capacity of taste or right pleasure in such work we have yet left to us! And consider a little, what other kind of result than that might have been attained if all those millions had been spent usefully: say, in buying land for the people, or building good houses for them, or (if it had been imperatively required to [120 be spent decoratively) in laying out gardens and parks for them,—or buying noble works of art for their permanent possession,—or, best of all, establishing frequent public schools and libraries! Count what those lost millions would have so accomplished for you! But you left the affair to "supply and demand," and the British public had not brains enough to "demand" land, or lodg- [130 ing, or books. It "demanded" cast-iron cockades and zigzag cornices, and is "supplied" with them, to its beatitude for evermore.

Now, the theft we first spoke of, by falsity of workmanship or material, is, indeed, so far worse than these thefts by dishonest acquisition, that there is no possible excuse for it on the ground of self-deception; while many specula- [140 tive thefts are committed by persons who really mean to do no harm, but think the system on the whole a fair one, and do the best they can in it for themselves. But in the real fact of the crime, when consciously committed, in the numbers reached by its injury, in the degree of suffering it causes to those whom it ruins, in the baseness of its calculated betrayal of implicit trust, in the yet more per- [150 fect vileness of the obtaining such trust by misrepresentation, only that it may be betrayed, and in the impossibility that the crime should be at all committed, except by persons of good position and large knowledge of the world,—what manner of theft is so wholly unpardonable, so inhuman, so contrary to every law and instinct which binds and animates society? [160]

And then consider farther, how many of the carriages that glitter in our streets are driven, and how many of the stately houses that gleam among our English fields are inhabited, by this kind of thief!

I happened to be reading this morning (29th March) some portions of the Lent services, and I came to a pause over the familiar words, "And with Him they crucified two thieves." Have you [170] ever considered (I speak to you now as a professing Christian) why, in the accomplishment of the "numbering among transgressors," the transgressors chosen should have been especially thieves—not murderers, nor, as far as we know, sinners by any gross violence? Do you observe how the sin of theft is again and again indicated as the chiefly antagonistic one to the law of Christ? "This he said, [180] not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and had the bag" (of Judas). And again, though Barabbas was a leader of sedition and a murderer besides—(that the popular election might be in all respects perfect)—yet St. John, in curt and conclusive account of him, fastens again on the theft. "Then cried they all again saying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was [190] a robber." I believe myself the reason to be that theft is indeed, in its subtle forms, the most complete and excuseless of human crimes. Sins of violence usually have passion to excuse them: they may be the madness of moments; or they may be apparently the only means of extrication from calamity. In other cases, they are the diseased habits of lower and brutified natures. But theft involv- [200] ing deliberative intellect, and absence of passion, is the purest type of wilful iniquity, in persons capable of doing right. Which being so, it seems to be fast becoming the practice of modern society to crucify its Christ indeed, as willingly as ever, in the persons of His poor; but by no means now to crucify its thieves beside Him! It elevates its thieves after another fashion; sets them upon an [210] hill, that their light may shine before men, and that all may see their good works, and glorify their Father in—the Opposite of Heaven.

I think your trade parliament will have to put an end to this kind of business somehow! But it cannot be done by laws merely, where the interests and circumstances are so extended and complex. Nay, even as regards lower and more [220] defined crimes, the assigned punishment is not to be thought of as a preventive means; but only as the seal of opinion set by society on the fact. Crime cannot be hindered by punishment; it will always find some shape and outlet, unpunishable or unclosed. Crime can only be truly hindered by letting no man grow up a criminal—by taking away the will to commit sin; not by mere punishment [230] of its commission. Crime, small and great, can only be truly stayed by education—not the education of the intellect only, which is, on some men, wasted, and for others mischievous; but education of the heart, which is alike good and necessary for all.

THE RELATION OF ART TO MORALS

. . . And now I pass to the arts with which I have special concern, in which, though the facts are exactly the same, I shall have more difficulty in proving my assertion, because very few of us are as cognizant of the merit of painting as we are of that of language; and I can only show you whence that merit springs, after having thoroughly shown you in what it consists. But, in the meantime, I [10] have simply to tell you, that the manual arts are as accurate exponents of ethical state, as other modes of expression; first, with absolute precision, of that of the workman; and then with precision, disguised by many distorting influences, of that of the nation to which it belongs.

And, first, they are a perfect exponent of the mind of the workman: but, being so, remember, if the mind be great or [20] complex, the art is not an easy book to read; for we must ourselves possess all the mental characters of which we are to read the signs. No man can read the evidence of labor who is not himself laborious, for he does not know what the work cost: nor can he read the evidence of true passion if he is not passionate; nor of gentleness if he is not gentle: and the most subtle signs of [30] fault and weakness of character he can only judge by having had the same faults to fight with. I myself, for instance, know impatient work, and tired work, better than most critics, because I am myself always impatient, and often tired:—so also, the patient and indefatigable touch of a mighty master becomes more wonderful to me than to others. Yet, wonderful in no mean measure it will [40] be to you all, when I make it manifest;—and as soon as we begin our real work, and you have learned what it is to draw a true line, I shall be able to make manifest to you,—and undisputably so,—that the day's work of a man like Mantegna or Paul Veronese consists of an unfaltering, uninterrupted, succession of movements of the hand more precise than those of the finest fencer: the pencil [50] leaving one point and arriving at another, not only with unerring precision at the extremity of the line, but with an unerring and yet varied course—sometimes over spaces a foot or more in extent—yet a course so determined everywhere that either of these men could, and Veronese often does, draw a finished profile, or any other portion of the contour of the face, with one line, not afterwards [60] changed. Try, first, to realize to yourselves the muscular precision of that action, and the intellectual strain of it; for the movement of a fencer is perfect in practised monotony; but the movement of the hand of a great painter is at every instant governed by direct and new intention. Then imagine that muscular firmness and subtlety, and the instantaneously selective and ordant [70] energy of the brain, sustained all day long, not only without fatigue, but with a visible joy in the exertion, like that which an eagle seems to take in the wave of his wings; and this all life long, and through long life, not only without failure of power, but with visible increase of it, until the actually organic changes of old age. And then consider, so far as you know anything of physiology, what [80] sort of an ethical state of body and mind that means!—ethic through ages past! what fineness of race there must be to get it, what exquisite balance and symmetry of the vital powers! And then, finally, determine for yourselves whether a manhood like that is consistent with any viciousness of soul, with any mean anxiety, any gnawing lust, any wretchedness of spite or remorse, any conscious- [90] ness of rebellion against law of God or man, or any actual, though unconscious violation of even the least law to which obedience is essential for the glory of life, and the pleasing of its Giver.

It is, of course, true that many of the strong masters had deep faults of character, but their faults always show in their work. It is true that some could not govern their passions; if so, they died [100] young, or they painted ill when old. But the greater part of our misapprehension in the whole matter is from our not having well known who the great painters were, and taking delight in the petty skill that was bred in the fumes of the taverns of the North, instead of theirs who breathed empyreal air, sons of the morning, under the woods of Assisi and the crags of Cadore. [110]

It is true however also, as I have pointed out long ago, that the strong masters fall into two great divisions, one leading simple and natural lives, the other restrained in a Puritanism of the worship of beauty; and these two manners of life you may recognize in a moment by their work. Generally the naturalists are the strongest; but there are two of the Puritans, whose work if I can suc- [120] ceed in making clearly understandable to you during my three years here, it is all I need care to do. But of these two Puritans one I cannot name to you, and the other I at present will not. One I cannot, for no one knows his name, except the baptismal one, Bernard, or “dear little Bernard”—Bernardino, called from his birthplace, (Luino, on the Lago Maggiore,) Bernard of Luino. The other [130 is a Venetian, of whom many of you probably have never heard, and of whom, through me, you shall not hear, until I have tried to get some picture by him over to England.

Observe then, this Puritanism in the worship of beauty, though sometimes weak, is always honorable and amiable, and the exact reverse of the false Puritanism, which consists in the dread or [140 disdain of beauty. And in order to treat my subject rightly, I ought to proceed from the skill of art to the choice of its subject, and show you how the moral temper of the workman is shown by his seeking lovely forms and thoughts to express, as well as by the force of his hand in expression. But I need not now urge this part of the proof on you, because you are already, I believe, sufficiently [150 conscious of the truth in this matter, and also I have already said enough of it in my writings; whereas I have not at all said enough of the infallibleness of fine technical work as a proof of every other good power. And indeed it was long before I myself understood the true meaning of the pride of the greatest men in their mere execution, shown for a permanent lesson to us, in the stories [160 which, whether true or not, indicate with absolute accuracy the general conviction of great artists;—the stories of the contest of Apelles and Protogenes in a line only, (of which I can promise you, you shall know the meaning to some purpose in a little while),—the story of the circle of Giotto, and especially, which you may perhaps not have observed, the expression of Durer in his inscription on the [170 drawings sent him by Raphael. These figures, he says, "Raphael drew and sent to Albert Dürer in Nürnberg, to show him"—What? Not his invention, nor his beauty of expression, but "sein Hand zu weisen," "to show him his hand." And you will find, as you examine farther, that all inferior artists are continually trying to escape from the necessity of sound work, and either [180 indulging themselves in their delights in subject, or pluming themselves on their noble motives for attempting what they cannot perform; (and observe, by the way, that a great deal of what is mistaken for conscientious motive is nothing but a very pestilent, because very subtle, condition of vanity); whereas the great men always understand at once that the first morality of a painter, as of every- [190 body else, is to know his business; and so earnest are they in this, that many, whose lives you would think, by the results of their work, had been passed in strong emotion, have in reality subdued themselves, though capable of the very strongest passions, into a calm as absolute as that of a deeply sheltered mountain lake, which reflects every agitation of the clouds in the sky, and every change [200 of the shadows on the hills, but is itself motionless.

Finally, you must remember that great obscurity has been brought upon the truth in this matter by the want of integrity and simplicity in our modern life. I mean integrity in the Latin sense, wholeness. Everything is broken up, and mingled in confusion, both in our habits and thoughts; besides being in great part [210 imitative: so that you not only cannot tell what a man is, but sometimes you cannot tell whether he is, at all!—whether you have indeed to do with a spirit, or only with an echo. And thus the same inconsistencies appear now, between the work of artists of merit and their personal characters, as those which you find continually disappointing expectation in the lives of men of modern literary [220 power;—the same conditions of society having obscured or misdirected the best qualities of the imagination, both in our literature and art. Thus there is no serious question with any of us as to the personal character of Dante and Giotto, of Shakespeare and Holbein; but we pause timidly in the attempt to analyze the moral laws of the art skill in recent poets, novelists, and painters. [230

Let me assure you once for all, that as you grow older, if you enable yourselves to distinguish by the truth of your own lives, what is true in those of other men, you will gradually perceive that all good has its origin in good, never in evil; that the fact of either literature or painting being truly fine of their kind, whatever their mistaken aim, or partial error, is proof of their noble origin: and that, [240 if there is indeed sterling value in the thing done, it has come of a sterling worth in the soul that did it, however alloyed or defiled by conditions of sin which are sometimes more appalling or more strange than those which all may detect in their own hearts, because they are part of a personality altogether larger than ours, and as far beyond our judgment in its darkness as beyond our following in [250 its light. And it is sufficient warning against what some might dread as the probable effect of such a conviction on your own minds, namely, that you might permit yourselves in the weaknesses which you imagined to be allied to genius, when they took the form of personal temptations;—it is surely, I say, sufficient warning against so mean a folly, to discern, as you may with little [260 pains, that, of all human existences, the lives of men of that distorted and tainted nobility of intellect are probably the most miserable.

I pass to the second, and for us the more practically important question, What is the effect of noble art upon other men; what has it done for national morality in time past: and what effect is the extended knowledge or possession of it [270 likely to have upon us now? And here we are at once met by the facts, which are as gloomy as indisputable, that, while many peasant populations, among whom scarcely the rudest practice of art has ever been attempted, have lived in comparative innocence, honor, and happiness, the worst foulness and cruelty of savage tribes have been frequently associated with fine ingenuities of decorative design; also, that no people has ever attained the higher stages of art skill, except at a period of its civilization which was sullied by frequent, violent, and even monstrous crime; and, lastly, that the attaining of perfection in art power, has been hitherto, in every nation, the accurate signal of the beginning of its ruin.

Respecting which phenomena, observe first, that although good never springs out of evil, it is developed to its highest by contention with evil. There are some groups of peasantry, in far-away nooks of Christian countries, who are nearly as innocent as lambs; but the morality which gives power to art is the morality of men, not of cattle.

Secondly, the virtues of the inhabitants of many country districts are apparent, not real; their lives are indeed artless, but not innocent; and it is only the monotony of circumstances, and the absence of temptation, which prevent the exhibition of evil passions not less real because often dormant, nor less foul because shown only in petty faults, or inactive malignities.

But you will observe also that absolute artlessness, to men in any kind of [310 moral health, is impossible; they have always, at least, the art by which they live—agriculture or seamanship; and in these industries, skilfully practised, you will find the law of their moral training; while, whatever the adversity of circumstances, every rightly-minded peasantry, such as that of Sweden, Denmark, Bavaria, or Switzerland, has associated with its needful industry a quite [320 studied school of pleasurable art in dress; and generally also in song, and simple domestic architecture.

Again, I need not repeat to you here what I endeavored to explain in the first lecture in the book I called The Two Paths, respecting the arts of savage races: but I may now note briefly that such arts are the result of an intellectual activity which has found no room to expand, and [330 which the tyranny of nature or of man has condemned to disease through arrested growth. And where neither Christianity, nor any other religion conveying some moral help, has reached, the animal energy of such races necessarily flames into ghastly conditions of evil, and the grotesque or frightful forms assumed by their art are precisely indicative of their distorted moral nature. [340

But the truly great nations nearly always begin from a race possessing this imaginative power; and for some time their progress is very slow, and their state not one of innocence, but of feverish and

faultful animal energy. This is gradually subdued and exalted into bright human life; the art instinct purifying itself with the rest of the nature, until social perfectness is nearly reached; and then [350 comes the period when conscience and intellect are so highly developed, that new forms of error begin in the inability to fulfil the demands of the one, or to answer the doubts of the other. Then the wholeness of the people is lost; all kinds of hypocrisies and oppositions of science develop themselves; their faith is questioned on one side, and compromised with on the other; wealth commonly in- [360 creases at the same period to a destructive extent; luxury follows; and the ruin of the nation is then certain: while the arts, all this time, are simply, as I said at first, the exponents of each phase of its moral state, and no more control it in its political career than the gleam of the firefly guides its oscillation. It is true that their most splendid results are usually obtained in the swiftness of the power which is [370 hurrying to the precipice; but to lay the charge of the catastrophe to the art by which it is illumined, is to find a cause for the cataract in the hues of its iris. It is true that the colossal vices belonging to periods of great national wealth (for wealth, you will find, is the real root of all evil) can turn every good gift and skill of nature or of man to evil purpose. If, in such times, fair pictures have been [380 misused, how much more fair realities? And if Miranda is immoral to Caliban is that Miranda's fault? . . .

THOMAS BABINGTON, LORD
MACAULAY (1800-1859)

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

Oliver Goldsmith, one of the most pleasing English writers of the eighteenth century. He was of a Protestant and Saxon family which had been long settled in Ireland, and which had, like most other Protestant and Saxon families, been, in troubled times, harassed and put in fear by the native population. His father, Charles Goldsmith, studied in the reign of Queen Anne at the diocesan [10 school at Elphin, became attached to the daughter of the schoolmaster, married her, took orders, and settled at a place called Pallas, in the county of Longford. There he with difficulty supported his wife and children on what he could earn, partly as a curate and partly as a farmer.

At Pallas Oliver Goldsmith was born in November 1728. That spot was then, for all practical purposes, almost as [20 remote from the busy and splendid capital in which his later years were passed, as any clearing in Upper Canada or any sheep-walk in Australasia now is. Even at this day those enthusiasts who venture to make a pilgrimage to the birthplace of the poet are forced to perform the latter part of their journey on foot. The hamlet lies far from any high-road on a dreary plain which in wet [30 weather is often a lake. The lanes would break any jaunting-car to pieces; and there are ruts and sloughs through which the most strongly-built wheels cannot be dragged.

While Oliver was still a child, his father was presented to a living worth about £200 a year, in the county of West Meath. The family accordingly quitted their cottage in the wilderness for a [40 spacious house on a frequented road, near the village of Lissoy. Here the boy was taught his letters by a maid-servant, and was sent in his seventh year to a village school kept by an old quarter-master on half-pay, who professed to teach nothing but reading, writing, and arithmetic, but who had an inexhaustible fund of stories about ghosts, banshees, and fairies, about the great Rap- [50 paree chiefs, Baldearg O'Donnell and galloping Hogan, and about the exploits of Peterborough and Stanhope, the surprise of Monjuich, and the glorious disaster of Brihuega. This man must have been of the Protestant religion; but he was of the aboriginal race, and not only spoke the Irish language, but could pour forth unpremeditated Irish verses. Oliver early became, and through life con- [60 tinued to be, a passionate admirer of the Irish music, and especially of the compositions of Carolan, some of the last notes of whose harp he heard. It ought to be added that Oliver, though by birth one of the Englishry, and though connected by numerous ties with the established church, never showed the least sign of that contemptuous antipathy with which, in his days, the ruling [70] minority in Ireland too generally regarded the subject majority. So far indeed was he from sharing the opinions and feelings of the caste to which he belonged, that he conceived an aversion to the Glorious and Immortal Memory, and, even when George the Third was on the throne, maintained that nothing but the restoration of the banished dynasty could save the country. [80]

From the humble academy kept by the old soldier Goldsmith was removed in his ninth year. He went to several grammar-schools, and acquired some knowledge of the ancient languages. His life at this time seems to have been far from happy. He had, as appears from the admirable portrait of him at Knowle, features harsh even to ugliness. The small-pox had set its mark on him [90] with more than usual severity. His stature was small, and his limbs ill put together. Among boys little tenderness is shown to personal defects; and the ridicule excited by poor Oliver's appearance was heightened by a peculiar simplicity and a disposition to blunder which he retained to the last. He became the common butt of boys and masters, was pointed at as a fright in the play-ground, and flogged as a dunce in the schoolroom. When he had risen to eminence, those who had once derided him ransacked their memory for the events of his early years, and recited repartees and couplets which had dropped from him, and which, though little noticed at the time, were supposed, a quarter of a century later, to indicate the powers which produced the Vicar of Wakefield and the Deserted Village. [110]

In his seventeenth year Oliver went up to Trinity College, Dublin, as a sizar. The sizars paid nothing for food and tuition, and very little for lodging; but they had to perform some menial services from which they have long been relieved. They swept the court: they carried up the dinner to the fellows' table, and changed the plates and poured out [120] the ale of the rulers of the society. Goldsmith was quartered, not alone, in a garret, on the window of which his name, scrawled by himself, is still read with interest.¹ From such garrets many men of less parts than his have made their way to the woolsack or to the episcopal bench. But Goldsmith, while he suffered all the humiliations, threw away all the advantages of his situation. He neglected the studies of the place, stood low at the examinations, was turned down to the bottom of his class for playing the buffoon in the lecture-room, was severely reprimanded for pumping on a constable, and was caned by a brutal tutor for giving a ball in the attic story of the college to some gay youths and damsels from the city.

While Oliver was leading at Dublin [140] a life divided between squalid distress and squalid dissipation, his father died, leaving a mere pittance. The youth obtained his bachelor's degree, and left the University. During some time the humble dwelling to which his widowed mother had retired was his home. He was now in his twenty-first year; it was necessary that he should do something; and his education seemed to have fitted him [150] to do nothing but to dress himself in gaudy colors, of which he was as fond as a magpie, to take a hand at cards, to sing Irish airs, to play the flute, to angle in summer, and to tell ghost stories by the fire in winter. He tried five or six professions in turn without success. He applied for ordination; but, as he applied in scarlet clothes, he was speedily turned out of the episcopal palace. He then [160] became tutor in an opulent family, but soon quitted his situation in consequence of a dispute about play. Then he determined to emigrate to America. His relations, with much satisfaction, saw him set out for Cork on a good horse, with thirty pounds in his pocket. But in six weeks he came back on a miserable hack, without a penny, and informed his mother that the ship in which he had taken [170 his passage, having got a fair wind while he was at a party of pleasure, had sailed without him. Then he resolved to study the law. A generous kinsman advanced fifty pounds. With this sum Goldsmith went to Dublin, was enticed into a gaming-house, and lost every shilling. He then thought of medicine. A small purse was made up: and in his twenty-fourth year he was sent to Edinburgh. At Edin- [180 burgh he passed eighteen months in nominal attendance on lectures, and picked up some superficial information about chemistry and natural history. Thence he went to Leyden, still pretending to study physic. He left that celebrated university, the third university at which he had resided, in his twenty-seventh year, without a degree, with the merest smattering of medical knowl- [190 edge, and with no property but his clothes and his flute. His flute, however, proved a useful friend. He rambled on foot through Flanders, France, and Switzerland, playing tunes which everywhere set the peasantry dancing, and which often procured for him a supper and a bed. He wandered as far as Italy. His musical performances, indeed, were not to the taste of the Italians, but he [200 contrived to live on the alms which he obtained at the gates of convents. It should, however, be observed that the stories which he told about this part of his life ought to be received with great caution; for strict veracity was never one of his virtues; and a man who is ordinarily inaccurate in narration is likely to be more than ordinarily inaccurate when he talks about his own travels. Gold- [210 smith, indeed, was so regardless of truth as to assert in print that he was present at a most interesting conversation between Voltaire and Fontenelle, and that this conversation took place at Paris. Now it is certain that Voltaire never was within a hundred leagues of Paris during the whole time which Goldsmith passed on the Continent.

¹ The glass on which the name is written has, as we are informed by a writer in Notes and Queries (2nd S. ix. p. 91), been enclosed in a frame deposited in the Manuscript Room of the College Library, where it is still to be seen. (Macaulay.)

In 1756 the wanderer landed at [220 Dover, without a shilling, without a friend, and without a calling. He had, indeed, if his own unsupported evidence may be trusted, obtained from the University of Padua a doctor's degree; but this dignity proved utterly useless to him. In England his flute was not in request; there were no convents; and he was forced to have recourse to a series of desperate expedients. He turned strolling [230 player; but his face and figure were ill suited to the boards even of the humblest theatre. He pounded drugs and ran about London with phials for charitable chemists. He joined a swarm of beggars, which made its nest in Axe Yard. He was for a time usher of a school, and felt the miseries and humiliations of this situation so keenly that he thought it a promotion to be permitted to earn his [240 bread as a bookseller's hack; but he soon found the new yoke more galling than the old one, and was glad to become an usher again. He obtained a medical appointment in the service of the East India Company: but the appointment was speedily revoked. Why it was revoked we are not told. The subject was one on which he never liked to talk. It is probable that he was incompetent to per- [250 form the duties of the place. Then he presented himself at Surgeons' Hall for examination, as mate to a naval hospital. Even to so humble a post he was found unequal. By this time the schoolmaster whom he had served for a morsel of food and the third part of a bed was no more. Nothing remained but to return to the lowest drudgery of literature. Goldsmith took a garret in a miserable court, [260 to which he had to climb from the brink of Fleet Ditch by a dizzy ladder of flagstones called Breakneck Steps. The court and the ascent have long disappeared; but old Londoners will remember both. Here, at thirty, the unlucky adventurer sat down to toil like a galley slave.

In the succeeding six years he sent to the press some things which have [270 survived and many which have perished. He produced articles for reviews, magazines, and newspapers; children's books which, bound in gilt paper and adorned with hideous woodcuts, appeared in the window of the once far-famed shop at the corner of Saint Paul's Churchyard; An Enquiry into the State of Polite Learning in Europe, which, though of little or no value, is still reprinted among his [280] works; a Life of Beau Nash, which is not reprinted, though it well deserves to be so; a superficial and incorrect, but very readable, History of England, in a series of letters purporting to be addressed by a nobleman to his son; and some lively and amusing Sketches of London Society, in a series of letters purporting to be addressed by a Chinese traveller to his friends. All these works were anonymous [290] mous; but some of them were well known to be Goldsmith's; and he gradually rose in the estimation of the booksellers for whom he drudged. He was, indeed, emphatically a popular writer. For accurate research or grave disquisition he was not well qualified by nature or by education. He knew nothing accurately: his reading had been desultory; nor had he meditated deeply on what he had [300] read. He had seen much of the world; but he had noticed and retained little more of what he had seen than some grotesque incidents and characters which had happened to strike his fancy. But, though his mind was very scantily stored with materials, he used what materials he had in such a way as to produce a wonderful effect. There have been many greater writers; but perhaps no writer [310] was ever more uniformly agreeable. His style was always pure and easy, and, on proper occasions, pointed and energetic. His narratives were always amusing, his descriptions always picturesque, his humor rich and joyous, yet not without an occasional tinge of amiable sadness. About everything that he wrote, serious or sportive, there was a certain natural grace and decorum, hardly to be expected [320] from a man a great part of whose life had been passed among thieves and beggars, street-walkers and merry-andrews, in those squalid dens which are the reproach of great capitals.

As his name gradually became known, the circle of his acquaintance widened. He was introduced to Johnson, who was then considered as the first of living English writers; to Reynolds, the first of [330] English painters; and to Burke, who had not yet entered Parliament, but who had distinguished himself greatly by his writings and by the eloquence of his conversation. With these eminent men Goldsmith became intimate. In 1763 he was one of the nine original members of that celebrated fraternity which has sometimes been called the Literary Club, but which has always disclaimed that [340] epithet, and still glories in the simple name of The Club.

By this time Goldsmith had quitted his miserable dwelling at the top of Breakneck Steps, and had taken chambers in the more civilized region of the Inns of Court. But he was still often reduced to pitiable shifts. Towards the close of 1764 his rent was so long in arrear that his landlady one morning called in the [350] help of a sheriff's officer. The debtor, in great perplexity, dispatched a messenger to Johnson; and Johnson, always friendly, though often surly, sent back the messenger with a guinea, and promised to follow speedily. He came, and found that Goldsmith had changed the guinea, and was railing at the landlady over a bottle of Madeira. Johnson put the cork into the bottle, and entreated his [360] friend to consider calmly how money was to be procured. Goldsmith said that he had a novel ready for the press. Johnson glanced at the manuscript, saw that there were good things in it, took it to a bookseller, sold it for £60, and soon returned with the money. The rent was paid; and the sheriff's officer withdrew. According to one story, Goldsmith gave his landlady a sharp reprimand for her [370] treatment of him: according to another, he insisted on her joining him in a bowl of punch. Both stories are probably true. The novel which was thus ushered into the world was the Vicar of Wakefield.

But, before the Vicar of Wakefield appeared in print, came the great crisis of Goldsmith's literary life. In Christmas week, 1764, he published a poem entitled the Traveller. It was the first work [380] to which he had put his name; and it at once raised him to the rank of a legitimate English classic. The opinion of the most skilful critics was, that nothing finer had appeared in verse since the fourth book of the Dunciad. In one respect the Traveller differs from all Goldsmith's other writings. In general his designs were bad, and his execution good. In the Traveller, the execution, though deserving of much praise, is far inferior to the design. No philosophical poem, ancient or modern, has a plan so noble, and at the same time so simple. An English wanderer, seated on a crag among the Alps, near the point where three great countries meet, looks down on the boundless prospect, reviews his long pilgrimage, recalls the varieties of scenery, of climate, of government, of religion, of national character, which he has observed, and comes to the conclusion, just or unjust, that our happiness depends little on political institutions, and much on the temper and regulation of our own minds.

While the fourth edition of the Traveller was on the counters of the booksellers, the Vicar of Wakefield appeared, and rapidly obtained a popularity which has lasted down to our own time, and which is likely to last as long as our language. The fable is indeed one of the worst that ever was constructed. It wants, not merely that probability which ought to be found in a tale of common English life, but that consistency which ought to be found even in the wildest fiction about witches, giants, and fairies. But the earlier chapters have all the sweetness of pastoral poetry, together with all the vivacity of comedy. Moses and his spectacles, the vicar and his monogamy, the sharper and his cosmogony, the squire proving from Aristotle that relatives are related, Olivia preparing herself for the arduous task of converting a rakish lover by studying the controversy between Robinson Crusoe and Friday, the great ladies with their scandal about Sir Tomkyn's amours and Dr. Burdock's verses, and Mr. Burchell with his "Fudge," have caused as much harmless mirth as has ever been caused by matter packed into so small a number of pages. The latter part of the tale is unworthy of the beginning. As we approach the catastrophe, the absurdities lie thicker and thicker, and the gleams of pleasantry become rarer and rarer.

The success which had attended Goldsmith as a novelist emboldened him to try his fortune as a dramatist. He wrote the Goodnatured Man, a piece which had a worse fate than it deserved. Garrick refused to produce it at Drury Lane. It was acted at Covent Garden in 1768, but was coldly received. The author, however, cleared by his benefit nights, and by the sale of the copyright, no less than £500, five times as much as he had made by the Traveller and the Vicar of Wakefield together. The plot of the Goodnatured Man is, like almost all Goldsmith's plots, very ill constructed. But some passages are exquisitely ludicrous; much more ludicrous, indeed, than suited the taste of the town at that time. A canting, mawkish play, entitled False Delicacy, had just had an immense run. Sentimentality was all the mode. During some years, more tears were shed at comedies than at tragedies; and a pleasantry which moved the audience to anything more than a grave smile was reprobated as low. It is not strange, therefore, that the very best scene in the Goodnatured Man, that in which Miss Richland finds her lover attended by the bailiff and the bailiff's follower in full court dresses, should have been mercifully hissed, and should have been omitted after the first night.

In 1770 appeared the Deserted Village. In mere diction and versification this celebrated poem is fully equal, perhaps superior, to the Traveller, and it is generally preferred to the Traveller by that large class of readers who think, with Bayes in the Rehearsal, that the only use of a plan is to bring in fine things. More discerning judges, however, while they admire the beauty of the details, are shocked by one unpardonable fault which pervades the whole. The fault we mean is not that theory about wealth and luxury which has so often been censured by political economists. The theory is indeed false; but the poem, considered merely as a poem, is not necessarily the worse on that account. The finest poem in the Latin language, indeed the finest didactic poem in any language, was written in defence of the silliest and meanest of all systems of natural and moral philosophy. A poet may easily be pardoned for reasoning ill; but he cannot be pardoned for describing ill, for observing the world in which he lives so carelessly that his portraits bear no resemblance to the originals, for exhibiting as copies from real life monstrous combinations of things which never were and never could be found together. What would be thought of a painter who should mix August and January in one landscape, who should introduce a frozen river into a harvest scene? Would it be a sufficient defence of such a picture to say that every part was exquisitely colored, that the green hedges, the apple-trees loaded with fruit, the wagons reeling under the yellow sheaves, and the sunburned reapers wiping their foreheads, were very fine, and that the ice and the boys sliding were also very fine? To such a picture the Deserted Village bears a great resemblance. It is made up of incongruous parts. The village in its happy days is a true English village. The village in its decay is an Irish village. The felicity and the misery which Goldsmith has brought close together belong to two different countries, and to two different stages in the progress of society. He had assuredly never seen in his native island such a rural paradise, such a seat of plenty, content, and tranquillity, as his "Auburn." He had assuredly never seen in England all the inhabitants of such a paradise turned out of their homes in one day and forced to emigrate in a body to America. The hamlet he had probably seen in Kent; the ejection he had probably seen in Munster; but, by joining the two, he has produced something which never was and never will be seen in any part of the world.

In 1773 Goldsmith tried his chance at Covent Garden with a second play, She Stoops to Conquer. The manager was not without great difficulty induced to bring this piece out. The sentimental comedy still reigned; and Goldsmith's comedies were not sentimental. The Good-natured Man had been too funny to succeed; yet the mirth of the Good-natured Man was sober when compared with the rich drollery of She Stoops to Conquer, which is, in truth, an incomparable farce in five acts. On this occasion, however, genius triumphed. Pit, boxes, and galleries were in a constant roar of laughter. If any bigoted admirer of Kelly and Cumberland ventured to hiss or groan, he was speedily silenced by a general cry of "Turn him out," or "Throw him over." Two generations have since confirmed the verdict which was pronounced on that night.

While Goldsmith was writing the Deserted Village and She Stoops to Conquer, he was employed in works of a very different kind, works from which he derived little reputation but much profit. He compiled for the use of schools a History of Rome, by which he made £300; a History of England, by which he made £600; a History of Greece, for which he received £250; a Natural History, for which the booksellers covenanted to pay him 800 guineas. These works he produced without any elaborate research, by merely selecting, abridging, and translating into his own clear, pure, and flowing language what he found in books well known to the world, but too bulky or too dry for boys and girls. He committed some strange blunders; for he knew nothing with accuracy. Thus in his History of England he tells us that Naseby is in Yorkshire; nor did he correct this mistake when the book was reprinted. He was very nearly hoaxed into putting into the History of Greece an account of a battle between Alexander the Great and Montezuma. In his Animated Nature he relates, with faith and with perfect gravity, all the most absurd lies which he could find in books of travels about gigantic Patagonians, monkeys that preach sermons, nightingales that repeat long conversations. "If he can tell a horse from a cow," said Johnson, "that is the extent of his knowledge of zoology." How little Goldsmith was qualified to write about the physical sciences is sufficiently proved by two anecdotes. He on one occasion denied that the sun is longer in the northern than in the southern signs. It was in vain to cite the authority of Maupertuis. "Maupertuis!" he cried; "I understand those matters better than Maupertuis." On another occasion he, in defiance of the evidence of his own senses, maintained obstinately, and even angrily, that he chewed his dinner by moving his upper jaw.

Yet, ignorant as Goldsmith was, few writers have done more to make the first steps in the laborious road to knowledge easy and pleasant. His compilations are widely distinguished from the compilations of ordinary bookmakers. He was a great, perhaps an unequalled, master of the arts of selection and condensation. In these respects his histories of Rome and of England, and still more his own abridgments of these histories, well deserve to be studied. In general nothing is less attractive than an epitome; but the epitomes of Goldsmith, even when most concise, are always amusing; and to read them is considered by intelligent children, not as a task, but as a pleasure.

Goldsmith might now be considered as a prosperous man. He had the means of living in comfort, and even in what to one who had so often slept in barns and on bulks must have been luxury. His fame was great and was constantly rising. He lived in what was intellectually far the best society of the kingdom, in a society in which no talent or accomplishment was wanting, and in which the art of conversation was cultivated with splendid success. There probably were never four talkers more admirable in four different ways than Johnson, Burke, Beauchamp, and Garrick; and Goldsmith was on terms of intimacy with all the four. He aspired to share in their colloquial renown; but never was ambition more unfortunate. It may seem strange that a man who wrote with so much perspicuity, vivacity, and grace should have been, whenever he took a part in conversation, an empty, noisy, blundering rattle. But on this point the evidence is overwhelming. So extraordinary was the contrast between Goldsmith's published works and the silly things which he said, that Horace Walpole described him as an inspired idiot. "Noll," said Garrick, "wrote like an angel, and talked like poor Poll." Chamier declared that it was a hard exercise of faith to believe that so foolish a chatterer could have really written the Traveller. Even Boswell could say, with contemptuous compassion, that he liked very well to hear honest Goldsmith run on. "Yes, sir," said Johnson; "but he should not like to hear himself." Minds differ as rivers differ. There are transparent and sparkling rivers from which it is delightful to drink as they flow; to such rivers the minds of such men as Burke and Johnson may be compared. But there are rivers of which the water when first drawn is turbid and noisome, but becomes pellucid as crystal, and delicious to the taste, if it be suffered to stand till it has deposited a sediment; and such a river is a type of the mind of Goldsmith. His first thoughts on every subject were confused even to absurdity; but they required only a little time to work themselves clear. When he wrote they had that time; and therefore his readers pronounced him a man of genius; but when he talked he talked nonsense, and made himself the laughing-stock of his hearers. He was painfully sensible of his inferiority in conversation; he felt every failure keenly; yet he had not sufficient judgment and self-command to hold his tongue. His animal spirits and vanity were always impelling him to try to do the one thing which he could not do. After every attempt he felt he had exposed himself, and writhed with shame and vexation; yet the next moment he began again.

His associates seem to have regarded him with kindness, which, in spite of their admiration of his writings, was not unmixed with contempt. In truth, there was in his character much to love, but very little to respect. His heart was soft, even to weakness: he was so generous that he quite forgot to be just; he forgave injuries so readily that he might be said to invite them: and was so liberal to beggars that he had nothing left for his tailor and his butcher. He was vain, sensual, frivolous, profuse, improvident.

One vice of a darker shade was imputed to him, envy. But there is not the least reason to believe that this bad pas- [710 sion, though it sometimes made him wince and utter fretful exclamations, ever impelled him to injure by wicked arts the reputation of any of his rivals. The truth probably is, that he was not more envious, but merely less prudent than his neighbors. His heart was on his lips. All those small jealousies, which are but too common among men of letters, but which a man of letters who is [720 also a man of the world does his best to conceal, Goldsmith avowed with the simplicity of a child. When he was envious, instead of affecting indifference, instead of damning with faint praise, instead of doing injuries slyly and in the dark, he told everybody that he was envious. "Do not, pray, do not talk of Johnson in such terms," he said to Boswell; "you harrow up my very soul." [730 George Steevens and Cumberland were men far too cunning to say such a thing. They would have echoed the praises of the man they envied, and then have sent to the newspapers anonymous libels upon him. Both what was good and what was bad in Goldsmith's character was to his associates a perfect security that he would never commit such villainy. He was neither ill-natured enough, nor [740 long-headed enough to be guilty of any malicious act which required contrivance and disguise.

Goldsmith has sometimes been represented as a man of genius, cruelly treated by the world, and doomed to struggle with difficulties which at last broke his heart. But no representation can be more remote from the truth. He did, indeed, go through much sharp [750 misery before he had done anything considerable in literature. But, after his name had appeared on the title-page of the Traveller, he had none to blame but himself for his distresses. His average income during the last seven years of his life certainly exceeded £400 a year; and £400 a year ranked, among the incomes of that day, at least as high as £800 a year would rank at present. A single [760 man living in the Temple with £400 a year might then be called opulent. Not one in ten of the young gentlemen of good families who were studying the law there had so much. But all the wealth which Lord Clive had brought from Bengal, and Sir Lawrence Dundas from Germany, joined together, would not have sufficed for Goldsmith. He spent twice as much as he had. He wore [770 fine clothes, gave dinners of several courses, paid court to venal beauties. He had also, it should be remembered, to the honor of his heart, though not of his head, a guinea, or five, or ten, according to the state of his purse, ready for any tale of distress, true or false. But it was not in dress or feasting, in promiscuous amours or promiscuous charities, that his chief expense lay. He had been [780 from boyhood a gambler, and at once the most sanguine and the most unskilful of gamblers. For a time he put off the day of inevitable ruin by temporary expedients. He obtained advances from booksellers, by promising to execute works which he never began. But at length this source of supply failed. He owed more than £2,000; and he saw no hope of extrication from his embarrassments. [790 His spirits and health gave way. He was attacked by a nervous fever, which he thought himself competent to treat. It would have been happy for him if his medical skill had been appreciated as justly by himself as by others. Notwithstanding the degree which he pretended to have received at Padua, he could procure no patients. "I do not practice," he once said; "I make it a rule to pre- [800 scribe only for my friends." "Pray, dear Doctor," said Beauclerk, "alter your rule, and prescribe only for your enemies." Goldsmith now, in spite of this excellent advice, prescribed for himself. The remedy aggravated the malady. The sick man was induced to call in real physicians; and they at one time imagined that they had cured the disease. Still his weakness and restlessness continued. He could [810 get no sleep, he could take no food. "You are worse," said one of his medical attendants, "than you should be from the degree of fever which you have. Is your mind at ease?" "No, it is not," were the last recorded words of Oliver Goldsmith. He died on the 3rd of April, 1774, in his forty-sixth year. He was laid in the churchyard of the Temple; but the spot was not marked by any inscription, and is now forgotten. The coffin was followed by Burke and Reynolds. Both these great men were sincere mourners. Burke, when he heard of Goldsmith's death, had burst into a flood of tears. Reynolds had been so much moved by the news that he had flung aside his brush and palette for the day.

A short time after Goldsmith's death, a little poem appeared, which will, as long as our language lasts, associate the names of his two illustrious friends with his own. It has already been mentioned that he sometimes felt keenly the sarcasm which his wild blundering talk brought upon him. He was, not long before his last illness, provoked into retaliating. He wisely betook himself to his pen; and at that weapon he proved himself a match for all his assailants together. Within a small compass he drew with a singularly easy and vigorous pencil the characters of nine or ten of his intimate associates. Though this little work did not receive his last touches, it must always be regarded as a masterpiece. It is impossible, however, not to wish that four or five likenesses which have no interest for posterity were wanting to that noble gallery, and that their places were supplied by sketches of Johnson and Gibbon, as happy and vivid as the sketches of Burke and Garrick.

Some of Goldsmith's friends and admirers honored him with a cenotaph in Westminster Abbey. Nollekens was the sculptor; and Johnson wrote the inscription. It is much to be lamented that Johnson did not leave to posterity a more durable and a more valuable memorial of his friend. A life of Goldsmith would have been an inestimable addition to the Lives of the Poets. No man appreciated Goldsmith's writings more justly than Johnson: no man was better acquainted with Goldsmith's character and habits: and no man was more competent to delineate with truth and spirit the peculiarities of a mind in which great powers were found in company with great weaknesses. But the list of poets to whose works Johnson was requested by the booksellers to furnish prefaces ended with Lyttleton, who died in 1773. The line seems to have been drawn expressly for the purpose of excluding the person whose portrait would have most fitly closed the series. Goldsmith, however, has been fortunate in his biographers. Within a few years his life has been written by Mr. Prior, by Mr. Washington Irving, and by Mr. Forster. The diligence of Mr. Prior deserves great praise; the style of Mr. Washington Irving is always pleasing; but the highest place must, in justice, be assigned to the eminently interesting work of Mr. Forster.

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH (1819-1861)

QUA CURSUM VENTUS

As ships, becalmed at eve, that lay
With canvas drooping, side by side,
Two towers of sail at dawn of day
Are scarce long leagues apart descried; 4

When fell the night, upsprung the breeze,
And all the darkling hours they plied,
Nor dreamt but each the self-same seas
By each was cleaving, side by side:

E'en so—but why the tale reveal
Of those, whom year by year unchanged,
Brief absence joined anew to feel, 11
Astounded, soul from soul estranged?

At dead of night their sails were filled,
And onward each rejoicing steered—
Ah, neither blame, for neither willed, 15
Or wist, what first with dawn appeared!

To veer, how vain! On, onward strain,
Brave barks! In light, in darkness too,
Through winds and tides one compass
guides—
To that, and your own selves, be true. 20

But O blithe breeze; and O great seas,
Though ne'er, that earliest parting past,
On your wide plain they join again,
Together lead them home at last.

One port, methought, alike they sought, 25
 One purpose hold where'er they fare, —
 O bounding breeze, O rushing seas!
 At last, at last, unite them there!

WHERE LIES THE LAND

Where lies the land to which the ship
 would go?

Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know.
 And where the land she travels from?
 Away,
 Far, far behind, is all that they can say.

On sunny noons upon the deck's smooth
 face, 5
 Linked arm in arm, how pleasant here to pace;

Or, o'er the stern reclining, watch below
 The foaming wake far widening as we go.

On stormy nights when wild northwesterners
 rave,
 How proud a thing to fight with wind and wave! 10
 The dripping sailor on the reeling mast
 Exults to bear, and scorns to wish it
 past.

Where lies the land to which the ship
 would go?

Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know.
 And where the land she travels from?
 Away, 15
 Far, far behind, is all that they can say.

ALL IS WELL

Whate'er you dream, with doubt possessed,
 Keep, keep it snug within your breast,
 And lay you down and take your rest;
 Forget in sleep the doubt and pain,
 And when you wake, to work again. 5
 The wind it blows, the vessel goes,
 And where and whither, no one knows.

'Twill all be well: no need of care;
 Though how it will, and when, and
 where,
 We cannot see, and can't declare. 10

In spite of dreams, in spite of thought,
 'Tis not in vain, and not for nought,
 The wind it blows, the ship it goes,
 Though where and whither, no one knows.

LIFE IS STRUGGLE

To wear out heart, and nerves, and brain,
 And give oneself a world of pain;
 Be eager, angry, fierce, and hot,
 Imperious, supple—God knows what,
 For what's all one to have or not; 5
 O false, unwise, absurd, and vain!
 For 'tis not joy, it is not gain,
 It is not in itself a bliss,
 Only it is precisely this
 That keeps us all alive. 10

To say we truly feel the pain,
 And quite are sinking with the strain;—
 Entirely, simply, undeceived, Believe, and say we ne'er believed
 The object, e'en were it achieved, 15
 A thing we e'er had cared to keep;
 With heart and soul to hold it cheap,
 And then to go and try it again;
 O false, unwise, absurd, and vain!
 O, 'tis not joy, and 'tis not bliss, 20
 Only it is precisely this
 That keeps us still alive.

ITE DOMUM SATURÆ, VENIT HESPERUS

The skies have sunk, and hid the upper
 snow

(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La Palie),

The rainy clouds are filing fast below,
 And wet will be the path, and wet shall
 we.

Home, Rose, and home, Provence and
 La Palie. 5

Ah dear, and where is he, a year ago,
 Who stepped beside and cheered us on and on?

My sweetheart wanders far away from me,
 In foreign land or on a foreign sea,
 Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
 Palie. 10

The lightning zigzags shoot across the sky (Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La Palie),

And through the vale the rains go sweeping by;

Ah me, and when in shelter shall we be?
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and
La Palie. 15

Cold, dreary cold, the stormy winds feel they O'er foreign lands and foreign seas that
stray

(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La Palie).

And doth he e'er, I wonder, bring to mind
The pleasant huts and herds he left behind? 20

And doth he sometimes in his slumbering
see

The feeding kine, and doth he think of
me,

My sweetheart wandering wheresoe'er it
be?

Home, Rose, and home, Provence and
La Palie.

The thunder bellows far from snow to
snow 25

(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La Palie),

And loud and louder roars the flood be-
low.

Heigho! but soon in shelter shall we be:
Home, Rose, and home, Provence and
La Palie.

Or shall he find before his term be sped 30
Some comelier maid that he shall wish to wed?

(Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La Palie.)

For weary is work, and weary day by day
To have your comfort miles on miles
away.

Home, Rose, and home, Provence and
La Palie. 35

Or may it be that I shall find my mate,
And he returning see himself too late?

For work we must, and what we see, we
see,

And God he knows, and what must be
must be,

When sweethearts wander far away from
me. 40

Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La
Palie.

The sky behind is brightening up anew (Home, Rose, and home, Provence and La Palie),

The rain is ending, and our journey too:
Heigho! aha! for here at home are we:— 45
In, Rose, and in, Provence and La Palie.

SAY NOT THE STRUGGLE NOUGHT AVAILETH

Say not the struggle nought availeth,
The labor and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been they remain.

If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars; 5
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fliers,
And, but for you, possess the field.

For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain, 10
Far back, through creeks and inlets mak-
ing,
Comes silent, flooding in, the main.

And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the
light, 14
In front, the sun climbs slow, how slowly,
But westward, look, the land is bright.

MATTHEW ARNOLD (1822-1888)

SHAKESPEARE

Others abide our question. Thou art free.
We ask and ask—Thou smilest and art
still,
Out-topping knowledge. For the loftiest
hill

Who to the stars uncrowns his majesty,
Planting his steadfast footsteps in the sea,
Making the heaven of heavens his dwelling-place,
Spares but the cloudy border of his base
To the foiled searching of mortality;

And thou, who didst the stars and sunbeams know,
Self-schooled, self-scanned, self-honored,
self-secure, 10
Didst tread on earth unguessed at.—
Better so!
All pains the immortal spirit must endure,
All weakness which impairs, all griefs
which bow,
Find their sole speech in that victorious
brow.

THE FORSAKEN MERMAN

Come, dear children, let us away,
Down and away below!
Now my brothers call from the bay,
Now the great winds shoreward blow,
Now the salt tides seaward flow, 5
Now the wild white horses play,
Champ and chafe and toss in the spray;
Children dear, let us away!
This way, this way!

Call her once before you go— 10
Call once yet!
In a voice that she will know:
"Margaret! Margaret!"
Children's voices should be dear
(Call once more!) to a mother's ear; 15
Children's voices, wild with pain—
Surely she will come again!
Call her once and come away;
This way, this way!
"Mother dear, we cannot stay; 20
The wild white horses foam and fret."
Margaret! Margaret!

Come, dear children, come away down;
Call no more!
One last look at the white-walled town, 25
And the little gray church on the windy
shore;
Then come down!
She will not come though you call all day:
Come away, come away!

Children dear, was it yesterday 30
We heard the sweet bells over the bay?
In the caverns where we lay,
Through the surf and through the swell,
The far-off sound of a silver bell?

Sand-strewn caverns, cool and deep, 35
Where the winds are all asleep;
Where the spent lights quiver and gleam,
Where the salt weed sways in the stream,
Where the sea-beasts, ranged all round,
Feed in the ooze of their pasture-
ground; 40
Where the sea-snakes coil and twine,
Dry their mail and bask in the brine:
Where great whales come sailing by,
Sail and sail, with unshut eye,
Round the world for ever and aye? 45
When did music come this way?
Children dear, was it yesterday?

Children dear, was it yesterday
(Call yet once!) that she went away?
Once she sate with you and me, 50
On a red gold throne in the heart of the
sea,
And the youngest sate on her knee.
She combed its bright hair, and she tended it well,
When down swung the sound of a far-off
bell.
She sighed, she looked up through the clear green sea; 55
She said: "I must go, for my kinsfolk
pray
In the little gray church on the shore to-
day.
'Twill be Easter-time in the world, ah
me!
And I lose my poor soul, Merman! here with thee."
I said: "Go up, dear heart, through the waves; 60
Say thy prayer, and come back to the kind sea-caves!"
She smiled, she went up through the surf
in the bay.
Children dear, was it yesterday?

Children dear, were we long alone?
"The sea grows stormy, the little ones
moan; 65
Long prayers," I said, "in the world they
say;
Come!" I said, and we rose through the surf in the bay.
We went up the beach, by the sandy
down
Where the sea-stocks bloom, to the white-walled town;

Through the narrow paved streets, where all was still, 70	Come away, away, children; Come, children, come down!
To the little gray church on the windy hill.	The hoarse wind blows colder; 110
From the church came a murmur of folk at their prayers,	Lights shine in the town. She will start from her slumber
But we stood without in the cold blowing airs.	When gusts shake the door; She will hear the winds howling,
We climbed on the graves, on the stones worn with rains,	Will hear the waves roar. 115
And we gazed up the aisle through the small leaded panes. 75	We shall see, while above us The waves roar and whirl,
She sate by the pillar; we saw her clear: "Margaret, hie! come quick, we are here!	A ceiling of amber, A pavement of pearl.
Dear heart," I said, "we are long alone; The sea grows stormy, the little ones moan."	Singing: "Here came a mortal, 120 But faithless was she! And alone dwell for ever The kings of the sea."
But, ah, she gave me never a look, 80 For her eyes were sealed to the holy book!	But, children, at midnight, When soft the winds blow, 125
Loud prays the priest; shut stands the door.	When clear falls the moonlight, When spring-tides are low;
Come away, children, call no more! Come away, come down, call no more!	When sweet airs come seaward From heaths starred with broom, And high rocks throw mildly 130 On the blanched sands a gloom; Up the still, glistening beaches, Up the creeks we will hie, Over banks of bright seaweed
Down, down, down! 85 Down to the depths of the sea! She sits at her wheel in the humming town, Singing most joyfully. Hark what she sings: "O joy, O joy, For the humming street, and the child with its toy! 90 For the priest, and the bell, and the holy well; For the wheel where I spun, And the blessed light of the sun!" And so she sings her fill, Singing most joyfully, 95 Till the spindle drops from her hand, And the whizzing wheel stands still. She steals to the window, and looks at the sand, And over the sand at the sea; And her eyes are set in a stare; 100 And anon there breaks a sigh, And anon there drops a tear, From a sorrow-clouded eye, And a heart sorrow-laden; A long, long sigh 105 For the cold strange eyes of a little Mer- maiden And the gleam of her golden hair.	The ebb-tide leaves dry. 135 We will gaze, from the sand-hills, At the white, sleeping town; At the church on the hill-side: And then come back down, Singing: "There dwells a loved one, 140 But cruel is she! She left lonely for ever The kings of the sea."
	PHILOMELA
	Hark! ah, the nightingale— The tawny-throated! Hark, from that moonlit cedar what a burst! What triumph! hark!—what pain! O wanderer from a Grecian shore, 5 Still, after many years, in distant lands, Still nourishing in thy bewildered brain That wild, unquenched, deep-sunken, old- world pain— Say, will it never heal?

And can this fragrant lawn 10
 With its cool trees, and night,
 And the sweet, tranquil Thames,
 And moonshine, and the dew,
 To thy racked heart and brain
 Afford no balm? 15

Dost thou to-night behold
 Here, through the moonlight on this English grass,
 The unfriendly palace in the Thracian
 wild?

Dost thou again peruse
 With hot cheeks and seared eyes 20
 The too clear web, and thy dumb sister's shame?

Dost thou once more assay
 Thy flight, and feel come over thee,
 Poor fugitive, the feathery change
 Once more, and once more seem to make
 resound 25

With love and hate, triumph and agony,
 Lone Daulis, and the high Cephissian
 vale?

Listen, Eugenia—
 How thick the bursts come crowding through the leaves!

Again—thou hearest? 30
 Eternal passion!
 Eternal pain!

REQUIESCAT

Strew on her roses, roses,
 And never a spray of yew!
 In quiet she reposes;
 Ah, would that I did too!

Her mirth the world required; 5
 She bathed it in smiles of glee.
 But her heart was tired, tired,
 And now they let her be.

Her life was turning, turning,
 In mazes of heat and sound; 10
 But for peace her soul was yearning,
 And now peace laps her round.

Her cabined, ample spirit,
 It fluttered and failed for breath;
 To-night it doth inherit 15
 The vasty hall of death.

THE SCHOLAR-GIPSY

Go, for they call you, shepherd, from the
 hill;

Go, shepherd, and untie the wattled¹
 cotes;

No longer leave thy wistful flock un-
 fed,

Nor let thy bawling fellows rack their throats,

Nor the cropped herbage shoot
 another head. 5

But when the fields are still,

And the tired men and dogs all gone to
 rest,

And only the white sheep are sometimes seen

Cross and recross the strips of moonblanched green,

Come, shepherd, and again begin the quest! 10

Here, where the reaper was at work of
 late—

In this high field's dark corner, where he leaves

His coat, his basket, and his earthen cruse,

And in the sun all morning binds the sheaves,

Then here, at noon, comes back his stores to use— 15

Here will I sit and wait,

While to my ear from uplands far
 away

The bleating of the folded flocks is borne,

With distant cries of reapers in the corn—

All the live murmur of a summer's
 day. 20

Screened is this nook o'er the high, half-reaped field,

And here till sun-down, shepherd, will I be.

Through the thick corn the scarlet poppies peep,

And round green roots and yellowing stalks I see

Pale blue convolvulus in tendrils
 creep; 25

And air-swept lindens yield

¹ made of interwoven twigs or branches.

Their scent, and rustle down their perfumed showers
 Of bloom on the bent grass where I am laid,
 And bower me from the August sun
 with shade;
 And the eye travels down to Oxford's
 towers. 30

And near me on the grass lies Glanvil's book—
 Come, let me read the oft-read tale
 again!
 The story of that Oxford scholar poor,
 Of pregnant parts and quick inventive
 brain,
 Who, tired of knocking at prefer-ment's door, 35
 One summer-morn forsook
 His friends, and went to learn the gipsy
 lore,
 And roamed the world with that wild brotherhood,
 And came, as most men deemed, to little good,
 But came to Oxford and his friends no
 more. 40

But once, years after, in the country-lanes,
 Two scholars, whom at college erst he
 knew,
 Met him, and of his way of life inquired;
 Whereat he answered, that the gipsy-
 crew,
 His mates, had arts to rule as they desired 45
 The workings of men's brains,
 And they can bind them to what thoughts they will.
 "And I," he said, "the secret of their
 art,
 When fully learned, will to the world
 impart;
 But it needs heaven-sent moments for this skill." 50

This said, he left them, and returned no
 more.—
 But rumors hung about the country-
 side,
 That the lost Scholar long was seen
 to stray,

Seen by rare glimpses, pensive and tongue-tied,
 In hat of antique shape, and cloak of
 gray, 55
 The same the gipsies wore.
 Shepherds had met him on the Hurst
 in spring;
 At some lone alehouse in the Berkshire moors,
 On the warm ingle-bench,¹ the smock-frocked boors
 Had found him seated at their enter-
 ing. 60

But, 'mid their drink and clatter, he would fly.
 And I myself seem half to know thy
 looks,
 And put the shepherds, wanderer, on thy trace;
 And boys who in lone wheat fields scare
 the rooks
 I ask if thou hast passed their quiet
 place; 65
 Or in my boat I lie Moored to the cool bank in the summer heats,
 'Mid wide grass meadows which the sunshine fills,
 And watch the warm, green-muffled
 Cumner hills,
 And wonder if thou haunt'st their shy retreats. 70

For most, I know, thou lov'st retirèd
 ground!
 Thee at the ferry Oxford riders blithe,
 Returning home on summer-nights,
 have met Crossing the stripling Thames at Bablock-hithe,
 Trailing in the cool stream thy fingers wet, 75
 As the punt's² rope chops round:
 And leaning backward in a pensive
 dream,
 And fostering in thy lap a heap of
 flowers
 Plucked in shy fields and distant
 Wychwood bowers,
 And thine eyes resting on the moonlit
 stream. 80

¹ fireside bench.² small, flat-bottomed boat.

And then they land, and thou art seen no
more.

Maidens, who from the distant hamlets
come

To dance around the Fyfield elm in
May,

Oft through the darkening fields have seen thee roam,

Or cross a stile into the public
way. 85

Oft thou hast given them store
Of flowers—the frail-leafed, white anem-
one,

Dark bluebells drenched with dews of
summer eves,

And purple orchises with spotted
leaves—

But none hath words she can report of
thee. 90

And, above Godstow Bridge, when haytime's here

In June, and many a scythe in sunshine
flames,

Men who through those wide fields of breezy grass

Where black-winged swallows haunt the glittering Thames,

To bathe in the abandoned lasher
pass, 95

Have often passed thee near,
Sitting upon the river bank o'ergrown;

Marked thine outlandish garb, thy figure spare,

Thy dark vague eyes, and soft abstracted air—

But, when they came from bathing, thou wast gone. 100

At some lone homestead in the Cumner
hills,

Where at her open door the housewife
darns,

Thou hast been seen, or hanging on a
gate

To watch the threshers in the mossy barns.

Children, who early range these slopes and late 105

For cresses from the rills,
Have known thee eying, all an April-

day,
The springing pastures and the feeding kine;

And marked thee, when the stars
come out and shine,

Through the long dewy grass move slow
away. 110

In autumn, on the skirts of Bagley Wood—
Where most the gipsies by the turf-edged way

Pitch their smoked tents, and every bush you see

With scarlet patches tagged and shreds of gray,

Above the forest-ground called Thessaly— 115

The blackbird, picking food,

Sees thee, nor stops his meal, nor fears
at all;

So often has he known thee past him
stray,

Rapt, twirling in thy hand a withered spray,

And waiting for the spark from heaven to fall. 120

And once, in winter, on the causeway chill
Where home through flooded fields

foot-travelers go,

Have I not passed thee on the wooden bridge

Wrapped in thy cloak and battling with
the snow,

Thy face toward Hinksey and its wintry ridge? 125

And thou hast climbed the hill,

And gained the white brow of the Cum-ner range;

Turned once to watch, while thick
the snowflakes fall,

The line of festal light in Christ-Church hall—

Then sought thy straw in some sequestered grange. 130

But what—I dream! Two hundred years are flown

Since first thy story ran through Oxford halls,

And the grave Glanvil did the tale inscribe

That thou wert wandered from the studious walls

To learn strange arts, and join a gipsy-tribe; 135

And thou from earth art gone

Long since, and in some quiet churchyard laid—
 Some country-nook, where o'er thy unknown grave
 Tall grasses and white flowering nettles wave,
 Under a dark, red-fruited yew-tree's
 shade. 140

—No, no, thou hast not felt the lapse of
 hours!
 For what wears out the life of mortal
 men?
 'Tis that from change to change their being rolls;
 'Tis that repeated shocks, again, again,
 Exhaust the energy of strongest souls, 145
 And numb the elastic powers Till having used our nerves with bliss and teen,¹
 And tired upon a thousand schemes
 our wit,
 To the just-pausing Genius we remit
 Our worn-out life, and are—what we have been. 150

Thou hast not lived, why should'st thou perish, so?
 Thou had'st one aim, one business, one
 desire;
 Else wert thou long since numbered with the dead,
 Else hadst thou spent, like other men,
 thy fire,
 The generations of thy peers are
 fled, 155
 And we ourselves shall go;
 But thou possessest an immortal lot,
 And we imagine thee exempt from
 age,
 And living as thou liv'st on Glanvil's page,
 Because thou hadst—what we, alas!
 have not. 160

For early didst thou leave the world, with powers
 Fresh, undiverted to the world without,
 Firm to their mark, not spent on other things;
 Free from the sick fatigue, the languid doubt,
 ¹ sorrow.

Which much to have tried, in much been baffled, brings. 165
 O life unlike to ours!
 Who fluctuate idly without term or
 scope,
 Of whom each strives, nor knows for what he strives,
 And each half lives a hundred different lives;
 Who wait like thee, but not, like thee,
 in hope. 170

Thou waitest for the spark from heaven:
 and we,
 Light half-believers of our casual creeds,
 Who never deeply felt, nor clearly willed,
 Whose insight never has borne fruit in
 deeds,
 Whose vague resolves never have been fulfilled; 175
 For whom each year we see Breeds new beginnings, disappointments new;
 Who hesitate and falter life away,
 And lose to-morrow the ground won to-day—
 Ah, do not we, wanderer, await it too?

Yes, we await it, but it still delays, 181
 And then we suffer; and amongst us one,
 Who most has suffered, takes dejectedly
 His seat upon the intellectual throne;
 And all his store of sad experience he Lays bare of wretched days; 186 Tells us his misery's birth and growth and signs,
 And how the dying spark of hope was
 fed,
 And how the breast was soothed, and how the head,
 And all his hourly varied anodynes. 190

This for our wisest! and we others pine,
 And wish the long unhappy dream would
 end,
 And waive all claim to bliss, and try
 to bear;
 With close-lipped patience for our only
 friend,
 Sad patience, too near neighbor to despair— 195
 But none has hope like thine.

Thou through the fields and through the woods dost stray, Roaming the country-side, a truant
boy,
Nursing thy project in unclouded joy,
And every doubt long blown by time
away. 200

O born in days when wits were fresh and
clear,
And life ran gaily as the sparkling Thames;
Before this strange disease of modern
life,
With its sick hurry, its divided aims,
Its heads o'ertaxed, its palsied hearts,
was rife— 205
Fly hence, our contact fear!
Still fly, plunge deeper in the bowering
wood!
Averse, as Dido did with gesture stern
From her false friend's approach in Hades turn,
Wave us away, and keep thy solitude. 210

Still nursing the unconquerable hope,
Still clutching the inviolable shade,
With a free, onward impulse brushing
through,
By night, the silvered branches of the glade—
Far on the forest-skirts, where none
pursue, 215
On some mild pastoral slope Emerge, and resting on the moonlit
pales,
Freshen thy flowers as in former
years
With dew, or listen with enchanted
ears,
From the dark dingles, to the nightingales. 220

But fly our paths, our feverish contact fly!
For strong the infection of our mental
strife,
Which, though it gives no bliss, yet
spoils for rest;
And we should win thee from thy own fair life,
Like us distracted, and like us un-
blest. 225
Soon, soon thy cheer would die,

Thy hopes grow timorous, and unfixed
thy powers,
And thy clear aims be cross and shifting made;
And then thy glad perennial youth
would fade,
Fade, and grow old at last, and die like ours. 230

Then fly our greetings, fly our speech and smiles!
—As some grave Tyrian trader, from the
sea,
Descried at sunrise an emerging prow Lifting the cool-haired creepers stealth-ily,
The fringes of a southward-facing
brow 235
Among the Ægean isles;
And saw the merry Grecian coaster come,
Freighted with amber grapes, and Chian wine,
Green, bursting figs, and tunnies¹
steeped in brine;
And knew the intruders on his ancient home, 240

The young light-hearted masters of the waves—
And snatched his rudder, and shook out more sail,
And day and night held on indignantly
O'er the blue Midland waters with the gale,
Betwixt the Syrtes and soft Sicily, 245
To where the Atlantic raves Outside the western straits; and un-bent sails
There, where down cloudy cliffs,
through sheets of foam,
Shy traffickers, the dark Iberians
come;
And on the beach undid his corded bales. 250

SOHRAB AND RUSTUM

AN EPISODE

And the first gray of morning filled the
east,
And the fog rose out of the Oxus stream.
But all the Tartar camp along the stream

¹ a kind of fish.

Was hushed, and still the men were plunged
 in sleep;
 Sohrab alone, he slept not: all night long 5
 He had lain wakeful, tossing on his bed;
 But when the gray dawn stole into his
 tent,
 He rose, and clad himself, and girt his
 sword,
 And took his horseman's cloak, and left his tent,
 And went abroad into the cold wet fog, 10
 Through the dim camp to Peran-Wisa's
 tent.
 Through the black Tartar tents he passed, which stood Clustering like bee-hives on the low flat
 strand
 Of Oxus, where the summer-floods o'erflow
 When the sun melts the snows in high Pamere: 15
 Through the black tents he passed, o'er that low strand,
 And to a hillock came, a little back From the stream's brink—the spot where first a boat,
 Crossing the stream in summer, scrapes
 the land.
 The men of former times had crowned the top 20
 With a clay fort; but that was fallen, and
 now
 The Tartars built there Peran-Wisa's tent,
 A dome of laths, and o'er it felts were
 spread.
 And Sohrab came there, and went in,
 and stood
 Upon the thick piled carpets in the tent, 25
 And found the old man sleeping on his bed
 Of rugs and felts, and near him lay his
 arms.
 And Peran-Wisa heard him, though the
 step
 Was dulled; for he slept light, an old man's
 sleep;
 And he rose quickly on one arm, and said:
 "Who art thou? for it is not yet clear
 dawn. 31
 Speak! is there news, or any night alarm?"
 But Sohrab came to the bedside, and
 said:—
 "Thou knowest me, Peran-Wisa: it is I.
 The sun is not yet risen, and the foe 35
 Sleep; but I sleep not; all night long I lie

Tossing and wakeful, and I come to thee.
 For so did King Afrasiab bid me seek Thy counsel, and to heed thee as thy son,
 In Samarcand, before the army marched;
 And I will tell thee what my heart desires. 41
 Thou knowest if, since from Ader-baijan
 first
 I came among the Tartars and bore arms,
 I have still served Afrasiab well, and
 shown,
 At my boy's years, the courage of a man.
 This too thou know'st, that, while I still bear on 46
 The conquering Tartar ensigns through the
 world,
 And beat the Persians back on every field,
 I seek one man, one man, and one alone—
 Rustum, my father; who I hoped should greet, 50
 Should one day greet, upon some well-fought field
 His not unworthy, not inglorious son.
 So I long hoped, but him I never find.
 Come then, hear now, and grant me what
 I ask.
 Let the two armies rest to-day: but I 55
 Will challenge forth the bravest Persian lords
 To meet me, man to man: if I prevail,
 Rustum will surely hear it; if I fall—
 Old man, the dead need no one, claim no
 kin.
 Dim is the rumor of a common fight, 60
 Where host meets host, and many names are sunk;
 But of a single combat fame speaks clear."
 He spoke; and Peran-Wisa took the
 hand
 Of the young man in his, and sighed, and
 said:—
 "O Sohrab, an unquiet heart is thine!
 Canst thou not rest among the Tartar chiefs, 66
 And share the battle's common chance with us
 Who love thee, but must press forever
 first,
 In single fight incurring single risk,
 To find a father thou hast never seen? 70
 That were far best, my son, to stay with
 us Unmurmuring; in our tents, while it is
 war,

And when 'tis truce, then in Afrasiab's towns.

But, if this one desire indeed rules all,
To seek out Rustum—seek him not through fight: 75

Seek him in peace, and carry to his arms,
O Sohrab, carry an unwounded son!
But far hence seek him, for he is not here.
For now it is not as when I was young,
When Rustum was in front of every fray;
But now he keeps apart, and sits at home,
In Seistan, with Zal, his father old. 82
Whether that his own mighty strength
at last

Feels the abhorred approaches of old age;
Or in some quarrel with the Persian King.

There go!—Thou wilt not? Yet my heart forebodes 86

Danger or death awaits thee on this field.
Fain would I know thee safe and well,
though lost

To us; fain therefore send thee hence, in peace

To seek thy father, not seek single fights 90
In vain:—but who can keep the lion's cub

From ravening, and who govern Rustum's
son?

Go, I will grant thee what thy heart
desires."

So said he, and dropped Sohrab's hand, and left

His bed, and the warm rugs whereon he
lay; 95

And o'er his chilly limbs his woollen coat
He passed, and tied his sandals on his feet,
And threw a white cloak round him, and he took

In his right hand a ruler's staff, no sword;
And on his head he set his sheep-skin cap,
Black, glossy, curled, the fleece of Kara-Kul; 101

And raised the curtain of his tent, and called

His herald to his side, and went abroad.

The sun by this had risen, and cleared the fog

From the broad Oxus and the glittering sands. 105

And from their tents the Tartar horsemen filed

Into the open plain; so Haman bade—Haman, who next to Peran-Wisa ruled
The host, and still was in his lusty prime.

From their black tents, long files of horse,
they streamed: 110

As when, some gray November morn, the
files,

In marching order spread, of long-necked cranes,

Stream over Casbin, and the southern slopes

Of Elburz, from the Aralian estuaries, Or some froze¹ Caspian reed-bed, southward bound 115

For the warm Persian sea-board—so they streamed.

The Tartars of the Oxus, the King's guard,
First, with black sheep-skin caps and with long spears;

Large men, large steeds; who from Bokhara come

And Khiva, and ferment the milk of mares. 120

Next the more temperate Toorkmuns of
south,

The Tukas, and the lances of Salore,
And those from Attruck and the Caspian
sands;

Light men, and on light steeds, who only drink

The acrid milk of camels, and their wells. 125

And then a swarm of wandering horse, who came

From far, and a more doubtful service owned;

The Tartars of Ferghana, from the banks
Of the Jaxartes, men with scanty beards

And close-set skull-caps; and those wilder hordes 130

Who roam o'er Kipchak and the northern
waste,

Kalmuks and unkempt Kuzzaks, tribes who stray

Nearest the Pole, and wandering Kirghizzes,

Who come on shaggy ponies from Pamere;
These all filed out from camp into the
plain. 135

And on the other side the Persians formed:

First a light cloud of horse, Tartars they seemed,

The Ilyats of Khorassan: and behind,
The royal troops of Persia, horse and
foot,

¹ frozen.

Marshaled battalions bright in burnished steel. 140

But Peran-Wisa with his herald came,
Threading the Tartar squadrons to the front,

And with his staff kept back the foremost ranks.

And when Ferood, who led the Persians, saw

That Peran-Wisa kept the Tartars back,
He took his spear, and to the front he came, 146

And checked his ranks, and fixed them where they stood.

And the old Tartar came upon the sand
Betwixt the silent hosts, and spake, and said:—

“Ferood, and ye, Persians and Tartars, hear! 150

Let there be truce between the hosts to-day.

But choose a champion from the Persian lords

To fight our champion Sohrab, man to man.”

As, in the country, on a morn in June,
When the dew glistens on the pearlèd ears, 155

A shiver runs through the deep corn for joy—

So, when they heard what Peran-Wisa said,

A thrill through all the Tartar squadrons ran

Of pride and hope for Sohrab, whom they loved.

But as a troop of pedlars, from Cabool,
Cross underneath the Indian Caucasus, 161
That vast sky-neighboring mountain of milk snow;

Crossing so high, that, as they mount, they pass

Long flocks of travelling birds dead on the snow,

Choked by the air, and scarce can they themselves 165

Slake their parched throats with sugared mulberries—

In single file they move, and stop their breath,

For fear they should dislodge the o’er-hanging snows—

So the pale Persians held their breath with fear.

And to Ferood his brother chiefs came up 170

To counsel: Gudurz and Zoarrah came,
And Feraburz, who ruled the Persian host
Second, and was the uncle of the King;
These came and counselled, and then

Gudurz said:—

“Ferood, shame bids us take their challenge up. 175

Yet champion have we none to match this youth.

He has the wild stag’s foot, the lion’s heart.

But Rustum came last night; aloof he sits
And sullen, and has pitched his tents apart.

Him will I seek, and carry to his ear 180

The Tartar challenge, and this young man’s name.

Haply he will forget his wrath, and fight.
Stand forth the while, and take their challenge up.”

So spake he; and Ferood stood forth and cried:—

“Old man, be it agreed as thou hast said! 185

Let Sohrab arm, and we will find a man.”

He spake; and Peran-Wisa turned, and strode

Back through the opening squadrons to his tent.

But through the anxious Persians Gudurz ran,

And crossed the camp which lay behind, and reached, 190

Out on the sands beyond it, Rustum’s tents.

Of scarlet cloth they were, and glittering gay,

Just pitched: the high pavilion in the midst

Was Rustum’s, and his men lay camped around.

And Gudurz entered Rustum’s tent, and found 195

Rustum; his morning meal was done, but still

The table stood before him, charged with food;

A side of roasted sheep, and cakes of bread,

And dark green melons; and there Rustum sate

Listless, and held a falcon on his wrist, 200

And played with it; but Gudurz came and stood

Before him; and he looked, and saw him stand,

And with a cry sprang up, and dropped the bird,

And greeted Gudurz with both hands, and said:—

“Welcome! these eyes could see no better sight. 205

What news? but sit down first, and eat and drink.”

But Gudurz stood in the tent-door, and said:—

“Not now; a time will come to eat and drink,

But not to-day; to-day has other needs. The armies are drawn out, and stand at gaze; 210

For from the Tartars is a challenge brought

To pick a champion from the Persian lords To fight their champion—and thou knowest his name—

Sohrab men call him, but his birth is hid. O Rustum, like thy might is this young man’s! 215

He has the wild stag’s foot, the lion’s heart;

And he is young, and Iran’s¹ chiefs are old, Or else too weak; and all eyes turn to thee. Come down and help us, Rustum, or we lose!”

He spoke: but Rustum answered with a smile:— 220

“Go to! if Iran’s chiefs are old, then I Am older: if the young are weak, the King Errs strangely; for the King, for Kai-Khosroo,

Himself is young, and honors younger men,

And lets the agèd moulder to their graves. 225

Rustum he loves no more, but loves the young—

The young may rise at Sohrab’s vaunts, not I.

For what care I, though all speak Sohrab’s fame?

For would that I myself had such a son, And not that one slight helpless girl I have— 230

A son so famed, so brave, to send to war,

¹ Persia’s.

And I to tarry with the snow-haired Zal, My father, whom the robber Afghans vex, And clip his borders short, and drive his herds,

And he has none to guard his weak old age. 235

There would I go, and hang my armor up, And with my great name fence that weak old man,

And spend the goodly treasures I have got, And rest my age, and hear of Sohrab’s fame,

And leave to death the hosts of thankless kings, 240

And with these slaughterous hands draw sword no more.”

He spoke, and smiled; and Gudurz made reply:—

“What then, O Rustum, will men say to this,

When Sohrab dares our bravest forth, and seeks

Thee most of all, and thou, whom most he seeks, 245

Hidest thy face? Take heed, lest men should say:

‘Like some old miser, Rustum hoards his fame,

And shuns to peril it with younger men.’”

And, greatly moved, then Rustum made reply:—

“O Gudurz, wherefore dost thou say such words? 250

Thou knowest better words than this to say.

What is one more, one less, obscure or famed,

Valiant or craven, young or old, to me? Are not they mortal, am not I myself?

But who for men of nought would do great deeds? 255

Come, thou shall see how Rustum hoards his fame!

But I will fight unknown, and in plain arms;

Let not men say of Rustum, he was matched

In single fight with any mortal man.”

He spoke, and frowned; and Gudurz turned, and ran 260

Back quickly through the camp in fear and joy—

Fear at his wrath, but joy that Rustum came.

But Rustum strode to his tent door, and called
 His followers in, and bade them bring his arms,
 And clad himself in steel: the arms he chose ²⁶⁵
 Were plain, and on his shield was no device,
 Only his helm was rich, inlaid with gold,
 And from the fluted spine atop, a plume
 Of horsehair waved, a scarlet horsehair plume.
 So armed, he issued forth; and Ruksh,
 his horse, ²⁷⁰
 Followed him like a faithful hound at heel—
 Ruksh, whose renown was noised through all the earth,
 The horse whom Rustum on a foray once
 Did in Bokhara by the river find,
 A colt beneath its dam, and drove him home, ²⁷⁵
 And reared him; a bright bay, with lofty
 crest;
 Dight with a saddle-cloth of brodered
 green
 Crusted with gold, and on the ground were worked
 All beasts of chase, all beasts which hunters
 know.
 So followed, Rustum left his tents, and crossed ²⁸⁰
 The camp, and to the Persian host appeared.
 And all the Persians knew him, and with shouts
 Hailed; but the Tartars knew not who he was.
 And dear as the wet diver to the eyes
 Of his pale wife who waits and weeps on shore, ²⁸⁵
 By sandy Bahrein, in the Persian Gulf, Plunging all day into the blue waves, at
 night,
 Having made up his tale of precious pearls,
 Rejoins her in their hut upon the sands—
 So dear to the pale Persians Rustum came. ²⁹⁰
 And Rustum to the Persian front advanced,
 And Sohrab armed in Haman's tent, and
 came.
 And as afield the reapers cut a swath

Down through the middle of a rich man's corn,
 And on each side are squares of standing corn, ²⁹⁵
 And in the midst a stubble, short and
 bare—
 So on each side were squares of men, with spears
 Bristling, and in the midst, the open sand.
 And Rustum came upon the sand, and cast
 His eyes towards the Tartar tents, and saw ³⁰⁰
 Sohrab come forth, and eyed him as he
 came.
 As some rich woman, on a winter's
 morn,
 Eyes through her silken curtains the poor drudge
 Who with numb blackened fingers makes her fire—
 At cock-crow on a starlit winter's morn, ³⁰⁵
 When the frost flowers the whitened window-panes—
 And wonders how she lives, and what the
 thoughts
 Of that poor drudge may be; so Rustum
 eyed
 The unknown adventurous youth, who from afar ³⁰⁹
 Came seeking Rustum, and defying forth
 All the most valiant chiefs: long he perused
 His spirited air, and wondered who he was.
 For very young he seemed, tenderly
 reared;
 Like some young cypress, tall, and dark,
 and straight,
 Which in a queen's secluded garden throws ³¹⁵
 Its slight dark shadow on the moonlit
 turf,
 By midnight, to a bubbling fountain's
 sound—
 So slender Sohrab seemed, so softly reared.
 And a deep pity entered Rustum's soul
 As he beheld him coming; and he stood, ³²⁰
 And beckoned to him with his hand, and
 said:—
 "O thou young man, the air of Heaven is soft,
 And warm, and pleasant; but the grave
 is cold!
 Heaven's air is better than the cold dead
 grave.
 Behold me! I am vast, and clad in iron, ³²⁵

And tried; and I have stood on many a
field
Of blood, and I have fought with many a foe—
Never was that field lost, or that foe saved.
O Sohrab, wherefore wilt thou rush on
death?
Be governed! quit the Tartar host, and
come 330
To Iran, and be as my son to me,
And fight beneath my banner till I die.
There are no youths in Iran brave as thou.”
So he spake, mildly: Sohrab heard his
voice,
The mighty voice of Rustum, and he saw 335
His giant figure planted on the sand,
Sole, like some single tower, which a chief
Has builded on the waste in former years
Against the robbers; and he saw that head, Streaked with its first gray hairs;—hope filled his soul, 340
And he ran forward and embraced his knees,
And clasped his hand within his own, and
said:—
“O, by thy father’s head! by thine own
soul!
Art thou not Rustum? speak! art thou
not he?”
But Rustum eyed askance the kneeling
youth, 345
And turned away, and spake to his own
soul:—
“Ah me, I muse what this young fox may mean!
False, wily, boastful, are these Tartar boys.
For if I now confess this thing he asks,
And hide it not, but say: Rustum is here! 350
He will not yield indeed, nor quit our foes,
But he will find some pretext not to fight,
And praise my fame, and proffer courteous
gifts,
A belt or sword perhaps, and go his way.
And on a feast day, in Afrasiab’s hall, 355
In Samarcand, he will arise and cry:
‘I challenged once, when the two armies camped
Beside the Oxus, all the Persian lords
To cope with me in single fight; but they Shrank, only Rustum dared; then he and
I 360
Changed gifts, and went on equal terms
away.’

So will he speak, perhaps, while men applaud;
Then were the chiefs of Iran shamed through me.”
And then he turned, and sternly spake
aloud:—
“Rise! wherefore dost thou vainly question thus 365
Of Rustum? I am here, whom thou hast called
By challenge forth: make good thy vaunt, or yield!
Is it with Rustum only thou wouldst fight?
Rash boy, men look on Rustum’s face and flee.
For well I know, that did great Rustum
stand 370
Before thy face this day, and were revealed,
There would be then no talk of fighting
more.
But being what I am, I tell thee this—
Do thou record it in thine inmost soul:
Either thou shalt renounce thy vaunt and
yield; 375
Or else thy bones shall strew this sand, till winds Bleach them, or Oxus with his summer-
floods,
Oxus in summer wash them all away.”
He spoke: and Sohrab answered, on his feet:—
“Art thou so fierce? Thou wilt not fright me so! 380
I am no girl, to be made pale by words.
Yet this thou hast said well, did Rustum
stand
Here on this field, there were no fighting
then.
But Rustum is far hence, and we stand
here.
Begin! thou art more vast, more dread than I, 385
And thou art proved, I know, and I am
young—
But yet success sways with the breath of Heaven.
And though thou thinkest that thou knowest sure Thy victory, yet thou canst not surely
know.
For we are all, like swimmers in the sea, 390
Poised on the top of a huge wave of fate,
Which hangs uncertain to which side to
fall.

And whether it will heave us up to land,
 Or whether it will roll us out to sea,
 Back out to sea, to the deep waves of
 death, 395
 We know not, and no search will make us know;
 Only the event will teach us in its hour."
 He spoke, and Rustum answered not,
 but hurled
 His spear; down from the shoulder, down
 it came
 As on some partridge in the corn a hawk 400
 That long has towered in the airy clouds
 Drops like a plummet; Sohrab saw it come,
 And sprang aside, quick as a flash: the spear
 Hissed, and went quivering down into the
 sand,
 Which it sent flying wide;—then Sohrab
 threw 405
 In turn, and full struck Rustum's shield;
 sharp rang,
 The iron plates rang sharp, but turned
 the spear.
 And Rustum seized his club, which none but he Could wield: an unlopped trunk it was,
 and huge,
 Still rough—like those which men in treeless plains 410
 To build them boats fish from the flooded rivers,
 Hyphasis or Hydaspes, when, high up
 By their dark springs, the wind in winter-
 time
 Has made in Himalayan forests wrack,
 And strewn the channels with torn boughs
 —so huge 415
 The club which Rustum lifted now, and
 struck
 One stroke; but again Sohrab sprang aside,
 Lithe as the glancing snake, and the club
 came Thundering to earth, and leaped from Rustum's hand.
 And Rustum followed his own blow, and
 fell 420
 To his knees, and with his fingers clutched
 the sand.
 And now might Sohrab have unsheathed
 his sword,
 And pierced the mighty Rustum while he
 lay

Dizzy, and on his knees, and choked with
 sand;
 But he looked on, and smiled, nor bared
 his sword, 425
 But courteously drew back, and spoke,
 and said:—
 "Thou strikest too hard! that club of thine will float
 Upon the summer-floods, and not my bones.
 But rise, and be not wroth! not wroth am
 I;
 No, when I see thee, wrath forsakes my
 soul. 430
 Thou sayst thou art not Rustum: be it so.
 Who art thou then, that canst so touch
 my soul?
 Boy as I am, I have seen battles too—
 Have waded foremost in their bloody
 waves,
 And heard their hollow roar of dying
 men; 435
 But never was my heart thus touched
 before.
 Are they from Heaven, these softening of the heart?
 O thou old warrior, let us yield to Heaven!
 Come, plant we here in earth our angry
 spears,
 And make a truce, and sit upon this sand,
 And pledge each other in red wine, like
 friends, 441
 And thou shalt talk to me of Rustum's
 deeds.
 There are enough foes in the Persian
 host,
 Whom I may meet, and strike, and feel
 no pang;
 Champions enough Afrasiab has, whom
 thou 445
 Mayst fight; fight them, when they confront thy spear!
 But oh, let there be peace 'twixt thee and
 me!"
 He ceased: but while he spake, Rustum had risen,
 And stood erect, trembling with rage: his club
 He left to lie, but had regained his spear, Whose fiery point now in his mailed right-
 hand 451
 Blazed bright and baleful, like that autumn-star,
 The baleful sign of fevers: dust had soiled

His stately crest, and dimmed his glittering arms.

His breast heaved, his lips foamed, and twice his voice 455

Was choked with rage: at last these words broke way:—

“Girl! nimble with thy feet, not with thy hands!

Curled minion, dancer, coiner of sweet words!

Fight, let me hear thy hateful voice no more!

Thou art not in Afrasiab's gardens now 460

With Tartar girls, with whom thou art wont to dance;

But on the Oxus-sands, and in the dance Of battle, and with me, who make no play

Of war; I fight it out, and hand to hand.

Speak not to me of truce, and pledge, and wine! 465

Remember all thy valor: try thy feints And cunning! all the pity I had is gone;

Because thou hast shamed me before both the hosts

With thy light skipping tricks, and thy girl's wiles.”

He spoke, and Sohrab kindled at his taunts, 470

And he too drew his sword: at once they rushed

Together, as two eagles on one prey

Come rushing down together from the clouds,

One from the east, one from the west; their shields 474

Dashed with a clang together, and a din Rose, such as that the sinewy woodcutters

Make often in the forest's heart at morn, Of hewing axes, crashing trees—such

blows

Rustum and Sohrab on each other hailed.

And you would say that sun and stars took part 480

In that unnatural conflict; for a cloud Grew suddenly in Heaven, and darked the sun

Over the fighters' heads; and a wind rose Under their feet, and moaning swept the plain,

And in a sandy whirlwind wrapped the pair. 485

In gloom they twain were wrapped, and they alone;

For both the on-looking hosts on either hand

Stood in broad daylight, and the sky was pure,

And the sun sparkled on the Oxus stream. But in the gloom they fought, with bloodshot eyes 490

And laboring breath; first Rustum struck the shield

Which Sohrab held stiff out; the steel-spiked spear

Rent the tough plates, but failed to reach the skin,

And Rustum plucked it back with angry groan.

Then Sohrab with his sword smote Rustum's helm, 495

Nor clove its steel quite through; but all the crest

He shore away, and that proud horse-hair plume,

Never till now defiled, sank to the dust; And Rustum bowed his head; but then the gloom

Grew blacker, thunder rumbled in the air, 500

And lightnings rent the cloud; and Ruksh, the horse,

Who stood at hand, uttered a dreadful cry;—

No horse's cry was that, most like the roar

Of some pained desert lion, who all day Hath trailed the hunter's javelin in his

side, 505

And comes at night to die upon the sand. The two hosts heard that cry, and quaked

for fear,

And Oxus curdled as it crossed his stream. But Sohrab heard, and quailed not, but rushed on,

And struck again; and again Rustum bowed 510

His head; but this time all the blade, like glass,

Sprang in a thousand shivers on the helm,

And in his hand the hilt remained alone. Then Rustum raised his head; his dreadful

eyes

Glared, and he shook on high his menacing spear, 515

And shouted, Rustum!—Sohrab heard that shout,

And shrank amazed: back he recoiled one
step,
And scanned with blinking eyes the advancing form;
And then he stood bewildered; and he dropped
His covering shield, and the spear pierced his side. 520
He reeled, and staggering back, sank to
the ground;
And then the gloom dispersed, and the wind fell,
And the bright sun broke forth, and melted
all
The cloud; and the two armies saw the pair—
Saw Rustum standing, safe upon his
feet, 525
And Sohrab, wounded, on the bloody
sand.
Then with a bitter smile, Rustum
began:— “Sohrab, thou thoughtest in thy mind to kill
A Persian lord this day, and strip his corpse,
And bear thy trophies to Afrasiab's tent.
Or else that the great Rustum would come
down 531
Himself to fight, and that thy wiles would move
His heart to take a gift, and let thee go.
And then that all the Tartar host would
praise
Thy courage or thy craft, and spread thy
fame, 535
To glad thy father in his weak old age.
Fool, thou art slain, and by an unknown
man!
Dearer to the red jackals shalt thou be
Than to thy friends, and to thy father
old.”
And, with a fearless mien, Sohrab
replied:— 540
“Unknown thou art; yet thy fierce vaunt is vain.
Thou dost not slay me, proud and boastful
man!
No! Rustum slays me, and this filial
heart.
For were I matched with ten such men
as thee,
And I were that which till to-day I was, 545
They should be lying here, I standing there.

But that beloved name unnerved my arm—
That name, and something, I confess, in
thee,
Which troubles all my heart, and made my shield
Fall; and thy spear transfix'd an unarmed foe. 550
And now thou boastest, and insultest
my fate.
But hear thou this, fierce man, tremble
to hear!
The mighty Rustum shall avenge my
death!
My father, whom I seek through all the
world,
He shall avenge my death, and punish
thee!” 555
As when some hunter in the spring hath found
A breeding eagle sitting on her nest,
Upon the craggy isle of a hill-lake,
And pierced her with an arrow as she
rose,
And followed her to find her where she
fell 560
Far off;—anon her mate comes winging
back
From hunting, and a great way off de-scries
His huddling young left sole; at that, he checks
His pinion, and with short uneasy sweeps
Circles above his eyry, with loud screams Chiding his mate back to her nest; but
she 566
Lies dying, with the arrow in her side,
In some far stony gorge out of his ken,
A heap of fluttering feathers—never more
Shall the lake glass her, flying over it; 570
Never the black and dripping precipices
Echo her stormy scream as she sails by:—
As that poor bird flies home, nor knows his loss,
So Rustum knew not his own loss, but
stood
Over his dying son, and knew him not. 575
But, with a cold incredulous voice, he
said:—
“What prate is this of fathers and revenge?
The mighty Rustum never had a son.”
And, with a failing voice, Sohrab replied:— 579

"Ah! yes, he had! and that lost son am I.
 Surely the news will one day reach his
 ear,
 Reach Rustum, where he sits, and tarries
 long,
 Somewhere, 'I know not where, but far from here,
 And pierce him like a stab, and make him leap
 To arms, and cry for vengeance upon
 thee. 585
 Fierce man, bethink thee, for an only son!
 What will that grief, what will that vengeance be?
 Oh, could I live, till I that grief had seen!
 Yet him I pity not so much, but her,
 My mother, who in Ader-baijan dwells 590
 With that old king, her father, who grows
 gray
 With age, and rules over the valiant Koords.
 Her most I pity, who no more will see
 Sohrab returning from the Tartar camp,
 With spoils and honor, when the war is
 done. 595
 But a dark rumor will be bruited up,
 From tribe to tribe, until it reach her ear;
 And then will that defenceless woman
 learn
 That Sohrab will rejoice her sight no more;
 But that in battle with a nameless foe, 600
 By the far-distant Oxus, he is slain."
 He spoke; and as he ceased, he wept
 aloud,
 Thinking of her he left, and his own death.
 He spoke; but Rustum listened, plunged in thought.
 Nor did he yet believe it was his son 605
 Who spoke, although he called back names
 he knew;
 For he had had sure tidings that the babe,
 Which was in Ader-baijan born to him,
 Had been a puny girl, no boy at all—
 So that sad mother sent him word, for fear 610
 Rustum should take the boy, to train in
 arms;
 And so he deemed that either Sohrab took,
 By a false boast, the style of Rustum's
 son;
 Or that men gave it him, to swell his fame.
 So deemed he; yet he listened, plunged
 in thought, 615
 And his soul set to grief, as the vast tide

Of the bright rocking Ocean sets to shore
 At the full moon: tears gathered in his
 eyes;
 For he remembered his own early youth,
 And all its bounding rapture; as, at dawn,
 The shepherd from his mountain-lodge
 descries 621
 A far, bright city, smitten by the sun,
 Through many rolling clouds—so Rustum
 saw
 His youth; saw Sohrab's mother, in her
 bloom;
 And that old king, her father, who loved
 well 625
 His wandering guest, and gave him his fair child
 With joy; and all the pleasant life they led,
 They three, in that long-distant summer-
 time—
 The castle, and the dewy woods, and hunt
 And hound, and morn on those delightful
 hills 630
 In Ader-baijan. And he saw that youth,
 Of age and looks to be his own dear son,
 Piteous and lovely, lying on the sand,
 Like some rich hyacinth which by the scythe
 Of an unskilful gardener has been cut, 635 Mowing the garden grass-plots near its
 bed,
 And lies, a fragrant tower of purple bloom,
 On the mown, dying grass—so Sohrab lay,
 Lovely in death, upon the common sand.
 And Rustum gazed on him with grief, and
 said:— 640
 "O Sohrab, thou indeed art such a son Whom Rustum, wert thou his, might well have loved.
 Yet here thou errest, Sohrab, or else men
 Have told thee false—thou art not Rustum's son.
 For Rustum had no son: one child he had— 645
 But one—a girl; who with her mother now
 Plies some light female task, nor dreams of
 us—
 Of us she dreams not, nor of wounds, nor war." 650
 But Sohrab answered him in wrath; for
 now
 The anguish of the deep-fixed spear grew fierce, 655
 And he desired to draw forth the steel,

And let the blood flow free, and so to die—
But first he would convince his stubborn
foe;

And, rising sternly on one arm, he said:—

“Man, who art thou who dost deny my words? 655

Truth sits upon the lips of dying men,
And falsehood, while I lived, was far from
mine.

I tell thee, pricked upon this arm I bear
That seal which Rustum to my mother
gave,

That she might prick it on the babe she bore.” 660

He spoke; and all the blood left Rustum’s cheeks,

And his knees tottered, and he smote his
hand

Against his breast, his heavy mailed hand,
That the hard iron corslet clanked aloud;
And to his heart he pressed the other
hand, 665

And in a hollow voice he spake, and said:—

“Sohrab, that were a proof which could not lie!

If thou show this, then art thou Rustum’s
son.”

Then, with weak hasty fingers, Sohrab loosed

His belt, and near the shoulder bared his arm, 670

And showed a sign in faint vermilion points
Pricked; as a cunning workman, in Pekin, Pricks with vermilion some clear porcelain
vase,

An emperor’s gift—at early morn he paints,
And all day long, and, when night comes,
the lamp 675

Lights up his studious forehead and thin
hands—

So delicately pricked the sign appeared

On Sohrab’s arm, the sign of Rustum’s seal.

It was that griffin, which of old reared Zal, Rustum’s great father, whom they left to
die, 680

A helpless babe, among the mountain
rocks;

Him that kind creature found, and reared,
and loved—

Then Rustum took it for his glorious sign.

And Sohrab bared that image on his arm,
And himself scanned it long with mournful
eyes, 685

And then he touched it with his hand and
said:—

“How say’st thou? Is that sign the proper sign

Of Rustum’s son, or of some other man’s?”

He spoke: but Rustum gazed, and gazed, and stood

Speechless; and then he uttered one sharp
cry: 690

“O boy—thy father!”—and his voice choked there.

And then a dark cloud passed before his
eyes,

And his head swam, and he sank down to
earth.

But Sohrab crawled to where he lay, and
cast

His arms about his neck, and kissed his lips, 695

And with fond faltering fingers stroked
his cheeks,

Trying to call him back to life; and life Came back to Rustum, and he oped his
eyes,

And they stood wide with horror; and he seized

In both his hands the dust which lay
around, 700

And threw it on his head, and smirched his hair,—

His hair, and face, and beard, and glittering arms;

And strong convulsive groanings shook
his breast,

And his sobs choked him; and he clutched
his sword,

To draw it, and forever let life out. 705

But Sohrab saw his thought, and held his
hands,

And with a soothing voice he spake, and
said:—

“Father, forbear! for I but meet to-day
The doom that at my birth was written
down

In Heaven, and thou art Heaven’s unconscious hand. 710

Surely my heart cried out that it was thou,
When first I saw thee; and thy heart spoke
too,

I know it! but fate trod those promptings
down

Under its iron heel; fate, fate engaged
The strife, and hurled me on my father’s spear. 715

But let us speak no more of this! I find
 My father; let me feel that I have found!
 Come, sit beside me on this sand, and take
 My head betwixt thy hands, and kiss my cheeks,
 And wash them with thy tears, and say:
 ‘My son!’⁷²⁰
 Quick! quick! for numbered are my sands
 of life,
 And swift; for like the lightning to this
 field
 I came, and like the wind I go away—
 Sudden, and swift, and like a passing
 wind.
 But it was writ in Heaven that this should be.”⁷²⁵
 So said he: and his voice released the
 heart
 Of Rustum, and his tears broke forth;
 he cast
 His arms round his son’s neck, and wept
 aloud,
 And kissed him. And awe fell on both the hosts
 When they saw Rustum’s grief: and Ruksh, the horse,⁷³⁰
 With his head bowing to the ground and mane Sweeping the dust, came near, and in mute woe
 First to the one, then to the other moved
 His head, as if inquiring what their grief Might mean; and from his dark, compassionate eyes,⁷³⁵
 The big warm tears rolled down, and caked the sand.
 But Rustum chid him with stern voice,
 and said:—
 “Ruksh, now thou grieveest; but, O
 Ruksh, thy feet
 Should first have rotted on their nimble joints,
 Or ere they bore thy master to this field!”
 But Sohrab looked upon the horse and said:—⁷⁴¹
 “Is this, then, Ruksh? How often, in past
 days,
 My mother told me of thee, thou brave
 steed,
 My terrible father’s terrible horse! and
 said,
 That I should one day find thy lord and thee.”⁷⁴⁵

Come, let me lay my hand upon thy mane!
 O Ruksh, thou art more fortunate than I;
 For thou hast gone where I shall never
 go,
 And snuffed the breezes of my father’s
 home.
 And thou hast trod the sands of Seistan.
 And seen the river of Helmund, and the Lake⁷⁵¹
 Of Zirrah; and the aged Zal himself
 Has often stroked thy neck, and given thee food,
 Corn in a golden platter soaked with
 wine,
 And said ‘O Ruksh! bear Rustum well!’
 but I⁷⁵⁵
 Have never known my grandsire’s furrowed face,
 Nor seen his lofty house in Seistan,
 Nor slaked my thirst at the clear Hel-mund stream;
 But lodged among my father’s foes, and
 seen
 Afrasiab’s cities only, Samarcand,⁷⁶⁰
 Bokhara, and lone Khiva in the waste,
 And the black Toorkmun tents; and only drunk
 The desert rivers, Moorghab and Tejend, Kohik, and where the Kalmuks feed their sheep,
 The northern Sir; and this great Oxus stream—⁷⁶⁵
 The yellow Oxus, by whose brink I die.”
 And, with a heavy groan, Rustum bewailed:—
 “Oh, that its waves were flowing over
 me!
 Oh, that I saw its grains of yellow silt Roll tumbling in the current o’er my head!”⁷⁷⁰
 But, with a grave mild voice, Sohrab
 replied:— “Desire not that, my father! thou must live.
 For some are born to do great deeds, and
 live,
 As some are born to be obscured, and die.
 Do thou the deeds I die too young to do,
 And reap a second glory in thine age;⁷⁷⁶
 Thou art my father, and thy gain is mine.
 But come! thou seest this great host of
 men
 Which follow me; I pray thee, slay not
 these!

Let me entreat for them; what have they
done? 780
They followed me, my hope, my fame, my
star.
Let them all cross the Oxus back in peace.
But me thou must bear hence, not send with them,
But carry me with thee to Seistan,
And place me on a bed, and mourn for
me, 785
Thou, and the snow-haired Zal, and all thy friends.
And thou must lay me in that lovely
earth,
And heap a stately mound above my
bones,
And plant a far-seen pillar over all:
That so the passing horseman on the
waste 790
May see my tomb a great way off, and
cry:
*'Sohrab, the mighty Rustum's son, lies
there,
Whom his great father did in ignorance
kill'*—
And I be not forgotten in my grave.”
And, with a mournful voice, Rustum
replied:— 795
“Fear not! as thou hast said, Sohrab, my
son,
So shall it be; for I will burn my tents,
And quit the host, and bear thee hence
with me,
And carry thee away to Seistan,
And place thee on a bed, and mourn for thee, 800
With the snow-headed Zal, and all my friends.
And I will lay thee in that lovely earth,
And heap a stately mound above thy
bones,
And plant a far-seen pillar over all,
And men shall not forget thee in thy
grave. 805
And I will spare thy host; yea, let them
go!
Let them all cross the Oxus back in peace!
What should I do with slaying any more?
For would that all whom I have ever
slain
Might be once more alive; my bitterest
foes, 810
And they who were called champions in their time,

And through whose death I won that fame I have—
And I were nothing but a common man,
A poor, mean soldier, and without re-
nown,
So thou mightest live too, my son, my
son! 815
Or rather would that I, even I myself,
Might now be lying on this bloody sand.
Near death, and by an ignorant stroke of thine,
Not thou of mine! and I might die, not
thou;
And I, not thou, be borne to Seistan; 820
And Zal might weep above my grave,
not thine;
And say *'O son, I weep thee not too sore,
For willingly, I know, thou met'st thine end.'*
But now in blood and battles was my
youth.
And full of blood and battles is my age, 825
And I shall never end this life of blood.”
Then, at the point of death, Sohrab
replied:—
“A life of blood indeed, thou dreadful man!
But thou shalt yet have peace; only not
now.
Not yet! but thou shalt have it on that
day, 830
When thou shalt sail in a high-masted
ship,
Thou and the other peers of Kai-Khosroo,
Returning home over the salt blue sea,
From laying thy dear master in his grave.”
And Rustum gazed on Sohrab's face,
and said:— 835
“Soon be that day, my son, and deep that
sea!
Till then, if fate so wills, let me endure.”
He spoke; and Sohrab smiled on him, and took
The spear, and drew it from his side, and eased
His wound's imperious anguish; but the
blood 840
Came welling from the open gash, and
life
Flowed with the stream;—all down his cold white side
The crimson torrent ran, dim now and soiled
Like the soiled tissue of white violets Left, freshly gathered, on their native bank, 845

By romping children, whom their nurses
call Indoors from the sun's eye; his head
drooped low,
His limbs grew slack; motionless, white,
he lay—
White, with eyes closed; only when heavy gasps,
Deep heavy gasps quivering through all his frame, 850
Convulsed him back to life, he opened
them,
And fixed them feebly on his father's
face;
Till now all strength was ebbd, and from his limbs
Unwillingly the spirit fled away,
Regretting the warm mansion which it
left, 855
And youth, and bloom, and this delightful world.

So, on the bloody sand, Sohrab lay dead;
And the great Rustum drew his horseman's cloak

Down o'er his face, and sate by his dead
son.

As those black granite pillars, once high-
reared 860

By Jemshid in Persepolis, to bear
His house, now 'mid their broken flights of steps

Lie prone, enormous, down the mountain
side—

So in the sand lay Rustum by his son.

And night came down over the solemn
waste, 865

And the two gazing hosts, and that sole
pair,

And darkened all; and a cold fog, with
night,

Crept from the Oxus. Soon a hum arose,
As of a great assembly loosed, and fires Began to twinkle through the fog: for
now 870

Both armies moved to camp, and took their meal;

The Persians took it on the open sands
Southward, the Tartars by the river marge:
And Rustum and his son were left alone.

But the majestic river floated on, 875
Out of the mist and hum of that low land,
Into the frosty starlight, and there moved,
Rejoicing, through the hushed Chorasmian waste,

Under the solitary moon;—he flowed
Right for the polar star, past Orgunjè, Brimming, and bright, and large; then sands begin 881

To hem his watery march, and dam his
streams,

And split his currents; that for many a league

The shorn and parcelled Oxus strains along Through beds of sand and matted rushy
isles— 885

Oxus, forgetting the bright speed he had
In his high mountain cradle in Pamere,
A foiled circuitous wanderer—till at last
The longed-for dash of waves is heard, and
wide

His luminous home of waters opens,
bright 890

And tranquil, from whose floor the new-bathed stars

Emerge, and shine upon the Aral Sea.

THE AUSTERITY OF POETRY

That son of Italy who tried to blow,
Ere Dante came, the trump of sacred song,
In his light youth amid a festal throng
Sat with his bride to see a public show.
Fair was the bride, and on her front did
glow 5

Youth like a star; and what to youth
belong—

Gay raiment, sparkling gauds, elation
strong.

A prop gave way! crash fell a platform! lo,
'Mid struggling sufferers, hurt to death,
she lay!

Shuddering, they drew her garments off
—and found 10

A robe of sackcloth next the smooth, white skin.

Such, poets, is your bride, the Muse!
young, gay,

Radiant, adorned outside; a hidden ground
Of thought and of austerity within.

RUGBY CHAPEL

NOVEMBER 1857

Coldly, sadly descends
The autumn evening. The field
Strewn with its dank yellow drifts
Of withered leaves, and the elms,

Fade into dimness apace, Silent:—hardly a shout From a few boys late at their play! The lights come out in the street, In the school-room windows;—but cold, Solemn, unlighted, austere, Through the gathering darkness, arise The chapel-walls, in whose bound Thou, my father! art laid.	5 10	'Twixt vice and virtue; revivest, Succorest! This was thy work, This was thy life upon earth.	55
There thou dost lie, in the gloom Of the autumn evening. But ah! That word, gloom , to my mind Brings thee back, in the light Of thy radiant vigor, again; In the gloom of November we passed Days not dark at thy side; Seasons impaired not the ray Of thy buoyant cheerfulness clear. Such thou wast! and I stand In the autumn evening, and think Of bygone autumns with thee.	15 20	What is the course of the life Of mortal men on the earth? Most men eddy about Here and there—eat and drink, Chatter and love and hate, Gather and squander, are raised Aloft, are hurled in the dust. Striving blindly, achieving Nothing; and then they die— Perish;—and no one asks Who or what they have been, More than he asks what waves, In the moonlit solitudes mild Of the midmost Ocean, have swelled, Foamed for a moment, and gone.	60 65 70
Fifteen years have gone round Since thou arosest to tread, In the summer-morning, the road Of death, at a call unforeseen, Sudden. For fifteen years, We who till then in thy shade Restored as under the boughs Of a mighty oak, have endured Sunshine and rain as we might, Bare, unshaded, alone, Lacking the shelter of thee.	25 30	And there are some, whom a thirst Ardent, unquenchable, fires, Not with the crowd to be spent, Not without aim to go round In an eddy of purposeless dust, Effort unmeaning and vain. Ah, yes! some of us strive Not without action to die	75 80
O strong soul, by what shore Tarriest thou now? For that force, Surely, has not been left vain! Somewhere, surely, afar, In the sounding labor-house vast Of being, is practised that strength, Zealous, beneficent, firm!	35 40	Fruitless, but something to snatch From dull oblivion, nor all Glut the devouring grave! We, we have chosen our path— Path to a clear-purposed goal, Path of advance!—but it leads A long, steep journey, through sunk Gorges, o'er mountains in snow. Cheerful, with friends, we set forth— Then, on the height, comes the storm.	85 90
Yes, in some far-shining sphere, Conscious or not of the past, Still thou performest the word Of the Spirit in whom thou dost live— Prompt, unwearied, as here! Still thou upraimest with zeal The humble good from the ground, Sternly represses the bad! Still, like a trumpet, dost rouse Those who with half-open eyes Tread the border-land dim	45 50	Thunder crashes from rock To rock, the cataracts reply; Lightnings dazzle our eyes; Roaring torrents have breached The track; the stream-bed descends In the place where the wayfarer once Planted his footstep—the spray Boils o'er its borders! aloft The unseen snow-beds dislodge Their hanging ruin! alas, Havoc is made in our train! Friends, who set forth at our side, Falter, are lost in the storm. We, we only are left! With frowning foreheads, with lips Sternly compressed, we strain on,	95 100 105

On—and at nightfall at last Come to the end of our way. To the lonely inn 'mid the rocks; Where the gaunt and taciturn host Stands on the threshold, the wind Shaking his thin white hairs— Holds his lantern to scan Our storm-beat figures, and asks: Whom in our party we bring, Whom we have left in the snow?	110	Bluster or cringe, and make life Hideous, and arid, and vile; But souls tempered with fire, Fervent, heroic, and good, Helpers and friends of mankind.	160
Sadly we answer: We bring Only ourselves! we lost Sight of the rest in the storm. Hardly ourselves we fought through, Stripped, without friends, as we are. Friends, companions, and train, The avalanche swept from our side.	115	Servants of God!—or sons Shall I not call you? because Not as servants ye knew Your Father's innermost mind, His, who unwillingly sees One of his little ones lost— Yours is the praise, if mankind Hath not as yet in its march Fainted, and fallen, and died!	165
But thou would'st not alone Be saved, my father! alone Conquer and come to thy goal, Leaving the rest in the wild. We were weary, and we Fearful, and we in our march Fain to drop down and to die. Still thou turnedst, and still Beckonedst the trembler, and still Gavest the weary thy hand.	120	See! In the rocks of the world Marches the host of mankind, A feeble, wavering line. Where are they tending?—A God Marshaled them, gave them their goal.— Ah, but the way is so long! Years they have been in the wild! Sore thirst plagues them, the rocks, Rising all round, overawe; Factions divide them, their host Threatens to break, to dissolve.	170
If, in the paths of the world, Stones might have wounded thy feet, Toil or dejection have tried Thy spirit, of that we saw Nothing—to us thou wast still Cheerful, and helpful, and firm! Therefore to thee it was given Many to save with thyself; And, at the end of thy day, O faithful shepherd! to come, Bringing thy sheep in thy hand.	125	—Ah, keep, keep them combined! Else, of the myriads who fill That army, not one shall arrive; Sole they shall stray; on the rocks Batter for ever in vain, Die one by one in the waste.	175
And through thee I believe In the noble and great who are gone; Pure souls honored and blest By former ages, who else— Such, so soulless, so poor, Is the race of men whom I see— Seemed but a dream of the heart, Seemed but a cry of desire. Yes! I believe that there lived Others like thee in the past, Not like the men of the crowd Who all round me to-day	130	Then, in such hour of need Of your fainting, dispirited race, Ye, like angels, appear, Radiant with ardor divine. Beacons of hope, ye appear! Languor is not in your heart, Weakness is not in your word, Weariness not on your brow. Ye alight in our van! at your voice Panic, despair, flee away. Ye move through the ranks, recall The stragglers, refresh the outworn, Praise, re-inspire the brave. Order, courage, return; Eyes rekindling, and prayers, Follow your steps as ye go. Ye fill up the gaps in our files, Strengthen the wavering line, Stablish, continue our march, On, to the bound of the waste, On, to the City of God.	180
	135		185
	140		190
	145		195
	150		200
	155		205

DOVER BEACH

The sea is calm to-night,
 The tide is full, the moon lies fair
 Upon the straits;—on the French coast
 the light
 Gleams and is gone; the cliffs of England
 stand,
 Glimmering and vast, out in the tranquil bay. 5
 Come to the window, sweet is the night-
 air!
 Only, from the long line of spray
 Where the sea meets the moon-blanch'd
 land,
 Listen! you hear the grating roar
 Of pebbles which the waves draw back,
 and fling, 10
 At their return, up the high strand,
 Begin, and cease, and then again begin,
 With tremulous cadence slow, and bring
 The eternal note of sadness in.

Sophocles long ago 15
 Heard it on the Ægean, and it brought Into his mind the turbid ebb and flow
 Of human misery; we Find also in the sound a thought,
 Hearing it by this distant northern sea. 20

The Sea of Faith
 Was once, too, at the full, and round earth's shore
 Lay like the folds of a bright girdle furled.
 But now I only hear
 Its melancholy, long, withdrawing roar, 25
 Retreating, to the breath
 Of the night-wind, down the vast edges
 drear
 And naked shingles of the world.

Ah, love, let us be true
 To one another! for the world, which seems 30
 To lie before us like a land of dreams,
 So various, so beautiful, so new,
 Hath really neither joy, nor love, nor
 light,
 Nor certitude, nor peace, nor help for
 pain;
 And we are here as on a darkling plain 35
 Swept with confused alarms of struggle and flight,
 Where ignorant armies clash by night.

THE LAST WORD

Creep into thy narrow bed,
 Creep, and let no more be said!
 Vain thy onset! all stands fast.
 Thou thyself must break at last.

Let the long contention cease! 5
 Geese are swans, and swans are geese.
 Let them have it how they will!
 Thou art tired; best be still.

They out-talked thee, hissed thee, tore
 thee?

Better men fared thus before thee; 10
 Fired their ringing shot and passed,
 Hotly charged—and sank at last.

Charge once more, then, and be dumb!
 Let the victors, when they come,
 When the forts of folly fall, 15
 Find thy body by the wall!

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE

Practical people talk with a smile of Plato and of his absolute ideas; and it is impossible to deny that Plato's ideas do often seem unpractical and impracticable, and especially when one views them in connection with the life of a great work-a-day world like the United States. The necessary staple of the life of such a world
 Plato regards with disdain; handicraft and trade and the working professions [10 he regards with disdain, but what becomes of the life of an industrial modern community if you take handicraft and trade and the working professions out of it? The base mechanic arts and handicrafts, says Plato, bring about a natural weakness in the principle of excellence in a man, so that he cannot govern the ignoble growths in him, but nurses them, and cannot understand fostering any [20 other. Those who exercise such arts and trades, as they have their bodies, he says marred, by their vulgar businesses, so they have their souls, too, bowed and broken by them. And if one of these uncomely people has a mind to seek self-culture and philosophy, Plato compares him to a bald little tinker, who has scraped together money, and has got his release from service, and has had a bath, and [30 bought a new coat, and is rigged out like a bridegroom about to marry the daughter of his master who has fallen into poor and helpless estate.

Nor do the working professions fare any better than trade at the hands of Plato. He draws for us an inimitable picture of the working lawyer, and of his life of bondage; he shows how this bondage from his youth up has stunted [40 and warped him, and made him small and crooked of soul, encompassing him with difficulties which he is not man enough to rely on justice and truth as means to encounter, but has recourse, for help out of them, to falsehood and wrong. And so, says Plato, this poor creature is bent and broken, and grows up from boy to man without a particle of soundness in him, although exceed- [50 ingly smart and clever in his own esteem.

One cannot refuse to admire the artist who draws these pictures. But we say to ourselves that his ideas show the influence of a primitive and obsolete order of things, when the warrior caste and the priestly caste were alone in honor, and the humble work of the world was done by slaves. We have now changed all that; the mod- [60 ern majority consists in work, as Emerson declares; and in work, we may add, principally of such plain and dusty kind as the work of cultivators of the ground, handicraftsmen, men of trade and business, men of the working professions. Above all is this true in a great industrious community such as that of the United States.

Now education, many people go on [70 to say, is still mainly governed by the ideas of men like Plato, who lived when the warrior caste and the priestly or philosophical class were alone in honor, and the really useful part of the community were slaves. It is an education fitted for persons of leisure in such a community. This education passed from Greece and Rome to the feudal communities of Europe, where also the warrior caste [80 and the priestly caste were alone held in honor, and where the really useful and working part of the community, though not nominally slaves as in the pagan world, were practically not much better off than slaves, and not more seriously regarded. And how absurd it is, people end by saying, to inflict this education upon an industrious modern community, where very few indeed are per- [90 sons of leisure, and the mass to be considered has not leisure, but is bound, for its own great good, and for the great good of the world at large, to plain labor and to industrial pursuits, and the education in question tends necessarily to make men dissatisfied with these pursuits and unfitted for them!

That is what is said. So far I must defend Plato, as to plead that his view [100 of education and studies is in the general, as it seems to me, sound enough, and fitted for all sorts and conditions of men, whatever their pursuits may be. "An intelligent man," says Plato, "will prize those studies which result in his soul getting soberness, righteousness, and wisdom, and will less value the others." I cannot consider that a bad description of the aim of education, and of the mo- [110 tives which should govern us in the choice of studies, whether we are preparing ourselves for a hereditary seat in the English House of Lords or for the pork trade in Chicago.

Still I admit that Plato's world was not ours that his scorn of trade and handicraft is fantastic, that he had no conception of a great industrial community such as that of the United States, and [120 that such a community must and will shape its education to suit its own needs. If the usual education handed down to it from the past does not suit it, it will certainly before long drop this and try another. The usual education in the past has been mainly literary. The question is whether the studies which were long supposed to be the best for all of us are practically the best now; whether [130 others are not better. The tyranny of the past, many think, weighs on us injuriously in the predominance given to letters in education. The question is raised whether, to meet the needs of our modern life, the predominance ought not now to pass from letters to science; and naturally the question is nowhere raised with more energy than here in the United States. The design of abasing [140 what is called "mere literary instruction and education," and of exalting what is called "sound, extensive, and practical scientific knowledge," is, in this intensely modern world of the United States, even more perhaps than in Europe, a very popular design, and makes great and rapid progress.

I am going to ask whether the present movement for ousting letters from their [150 old predominance in education, and for transferring the predominance in education to the natural sciences, whether this brisk and flourishing movement ought to prevail, and whether it is likely that in the end it really will prevail. An objection may be raised which I will anticipate. My own studies have been almost wholly in letters, and my visits to the field of the natural sciences have been [160 very slight and inadequate, although those sciences have always strongly moved my curiosity. A man of letters, it will perhaps be said, is not competent to discuss the comparative merits of letters and natural science as means of education. To this objection I reply, first of all, that his incompetence, if he attempts the discussion but is really incompetent for it, will be abundantly visible; nobody will be [170 taken in; he will have plenty of sharp observers and critics to save mankind from that danger. But the line I am going to follow is, as you will soon discover, so extremely simple, that perhaps it may be followed without failure even by one who for a more ambitious line of discussion would be quite incompetent.

Some of you may possibly remember [180 a phrase of mine which has been the object of a good deal of comment; an observation to the effect that in our culture, the aim being to know ourselves and the world, we have, as the means to this end, to know the best which has been thought and said in the world. A man of science, who is also an excellent writer and the very prince of debaters, Professor Huxley, in a discourse at the opening of Sir Josiah Mason's [190 college at Birmingham, laying hold of this phrase, expanded it by quoting some more words of mine, which are these: "The civilised world is to be regarded as now being, for intellectual and spiritual purposes, one great confederation, bound to a joint action and working to a common result; and whose members have for their proper outfit a knowledge of Greek, Roman, and Eastern antiquity, [200 and of one another. Special local and temporary advantages being put out of account, that modern nation will in the intellectual and spiritual sphere make most progress, which most thoroughly carries out this programme."

Now on my phrase, thus enlarged, Professor Huxley remarks that when I speak of the above-mentioned knowledge as enabling us to know ourselves and [210 the world, I assert literature to contain the materials which suffice for thus making us know ourselves and the world. But it is not by any means clear, says he, that after having learnt all which ancient and modern literatures have to tell us, we have laid a sufficiently broad and deep foundation for that criticism of life, that knowledge of ourselves and the world, which constitutes culture. On the [220 contrary, Professor Huxley declares that he finds himself "wholly unable to admit that either nations or individuals will really advance, if their outfit draws nothing from the stores of physical science. An army without weapons of precision, and with no particular base of operations, might more hopefully enter upon a campaign on the Rhine, than a man, devoid of a knowledge of [230 what physical science has done in the last century, upon a criticism of life."

This shows how needful it is for those who are to discuss any matter together to have a common understanding as to the sense of the terms they employ,—how needful, and how difficult. What Professor Huxley says, implies just the reproach which is so often brought [240 against the study of belles lettres, as they are called: that the study is an elegant one, but slight and ineffectual; a smattering of Greek and Latin and other ornamental things, of little use for any one whose object is to get at truth, and to be a practical man. So, too, M. Renan talks of the "superficial humanism" of a school-course which treats us as if we were all going to be poets, writers, preachers. [250 orators, and he opposes this humanism to positive science, or the critical search after truth. And there is always a tendency in those who are remonstrating against the predominance of letters in education, to understand by letters belles lettres, and by belles lettres a superficial humanism, the opposite of science or true knowledge.

But when we talk of knowing Greek [260 and Roman antiquity, for instance, which is the knowledge people have called the humanities, I for my part mean a knowledge which is something more than a superficial humanism, mainly decorative. "I call all teaching scientific," says Wolf, the critic of Homer, "which is systematically laid out and followed up to its original sources. For example: a knowledge of classical antiquity is scientific [270 when the remains of classical antiquity are correctly studied in the original languages." There can be no doubt that Wolf is perfectly right; that all learning is scientific which is systematically laid out and followed up to its original sources, and that a genuine humanism is scientific.

When I speak of knowing Greek and Roman antiquity, therefore, as a help to knowing ourselves and the world, I [280 mean more than a knowledge of so much vocabulary, so much grammar, so many portions of authors in the Greek and Latin languages, I mean knowing the Greeks and Romans, and their life and genius, and what they were and did in the world; what we get from them, and what is its value. That, at least, is the ideal; and when we talk of endeavoring to know Greek and Roman antiquity, as a [290 help to knowing ourselves and the world, we mean endeavoring so to know them as to satisfy this ideal, however much we may still fall short of it.

The same also as to knowing our own and other modern nations, with the like aim of getting to understand ourselves and the world. To know the best that has been thought and said by the modern nations, is to know, says Professor [300 Huxley, "only what modern literatures have to tell us; it is the criticism of life contained in modern literature." And yet "the distinctive character of our times," he urges, "lies in the vast and constantly increasing part which is played by natural knowledge." And how, therefore, can a man, devoid of knowledge of what physical science has done in the last century, enter hopefully upon a [310 criticism of modern life?

Let us, I say, be agreed about the meaning of the terms we are using. I talk of knowing the best which has been thought and uttered in the world; Professor Huxley says this means knowing literature. Literature is a large word; it may mean everything written with letters or printed in a book. Euclid's Elements and Newton's Principia are thus [320 literature. All knowledge that reaches us through books is literature. But by literature Professor Huxley means belles lettres. He means to make me say, that knowing the best which has been thought and said by the modern nations is knowing their belles lettres and no more. And this is no sufficient equipment, he argues, for a criticism of modern life. But as I do not mean, by knowing ancient Rome, [330 knowing merely more or less of Latin belles lettres, and taking no account of Rome's military, and political, and legal, and administrative work in the world; and as, by knowing ancient Greece, I understand knowing her as the giver of Greek art, and the guide to a free and right use of reason and to scientific method, and the founder of our mathematics and physics and astronomy [340 and biology,—I understand knowing her as all this, and not merely knowing certain Greek poems, and histories, and treatises, and speeches,—so as to the knowledge of modern nations also. By knowing modern nations, I mean not merely knowing their belles lettres, but knowing also what has been done by such men as Copernicus, Galileo, Newton, Darwin. "Our ancestors learned," says Pro- [350 fessor Huxley, "that the earth is the centre of the visible universe, and that man is the cynosure of things terrestrial; and more especially was it inculcated that the course of nature has no fixed order, but that it could be, and constantly was, altered." But for us now, continues Professor Huxley, "the notions of the beginning and the end of the world entertained by our forefathers are no longer [360] credible. It is very certain that the earth is not the chief body in the material universe, and that the world is not subordinated to man's use. It is even more certain that nature is the expression of a definite order, with which nothing interferes." "And yet," he cries, "the purely classical education advocated by the representatives of the humanists in our day gives no inkling of all this!" [370]

In due place and time I will just touch upon that vexed question of classical education; but at present the question is as to what is meant by knowing the best which modern nations have thought and said. It is not knowing their belles lettres merely which is meant. To know Italian belles lettres is not to know Italy, and to know English belles lettres is not to know England. Into knowing Italy and [380] England there comes a great deal more, Galileo and Newton amongst it. The reproach of being a superficial humanism, a tincture of belles lettres, may attach rightly enough to some other disciplines; but to the particular discipline recommended when I proposed knowing the best that has been thought and said in the world, it does not apply. In that best I certainly include what in modern times has been thought and said by the great observers and knowers of nature.

There is, therefore, really no question between Professor Huxley and me as to whether knowing the great results of the modern scientific study of nature is not required as a part of our culture, as well as knowing the products of literature and art. But to follow the processes by [400] which those results are reached, ought, say the friends of physical science, to be made the staple of education for the bulk of mankind. And here there does arise a question between those whom Professor Huxley calls with playful sarcasm "the Levites of culture," and those whom the poor humanist is sometimes apt to regard as its Nebuchadnezzars.

The great results of the scientific [410] investigation of nature we are agreed upon knowing, but how much of our study are we bound to give to the processes by which those results are reached? The results have their visible bearing on human life. But all the processes, too, all the items of fact by which those results are reached and established, are interesting. All knowledge is interesting to a wise man, and the knowledge of na- [420] ture is interesting to all men. It is very interesting to know, that, from the albuminous white of the egg, the chick in the egg gets the materials for its flesh, bones, blood, and feathers; while, from the fatty yolk of the egg, it gets the heat and energy which enable it at length to break its shell and begin the world. It is less interesting, perhaps, but still it is interesting, to know that when a [430] taper burns, the wax is converted into carbonic acid and water. Moreover, it is quite true that the habit of dealing with facts, which is given by the study of nature, is, as the friends of physical science praise it for being, an excellent discipline. The appeal, in the study of nature, is constantly to observation and experiment; not only is it said that the thing is so, but we can be made to see [440] that it is so. Not only does a man tell us that when a taper burns the wax is converted into carbonic acid and water, as a man may tell us, if he likes, that Charon is punting his ferry-boat on the river Styx, or that Victor Hugo is a sublime poet, or Mr. Gladstone the most admirable of statesmen; but we are made to see that the conversion into carbonic acid and water does actually happen. [450] This reality of natural knowledge it is, which makes the friends of physical science contrast it, as a knowledge of things, with the humanist's knowledge, which is, they say, a knowledge of words. And hence Professor Huxley is moved to lay it down that, "for the purpose of attaining real culture, an exclusively scientific education is at least as effectual as an exclusively literary education." And [460]

a certain President of the Section for Mechanical Science in the British Association is, in Scripture phrase, "very bold," and declares that if a man, in his mental training, "has substituted literature and history for natural science, he has chosen the less useful alternative." But whether we go these lengths or not, we must all admit that in natural science the habit gained of dealing with facts [470 is a most valuable discipline, and that every one should have some experience of it.

More than this, however, is demanded by the reformers. It is proposed to make the training in natural science the main part of education, for the great majority of mankind at any rate. And here, I confess, I part company with the friends of physical science, with whom up to [480 this point I have been agreeing. In differing from them, however, I wish to proceed with the utmost caution and diffidence. The smallness of my own acquaintance with the disciplines of natural science is ever before my mind, and I am fearful of doing these disciplines an injustice. The ability and pugnacity of the partisans of natural science make them formidable persons to contra- [490 dict. The tone of tentative inquiry, which befits a being of dim faculties and bounded knowledge, is the tone I would wish to take and not to depart from. At present it seems to me, that those who are for giving to natural knowledge, as they call it, the chief place in the education of the majority of mankind, leave one important thing out of their account: the constitution of human nature. But I put this [500 forward on the strength of some facts not at all recondite, very far from it; facts capable of being stated in the simplest possible fashion, and to which, if I so state them, the man of science will, I am sure, be willing to allow their due weight.

Deny the facts altogether, I think, he hardly can. He can hardly deny, that when we set ourselves to enumerate [510 the powers which go to the building up of human life, and say that they are the power of conduct, the power of intellect and knowledge, the power of beauty, and the power of social life and manners,—he can hardly deny that this scheme, though drawn in rough and plain lines enough, and not pretending to scientific exactness, does yet give a fairly true representation of the matter. Human nature is [520 built up by these powers; we have the need for them all. When we have rightly met and adjusted the claims of them all, we shall then be in a fair way for getting soberness and righteousness, with wisdom. This is evident enough, and the friends of physical science would admit it.

But perhaps they may not have sufficiently observed another thing: [530 namely, that the several powers just mentioned are not isolated, but there is, in the generality of mankind, a perpetual tendency to relate them one to another in divers ways. With one such way of relating them I am particularly concerned now. Following our instinct for intellect and knowledge, we acquire pieces of knowledge; and presently, in the generality of men, there arises the desire [540 to relate these pieces of knowledge to our sense for conduct, to our sense for beauty,—and there is weariness and dissatisfaction if the desire is baulked. Now in this desire lies, I think, the strength of that hold which letters have upon us.

All knowledge is, as I said just now, interesting; and even items of knowledge which from the nature of the case [550 cannot well be related, but must stand isolated in our thoughts, have their interest. Even lists of exceptions have their interest. If we are studying Greek accents, it is interesting to know that país and pas, and some other monosyllables of the same form of declension, do not take the circumflex upon the last syllable of the genitive plural, but vary, in this respect, from the common rule. [560 If we are studying physiology, it is interesting to know that the pulmonary artery carries dark blood and the pulmonary vein carries bright blood, departing in this respect from the common rule for the division of labor between the veins and the arteries. But every one knows how we seek naturally to combine the pieces of our knowledge together, to bring them under general rules, to [570 relate them to principles; and how unsatisfactory and tiresome it would be to go on for ever learning lists of exceptions, or accumulating items of fact which must stand isolated.

Well, that same need of relating our knowledge, which operates here within the sphere of our knowledge itself, we shall find operating, also, outside that sphere. We experience, as we go on [580 learning and knowing,—the vast majority of us experience,—the need of relating what we have learned and known to the sense which we have in us for conduct, to the sense which we have in us for beauty.

A certain Greek prophetess of Mantinea in Arcadia, Diotima by name, once explained to the philosopher Socrates that love, and impulse, and [590 bent of all kinds, is, in fact, nothing else but the desire in men that good should for ever be present to them. This desire for good, Diotima assured Socrates, is our fundamental desire, of which fundamental desire every impulse in us is only some one particular form. And therefore this fundamental desire it is, I suppose,—this desire in men that good should be for ever present to them,—which [600 acts in us when we feel the impulse for relating our knowledge to our sense for conduct and to our sense for beauty. At any rate, with men in general the instinct exists. Such is human nature. And the instinct, it will be admitted, is innocent, and human nature is preserved by our following the lead of its innocent instincts. Therefore, in seeking to gratify this instinct in question, we are fol- [610 lowing the instinct of self-preservation in humanity.

But, no doubt, some kinds of knowledge cannot be made to directly serve the instinct in question, cannot be directly related to the sense for beauty, to the sense for conduct. These are instrument-knowledges; they lead on to other knowledges, which can. A man who passes his life in instrument-knowledges is [620 a specialist. They may be invaluable as instruments to something beyond, for those who have the gift thus to employ them; and they may be disciplines in themselves wherein it is useful for every one to have some schooling. But it is inconceivable that the generality of men should pass all their mental life with Greek accents or with formal logic. My friend Professor Sylvester, who is [630 one of the first mathematicians in the world, holds transcendental doctrines as to the virtue of mathematics, but those doctrines are not for common men. In the very Senate House and heart of our English Cambridge I once ventured, though not without an apology for my profaneness, to hazard the opinion that for the majority of mankind a little of mathematics, even, goes a long way. [640 Of course this is quite consistent with their being of immense importance as an instrument to something else; but it is the few who have the aptitude for thus using them, not the bulk of mankind.

The natural sciences do not, however, stand on the same footing with these instrument-knowledges. Experience shows us that the generality of men will find more interest in learning that, [650 when a taper burns, the wax is converted into carbonic acid and water, or in learning the explanation of the phenomenon of dew, or in learning how the circulation of the blood is carried on, than they find in learning that the genitive plural of pais and pas does not take the circumflex on the termination. And one piece of natural knowledge is added to another, and others are added to that, [660 and at last we come to propositions so interesting as Mr. Darwin's famous proposition that "our ancestor was a hairy quadruped furnished with a tail and pointed ears, probably arboreal in his habits." Or we come to propositions of such reach and magnitude as those which Professor Huxley delivers, when he says that the notions of our forefathers about the beginning and the end of [670 the world were all wrong, and that nature is the expression of a definite order with which nothing interferes.

Interesting, indeed, these results of science are, important they are, and we should all of us be acquainted with them.

But what I now wish you to mark is, that we are still, when they are propounded to us and we receive them, we are still in the sphere of intellect and [680 knowledge. And for the generality of men there will be found, I say, to arise, when they have duly taken in the proposition that their ancestor was "a hairy quadruped furnished with a tail and pointed ears, probably arboreal in his habits," there will be found to arise an invincible desire to relate this proposition to the sense in us for conduct, and to the sense in us for beauty. But this the [690 men of science will not do for us, and will hardly even profess to do. They will give us other pieces of knowledge, other facts, about other animals and their ancestors, or about plants, or about stones, or about stars; and they may finally bring us to those great "general conceptions of the universe, which are forced upon us all," says Professor Huxley, "by the progress of physical science." [700 But still it will be knowledge only which they give us; knowledge not put for us into relation with our sense for conduct, our sense for beauty, and touched with emotion by being so put; not thus put for us, and therefore, to the majority of mankind, after a certain while, unsatisfying, wearying.

Not to the born naturalist, I admit. But what do we mean by a born naturalist? We mean a man in whom [710 the zeal for observing nature is so uncommonly strong and eminent, that it marks him off from the bulk of mankind. Such a man will pass his life happily in collecting natural knowledge and reasoning upon it, and will ask for nothing, or hardly anything, more. I have heard it said that the sagacious and admirable naturalist whom we lost not very long ago, Mr. Darwin, once owned to a friend [720 that for his part he did not experience the necessity for two things which most men find so necessary to them,—religion and poetry; science and the domestic affections, he thought, were enough. To a born naturalist, I can well understand that this should seem so. So absorbing is his occupation with nature, so strong his love for his occupation, that he goes reasoning upon it, and has little time or inclination for thinking about getting it related to the desire in man for conduct, the desire in man for beauty. He relates it to them for himself as he goes along, so far as he feels the need; and he draws from the domestic affections all the additional solace necessary. But then Darwins are extremely rare. Another great and admirable master of natural [740 knowledge, Faraday, was a Sandemanian. That is to say, he related his knowledge to his instinct for conduct and to his instinct for beauty, by the aid of that respectable Scottish sectary, Robert Sandeman. And so strong, in general, is the demand of religion and poetry to have their share in a man, to associate themselves with his knowing, and to relieve and rejoice it, that probably, [750 for one man amongst us with the disposition to do as Darwin did in this respect, there are at least fifty with the disposition to do as Faraday.

Education lays hold upon us, in fact, by satisfying this demand. Professor Huxley holds up to scorn mediæval education, with its neglect of the knowledge of nature, its poverty even of literary studies, its formal logic devoted to [760 "showing how and why that which the Church said was true must be true." But the great mediæval universities were not brought into being, we may be sure, by the zeal for giving a jejune and contemptible education. Kings have been their nursing fathers, and queens have been their nursing mothers, but not for this. The mediæval universities came into being, because the supposed [770 knowledge, delivered by Scripture and the Church, so deeply engaged men's hearts, by so simply, easily, and powerfully relating itself to their desire for conduct, their desire for beauty. All other knowledge was dominated by this supposed knowledge and was subordinated to it, because of the surpassing strength of the hold which it gained upon the affections of men, by allying itself pro- [780 foundly with their sense for conduct, their sense for beauty.

But now, says Professor Huxley, conceptions of the universe fatal to the notions held by our forefathers have been forced upon us by physical science. Grant to him that they are thus fatal, that the new conceptions must and will soon become current everywhere, and that every one will finally perceive [790] them to be fatal to the beliefs of our forefathers. The need of humane letters, as they are truly called, because they serve the paramount desire in men that good should be for ever present to them,—the need of humane letters to establish a relation between the new conceptions, and our instinct for beauty, our instinct for conduct, is only the more visible. The Middle Age could do without humane [800] letters, as it could do without the study of nature, because its supposed knowledge was made to engage its emotions so powerfully. Grant that the supposed knowledge disappears, its power of being made to engage the emotions will of course disappear along with it,—but the emotions themselves, and their claim to be engaged and satisfied, will remain. Now if we find by experience that humane [810] letters have an undeniable power of engaging the emotions, the importance of humane letters in a man's training becomes not less, but greater, in proportion to the success of modern science in extirpating what it calls "mediæval thinking."

Have humane letters, then, have poetry and eloquence, the power here attributed to them of engaging the emotions, [820] and do they exercise it? And if they have it and exercise it, how do they exercise it, so as to exert an influence upon man's sense for conduct, his sense for beauty? Finally, even if they both can and do exert an influence upon the senses in question, how are they to relate to them the results,—the modern results,—of natural science? All these questions may be asked. First, have poetry and elo- [830] quence the power of calling out the emotions? The appeal is to experience. Experience shows that for the vast majority of men, for mankind in general, they have the power. Next, do they exercise it? They do. But then, how do they exercise it so as to affect man's sense for conduct, his sense for beauty?

And this is perhaps a case for applying the Preacher's words: "Though a [840] man labor to seek it out, yet he shall not find it, yea, farther, though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it."¹ Why should it be one thing, in its effect upon the emotions, to say, "Patience is a virtue," and quite another thing, in its effect upon the emotions, to say with Homer,

τλητὸν γὰρ Μοῖραι θυμὸν θέσαν ἀνθρώποισιν—²

"for an enduring heart have the des- [850] tinies appointed to the children of men"? Why should it be one thing, in its effect upon the emotions, to say with the philosopher Spinoza, Felicitas in eo consistit quod homo suum esse conservare potest—"Man's happiness consists in his being able to preserve his own essence," and quite another thing, in its effect upon the emotions, to say with the Gospel, "What is a man advantaged, if he gain [860] the whole world, and lose himself, forfeit himself?" How does this difference of effect arise? I cannot tell, and I am not much concerned to know; the important thing is that it does arise, and that we can profit by it. But how, finally, are poetry and eloquence to exercise the power of relating the modern results of natural science to man's instinct for conduct, his instinct for beauty? And here [870] again I answer that I do not know how they will exercise it, but that they can and will exercise it I am sure. I do not mean that modern philosophical poets and modern philosophical moralists are to come and relate for us, in express terms, the results of modern scientific research to our instinct for conduct, our instinct for beauty. But I mean that we shall find, as a matter of experience, if we know [880] the best that has been thought and uttered in the world, we shall find that the art and poetry and eloquence of men who lived, perhaps, long ago, who had the most limited natural knowledge, who had the most erroneous conceptions about many important matters, we shall find that this art, and poetry, and eloquence, have in fact not only the power of refreshing and delighting us, they have also [890]

¹ Ecclesiastes, viii, 17.

² Iliad, xxiv, 40

the power,—such is the strength and worth, in essentials, of their authors' criticism of life,—they have a fortifying, and elevating, and quickening, and suggestive power, capable of wonderfully helping us to relate the results of modern science to our need for conduct, our need for beauty. Homer's conceptions of the physical universe were, I imagine, grotesque; but really, under the shock [900 of hearing from modern science that "the world is not subordinated to man's use, and that man is not the cynosure of things terrestrial," I could, for my own part, desire no better comfort than Homer's line which I quoted just now, τλητὸν γὰρ Μοῖραι θυμὸν θέσαν ἀνθρώποισιν—

"for an enduring heart have the destinies appointed to the children of men"!

And the more that men's minds [910 are cleared, the more that the results of science are frankly accepted, the more that poetry and eloquence come to be received and studied as what in truth they really are,—the criticism of life by gifted men, alive and active with extraordinary power at an unusual number of points;—so much the more will the value of humane letters, and of art also, which is an utterance having a like [920 kind of power with theirs, be felt and acknowledged, and their place in education be secured.

Let us therefore, all of us, avoid indeed as much as possible any invidious comparison between the merits of humane letters, as means of education, and the merits of the natural sciences. But when some President of a Section for Mechanical Science insists on making [930 the comparison, and tells us that "he who in his training has substituted literature and history for natural science has chosen the less useful alternative," let us make answer to him that the student of humane letters only, will, at least, know also the great general conceptions brought in by modern physical science; for science, as Professor Huxley says, forces them upon us all. But the stu- [940 dent of the natural sciences only, will, by our very hypothesis, know nothing of humane letters; not to mention that in setting himself to be perpetually accumulating natural knowledge, he sets himself to do what only specialists have in general the gift for doing genially. And so he will probably be unsatisfied, or at any rate incomplete, and even more incomplete than the student of hu- [950 mane letters only.

I once mentioned in a school-report, how a young man in one of our English training colleges having to paraphrase the passage in Macbeth beginning,

"Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?"

turned this line into, "Can you not wait upon the lunatic?" And I remarked what a curious state of things it would be, if every pupil of our national [960 schools knew, let us say, that the moon is two thousand one hundred and sixty miles in diameter, and thought at the same time that a good paraphrase for

"Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?"

was, "Can you not wait upon the lunatic?" If one is driven to choose, I think I would rather have a young person ignorant about the moon's diameter, but aware that "Can you not wait upon [970 the lunatic?" is bad, than a young person whose education had been such as to manage things the other way. •

Or to go higher than the pupils of our national schools. I have in my mind's eye a member of our British Parliament who comes to travel here in America, who afterwards relates his travels, and who shows a really masterly knowledge of the geology of this great country [980 and of its mining capabilities, but who ends by gravely suggesting that the United States should borrow a prince from our Royal Family, and should make him their king, and should create a House of Lords of great landed proprietors after the pattern of ours; and then America, he thinks, would have her future happily and perfectly secured. Surely, in this case, the President of the Section for [990

Mechanical Science would himself hardly say that our member of Parliament, by concentrating himself upon geology and mineralogy, and so on, and not attending to literature and history, had "chosen the more useful alternative."

If then there is to be separation and option between humane letters on the one hand, and the natural sciences on the other, the great majority of mankind, all who have not exceptional and overpowering aptitudes for the study of nature, would do well, I cannot but think, to choose to be educated in humane letters rather than in the natural sciences. Letters will call out their being at more points, will make them live more.

I said that before I ended I would just touch on the question of classical education, and I will keep my word. Even if literature is to retain a large place in our education, yet Latin and Greek, say the friends of progress, will certainly have to go. Greek is the grand offender in the eyes of these gentlemen. The attackers of the established course of study think that against Greek, at any rate, they have irresistible arguments. Literature may perhaps be needed in education, they say; but why on earth should it be Greek literature? Why not French or German? Nay, "has not an Englishman models in his own literature of every kind of excellence?" As before, it is not on any weak pleadings of my own that I rely for convincing the gainsayers; it is on the constitution of human nature itself, and on the instinct of self-preservation in humanity. The instinct for beauty is set in human nature, as surely as the instinct for knowledge is set there, or the instinct for conduct. If the instinct for beauty is served by Greek literature and art as it is served by no other literature and art, we may trust to the instinct of self-preservation in humanity for keeping Greek as part of our culture. We may trust to it for even making the study of Greek more prevalent than it is now. Greek will come, I hope, some day to be studied more rationally than at present; but it will be increasingly studied as men increasingly feel the need in them for beauty, and how powerfully Greek art and Greek literature can serve this need. Women will again study Greek, as Lady Jane Grey did; I believe that in that chain of forts, with which the fair host of the Amazons are now engirdling our English universities, I find that here in America, in colleges like Smith College in Massachusetts, and Vassar College in the State of New York, and in the happy families of the mixed universities out West, they are studying it already.

Defuit una mihi symmetria prisca,—"The antique symmetry was the one thing wanting to me," said Leonardo da Vinci; and he was an Italian. I will not presume to speak for the Americans, but I am sure that, in the Englishman, the want of this admirable symmetry of the Greeks is a thousand times more great and crying than in any Italian. The results of the want show themselves most glaringly, perhaps, in our architecture, but they show themselves, also, in all our art. Fit details strictly combined, in view of a large general result nobly conceived; that is just the beautiful symmetria prisca of the Greeks, and it is just where we English fail, where all our art fails. Striking ideas we have, and well-executed details we have; but that high symmetry which, with satisfying and delightful effect, combines them, we seldom or never have. The glorious beauty of the Acropolis at Athens did not come from single fine things stuck about on that hill, a statue here, a gateway there;—no, it arose from all things being perfectly combined for a supreme total effect. What must not an Englishman feel about our deficiencies in this respect, as the sense for beauty, whereof this symmetry is an essential element, awakens and strengthens within him! what will not one day be his respect and desire for Greece and its symmetria prisca, when the scales drop from his eyes as he walks the London streets, and he sees such a lesson in meanness as the Strand, for instance, in its true deformity! But here we are coming to our friend Mr. Ruskin's province, and I will not intrude upon it, for he is its very sufficient guardian.

And so we at last find, it seems, we find flowing in favor of the humanities the [1100 natural and necessary stream of things, which seemed against them when we started. The "hairy quadruped furnished with a tail and pointed ears, probably arboreal in his habits," this good fellow carried hidden in his nature, apparently, something destined to develop into a necessity for humane letters. Nay, more; we seem finally to be even led to the further conclusion that our hairy an- [1110 cestor carried in his nature, also, a necessity for Greek.

And therefore, to say the truth, I cannot really think that humane letters are in much actual danger of being thrust out from their leading place in education, in spite of the array of authorities against them at this moment. So long as human nature is what it is, their attractions will remain irresistible. As with Greek, [1120 so with letters generally: they will some day come, we may hope, to be studied more rationally, but they will not lose their place. What will happen will rather be that there will be crowded into education other matters besides, far too many; there will be, perhaps, a period of unsettlement and confusion and false tendency; but letters will not in the end lose their leading place. If they lose [1130 it for a time, they will get it back again. We shall be brought back to them by our wants and aspirations. And a poor humanist may possess his soul in patience, neither strive nor cry, admit the energy and brilliancy of the partisans of physical science, and their present favor with the public, to be far greater than his own, and still have a happy faith that the nature of things works silently on [1140 behalf of the studies which he loves, and that, while we shall all have to acquaint ourselves with the great results reached by modern science, and to give ourselves as much training in its disciplines as we can conveniently carry, yet the majority of men will always require humane letters; and so much the more, as they have the more and the greater results of science to relate [1150 to the need in man for conduct, and to the need in him for beauty.

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY (1825-1895)

ON THE ADVISABLENESS OF IMPROVING NATURAL KNOWLEDGE

This time two hundred years ago—in the beginning of January, 1666—those of our forefathers who inhabited this great and ancient city, took breath between the shocks of two fearful calamities: one not quite past, although its fury had abated; the other to come.

Within a few yards of the very spot on which we are assembled, so the tradition runs, that painful and deadly malady, [10 the plague, appeared in the latter months of 1664; and, though no new visitor, smote the people of England, and especially of her capital, with a violence unknown before, in the course of the following year. The hand of a master has pictured what happened in those dismal months; and in that truest of fictions, The History of the Plague Year, Defoe shows death, with every accom- [20 paniment of pain and terror, stalking through the narrow streets of old London, and changing their busy hum into a silence broken only by the wailing of the mourners of fifty thousand dead; by the woful denunciations and mad prayers of fanatics; and by the madder yells of despairing profligates.

But, about this time, in 1666, the death-rate had sunk to nearly its ordinary [30 amount; a case of plague occurred only here and there, and the richer citizens who had flown from the pest had returned to their dwellings. The remnant of the people began to toil at the accustomed round of duty, or of pleasure; and the stream of city life bid fair to flow back along its old bed, with renewed and uninterrupted vigor.

The newly-kindled hope was deceit- [40 ful. The great plague, indeed, returned no more; but what it had done for the Londoners, the great fire, which broke out in the autumn of 1666, did for London; and, in September of that year, a heap of ashes and the indestructible energy of the people were all that remained of the glory of five-sixths of the city within the walls.

Our forefathers had their own ways [50 of accounting for each of these calamities. They submitted to the plague in humility and in penitence, for they believed it to be the judgment of God. But towards the fire they were furiously indignant, interpreting it as the effect of the malice of man,—as the work of the Republicans, or of the Papists, according as their prepossessions ran in favor of loyalty or of Puritanism. [60

It would, I fancy, have fared but ill with one who, standing where I now stand, in what was then a thickly-peopled and fashionable part of London, should have broached to our ancestors the doctrine which I now propound to you—that all their hypotheses were alike wrong; that the plague was no more, in their sense, Divine judgment, than the fire was the work of any political, or [70 of any religious, sect, but that they were themselves the authors of both plague and fire, and that they must look to themselves to prevent the recurrence of calamities, to all appearance so peculiarly beyond the reach of human control—so evidently the result of the wrath of God, or of the craft and subtlety of an enemy.

And one may picture to one's self how harmoniously the holy cursing of the [80 Puritan of that day would have chimed in with the unholy cursing and the crackling wit of the Rochesters and Sedleys, and with the revilings of the political fanatics, if my imaginary plain dealer had gone on to say that, if the return of such misfortunes were ever rendered impossible, it would not be in virtue of the victory of the faith of Laud, or of that of Milton; and, as little, by the triumph [90 of republicanism, as by that of monarchy. But that the one thing needful for compassing this end was, that the people of England should second the efforts of an insignificant corporation, the establishment of which, a few years before the epoch of the great plague and the great fire, had been as little noticed, as they were conspicuous.

Some twenty years before the out- [100 break of the plague a few calm and thoughtful students banded themselves together for the purpose, as they phrased it, of "improving natural knowledge." The ends they proposed to attain cannot be stated more clearly than in the words of one of the founders of the organisation:—

"Our business was (precluding matters of theology and state affairs) to discourse and consider of philosophical en- [110 quiries, and such as related thereunto:—as Physick, Anatomy, Geometry, Astronomy, Navigation, Staticks, Magneticks, Chymicks, Mechanicks, and Natural Experiments; with the state of these studies and their cultivation at home and abroad. We then discoursed of the circulation of the blood, the valves in the veins, the venæ lacteæ, the lymphatic vessels, the Copernican hypothesis, [120 the nature of comets and new stars, the satellites of Jupiter, the oval shape (as it then appeared) of Saturn, the spots on the sun and its turning on its own axis, the inequalities and selenography of the moon, the several phases of Venus and Mercury, the improvement of telescopes and grinding of glasses for that purpose, the weight of air, the possibility or impossibility of vacuities and nature's [130 abhorrence thereof, the Torricellian experiment in quicksilver, the descent of heavy bodies and the degree of acceleration therein, with divers other things of like nature, some of which were then but new discoveries, and others not so generally known and embraced as now they are; with other things appertaining to what hath been called the New Philosophy, which from the times of Galileo [140 at Florence, and Sir Francis Bacon (Lord Verulam) in England, hath been much cultivated in Italy, France, Germany, and other parts abroad, as well as with us in England."

The learned Dr. Wallis, writing in 1696, narrates in these words what happened half a century before, or about 1645. The associates met at Oxford, in the rooms of Dr. Wilkins, who was destined to [150 become a bishop; and subsequently coming together in London, they attracted the notice of the king. And it is a strange evidence of the taste for knowledge which the most obviously worthless of the Stuarts shared with his father and grandfather, that Charles the Second was not content with saying witty things about his philosophers, but did wise things with regard to them. For he not only be- [160 stowed upon them such attention as he could spare from his poodles and his mistresses, but, being in his usual state of impecuniosity, begged for them of the Duke of Ormond; and, that step being without effect, gave them Chelsea College, a charter, and a mace: crowning his favors in the best way they could be crowned, by burdening them no further with royal patronage or state inter- [170 ference.

Thus it was that the half-dozen young men, studious of the "New Philosophy," who met in one another's lodgings in Oxford or in London, in the middle of the seventeenth century, grew in numerical and in real strength, until, in its latter part, the "Royal Society for the Improvement of Natural Knowledge" had already become famous, and had acquired a [180 claim upon the veneration of Englishmen, which it has ever since retained, as the principal focus of scientific activity in our islands, and the chief champion of the cause it was formed to support.

It was by the aid of the Royal Society that Newton published his Principia. If all the books in the world, except the Philosophical Transactions, were destroyed, it is safe to say that the founda- [190 tions of physical science would remain unshaken, and that the vast intellectual progress of the last two centuries would be largely, though incompletely, recorded. Nor have any signs of halting or of decrepitude manifested themselves in our own times. As in Dr. Wallis's days, so in these, "our business is, precluding theology and state affairs, to discourse and consider of philosophical en- [200 quiries." But our "Mathematick" is one which Newton would have to go to school to learn; our "Statics, Mechanicks, Magneticks, Chymicks, and Natural Experiments" constitute a mass of physical and chemical knowledge, a glimpse at which would compensate Galileo for the doings of a score of inquisitorial cardinals, our "Physick" and "Anatomy" have embraced such [210 infinite varieties of being, have laid open such new worlds in time and space, have grappled, not unsuccessfully, with such complex problems, that the eyes of Vesalius and of Harvey might be dazzled by the sight of the tree that has grown out of their grain of mustard seed.

The fact is perhaps rather too much, than too little, forced upon one's notice, nowadays, that all this marvellous [220 intellectual growth has a no less wonderful expression in practical life; and that, in this respect, if in no other, the movement symbolized by the progress of the Royal Society stands without a parallel in the history of mankind.

A series of volumes as bulky as the Transactions of the Royal Society might possibly be filled with the subtle speculations of the Schoolmen; not improb- [230 ably the obtaining a mastery over the products of mediæval thought might necessitate an even greater expenditure of time and of energy than the acquirement of the "New Philosophy"; but though such work engrossed the best intellects of Europe for a longer time than has elapsed since the great fire, its effects were "writ in water," so far as our social state is concerned. [240

On the other hand, if the noble first President of the Royal Society could revisit the upper air and once more gladden his eyes with a sight of the familiar mace, he would find himself in the midst of a material civilization more different from that of his day, than that of the seventeenth was from that of the first century. And if Lord Brouncker's native sagacity had not deserted his ghost, he [250 would need no long reflection to discover that all these great ships, these railways, these telegraphs, these factories, these printing-presses, without which the whole fabric of modern English society would collapse into a mass of stagnant and starving pauperism,—that all these pillars of our State are but the ripples and the bubbles upon the surface of that great spiritual stream, the springs of which [260 only, he and his fellows were privileged to see; and seeing, to recognize as that which it behoved them above all things to keep pure and undefiled.

It may not be too great a flight of imagination to conceive our noble revenant not forgetful of the great troubles of his own day, and anxious to know how often London had been burned down since his time, and how often the plague had [270 carried off its thousands. He would have to learn that, although London contains tenfold the inflammable matter that it did in 1666, though, not content with filling our rooms with woodwork and light draperies, we must needs lead inflammable and explosive gases into every corner of our streets and houses, we never allow even a street to burn down. And if he asked how this had come about, [280 we should have to explain that the improvement of natural knowledge has furnished us with dozens of machines for throwing water upon fires, any one of which would have furnished the ingenious Mr. Hooke, the first "curator and experimenter" of the Royal Society, with ample materials for discourse before half a dozen meetings of that body; and that, to say truth, except for the progress [290 of natural knowledge, we should not have been able to make even the tools by which these machines are constructed. And, further, it would be necessary to add, that although severe fires sometimes occur and inflict great damage, the loss is very generally compensated by societies, the operations of which have been rendered possible only by the progress of natural knowledge in the direction of [300 mathematics, and the accumulation of wealth in virtue of other natural knowledge.

But the plague? My Lord Brouncker's observation would not, I fear, lead him to think that Englishmen of the nineteenth century are purer in life, or more fervent in religious faith, than the generation which could produce a Boyle, an Evelyn, and a Milton. He might [310 find the mud of society at the bottom, instead of at the top, but I fear that the sum total would be as deserving of swift judgment as at the time of the Restoration. And it would be our duty to explain once more, and this time not without shame, that we have no reason to believe that it is the improvement of our faith, nor that of our morals, which keeps the plague from our city; but, [320 again, that it is the improvement of our natural knowledge.

We have learned that pestilences will only take up their abode among those who have prepared unswept and ungarnished residences for them. Their cities must have narrow, unwatered streets, foul with accumulated garbage. Their houses must be ill-drained, ill-lighted, ill-ventilated. Their subjects must [330 be ill-washed, ill-fed, ill-clothed. The London of 1655 was such a city. The cities of the East, where plague has an enduring dwelling, are such cities. We, in later times, have learned somewhat of Nature, and partly obey her. Because of this partial improvement of our natural knowledge and of that fractional obedience, we have no plague; because that knowledge is still very imperfect [340 and that obedience yet incomplete, typhoid is our companion and cholera our visitor. But it is not presumptuous to express the belief that, when our knowledge is more complete and our obedience the expression of our knowledge, London will count her centuries of freedom from typhoid and cholera, as she now gratefully reckons her two hundred years of ignorance of that plague which swooped [350 upon her thrice in the first half of the seventeenth century.

Surely, there is nothing in these explanations which is not fully borne out by the facts? Surely, the principles involved in them are now admitted among the fixed beliefs of all thinking men? Surely, it is true that our countrymen are less subject to fire, famine, pestilence, and all the evils which result from a [360 want of command over and due anticipation of the course of Nature, than were the countrymen of Milton; and health, wealth, and well-being are more abundant with us than with them? But no less certainly is the difference due to the improvement of our knowledge of Nature, and the extent to which that improved knowledge has been incorporated with the household words of [370 men, and has supplied the springs of their daily actions.

Granting for a moment, then, the truth of that which the depreciators of natural knowledge are so fond of urging, that its improvement can only add to the resources of our material civilization; admitting it to be possible that the founders of the Royal Society themselves looked for no other reward than this, I cannot confess that I was guilty of exaggeration when I hinted, that to him who had the gift of distinguishing between prominent events and important events, the origin of a combined effort on the part of mankind to improve natural knowledge might have loomed larger than the Plague and have outshone the glare of the Fire; as a something fraught with a wealth of beneficence to mankind, in comparison with which the damage done by those ghastly evils would shrink into insignificance.

It is very certain that for every victim slain by the plague, hundreds of mankind exist and find a fair share of happiness in the world by the aid of the spinning jenny. And the great fire, at its worst, could not have burned the supply of coal, the daily working of which, in the bowels of the earth, made possible by the steam pump, gives rise to an amount of wealth to which the millions lost in old London are but as an old song.

But spinning jenny and steam pump are, after all, but toys, possessing an accidental value; and natural knowledge creates multitudes of more subtle contrivances, the praises of which do not happen to be sung because they are not directly convertible into instruments for creating wealth. When I contemplate natural knowledge squandering such gifts among men, the only appropriate comparison I can find for her is, to liken her to such a peasant woman as one sees in the Alps, striding ever upward, heavily burdened, and with mind bent only on her home; but yet without effort and without thought, knitting for her children. Now stockings are good and comfortable things, and the children will undoubtedly be much the better for them; but surely it would be short-sighted, to say the least of it, to depreciate this toiling mother as a mere stocking-machine—a mere provider of physical comforts?

However, there are blind leaders of the blind, and not a few of them, who take this view of natural knowledge, and can see nothing in the bountiful mother of humanity but a sort of comfort-grinding machine. According to them, the improvement of natural knowledge always has been, and always must be, synonymous with no more than the improvement of the material resources and the increase of the gratifications of men.

Natural knowledge is, in their eyes, no real mother of mankind, bringing them up with kindness, and, if need be, with sternness, in the way they should go, and instructing them in all things needful for their welfare; but a sort of fairy god-mother, ready to furnish her pets with shoes of swiftness, swords of sharpness, and omnipotent Aladdin's lamps, so that they may have telegraphs to Saturn, and see the other side of the moon, and thank God they are better than their benighted ancestors.

If this talk were true, I, for one, should not greatly care to toil in the service of natural knowledge. I think I would just as soon be quietly chipping my own flint axe, after the manner of my forefathers a few thousand years back, as be troubled with the endless malady of thought which now infests us all, for such reward. But I venture to say that such views are contrary alike to reason and to fact. Those who discourse in such fashion seem to me to be so intent upon trying to see what is above Nature, or what is behind her, that they are blind to what stares them in the face in her.

I should not venture to speak thus strongly if my justification were not to be found in the simplest and most obvious facts,—if it needed more than an appeal to the most notorious truths to justify my assertion, that the improvement of natural knowledge, whatever direction it has taken, and however low the aims of those who may have commenced it—has not only conferred practical benefits on men, but, in so doing, has effected a revolution in their conceptions of the universe and of themselves, and has profoundly altered their modes of thinking and [480 their views of right and wrong. I say that natural knowledge, seeking to satisfy natural wants, has found the ideas which can alone still spiritual cravings. I say that natural knowledge, in desiring to ascertain the laws of comfort, has been driven to discover those of conduct, and to lay the foundations of a new morality.

Let us take these points separately; [490 and first, what great ideas has natural knowledge introduced into men's minds?

I cannot but think that the foundations of all natural knowledge were laid when the reason of man first came face to face with the facts of Nature; when the savage first learned that the fingers of one hand are fewer than those of both; that it is shorter to cross a stream than to head it, that a stone stops where it is unless [500 it be moved, and that it drops from the hand which lets it go; that light and heat come and go with the sun; that sticks burn away in a fire; that plants and animals grow and die; that if he struck his fellow savage a blow he would make him angry, and perhaps get a blow in return, while if he offered him a fruit he would please him, and perhaps receive a fish in exchange. When men had acquired this much [510 knowledge, the outlines, rude though they were, of mathematics, of physics, of chemistry, of biology, of moral, economical, and political science, were sketched. Nor did the germ of religion fail when science began to bud. Listen to words which, though new, are yet three thousand years old:—

“ . . . When in heaven the stars about the moon
Look beautiful, when all the winds are laid, [520
And every height comes out, and jutting peak
And valley, and the immeasurable heavens
Break open to their highest, and all the stars Shine, and the shepherd gladdens in his heart.”¹

If the half savage Greek could share our feelings thus far, it is irrational to doubt that he went further, to find as we do, that upon that brief gladness there follows a certain sorrow,—the little light of awakened human intelligence shines so mere [530 a spark amidst the abyss of the unknown and unknowable; seems so insufficient to do more than illuminate the imperfections that cannot be remedied, the aspirations that cannot be realized, of man's own nature. But in this sadness, this consciousness of the limitation of man, this sense of an open secret which he cannot penetrate, lies the essence of all religion; and the attempt to embody it in the forms fur- [540 nished by the intellect is the origin of the higher theologies.

¹ Need it be said that this is Tennyson's English for Homer's Greek? [Huxley]

Thus it seems impossible to imagine but that the foundations of all knowledge—secular or sacred—were laid when intelligence dawned, though the superstructure remained for long ages so slight and feeble as to be compatible with the existence of almost any general view respecting the mode of governance of the universe. [550 No doubt, from the first, there were certain phenomena which, to the rudest mind, presented a constancy of occurrence, and suggested that a fixed order ruled, at any rate, among them. I doubt if the grossest of Fetish worshippers ever imagined that a stone must have a god within it to make it fall, or that a fruit had a god within it to make it taste sweet. With regard to such matters as these, it is hardly question- [560 able that mankind from the first took strictly positive and scientific views.

But, with respect to all the less familiar occurrences which present themselves, uncultured man, no doubt, has always taken himself as the standard of comparison, as the centre and measure of the world, nor could he well avoid doing so. And finding that his apparently uncaused will has a powerful effect in giving rise to many [570 occurrences, he naturally enough ascribed other and greater events to other and greater volitions, and came to look upon the world and all that therein is, as the product of the volitions of persons like himself, but stronger, and capable of being appeased or angered, as he himself might be soothed or irritated. Through such conceptions of the plan and working of the universe all mankind have passed, [580 or are passing. And we may now consider what has been the effect of the improvement of natural knowledge on the views of men who have reached this stage, and who have begun to cultivate natural knowledge with no desire but that of "increasing God's honor and bettering man's estate."

For example, what could seem wiser, from a mere material point of view, more innocent, from a theological one, to [590] an ancient people, than that they should learn the exact succession of the seasons, as warnings for their husbandmen; or the position of the stars, as guides to their rude navigators? But what has grown out of this search for natural knowledge of so merely useful a character? You all know the reply. Astronomy,—which of all sciences has filled men's minds with general ideas of a character most foreign [600] to their daily experience, and has, more than any other, rendered it impossible for them to accept the beliefs of their fathers. Astronomy,—which tells them that this so vast and seemingly solid earth is but an atom among atoms, whirling, no man knows whither, through illimitable space; which demonstrates that what we call the peaceful heaven above us, is but that space, filled by an infinitely subtle matter [610] whose particles are seething and surging, like the waves of an angry sea; which opens up to us infinite regions where nothing is known, or ever seems to have been known, but matter and force, operating according to rigid rules; which leads us to contemplate phenomena the very nature of which demonstrates that they must have had a beginning, and that they must have an end, but the very nature of which also [620] proves that the beginning was, to our conceptions of time, infinitely remote, and that the end is as immeasurably distant.

But it is not alone those who pursue astronomy who ask for bread and receive ideas. What more harmless than the attempt to lift and distribute water by pumping it; what more absolutely and grossly utilitarian? Yet out of pumps grew the discussions about Nature's [630] abhorrence of a vacuum; and then it was discovered that Nature does not abhor a vacuum, but that air has weight; and that notion paved the way for the doctrine that all matter has weight, and that the force which produces weight is co-extensive with the universe,—in short, to the theory of universal gravitation and endless force. While learning how to handle gases led to the discovery of [640] oxygen, and to modern chemistry, and to the notion of the indestructibility of matter.

Again, what simpler, or more absolutely practical, than the attempt to keep the axle of a wheel from heating when the wheel turns around very fast? How useful for carters and gig drivers to know something about this; and how good were it, if any ingenious person would find out [650] the cause of such phenomena, and thence educe a general remedy for them. Such an ingenious person was Count Rumford; and he and his successors have landed us in the theory of the persistence, or indestructibility, of force. And in the infinitely minute, as in the infinitely great, the seekers after natural knowledge of the kinds called physical and chemical, have everywhere found a definite order and [660] succession of events which seem never to be infringed.

And how has it fared with "Physick" and Anatomy? Have the anatomist, the physiologist, or the physician, whose business it has been to devote themselves assiduously to that eminently practical and direct end, the alleviation of the sufferings of mankind,—have they been able to confine their vision more ab- [670] solutely to the strictly useful? I fear they are the worst offenders of all. For if the astronomer has set before us the infinite magnitude of space, and the practical eternity of the duration of the universe; if the physical and chemical philosophers have demonstrated the infinite minuteness of its constituent parts, and the practical eternity of matter and of force; and if both have alike pro- [680] claimed the universality of a definite and predicable order and succession of events, the workers in biology have not only accepted all these, but have added more startling theses of their own. For, as the astronomers discover in the earth no centre of the universe, but an eccentric speck, so the naturalists find man to be no centre of the living world, but one amidst endless modifications of life; [690 and as the astronomer observes the mark of practically endless time set upon the arrangements of the solar system, so the student of life finds the records of ancient forms of existence peopling the world for ages, which, in relation to human experience, are infinite.

Furthermore, the physiologist finds life to be as dependent for its manifestation on particular molecular arrangements as [700 any physical or chemical phenomenon; and wherever he extends his researches, fixed order and unchanging causation reveal themselves, as plainly as in the rest of Nature.

Nor can I find that any other fate has awaited the germ of Religion. Arising, like all other kinds of knowledge, out of the action and interaction of man's mind, with that which is not man's mind, it has taken the intellectual coverings of [710 Fetishism or Polytheism; of Theism or Atheism; of Superstition or Rationalism. With these, and their relative merits and demerits, I have nothing to do; but this it is needful for my purpose to say, that if the religion of the present differs from that of the past, it is because the theology of the present has become more scientific than that of the past; because it has not only renounced idols of wood and [720 idols of stone, but begins to see the necessity of breaking in pieces the idols built up of books and traditions and finespun ecclesiastical cobwebs: and of cherishing the noblest and most human of man's emotions, by worship "for the most part of the silent sort" at the altar of the Unknown.

Such are a few of the new conceptions implanted in our minds by the improvement of natural knowledge. Men [730 have acquired the ideas of the practically infinite extent of the universe and of its practical eternity; they are familiar with the conception that our earth is but an infinitesimal fragment of that part of the universe which can be seen; and that, nevertheless, its duration is, as compared with our standards of time, infinite. They have further acquired the idea that man is but one of innumerable forms [740 of life now existing on the globe, and that the present existences are but the last of an immeasurable series of predecessors. Moreover, every step they have made in natural knowledge has tended to extend and rivet in their minds the conception of a definite order of the universe—which is embodied in what are called, by an unhappy metaphor, the laws of Nature—and to narrow the range and loosen the [750 force of men's belief in spontaneity, or in changes other than such as arise out of that definite order itself.

Whether these ideas are well or ill founded is not the question. No one can deny that they exist, and have been the inevitable outgrowth of the improvement of natural knowledge. And if so, it cannot be doubted that they are changing the form of men's most cherished and [760 most important convictions.

And as regards the second point—the extent to which the improvement of natural knowledge has remodelled and altered what may be termed the intellectual ethics of men,—what are among the moral convictions most fondly held by barbarous and semi-barbarous people?

They are the convictions that authority is the soundest basis of belief; that [770 merit attaches to a readiness to believe; that the doubting disposition is a bad one, and scepticism a sin; that when good authority has pronounced what is to be believed, and faith has accepted it, reason has no further duty. There are many excellent persons who yet hold by these principles, and it is not my present business, or intention, to discuss their views. All I wish to bring clearly before your [780 minds is the unquestionable fact, that the improvement of natural knowledge is effected by methods which directly give the lie to all these convictions, and assume the exact reverse of each to be true.

The improver of natural knowledge absolutely refuses to acknowledge authority, as such. For him, scepticism is the highest of duties; blind faith the one unpardonable sin. And it cannot be [790 otherwise, for every great advance in natural knowledge has involved the absolute rejection of authority, the cherishing of the keenest scepticism, the annihilation of the spirit of blind faith; and the most ardent votary of science holds his firmest convictions, not because the men he most venerates hold them; not because their verity is testified by portents and wonders; but because his experience [800 teaches him that whenever he chooses to bring these convictions into contact with their primary source, Nature—whenever he thinks fit to test them by appealing to experiment and to observation—Nature will confirm them. The man of science has learned to believe in justification, not by faith, but by verification.

Thus, without for a moment pretending to despise the practical results of [810 improvement of natural knowledge, and its beneficial influence on material civilization, it must, I think, be admitted that the great ideas, some of which I have indicated, and the ethical spirit which I have endeavored to sketch, in the few moments which remained at my disposal, constitute the real and permanent significance of natural knowledge.

If these ideas be destined, as I believe [820 they are, to be more and more firmly established as the world grows older; if that spirit be fated, as I believe it is, to extend itself into all departments of human thought, and to become co-extensive with the range of knowledge; if, as our race approaches its maturity, it discovers, as I believe it will, that there is but one kind of knowledge and but one method of acquiring it; then we, who [830 are still children, may justly feel it our highest duty to recognize the advisableness of improving natural knowledge, and so to aid ourselves and our successors in our course towards the noble goal which lies before mankind.

JOHN HENRY, CARDINAL NEWMAN
(1801-1890)

THE IDEA OF A UNIVERSITY

DISCOURSE VI

KNOWLEDGE VIEWED IN RELATION TO LEARNING

It were well if the English, like the Greek language, possessed some definite word to express, simply and generally, intellectual proficiency or perfection, such as "health," as used with reference to the animal frame, and "virtue," with reference to our moral nature. I am not able to find such a term;—talent, ability, genius, belong distinctly to the raw material, which is the subject-matter, [10 not to that excellence which is the result of exercise and training. When we turn, indeed, to the particular kinds of intellectual perfection, words are forthcoming for our purpose, as, for instance, judgment, taste, and skill; yet even these belong, for the most part, to powers or habits bearing upon practice or upon art, and not to any perfect condition of the intellect, considered in itself. Wisdom, [20 again, is certainly a more comprehensive word than any other, but it has a direct relation to conduct, and to human life. Knowledge, indeed, and science, express purely intellectual ideas, but still not a state or quality of the intellect; for knowledge, in its ordinary sense, is but one of its circumstances, denoting a possession or a habit; and science has been appropriated to the subject-matter of the [30 intellect, instead of belonging in English, as it ought to do, to the intellect itself. The consequence is that, on an occasion like this, many words are necessary, in order, first, to bring out and convey what surely is no difficult idea in itself,—that of the cultivation of the intellect as an end; next, in order to recommend what surely is no unreasonable object; and lastly, to describe and make the mind realize [40 the particular perfection in which that object consists. Every one knows practically what are the constituents of health or of virtue; and every one recognizes health and virtue as ends to be pursued; it is otherwise with intellectual excellence, and this must be my excuse, if I seem to anyone to be bestowing a good deal of labor on a preliminary matter.

In default of a recognized term, I [50 have called the perfection or virtue of the intellect by the name of philosophy, philosophical knowledge, enlargement of mind, or illumination; terms which are not uncommonly given to it by writers of this day: but, whatever name we bestow on it, it is, I believe, as a matter of history, the business of a university to make this intellectual culture its direct scope, or to employ itself in the [60 education of the intellect,—just as the work of a hospital lies in healing the sick or wounded, of a riding or fencing school, or of a gymnasium, in exercising the limbs, of an almshouse, in aiding and solacing the old, of an orphanage, in protecting innocence, of a penitentiary, in restoring the guilty. I say, a university, taken in its bare idea, and before we view it as an instrument of the [70 church, has this object and this mission; it contemplates neither moral impression nor mechanical production; it professes to exercise the mind neither in art nor in duty; its function is intellectual culture; here it may leave its scholars, and it has done its work when it has done as much as this. It educates the intellect to reason well in all matters, to reach out towards truth, and to grasp it. [80

This, I said in my foregoing discourse, was the object of a university, viewed in itself, and apart from the Catholic Church, or from the state, or from any other power which may use it; and I illustrated this in various ways. I said that the intellect must have an excellence of its own, for there was nothing which had not its specific good; that the word “educate” would not be used of intellectual cul- [90 ture, as it is used, had not the intellect had an end of its own; that, had it not such an end, there would be no meaning in calling certain intellectual exercises “liberal,” in contrast with “useful,” as is commonly done; that the very notion of a philosophical temper implied it, for it threw us back upon research and system as ends in themselves, distinct from effects and works of any kind; that a [100 philosophical scheme of knowledge, or system of sciences, could not, from the nature of the case, issue in any one definite art or pursuit, as its end; and that, on the other hand, the discovery and contemplation of truth, to which research and systematizing led, were surely sufficient ends, though nothing beyond them were added, and that they had ever been accounted sufficient by mankind. [110

Here then I take up the subject; and, having determined that the cultivation of the intellect is an end distinct and sufficient in itself, and that, so far as words go, it is an enlargement or illumination, I proceed to inquire what this mental breath, or power, or light, or philosophy consists in. A hospital heals a broken limb or cures a fever: what does an institution effect, which professes [120 the health, not of the body, not of the soul, but of the intellect? What is this good, which in former times, as well as our own, has been found worth the notice, the appropriation, of the Catholic Church?

* * * * *

I suppose the prima-facie view which the public at large would take of a university, considering it as a place of education, is nothing more or less than a place for acquiring a great deal of knowl- [130 edge on a great many subjects. Memory is one of the first developed of the mental faculties; a boy's business when he goes to school is to learn, that is, to store up things in his memory. For some years his intellect is little more than an instrument for taking in facts, or a receptacle for storing them; he welcomes them as fast as they come to him; he lives on what is without; he has his eyes ever about [140 him; he has a lively susceptibility of impressions; he imbibes information of every kind; and little does he make his own in a true sense of the word, living rather upon his neighbors all around him. He has opinions, religious, political and literary, and, for a boy, is very positive in them and sure about them; but he gets them from his schoolfellows, or his masters, or his parents, as the case [150 may be. Such as he is in his other relations, such also is he in his school exercises; his mind is observant, sharp, ready, retentive; he is almost passive in the acquisition of knowledge. I say this in no disparagement of the idea of a clever boy. Geography, chronology, history, language, natural history, he heaps up the matter of these studies as treasures for a future day. It is the seven [160 years of plenty with him: he gathers in by handfuls, like the Egyptians, without counting; and though, as time goes on, there is exercise for his argumentative powers in the elements of mathematics, and for his taste in the poets and orators, still, while at school, or at least till quite the last years of his time, he acquires, and little more; and when he is leaving for the university, he is mainly the [170] creature of foreign influences and circumstances, and made up of accidents, homogeneous or not, as the case may be. Moreover, the moral habits, which are a boy's praise, encourage and assist this result; that is, diligence, assiduity, regularity, despatch, persevering application; for these are the direct conditions of acquisition, and naturally lead to it. Acquirements, again, are emphatically [180] producible, and at a moment; they are a something to show, both for master and scholar; an audience, even though ignorant themselves of the subjects of an examination, can comprehend when questions are answered and when they are not. Here again is a reason why mental culture is in the minds of men identified with the acquisition of knowledge.

The same notion possesses the [190] public mind, when it passes on from the thought of a school to that of a university: and with the best of reasons so far as this, that there is no true culture without acquirements, and that philosophy presupposes knowledge. It requires a great deal of reading, or a wide range of information, to warrant us in putting forth our opinions on any serious subject; and without such learning the most ori- [200] ginal mind may be able indeed to dazzle, to amuse, to refute, to perplex, but not to come to any useful result or any trustworthy conclusion. There are indeed persons who profess a different view of the matter, and even act upon it. Every now and then you will find a person of vigorous or fertile mind, who relies upon his own resources, despises all former authors, and gives the world, with [210] the utmost fearlessness, his views upon religion, or history, or any other popular subject. And his works may sell for a while; he may get a name in his day; but this will be all. His readers are sure to find on the long run that his doctrines are mere theories, and not the expression of facts; that they are chaff instead of bread, and then his popularity drops as suddenly as it rose. [220]

Knowledge, then, is the indispensable condition of expansion of mind, and the instrument of attaining to it; this cannot be denied; it is ever to be insisted on; I begin with it as a first principle; however, the very truth of it carries men too far, and confirms to them the notion that it is the whole of the matter. A narrow mind is thought to be that which contains little knowledge; and an enlarged [230] mind, that which holds a great deal; and what seems to put the matter beyond dispute is the fact of the great number of studies which are pursued in a university, by its very profession. Lectures are given on every kind of subject; examinations are held; prizes awarded. There are moral, metaphysical, physical professors; professors of languages, of history, of mathematics, of experimental [240] science. Lists of questions are published, wonderful for their range and depth, variety and difficulty; treatises are written, which carry upon their very face the evidence of extensive reading or multifarious information; what then is wanting for mental culture to a person of large reading and scientific attainments? what is grasp of mind but acquirement? where shall philosophical repose be found, [250] but in the consciousness and enjoyment of large intellectual possessions?

And yet this notion is, I conceive, a mistake, and my present business is to show that it is one, and that the end of a liberal education is not mere knowledge, or knowledge considered in its matter; and I shall best attain my object, by actually setting down some cases, which will be generally granted to be [260] instances of the process of enlightenment or enlargement of mind, and others which are not, and thus, by the comparison, you will be able to judge for yourselves, gentlemen, whether knowledge, that is, acquirement, is after all the real principle of the enlargement, or whether that principle is not rather something beyond it.

For instance, let a person, whose experience has hitherto been confined [270] to the more calm and unpretending scenery of these islands, whether here or in England, go for the first time into parts where physical nature puts on her wilder and more awful forms, whether at home or abroad, as into mountainous districts; or let one, who has ever lived in a quiet village, go for the first time to a great metropolis,—then I suppose he will have a sensation which perhaps he [280 never had before. He has a feeling not in addition or increase of former feelings, but of something different in its nature. He will perhaps be borne forward, and find for a time that he has lost his bearings. He has made a certain progress, and he has a consciousness of mental enlargement; he does not stand where he did, he has a new center, and a range of thoughts to which he was before a [290 stranger.

Again, the view of the heavens which the telescope opens upon us, if allowed to fill and possess the mind, may almost whirl it around and make it dizzy. It brings in a flood of ideas, and is rightly called an intellectual enlargement, whatever is meant by the term.

And so again, the sight of beasts of prey and other foreign animals, their [300 strangeness, the originality (if I may use the term) of their forms and gestures and habits, and their variety and independence of each other, throw us out of ourselves into another creation, and as if under another Creator, if I may so express the temptation which may come on the mind. We seem to have new faculties, or a new exercise for our faculties, by this addition to our knowl- [310 edge; like a prisoner, who, having been accustomed to wear manacles or fetters, suddenly finds his arms and legs free.

Hence physical science generally, in all its departments, as bringing before us the exuberant riches and resources, yet the orderly course, of the universe, elevates and excites the student, and at first, I may say, almost takes away his breath, while in time it exercises a [320 tranquilizing influence upon him.

Again, the study of history is said to enlarge and enlighten the mind; and why? because, as I conceive, it gives it a power of judging of passing events, and of all events, and a conscious superiority over them, which before it did not possess.

And in like manner, what is called seeing the world, entering into active [330 life, going into society, traveling, gaining acquaintance with the various classes of the community, coming into contact with the principles and modes of thought of various parties, interests, and races, their views, aims, habits and manners, their religious creeds and forms of worship,—gaining experience how various yet how alike men are, how low-minded, how bad, how opposed, yet how confident in [340 their opinions; all this exerts a perceptible influence upon the mind, which it is impossible to mistake, be it good or be it bad, and is popularly called its enlargement.

And then again, the first time the mind comes across the arguments and speculations of unbelievers, and feels what a novel light they cast upon what he has hitherto accounted sacred; and still more, if it gives in to them and embraces [350 them, and throws off as so much prejudice what it has hitherto held, and, as if waking from a dream, begins to realize to its imagination that there is now no such thing as law and the transgression of law, that sin is a phantom, and punishment a bugbear, that it is free to sin, free to enjoy the world and the flesh; and still further, when it does enjoy them, and reflects that it may think and hold [360 just what it will, that “the world is all before it where to choose,” and what system to build up as its own private persuasion; when this torrent of wilful thoughts rushes over and inundates it, who will deny that the fruit of the tree of knowledge, or what the mind takes for knowledge, has made it one of the gods, with a sense of expansion and elevation,—an intoxication in reality, [370 still, so far as the subjective state of the mind goes, an illumination? Hence the fanaticism of individuals or nations, who suddenly cast off their Maker. Their eyes are opened; and, like the judgment-stricken king in the tragedy, they see two suns, and a magic universe, out of which they look back upon their former state of faith and innocence with a sort of contempt and indignation, as if they [380 were then but fools, and the dupes of imposture.

On the other hand, religion has its own enlargement, and an enlargement not of tumult, but of peace. It is often remarked of uneducated persons, who have hitherto thought little of the unseen world, that, on their turning to God, looking into themselves, regulating their hearts, reforming their conduct, and [390] meditating on death and judgment, heaven and hell, they seem to become, in point of intellect, different beings from what they were. Before, they took things as they came, and thought no more of one thing than another. But now every event has a meaning, they have their own estimate of whatever happens to them; they are mindful of times and seasons, and compare the present with the [400] past; and the world, no longer dull, monotonous, unprofitable, and hopeless, is a various and complicated drama, with parts and an object, and an awful moral.

Now from these instances, to which many more might be added, it is plain, first, that the communication of knowledge certainly is either a condition or the means of that sense of enlargement, or enlightenment, of which at this [410] day we hear so much in certain quarters: this cannot be denied; but next, it is equally plain, that such communication is not the whole of the process. The enlargement consists, not merely in the passive reception into the mind of a number of ideas hitherto unknown to it, but in the mind's energetic and simultaneous action upon and towards and among those new ideas, which are rushing [420] in upon it. It is the action of a formative power, reducing to order and meaning the matter of our acquirements; it is a making the objects of our knowledge subjectively our own, or, to use a familiar word, it is a digestion of what we receive, into the substance of our previous state of thought; and without this no enlargement is said to follow. There is no enlargement, unless there be a comparison [430] of ideas one with another, as they come before the mind, and a systematizing of them. We feel our minds to be growing and expanding then, when we not only learn, but refer what we learn to what we know already. It is not the mere addition to our knowledge that is the illumination; but the locomotion, the movement onwards, of that mental center, to which both what we know, and what we [440] are learning, the accumulating mass of our acquirements, gravitates. And therefore a truly great intellect, and recognized to be such by the common opinion of mankind, such as the intellect of Aristotle, or of St. Thomas, or of Newton, or of Goethe (I purposely take instances within and without the Catholic pale, when I would speak of the intellect as such), is one which takes a connected view of [450] old and new, past and present, far and near, and which has an insight into the influence of all these one on another; without which there is no whole, and no center. It possesses the knowledge, not only of things, but also of their mutual and true relations; knowledge, not merely considered as acquirement, but as philosophy.

Accordingly, when this analytical, distributive, harmonizing process is [460] away, the mind experiences no enlargement, and is not reckoned as enlightened or comprehensive, whatever it may add to its knowledge. For instance, a great memory, as I have already said, does not make a philosopher, any more than a dictionary can be called a grammar. There are men who embrace in their minds a vast multitude of ideas, but with little sensibility about their real relations [470] towards each other. These may be antiquarians, annalists, naturalists; they may be learned in the law; they may be versed in statistics; they are most useful in their own place; I should shrink from speaking disrespectfully of them; still, there is nothing in such attainments to guarantee the absence of narrowness of mind. If they are nothing more than well-read men, or men of informa- [480] tion, they have not what specially deserves the name of culture of mind, or fulfils the type of liberal education.

In like manner, we sometimes fall in with persons who have seen much of the world, and of the men who, in their day, have played a conspicuous part in it, but who generalize nothing, and have no observation, in the true sense of the word. They abound in information [490 in detail, curious and entertaining, about men and things, and, having lived under the influence of no very clear or settled principles, religious or political, they speak of every one and every thing, only as so many phenomena, which are complete in themselves, and lead to nothing, not discussing them, or teaching any truth, or instructing the hearer, but simply talking. No one would say [500 that these persons, well informed as they are, had attained to any great culture of intellect or to philosophy.

The case is the same still more strikingly where the persons in question are beyond dispute men of inferior powers and deficient education. Perhaps they have been much in foreign countries, and they receive, in a passive, otiose, unfruitful way, the various facts which [510 are forced upon them there. Seafaring men, for example, range from one end of the earth to the other; but the multiplicity of external objects, which they have encountered, forms no symmetrical and consistent picture upon their imagination; they see the tapestry of human life, as it were on the wrong side, and it tells no story. They sleep, and they rise up, and they find themselves, now in [520 Europe, now in Asia; they see visions of great cities and wild regions; they are in the marts of commerce, or amid the islands of the South, they gaze on Pompey's Pillar, or on the Andes; and nothing which meets them carries them forward or backward, to any idea beyond itself. Nothing has a drift or relation; nothing has a history or a promise. Every thing stands by itself, and [530 comes and goes in its turn, like the shifting scenes of a show, which leave the spectator where he was. Perhaps you are near such a man on a particular occasion, and expect him to be shocked or perplexed at something which occurs; but one thing is much the same to him as another, or, if he is perplexed, it is as not knowing what to say, whether it is right to admire, or to ridicule, or to [540 disapprove, while conscious that some expression of opinion is expected from him; for in fact he has no standard of judgment at all, and no landmarks to guide him to a conclusion. Such is mere acquisition, and, I repeat, no one would dream of calling it philosophy.

Instances such as these confirm, by the contrast, the conclusion I have already drawn from those which pre- [550 ceded them. That only is true enlargement of mind which is the power of viewing many things at once as one whole, of referring them severally to their true place in the universal system, of understanding their respective values, and determining their mutual dependence. Thus is that form of universal knowledge, of which I have on a former occasion spoken, set up in the individual in- [560 tellect, and constitutes its perfection. Possessed of this real illumination, the mind never views any part of the extended subject-matter of knowledge without recollecting that it is but a part, or without the associations which spring from this recollection. It makes everything in some sort lead to everything else; it would communicate the image of the whole to every separate por- [570 tion, till that whole becomes in imagination like a spirit, everywhere pervading and penetrating its component parts, and giving them one definite meaning. Just as our bodily organs, when mentioned, recall their function in the body, as the word "creation" suggests the Creator, and "subjects" a sovereign, so, in the mind of the philosopher, as we are abstractedly conceiving of him, [580 the elements of the physical and moral world, sciences, arts, pursuits, ranks, offices, events, opinions, individualities, are all viewed as one, with correlative functions, and as gradually by successive combinations converging, one and all, to the true center.

To have even a portion of this illuminative reason and true philosophy is the highest state to which nature can [590 aspire, in the way of intellect; it puts the mind above the influences of chance and necessity, above anxiety, suspense, unsettlement, and superstition, which is the lot of the many. Men whose minds are possessed with some one object, take exaggerated views of its importance, are feverish in the pursuit of it, make it the measure of things which are utterly foreign to it, and are startled and [600] despond if it happens to fail them. They are ever in alarm or in transport. Those on the other hand who have no object or principle whatever to hold by, lose their way every step they take. They are thrown out, and do not know what to think or say, at every fresh juncture; they have no view of persons, or occurrences, or facts, which come suddenly upon them, and they hang upon [610] the opinion of others for want of internal resources. But the intellect, which has been disciplined to the perfection of its powers, which knows, and thinks while it knows, which has learned to leaven the dense mass of facts and events with the elastic force of reason, such an intellect cannot be partial, cannot be exclusive, cannot be impetuous, cannot be at a loss, cannot but be patient, collected, [620] and majestically calm, because it discerns the end in every beginning, the origin in every end, the law in every interruption, the limit in each delay; because it ever knows where it stands, and how its path lies from one point to another. It is the τερπάγωνος of the Peripatetic, and has the nil admirari of the Stoic,—

“Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere [630] causas,

Atque metus omnes, et inexorabile fatum Subjicit pedibus, strepitumque Acher-ontis avari.”

There are men who, when in difficulties, originate at the moment vast ideas or dazzling projects; who, under the influence of excitement, are able to cast a light, almost as if from inspiration, on a subject or course of action which comes before them; who have a sudden presence of mind equal to any emergency, ris- [640] ing with the occasion, and an undaunted magnanimous bearing, and an energy and keenness which is but made intense by opposition. This is genius, this is heroism; it is the exhibition of a natural gift, which no culture can teach, at which no institution can aim: here, on the contrary, we are concerned not with mere nature, but with training and teaching. That perfection of the intellect, which [650] is the result of education, and its beau ideal, to be imparted to individuals, in their respective measures, is the clear, calm, accurate vision and comprehension of all things, as far as the finite mind can embrace them, each in its place, and with its own characteristics upon it. It is almost prophetic from its knowledge of history; it is almost heart-searching from its knowledge of human nature; it [660] has almost supernatural charity from its freedom from littleness and prejudice; it has almost the repose of faith, because nothing can startle it; it has almost the beauty and harmony of heavenly contemplation, so intimate is it with the eternal order of things and the music of the spheres.

And now, if I may take for granted that the true and adequate end of in- [670] tellectual training and of a university is not learning or acquirement, but rather is thought or reason exercised upon knowledge, or what may be called philosophy, I shall be in a position to explain the various mistakes which at the present day beset the subject of university education.

I say then, if we would improve the intellect, first of all, we must ascend; [680] we cannot gain real knowledge on a level; we must generalize, we must reduce to method, we must have a grasp of principles, and group and shape our acquisitions by means of them. It matters not whether our field of operation be wide or limited; in every case, to command it, is to mount above it. Who has not felt the irritation of mind and impatience created by a deep, rich country, [690] visited for the first time, with winding lanes, and high hedges, and green steepes, and tangled woods, and every thing smiling indeed, but in a maze? The same feeling comes upon us in a strange city, where we have no map of its streets. Hence you hear of practised travelers, when they first come into a place, mounting some high hill or church tower, by way of reconnoitering its neighbor- [700] hood. In like manner, you must be above your knowledge, not under it, or it will oppress you; and the more you have of it, the greater will be the load. The learning of a Salmasius or a Burman, unless you are its master, will be your tyrant. Imperat aut servit; if you can wield it with a strong arm, it is a great weapon; otherwise,

"Vis consili expers [710 Mole ruit sua."

You will be overwhelmed, like Tarpeia, by the heavy wealth which you have exacted from tributary generations.

Instances abound; there are authors who are as pointless as they are inexhaustible in their literary resources. They measure knowledge by bulk, as it lies in the rude block, without symmetry, without design. How many com- [720 mentators are there on the classics, how many on Holy Scripture, from whom we rise up, wondering at the learning which has passed before us, and wondering why it passed! How many writers are there of Ecclesiastical history, such as Mosheim or Du Pin, who, breaking up their subject into details, destroy its life, and defraud us of the whole by their anxiety about the parts! The ser- [730 mons, again, of the English divines in the seventeenth century, how often are they mere repertoires of miscellaneous and officious learning! Of course Catholics also may read without thinking; and in their case, equally as with Protestants, it holds good, that such knowledge is unworthy of the name, knowledge which they have not thought through, and thought out. Such readers are only [740 possessed by their knowledge, not possessed of it; nay, in matter of fact they are often even carried away by it, without any volition of their own. Recollect, the memory can tyrannize, as well as the imagination. Derangement, I believe, has been considered as a loss of control over the sequence of ideas. The mind, once set in motion, is henceforth deprived of the power of initiation, [750 and becomes the victim of a train of associations, one thought suggesting another, in the way of cause and effect, as if by a mechanical process, or some physical necessity. No one, who has had experience of men of studious habits, but must recognize the existence of a parallel phenomenon in the case of those who have over-stimulated the memory. In such persons reason acts almost as [760 feebly and as impotently as in the madman; once fairly started on any subject whatever, they have no power of self-control; they passively endure the succession of impulses which are evolved out of the original exciting cause; they are passed on from one idea to another and go steadily forward, plodding along one line of thought in spite of the amplest concessions of the hearer, or wander- [770 ing from it in endless digression in spite of his remonstrances. Now, if, as is very certain, no one would envy the madman the glow and originality of his conceptions, why must we extol the cultivation of that intellect, which is the prey, not indeed of barren fancies but of barren facts, of random intrusions from without, though not of morbid imaginations from within? And in thus speaking, [780 I am not denying that a strong and ready memory is in itself a real treasure; I am not disparaging a well-stored mind, though it be nothing besides, provided it be sober, any more than I would despise a bookseller's shop:—it is of great value to others, even when not so to the owner. Nor am I banishing, far from it, the possessors of deep and multifarious learning from my ideal University; they adorn [790 it in the eyes of men; I do but say that they constitute no type of the results at which it aims; that it is no great gain to the intellect to have enlarged the memory at the expense of faculties which are indisputably higher.

Nor indeed am I supposing that there is any great danger, at least in this day, of over-education; the danger is on the other side. I will tell you, gentle- [800 men, what has been the practical error of the last twenty years,—not to load the memory of the student with a mass of undigested knowledge, but to force upon him so much that he has rejected all. It has been the error of distracting and enfeebling the mind by an unmeaning profusion of subjects; of implying that a snattering in a dozen branches of study is not shallowness, which it really is, but enlargement, which it is not; of considering an acquaintance with the learned names of things and persons and the possession of clever duodecimos, and attendance on eloquent lecturers, and membership with scientific institutions, and the sight of the experiments of a platform and the specimens of a museum, that all this was not dissipation of mind, but progress. All things now are to be learned at once, not first one thing, then another; not one well, but many badly. Learning is to be without exertion, without attention, without toil; without grounding, without advance, without finishing. There is to be nothing individual in it; and this, forsooth, is the wonder of the age. What the steam engine does with matter, the printing press is to do with the mind; it is to act mechanically, and the population is to be passively, almost unconsciously enlightened, by the mere multiplication and dissemination of volumes. Whether it be the school boy, or the school girl, or the youth at college, or the mechanic in the town, or the politician in the senate, all have been the victims in one way or other of this most preposterous and pernicious of delusions. Wise men have lifted up their voices in vain; and at length, lest their own institutions should be outshone and should disappear in the folly of the hour, they have been obliged, as far as they could with a good conscience, to humor a spirit which they could not withstand, and make temporizing concessions at which they could not but inwardly smile.

It must not be supposed that, because I so speak, therefore I have some sort of fear of the education of the people: on the contrary, the more education they have, the better, so that it is really education. Nor am I an enemy to the cheap publication of scientific and literary works, which is now in vogue: on the contrary, I consider it a great advantage, convenience, and gain; that is, to those to whom education has given a capacity for using them. Further, I consider such innocent recreations as science and literature are able to furnish will be a very fit occupation of the thoughts and the leisure of young persons, and may be made the means of keeping them from bad employments and bad companions. Moreover, as to that superficial acquaintance with chemistry, and geology, and astronomy, and political economy, and modern history, and biography, and other branches of knowledge, which periodical literature and occasional lectures and scientific institutions diffuse through the community, I think it a graceful accomplishment, and a suitable, nay, in this day a necessary accomplishment, in the case of educated men. Nor, lastly, am I disparaging or discouraging the thorough acquisition of any one of these studies, or denying that, as far as it goes, such thorough acquisition is a real education of the mind. All I say is, call things by their right names, and do not confuse together ideas which are essentially different. A thorough knowledge of one science and a superficial acquaintance with many, are not the same thing; a smattering of a hundred things or a memory for detail, is not a philosophical or comprehensive view. Recreations are not education; accomplishments are not education. Do not say, the people must be educated, when, after all, you only mean, amused, refreshed, soothed, put into good spirits and good humor, or kept from vicious excesses. I do not say that such amusements, such occupations of mind, are not a great gain; but they are not education. You may as well call drawing and fencing education as a general knowledge of botany or conchology. Stuffing birds or playing stringed instruments is an elegant pastime, and a resource to the idle, but it is not education; it does not form or cultivate the intellect. Education is a high word; it is the preparation for knowledge, and it is the imparting of knowledge in proportion to that preparation. We require intellectual eyes to know withal, as bodily eyes for sight. We need both objects and organs intellectual; we cannot gain them without setting about it; we cannot gain them in our sleep, or by haphazard. The best telescope does not dispense with eyes; the printing press or the lecture room will assist us greatly, but we must be true to ourselves, we must be parties in the work. A university is, according to the usual designation, [920 an alma mater, knowing her children one by one, not a foundry, or a mint, or a treadmill.

I protest to you, gentlemen, that if I had to choose between a so-called university, which dispensed with residence and tutorial superintendence, and gave its degrees to any person who passed an examination in a wide range of subjects, and a university which had no pro- [930 fessors or examinations at all, but merely brought a number of young men together for three or four years, and then sent them away as the University of Oxford is said to have done some sixty years since, if I were asked which of these two methods was the better discipline of the intellect,—mind, I do not say which is morally the better, for it is plain that compulsory study must be a good [940 and idleness an intolerable mischief,—but if I must determine which of the two courses was the more successful in training, molding, enlarging the mind, which sent out men the more fitted for their secular duties, which produced better public men, men of the world, men whose names would descend to posterity, I have no hesitation in giving the preference to that university which did nothing, [950 over that which exacted of its members an acquaintance with every science under the sun. And, paradox as this may seem, still if results be the test of systems, the influence of the public schools and colleges of England, in the course of the last century, at least will bear out one side of the contrast as I have drawn it. What would come, on the other hand, of the ideal systems of education which [960 have fascinated the imagination of this age, could they ever take effect, and whether they would not produce a generation frivolous, narrow-minded, and resourceless, intellectually considered, is a fair subject for debate; but so far is certain, that the universities and scholastic establishments, to which I refer, and which did little more than bring together first boys and then youths in large [970

numbers, these institutions, with miserable deformities on the side of morals, with a hollow profession of Christianity, and a heathen code of ethics,—I say, at least they can boast of a succession of heroes and statesmen, of literary men and philosophers, of men conspicuous for great natural virtues, for habits of business, for knowledge of life, for practical judgment, for cultivated tastes, for [980 accomplishments, who have made England what it is,—able to subdue the earth, able to domineer over Catholics.

How is this to be explained? I suppose as follows: When a multitude of young men, keen, open-hearted, sympathetic, and observant, as young men are, come together and freely mix with each other, they are sure to learn one from another, even if there be no one to [990 teach them; the conversation of all is a series of lectures to each, and they gain for themselves new ideas and views, fresh matter of thought, and distinct principles for judging and acting, day by day. An infant has to learn the meaning of the information which its senses convey to it, and this seems to be its employment. It fancies all that the eye presents to it to be close to it, till it actually learns [1000 the contrary, and thus by practice does it ascertain the relations and uses of those first elements of knowledge which are necessary for its animal existence. A parallel teaching is necessary for our social being, and it is secured by a large school or a college; and this effect may be fairly called in its own department an enlargement of mind. It is seeing the world on a small field with little trouble; for the [1010 pupils or students come from very different places, and with widely different notions, and there is much to generalize, much to adjust, much to eliminate; there are inter-relations to be defined, and conventional rules to be established, in the process by which the whole assemblage is molded together, and gains one tone and one character.

Let it be clearly understood, I re- [1020 peat it, that I am not taking into account moral or religious considerations; I am but saying that that youthful community will constitute a whole, it will embody a specific idea, it will represent a doctrine, it will administer a code of conduct, and it will furnish principles of thought and action. It will give birth to a living teaching, which in course of time will take the shape of a self-perpetuating [1030 tradition, or a genius loci, as it is sometimes called; which haunts the home where it has been born, and which imbues and forms more or less, and one by one, every individual who is successively brought under its shadow. Thus it is that, independent of direct instruction on the part of superiors, there is a sort of self-education in the academic institutions of protestant England; a characteristic [1040 tone of thought, a recognized standard of judgment is found in them, which as developed in the individual who is submitted to it, becomes a twofold source of strength to him, both from the distinct stamp it impresses on his mind, and from the bond of union which it creates between him and others,—effects which are shared by the authorities of the place, for they themselves have [1050 been educated in it, and at all times are exposed to the influence of its ethical atmosphere. Here then is a real teaching, whatever be its standards and principles, true or false: and it at least tends towards cultivation of the intellect; it at least recognizes that knowledge is something more than a sort of passive reception of scraps and details; it is a something, and it does a something, which never will [1060 issue from the most strenuous efforts of a set of teachers, with no mutual sympathies and no intercommunion, of a set of examiners with no opinions which they dare profess, and with no common principles, who are teaching or questioning a set of youths who do not know them, and do not know each other, on a large number of subjects, different in kind, and connected by no wide philosophy, [1070 three times a week, or three times a year, or once in three years, in chill lecture rooms or on a pompous anniversary.

Nay, self-education in any shape, in the most restricted sense, is preferable to a system of teaching which, professing so much, really does so little for the mind. Shut your college gates against the votary of knowledge, throw him back upon the searchings and the efforts [1080 of his own mind; he will gain by being spared an entrance into your babel. Few indeed there are who can dispense with the stimulus and support of instructors, or will do anything at all, if left to themselves. And fewer still (though such great minds are to be found,) who will not, from such unassisted attempts, contract a self-reliance and a self-esteem, which are not only moral evils, but [1090 serious hindrances to the attainment of truth. And next to none, perhaps, or none, who will not be reminded from time to time of the disadvantage under which they lie, by their imperfect grounding, by the breaks, deficiencies, and irregularities of their knowledge, by the eccentricity of opinion and the confusion of principle which they exhibit. They will be too often ignorant of what every [1100 one knows and takes for granted, of that multitude of small truths which fall upon the mind like dust, impalpable and ever accumulating; they may be unable to converse, they may argue perversely, they may pride themselves on their worst paradoxes or their grossest truisms, they may be full of their own mode of viewing things, unwilling to be put out of their way, slow to enter into the minds [1110 of others;—but, with these and whatever other liabilities upon their heads, they are likely to have more thought, more mind, more philosophy, more true enlargement, than those earnest but ill-used persons, who are forced to load their minds with a score of subjects against an examination, who have too much on their hands to indulge themselves in thinking or investigation, who devour [1120 premise and conclusion together with indiscriminate greediness, who hold whole sciences on faith, and commit demonstrations to memory, and who too often, as might be expected, when their period of education is passed, throw up all they have learned in disgust, having gained nothing really by their anxious labors, except perhaps the habit of application.

Yet such is the better specimen of [1130 the fruit of that ambitious system which has of late years been making way among us; for its result on ordinary minds, and on the common run of students, is less satisfactory still; they leave their place of education simply dissipated and relaxed by the multiplicity of subjects which they have never really mastered, and so shallow as not even to know their shallowness. How much better, I [1140 say, is it for the active and thoughtful intellect, where such is to be found, to eschew the college and the university altogether, than to submit to a drudgery so ignoble, a mockery so contumelious! How much more profitable for the independent mind, after the mere rudiments of education, to range through a library at random, taking down books as they meet him, and pursuing the [1150 trains of thought which his mother wit suggests! How much healthier to wander into the fields, and there with the exiled prince to find "tongues in the trees, books in the running brooks"! How much more genuine an education is that of the poor boy in the poem—a poem, whether in conception or in execution, one of the most touching in our language—who, not in the wide world, but ranging day by day [1160 around his widowed mother's home, "a dexterous gleaner" in a narrow field, and with only such slender outfit

"As the village school and books a few Supplied," contrived from the beach, and the quay, and the fisher's boat, and the inn's fire-side, and the tradesman's shop, and the shepherd's walk, and the smuggler's hut, and the mossy moor, and the scream- [1170 ing gulls, and the restless waves, to fashion for himself a philosophy and a poetry of his own!

But in a large subject, I am exceeding my necessary limits. Gentlemen, I must conclude abruptly; and postpone any summing up of my argument, should that be necessary, to another day.

From the APOLOGIA PRO VITA SUA

KINGSLEY AND NEWMAN

Mr. Kingsley begins then by exclaiming,—“O the chicanery, the wholesale fraud, the vile hypocrisy, the conscience-killing tyranny of Rome! We have not far to seek for an evidence of it! There's Father Newman, to wit: one living specimen is worth a hundred dead ones. He, a priest, writing of priests, tells us that lying is never any harm.”

I interpose: “You are taking a most [10 extraordinary liberty with my name. If I have said this, tell me when and where.”

Mr. Kingsley replies: “You said it, Reverend Sir, in a sermon which you preached, when a Protestant, as Vicar of St. Mary's, and published in 1844; and I could read you a very salutary lecture on the effects which that sermon had at the time on my own opinion of you.” [20

I make answer: “Oh Not, it seems, as a priest speaking of priests; but let us have the passage.”

Mr. Kingsley relaxes: “Do you know, I like your tone. From your tone, I rejoice, greatly rejoice, to be able to believe that you did not mean what you said.”

I rejoin: “Mean it! I maintain I never said it, whether as a Protestant or as a Catholic.” [30

Mr. Kingsley replies: “I waive that point.”

I object: “Is it possible? What? waive the main question! I either said it or I didn't. You have made a monstrous charge against me: direct, distinct, public. You are bound to prove it as directly, as distinctly, as publicly;—or to own you can't!”

“Well,” says Mr. Kingsley, “if you [40 are quite sure you did not say it, I'll take your word for it; I really will.”

My word! I am dumb. Somehow I thought that it was my word that happened to be on trial. The word of a Professor of lying, that he does not lie!

But Mr. Kingsley reassures me: “We are both gentlemen,” he says: “I have done as much as one English gentle- [50 man can expect from another.”

I begin to see: he thought me a gentleman at the very time that he said I taught lying on system. After all, it is not I, but Mr. Kingsley who did not mean what he said.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI
(1828-1882)

THE BLESSED DAMOZEL

The blessed damozel leaned out
From the gold bar of Heaven;
Her eyes were deeper than the depth
Of waters stilled at even;
She had three lilies in her hand, 5
And the stars in her hair were seven.

Her robe, ungirt from clasp to hem,
No wrought flowers did adorn,
But a white rose of Mary's gift,
For service meetly worn; 10
Her hair that lay along her back
Was yellow like ripe corn.

Herseemed she scarce had been a day
One of God's choristers;
The wonder was not yet quite gone 15
From that still look of hers;
Albeit, to them she left, her day
Had counted as ten years.

(To one, it is ten years of years.
. . . Yet now, and in this place, 20
Surely she leaned o'er me—her hair
Fell all about my face. . . .
Nothing; the autumn-fall of leaves.
The whole year sets apace.)

It was the rampart of God's house
That she was standing on;
By God built over the sheer depth
The which is Space begun;
So high, that looking downward thence 30
She scarce could see the sun.

It lies in Heaven, across the flood
Of ether, as a bridge.
Beneath, the tides of day and night
With flame and darkness ridge
The void, as low as where this earth 35
Spins like a fretful midge.

Around her, lovers, newly met
Mid deathless love's acclaims,
Spoke evermore among themselves
Their heart-remembered names; 40
And the souls mounting up to God
Went by her like thin flames.

And still she bowed herself and stooped
Out of the circling charm;
Until her bosom must have made 45
The bar she leaned on warm,
And the lilies lay as if asleep
Along her bended arm.

From the fixed place of Heaven she saw
Time like a pulse shake fierce 50 Through all the world. Her gaze still strove
Within the gulf to pierce
Its path; and now she spoke as when
The stars sang in their spheres.

The sun was gone now; the curled moon 55
Was like a little feather
Fluttering far down the gulf; and now
She spoke through the still weather.
Her voice was like the voice the stars
Had when they sang together. 60

(Ah sweet! Even now, in that bird's
song,
Strove not her accents there,
Fain to be hearkened? When those bells
Possessed the mid-day air,
Strove not her steps to reach my side 65
Down all the echoing stair?)

"I wish that he were come to me,
For he will come," she said.
"Have I not prayed in Heaven?—on earth, 70
Lord, Lord, has he not prayed?
Are not two prayers a perfect strength?
And shall I feel afraid?"

"When round his head the aureole clings,
And he is clothed in white,
I'll take his hand and go with him 75
To the deep wells of light;
As unto a stream we will step down,
And bathe there in God's sight.

"We two will stand beside that shrine,
Occult, withheld, untrod, 80
Whose lamps are stirred continually
With prayer sent up to God;
And see our old prayers, granted, melt
Each like a little cloud.

"We two will lie i' the shadow of 85
That living mystic tree

Within whose secret growth the Dove
Is sometimes felt to be,
While every leaf that His plumes touch
Saith His Name audibly. 90

"And I myself will teach to him,
I myself, lying so,
The songs I sing here; which his voice
Shall pause in, hushed and slow,
And find some knowledge at each pause, 95
Or some new thing to know."

(Alas! We two, we two, thou say'st!
Yea, one wast thou with me
That once of old. But shall God lift
To endless unity 100
The soul whose likeness with thy soul
Was but its love for thee?)

"We two," she said, "will seek the groves
Where the lady Mary is,
With her five handmaidens, whose names
Are five sweet symphonies, 106
Cecily, Gertrude, Magdalen,
Margaret and Rosalys.

"Circlewise sit they, with bound locks
And foreheads garlanded; 110
Into the fine cloth white like flame
Weaving the golden thread,
To fashion the birth-robcs for them
Who are just born, being dead.

"He shall fear, haply, and be dumb: 115
Then will I lay my cheek
To his, and tell about our love,
Not once abashed or weak:
And the dear Mother will approve
My pride, and let me speak. 120

"Herself shall bring us, hand in hand,
To him round whom all souls
Kneel, the clear-ranged unnumbered heads
Bowed with their aureoles:
And angels meeting us shall sing 125
To their citherns and citoles.

"There will I ask of Christ the Lord
Thus much for him and me:—
Only to live as once on earth
With Love,—only to be, 130
As then awhile, for ever now Together, I and he."

She gazed and listened and then said,
Less sad of speech than mild,— 134
"All this is when he comes." She ceased.
The light thrilled towards her, filled
With angels in strong level flight.
Her eyes prayed, and she smiled.

(I saw her smile.) But soon their path
Was vague in distant spheres: 140
And then she cast her arms along
The golden barriers,
And laid her face between her hands,
And wept. (I heard her tears.)

SISTER HELEN

"Why did you melt your waxen man,
Sister Helen?
To-day is the third since you began."
"The time was long, yet the time ran,
Little brother." 5
(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
Three days to-day, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"But if you have done your work aright,
Sister Helen,
You'll let me play, for you said I might."
"Be very still in your play to-night, 11
Little brother."
(*O mother, Mary Mother,
Third night, to-night, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"You said it must melt ere vesper-bell, 15
Sister Helen;
If now it be molten, all is well."
"Even so,—nay, peace! you cannot tell,
Little brother." 20
(*O Mother, Mary Mother, 25
Oh what is this, between Hell and Heaven?*)

"Oh the waxen knave was plump to-day,
Sister Helen;
How like dead folk he has dropped away!"
"Nay now, of the dead what can you say,
Little brother?" 26
(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
What of the dead, between Hell and Heaven?*)

"See, see, the sunken pile of wood,
Sister Helen, 30
Shines through the thinned wax red as
blood!"

"Nay now, when looked you yet on blood,
Little brother?"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
How pale she is, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Now close your eyes, for they're sick and sore," 36

Sister Helen,
And I'll play without the gallery door."

"Aye, let me rest,—I'll lie on the floor,
Little brother." 40

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
What rest to-night between Hell and Heaven?)

"Here high up in the balcony,
Sister Helen,

The moon flies face to face with me." 45

"Aye, look and say whatever you see,
Little brother."

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
What sight to-night, between Hell and Heaven?)

"Outside it's merry in the wind's wake, 50
Sister Helen;

In the shaken trees the chill stars shake."
"Hush, heard you a horse-tread as you
spake,

Little brother?"

(O Mother, Mary Mother, 55
What sound to-night, between Hell and Heaven?)

"I hear a horse-tread, and I see,
Sister Helen,

Three horsemen that ride terribly."
"Little brother, whence come the three, 60
Little brother?"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Whence should they come, between Hell and Heaven?)

"They come by the hill-verge from Boyne Bar,

Sister Helen, 65
And one draws nigh, but two are afar."

"Look, look, do you know them who they
are,

Little brother?"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Who should they be, between Hell and Heaven?) 70

"Oh, it's Keith of Eastholm rides so
fast,

Sister Helen,
For I know the white mane on the blast."

"The hour has come, has come at last,
Little brother!" 75

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Her hour at last, between Hell and Heaven!)

"He has made a sign and called Halloo!
Sister Helen,

And he says that he would speak with
you." 80

"Oh tell him I fear the frozen dew,
Little brother."

(O mother, Mary Mother,
Why laughs she thus, between Hell and Heaven?)

"The wind is loud, but I hear him cry, 85
Sister Helen,

That Keith of Ewern's like to die."
"And he and thou, and thou and I,
Little brother."

(O Mother, Mary Mother, 90
And they and we, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Three days ago, on his marriage-morn,
Sister Helen,

He sickened, and lies since then forlorn."
"For bridegroom's side is the bride a thorn, 95

Little brother?"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Cold bridal cheer, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Three days and nights he has lain abed,
Sister Helen, 100

And he prays in torment to be dead."
"The thing may chance, if he have prayed,
Little brother!"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
If he have prayed, between Hell and Heaven!)

"But he has not ceased to cry to-day, 106
Sister Helen,

That you should take your curse away."
"My prayer was heard,—he need but
pray,

Little brother!" 110

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Shall God not hear, between Hell and Heaven?)

"But he says, till you take back your ban,
Sister Helen,
His soul would pass, yet never can." 115
"Nay then, shall I slay a living man,
Little brother?"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
A living soul, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"But he calls forever on your name, 120
Sister Helen,
And says that he melts before a flame."
"My heart for his pleasure fared the same,
Little brother."

(*O Mother, Mary Mother, 125
Fire at the heart, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"Here's Keith of Westholm riding fast,
Sister Helen,
For I know the white plume on the blast."
"The hour, the sweet hour I forecast, 130
Little brother!"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
Is the hour sweet, between Hell and Heaven?*)

"He stops to speak, and he stills his horse,
Sister Helen; 135
But his words are drowned in the wind's
course."

"Nay hear, nay hear, you must hear per-
force,

Little brother!"
(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
What word now heard, between Hell and Heaven?*) 140

"Oh, he says that Keith of Ewern's cry,
Sister Helen,
Is ever to see you ere he die."

"In all that his soul sees, there am I,
Little brother!" 145
(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
The soul's one sight, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"He sends a ring and a broken coin,
Sister Helen,
And bids you mind the banks of Boyne."
"What else he broke will he ever join, 151
Little brother?"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
No, never joined, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"He yields you these and craves full fain,
Sister Helen, 156

You pardon him in his mortal pain."

"What else he took will he give again,
Little brother?"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother, 160
Not twice to give, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"He calls your name in an agony,
Sister Helen,
That even dead Love must weep to see."
"Hate, born of Love, is blind as he, 165
Little brother!"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
Love turned to hate, between Hell and
Heaven!*)

"Oh it's Keith of Keith now that rides
fast,

Sister Helen, 170
For I know the white hair on the blast."
"The short, short hour will soon be past,
Little brother!"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
Will soon be past, between Hell and Heaven!*) 175

"He looks at me and he tries to speak,
Sister Helen,

But oh! his voice is sad and weak!"
"What here should the mighty Baron seek,
Little brother?" 180

(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
Is this the end, between Hell and Heaven?*)

"Oh his son still cries, if you forgive,
Sister Helen,
The body dies, but the soul shall live." 185

"Fire shall forgive me as I forgive,
Little brother!"
(*O Mother, Mary Mother,
As she forgives, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"Oh he prays you, as his heart would rive, 190

Sister Helen,
To save his dear son's soul alive."
"Fire cannot slay it, it shall thrive,
Little brother!"

(*O Mother, Mary Mother, 195
Alas, alas, between Hell and Heaven!*)

"He cries to you, kneeling in the road,
Sister Helen,
To go with him for the love of God!"

"The way is long to his son's abode, 200
Little brother."

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
The way is long, between Hell and Heaven!)

"A lady's here, by a dark steed brought,
Sister Helen, 205

So darkly clad, I saw her not."

"See her now or never see aught,
Little brother!"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
What more to see, between Hell and Heaven?) 210

"Her hood falls back, and the moon shines
fair,

Sister Helen,
On the Lady of Ewern's golden hair."

"Blest hour of my power and her despair,
Little brother!" 215

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Hour blest and banned, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Pale, pale her cheeks, that in pride did
glow,

Sister Helen,
'Neath the bridal-wreath three days ago."

"One morn for pride and three days for
woe, 221

Little brother!"
(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Three days, three nights, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Her clasped hands stretch from her bending head, 225

Sister Helen;
With the loud wind's wail her sobs are
wed."

"What wedding-strains hath her bridal-
bed,

Little brother?"
(O Mother, Mary Mother, 230

What strain but death's, between Hell and Heaven?)

"She may not speak, she sinks in a swoon,
Sister Helen,—

She lifts her lips and gasps on the moon."

"Oh! might I but hear her soul's blithe
tune, 235

Little brother!"
(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Her ~~woe's~~ dumb cry, between Hell and Heaven!)

"They've caught her to Westholm's saddle-bow,

Sister Helen, 240
And her moonlit hair gleams white in its
flow."

"Let it turn whiter than winter snow,
Little brother!"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Woe-withered gold, between Hell and Heaven!) 245

"O Sister Helen, you heard the bell,
Sister Helen!

More loud than the vesper-chime it fell."

"No vesper-chime, but a dying knell,
Little brother!" 250

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
His dying knell, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Alas! but I fear the heavy sound,
Sister Helen;

Is it in the sky or in the ground?" 255

"Say, have they turned their horses round,
Little brother?"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
What would she more, between Hell and Heaven?)

"They have raised the old man from his knee, 260

Sister Helen,
And they ride in silence hastily."

"More fast the naked soul doth flee,
Little brother!"

(O Mother, Mary Mother, 265
The naked soul, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Flank to flank are the three steeds gone,
Sister Helen,

But the lady's dark steed goes alone."

"And lonely her bridegroom's soul hath flown, 270

Little brother."
(O Mother, Mary Mother,
The lonely ghost, between Hell and Heaven!)

"Oh the wind is sad in the iron chill,
Sister Helen, 275

And weary sad they look by the hill."

"But he and I are sadder still,
Little brother!"

(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Most sad of all, between Hell and Heaven!)

"See, see the wax has dropped from its
place, 281

Sister Helen,

And the flames are winning up apace!"

"Yet here they burn but for a space,

Little brother!" 285

*(O Mother, Mary Mother,
Here for a space, between Hell and Heaven!)*

"Ah! what white thing at the door has crossed,

Sister Helen,

Ah! what is this that sighs in the frost?" 290

"A soul that's lost as mine is lost,

Little brother!"

(O Mother, Mary Mother, Lost, lost, all lost, between Hell and Heaven!)

From THE HOUSE OF LIFE

THE SONNET

A Sonnet is a moment's monument,— Memorial from the Soul's eternity,
To one dead deathless hour. Look that it
be,

Whether for lustral rite or dire portent,
Of its own arduous fulness reverent: 5
Carve it in ivory or in ebony,
As Day or Night may rule; and let Time
see

Its flowering crest impearled and orient.
A Sonnet is a coin: its face reveals
The soul,—its converse, to what Power
't is due:— 10

Whether for tribute to the august appeals
Of Life, or dower in Love's high retinue,
It serve; or, 'mid the dark wharf's cavernous breath,
In Charon's palm it pay the toll to Death.

IV. LOVESIGHT

When do I see thee most, belovèd one?
When in the light the spirits of mine eyes
Before thy face, their altar, solemnize
The worship of that Love through thee made known?

Or when in the dusk hours, (we two alone,)
Close-kissed and eloquent of still replies, 6
Thy twilight-hidden glimmering visage
lies,

And my soul only sees thy soul its own?

O love, my love! if I no more should see Thyself, nor on the earth the shadow of
thee, 10

Nor image of thine eyes in any spring,—
How then should sound upon Life's darkening slope,

The ground-whirl of the perished leaves of Hope,

The wind of Death's imperishable wing?

XIX. SILENT NOON

Your hands lie open in the long fresh grass,—

The finger-points look through like rosy
blooms:

Your eyes smile peace. The pasture gleams and glooms

'Neath billowing skies that scatter and amass.

All round our nest, far as the eye can
pass, 5

Are golden kingcup-fields with silver edge
Where the cow-parsley skirts the hawthorn-hedge.

'T is visible silence, still as the hour-glass.
Deep in the sun-searched growths the dragon-fly

Hangs like a blue thread loosened from the
sky:— 10

So this winged hour is dropped to us from above.

Oh! clasp we to our hearts, for deathless
dower,

This close-companioned inarticulate hour
When twofold silence was the song of love.

XC VII. A SUPERScription

Look in my face; my name is Might-have-
been;

I am also called No-more, Too-late, Fare-
well;

Unto thine ear I hold the dead-sea shell Cast up thy Life's foam-fretted feet between;

Unto thine eyes the glass where that is
seen 5

Which had Life's form and Love's, but by my spell

Is now a shaken shadow intolerable,
Of ultimate things unuttered the frail
screen.

Mark me, how still I am! But should there dart

One moment through thy soul the soft surprise
 Of that winged Peace which lulls the breath of sighs,—
 Then shalt thou see me smile, and turn apart
 Thy visage to mine ambush at thy heart,
 Sleepless with cold commemorative eyes.

WILLIAM MORRIS (1834–1896)

From THE EARTHLY PARADISE

AN APOLOGY

Of Heaven or Hell I have no power to
 sing,
 I cannot ease the burden of your fears,
 Or make quick-coming death a little thing,
 Or bring again the pleasure of past years,
 Nor for my words shall ye forget your
 tears,
 Or hope again for aught that I can say,
 The idle singer of an empty day.

But rather, when aweary of your mirth,
 From full hearts still unsatisfied ye sigh,
 And, feeling kindly unto all the earth,
 Grudge every minute as it passes by,
 Made the more mindful that the sweet days die—
 Remember me a little then, I pray,
 The idle singer of an empty day.

The heavy trouble, the bewildering care
 That weighs us down who live and earn our bread,
 These idle verses have no power to bear;
 So let me sing of names remembered,
 Because they, living not, can ne'er be
 dead,
 Or long time take their memory quite
 away
 From us poor singers of an empty day.

Dreamer of dreams, born out of my due
 time,
 Why should I strive to set the crooked
 straight?
 Let it suffice me that my murmuring
 rhyme
 Beats with light wing against the ivory
 gate,
 Telling a tale not too importunate

To those who in the sleepy region stay,
 Lulled by the singer of an empty day.

Folk say, a wizard to a northern king
 At Christmas-tide such wondrous things did show,
 That through one window men beheld the
 spring,
 And through another saw the summer
 glow,
 And through a third the fruited vines a-
 row,
 While still, unheard, but in its wonted way,
 Piped the drear wind of that December
 day.

So with this Earthly Paradise it is,
 If ye will read aright, and pardon me,
 Who strive to build a shadowy isle of bliss
 Midmost the beating of the steely sea,
 Where tossed about all hearts of men
 must be;
 Whose ravening monsters mighty men shall slay,
 Not the poor singer of an empty day.

PROLOGUE

Forget six counties overhung with
 smoke,
 Forget the snorting steam and piston
 stroke,
 Forget the spreading of the hideous town;
 Think rather of the pack-horse on the
 down,
 And dream of London, small, and white,
 and clean,
 The clear Thames bordered by its gardens
 green;
 Think, that below bridge the green lapping
 waves
 Smite some few keels that bear Levantine staves,
 Cut from the yew wood on the burnt-up
 hill,
 And pointed jars that Greek hands toiled
 to fill,
 And treasured scanty spice from some far
 sea,
 Florence gold cloth, and Ypres napery,
 And cloth of Bruges, and hogsheads of Guienne;
 While nigh the thronged wharf Geoffrey Chaucer's pen

Moves over bills of lading—'mid such times 15
Shall dwell the hollow puppets of my rhymes.

A nameless city in a distant sea,
White as the changing walls of faërie, Thronged with much people clad in ancient guise

I now am fain to set before your eyes; 20
There, leave the clear green water and the quays,

And pass betwixt its marble palaces,
Until ye come unto the chiefest square;
A bubbling conduit is set midmost there,
And round about it now the maidens
throng, 25

With jest and laughter, and sweet broken
song,

Making but light of labor new begun
While in their vessels gleams the morning
sun.

On one side of the square a temple
stands,
Wherein the gods worshipped in ancient lands 30

Still have their altars; a great market-place
Upon two other sides fills all the space,
And thence the busy hum of men comes
forth;

But on the cold side looking toward the north

A pillared council-house may you behold,
Within whose porch are images of gold, 36
Gods of the nations who dwelt anciently
About the borders of the Grecian sea.

Pass now between them, push the brazen
door,

And standing on the polished marble floor
Leave all the noises of the square behind;
Most calm that reverent chamber shall ye find, 42

Silent at first, but for the noise you made
When on the brazen door your hand you
laid

To shut it after you,—but now behold 45
The city rulers on their thrones of gold,
Clad in most fair attire, and in their hands
Long carven silver-banded ebony wands;
Then from the dais drop your eyes and
see

Soldiers and peasants standing reverently
Before those elders, round a little band 51
Who bear such arms as guard the English
land,

But battered, rent, and rusted sore, and
they,

The men themselves, are shrivelled, bent,
and gray;

And as they lean with pain upon their
spears 55

Their brows seem furrowed deep with more than years;

For sorrow dulls their heavy sunken eyes;
Bent are they less with time than miseries.

ATALANTA'S RACE

Atalanta, daughter of King Schoeneus, not willing to lose her virgin's estate, made it a law to all suitors that they should run a race with her in the public place, and if they failed to overcome her should die unrevenged, and thus many brave men perished.
At last came Milanion, the son of Amphi-damus, who, outrunning her with the help of Venus, gained the virgin and wedded
her.

Through thick Arcadian woods a hunter
went,

Following the beasts up, on a fresh spring
day;

But since his horn-tipped bow, but seldom
bent,

Now at the noontide naught had happened
to slay,

Within a vale he called his hounds away, 5
Hearkening the echoes of his lone voice
cling

About the cliffs and through the beech-trees ring.

But when they ended, still awhile he stood,
And but the sweet familiar thrush could
hear,

And all the day-long noises of the wood, 10
And o'er the dry leaves of the vanished
year

His hounds' feet pattering as they drew
anear,

And heavy breathing from their heads low
hung,

To see the mighty cornel bow unstrung.

Then smiling did he turn to leave the
place, 15

But with his first step some new fleeting
thought

A shadow cast across his sunburnt face:

I think the golden net that April brought From some warm world his wavering soul
 had caught;
 For, sunk in vague sweet longing, did he
 go 20
 Betwixt the trees with doubtful steps and
 slow.

Yet howsoever slow he went, at last
 The trees grew sparser, and the wood was
 done;
 Whereon one farewell, backward look he
 cast,
 Then, turning round to see what place was won, 25
 With shaded eyes looked underneath the
 sun,
 And o'er green meads and new-turned furrows brown
 Beheld the gleaming of King Schoeneus'
 town.

So thitherward he turned, and on each
 side
 The folk were busy on the teeming land, 30
 And man and maid from the brown furrows cried,
 Or midst the newly blossomed vines did
 stand,
 And as the rustic weapon pressed the hand
 Thought of the nodding of the well-filled
 ear,
 Or how the knife the heavy bunch should shear. 35

Merry it was: about him sung the birds,
 The spring flowers bloomed along the firm
 dry road,
 The sleek-skinned mothers of the sharp-horned herds
 Now for the barefoot milking-maidens
 lowed;
 While from the freshness of his blue abode,
 Glad his death-bearing arrows to forget, 41
 The broad sun blazed, nor scattered plagues as yet.

Through such fair things unto the gates
 he came,
 And found them open, as though peace
 were there;
 Where through, unquestioned of his race or
 name, 45
 He entered, and along the streets 'gan fare,

Which at the first of folk were wellnigh
 bare;
 But pressing on, and going more hastily,
 Men hurrying too he 'gan at last to see.

Following the last of these, he still pressed
 on, 50
 Until an open space he came unto,
 Where wreaths of fame had oft been lost and won,
 For feats of strength folk there were wont
 to do.
 And now our hunter looked for something
 new,
 Because the whole wide space was bare,
 and stilled 55
 The high seats were, with eager people
 filled.

There with the others to a seat he gat,
 Whence he beheld a broidered canopy,
 'Neath which in fair array King Schoeneus
 sat
 Upon his throne with councillors thereby;
 And underneath his well-wrought seat and
 high, 61
 He saw a golden image of the Sun,
 A silver image of the Fleet-foot One.

A brazen altar stood beneath their feet
 Whereon a thin flame flickered in the wind;
 Nigh this a herald clad in raiment meet 66
 Made ready even now his horn to wind,
 By whom a huge man held a sword, intwined
 With yellow flowers; these stood a little space
 From off the altar, nigh the starting-
 place. 70

And there two runners did the sign abide,
 Foot set to foot,—a young man slim and
 fair,
 Crisp-haired, well-knit, with firm limbs—often tried
 In places where no man his strength may spare;
 Dainty his thin coat was, and on his hair 75
 A golden circlet of renown he wore,
 And in his hand an olive garland bore.

But on this day with whom shall he contend?
 A maid stood by him like Diana clad

When in the woods she lists her bow to bend, 80
 Too fair for one to look on and be glad,
 Who scarcely yet has thirty summers had,
 If he must still behold her from afar;
 Too fair to let the world live free from
 war.

She seemed all earthly matters to forget; 85
 Of all tormenting lines her face was clear,
 Her wide gray eyes upon the goal were set Calm and unmoved as though no soul were near.
 But her foe trembled as a man in fear,
 Nor from her loveliness one moment
 turned 90
 His anxious face with fierce desire that burned.

Now through the hush there broke the trumpet's clang
 Just as the setting sun made eventide.
 Then from light feet a spurt of dust there sprang,
 And swiftly were they running side by
 side; 95
 But silent did the thronging folk abide
 Until the turning-post was reached at last,
 And round about it still abreast they
 passed.

But when the people saw how close they ran,
 When half-way to the starting-point they
 were, 100
 A cry of joy broke forth, whereat the man Headed the white-foot runner, and drew near Unto the very end of all his fear;
 And scarce his straining feet the ground could feel,
 And bliss unhopèd-for o'er his heart 'gan
 steal. 105

But midst the loud victorious shouts he
 heard
 Her footsteps drawing nearer, and the sound
 Of fluttering raiment, and thereat afeard
 His flushed and eager face he turned
 around,
 And even then he felt her past him bound

Fleet as the wind, but scarcely saw her
 there 111
 Till on the goal she laid her fingers fair.

There stood she breathing like a little child
 Amid some warlike clamor laid asleep,
 For no victorious joy her red lips smiled, 115
 Her cheek its wonted freshness did but
 keep;
 No glance lit up her clear gray eyes and
 deep,
 Though some divine thought softened all her face
 As once more rang the trumpet through the place.

But her late foe stopped short amidst his course, 120
 One moment gazed upon her piteously,
 Then with a groan his lingering feet did
 force
 To leave the spot whence he her eyes could
 see;
 And, changed like one who knows his time must be
 But short and bitter, without any word 125
 He knelt before the bearer of the sword;

Then high rose up the gleaming deadly
 blade,
 Bared of its flowers, and through the crowded place
 Was silence now, and midst of it the
 maid
 Went by the poor wretch at a gentle pace, 130
 And he to hers upturned his sad white
 face;
 Nor did his eyes behold another sight
 Ere on his soul there fell eternal night.

So was the pageant ended, and all folk
 Talking of this and that familiar thing
 In little groups from that sad concourse
 broke; 136
 For now the shrill bats were upon the
 wing,
 And soon dark night would slay the even-
 ing,
 And in dark gardens sang the nightingale
 Her little-heeded, oft-repeated tale. 140

And with the last of all the hunter went,
 Who, wondering at the strange sight he had seen,
 Prayed an old man to tell him what it meant,
 Both why the vanquished man so slain had been,
 And if the maiden were an earthly queen,
 Or rather what much more she seemed to
 be, 146
 No sharer in the world's mortality.

"Stranger," said he, "I pray she soon may die
 Whose lovely youth has slain so many an
 one!
 King Schoeneus' daughter is she verily, 150
 Who when her eyes first looked upon the
 sun
 Was fain to end her life but new begun,
 For he had vowed to leave but men alone
 Sprung from his loins when he from earth was gone.

"Therefore he bade one leave her in the
 wood, 155
 And let wild things deal with her as they
 might;
 But this being done, some cruel god thought good
 To save her beauty in the world's despite:
 Folk say that her, so delicate and white
 As now she is, a rough root-grubbing
 bear 160
 Amidst her shapeless cubs at first did rear.

"In course of time the woodfolk slew her
 nurse,
 And to their rude abode the youngling
 brought,
 And reared her up to be a kingdom's curse,
 Who, grown a woman, of no kingdom
 thought, 165
 But armed and swift, 'mid beasts destruction wrought,
 Nor spared two shaggy centaur kings to slay,
 To whom her body seemed an easy prey.

"So to this city, led by fate, she came,
 Whom, known by signs, whereof I cannot tell, 170
 King Schoeneus for his child at last did
 claim;

Nor elsewhere since that day doth she
 dwell,
 Sending too many a noble soul to hell.—
 What thine eyes glisten? what then, thinkest thou
 Her shining head unto the yoke to bow? 175

"Listen, my son, and love some other
 maid,
 For she the saffron gown will never wear,
 And on no flower-strewn couch shall she
 be laid,
 Nor shall her voice make glad a lover's ear;
 Yet if of Death thou hast not any fear, 180
 Yea, rather, if thou lovest him utterly,
 Thou still may'st woo her ere thou com'st
 to die,

"Like him that on this day thou sawest
 lie dead;
 For, fearing as I deem the sea-born one,
 The maid has vowed e'en such a man to
 wed 185
 As in the course her swift feet can out-
 run,
 But whoso fails herein, his days are done:
 He came the nighest that was slain to-day,
 Although with him I deem she did but
 play.

"Behold, such mercy Atalanta gives 190
 To those that long to win her loveliness;
 Be wise! be sure that many a maid there
 lives
 Gentler than she, of beauty little less,
 Whose swimming eyes thy loving words shall bless,
 When in some garden, knee set close to
 knee, 195
 Thou sing'st the song that love may teach
 to thee."

So to the hunter spake that ancient man,
 And left him for his own home presently;
 But he turned round, and through the moonlight wan
 Reached the thick wood, and there 'twixt tree and tree 200
 Distraught he passed the long night feverishly,
 'Twixt sleep and waking, and at dawn
 arose
 To wage hot war against his speechless
 foes.

There to the hart's flank seemed his shaft
to grow,
As panting down the broad green glades he flew, 205
There by his horn the Dryads well might
know
His thrust against the bear's heart had been true,
And there Adonis' bane his javelin slew;
But still in vain through rough and smooth
he went,
For none the more his restlessness was spent. 210

So wandering, he to Argive cities came,
And in the lists with valiant men he stood,
And by great deeds he won him praise and
fame,
And heaps of wealth for little-valued blood;
But none of all these things, or life, seemed
good 215
Unto his heart, where still unsatisfied
A ravenous longing warred with fear and
pride.

Therefore it happed when but a month had gone
Since he had left King Schœneus' city old,
In hunting-gear again, again alone 220
The forest-bordered meads did he behold,
Where still mid thoughts of August's quivering gold
Folk hoed the wheat, and clipped the vine in trust
Of faint October's purple-foaming must.¹

And once again he passed the peaceful
gate, 225
While to his beating heart his lips did lie,
That, owning not victorious love and fate,
Said, half aloud, "And here too must I
try
To win of alien men the mastery,
And gather for my head fresh meed of
fame, 230
And cast new glory on my father's name."

In spite of that, how beat his heart when first Folk said to him, "And art thou come to
see
That which still makes our city's name accursed

Among all mothers for its cruelty? 235
Then know indeed that fate is good to
thee,
Because to-morrow a new luckless one Against the white-foot maid is pledged to
run."

So on the morrow with no curious eyes,
As once he did, that piteous sight he saw,
Nor did that wonder in his heart arise 241
As toward the goal the conquering maid
'gan draw,
Nor did he gaze upon her eyes with awe,—
Too full the pain of longing filled his heart
For fear or wonder there to have a part. 245

But O, how long the night was ere it went!
How long it was before the dawn begun Showed to the wakening birds the sun's intent
That not in darkness should the world be
done!
And then, and then, how long before the
sun 250
Bade silently the toilers of the earth
Get forth to fruitless cares or empty mirth!

And long it seemed that in the market-
place
He stood and saw the chaffering folk go
by,
Ere from the ivory throne King Schœneus'
face 255
Looked down upon the murmur royally;
But then came trembling that the time was nigh
When he midst pitying looks his love must
claim,
And jeering voices must salute his name.

But as the throng he pierced to gain the
throne, 260
His alien face distraught and anxious told
What hopeless errand he was bound upon,
And, each to each, folk whispered to be-
hold
His godlike limbs; nay, and one woman
old,
As he went by, must pluck him by the sleeve 265
And pray him yet that wretched love to leave.

¹ new, unfermented wine.

For sidling up she said, "Canst thou live twice, Fair son? Canst thou have joyful youth
again,
That thus thou goest to the sacrifice, Thyself the victim? Nay, then, all in
vain 270
Thy mother bore her longing and her pain,
And one more maiden on the earth must
dwell
Hopeless of joy, nor fearing death and hell.

"O fool, thou knowest not the compact
then
That with the three-formed goddess she has made 275
To keep her from the loving lips of men,
And in no saffron gown to be arrayed,
And therewithal with glory to be paid,
And love of her the moonlit river sees White 'gainst the shadow of the formless
trees. 280

"Come back, and I myself will pray for
thee
Unto the sea-born framer of delights,
To give thee her who on the earth may be
The fairest stirrer-up to death and fights,
To quench with hopeful days and joyous
nights 285
The flame that doth thy youthful heart consume:
Come back, nor give thy beauty to the tomb."

How should he listen to her earnest
speech,—
Words such as he not once or twice had
said
Unto himself, whose meaning scarce could reach 290
The firm abode of that sad hardihead?
He turned about, and through the market-stead
Swiftly he passed, until before the throne
In the cleared space he stood at last alone.

Then said the king, "Stranger, what dost thou here? 295
Have any of my folk done ill to thee?
Or art thou of the forest men in fear?
Or art thou of the sad fraternity
Who still will strive my daughter's mates
to be,

Staking their lives to win to earthly bliss 300
The lonely maid, the friend of Artemis?"

"O King," he said, "thou sayest the word indeed;
Nor will I quit the strife till I have won
My sweet delight, or death to end my need.
And know that I am called Milanion, 305
Of King Amphidamas the well-loved son;
So fear not that to thy old name, O King, Much loss or shame my victory will
bring."

"Nay, Prince," said Schoeneus, "welcome to this land
Thou wert indeed, if thou wert here to
try 310
Thy strength 'gainst some one mighty of
his hand;
Nor would we grudge thee well-won mastery.
But now, why wilt thou come to me to
die,
And at my door lay down thy luckless
head,
Swelling the band of the unhappy dead,

"Whose curses even now my heart doth
fear? 316
Lo, I am old, and know what life can be,
And what a bitter thing is death anear.
O son! be wise, and hearken unto me;
And if no other can be dear to thee, 320
At least as now, yet is the world full
wide,
And bliss in seeming hopeless hearts may
hide:

"But if thou lovest life, then all is lost."
"Nay, King," Milanion said, "thy words are vain.
Doubt not that I have counted well the cost. 325
But say, on what day wilt thou that I
gain
Fulfilled delight, or death to end my pain?
Right glad were I if it could be to-day,
And all my doubts at rest forever lay."

"Nay," said King Schoeneus, "thus it shall not be, 330
But rather shalt thou let a month go
by,
And weary with thy prayers for victory

What god thou know'st the kindest and most nigh.

So doing, still perchance thou shalt not die;
And with my good-will wouldst thou have
the maid, 335
For of the equal¹ gods I grow afraid.

"And until then, O Prince, be thou my
guest,
And all these troublous things awhile forget."

"Nay," said he, "couldst thou give my soul good rest,

And on mine head a sleepy garland set, 340
Then had I 'scaped the meshes of the net,
Nor shouldst thou hear from me another
word;

But now, make sharp thy fearful heading
sword.

"Yet will I do what son of man may do,
And promise all the gods may most desire,
That to myself I may at least be true; 346
And on that day my heart and limbs so
tire,

With utmost strain and measureless desire,
That, at the worst, I may but fall asleep
When in the sunlight round that sword shall sweep." 350

He went with that, nor anywhere would bide,

But unto Argos restlessly did wend;
And there, as one who lays all hope aside,
Because the leech has said his life must end,
Silent farewell he bade to foe and friend,
And took his way unto the restless sea, 356
For there he deemed his rest and help
might be.

Upon the shore of Argolis there stands
A temple to the goddess that he sought,
That, turned unto the lion-bearing lands,² Fenced from the east, of cold winds hath no thought, 361

Though to no homestead there the sheaves are brought,

No groaning press torments the close-clipped murk,³

Lonely the fane stands, far from all men's work.

¹ just.

² Africa.

³ marc, what remains of grapes or other fruit after the juice has been pressed out.

Pass through a close, set thick with myrtle-
trees, 365

Through the brass doors that guard the holy place,

And, entering, hear the washing of the seas

That twice a day rise high above the base,
And, with the southwest urging them,
embrace

The marble feet of her that standeth there,
That shrink not, naked though they be and fair. 371

Small is the fane through which the sea-wind sings

About Queen Venus' well-wrought image
white;

But hung around are many precious things,
The gifts of those who, longing for delight,
Have hung them there within the goddess'
sight, 376

And in return have taken at her hands
The living treasures of the Grecian lands.

And thither now has come Milanion,
And showed unto the priests' wide-open
eyes 380

Gifts fairer than all those that there have shown,—

Silk cloths, inwrought with Indian fantasies,

And bowls inscribed with sayings of the wise

Above the deeds of foolish living things,
And mirrors fit to be the gifts of kings. 385

And now before the Sea-born One he stands,

By the sweet veiling smoke made dim and soft;

And while the incense trickles from his
hands,

And while the odorous smoke-wreaths hang aloft,

Thus doth he pray to her: "O Thou, who
oft 390

Hast holpen man and maid in their distress,

Despise me not for this my wretchedness!

"O goddess, among us who dwell below,
Kings and great men, great for a little
while,

Have pity on the lowly heads that bow,

Nor hate the hearts that love them without guile; 396
Wilt thou be worse than these, and is thy
smile

A vain device of him who set thee here,
An empty dream of some artificer?

"O great one, some men love, and are ashamed; 400

Some men are weary of the bonds of love;
Yea, and by some men lightly art thou blamed,

That from thy toils their lives they cannot
move,

And 'mid the ranks of men their manhood
prove.

Alas! O goddess, if thou slayest me 405
What new immortal can I serve but thee?

"Think then, will it bring honor to thy
head

If folk say, 'Everything aside he cast,
And to all fame and honor was he dead,
And to his one hope now is dead at last,
Since all unholpen he is gone and past: 411
Ah! the gods love not man, for certainly
He to his helper did not cease to cry.'

"Nay, but thou wilt help: they who died
before

Not single-hearted, as I deem, came here;
Therefore unthanked they laid their gifts
before 416

Thy stainless feet, still shivering with their fear,

Lest in their eyes their true thought might appear,

Who sought to be the lords of that fair
town,

Dreaded of men and winners of renown. 420

"O Queen, thou knowest I pray not for
this:

Oh, set us down together in some place

Where not a voice can break our heaven of
bliss,

Where naught but rocks and I can see her
face,

Softening beneath the marvel of thy

"O fairest, hear me now, who do thy will,
Plead for thy rebel that she be not slain,
But live and love and be thy servant
still: 430

Ah! give her joy and take away my pain,
And thus two long-enduring servants
gain.

An easy thing this is to do for me,
What need of my vain words to weary
thee?

"But none the less this place will I not leave 435

Until I needs must go my death to meet,
Or at thy hands some happy sign receive

That in great joy we twain may one day greet

Thy presence here and kiss thy silver feet,
Such as we deem thee, fair beyond all
words, 440

Victorious o'er our servants and our lords."

Then from the altar back a space he drew,
But from the Queen turned not his face
away,

But 'gainst a pillar leaned, until the blue
That arched the sky, at ending of the day,
Was turned to ruddy gold and changing
gray, 446

And clear, but low, the nigh-ebbed windless sea

In the still evening murmured ceaselessly.

And there he stood when all the sun was
down;

Nor had he moved when the dim golden
light, 450

Like the far luster of a godlike town,
Had left the world to seeming hopeless
night;

Nor would he move the more when wan
moonlight

Streamed through the pillars for a little while,

And lighted up the white Queen's changeless smile. 455

Naught noted he the shallow flowing sea,
As step by step it set the wrack¹ a-swim;
The yellow torchlight nothing noted he Wherein with fluttering gown and halfbared limb

¹ sea-weed cast ashore by the waves.

The temple damsels sung their midnight
hymn; 460
And naught the doubled stillness of the fane
When they were gone and all was hushed
again.

But when the waves had touched the marble base,
And steps the fish swim over twice a day,
The dawn beheld him sunken in his
place 465
Upon the floor; and sleeping there he lay,
Not heeding aught the little jets of spray
The roughened sea brought nigh, across him cast,
For as one dead all thought from him had
passed.

Yet long before the sun had showed his
head, 470
Long ere the varied hangings on the wall
Had gained once more their blue and green and red,
He rose as one some well-known sign doth
call
When war upon the city's gates doth fall,
And scarce like one fresh risen out of
sleep, 475
He 'gan again his broken watch to keep.

Then he turned round; not for the sea-gull's cry
That wheeled above the temple in his
flight,
Not for the fresh south-wind that lovingly
Breathed on the new-born day and dying
night, 480
But some strange hope 'twixt fear and great delight
Drew round his face, now flushed, now
pale and wan,
And still constrained his eyes the sea to scan.

Now a faint light lit up the southern
sky,—
Not sun or moon, for all the world was
gray, 485
But this a bright cloud seemed, that drew anigh,
Lighting the dull waves that beneath it lay
As toward the temple still it took its way,

And still grew greater, till Milanion Saw naught for dazzling light that round him shone. 490

But as he staggered with his arms out-
spread,
Delicious unnamed odors breathed around;
For languid happiness he bowed his head,
And with wet eyes sank down upon the
ground,
Nor wished for aught, nor any dream he
found 495
To give him reason for that happiness,
Or make him ask more knowledge of his
bliss.

At last his eyes were cleared, and he could
see Through happy tears the goddess face to
face
With that faint image of divinity, 500
Whose well-wrought smile and dainty changeless grace
Until that morn so gladdened all the place;
Then he unwitting cried aloud her name,
And covered up his eyes for fear and shame.

But through the stillness he her voice could hear 505
Piercing his heart with joy scarce bearable,
That said, "Milanion, wherefore dost thou fear?
I am not hard to those who love me well;
List to what I a second time will tell,
And thou mayest hear perchance, and live to save 510
The cruel maiden from a loveless grave.

"See, by my feet three golden apples lie,—
Such fruit among the heavy roses falls,
Such fruit my watchful damsels carefully Store up within the best loved of my walls, 515
Ancient Damascus, where the lover calls Above my unseen head, and faint and
light
The rose-leaves flutter round me in the
night.

"And note that these are not alone most
fair
With heavenly gold, but longing strange they bring 520
Unto the hearts of men, who will not care,

Beholding these, for any once-loved thing
Till round the shining sides their fingers
cling.

And thou shalt see thy well-girt swiftfoot
maid

By sight of these amid her glory stayed.

"For bearing these within a scrip with
thee, 526

When first she heads thee from the starting-
place

Cast down the first one for her eyes to see,
And when she turns aside make on apace,
And if again she heads thee in the race
Spare not the other two to cast aside 531
If she not long enough behind will bide.

"Farewell, and when has come the happy
time

That she Diana's raiment must unbind,
And all the world seems blessed with Saturn's clime, 535

And thou with eager arms about her twined

Beholdest first her gray eyes growing
kind,

Surely, O trembler, thou shalt scarcely
then

Forget the Helper of unhappy men."

Milanion raised his head at this last
word, 540

For now so soft and kind she seemed to be
No longer of her godhead was he feared;
Too late he looked, for nothing could he
see

But the white image glimmering doubtfully
In the departing twilight cold and gray,
And those three apples on the steps that
lay. 546

These then he caught up, quivering with delight,

Yet fearful lest it all might be a dream,
And though aweary with the watchful
night,

And sleepless nights of longing, still did
deem 550

He could not sleep; but yet the first sunbeam

That smote the fane across the heaving

But little ere the noontide did he rise,
And why he felt so happy scarce could tell 555

Until the gleaming apples met his eyes.
Then, leaving the fair place where this befell,

Oft he looked back as one who loved it
well,

Then homeward to the haunts of men 'gan
wend

To bring all things unto a happy end. 560

Now has the lingering month at last gone
by,

Again are all folk around the running-
place.

Nor other seems the dismal pageantry
Than heretofore, but that another face Looks o'er the smooth course ready for the race, 563

For now, beheld of all, Milanion Stands on the spot he twice has looked upon.

But yet—what change is this that holds
the maid?

Does she indeed see in his glittering eye
More than disdain of the sharp shearing
blade, 570

Some happy hope of help and victory?
The others seemed to say, "We come to
die;

Look down upon us for a little while,
That, dead, we may bethink us of thy
smile."

But he—what look of mastery was this 575
He cast on her? Why were his lips so red?
Why was his face so flushed with happiness?

So looks not one who deems himself but
dead,

E'en if to death he bows a willing head;
So rather looks a god well pleased to find Some earthly damsel fashioned to his
mind. 581

Why must she drop her lids before his gaze,
And even as she casts adown her eyes

Redden to note his eager glance of praise,
And wish that she were clad in other
guise? 585

Why must the memory to her heart arise

Of things unnoticed when they first were
heard,
Some lover's song, some answering maiden's word?

What makes these longings, vague, without a name,
And this vain pity never felt before, 590
This sudden languor, this contempt of
fame,
This tender sorrow for the time past o'er,
These doubts that grow each minute more and more?
Why does she tremble as the time grows
near,
And weak defeat and woful victory fear?

But while she seemed to hear her beating
heart, 596
Above their heads the trumpet blast rang out,
And forth they sprang; and she must play
her part.
Then flew her white feet, knowing not a
doubt,
Though, slackening once, she turned her head about, 600
But then she cried aloud and faster fled
Than e'er before, and all men deemed him
dead.

But with no sound he raised aloft his hand,
And thence what seemed a ray of light
there flew
And past the maid rolled on along the
sand; 605
Then trembling she her feet together
drew,
And in her heart a strong desire there
grew
To have the toy: some god she thought had given
That gift to her, to make of earth a heaven.

Then from the course with eager steps she ran, 610
And in her odorous bosom laid the gold.
But when she turned again, the greatlimbed man
Now well ahead she failed not to behold,
And, mindful of her glory waxing cold,
Sprang up and followed him in hot pursuit, Though with one hand she touched the golden fruit. 616

Note, too, the bow that she was wont to
bear
She laid aside to grasp the glittering prize,
And o'er her shoulder from the quiver fair
Three arrows fell and lay before her eyes
Unnoticed, as amidst the people's cries 621
She sprang to head the strong Milanion,
Who now the turning-post had wellnigh
won.

But as he set his mighty hand on it,
White fingers underneath his own were laid,
And white limbs from his dazzled eyes did
flit; 626
Then he the second fruit cast by the maid,
But she ran on awhile, then as afraid Wavered and stopped, and turned and made no stay
Until the globe with its bright fellow lay.

Then, as a troubled glance she cast
around, 631
Now far ahead the Argive could she see,
And in her garment's hem one hand she
wound
To keep the double prize, and strenuously Sped o'er the course, and little doubt had
she 635
To win the day, though now but scanty
space
Was left betwixt him and the winning-
place.

Short was the way unto such wingèd feet;
Quickly she gained upon him, till at
last
He turned about her eager eyes to meet,
And from his hand the third fair apple
cast. 641
She wavered not, but turned and ran so
fast
After the prize that should her bliss fulfil,
That in her hand it lay ere it was still.

Nor did she rest, but turned about to win
Once more an unblest woful victory— 646
And yet—and yet—why does her breath
begin
To fail her, and her feet drag heavily?
Why fails she now to see if far or nigh
The goal is? Why do her gray eyes grow dim? 650
Why do these tremors run through every limb?

She spreads her arms abroad some stay to find,
Else must she fall, indeed, and findeth this,
A strong man's arms about her body
twined. 654

Nor may she shudder now to feel his kiss,
So wrapped she is in new unbroken bliss;
Made happy that the foe the prize hath
won,
She weeps glad tears for all her glory done.

Shatter the trumpet, hew adown the posts!
Upon the brazen altar break the sword, 660
And scatter incense to appease the ghosts
Of those who died here by their own award.
Bring forth the image of the mighty Lord,
And her who unseen o'er the runners hung,
And did a deed forever to be sung. 665

Here are the gathered folk, make no delay;
Open King Schoeneus' well-filled treasury, Bring out the gifts long hid from light of
day,—

The golden bowls o'erwrought with imagery,
Gold chains, and unguents brought from over sea, 670

The saffron gown the old Phœnician
brought,
Within the temple of the goddess wrought.

O ye, O damsels, who shall never see Her, that Love's servant bringeth now to
you,

Returning from another victory, 675
In some cool bower do all that now is due!
Since she in token of her service new Shall give to Venus offerings rich enow,—
Her maiden zone, her arrows, and her bow.

THE HAYSTACK IN THE FLOODS

Had she come all the way for this,
To part at last without a kiss?
Yea, had she borne the dirt and rain
That her own eyes might see him slain
Beside the haystack in the floods? 5

Along the dripping leafless woods,
The stirrup touching either shoe,
She rode astride as troopers do;
With kirtle kilted to her knee,

To which the mud splashed wretchedly; 10
And the wet dripped from every tree
Upon her head and heavy hair,
And on her eyelids broad and fair;
The tears and rain ran down her face.

By fits and starts they rode apace, 15
And very often was his place
Far off from her; he had to ride
Ahead, to see what might betide
When the roads crossed; and sometimes,
when

There rose a murmuring from his men, 20
Had to turn back with promises;
Ah me! she had but little ease;
And often for pure doubt and dread
She sobbed, made giddy in the head
By the swift riding; while, for cold, 25
Her slender fingers scarce could hold
The wet reins; yea, and scarcely, too,
She felt the foot within her shoe
Against the stirrup: all for this,
To part at last without a kiss 30
Beside the haystack in the floods.

For when they neared that old soaked hay,
They saw across the only way
That Judas, Godmar, and the three Red running lions dismally 35
Grinned from his pennon, under which
In one straight line along the ditch,
They counted thirty heads.

So then,
While Robert turned round to his men,
She saw at once the wretched end, 40
And, stooping down, tried hard to rend
Her coil the wrong way from her head,
And hid her eyes; while Robert said:
"Nay, love, 'tis scarcely two to one;
At Poitiers where we made them run 45
So fast—why, sweet my love, good cheer,
The Gascon frontier is so near,
Nought after us."

But, "O," she said,
"My God! my God! I have to tread
The long way back without you; then 50
The court at Paris; those six men;
The gratings of the Chatelet;
The swift Seine on some rainy day
Like this, and people standing by,
And laughing, while my weak hands try 55
To recollect how strong men swim."

All this, or else a life with him,
For which I should be damned at last;
Would God that this next hour were past!"

He answered not, but cried his cry, 60
"St. George for Marny!" cheerily;
And laid his hand upon her rein.
Alas! no man of all his train
Gave back that cheery cry again;
And, while for rage his thumb beat fast 65
Upon his sword-hilt, some one cast
About his neck a kerchief long,
And bound him.

Then they went along
To Godmar; who said: "Now, Jehane,
Your lover's life is on the wane 70
So fast, that, if this very hour
You yield not as my paramour,
He will not see the rain leave off—
Nay, keep your tongue from gibe and scoff.
Sir Robert, or I slay you now." 75

She laid her hand upon her brow,
Then gazed upon the palm, as though
She thought her forehead bled, and—
"No,"
She said, and turned her head away,
As there were nothing else to say, 80
And everything were settled: red Grew Godmar's face from chin to head:
"Jehane, on yonder hill there stands
My castle, guarding well my lands:
What hinders me from taking you, 85
And doing that I list to do
To your fair wilful body, while Your knight lies dead?"

A wicked smile
Wrinkled her face, her lips grew thin,
A long way out she thrust her chin: 90
"You know that I should strangle you
While you were sleeping; or bite through Your throat, by God's help—ah!" she said,
"Lord Jesus, pity your poor maid!
For in such wise they hem me in, 95
I cannot choose but sin and sin,
Whatever happens: yet I think
They could not make me eat or drink,
And so should I just reach my rest."
"Nay, if you do not my behest, 100
O Jehane! though I love you well,"
Said Godmar, "would I fail to tell
All that I know?" "Foul lies," she said.

"Eh! lies, my Jehane? by God's head,
At Paris folks would deem them true! 105
Do you know, Jehane, they cry for you:
'Jehane the brown! Jehane the brown!
Give us Jehane to burn or drown!'—
Eh—gag me Robert!—sweet my friend,
This were indeed a piteous end 110
For those long fingers, and long feet,
And long neck, and smooth shoulders
sweet;
An end that few men would forget
That saw it—So, an hour yet:
Consider, Jehane, which to take 115
Of life or death!"

So, scarce awake,
Dismounting, did she leave that place,
And totter some yards: with her face
Turned upward to the sky she lay,
Her head on a wet heap of hay, 120
And fell asleep: and while she slept,
And did not dream, the minutes crept Round to the twelve again; but she,
Being waked at last, sighed quietly,
And strangely childlike came, and said: 125
"I will not." Straightway Godmar's head,
As though it hung on strong wires, turned
Most sharply round, and his face burned.

For Robert—both his eyes were dry,
He could not weep, but gloomily 130
He seemed to watch the rain; yea, too,
His lips were firm; he tried once more
To touch her lips; she reached out, sore
And vain desire so tortured them,
The poor gray lips, and now the hem 135
Of his sleeve brushed them.

With a start
Up Godmar rose, thrust them apart;
From Robert's throat he loosed the bands
Of silk and mail; with empty hands
Held out, she stood and gazed, and saw, 140
The long bright blade without a flaw
Glide out from Godmar's sheath, his hand
In Robert's hair; she saw him bend Back Robert's head; she saw him send
The thin steel down; the blow told well, 145
Right backward the knight Robert fell,
And moaned as dogs do, being half dead,
Unwitting, as I deem: so then Godmar turned grinning to his men,
Who ran, some five or six, and beat 150
His head to pieces at their feet.

Then Godmar turned again and said:
 "So, Jehane, the first fitte is read!
 Take note, my lady, that your way
 Lies backward to the Chatelet!" 155
 She shook her head and gazed awhile
 At her cold hands with a rueful smile,
 As though this thing had made her mad.

This was the parting that they had
 Beside the haystack in the floods. 160

WALTER HORATIO PATER
 (1839-1894)

STYLE

Since all progress of mind consists for the most part in differentiation, in the resolution of an obscure and complex object into its component aspects, it is surely the stupidest of losses to confuse things which right reason has put asunder, to lose the sense of achieved distinctions, the distinction between poetry and prose, for instance, or, to speak more exactly, between the laws and characteristic excellences of verse and prose composition. On the other hand, those who have dwelt most emphatically on the distinction between prose and verse, prose and poetry, may sometimes have been tempted to limit the proper functions of prose too narrowly; and this again is at least false economy, as being, in effect, the renunciation of a certain means or faculty, in a world where [20 after all we must needs make the most of things. Critical efforts to limit art a priori, by anticipations regarding the natural incapacity of the material with which this or that artist works, as the sculptor with solid form, or the prose-writer with the ordinary language of men, are always liable to be discredited by the facts of artistic production; and while prose is actually found to be a [30 colored thing with Bacon, picturesque with Livy and Carlyle, musical with Cicero and Newman, mystical and intimate with Plato and Michelet and Sir Thomas Browne, exalted or florid, it may be, with Milton and Taylor, it will be useless to protest that it can be nothing at all, except something very tamely and narrowly confined to mainly practical ends—a kind of "good round-hand;" [40 as useless as the protest that poetry might not touch prosaic subjects as with Wordsworth, or an abstruse matter as with Browning, or treat contemporary life nobly as with Tennyson. In subordination to one essential beauty in all good literary style, in all literature as a fine art, as there are many beauties of poetry so the beauties of prose are many, and it is the business of criticism to [50 estimate them as such; as it is good in the criticism of verse to look for those hard, logical and quasi-prosaic excellences which that too has, or needs. To find in the poem, amid the flowers, the allusions, the mixed perspectives, of Lycidas for instance, the thought, the logical structure:—how wholesome! how delightful! as to identify in prose what we call the poetry, the imaginative [60 power, not treating it as out of place and a kind of vagrant intruder, but by way of an estimate of its rights, that is, of its achieved powers, there.

Dryden, with the characteristic instinct of his age, loved to emphasize the distinction between poetry and prose, the protest against their confusion with each other coming with somewhat diminished effect from one whose poetry was so [70 prosaic. In truth, his sense of prosaic excellence affected his verse rather than his prose, which is not only fervid, richly figured, poetic, as we say, but vitiated, all unconsciously, by many a scanning line. Setting up correctness, that humble merit of prose, as the central literary excellence, he is really a less correct writer than he may seem, still with an imperfect mastery of the relative pro- [80 noun. It might have been foreseen that, in the rotations of mind, the province of poetry in prose would find its assertor; and, a century after Dryden, amid very different intellectual needs, and with the need therefore of great modifications in literary form, the range of the poetic force in literature was effectively enlarged by Wordsworth. The true distinction between prose and poetry he [90 regarded as the almost technical or accidental one of the absence or presence of metrical beauty, or, say! metrical restraint; and for him the opposition came to be between verse and prose of course; but, as the essential dichotomy in this matter, between imaginative and unimaginative writing, parallel to De Quincey's distinction between "the literature of power and the literature of knowl- [100 edge," in the former of which the composer gives us not fact, but his peculiar sense of fact, whether past or present.

Dismissing then, under sanction of Wordsworth, that harsher opposition of poetry to prose, as savoring in fact of the arbitrary psychology of the last century, and with it the prejudice that there can be but one only beauty of prose style, I propose here to point out certain qual- [110 ities of all literature as a fine art, which, if they apply to the literature of fact, apply still more to the literature of the imaginative sense of fact, while they apply indifferently to verse and prose, so far as either is really imaginative—certain conditions of true art in both alike, which conditions may also contain in them the secret of the proper discrimination and guardianship of the peculiar excel- [120 lences of either.

The line between fact and something quite different from external fact is, indeed, hard to draw. In Pascal, for instance, in the persuasive writers generally, how difficult to define the point where, from time to time, argument which, if it is to be worth anything at all, must consist of facts or groups of facts, becomes a pleading—a theorem no [130 longer, but essentially an appeal to the reader to catch the writer's spirit, to think with him, if one can or will—an expression no longer of fact but of his sense of it, his peculiar intuition of a world' prospective, or discerned below the faulty conditions of the present, in either case changed somewhat from the actual world. In science, on the other hand, in history so far as it conforms [140 to scientific rule, we have a literary domain where the imagination may be thought to be always an intruder. And as, in all science, the functions of literature reduce themselves eventually to the transcribing of fact, so all the excel-lences of literary form in regard to science are reducible to various kinds of painstaking; this good quality being involved in all "skilled work" whatever, in [150 the drafting of an act of parliament, as in sewing. Yet here again, the writer's sense of fact, in history especially, and in all those complex subjects which do but lie on the borders of science, will still take the place of fact, in various degrees. Your historian, for instance, with absolutely truthful intention, amid the multitude of facts presented to him must needs select, and in selecting [160 assert something of his own humor, something that comes not of the world without but of a vision within. So Gibbon moulds his unwieldy material to a preconceived view. Livy, Tacitus, Michelet, moving full of poignant sensibility amid the records of the past, each, after his own sense, modifies—who can tell where and to what degree?—and becomes something else than a transcriber; each, as [170 he thus modifies, passing into the domain of art proper. For just in proportion as the writer's aim, consciously or unconsciously, comes to be the transcribing, not of the world, not of mere fact, but of his sense of it, he becomes an artist, his work fine art; and good art (as I hope ultimately to show) in proportion to the truth of his presentment of that sense; as in those humbler or plainer [180 functions of literature also, truth—truth to bare fact, there—is the essence of such artistic quality as they may have. Truth! there can be no merit, no craft at all, without that. And further, all beauty is in the long run only fineness of truth, or what we call expression, the finer accommodation of speech to that vision within.

—The transcript of his sense of fact [190 rather than the fact, as being preferable, pleasanter, more beautiful to the writer himself. In literature, as in every other product of human skill, in the moulding of a bell or a platter for instance, wherever this sense asserts itself, wherever the producer so modifies his work as, over and above its primary use or intention, to make it pleasing (to himself, of course, in the first instance) there, [200

"fine" as opposed to merely serviceable art, exists. Literary art, that is, like all art which is in any way imitative or reproductive of fact—form, or color, or incident—is the representation of such fact as connected with soul, of a specific personality, in its preferences, its volition and power.

Such is the matter of imaginative or artistic literature—this transcript, not [210 of mere fact, but of fact in its infinite variety, as modified by human preference in all its infinitely varied forms. It will be good literary art not because it is brilliant or sober, or rich, or impulsive, or severe, but just in proportion as its representation of that sense, that soul-fact, is true, verse being only one department of such literature, and imaginative prose, it may be thought, [220 being the special art of the modern world. That imaginative prose should be the special and opportune art of the modern world results from two important facts about the latter: first, the chaotic variety and complexity of its interests, making the intellectual issue, the really master currents of the present time incalculable—a condition of mind little susceptible of the restraint proper to [230 verse form, so that the most characteristic verse of the nineteenth century has been lawless verse; and secondly, an all-pervading naturalism, a curiosity about everything whatever as it really is, involving a certain humility of attitude, cognate to what must, after all, be the less ambitious form of literature. And prose thus asserting itself as the special and privileged artistic faculty of the [240 present day, will be, however critics may try to narrow its scope, as varied in its excellence as humanity itself reflecting on the facts of its latest experience—an instrument of many stops, meditative, observant, descriptive, eloquent, analytic, plaintive, fervid. Its beauties will be not exclusively "pedestrian:" it will exert, in due measure, all the varied charms of poetry, down to the rhythm which, [250 as in Cicero, or Michelet, or Newman, at their best, gives its musical value to every syllable.

The literary artist is of necessity a scholar, and in what he proposes to do will have in mind, first of all, the scholar and the scholarly conscience—the male conscience in this matter, as we must think it, under a system of education which still to so large an extent limits [260 real scholarship to men. In his self-criticism, he supposes always that sort of reader who will go (full of eyes) warily, considerately, though without consideration for him, over the ground which the female conscience traverses so lightly, so amiably. For the material in which he works is no more a creation of his own than the sculptor's marble. Product of a myriad various minds and contend- [270 ing tongues, compact of obscure and minute association, a language has its own abundant and often recondite laws, in the habitual and summary recognition of which scholarship consists. A writer, full of a matter he is before all things anxious to express, may think of those laws, the limitations of vocabulary, structure, and the like, as a restriction, but if a real artist, will find in them an [280 opportunity. His punctilious observance of the proprieties of his medium will diffuse through all he writes a general air of sensibility, of refined usage. Exclusiones debitae naturae—the exclusions, or rejections, which nature demands—we know how large a part these play, according to Bacon, in the science of nature. In a somewhat changed sense, we might say that the art of the [290 scholar is summed up in the observance of those rejections demanded by the nature of his medium, the material he must use. Alive to the value of an atmosphere in which every term finds its utmost degree of expression, and with all the jealousy of a lover of words, he will resist a constant tendency on the part of the majority of those who use them to efface the distinctions of language, the [300 facility of writers often reinforcing in this respect the work of the vulgar. He will feel the obligation not of the laws only, but of those affinities, avoidances, those mere preferences, of his language, which through the associations of literary history have become a part of its nature, prescribing the rejection of many a neology, many a license, many a gipsy phrase which might present itself as [310 actually expressive. His appeal, again, is to the scholar, who has great experience in literature, and will show no favor to short-cuts, or hackneyed illustration, or an affectation of learning designed for the unlearned. Hence a contention, a sense of self-restraint and renunciation, having for the susceptible reader the effect of a challenge for minute consideration; the attention of the writer, in every [320 minutest detail, being a pledge that it is worth the reader's while to be attentive too, that the writer is dealing scrupulously with his instrument, and therefore, indirectly, with the reader himself also, that he has the science of the instrument he plays on, perhaps, after all, with a freedom which in such case will be the freedom of a master.

For meanwhile, braced only by [330 those restraints, he is really vindicating his liberty in the making of a vocabulary, an entire system of composition, for himself, his own true manner; and when we speak of the manner of a true master we mean what is essential in his art. Pedantry being only the scholarship of le cuistre (we have no English equivalent), he is no pedant, and does but show his intelligence of the rules of lan- [340 guage in his freedoms with it, addition or expansion, which like the spontaneities of manner in a well-bred person will still further illustrate good taste.—The right vocabulary! Translators have not invariably seen how all-important that is in the work of translation, driving for the most part at idiom or construction; whereas, if the original be first-rate, one's care should be with its elemen- [350 tary particles, Plato, for instance, being often reproducible by an exact following, with no variation in structure, of word after word, as the pencil follows a drawing under tracing-paper, so only each word or syllable be not of false color, to change my illustration a little.

Well! that is because any writer worth translating at all has winnowed and searched through his vocabulary, is [360 conscious of the words he would select in systematic reading of a dictionary, and still more of the words he would reject were the dictionary other than Johnson's; and doing this with his peculiar sense of the world ever in view, in search of an instrument for the adequate expression of that, he begets a vocabulary faithful to the coloring of his own spirit, and in the strictest sense original. [370 That living authority which language needs lies, in truth, in its scholars, who, recognizing always that every language possesses a genius, a very fastidious genius, of its own, expand at once and purify its very elements, which must needs change along with the changing thoughts of living people. Ninety years ago, for instance, great mental force, certainly, was needed by Wordsworth, [380 to break through the consecrated poetic associations of a century, and speak the language that was his, that was to become in a measure the language of the next generation. But he did it with the tact of a scholar also. English, for a quarter of a century past, has been assimilating the phraseology of pictorial art; for half a century, the phraseology of the great German metaphysical movement of [390 eighty years ago; in part also the language of mystical theology: and none but pedants will regret a great consequent increase of its resources. For many years to come its enterprise may well lie in the naturalization of the vocabulary of science, so only it be under the eye of sensitive scholarship—in a liberal naturalization of the ideas of science too, for after all, the chief stimulus of [400 good style is to possess a full, rich, complex matter to grapple with. The literary artist, therefore, will be well aware of physical science; science also attaining, in its turn, its true literary ideal. And then, as the scholar is nothing without the historic sense, he will be apt to restore not really obsolete or really worn-out words, but the finer edge of words still in use: ascertain, communicate, [410 discover—words like these it has been part of our "business" to misuse. And still, as language was made for man, he will be no authority for correctnesses which, limiting freedom of utterance, were yet but accidents in their origin; as if one vowed not to say "its," which ought to have been in Shakespeare, "his" and "hers," for inanimate objects, being but a barbarous and really inexpressive [420 survival. Yet we have known many things like this. Racy Saxon monosyllables, close to us as touch and sight, he will intermix readily with those long, savorsome, Latin words, rich in "second intention." In this late day certainly, no critical process can be conducted reasonably without eclecticism. Of such eclecticism we have a justifying example in one of the first poets of our time. [430 How illustrative of monosyllabic effect, of sonorous Latin, of the phraseology of science, of metaphysic, of colloquialism even, are the writings of Tennyson; yet with what a fine, fastidious scholarship throughout!

A scholar writing for the scholarly, he will of course leave something to the willing intelligence of his reader. "To go preach to the first passer-by," says [440 Montaigne, "to become tutor to the ignorance of the first I meet, is a thing I abhor;" a thing, in fact, naturally distressing to the scholar, who will therefore ever be shy of offering uncomplimentary assistance to the reader's wit. To really strenuous minds there is a pleasurable stimulus in the challenge for a continuous effort on their part, to be rewarded by securer and more inti- [450 mate grasp of the author's sense. Self-restraint, a skilful economy of means, ascêsis, that too has a beauty of its own; and for the reader supposed, there will be an aesthetic satisfaction in that frugal closeness of style which makes the most of a word, in the exaction from every sentence of a precise relief, in the just spacing out of words to thought, in the logically filled space connected always [460 with the delightful sense of difficulty overcome.

Different classes of persons, at different times, make, of course, very various demands upon literature. Still, scholars, I suppose, and not only scholars, but all disinterested lovers of books, will always look to it, as to all other fine art, for a refuge, a sort of cloistral refuge, from a certain vulgarity in the actual world. [470

A perfect poem like Lycidas, a perfect fiction like Esmond, the perfect handling of a theory like Newman's Idea of a University, has for them something of the uses of a religious "retreat." Here, then, with a view to the central need of a select few, those "men of a finer thread" who have formed and maintain the literary ideal, everything, every component element will have undergone exact trial, [480 and, above all, there will be no uncharacteristic or tarnished or vulgar decoration, permissible ornament being for the most part structural, or necessary. As the painter in his picture, so the artist in his book, aims at the production by honorable artifice of a peculiar atmosphere. "The artist," says Schiller, "may be known rather by what he omits," and in literature, too, the true artist [490 may be best recognized by his tact of omission. For to the grave reader words too are grave; and the ornamental word, the figure, the accessory form or color or reference, is rarely content to die to thought precisely at the right moment, but will inevitably linger awhile, stirring a long "brain-wave" behind it of perhaps quite alien associations.

Just there, it may be, is the detri- [500 mental tendency of the sort of scholarly attentiveness of mind I am recommending. But the true artist allows for it. He will remember that, as the very word ornament indicates what is in itself non-essential, so the "one beauty" of all literary style is of its very essence, and independent, in prose and verse alike, of all removable decoration; that it may exist in its fullest luster, as in Flaubert's [510 Madame Bovary, for instance, or in Stendhal's Le Rouge et Le Noir, in a composition utterly unadorned, with hardly a single suggestion of visibly beautiful things. Parallel, allusion, the allusive way generally, the flowers in the garden:—he knows the narcotic force of these upon the negligent intelligence to which any diversion, literally, is welcome, any vagrant intruder, because [520 one can go wandering away with it from the immediate subject. Jealous, if he have a really quickening motive within, of all that does not hold directly to that, of the facile, the otiose, he will never depart from the strictly pedestrian process, unless he gains a ponderable something thereby. Even assured of its congruity, he will still question its serviceableness. Is it worth while, can we afford, to at- [530 tend to just that, to just that figure or literary reference, just then?—Surplusage! he will dread that, as the runner on his muscles. For in truth all art does but consist in the removal of surplusage, from the last finish of the gem-engraver blowing away the last particle of invisible dust, back to the earliest divination of the finished work to be, lying somewhere, according to Michel- [540 angelo's fancy, in the rough-hewn block of stone.

And what applies to figure or flower must be understood of all other accidental or removable ornaments of writing whatever; and not of specific ornament only, but of all that latent color and imagery which language as such carries in it. A lover of words for their own sake, to whom nothing about [550 them is unimportant, a minute and constant observer of their physiognomy, he will be on the alert not only for obviously mixed metaphors of course, but for the metaphor that is mixed in all our speech, though a rapid use may involve no cognition of it. Currently recognizing the incident, the color, the physical elements or particles in words like absorb, consider, extract, to take the first that [560 occur, he will avail himself of them, as further adding to the resources of expression. The elementary particles of language will be realized as color and light and shade through his scholarly living in the full sense of them. Still opposing the constant degradation of language by those who use it carelessly, he will not treat colored glass as if it were clear; and while half the world is using [570 figure unconsciously, will be fully aware not only of all that latent figurative texture in speech, but of the vague, lazy, half-formed personification—a rhetoric, depressing, and worse than nothing, because it has no really rhetorical motive—which plays so large a part there, and, as in the case of more ostentatious ornament, scrupulously exact of it, from syllable to syllable, its precise value. [580

So far I have been speaking of certain conditions of the literary art arising out of the medium or material in or upon which it works, the essential qualities of language and its aptitudes for contingent ornamentation, matters which define scholarship as science and good taste respectively. They are both subservient to a more intimate quality of good style: more intimate, as coming [590 nearer to the artist himself. The otiose, the facile, surplusage: why are these abhorrent to the true literary artist, except because, in literary as in all other art, structure is all-important, felt, or painfully missed, everywhere?—that architectural conception of work, which foresees the end in the beginning and never loses sight of it, and in every part is conscious of all the rest, till the last [600 sentence does but, with undiminished vigor, unfold and justify the first—a condition of literary art, which, in contradistinction to another quality of the artist himself, to be spoken of later, I shall call the necessity of mind in style.

An acute philosophical writer, the late Dean Mansel (a writer whose works illustrate the literary beauty there may [610 be in closeness, and with obvious repression or economy of a fine rhetorical gift) wrote a book, of fascinating precision in a very obscure subject, to show that all the technical laws of logic are but means of securing, in each and all of its apprehensions, the unity, the strict identity with itself, of the apprehending mind. All the laws of good writing aim at a similar unity or identity of the mind [620 in all the processes by which the word is associated to its import. The term is right, and has its essential beauty, when it becomes, in a manner, what it signifies, as with the names of simple sensations. To give the phrase, the sentence, the structural member, the entire composition, song, or essay, a similar unity with its subject and with itself:—style is in the right way when it [630 tends towards that. All depends upon the original unity, the vital wholeness and identity, of the initiatory apprehension or view. So much is true of all art, which therefore requires always its logic, its comprehensive reason—insight, foresight, retrospect, in simultaneous action—true, most of all, of the literary art, as being of all the arts most closely cognate to the abstract intelligence. [640] Such logical coherency may be evidenced not merely in the lines of composition as a whole, but in the choice of a single word, while it by no means interferes with, but may even prescribe, much variety, in the building of the sentence for instance, or in the manner, argumentative, descriptive, discursive, of this or that part or member of the entire design. The blithe, crisp sentence, decisive [650] as a child's expression of its needs, may alternate with the long-contending, victoriously intricate sentence; the sentence, born with the integrity of a single word, relieving the sort of sentence in which, if you look closely, you can see much contrivance, much adjustment, to bring a highly qualified matter into compass at one view. For the literary architecture, if it is to be rich and [660] expressive, involves not only foresight of the end in the beginning, but also development or growth of design, in the process of execution, with many irregularities, surprises, and after-thoughts; the contingent as well as the necessary being subsumed under the unity of the whole. As truly, to the lack of such architectural design, of a single, almost visual, image, vigorously informing an en- [670] tire, perhaps very intricate, composition, which shall be austere, ornate, argumentative, fanciful, yet true from first to last to that vision within, may be attributed those weaknesses of conscious or unconscious repetition of word, phrase, motive, or member of the whole matter, indicating, as Flaubert was aware, an original structure in thought not organically complete. With such foresight, [680] the actual conclusion will most often get itself written out of hand, before, in the more obvious sense, the work is finished. With some strong and leading sense of the world, the tight hold of which secures true composition and not mere loose accretion, the literary artist, I suppose, goes on considerably, setting joint to joint, sustained by yet restraining the productive ardor, retracing the negligences of his first sketch, repeating his steps only that he may give the reader a sense of secure and restful progress, readjusting mere assonances even, that they may soothe the reader, or at least not interrupt him on his way; and then, somewhere before the end comes, is burdened, inspired, with his conclusion, and betimes delivered of it, leaving off, not in weariness and because he finds [700] himself at an end, but in all the freshness of volition. His work now structurally complete, with all the accumulating effect of secondary shades of meaning, he finishes the whole up to the just proportion of that ante-penultimate conclusion, and all becomes expressive. The house he has built is rather a body he has informed. And so it happens, to its greater credit, that the better interest even of [710] a narrative to be recounted, a story to be told, will often be in its second reading. And though there are instances of great writers who have been no artists, an unconscious tact sometimes directing work in which we may detect, very pleasurably, many of the effects of conscious art, yet one of the greatest pleasures of really good prose literature is in the critical tracing out of that conscious artistic structure, [720] and the pervading sense of it as we read. Yet of poetic literature too; for, in truth, the kind of constructive intelligence here supposed is one of the forms of the imagination.

That is the special function of mind, in style. Mind and soul:—hard to ascertain philosophically, the distinction is real enough practically, for they often interfere, are sometimes in conflict, [730] with each other. Blake, in the last century, is an instance of preponderating soul, embarrassed, at a loss, in an era of preponderating mind. As a quality of style, at all events, soul is a fact, in certain writers—the way they have of absorbing language, of attracting it into the peculiar spirit they are of, with a subtlety which makes the actual result seem like some inexplicable inspiration. [740]

By mind, the literary artist reaches us, through static and objective indications of design in his work, legible to all. By soul, he reaches us, somewhat capriciously perhaps, one and not another, through vagrant sympathy and a kind of immediate contact. Mind we cannot choose but approve where we recognize it; soul may repel us, not because we misunderstand it. The way in which [750] theological interests sometimes avail themselves of language is perhaps the best illustration of the force I mean to indicate generally in literature, by the word soul. Ardent religious persuasion may exist, may make its way, without finding any equivalent heat in language: or, again, it may enkindle words to various degrees, and when it really takes hold of them doubles its force. Religious [760] history presents many remarkable instances in which, through no mere phrase-worship, an unconscious literary tact has, for the sensitive, laid open a privileged pathway from one to another. "The altar-fire," people say, "has touched those lips!" The Vulgate, the English Bible, the English Prayer-Book, the writings of Swedenborg, the Tracts for the Times:—there, we have instances [770] of widely different and largely diffused phases of religious feeling in operation as soul in style. But something of the same kind acts with similar power in certain writers of quite other than theological literature, on behalf of some wholly personal and peculiar sense of theirs. Most easily illustrated by theological literature, this quality lends to profane writers a kind of religious influence. At their [780] best, these writers become, as we say sometimes, "prophets;" such character depending on the effect not merely of their matter, but of their matter as allied to, in "electric affinity" with, peculiar form, and working in all cases by an immediate sympathetic contact, on which account it is that it may be called soul, as opposed to mind, in style. And this too is a faculty of choosing and rejecting what is [790] congruous or otherwise, with a drift towards unity—unity of atmosphere here, as there of design—soul securing color (or perfume, might we say?) as mind secures form, the latter being essentially finite, the former vague or infinite, as the influence of a living person is practically infinite. There are some to whom nothing has any real interest, or real meaning, except as operative in a [800] given person; and it is they who best appreciate the quality of soul in literary art. They seem to know a person, in a book, and make way by intuition: yet, although they thus enjoy the completeness of a personal information, it is still a characteristic of soul, in this sense of the word, that it does but suggest what can never be uttered, not as being different from, or more obscure than, what ac- [810] tually gets said, but as containing that plenary substance of which there is only one phase or facet in what is there expressed.

If all high things have their martyrs, Gustave Flaubert might perhaps rank as the martyr of literary style. In his printed correspondence a curious series of letters, written in his twenty-fifth year, records what seems to have been [820] his one other passion—a series of letters which, with its fine casuistries, its firmly repressed anguish, its tone of harmonious gray, and the sense of disillusion in which the whole matter ends, might have been, a few slight changes supposed, one of his own fictions. Writing to Madame X. certainly he does display, by "taking thought" mainly, by constant and delicate pondering, as in his love for [830] literature, a heart really moved, but still more, and as the pledge of that emotion, a loyalty to his work. Madame X., too, is a literary artist, and the best gifts he can send her are precepts of perfection in art, counsels for the effectual pursuit of that better love. In his love-letters it is the pains and pleasures of art he insists on, its solaces: he communicates secrets, reproves, encourages, [840] with a view to that. Whether the lady was dissatisfied with such divided or indirect service, the reader is not enabled to see; but sees that, on Flaubert's part at least, a living person could be no rival of what was, from first to last, his leading passion, a somewhat solitary and exclusive one.

"I must scold you," he writes, "for one thing, which shocks, scandalizes me, [850 the small concern, namely, you show for art just now. As regards glory be it so: there, I approve. But for art!—the one thing in life that is good and real—can you compare with it an earthly love?—prefer the adoration of a relative beauty to the cultus of the true beauty? Well! I tell you the truth. That is the one thing good in me: the one thing I have, to me estimable. For yourself, you blend [860 with the beautiful a heap of alien things, the useful, the agreeable, what not?—

"The only way not to be unhappy is to shut yourself up in art, and count everything else as nothing. Pride takes the place of all beside when it is established on a large basis. Work! God wills it. That, it seems to me, is clear.—

"I am reading over again the Æneid, [870 certain verses of which I repeat to myself to satiety. There are phrases there which stay in one's head, by which I find myself beset, as with those musical airs which are forever returning, and cause you pain, you love them so much. I observe that I no longer laugh much, and am no longer depressed. I am ripe. You talk of my serenity, and envy me. It may well surprise you. Sick, [880 irritated, the prey a thousand times a day of cruel pain, I continue my labor like a true working-man, who, with sleeves turned up, in the sweat of his brow, beats away at his anvil, never troubling himself whether it rains or blows, for hail or thunder. I was not like that formerly. The change has taken place naturally, though my will has counted for something in the matter.— [890

"Those who write in good style are sometimes accused of a neglect of ideas, and of the moral end, as if the end of the physician were something else than healing, of the painter than painting—as if the end of art were not, before all else, the beautiful."

What, then, did Flaubert understand by beauty, in the art he pursued with so much fervor, with so much self-command? [900 Let us hear a sympathetic commentator:—

"Possessed of an absolute belief that there exists but one way of expressing one thing, one word to call it by, one adjective to qualify, one verb to animate it, he gave himself to superhuman labor for the discovery, in every phrase, of that word, that verb, that epithet. In this way, he believed in some mysterious [910 harmony of expression, and when a true word seemed to him to lack euphony still went on seeking another, with invincible patience, certain that he had not yet got hold of the unique word. . . . A thousand preoccupations would beset him at the same moment, always with this desperate certitude fixed in his spirit: Among all the expressions in the world, all forms and turns of expression, there is but [920 one—one form, one mode—to express what I want to say."

The one word for the one thing, the one thought, amid the multitude of words, terms, that might just do: the problem of style was there!—the unique word, phrase, sentence, paragraph, essay, or song, absolutely proper to the single mental presentation or vision within. In that perfect justice, over and above the [930 many contingent and removable beauties with which beautiful style may charm us, but which it can exist without, independent of them yet dexterously availing itself of them, omnipresent in good work, in function at every point, from single epithets to the rhythm of a whole book, lay the specific, indispensable, very intellectual, beauty of literature, the possibility of which constitutes it a fine [940 art.

One seems to detect the influence of a philosophic idea there, the idea of a natural economy, of some preëxistent adaptation, between a relative, somewhere in the world of thought, and its correlative, somewhere in the world of language—both alike, rather, somewhere in the mind of the artist, desiderative, expectant, inventive—meeting each other [950 with the readiness of "soul and body reunited," in Blake's rapturous design; and, in fact, Flaubert was fond of giving his theory philosophical expression.—

"There are no beautiful thoughts," he would say, "without beautiful forms, and conversely. As it is impossible to extract from a physical body the qualities which really constitute it—color, extension, [960 and the like—without reducing it to a hollow abstraction, in a word, without destroying it; just so it is impossible to detach the form from the idea, for the idea only exists by virtue of the form."

All the recognized flowers, the removable ornaments of literature (including harmony and ease in reading aloud, very carefully considered by him) counted certainly; for these too are part of the [970 actual value of what one says. But still, after all, with Flaubert, the search, the unwearied research, was not for the smooth, or winsome, or forcible word, as such, as with false Ciceronians, but quite simply and honestly for the word's adjustment to its meaning. The first condition of this must be, of course, to know yourself, to have ascertained your own sense exactly. Then, if we suppose [980 an artist, he says to the reader,—I want you to see precisely what I see. Into the mind sensitive to "form," a flood of random sounds, colors, incidents, is ever penetrating from the world without, to become, by sympathetic selection, a part of its very structure, and, in turn, the visible vesture and expression of that other world it sees so steadily within, nay, already with a partial con- [990 formity thereto, to be refined, enlarged, corrected, at a hundred points; and it is just there, just at those doubtful points that the function of style, as tact or taste, intervenes. The unique term will come more quickly to one than another, at one time than another, according also to the kind of matter in question. Quick-ness and slowness, ease and closeness alike, have nothing to do with the [1000 artistic character of the true word found at last. As there is a charm of ease, so there is also a special charm in the signs of discovery, of effort and contention towards a due end, as so often with Flaubert himself—in the style which has been pliant, as only obstinate, durable metal can be, to the inherent perplexities and recusancy of a certain difficult thought. [1010

If Flaubert had not told us, perhaps we should never have guessed how tardy and painful his own procedure really was, and after reading his confession may think that his almost endless hesitation had much to do with diseased nerves. Often, perhaps, the felicity supposed will be the product of a happier, a more exuberant nature than Flaubert's. Aggravated, certainly, by a morbid physical condi- [1020 tion, that anxiety in "seeking the phrase," which gathered all the other small ennuis of a really quiet existence into a kind of battle, was connected with his lifelong contention against facile poetry, facile art—art, facile and flimsy; and what constitutes the true artist is not the slowness or quickness of the process, but the absolute success of the result. As with those laborers in the parable, the [1030 prize is independent of the mere length of the actual day's work. "You talk," he writes, odd, trying lover, to Madame X.—

"You talk of the exclusiveness of my literary tastes. That might have enabled you to divine what kind of a person I am in the matter of love. I grow so hard to please as a literary artist, that I am driven to despair. I shall end by not writing another line." [1040

"Happy," he cries, in a moment of discouragement at that patient labor, which for him, certainly, was the condition of a great success—

"Happy those who have no doubts of themselves! who lengthen out, as the pen runs on, all that flows forth from their brains. As for me, I hesitate, I disappoint myself, turn round upon myself in despite: my taste is augmented in [1050 proportion as my natural vigor decreases, and I afflict my soul over some dubious word out of all proportion to the pleasure I get from a whole page of good writing. One would have to live two centuries to attain a true idea of any matter whatever. What Buffon said is a big blasphemy: genius is not long-continued patience. Still, there is some truth in the statement, and more than people [1060 think, especially as regards our own day. Art! art! art! bitter deception! phantom that glows with light, only to lead one on to destruction."

Again—

"I am growing so peevish about my writing. I am like a man whose ear is true but who plays falsely on the violin: his fingers refuse to reproduce precisely those sounds of which he has the [1070 inward sense. Then the tears come rolling down from the poor scraper's eyes and the bow falls from his hand."

Coming slowly or quickly, when it comes, as it came with so much labor of mind, but also with so much luster, to Gustave Flaubert, this discovery of the word will be, like all artistic success and felicity, incapable of strict analysis: effect of an intuitive condition of mind, [1080 it must be recognized by like intuition on the part of the reader, and a sort of immediate sense. In every one of those masterly sentences of Flaubert there was, below all mere contrivance, shaping and afterthought, by some happy instantaneous concourse of the various faculties of the mind with each other, the exact apprehension of what was needed to carry the meaning. And that [1090 it fits with absolute justice will be a judgment of immediate sense in the appreciative reader. We all feel this in what may be called inspired translation. Well! all language involves translation from inward to outward. In literature, as in all forms of art, there are the absolute and the merely relative or accessory beauties; and precisely in that exact proportion of the term to its purpose is the [1100 absolute beauty of style, prose or verse. All the good qualities, the beauties, of verse also, are such, only as precise expression.

In the highest as in the lowliest literature, then, the one indispensable beauty is, after all, truth:—truth to bare fact in the latter, as to some personal sense of fact, diverted somewhat from men's ordinary sense of it, in the former; [1110 truth there as accuracy, truth here as expression, that finest and most intimate form of truth, the vraie vérité. And what an eclectic principle this really is! employing for its one sole purpose—that absolute accordance of expression to ~~idea~~ ^{idea} all other literary beauties and excellences whatever: how many kinds of style it covers, explains, justifies, and at the same time safeguards! Scott's [1120 facility, Flaubert's deeply pondered evocation of "the phrase," are equally good art. Say what you have to say, what you have a will to say, in the simplest, the most direct and exact manner possible, with no surplusage:—there, is the justification of the sentence so fortunately born, "entire, smooth, and round," that it needs no punctuation, and also (that is the point!) of the most [1130 elaborate period, if it be right in its elaboration. Here is the office of ornament:—here also the purpose of restraint in ornament. As the exponent of truth, that austerity (the beauty, the function, of which in literature Flaubert understood so well) becomes not the correctness or purism of the mere scholar, but a security against the otiose, a jealous exclusion of what does not really tell towards the [1140 pursuit of relief, of life and vigor in the portraiture of one's sense. License again, the making free with rule, if it be indeed, as people fancy, a habit of genius, flinging aside or transforming all that opposes the liberty of beautiful production, will be but faith to one's own meaning. The seeming baldness of Le Rouge et Le Noir is nothing in itself; the wild ornament of Les Misérables is nothing in it- [1150 self; and the restraint of Flaubert, amid a real natural opulence, only redoubled beauty—the phrase so large and so precise at the same time, hard as bronze, in service to the more perfect adaptation of words to their matter. Afterthoughts, retouchings, finish, will be of profit only so far as they too really serve to bring out the original, initiative, generative, sense in them. [1160

In this way, according to the well-known saying, "The style is the man," complex or simple, in his individuality, his plenary sense of what he really has to say, his sense of the world; all cautions regarding style arising out of so many natural scruples as to the medium through which alone he can expose that inward sense of things, the purity of this medium, its laws or tricks of refraction: [1170 nothing is to be left there which might give conveyance to any matter save that.

Style in all its varieties, reserved or opulent, terse, abundant, musical, stimulant, academic, so long as each is really characteristic or expressive, finds thus its justification, the sumptuous good taste of Cicero being as truly the man himself, and not another, justified, yet insured inalienably to him, thereby, as would [1180] have been his portrait by Raffaele, in full consular splendor, on his ivory chair.

A relegation, you may say perhaps—a relegation of style to the subjectivity, the mere caprice, of the individual, which must soon transform it into mannerism. Not so! since there is, under the conditions supposed, for those elements of the man, for every lineament of the [1190] vision within, the one word, the one acceptable word, recognizable by the sensitive, by others “who have intelligence” in the matter, as absolutely as ever anything can be in the evanescent and delicate region of human language. The style, the manner, would be the man, not in his unreasoned and really uncharacteristic caprices, involuntary or affected, but in absolutely sincere apprehension of what is most real to him. [1200] But let us hear our French guide again.—

“Styles,” says Flaubert’s commentator, “Styles, as so many peculiar molds, each of which bears the mark of a particular writer, who is to pour into it the whole content of his ideas, were no part of his theory. What he believed in was Style: that is to say, a certain absolute and unique manner of expressing a [1210] thing, in all its intensity and color. For him the form was the work itself. As in living creatures, the blood, nourishing the body, determines its very contour and external aspect, just so, to his mind, the matter, the basis, in a work of art, imposed necessarily the unique, the just expression, the measure, the rhythm—the form in all its characteristics.”

If the style be the man, in all the [1220] color and intensity of a veritable apprehension, it will be in a real sense “impersonal.”

I said, thinking of books like Victor Hugo’s Les Misérables, that prose literature was the characteristic art of the nineteenth century, as others, thinking of its triumphs since the youth of Bach, have assigned that place to music. Music and prose literature are, in one sense, the opposite terms of art; the art of [1230] literature presenting to the imagination, through the intelligence, a range of interests, as free and various as those which music presents to it through sense. And, certainly the tendency of what has been here said is to bring literature too under those conditions, by conformity to which music takes rank as the typically perfect art. If music be the ideal of all art whatever, precisely because in music it is [1240] impossible to distinguish the form from the substance or matter, the subject from the expression, then literature, by finding its specific excellence in the absolute correspondence of the term to its import, will be but fulfilling the condition of all artistic quality in things everywhere, of all good art.

Good art, but not necessarily great art; the distinction between great art and good art depending immediately, [1250] as regards literature at all events, not on its form, but on the matter. Thackeray’s Esmond, surely, is greater art than Vanity Fair, by the greater dignity of its interests. It is on the quality of the matter it informs or controls, its compass, its variety, its alliance to great ends, or the depth of the note of revolt, or the largeness of hope in it, that the greatness of literary art depends, as The Divine Comedy, [1260] Paradise Lost, Les Misérables, The English Bible, are great art. Given the conditions I have tried to explain as constituting good art;—then, if it be devoted further to the increase of men’s happiness, to the redemption of the oppressed, or the enlargement of our sympathies with each other, or to such presentment of new or old truth about ourselves and our relation to the [1270] world as may ennoble and fortify us in our sojourn here, or immediately, as with Dante, to the glory of God, it will be also great art; if, over and above those qualities I summed up as mind and soul—that color and mystic perfume, and that reasonable structure, it has something of the soul of humanity in it, and finds its logical, its architectural place, in the great structure of human life. [1280]

WORDSWORTH

Some English critics at the beginning of the present century had a great deal to say concerning a distinction of much importance, as they thought, in the true estimate of poetry, between the Fancy, and another more powerful faculty—the Imagination. This metaphysical distinction, borrowed originally from the writings of German philosophers, and perhaps not always clearly apprehended by [10 those who talked of it, involved a far deeper and more vital distinction, with which indeed all true criticism more or less directly has to do, the distinction, namely, between higher and lower degrees of intensity in the poet's perception of his subject, and in his concentration of himself upon his work. Of those who dwelt upon the metaphysical distinction between the Fancy and the Im- [20 agination, it was Wordsworth who made the most of it, assuming it as the basis for the final classification of his poetical writings; and it is in these writings that the deeper and more vital distinction, which, as I have said, underlies the metaphysical distinction, is most needed, and may best be illustrated.

For nowhere is there so perplexed a mixture as in Wordsworth's own poetry [30 try, of work touched with intense and individual power, with work of almost no character at all. He has much conventional sentiment, and some of that insincere poetic diction, against which his most serious critical efforts were directed: the reaction in his political ideas, consequent on the excesses of 1795, makes him, at times, a mere declaimer on moral and social topics; and he [40 seems, sometimes, to force an unwilling pen, and write by rule. By making the most of these blemishes it is possible to obscure the true æsthetic value of his work, just as his life also, a life of much quiet delicacy and independence, might easily be placed in a false focus, and made to appear a somewhat tame theme in illustration of the more obvious parochial virtues. And those who wish to under- [50 stand his influence, and experience his peculiar savor, must bear with patience

the presence of an alien element in Wordsworth's work, which never coalesced with what is really delightful in it, nor underwent his special power. Who that values his writings most has not felt the intrusion there, from time to time, of something tedious and prosaic? Of all poets equally great, he would gain most by [60 a skilfully made anthology. Such a selection would show, in truth, not so much what he was, or to himself or others seemed to be, as what, by the more energetic and fertile quality in his writings, he was ever tending to become. And the mixture in his work, as it actually stands, is so perplexed, that one fears to miss the least promising composition even, lest some precious morsel should be lying [70 hidden within—the few perfect lines, the phrase, the single word perhaps, to which he often works up mechanically through a poem, almost the whole of which may be tame enough. He who thought that in all creative work the larger part was given passively, to the recipient mind, who waited so dutifully upon the gift, to whom so large a measure was sometimes given, had his [80 times also of desertion and relapse; and he has permitted the impress of these too to remain in his work. And this duality there—the fitfulness with which the higher qualities manifest themselves in it, gives the effect in his poetry of a power not altogether his own, or under his control, which comes and goes when it will, lifting or lowering a matter, poor in itself; so that that old fancy which [90 made the poet's art an enthusiasm, a form of divine possession, seems almost literally true of him.

This constant suggestion of an absolute duality between higher and lower moods, and the work done in them, stimulating one always to look below the surface, makes the reading of Wordsworth an excellent sort of training towards the things of art and poetry. It begets in [100 those, who, coming across him in youth, can bear him at all, a habit of reading between the lines, a faith in the effect of concentration and collectedness of mind in the right appreciation of poetry, an expectation of things, in this order, coming to one by means of a right discipline of the temper as well as of the intellect. He meets us with the promise that he has much, and something very peculiar, [110 to give us, if we will follow a certain difficult way, and seems to have the secret of a special and privileged state of mind. And those who have undergone his influence, and followed this difficult way, are like people who have passed through some initiation, a disciplina arcani, by submitting to which they become able constantly to distinguish in art, speech, feeling, manners, that which is organic, [120 animated, expressive, from that which is only conventional, derivative, inexpressive.

But although the necessity of selecting these precious morsels for oneself is an opportunity for the exercise of Wordsworth's peculiar influence, and induces a kind of just criticism and true estimate of it, yet the purely literary product would have been more excellent, had the writer himself purged away that alien [130 element. How perfect would have been the little treasury, shut between the covers of how thin a book! Let us suppose the desired separation made, the electric thread untwined, the golden pieces, great and small, lying apart together. What are the peculiarities of this residue? What special sense does Wordsworth exercise, and what instincts does he satisfy? What are the subjects [140 and the motives which in him excite the imaginative faculty? What are the qualities in things and persons which he values, the impression and sense of which he can convey to others, in an extraordinary way?

An intimate consciousness of the expression of natural things, which weighs, listens, penetrates, where the earlier mind passed roughly by, is a large element in the complexion of modern [150 poetry. It has been remarked as a fact in mental history again and again. It reveals itself in many forms; but is strongest and most attractive in what is strongest and most attractive in modern literature. It is exemplified, almost equally, by writers as unlike each other as Senancour and Théophile Gautier: as a singular chapter in the history of the human mind, its growth might be [160 traced from Rousseau to Chateaubriand, from Chateaubriand to Victor Hugo: it has doubtless some latent connection with those pantheistic theories which locate an intelligent soul in material things, and have largely exercised men's minds in some modern systems of philosophy: it is traceable even in the graver writings of historians: it makes as much difference between ancient and modern [170 landscape art, as there is between the rough masks of an early mosaic and a portrait by Reynolds or Gainsborough. Of this new sense, the writings of Wordsworth are the central and elementary expression: he is more simply and entirely occupied with it than any other poet, though there are fine expressions of precisely the same thing in so different a poet as Shelley. There was in his [180 own character a certain contentment, a sort of inborn religious placidity, seldom found united with a sensibility so mobile as his, which was favorable to the quiet, habitual observation of inanimate, or imperfectly animate, existence. His life of eighty years is divided by no very profoundly felt incidents: its changes are almost wholly inward, and it falls into broad, untroubled, perhaps somewhat [190 monotonous spaces. What it most resembles is the life of one of those early Italian or Flemish painters, who, just because their minds were full of heavenly visions, passed, some of them, the better part of sixty years in quiet, systematic industry. This placid life matured a quite unusual sensibility, really innate in him, to the sights and sounds of the natural world—the flower and its [200 shadow on the stone, the cuckoo and its echo. The poem of Resolution and Independence is a storehouse of such records: for its fulness of imagery it may be compared to Keats's Saint Agnes' Eve. To read one of his longer pastoral poems for the first time, is like a day spent in a new country: the memory is crowded for a while with its precise and vivid incidents— [210

"The pliant harebell swinging in the breeze
On some gray rock";—

"The single sheep and the one blasted tree
And the bleak music from that old stone wall";—

"And in the meadows and the lower grounds
Was all the sweetness of a common
dawn";—

"And that green corn all day is rustling in thine ears."

Clear and delicate at once, as he is in the outlining of visible imagery, he is more clear and delicate still, and finely [220] scrupulous, in the noting of sounds; so that he conceives a noble sound as even moulding the human countenance to nobler types, and as something actually "profaned" by color, by visible form, or image. He has a power likewise of realizing, and conveying to the consciousness of the reader, abstract and elementary impressions—silence, darkness, absolute motionlessness: or, again, the [230] whole complex sentiment of a particular place, the abstract expression of desolation in the long white road, of peacefulness in a particular folding of the hills. In the airy building of the brain, a special day or hour even, comes to have for him a sort of personal identity, a spirit or angel given to it, by which, for its exceptional insight, or the happy light upon it, it has a presence in [240] one's history, and acts there, as a separate power or accomplishment; and he has celebrated in many of his poems the "efficacious spirit," which, as he says, resides in these "particular spots" of time.

It is to such a world, and to a world of congruous meditation thereon, that we see him retiring in his but lately published poem of The Recluse—taking leave, [250] without much count of costs, of the world of business, of action and ambition, as also of all that for the majority of mankind counts as sensuous enjoyment.

And so it came about that this sense of a life in natural objects, which in most poetry is but a rhetorical artifice, is with Wordsworth the assertion of what for him is almost literal fact. To him every natural object seemed to possess [260]

more or less of a moral or spiritual life, to be capable of a companionship with man, full of expression, of inexplicable affinities and delicacies of intercourse. An emanation, a particular spirit, belonged, not to the moving leaves or water only, but to the distant peak of the hills arising suddenly, by some change of perspective, above the nearer horizon, to the passing space of light across the [270] plain, to the lichen-druoidic stone even, for a certain weird fellowship in it with the moods of men. It was like a "survival," in the peculiar intellectual temperament of a man of letters at the end of the eighteenth century, of that primitive condition, which some philosophers have traced in the general history of human culture, wherein all outward objects alike, including even the [280] works of men's hands, were believed to be endowed with animation, and the world was "full of souls"—that mood in which the old Greek gods were first begotten, and which had many strange aftergrowths.

In the early ages, this belief, delightful as its effects on poetry often are, was but the result of a crude intelligence. But, in Wordsworth, such power of seeing [290] life, such perception of a soul, in inanimate things, came of an exceptional susceptibility to the impressions of eye and ear, and was, in its essence, a kind of sensuousness. At least, it is only in a temperament exceptionally susceptible on the sensuous side, that this sense of the expressiveness of outward things comes to be so large a part of life. That he awakened "a sort of thought in [300] sense," is Shelley's just estimate of this element in Wordsworth's poetry.

And it was through nature, thus ennobled by a semblance of passion and thought, that he approached the spectacle of human life. Human life, indeed, is for him, at first, only an additional, accidental grace on an expressive landscape. When he thought of man, it was of man as in the presence and [310] under the influence of these effective natural objects, and linked to them by many associations. The close connection of man with natural objects, the habitual association of his thoughts and feelings with a particular spot of earth, has sometimes seemed to degrade those who are subject to its influence, as if it did but reinforce that physical connection of our nature with the actual lime and clay of [320] the soil, which is always drawing us nearer to our end. But for Wordsworth, these influences tended to the dignity of human nature, because they tended to tranquilize it. By raising nature to the level of human thought he gives it power and expression: he subdues man to the level of nature, and gives him thereby a certain breadth and coolness and solemnity. The leech-gatherer on the moor, [330] the woman "stepping westward," are for him natural objects, almost in the same sense as the aged thorn, or the lichen rock on the heath. In this sense the leader of the "Lake School," in spite of an earnest preoccupation with man, his thoughts, his destiny, is the poet of nature. And of nature, after all, in its modesty. The English lake country has, of course, its grandeurs. [340] But the peculiar function of Wordsworth's genius, as carrying in it a power to open out the soul of apparently little or familiar things, would have found its true test had he become the poet of Surrey, say! and the prophet of its life. The glories of Italy and Switzerland, though he did write a little about them, had too potent a material life of their own to serve greatly his poetic [350] purpose.

Religious sentiment, consecrating the affections and natural regrets of the human heart, above all, that pitiful awe and care for the perishing human clay, of which relic-worship is but the corruption, has always had much to do with localities, with the thoughts which attach themselves to actual scenes and places. Now what is true of it everywhere, is [360] truest of it in those secluded valleys where one generation after another maintains the same abiding-place; and it was on this side, that Wordsworth apprehended religion most strongly. Consisting, as it did so much, in the recognition of local sanctities, in the habit of connecting the stones and trees of a particular spot of earth with the great events of life, till the low walls, the green mounds, [370] the half-obliterated epitaphs seemed full of voices, and a sort of natural oracles, the very religion of these people of the dales appeared but as another link between them and the earth, and was literally a religion of nature. It tranquillized them by bringing them under the placid rule of traditional and narrowly localized observances. "Grave livers," they seemed to him, under this aspect, with [380] stately speech, and something of that natural dignity of manners, which underlies the highest courtesy.

And, seeing man thus as a part of nature, elevated and solemnized in proportion as his daily life and occupations brought him into companionship with permanent natural objects, his very religion forming new links for him with the narrow limits of the valley, the low vaults [390] of his church, the rough stones of his home, made intense for him now with profound sentiment, Wordsworth was able to appreciate passion in the lowly. He chooses to depict people from humble life, because, being nearer to nature than others, they are on the whole more impassioned, certainly more direct in their expression of passion, than other men: it is for this direct expression of passion, [400] that he values their humble words. In much that he said in exaltation of rural life, he was but pleading indirectly for that sincerity, that perfect fidelity to one's own inward presentations, to the precise features of the picture within, without which any profound poetry is impossible. It was not for their tameness, but for this passionate sincerity, that he chose incidents and situations [410] from common life, "related in a selection of language really used by men." He constantly endeavors to bring his language near to the real language of men: to the real language of men, however, not on the dead level of their ordinary intercourse, but in select moments of vivid sensation, when this language is winnowed and ennobled by excitement. There are poets who have chosen rural [420] life as their subject, for the sake of its passionless repose, and times when Wordsworth himself extols the mere calm and dispassionate survey of things as the highest aim of poetical culture. But it was not for such passionless calm that he preferred the scenes of pastoral life; and the meditative poet, sheltering himself, as it might seem, from the agitations of the outward world, is in reality only [430 clearing the scene for the great exhibitions of emotion, and what he values most is the almost elementary expression of elementary feelings.

And so he has much for those who value highly the concentrated presentment of passion, who appraise men and women by their susceptibility to it, and art and poetry as they afford the spectacle of it. Breaking from time [440 to time into the pensive spectacle of their daily toil, their occupations near to nature, come those great elementary feelings, lifting and solemnizing their language and giving it a natural music. The great, distinguishing passion came to Michael by the sheepfold, to Ruth by the wayside, adding these humble children of the furrow to the true aristocracy of passionate souls. In this [450 respect, Wordsworth's work resembles most that of George Sand, in those of her novels which depict country life. With a penetrative pathos, which puts him in the same rank with the masters of the sentiment of pity in literature, with Meinhold and Victor Hugo, he collects all the traces of vivid excitement which were to be found in that pastoral world—the girl who rung her father's knell; the [460 unborn infant feeling about its mother's heart; the instinctive touches of children; the sorrows of the wild creatures, even—their home-sickness, their strange yearnings; the tales of passionate regret that hang by a ruined farm-building, a heap of stones, a deserted sheepfold; that gay, false, adventurous, outer world, which breaks in from time to time to bewilder and deflower these quiet homes; [470 not "passionate sorrow" only, for the overthrow of the soul's beauty, but the loss of, or carelessness for personal beauty even, in those whom men have wronged—their pathetic wanness; the sailor "who, in his heart, was half a shepherd on the stormy seas;" the wild woman teaching her child to pray for her betrayer; incidents like the making of the shepherd's staff, or that of the young boy laying [480 the first stone of the sheepfold;—all the pathetic episodes of their humble existence, their longing, their wonder at fortune, their poor pathetic pleasures, like the pleasures of children, won so hardly in the struggle for bare existence; their yearning towards each other, in their darkened houses, or at their early toil. A sort of biblical depth and solemnity hangs over this strange, new, pas- [490 sionate, pastoral world, of which he first raised the image, and the reflection of which some of our best modern fiction has caught from him.

He pondered much over the philosophy of his poetry, and reading deeply in the history of his own mind, seems at times to have passed the borders of a world of strange speculations, inconsistent enough, had he cared to note such [500 inconsistencies, with those traditional beliefs, which were otherwise the object of his devout acceptance. Thinking of the high value he set upon customariness, upon all that is habitual, local, rooted in the ground, in matters of religious sentiment, you might sometimes regard him as one tethered down to a world, refined and peaceful indeed, but with no broad outlook, a world protected, but [510 somewhat narrowed, by the influence of received ideas. But he is at times also something very different from this, and something much bolder. A chance expression is overheard and placed in a new connection, the sudden memory of a thing long past occurs to him, a distant object is relieved for a while by a random gleam of light—accidents turning up for a moment what lies below the [520 surface of our immediate experience—and he passes from the humble graves and lowly arches of "the little rock-like pile" of a Westmoreland church, on bold trains of speculative thought, and comes, from point to point, into strange contact with thoughts which have visited, from time to time, far more venturesome, perhaps errant, spirits.

He had pondered deeply, for in- [530 stance, on those strange reminiscences and forebodings, which seem to make our lives stretch before and behind us, beyond where we can see or touch anything, or trace the lines of connection. Following the soul, backwards and forwards, on these endless ways, his sense of man's dim, potential powers became a pledge to him, indeed, of a future life, but carried him back also to that mysterious notion [540 of an earlier state of existence—the fancy of the Platonists—the old heresy of Origen. It was in this mood that he conceived those oft-reiterated regrets for a half-ideal childhood, when the relics of Paradise still clung about the soul—a childhood, as it seemed, full of the fruits of old age, lost for all, in a degree, in the passing away of the youth of the world, lost for each one, over again, in [550 the passing away of actual youth. It is this ideal childhood which he celebrates in his famous Ode on the Recollections of Childhood, and some other poems which may be grouped around it, such as the lines on Tintern Abbey, and something like what he describes was actually truer of himself than he seems to have understood; for his own most delightful poems were really the instinctive pro- [560 ductions of earlier life, and most surely for him, "the first diviner influence of this world" passed away, more and more completely, in his contact with experience.

Sometimes as he dwelt upon those moments of profound, imaginative power, in which the outward object appears to take color and expression, a new nature almost, from the prompting of the [570 observant mind, the actual world would, as it were, dissolve and detach itself, flake by flake, and he himself seemed to be the creator, and when he would, the destroyer, of the world in which he lived—that old isolating thought of many a brain-sick mystic of ancient and modern times.

At other times, again, in those periods of intense susceptibility, in which he [580 appeared to himself as but the passive recipient of external influences, he was attracted by the thought of a spirit of life in outward things, a single, all-pervading mind in them, of which man, and even the poet's imaginative energy, are but moments—that old dream of the anima mundi, the mother of all things and their grave, in which some had desired to lose themselves, and others had [590 become indifferent to the distinctions of good and evil. It would come, sometimes, like the sign of the macrocosm to Faust in his cell: the network of man and nature was seen to be pervaded by a common, universal life: a new, bold thought lifted him above the furrow, above the green turf of the Westmoreland churchyard, to a world altogether different in its vagueness and vastness, and [600 the narrow glen was full of the brooding power of one universal spirit.

And so he has something, also, for those who feel the fascination of bold speculative ideas, who are really capable of rising upon them to conditions of poetical thought. He uses them, indeed, always with a very fine apprehension of the limits within which alone philosophical imaginings have any place in true poe- [610 try; and using them only for poetical purposes, is not too careful even to make them consistent with each other. To him, theories which for other men bring a world of technical diction, brought perfect form and expression, as in those two lofty books of the Prelude, which describe the decay and the restoration of Imagination and Taste. Skirting the borders of this world of bewildering [620 heights and depths, he got but the first exciting influence of it, that joyful enthusiasm which great imaginative theories prompt, when the mind first comes to have an understanding of them; and it is not under the influence of these thoughts that his poetry becomes tedious or loses its blitheness. He keeps them, too, always within certain ethical bounds, so that no word of his could offend the [630 simplest of those simple souls which are always the largest portion of mankind. But it is, nevertheless, the contact of these thoughts, the speculative boldness in them, which constitutes, at least for some minds, the secret attraction of much of his best poetry—the sudden passage from lowly thoughts and places to the majestic forms of philosophical imagination, the play of these [640 forms over a world so different, enlarging so strangely the bounds of its humble churchyards, and breaking such a wild light on the graves of christened children.

And these moods always brought with them faultless expression. In regard to expression, as with feeling and thought, the duality of the higher and lower moods was absolute. It belonged to the higher, the imaginative mood, and was the [650 pledge of its reality, to bring the appropriate language with it. In him, when the really poetical motive worked at all, it united, with absolute justice, the word and the idea; each, in the imaginative flame, becoming inseparably one with the other, by that fusion of matter and form, which is the characteristic of the highest poetical expression. His words are themselves thought and feeling; [660 not eloquent, or musical words merely, but that sort of creative language which carries the reality of what it depicts, directly, to the consciousness.

The music of mere metre performs but a limited, yet a very peculiar and subtly ascertained function, in Wordsworth's poetry. With him, metre is but an additional grace, accessory to that deeper music of words and sounds, that [670 moving power, which they exercise in the nobler prose no less than in formal poetry. It is a sedative to that excitement, an excitement sometimes almost painful, under which the language, alike of poetry and prose, attains a rhythmical power, independent of metrical combination, and dependent rather on some subtle adjustment of the elementary sounds of words themselves to the image or feel- [680 ing they convey. Yet some of his pieces, pieces prompted by a sort of half-playful mysticism, like the Daffodils and The Two April Mornings, are distinguished by a certain quaint gaiety of metre, and rival by their perfect execution, in this respect, similar pieces among our own Elizabethan, or contemporary French poetry. And those who take up these poems after an interval of months, or [690 years perhaps, may be surprised at finding how well old favorites wear, how their strange, inventive turns of diction or thought still send through them the old feeling of surprise. Those who lived about Wordsworth were all great lovers of the older English literature, and often times there came out in him a noticeable likeness to our earlier poets. He quotes unconsciously, but with new power of [700 meaning, a clause from one of Shakespeare's sonnets; and, as with some other men's most famous work, the Ode on the Recollections of Childhood had its anticipator. He drew something too from the unconscious mysticism of the old English language itself, drawing out the inward significance of its racy idiom, and the not wholly unconscious poetry of the language used by the simplest people [710 under strong excitement—language, therefore, at its origin.

The office of the poet is not that of the moralist, and the first aim of Wordsworth's poetry is to give the reader a peculiar kind of pleasure. But through his poetry, and through this pleasure in it, he does actually convey to the reader an extraordinary wisdom in the things of practice. One lesson, if men must [720 have lessons, he conveys more clearly than all, the supreme importance of contemplation in the conduct of life.

Contemplation—impassioned contemplation—that is with Wordsworth the end-in-itself, the perfect end. We see the majority of mankind going most often to definite ends, lower or higher ends, as their own instincts may determine; but the end may never be attained, and [730 the means not be quite the right means, great ends and little ones alike being, for the most part, distant, and the ways to them, in this dim world, somewhat vague. Meantime, to higher or lower ends, they move too often with something of a sad countenance, with hurried and ignoble gait, becoming, unconsciously, something like thorns, in their anxiety to bear grapes; it being possible for people, [740 in the pursuit of even great ends, to become themselves thin and impoverished in spirit and temper, thus diminishing the sum of perfection in the world, at its very sources. We understand this when it is a question of mean, or of intensely selfish ends—of Grandet, or Javert. We think it bad morality to say that the end justifies the means, and we know how false to all higher conceptions of the religious life is the type of one who is ready to do evil that good may come. We contrast with such dark, mistaken eagerness, a type like that of Saint Catherine of Siena, who made the means to her ends so attractive, that she has won for herself an undying place in the House Beautiful, not by her rectitude of soul only, but by its "fairness"—by those quite different qualities which commend themselves to the poet and the artist.

Yet, for most of us, the conception of means and ends covers the whole of life, and is the exclusive type or figure under which we represent our lives to ourselves. Such a figure, reducing all things to machinery, though it has on its side the authority of that old Greek moralist who has fixed for succeeding generations the outline of the theory of right living, is too like a mere picture or description of men's lives as we actually find them, to be the basis of the higher ethics. It covers the meanness of men's daily lives, and much of the dexterity and the vigor with which they pursue what may seem to them the good of themselves or of others; but not the intangible perfection of those whose ideal is rather in being than in doing—not those manners which are, in the deepest as in the simplest sense, morals, and without which one cannot so much as offer a cup of water to a poor man without offence—not the part of "antique Rachel," sitting in the company of Beatrice; and even the moralist might well endeavor rather to withdraw men from the too exclusive consideration of means and ends, in life.

Against this predominance of machinery in our existence, Wordsworth's poetry, like all great art and poetry, is a continual protest. Justify rather the end by the means, it seems to say: whatever may become of the fruit, make sure of the flowers and the leaves. It was justly said, therefore, by one who had meditated very profoundly on the true relation of means to ends in life, and on the distinction between what is desirable in itself and what is desirable only as machinery, that when the battle which he and his friends were waging had been won, the world would need more than ever those qualities which Wordsworth was keeping alive and nourishing.

That the end of life is not action but contemplation—being as distinct from doing—a certain disposition of the mind: is, in some shape or other, the principle of all the higher morality. In poetry, in art, if you enter into their true spirit at all, you touch this principle, in a measure: these, by their very sterility, are a type of beholding for the mere joy of beholding. To treat life in the spirit of art, is to make life a thing in which means and ends are identified: to encourage such treatment, the true moral significance of art and poetry. Wordsworth, and other poets who have been like him in ancient or more recent times, are the masters, the experts, in this art of impassioned contemplation. Their work is, not to teach lessons, or enforce rules, or even to stimulate us to noble ends; but to withdraw the thoughts for a little while from the mere machinery of life, to fix them, with appropriate emotions, on the spectacle of those great facts in man's existence which no machinery affects, "on the great and universal passions of men, the most general and interesting of their occupations, and the entire world of nature,"—on "the operations of the elements and the appearances of the visible universe, on storm and sunshine, on the revolutions of the seasons, on cold and heat, on loss of friends and kindred, on injuries and resentments, on gratitude and hope, on fear and sorrow." To witness this spectacle with appropriate emotions is the aim of all culture; and of these emotions poetry like Wordsworth's is a great nourisher and stimulant. He sees nature full of sentiment and excitement; he sees men and women as parts of nature, passionate, excited, in strange grouping and connection with the grandeur and beauty of the natural world:—images, in his own words, "of man suffering, amid awful forms and powers."

Such is the figure of the more powerful and original poet, hidden away, in part, under those weaker elements in Wordsworth's poetry, which for some minds determine their entire character; a poet somewhat bolder and more passionate than might at first sight be supposed, [860 but not too bold for true poetical taste; an unimpassioned writer, you might sometimes fancy. yet thinking the chief aim, in life and art alike, to be a certain deep emotion; seeking most often the great elementary passions in lowly places; having at least this condition of all impassioned work, that he aims always at an absolute sincerity of feeling and diction, so that he is the true fore- [870 runner of the deepest and most passionate poetry of our own day; yet going back also, with something of a protest against the conventional fervor of much of the poetry popular in his own time, to those older English poets, whose unconscious likeness often comes out in him.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
(1850-1894)

ÆS TRIPLEX

The changes wrought by death are in themselves so sharp and final, and so terrible and melancholy in their consequences, that the thing stands alone in man's experience, and has no parallel upon earth. It outdoes all other accidents because it is the last of them. Sometimes it leaps suddenly upon its victims, like a thug; sometimes it lays a regular siege and creeps upon their citadel [10 during a score of years. And when the business is done, there is sore havoc made in other people's lives, and a pin knocked out by which many subsidiary friendships hung together. There are empty chairs, solitary walks, and single beds at night. Again, in taking away our friends, death does not take them away utterly, but leaves behind a mocking, tragical, and soon intolerable residue, which must [20

be hurriedly concealed. Hence a whole chapter of sights and customs striking to the mind, from the pyramids of Egypt to the gibbets and dule trees of mediæval Europe. The poorest persons have a bit of pageant going towards the tomb; memorial stones are set up over the least memorable; and, in order to preserve some show of respect for what remains of our old loves and friendships, we must [30 accompany it with much grimly ludicrous ceremonial, and the hired undertaker parades before the door. All this, and much more of the same sort, accompanied by the eloquence of poets, has gone a great way to put humanity in error; nay, in many philosophies the error has been embodied and laid down with every circumstance of logic; although in real life the bustle and swiftness, in [40 leaving people little time to think, have not left them time enough to go dangerously wrong in practice.

As a matter of fact, although few things are spoken of with more fearful whisperings than this prospect of death, few have less influence on conduct under healthy circumstances. We have all heard of cities in South America built upon the side of fiery mountains, and how, even [50 in this tremendous neighborhood, the inhabitants are not a jot more impressed by the solemnity of mortal conditions than if they were delving gardens in the greenest corner of England. There are serenades and suppers and much gallantry among the myrtles overhead; and meanwhile the foundation shudders underfoot, the bowels of the mountain growl, and at any moment living ruin may leap [60 sky-high into the moonlight, and tumble man and his merry-making in the dust. In the eyes of very young people, and very dull old ones, there is something indescribably reckless and desperate in such a picture. It seems not credible that respectable married people, with umbrellas, should find appetite for a bit of supper within quite a long distance of a fiery mountain; ordinary life begins [70 to smell of high-handed debauch when it is carried on so close to a catastrophe; and even cheese and salad, it seems, could hardly be relished in such circumstances without something like a defiance of the Creator. It should be a place for nobody but hermits dwelling in prayer and maceration, or mere born-devils drowning care in a perpetual carouse.

And yet, when one comes to think [80 upon it calmly, the situation of these South American citizens forms only a very pale figure for the state of ordinary mankind. This world itself, travelling blindly and swiftly in over-crowded space, among a million other worlds travelling blindly and swiftly in contrary directions, may very well come by a knock that would set it into explosion like a penny squib. And what, pathologically [90 looked at, is the human body with all its organs, but a mere bagful of petards? The least of these is as dangerous to the whole economy as the ship's powder-magazine to the ship; and with every breath we breathe, and every meal we eat, we are putting one or more of them in peril. If we clung as devotedly as some philosophers pretend we do to the abstract idea of life, or were half as frightened [100 as they make out we are, for the subversive accident that ends it all, the trumpets might sound by the hour and no one would follow them into battle—the blue-peter might fly at the truck, but who would climb into a sea-going ship? Think (if these philosophers were right) with what a preparation of spirit we should affront the daily peril of the dinner-table; a deadlier spot than any battle-field [110 in history, where the far greater proportion of our ancestors have miserably left their bones! What woman would ever be lured into marriage, so much more dangerous than the wildest sea? And what would it be to grow old? For, after a certain distance, every step we take in life we find the ice growing thinner below our feet, and all around us and behind us we see our contemporaries [120 going through. By the time a man gets well into the seventies, his continued existence is a mere miracle; and when he lays his old bones in bed for the night, there is an overwhelming probability that he will never see the day. Do the old men mind it, as a matter of fact? Why, no. They were never merrier; they have their grog at night, and tell the raciest stories; they hear of the death of [130 people about their own age, or even younger, not as if it was a grisly warning, but with a simple childlike pleasure at having outlived some one else; and when a draught might puff them out like a guttering candle, or a bit of a stumble shatter them like so much glass, their old hearts keep sound and unaffrighted, and they go on, bubbling with laughter, through years of man's age compared [140 to which the valley at Balaclava was as safe and peaceful as a village cricket-green on Sunday. It may fairly be questioned (if we look to the peril only) whether it was a much more daring feat for Curtius to plunge into the gulf, than for any old gentleman of ninety to doff his clothes and clamber into bed.

Indeed, it is a memorable subject for consideration, with what unconcern [150 and gaiety mankind pricks on along the Valley of the Shadow of Death. The whole way is one wilderness of snares, and the end of it, for those who fear the last pinch, is irrevocable ruin. And yet we go spinning through it all, like a party for the Derby. Perhaps the reader remembers one of the humorous devices of the deified Caligula: how he encouraged a vast concourse of holiday- [160 makers on to his bridge over Baïæ bay; and when they were in the height of their enjoyment, turned loose the Prætorian guards among the company, and had them tossed into the sea. This is no bad miniature of the dealings of nature with the transitory race of man. Only, what a chequered picnic we have of it, even while it lasts! and into what great waters, not to be crossed by any swimmer, [170 God's pale Prætorian throws us over in the end!

We live the time that a match flickers; we pop the cork of a ginger-beer bottle, and the earthquake swallows us on the instant. Is it not odd, is it not incongruous, is it not, in the highest sense of human speech, incredible, that we should think so highly of the ginger-beer, and regard so little the devouring earth- [180 quake? The love of Life and the fear of Death are two famous phrases that grow harder to understand the more we think about them. It is a well-known fact that an immense proportion of boat accidents would never happen if people held the sheet in their hands instead of making it fast; and yet, unless it be some martinet of a professional mariner or some landsman with shattered nerves, [190 every one of God's creatures makes it fast. A strange instance of man's unconcern and brazen boldness in the face of death!

We confound ourselves with metaphysical phrases, which we import into daily talk with noble inappropriateness. We have no idea of what death is, apart from its circumstances and some of its consequences to others; and although we [200 have some experience of living there is not a man on earth who has flown so high into abstraction as to have any practical guess at the meaning of the word life. All literature, from Job and Omar Khayyâm to Thomas Carlyle or Walt Whitman, is but an attempt to look upon the human state with such largeness of view as shall enable us to rise from the consideration of living to the Def- [210 inition of Life. And our sages give us about the best satisfaction in their power when they say that it is a vapor, or a show, or made out of the same stuff with dreams. Philosophy, in its more rigid sense, has been at the same work for ages; and after a myriad bald heads have wagged over the problem, and piles of words have been heaped one upon another into dry and cloudy volumes [220 without end, philosophy has the honor of laying before us, with modest pride, her contribution towards the subject: that life is a Permanent Possibility of Sensation. Truly a fine result! A man may very well love beef, or hunting, or a woman; but surely, surely, not a Permanent Possibility of Sensation! He may be afraid of a precipice, or a dentist, or a large enemy with a club, or even an [230 undertaker's man; but not certainly of abstract death. We may trick with the word life in its dozen senses until we are weary of tricking; we may argue in terms of all the philosophies on earth, but one fact remains true throughout—that we do not love life, in the sense that we are greatly preoccupied about its conservation; that we do not, properly speaking, love life at all, but living. Into the [240 views of the least careful there will enter some degree of providence; no man's eyes are fixed entirely on the passing hour; but although we have some anticipation of good health, good weather, wine, active employment, love, and self-approval, the sum of these anticipations does not amount to anything like a general view of life's possibilities and issues; nor are those who cherish them most vividly [250 at all the most scrupulous of their personal safety. To be deeply interested in the accidents of our existence, to enjoy keenly the mixed texture of human experience, rather leads a man to disregard precautions, and risk his neck against a straw. For surely the love of living is stronger in an Alpine climber roping over a peril, or a hunter riding merrily at a stiff fence, than in a creature who [260 lives upon a diet and walks a measured distance in the interest of his constitution.

There is a great deal of very vile nonsense talked upon both sides of the matter: tearing divines reducing life to the dimensions of a mere funeral procession, so short as to be hardly decent, and melancholy unbelievers yearning for the tomb as if it were a world too [270 far away. Both sides must feel a little ashamed of their performances now and again when they draw in their chairs to dinner. Indeed, a good meal and a bottle of wine is an answer to most standard works upon the question. When a man's heart warms to his viands, he forgets a great deal of sophistry, and soars into a rosy zone of contemplation. Death may be knocking at the door, like the [280 Commander's statue; we have something else in hand, thank God, and let him knock. Passing bells are ringing all the world over. All the world over, and every hour, some one is parting company with all his aches and ecstasies. For us also the trap is laid. But we are so fond of life that we have no leisure to entertain the terror of death. It is a honeymoon with us all through, and none of the [290 longest. Small blame to us if we give our whole hearts to this glowing bride of curs, to the appetites, to honor, to the hungry curiosity of the mind, to the pleasure of the eyes in nature, and the pride of our own nimble bodies.

We all of us appreciate the sensations; but as for caring about the Permanence of the Possibility, a man's head is generally very bald, and his senses very dull, [300 before he comes to that. Whether we regard life as a lane leading to a dead wall—a mere bag's end, as the French say—or whether we think of it as a vestibule or gymnasium, where we wait our turn and prepare our faculties for some more noble destiny; whether we thunder in a pulpit, or pule in little atheistic poetry-books, about its vanity and brevity; whether we look justly for years [310 of health and vigor, or are about to mount into a Bath-chair, as a step towards the hearse; in each and all of these views and situations there is but one conclusion possible: that a man should stop his ears against paralysing terror, and run the race that is set before him with a single mind. No one surely could have recoiled with more heartache and terror from the thought of death than our re- [320 spected lexicographer; and yet we know how little it affected his conduct, how wisely and boldly he walked, and in what a fresh and lively vein he spoke of life. Already an old man, he ventured on his Highland tour; and his heart, bound with triple brass, did not recoil before twenty-seven individual cups of tea. As courage and intelligence are the two qualities best worth a good [330 man's cultivation, so it is the first part of intelligence to recognize our precarious estate in life, and the first part of courage to be not at all abashed before the fact. A frank and somewhat headlong carriage, not looking too anxiously before, not dallying in maudlin regret over the past, stamps the man who is well armored for this world.

And not only well armored for him- [340 self, but a good friend and a good citizen to boot. We do not go to cowards for tender dealing; there is nothing so cruel as panic; the man who has least fear for his own carcass, has most time to consider others. That eminent chemist who took his walks abroad in tin shoes, and subsisted wholly upon tepid milk, had all his work cut out for him in considerate dealings with his own digestion. So [350 soon as prudence has begun to grow up in the brain, like a dismal fungus, it finds its first expression in a paralysis of generous acts. The victim begins to shrink spiritually; he develops a fancy for parlors with a regulated temperature, and takes his morality on the principle of tin shoes and tepid milk. The care of one important body or soul becomes so engrossing, that all the noises of the [360 outer world begin to come thin and faint into the parlor with the regulated temperature; and the tin shoes go equably forward over blood and rain. To be otherwise is to ossify; and the scruple-monger ends by standing stockstill. Now the man who has his heart on his sleeve, and a good whirling weathercock of a brain, who reckons his life as a thing to be dashinglv used and cheerfully haz- [370 arded, makes a very different acquaintance of the world, keeps all his pulses going true and fast, and gathers impetus as he runs, until, if he be running towards anything better than wildfire, he may shoot up and become a constellation in the end. Lord, look after his health, Lord, have a care of his soul, says he; and he has at the key of the position, and smashes through incongruity and peril towards [380 his aim. Death is on all sides of him with pointed batteries, as he is on all sides of all of us; unfortunate surprises gird him round; mim-mouthed friends and relations hold up their hands in quite a little elegiacal synod about his path: and what cares he for all this? Being a true lover of living, a fellow with something pushing and spontaneous in his inside, he must, like any other soldier, in any other [390 stirring, deadly warfare, push on at his best pace until he touch the goal. "A peerage or Westminster Abbey!" cried Nelson in his bright, boyish, heroic manner. These are great incentives; not for any of these, but for the plain satisfaction of living, of being about their business in some sort or other, do the brave, serviceable men of every nation tread down the nettle danger, and [400 pass flyingly over all the stumbling-blocks of prudence. Think of the heroism of Johnson, think of that superb indifference to mortal limitation that set him upon his dictionary, and carried him through triumphantly until the end! Who, if he were wisely considerate of things at large, would ever embark upon any work much more considerable than a half-penny post-card? Who would project [410 a serial novel, after Thackeray and Dickens had each fallen in mid-course? Who would find heart enough to begin to live, if he dallied with the consideration of death?

And, after all, what sorry and pitiful quibbling all this is! To forego all the issues of living in a parlor with a regulated temperature—as if that were not to die a hundred times over, and for [420 ten years at a stretch! As if it were not to die in one's own lifetime, and without even the sad immunities of death! As if it were not to die, and yet be the patient spectators of our own pitiable change! The Permanent Possibility is preserved, but the sensations carefully held at arm's length, as if one kept a photographic plate in a dark chamber. It is better to lose health like a spendthrift than to [430 waste it like a miser. It is better to live and be done with it, than to die daily in the sick-room. By all means begin your folio; even if the doctor does not give you a year, even if he hesitates about a month, make one brave push and see what can be accomplished in a week. It is not only in finished undertakings that we ought to honor useful labor. A spirit goes out of the man who means [440 execution, which outlives the most untimely ending. All who have meant good work with their whole hearts, have done good work, although they may die before they have the time to sign it. Every heart that has beat strong and cheerfully has left a hopeful impulse behind it in the world, and bettered the tradition of mankind. And even if death catch people, like an open pitfall, and in [450 mid-career, laying out vast projects, and planning monstrous foundations, flushed with hope, and their mouths full of boastful language, they should be at once tripped up and silenced: is there not something brave and spirited in such a termination? and does not life go down with a better grace, foaming in full body over a precipice, than miserably straggling to an end in sandy deltas? [460 When the Greeks made their fine saying that those whom the gods love die young, I cannot help believing they had this sort of death also in their eye. For surely, at whatever age it overtake the man, this is to die young. Death has not been suffered to take so much as an illusion from his heart. In the hot-fit of life, a-tiptoe on the highest point of being, he passes at a bound on to the other [470 side. The noise of the mallet and chisel is scarcely quenched, the trumpets are hardly done blowing, when, trailing with him clouds of glory, this happy-starred, full-blooded spirit shoots into the spiritual land.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
(1837-1909)

THE GARDEN OF PROSERPINE

Here, where the world is quiet,
Here, where all trouble seems Dead winds' and spent waves' riot
In doubtful dreams of dreams;
I watch the green field growing 5
For reaping folk and sowing,
For harvest-time and mowing,
A sleepy world of streams.

I am tired of tears and laughter,
And men that laugh and weep; 10
Of what may come hereafter
For men that sow to reap:
I am weary of days and hours,
Blown buds of barren flowers,
Desires and dreams and powers 15
And everything but sleep.

Here life has death for neighbor,
And far from eye or ear
Wan waves and wet winds labor,
Weak ships and spirits steer; 20

They drive adrift, and whither
They wot not who make thither;
But no such winds blow hither,
And no such things grow here.

No growth of moor or coppice, 25
No heather-flower or vine,
But bloomless buds of poppies,
Green grapes of Prosperine,
Pale beds of blowing rushes,
Where no leaf blooms or blushes 30
Save this whereout she crushes
For dead men deadly wine.

Pale, without name or number,
In fruitless fields of corn,
They bow themselves and slumber 35
All night till light is born;
And like a soul belated,
In hell and heaven unmated,
By cloud and mist abated
Comes out of darkness morn. 40

Though one were strong as seven,
He too with death shall dwell,
Nor wake with wings in heaven,
Nor weep for pains in hell;
Though one were fair as roses, 45
His beauty clouds and closes;
And well though love reposes,
In the end it is not well.

Pale, beyond porch and portal,
Crowned with calm leaves, she stands 51
Who gathers all things mortal
With cold immortal hands;
Her languid lips are sweeter
Than love's who fears to greet her,
To men that mix and meet her 55
From many times and lands.

She waits for each and other,
She waits for all men born;
Forgets the earth her mother,
The life of fruits and corn; 60
And spring and seed and swallow
Take wing for her and follow
Where summer song rings hollow
And flowers are put to scorn.

There go the loves that wither, 65
The old loves with wearier wings;
And all dead years draw thither,
And all disastrous things;

Dead dreams of days forsaken,
Blind buds that snows have shaken, 70
Wild leaves that winds have taken,
Red strays of ruined springs.

We are not sure of sorrow,
And joy was never sure;
To-day will die to-morrow; 75
Time stoops to no man's lure;
And love, grown faint and fretful,
With lips but half regretful
Sighs, and with eyes forgetful
Weeps that no loves endure. 80

From too much love of living,
From hope and fear set free,
We thank with brief thanksgiving
Whatever gods may be 85
That no life lives for ever;
That dead men rise up never;
That even the weariest river
Winds somewhere safe to sea.

Then star nor sun shall waken,
Nor any change of light: 90
Nor sound of waters shaken,
Nor any sound or sight:
Nor wintry leaves nor vernal,
Nor days nor things diurnal;
Only the sleep eternal 95
In an eternal night.

CHORUSES From ATALANTA IN CALYDON

THE HOUNDS OF SPRING

When the hounds of spring are on winter's traces,

The mother of months in meadow or
plain

Fills the shadows and windy places
With lisp of leaves and ripple of rain;

And the brown bright nightingale amorous 5

Is half assuaged for Itylus,
For the Thracian ships and the foreign
faces,

The tongueless vigil, and all the pain.

Come with bows bent and with emptying of quivers,

Maiden most perfect, lady of light, 10

With a noise of winds and many rivers,
 With clamor of waters, and with might;
 Bind on thy sandals, O thou most fleet,
 Over the splendor and speed of thy feet;
 For the faint east quickens, the wan west
 shivers, 15
 Round the feet of the day and the feet of the night.

Where shall we find her, how shall we sing
 to her,
 Fold our hands round her knees, and cling?

O that man's heart were as fire and could spring to her,
 Fire, or the strength of the streams that
 spring! 20
 For the stars and the winds are unto her
 As raiment, as songs of the harp-player;
 For the risen stars and the fallen cling
 to her,
 And the southwest-wind, and the westwind sing.

For winter's rains and ruins are over, 25
 And all the season of snows and sins;
 The days dividing lover and lover,
 The light that loses, the night that wins;
 And time remembered is grief forgotten, 29
 And frosts are slain and flowers begotten,
 And in green underwood and cover
 Blossom by blossom the spring begins.

The full streams feed on flower of rushes,
 Ripe grasses trammel a traveling foot,
 The faint fresh flame of the young year
 flushes 35
 From leaf to flower and flower to fruit;
 And fruit and leaf are as gold and fire,
 And the oat is heard above the lyre,
 And the hoofed heel of a satyr crushes
 The chestnut-husk at the chestnut-
 root. 40

And Pan by noon and Bacchus by night,
 Fleeter of foot than the fleet-foot kid,
 Follows with dancing and fills with de-
 light
 The Mænad and the Bassarid;
 And soft as lips that laugh and hide 45
 The laughing leaves of the trees divide,
 And screen from seeing and leave in sight

The ivy falls with the Bacchanal's hair
 Over her eyebrows hiding her eyes; 50
 The wild vine slipping down leaves bare
 Her bright breast shortening into sighs;
 The wild vine slips with the weight of its
 leaves,
 But the berried ivy catches and cleaves
 To the limbs that glitter, the feet that scare 55
 The wolf that follows, the fawn that flies.

BEFORE THE BEGINNING OF YEARS

Before the beginning of years
 There came to the making of man
 Time, with a gift of tears;
 Grief, with a glass that ran;
 Pleasure, with pain for leaven; 5
 Summer, with flowers that fell;
 Remembrance fallen from heaven,
 And madness risen from hell;
 Strength without hands to smite;
 Love that endures for a breath; 10
 Night, the shadow of light,
 And life, the shadow of death.
 And the high gods took in hand
 Fire, and the falling of tears,
 And a measure of sliding sand 15
 From under the feet of the years;
 And froth and drift of the sea;
 And dust of the laboring earth;
 And bodies of things to be
 In the houses of death and of birth; 20
 And wrought with weeping and laughter,
 And fashioned with loathing and love,
 With life before and after
 And death beneath and above,
 For a day and a night and a morrow, 25
 That his strength might endure for a span
 With travail and heavy sorrow,
 The holy spirit of man.

From the winds of the north and the south
 They gathered as unto strife; 30
 They breathed upon his mouth,
 They filled his body with life;
 Eyesight and speech they wrought
 For the veils of the soul therein,
 A time for labor and thought, 35
 A time to serve and to sin;
 They gave him light in his ways,
 And love, and a space for delight,

And beauty and length of days,
 And night, and sleep in the night. 40
 His speech is a burning fire;
 With his lips he travaileth;
 In his heart is a blind desire,
 In his eyes foreknowledge of death;
 He weaves, and is clothed with derision; 45
 Sows, and he shall not reap;
 His life is a watch or a vision
 Between a sleep and a sleep.

A MATCH

If love were what the rose is,
 And I were like the leaf,
 Our lives would grow together
 In sad or singing weather,
 Blown fields or flowerful closes, 5
 Green pleasure or gray grief;
 If love were what the rose is,
 And I were like the leaf.

If I were what the words are,
 And love were like the tune, 10
 With double sound and single Delight our lips would mingle,
 With kisses glad as birds are
 That get sweet rain at noon;
 If I were what the words are, 15
 And love were like the tune.

If you were life, my darling,
 And I your love were death,
 We'd shine and snow together
 Ere March made sweet the weather 20
 With daffodil and starling
 And hours of fruitful breath;
 If you were life, my darling,
 And I your love were death.

If you were thrall to sorrow, 25
 And I were page to joy,
 We'd play for lives and seasons
 With loving looks and treasons
 And tears of night and morrow
 And laughs of maid and boy; 30
 If you were thrall to sorrow,
 And I were page to joy.

If you were April's lady,
 And I were lord in May,
 We'd throw with leaves for hours 35
 And draw for days with flowers,

Till day like night were shady
 And night were bright like day;
 If you were April's lady,
 And I were lord in May. 40

If you were queen of pleasure,
 And I were king of pain,
 We'd hunt down love together,
 Pluck out his flying-feather,
 And teach his feet a measure, 45
 And find his mouth a rein;
 If you were queen of pleasure,
 And I were king of pain.

TO WALT WHITMAN IN AMERICA

Send but a song oversea for us,
 Heart of their hearts who are free,
 Heart of their singer, to be for us 5
 More than our singing can be;
 Ours, in the tempest at error, 5
 With no light but the twilight of terror;
 Send us a song oversea!

Sweet-smelling of pine-leaves and grasses,
 And blown as a tree through and through
 With the winds of the keen mountain-passes, 10
 And tender as sun-smitten dew;
 Sharp-tongued as the winter that shakes
 The wastes of your limitless lakes,
 Wide-eyed as the sea-line's blue.

O strong-winged soul with prophetic 15
 Lips hot with the bloodbeats of song,
 With tremor of heartstrings magnetic
 With thoughts as thunders in throng,
 With consonant ardors of chords
 That pierce men's souls as with swords 20
 And hale them hearing along,

Make us too music, to be with us
 As a word from a world's heart warm,
 To sail the dark as a sea with us,
 Full-sailed, outsinging the storm, 25
 A song to put fire in our ears
 Whose burning shall burn up tears
 Whose sign bid battle reform;

A note in the ranks of a clarion,
 A word in the wind of cheer, 30
 To consume as with lightning the carrion
 That makes time foul for us here;

In the air that our dead things infest
A blast of the breath of the west,
Till east way as west way is clear. 35

Out of the sun beyond sunset,
From the evening whence morning shall
be,
With the rollers in measureless onset,
With the van of the storming sea,
With the world-wide wind, with the
breath 40
That breaks ships driven upon death,
With the passion of all things free,

With the sea-steeds footless and frantic,
White myriads for death to bestride
In the charge of the ruining Atlantic, 45
Where deaths by regiments ride,
With clouds and clamors of waters,
With a long note shriller than slaughter's
On the furrowless fields world-wide,

With terror, with ardor and wonder, 50
With the soul of the season that wakes
When the weight of a whole year's thunder
In the tidestream of autumn breaks,
Let the flight of the wide-winged word
Come over, come in and be heard, 55
Take form and fire for our sakes.

For a continent bloodless with travail
Here toils and brawls as it can,
And the web of it who shall unravel
Of all that peer on the plan; 60
Would fain grow men, but they grow
not,
And fain be free, but they know not
One name for freedom and man.

One name, not twain, for division;
One thing, not twain, from the birth; 65
Spirit and substance and vision,
Worth more than worship is worth;
Unbeheld, unadored, undivined,
The cause, the center, the mind,
The secret and sense of the earth. 70

Here as a weakling in irons,
Here as a weanling in bands,
As a prey that the stake-net environs,
Our life that we looked for stands;
And the man-child naked and dear, 75
Democracy, turns on us here
Eyes trembling with tremulous hands.

It sees not what season shall bring to it
Sweet fruit of its bitter desire;
Few voices it hears yet sing to it, 80
Few pulses of hearts reaspire;
Foresees not time, nor forehears
The noises of imminent years,
Earthquake, and thunder, and fire: 84

When crowned and weaponed and curb-
less
It shall walk without helm or shield
The bare burnt furrows and herbless
Of war's last flame-stricken field,
Till godlike, equal with time,
It stand in the sun sublime, 90
In the godhead of man revealed.

Round your people and over them
Light like raiment is drawn,
Close as a garment to cover them
Wrought not of mail nor of lawn; 95
Here, with hope hardly to wear,
Naked nations and bare Swim, sink, strike out for the dawn.

Chains are here, and a prison,
Kings, and subjects, and shame; 100
If the God upon you be arisen,
How should our songs be the same?
How, in confusion of change,
How shall we sing, in a strange Land, songs praising his name? 105

God is buried and dead to us,
Even the spirit of earth,
Freedom; so have they said to us
Some with mocking and mirth,
Some with heartbreak and tears; 110
And a God without eyes, without ears,
Who shall sing of him, dead in the
birth?

The earth-god Freedom, the lonely
Face lightening, the footprint unshod,
Not as one man crucified only, 115
Nor scourged with but one life's rod;
The soul that is substance of nations,
Reincarnate with fresh generations:
The great god Man, which is God.

But in weariest of years and obscurest 120
Doth it live not at heart of all things,
The one God and one spirit, a purest
Life, fed from unstanachable springs?

Within love, within hatred it is,
And its seed in the stripe as the kiss, 125
And in slaves is the germ, and in kings.

Freedom we call it, for holier
Name of the soul's there is none;
Surelier it labors, if slower,
Than the meters of star or of sun; 130
Slower than life into breath,
Surelier than time into death,
It moves till its labor be done.

Till the motion be done and the measure
Circling through season and clime, 135
Slumber and sorrow and pleasure,
Vision of virtue and crime;
Till consummate with conquering eyes,
A soul disembodied, it rise
From the body transfigured of time. 140

Till it rise and remain and take station
With the stars of the worlds that rejoice;
Till the voice of its heart's exultation
Be as theirs an invariable voice;
By no discord of evil estranged, 145
By no pause, by no breach in it changed,
By no clash in the chord of its choice.

It is one with the world's generations,
With the spirit, the star, and the sod;
With the kingless and king-stricken nations, 150
With the cross, and the chain, and the rod;
The most high, the most secret, most lonely,
The earth-soul Freedom, that only Lives, and that only is God.

AFTER SUNSET

If light of life outlive the set of sun
That men call death and end of all things,
then
How should not that which life held best for men
And proved most precious, though it seem undone
By force of death and woful victory won, 5
Be first and surest of revival, when Death shall bow down to life arisen again?

So shall the soul seen be the self-same
one
That looked and spake with even such lips and eyes
As love shall doubt not then to recognize,
And all bright thoughts and smiles of all time past 11
Revive, transfigured, but in spirit and
sense
None other than we knew, for evidence That love's last mortal word was not his last.

ON THE DEATHS OF THOMAS
CARLYLE AND GEORGE ELIOT

Two souls diverse out of our human sight
Pass, followed one with love and each with wonder:
The stormy sophist with his mouth of
thunder,
Clothed with loud words and mantled in the might
Of darkness and magnificence of night; 5
And one whose eye could smite the night
in sunder,
Searching if light or no light were thereunder,
And found in love of loving-kindness light.
Duty divine and Thought with eyes of
fire
Still following Righteousness with deep desire 10
Shone sole and stern before her and above,
Sure stars and sole to steer by; but more
sweet
Shone lower the loveliest lamp for earthly feet,—
The light of little children, and their love.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE

Crowned, girdled, garbed, and shod with light and fire,
Son first-born of the morning, sovereign
star!
Soul nearest ours of all, that wert most
far,
Most far off in the abysm of time, thy lyre
Hung highest above the dawn-enkindled quiere 5

Where all ye sang together, all that are,
And all the starry songs behind thy car
Rang sequence, all our souls acclaim thee
sire.

"If all the pens that ever poets held
Had fed the feeling of their masters'
thoughts," 10
And as with rush of hurtling chariots
The flight of all their spirits were impelled Toward one great end, thy glory—nay, not
then,
Not yet might'st thou be praised enough of
men.

BEN JONSON

Broad-based, broad-fronted, bounteous,
multiform,
With many a valley impleached with ivy
and vine,
Wherein the springs of all the streams
run wine,
And many a crag full-faced against the
storm,
The mountain where thy Muse's feet made warm 5
Those lawns that revelled with her dance
divine
Shines yet with fire as it was wont to
shine
From tossing torches round the dance
a-swarm.
Nor less, high-stationed on the gray grave
heights,
High-thoughted seers with heaven's heartkindling lights 10
Hold converse: and the herd of meaner
things
Knows or by fiery scourge or fiery shaft
When wrath on thy broad brows has risen, and laughed
Darkening thy soul with shadow of thunderous wings.

GEORGE MEREDITH (1828-1909)

LOVE IN THE VALLEY

Under yonder beech-tree single on the greensward,
Couched with her arms behind her golden head,
Knees and tresses folded to slip and ripple idly,

Lies my young love sleeping in the shade.

Had I the heart to slide an arm beneath
her,

Press her parting lips as her waist I gather slow, 5

Waking in amazement she could not but embrace me:

Then would she hold me and never let me go?

Shy as the squirrel and wayward as the swallow,

Swift as the swallow along the river's
light, 10

Circling the surface to meet his mirrored winglets,

Fleeter she seems in her stay than in her
flight.

Shy as the squirrel that leaps among the pine-tops,

Wayward as the swallow overhead at set of sun,

She whom I love is hard to catch and conquer; 15

Hard, but oh, the glory of the winning were she won!

When her mother tends her before the laughing mirror,

Tying up her laces, looping up her hair,
Often she thinks, were this wild thing

wedded,
More love should I have, and much less
care. 20

When her mother tends her before the lighted mirror,

Loosening her laces, combing down her
curls,

Often she thinks, were this wild thing
wedded,

I should miss but one for many boys and girls.

Heartless she is as the shadow in the meadows 25

Flying to the hills on a blue and breezy
noon.

No, she is athirst and drinking up her
wonder;

Earth to her is young as the slip of the new moon.

Deals she an unkindness, 'tis but her rapid
measure,

Even as in a dance; and her smile can heal no less: 30
 Like the swinging May-cloud that pelts
 the flowers with hailstones Off a sunny border, she was made to bruise and bless.

Lovely are the curves of the white owl sweeping

Wavy in the dusk lit by one large star.
 Lone on the fir-branch, his rattle-note unvaried, 35
 Brooding o'er the gloom, spins the brown evejar.

Darker grows the valley, more and more forgetting:

So were it with me if forgetting could be willed.

Tell the grassy hollow that holds the bubbling well-spring,

Tell it to forget the source that keeps it filled. 40

Stepping down the hill with her fair companions,

Arm in arm, all against the raying West, Boldly she sings, to the merry tune she marches,

Brave is her shape, and sweeter un-
 possessed.

Sweeter, for she is what my heart first awaking 45

Whispered the world was; morning light is she.

Love that so desires would fain keep her changeless;

Fain would fling the net, and fain have her free.

Happy, happy time, when the white star hovers

Low over dim fields fresh with bloomy
 dew, 50

Near the face of dawn, that draws athwart
 the darkness,

Threading it with color, like yewberries
 the yew.

Thicker crowd the shades as the grave
 East deepens

Glowing, and with crimson a long cloud swells.

Maiden still the morn is; and strange she is, and secret; 55

Strange her eyes; her cheeks are cold as cold sea-shells.

Sunrays, leaning on our southern hills and lighting

Wild cloud-mountains that drag the hills along,

Oft ends the day of your shifting brilliant laughter

Chill as a dull face frowning on a song. 60

Ay, but shows the South-west a ripple-feathered bosom

Blown to silver while the clouds are shaken and ascend,

Scaling the mid-heavens as they stream,
 there comes a sunset

Rich, deep like love in beauty without
 end.

When at dawn she sighs, and like an infant to the window 65

Turns grave eyes craving light, released from dreams,

Beautiful she looks, like a white water-
 lily,

Bursting out of bud in havens of the streams.

When from bed she rises clothed from neck to ankle

In her long nightgown sweet as boughs
 of May, 70

Beautiful she looks, like a tall garden-
 lily,

Pure from the night, and splendid for
 the day.

Mother of the dews, dark eye-lashed twi-
 light,

Low-lidded twilight, o'er the valley's
 brim,

Rounding on thy breast sings the dew-delighted skylark, 75

Clear as though the dew-drops had their voice in him.

Hidden where the rose-flush drinks the rayless planet,

Fountain-full he pours the spraying fountain-showers.

Let me hear her laughter, I would have her ever

Cool as dew in twilight, the lark above
 the flowers. 80

All the girls are out with their baskets for the primrose;

Up lanes, woods through, they troop in joyful bands.

My sweet leads: she knows not why, but now she loiters,
Eyes the bent anemones, and hangs her
hands.

Such a look will tell that the violets are peeping, 85

Coming the rose; and unaware a cry Springs in her bosom for odors and for color,

Covert and the nightingale; she knows not why.

Kerchiefed head and chin she darts between her tulips,

Streaming like a willow gray in arrowy
rain: 90

Some bend beaten cheek to gravel, and their angel

She will be; she lifts them, and on she speeds again.

Black the driving raincloud breasts the iron gateway;

She is forth to cheer a neighbor lacking
mirth.

So when sky and grass met rolling dumb
for thunder 95

Saw I once a white dove, sole light of
earth.

Prim little scholars are the flowers of her garden,

Trained to stand in rows, and asking
if they please.

I might love them well but for loving more
the wild ones;

O my wild ones! they tell me more than
these. 100

You, my wild one, you tell of honied field-
rose,

Violet, blushing eglantine in life; and even as they,

They by the wayside are earnest of your goodness,

You are of life's on the banks that line
the way.

Peering at her chamber the white crowns
the red rose, 105

Jasmine winds the porch with stars two and three.

Parted is the window; she sleeps; the starry jasmine

Breathes a falling breath that carries thoughts of me.

Sweeter unpossessed, have I said of her my sweetest?

Not while she sleeps: while she sleeps the jasmine breathes, 110

Luring her to love; she sleeps; the starry jasmine

Bears me to her pillow under white rose-wreaths.

Yellow with birdfoot-trefoil are the grass-glades;

Yellow with cinquefoil of the dew-gray
leaf;

Yellow with stonecrop; the moss-mounds are yellow; 115

Blue-necked the wheat sways, yellowing to the sheaf.

Green-yellow, bursts from the copse the laughing yaffle,

Sharp as a sickle is the edge of shade
and shine:

Earth in her heart laughs looking at the heavens,

Thinking of the harvest: I look and think of mine. 120

This I may know: her dressing and undressing

Such a change of light shows as when the skies in sport

Shift from cloud to moonlight; or edging over thunder

Slips a ray of sun; or sweeping into port

White sails furl; or on the ocean borders 125

White sails lean along the waves leaping
green.

Visions of her shower before me, but from eyesight

Guarded she would be like the sun were she seen.

Front door and back of the mossed old farmhouse

Open with the morn, and in a breezy link 130

Freshly sparkles garden to stripeshadowed orchard,

Green across a rill where on sand the minnows wink.

Busy in the grass the early sun of summer
Swarms, and the blackbird's mellow

fluting notes

Call my darling up with round and roguish challenge: 135
Quaintest, richest carol of all the singing throats!

Cool was the woodside; cool as her white dairy Keeping sweet the cream-pan; and there the boys from school, Cricketing below, rushed brown and red with sunshine;
O the dark translucence of the deep-eyed cool! 140
Spying from the farm, herself she fetched
a pitcher
Full of milk, and tilted for each in turn the beak.
Then a little fellow, mouth up and on tiptoe,
Said, "I will kiss you:" she laughed, and leaned her cheek.

Doves of the fir-wood walling high our red roof 145
Through the long noon coo, crooning through the coo.
Loose droop the leaves, and down the sleepy roadway
Sometimes pipes a chaffinch; loose
droops the blue.
Cows flap a slow tail knee-deep in the
river,
Breathless, given up to sun and gnat and
fly, 150
Nowhere is she seen; and if I see her no-
where,
Lightning may come, straight rains and tiger sky.

O the golden sheaf, the rustling treasure-armful!
O the nutbrown tresses nodding interlaced!
O the treasure-tresses one another over 155 Nodding! O the girdle slack about the waist!
Slain are the poppies that shot their random scarlet Quick amid the wheat-ears: wound
about the waist,
Gathered, see these brides of Earth one blush of ripeness!
O the nutbrown tresses nodding interlaced! 160

Large and smoky red the sun's cold disk drops,
Clipped by naked hills, on violet shaded
snow:
Eastward large and still lights up a bower
of moonrise,
Whence at her leisure steps the moon
aglow.
Nightlong on black print-branches our beech-tree 165
Gazes in this whiteness: nightlong could
I.
Here may life on death or death on life be painted.
Let me clasp her soul to know she cannot die!

Gossips count her faults! they scour a narrow chamber Where there is no window, read not heaven or her. 170
"When she was a tiny," one aged woman
quavers,
Plucks at my heart and leads me by the
ear.
Faults she had once as she learned to run and tumbled:
Faults of feature some see, beauty not complete.
Yet, good gossips, beauty that makes holy 175
Earth and air, may have faults from head to feet.

Hither she comes; she comes to me; she lingers,
Deepens her brown eyebrows, while in new surprise
High rise the lashes in wonder of a stranger;
Yet am I the light and living of her
eyes. 180
Something friends have told her fills her heart to brimming,
Nets her in her blushes, and wounds her,
and tames.—
Sure of her haven, O like a dove alighting, Arms up, she dropped; our souls were in our names.

Soon will she lie like a white frost sunrise. 185
Yellow oats and brown wheat, barley
pale as rye,

Long since your sheaves have yielded to the thresher,
Felt the girdle loosened, seen the tresses
fly.

Soon will she lie like a blood-red sunset.

Swift with the to-morrow, green-winged
Spring! 190

Sing from the South-west, bring her back
the truants,
Nightingale and swallow, song and dipping wing.

Soft new beech-leaves, up to beamy April Spreading bough on bough a primrose mountain, you,

Lucid in the moon, raise lilies to the sky-
fields, 195

Youngest green transfused in silver shining through:

Fairer than the lily, than the wild white cherry:

Fair as in image my seraph love appears

Borne to me by dreams when dawn is at my eyelids;

Fair as in the flesh she swims to me on
tears. 200

Could I find a place to be alone with
heaven,

I would speak my heart out: heaven is my need.

Every woodland tree is flushing like the dogwood,

Flashing like the whitebeam, swaying like the reed.

Flushing like the dogwood crimson in October; 205

Streaming like the flag-reed south-west
blown;

Flashing as in gusts the sudden-lighted
whitebeam:

All seem to know what is for heaven
alone.

JUGGLING JERRY

Pitch here the tent, while the old horse
grazes:

By the old hedge-side we'll halt a stage.

It's high my last above the daisies:

My next leaf'll be man's blank page.

Yes, my old girl! and it's no use crying: 5
Juggler, constable, king, must bow.
One that outjuggles all's been spying
Long to have me, and he has me now.

We've travelled times to this old common:
Often we've hung our pots in the gorse.
We've had a stirring life, old woman, 11
You, and I, and the old gray horse.
Races, and fairs, and royal occasions,
Found us coming to their call:
Now they'll miss us at our stations: 15
There's a Juggler outjuggles all!

Up goes the lark, as if all were jolly!
Over the duck-pond the willow shakes.
Easy to think that grieving's folly,
When the hand's firm as driven stakes!

Ay, when we're strong, and braced, and manful, 21

Life's a sweet fiddle: but we're a batch

Born to become the Great Juggler's
han'ful:

Balls he shies up, and is safe to catch.

Here's where the lads of the village
cricket: 25

I was a lad not wide from here:

Couldn't I whip off the bale from the wicket?

Like an old world those days appear!

Donkey, sheep, geese, and thatched ale-house—I know them!

They are old friends of my halts, and
seem, 30

Somehow, as if kind thanks I owe them:
Juggling don't hinder the heart's esteem.

Juggling's no sin, for we must have victual:

Nature allows us to bait for the fool.

Holding one's own makes us juggle no little; 35

But, to increase it, hard juggling's the rule.

You that are sneering at my profession,
Haven't you juggled a vast amount?

There's the Prime Minister, in one Session,

Juggles more games than my sins'll
count. 40

I've murdered insects with mock thunder:
Conscience, for that, in men don't quail.
I've made bread from the bump of wonder:
That's my business, and there's my tale.
Fashion and rank all praised the professor: 45

Ay! and I've had my smile from the Queen: 46

Bravo, Jerry! she meant: God bless her!
Ain't this a sermon on that scene?

I've studied men from my topsy-turvy
Close, and, I reckon, rather true. 50
Some are fine fellows: some, right scurvy:
Most, a dash between the two.

But it's a woman, old girl, that makes me Think more kindly of the race:
And it's a woman, old girl, that shakes
me 55
When the Great Juggler I must face.

We two were married, due and legal:
Honest we've lived since we've been
one.

Lord! I could then jump like an eagle:
You danced bright as a bit o' the sun. 60
Birds in a May-bush we were! right merry!
All night we kissed, we juggled all day.
Joy was the heart of Juggling Jerry!
Now from his old girl he's juggled away.

It's past parsons to console us: 65
No, nor no doctor fetch for me:
I can die without my bolus;
Two of a trade, lass, never agree!
Parson and Doctor!—don't they love rarely,
Fighting the devil in other men's fields! 70
Stand up yourself and match him fairly:
Then see how the rascal yields!

I, lass, have lived no gipsy, flaunting
Finery while his poor helpmate grubs:
Coin I've stored, and you won't be want-
ing: 75
You shan't beg from the troughs and tubs.
Nobly you've stuck to me, though in his kitchen
Many a Marquis would hail you Cook!
Palaces you could have ruled and grown rich in,
But your old Jerry you never forsook. 80

Hand up the chirper!¹ ripe ale winks in
it;

Let's have comfort and be at peace.

Once a stout draught made me light as a linnet.

Cheer up! the Lord must have his lease.
May be—for none see in that black hollow— 85

It's just a place where we're held in pawn,

And, when the Great Juggler makes as to swallow,

It's just the sword-trick—I ain't quite
gone.

Yonder came smells of the gorse, so nutty,
Gold-like and warm: it's the prime of
May. 90

Better than mortar, brick, and putty,
Is God's house on a blowing day.

Lean me more up the mound; now I feel
it:

All the old heath-smells! Ain't it
strange?

There's the world laughing, as if to conceal it, 95

But He's by us, juggling the change.

I mind it well, by the sea-beach lying,
Once—it's long gone—when two gulls
we beheld,

Which, as the moon got up, were flying Down a big wave that sparkled and swelled. 100

Crack went a gun: one fell: the second Wheeled round him twice, and was off
for new luck:

There in the dark her white wing beckoned:—

Drop me a kiss—I'm the bird dead-struck!

LUCIFER IN STARLIGHT

On a starred night Prince Lucifer uprose.
Tired of his dark dominion, swung the fiend

Above the rolling ball in cloud part screened,

Where sinners hugged their specter of repose.

Poor prey to his hot fit of pride were those. 5

¹ "chirping," or cheering, cup.

And now upon his western wing he leaned,
 Now his huge bulk o'er Afric's sands
 careened,
 Now the black planet shadowed Arctic
 snows.
 Soaring through wider zones that pricked his scars
 With memory of the old revolt from Awe,
 He reached a middle height, and at the stars,
 Which are the brain of heaven, he looked,
 and sank.
 Around the ancient track marched, rank
 on rank,
 The army of unalterable law.

THOMAS HARDY (1840-)

SHE, TO HIM

When you shall see me in the toils of
 Time,
 My lauded beauties carried off from me,
 My eyes no longer stars as in their prime,
 My name forgot of Maiden Fair and Free ;
 When, in your being, heart concedes to
 mind,
 And judgment, though you scarce its process know,
 Recalls the excellences I once enshrined,
 And you are irked that they have withered
 so :
 Remembering mine the loss is, not the
 blame,
 That Sportsman Time but rears his brood
 to kill,
 Knowing me in my soul the very same —
 One who would die to spare you touch of ill ! —
 Will you not grant to old affection's claim
 The hand of friendship down Life's sunless
 hill ?

NATURE'S QUESTIONING

When I look forth at dawning, pool,
 Field, flock, and lonely tree,
 All seem to gaze at me
 Like chastened children sitting silent in a school ;

Their faces dulled, constrained, and
 worn,
 As though the master's ways
 Through the long teaching days Had cowed them till their early zest was overborne.

Upon them stirs in lippings mere
 (As if once clear in call,
 But now scarce breathed at all) —
 "We wonder, ever wonder, why we find us
 here !

"Has some Vast Imbecility
 Mighty to build and blend,
 But impotent to tend,
 Framed us in jest, and left us now to hazardry ?

"Or come we of an Automaton
 Unconscious of our pains? . . .
 Or are we live remains Of Godhead dying downwards, brain and eye now gone ?

"Or is it that some high Plan betides,
 As yet not understood,
 Of Evil stormed by Good,
 We the Forlorn Hope over which Achievement strides ?"

Thus things around. No answerer
 I . . .
 Meanwhile the winds, and rains,
 And Earth's old glooms and pains
 Are still the same, and Death and glad Life neighbor nigh.

GOD-FORGOTTEN

I towered far, and lo ! I stood within The presence of the Lord Most High,
 Sent thither by the sons of Earth, to win
 Some answer to their cry.

— "The Earth, sayest thou? The Human race?
 By Me created? Sad its lot?
 Nay: I have no remembrance of such
 place:
 Such world I fashioned not." —

— "O Lord, forgive me when I say Thou spakest the word and made it all." —
"The Earth of men — let me bethink Me . . . Yea!
I dimly do recall

"Some tiny sphere I built long back (Mid millions of such shapes of mine)
So named . . . It perished, surely — not a wrack 15
Remaining, or a sign?"

"It lost my interest from the first,
My aims therefor succeeding ill;
Haply it died of doing as it durst?" —
"Lord, it existeth still." — 20

"Dark, then, its life! For not a cry
Of aught it bears do I now hear;
Of its own act the threads were snapt whereby
Its plaints had reached mine ear.

"It used to ask for gifts of good, 25
Till came its severance, self-entailed,
When sudden silence on that side ensued,
And has till now prevailed.

"All other orbs have kept in touch;
Their voicings reach me speedily: 30
Thy people took upon them overmuch
In sundering them from me!

"And it is strange — though sad
enough —
Earth's race should think that one whose
call Frames, daily, shining spheres of flawless stuff 35
Must heed their tainted ball! . . .

"But sayest it is by pangs distraught,
And strife, and silent suffering? — Sore grieved am I that injury should be wrought
Even on so poor a thing! 40

"Thou shouldst have learnt that Not to Mend
For Me could mean but Not to Know:
Hence, Messengers! and straightway put an end
To what men undergo." . . .

Homing at dawn, I thought to see 45
One of the Messengers standing by.
— Oh, childish thought! . . . Yet often it comes to me
When trouble hovers nigh.

THE CHURCH-BUILDER

The church flings forth a battled shade
Over the moon-blanchéd sward;
The church; my gift; whereto I paid
My all in hand and hoard;
Lavished my gains 5
With stintless pains
To glorify the Lord.

I squared the broad foundations in
Of ashlaréd masonry;
I moulded mullions thick and thin, 10
Hewed fillet and ogee:
I circleted
Each sculptured head
With nimb¹ and canopy.

I called in many a craftsman 15
To fix emblazoned glass,
To figure Cross and Sepulchre
On dossal, boss, and brass.
My gold all spent,
My jewels went 20
To gem the cups of Mass.

I borrowed deep to carve the screen
And raise the ivoryed Rood;
I parted with my small demesne
To make my owings good. 25
Heir-looms unpriced
I sacrificed,
Until debt-free I stood.

So closed the task. "Deathless the Creed Here substacked!" said my soul: 30
"I heard me bidden to this deed,
And straight obeyed the call.
Illume this fane,
That not in vain
I build it, Lord of all!" 35

But, as it chanced me, then and there
Did dire misfortunes burst;

¹ nimb

My home went waste for lack of care,
 My sons rebelled and curst;
 Till I confessed
 That aims the best
 Were looking like the worst. 40

Enkindled by my votive work
 No burning faith I find;
 The deeper thinkers sneer and smirk, 45
 And give my toil no mind;
 From nod and wink
 I read they think
 That I am fool and blind.

My gift to God seems futile, quite; 50
 The world moves as erstwhile;
 The powerful Wrong on feeble Right
 Tramples in olden style.
 My faith burns down,
 I see no crown; 55
 But Cares, and Grievs, and Guile.

So now, the remedy? Yea, this:
 I gently swing the door
 Here, of my fane — no soul to wis —
 And cross the patterned floor 60
 To the rood-screen
 That stands between
 The nave and inner chore.¹

The rich red windows dim the moon,
 But little light need I; 65
 I mount the prie-dieu, lately hewn
 From woods of rarest dye;
 Then from below
 My garment, so,
 I draw this cord, and tie 70

One end thereof around the beam
 Midway 'twixt Cross and truss.
 I noose the nethermost extreme,
 And in ten seconds thus
 I journey hence — 75
 To that land whence
 No rumor reaches us.

Well: Here at morn they'll light on one Dangling in mockery
 Of what he spent his substance on 80
 Blindly and uselessly! . . .
 "He might," they'll say,
 "Have built, some way,
 A cheaper gallows-tree!"

¹ choir

"FOR LIFE I HAD NEVER CARED GREATLY"

For Life I had never cared greatly,
 As worth a man's while;
 Peradventures unsought, Peradventures that finished in nought,
 Had kept me from youth and through manhood till lately 5
 Unwon by its style.

In earliest years — why I know
 not —
 I viewed it askance;
 Conditions of doubt,
 Conditions that leaked slowly out, 10
 May haply have bent me to stand and to show not Much zest for its dance.

With symphonies soft and sweet color
 It courted me then,
 Till evasions seemed wrong, 15
 Till evasions gave in to its song,
 And I warmed, until living aloofly loomed duller
 Than life among men.

Anew I found nought to set eyes on,
 When, lifting its hand, 20
 It uncloaked a star,
 Uncloaked it from fog-damps afar,
 And showed its beams burning from pole to horizon
 As bright as a brand.

And so, the rough highway forgetting, 25
 I pace hill and dale
 Regarding the sky,
 Regarding the vision on high,
 And thus re-illumed have no humor for letting:
 My pilgrimage fail. 30

MEN WHO MARCH AWAY

(Song of the Soldiers)

What of the faith and fire within us
 Men who march away
 Ere the barn-cocks say
 Night is growing gray,

Leaving all that here can win us ; 5
 What of the faith and fire within us
 Men who march away?

Is it a purblind prank, O think you,
 Friend with the musing eye,
 Who watch us stepping by 10
 With doubt and dolorous sigh?
 Can much pondering so hoodwink you!
 Is it a purblind prank, O think you,
 Friend with the musing eye?

Nay. We well see what we are doing, 15
 Though some may not see — Dalliers as they be — England's need are we ;
 Her distress would leave us rueing :
 Nay. We well see what we are doing, 20
 Though some may not see !

In our heart of hearts believing
 Victory crowns the just,
 And that braggarts must Surely bite the dust, 25
 Press we to the field ungrieving,
 In our heart of hearts believing
 Victory crowns the just.

Hence the faith and fire within us
 Men who march away 30
 Ere the barn-cocks say
 Night is growing gray,
 Leaving all that here can win us ;
 Hence the faith and fire within us
 Men who march away. 35

AFTERWARDS

When the Present has latched its postern behind my tremulous stay,
 And the May month flaps its glad green leaves like wings, Delicate-filmed as new-spun silk, will the neighbors say,
 "He was a man who used to notice such things?"

If it be in the dusk when, like an eyelid's soundless blink, 5
 The dew-fall hawk comes crossing the shades to alight

Upon the wind-warped upland thorn, a gazer may think,
 "To him this must have been a familiar sight."

If I pass during some nocturnal blackness,
 mothy and warm,
 When the hedgehog travels furtively
 over the lawn, 10
 One may say, "He strove that such innocent creatures should come to no harm,
 But he could do little for them ; and now he is gone."

If, when hearing that I have been stilled
 at last, they stand at the door, Watching the full-starred heavens that winter sees,
 Will this thought rise on those who will meet my face no more, 15
 "He was one who had an eye for such mysteries"?

And will any say when my bell of quit-
 tance is heard in the gloom,
 And a crossing breeze cuts a pause in its outrollings,
 Till they rise again, as they were a new bell's boom,
 "He hears it not now, but used to notice such things"? 20

FRANCIS THOMPSON (1859-1907)

THE HOUND OF HEAVEN

I fled Him, down the nights and down the
 days ;
 I fled Him, down the arches of the years ;
 I fled Him, down the labyrinthine ways
 Of my own mind ; and in the mist of
 tears
 I hid from Him, and under running laughter. 5
 Up vistaed hopes, I sped ;
 And shot, precipitated,
 Adown Titanic glooms of chasmèd fears,
 From those strong Feet that followed, followed after.

But with unhurrying chase, 10
 And unperturbed pace,
 Deliberate speed, majestic instancy,
 They beat — and a Voice beat
 More instant than the Feet —
 “All things betray thee, who betrayest
 Me.” 15

I pleaded, outlaw-wise,
 By many a hearted casement, curtained
 red,
 Trellised with intertwining charities;
 (For, though I knew His love Who followèd,
 Yet was I sore adread 20
 Lest, having Him, I must have naught be-
 side.)

But, if one little casement parted wide,
 The gust of His approach would clash
 it to.

Fear wist not to evade as Love wist to
 pursue.

Across the margin of the world I fled, 25
 And troubled the gold gateways of the stars,

Smiting for shelter on their clangèd
 bars;

Fretted to dulcet jars
 And silvern chatter the pale ports o’ the
 moon.

I said to dawn: Be sudden; to eve: Be soon — 30

With thy young skyey blossoms heap me over

From this tremendous Lover!
 Float thy vague veil about me, lest He see!

I tempted all His servitors, but to find
 My own betrayal in their constancy, 35

In faith to Him their fickleness to me,
 Their traitorous trueness, and their loyal deceit.

To all swift things for swiftness did I sue;
 Clung to the whistling mane of every
 wind.

But whether they swept, smoothly
 fleet, 40

The long savannahs of the blue;
 Or whether, Thunder-driven,

They clangèd His chariot ’thwart a
 heaven,

Plashy with flying lightnings round the spurn o’ their feet: —

Fear wist not to evade as Love wist to
 pursue. 45

Still with unhurrying chase,
 And unperturbèd pace,
 Deliberate speed, majestic instancy,
 Came on the following Feet,
 And a Voice above their beat — 50 “Naught shelters thee, who wilt not shelter Me.”

I sought no more that after which I
 strayed

In face of man or maid;
 But still within the little children’s
 eyes

Seems something, something that replies, 55

They at least are for me, surely for me!

I turned me to them very wistfully;

But just as their young eyes grew sudden
 fair

With dawning answers there,
 Their angel plucked them from me by the
 hair. 60

“Come then, ye other children, Nature’s
 — share

With me” (said I) “your delicate fellowship;

Let me greet you lip to lip,
 Let me twine with you caresses,

Wantoning 65
 With our Lady-Mother’s vagrant
 tresses,

Banqueting
 With her in her wind-walled palace,
 Underneath her azured daïs,

Quaffing, as your taintless way is, 70
 From a chalice

Lucent-weeping out of the dayspring.”

So it was done:

I in their delicate fellowship was one —
 Drew the bolt of Nature’s secrecies. 75

I knew all the swift importings
 On the wilful face of skies;

I knew how the clouds arise,
 Spumèd of the wild sea-snortings;

All that’s born or dies 80
 Rose and drooped with; made them
 shapers

Of mine own moods, or wailful or divine —
 With them joyed and was bereaven.

I was heavy with the even,
 When she lit her glimmering tapers 85

Round the day’s dead sanctities.

I laughed in the morning’s eyes.

I triumphed and I saddened with all
 weather,
 Heaven and I wept together,
 And its sweet tears were salt with mortal
 mine; 90
 Against the red throb of its sunset-heart
 I laid my own to beat,
 And share commingling heat;
 But not by that, by that, was eased my human smart.
 In vain my tears were wet on Heaven's gray cheek. 95
 For ah! we know not what each other says,
 These things and I; in sound I
 speak —
Their sound is but their stir, they speak
 by silences.
 Nature, poor stepdame, cannot slake my drouth;
 Let her, if she would owe me, 100
 Drop yon blue bosom-veil of sky, and show me
 The breasts o' her tenderness:
 Never did any milk of hers once bless
 My thirsting mouth.
 Nigh and nigh draws the chase, 105
 With unperturbèd pace,
 Deliberate speed, majestic instancy,
 And past those noisèd Feet
 A Voice comes yet more fleet —
 "Lo! naught contents thee, who con-tent'st not Me." 110
 Naked I wait Thy love's uplifted stroke!
 My harness piece by piece Thou hast hewn
 from me,
 And smitten me to my knee;
 I am defenseless utterly.
 I slept, methinks, and woke, 115
 And, slowly gazing, find me stripped in
 sleep.
 In the rash lustihead of my young powers,
 I shook the pillaring hours
 And pulled my life upon me; grimed with smears,
 I stand amid the dust o' the mounded
 years — 120
 My mangled youth lies dead beneath the heap,
 My days have crackled and gone up in
 smoke,
 Have puffed and burst as sun-starts on a
 stream.
 Yea, faileth now even dream

The dreamer, and the lute the lutanist;
 Even the linked fantasies, in whose blossomy twist 126
 I swung the earth a trinket at my wrist,
 Are yielding; cords of all too weak account
 For earth, with heavy griefs so over-plussed.
 Ah! is Thy love indeed 130
 A weed, albeit an amaranthine weed, Suffering no flowers except its own to mount?
 Ah! must — Designer infinite! —
 Ah! must Thou char the wood ere Thou canst limn with it? 135
 My freshness spent its wavering shower
 i' the dust;
 And now my heart is as a broken fount,
 Wherein tear-drippings stagnate, spilt down ever
 From the dank thoughts that shiver
 Upon the sighful branches of my mind.
 Such is; what is to be? 141
 The pulp so bitter, how shall taste the rind?
 I dimly guess what Time in mists con-
 founds;
 Yet ever and anon a trumpet sounds
 From the hid battlements of Eternity: 145
 Those shaken mists a space unsettle, then Round the half-glímpsed turrets slowly wash again;
 But not ere him who summoneth
 I first have seen, enwound
 With glooming robes purpureal, cypress-
 crowned; 150
 His name I know, and what his trumpet saith.
 Whether man's heart or life it be which yields
 Thee harvest, must Thy harvest fields
 Be dunged with rotten death?
 Now of that long pursuit 155
 Comes on at hand the bruit;
 That Voice is round me like a bursting
 sea:
 "And is thy earth so marred,
 Shattered in shard on shard?
 Lo, all things fly thee, for thou fliest
 Me! 160
 Strange, piteous, futile thing!
 Wherefore should any set thee love apart?

Seeing none but I makes much of naught”
(He said),

“And human love needs human meriting :
How hast thou merited — 165
Of all man’s clotted clay the dingiest clot?
Alack, thou knowest not
How little worthy of any love thou art !
Whom wilt thou find to love ignoble thee,
Save Me, save only Me? 170
All which I took from thee I did but take,
Not for thy harms,

“But just that thou might’st seek it in My arms.
All which thy child’s mistake Fancies as lost, I have stored for thee at
home : 175
Rise, clasp My hand, and come !”

Halts by me that footfall :
Is my gloom, after all,
Shade of His hand, outstretched caressingly?
“Ah, fondest, blindest, weakest,
I am He Whom thou seekest ! 181
Thou dravest love from thee, who dravest
Me.”

SIR WILLIAM WATSON
(1856—

WORDSWORTH’S GRAVE

Poet who sleepest by this wandering wave !
When thou wast born, what birth-gift
hadst thou then?
To thee what wealth was that the Immortals gave,
The wealth thou gavest in thy turn to
men?

Not Milton’s keen, translunar music
thine ; 5
Not Shakespeare’s cloudless, boundless human view ;
Not Shelley’s flush of rose on peaks divine ;
Nor yet the wizard twilight Coleridge knew.

What hadst thou that could make so large amends
For all thou hadst not and thy peers possessed, 10

Motion and fire, swift means to radiant ends? —
Thou hadst, for weary feet, the gift of
rest.

From Shelley’s dazzling glow or thunderous haze,
From Byron’s tempest-anger, tempest-
mirth,
Men turned to thee and found — not blast and blaze, 15
Tumult of tottering heavens, but peace on earth.

Nor peace that grows by Lethe, scentless
flower,
There in white languors to decline and
cease ;
But peace whose names are also rapture,
power,
Clear sight, and love : for these are parts of peace. 20

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY (1849—1903)

BEFORE

Behold me waiting — waiting for the knife.
A little while, and at a leap I storm
The thick, sweet mystery of chloroform,
The drunken dark, the little death-in-life.
The gods are good to me : I have no wife, 5
No innocent child, to think of as I near
The fateful minute ; nothing all-too dear
Unmans me for my bout of passive strife.
Yet I am tremulous and a trifle sick,
And, face to face with chance, I shrink a little : 10
My hopes are strong, my will is something
weak.
Here comes the basket? Thank you. I am ready.
But, gentlemen my porters, life is brittle :
You carry Cæsar and his fortunes — steady !

APPARITION

Thin-legged, thin-chested, slight unspeakably,
Neat-footed and weak-fingered : in his
face —

Lean, large-boned, curved of beak, and touched with race,
Bold-lipped, rich-tinted, mutable as the
sea,
The brown eyes radiant with vivacity — 5
There shines a brilliant and romantic
grace,
A spirit intense and rare, with trace on trace
Of passion and impudence and energy.
Valiant in velvet, light in ragged luck,
Most vain, most generous, sternly critical, 10
Buffoon and poet, lover and sensualist :
A deal of Ariel, just a streak of Puck,
Much Antony, of Hamlet most of all,
And something of the Shorter-Catechist.

O, GATHER ME THE ROSE

O, gather me the rose, the rose,
While yet in flower we find it,
For summer smiles, but summer goes,
And winter waits behind it !

For with the dream foregone, foregone, 5
The deed forborne forever,
The worm, regret, will canker on,
And Time will turn him never.

So well it were to love, my love,
And cheat of any laughter 10
The fate beneath us and above,
The dark before and after.

The myrtle and the rose, the rose,
The sunshine and the swallow,
The dream that comes, the wish that goes, 15
The memories that follow !

INVICTUS

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the Pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance 5
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the Horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years 11
Finds, and shall find, me unafraid.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate : 15
I am the captain of my soul.

TO A. D.

The nightingale has a lyre of gold,
The lark's is a clarion call,
And the blackbird plays but a boxwood
flute,
But I love him best of all.

For his song is all of the joy of life, 5
And we in the mad, spring weather,
We two have listened till he sang
Our hearts and lips together.

I. M. : MARGARITÆ SORORI

A late lark twitters from the quiet skies ;
And from the west,
Where the sun, his day's work ended,
Lingers as in content,
There falls on the old, grey city 5
An influence luminous and serene,
A shining peace.

The smoke ascends
In a rosy-and-golden haze. The spires Shine, and are changed. In the valley 10 Shadows rise. The lark sings on. The
sun,
Closing his benediction,
Sinks, and the darkening air Thrills with a sense of the triumphing
night —
Night with her train of stars 15
And her great gift of sleep.

So be my passing !
My task accomplished and the long day
done,
My wages taken, and in my heart
Some late lark singing, 20

Let me be gathered to the quiet west,
The sundown splendid and serene,
Death.

ROBERT BRIDGES (1844-)

"I LOVE ALL BEAUTEOUS
THINGS"

I love all beauteous things,
I seek and adore them;
God hath no better praise,
And man in his hasty days
Is honored for them. 5

I too will something make
And joy in the making;
Altho' tomorrow it seem Like the empty words of a dream Remembered on waking. 10

WINTER NIGHTFALL

The day begins to droop, —
Its course is done:
But nothing tells the place
Of the setting sun.

The hazy darkness deepens, 5
And up the lane
You may hear, but cannot see,
The homing wain.

An engine pants and hums
In the farm hard by: 10
Its lowering smoke is lost
In the lowering sky.

The soaking branches drip,
And all night through
The dropping will not cease 15
In the avenue.

A tall man there in the house
Must keep his chair:
He knows he will never again
Breathe the spring air: 20

His heart is worn with work;
He is giddy and sick
If he rise to go as far
As the nearest rick:

He thinks of his morn of life, 25
His hale, strong years;
And braves as he may the night
Of darkness and tears.

JOHN MORLEY, VISCOUNT
BLACKBURN (1838-1923)

WORDSWORTH

On Wordsworth's exact position in the hierarchy of sovereign poets, a deep difference of estimate still divides even the most excellent judges. Nobody now dreams of placing him so low as the Edinburgh Reviewers did, nor so high as Southey placed him when he wrote to the author of Philip van Artevelde in 1829 that a greater poet than Wordsworth there never has been nor ever will be. An [10 extravagance of this kind was only the outburst of generous friendship. Coleridge deliberately placed Wordsworth "nearest of all modern writers to Shakespeare and Milton, yet in a kind perfectly unborrowed and his own." Arnold, himself a poet of rare and memorable quality, declares his firm belief that the poetical performance of Wordsworth is, after that of Shakespeare and Milton, un- [20 doubtedly the most considerable in our language from the Elizabethan age to the present time. Dryden, Pope, Gray, Cowper, Goldsmith, Burns, Coleridge, Byron, Shelley, Keats — "Wordsworth's name deserves to stand, and will finally stand, above them all." F. W. H. Meyers, also a poet, and the author of a volume on Wordsworth as much distinguished by insight as by admirable literary grace [30 and power, talks of "a Plato, a Dante, a Wordsworth," all three in a breath, as stars of equal magnitude in the great spiritual firmament. To Swinburne, on the contrary, all these panegyric estimates savor of monstrous and intolerable exaggeration. Amid these contentions of celestial minds it will be safest to content ourselves with one or two plain observations in the humble positive [40 degree, without hurrying into high and final comparatives and superlatives.

One admission is generally made at the outset. Whatever definition of poetry we fix upon, whether that it is the language of passion or imagination formed into regular numbers; or, with Milton, that it should be "simple, sensuous, impassioned"; in any case there are great tracts in Wordsworth which, by no definition [50 and on no terms, can be called poetry. If we say with Shelley, that poetry is what redeems from decay the visitations of the divinity in man, and is the record of the best and happiest moments of the best and happiest minds, then are we bound to agree that Wordsworth records too many moments that are not specially good or happy, that he redeems from decay frequent visitations that are not from any [60 particular divinity in man, and treats them all as very much on a level. Arnold is undoubtedly right in his view that, to be receivable as a classic, Wordsworth must be relieved of a great deal of the poetical baggage that now encumbers him.

The faults and hindrances in Wordsworth's poetry are obvious to every reader. For one thing, the intention to instruct, to improve the occasion, is too deliberate and too hardly pressed. "We hate poetry," said Keats, "that has a palpable design upon us. Poetry should be great and unobtrusive." Charles Lamb's friendly remonstrance on one of Wordsworth's poems is applicable to more of them: "The instructions conveyed in it are too direct; they don't slide into the mind of the reader while he is imagining no such matter." [80

Then, except the sonnets and half a score of the pieces where he reaches his topmost height, there are few of his poems that are not too long, and it often happens even that no degree of reverence for the teacher prevents one from finding passages of almost unbearable prolixity. A defence was once made by a great artist for what, to the unregenerate mind, seemed the merciless tardiness of movement in one [90 of Goethe's romances, that it was meant to impress on his readers the slow march and the tedium of events in human life. The lenient reader may give Wordsworth the advantage of the same ingenious explanation. We may venture on a counsel which is more to the point, in warning the student that not seldom in these blocks of afflicting prose, suddenly we come upon some of the profoundest and most beautiful passages that the poet ever wrote. In deserts of preaching we find, almost within sight of one another, delightful oases of purest poetry. Besides being prolix, Wordsworth is often cumbrous; has often no flight; is not liquid, is not musical. He is heavy and self-conscious with the burden of his message. How much at his best he is, when, as in the admirable and truly Wordsworthian poem of Michael, [110 he spares us a sermon and leaves us the story! Then, he is apt to wear a somewhat stiff-cut garment of solemnity, when not solemnity, but either sternness or sadness, which are so different things, would seem the fitter mood. In truth Wordsworth hardly knows how to be stern, as Dante or Milton was stern, nor has he the note of plangent sadness which strikes the ear in men as morally inferior to [120 him as Rousseau, Keats, Shelley, or Coleridge; nor has he the Olympian air with which Goethe delivered sage oracles. This mere solemnity is specially oppressive in some parts of the Excursion—the performance where we best see the whole poet, and where the poet most absolutely identifies himself with his subject. Yet, even in the midst of these solemn discourses, he suddenly introduces an episode in [130 which his peculiar power is at its height. There is no better instance of this than the passage in the second Book of the Excursion, where he describes with a fidelity, at once realistic and poetic, the worn-out almsman, his patient life and sorry death, and then the unimaginable vision in the skies, as they brought the ancient man down through dull mists from the mountain ridge to die. These hundred and [140 seventy lines are like the landscape in which they were composed; you can no more appreciate the beauty of the one by a single or a second perusal, than you can the other in a scamper through the vale on the box of the coach. But any lover of poetry who will submit himself with leisure and meditation to the impressions of the story, the pity of it, the naturalness of it, the glory and the mystic splendors [150 of the indifferent heavens, will feel that here indeed is the true strength which out of the trivial raises expression for the pathetic and the sublime.

Apart, however, from excess of prolixity and of solemnity, can it be really contended that in purely poetic quality, in ærial freedom and space, in radiant purity of light or depth and variety of color, in penetrating and subtle sweetness [160 of music, in supple mastery of the instrument, in vivid spontaneity of imagination, in clean-cut sureness of touch — Wordsworth is not surpassed by men who were below him in weight and greatness? Even in his own field of the simple and the pastoral has he touched so sweet and spontaneous a note as Burns's Daisy, or the Mouse? When men seek immersion or absorption in the atmosphere of pure [170 poesy, without lesson or moral, or anything but delight of fancy and stir of imagination, they will find him less congenial to their mood than poets not worthy to loose the latchet of his shoe in the greater elements of his art. In all these comparisons, it is not merely Wordsworth's theme and motive and dominant note that are different; the skill of hand is different, and the musical ear and [180 the imaginative eye.

To maintain or to admit so much as this, however, is not to say the last word. The question is whether Wordsworth, however unequal to Shelley in lyric quality, to Coleridge or to Keats in imaginative quality, to Burns in tenderness, warmth, and that humor which is so nearly akin to pathos, to Byron in vividness and energy, yet possesses excellences of his own [190 which place him in other respects above these master-spirits of his time. If the question is to be answered affirmatively, it is clear that only in one direction must we look. The trait that really places Wordsworth on an eminence above his poetic contemporaries, and ranks him, as the ages are likely to rank him, on a line just short of the greatest of all time, is his direct appeal to will and conduct. "There is [200 volition and self-government in every line of his poetry, and his best thoughts come from his steady resistance to the ebb and flow of ordinary desires and regrets. He contests the ground inch by inch with all despondent and indolent humors, and often, too, with movements of inconsiderate and wasteful joy" (R. H. Hutton). That would seem to be his true distinction and superiority over men to whom more [210 had been given of fire, passion, and ravishing music. Those who deem the end of poetry to be intoxication, fever, or rainbow dreams, can care little for Wordsworth. If its end be not intoxication, but on the contrary a search from the wide regions of imagination and feeling for elements of composure deep and pure, and of self-government in a far loftier sense than the merely prudential, then [220 Wordsworth has a gift of his own in which he was approached by no poet of his time. Scott's sane and humane genius, with much the same aims, yet worked with different methods. He once remonstrated with Lockhart for being too apt to measure things by some reference to literature. "I have read books enough," said Scott, "and observed and conversed with enough of eminent and splendidly cultivated [230 minds; but I assure you, I have heard higher sentiments from the lips of poor uneducated men and women, when exerting the spirit of severe yet gentle heroism under difficulties and afflictions, or speaking their simple thoughts as to circumstances in the lot of friends and neighbors, than I ever yet met with out of the pages of the Bible. We shall never learn to respect our real calling and destiny, [240 unless we have taught ourselves to consider everything as moonshine compared with the education of the heart." This admirable deliverance of Scott's is, so far as it goes, eminently Wordsworthian; but Wordsworth went higher and further, striving not only to move the sympathies of the heart, but to enlarge the understanding, and exalt and widen the spiritual vision, all with the aim of leading us [250 towards firmer and austerer self-control.

Certain favorers of Wordsworth answer our question with a triumphant affirmative, on the strength of some ethical, or metaphysical, or theological system which they believe themselves to find in him. But is it credible that poets can permanently live by systems? Or is not system, whether ethical, theological, or philosophical, the heavy lead of poetry? Lucretius is indisputably one of the mighty poets of the world, but Epicureanism is not the soul of that majestic muse. So with Wordsworth. Thought is, on the whole, predominant over feeling in his verse, but prevailing atmosphere of deep and solemn reflection does not make a system. His theology and his ethics, and his so-called Platonical metaphysics, have as little to do with the power of his poetry over us, as the imputed Arianism or any other aspect of the theology of Paradise Lost has to do with the strength and the sublimity of Milton, and his claim to a high perpetual place in the hearts of men. It is best to be entirely sceptical as to the existence of system and ordered philosophy in Wordsworth. When he tells us that "one impulse from a vernal wood may teach you more of man, of moral evil and of good, than all the sages can," such a proposition cannot be seriously taken as more than a half-playful sally for the benefit of some too bookish friend. No impulse from a vernal wood can teach us anything at all of moral evil and of good. When he says that it is his faith, "that every flower enjoys the air it breathes," and that when the budding twigs spread out their fan to catch the air, he is compelled to think "that there was pleasure there," he expresses a charming poetic fancy and no more, and it is idle to pretend to see in it the fountain of a system of philosophy. In the famous Ode on Intimations of Immortality, the poet doubtless does point to a set of philosophic ideas, more or less complete; but the actual thought from which he sets out, that our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting, and that we are less and less able to perceive the visionary gleam, less and less alive to the glory and the dream of external nature, as infancy recedes further from us, is, with all respect for the declaration of Ruskin to the contrary, opposed to notorious fact, experience, and truth. It is a beggarly conception, no doubt, to judge as if poetry should always be capable of a prose rendering; but it is at least fatal to the philosophic pretension of a line or a stanza if, when it is fairly reduced to prose, the prose discloses that it is nonsense, and there is at least one stanza of the great Ode that this doom would assuredly await. Wordsworth's claim, his special gift, his lasting contribution, lies in the extraordinary strenuousness, sincerity, and insight with which he first idealises and glorifies the vast universe around us, and then makes of it, not a theatre on which men play their parts, but an animate presence, intermingling with our words, pouring its companionable spirit about us, and "breathing grandeur upon the very humblest fact of human life." This twofold and conjoint performance, consciously and expressly — perhaps only too consciously — undertaken by a man of strong inborn sensibility to natural impressions, and systematically carried out in a lifetime of brooding meditation and active composition, is Wordsworth's distinguishing title to fame and gratitude. In "words that speak of nothing more than what we are," he revealed new faces of nature; he dwelt on men as they are, men themselves; he strove to do that which has been declared to be the true secret of force in art, to make the trivial serve the expression of the sublime. "Wordsworth's distinctive work," Ruskin has justly said (Modern Painters, iii. 293), "was a war with pomp and pretence, and a display of the majesty of simple feelings and humble hearts, together with high reflective truth in his analysis of the courses of politics and ways of men; without these, his love of nature would have been comparatively worthless."

Yet let us not forget that he possessed the gift which to an artist is the very root of the matter. He saw Nature truly, he saw her as she is, and with his own eyes. The critic whom I have just quoted boldly pronounces him "the keenest-eyed of all modern poets for what is deep and essential in nature." When he describes the daisy, casting the beauty of its star-shaped shadow on the smooth stone, or the boundless depth of the abysses of the sky, or the clouds made vivid as fire by the rays of light, every touch is true, not the copying of a literary phrase, but the result of direct observation.

It is true that Nature has sides to which Wordsworth was not energetically alive — Nature “red in tooth and claw.” He was not energetically alive to the blind and [370] remorseless cruelties of life and the world. When in early spring he heard the blended notes of the birds, and saw the budding twigs and primrose tufts, it grieved him, amid such fair works of Nature, to think “what man has made of man.” As if Nature herself, excluding the conscious doings of that portion of Nature which is the human race, and excluding also Nature’s own share in the making of poor [380] Man, did not abound in raking cruelties and horrors of her own. “Edel sei der Mensch,” sang Goethe in a noble psalm, “Hülfreich und gut, Denn das allein Unterscheidet ihn Von allen Wesen Die wir kennen.” “Let man be noble, helpful, and good, for that alone distinguishes him from all beings that we know. No feeling has nature; to good and bad gives the sun his light, and for the evildoer as for the best shine [390] the moon and stars.” That the laws which Nature has fixed for our lives are mighty and eternal, Wordsworth comprehended as fully as Goethe, but not that they are lawless as iron. Wordsworth had not rooted in him the sense of fate — of the inexorable sequences of things, of the terrible chain that so often binds an awful end to some slight and trivial beginning.

This optimism or complacency in [400] Wordsworth will be understood if we compare his spirit and treatment with that of the illustrious French painter whose subjects and whose life were in some ways akin to his own. Millet, like Wordsworth, went to the realities of humble life for his inspiration. The peasant of the great French plains and the forest was to him what the Cumbrian dalesman was to Wordsworth. But he saw the peasant [410] differently. “You watch figures in the fields,” said Millet, “digging and delving with spade or pick. You see one of them from time to time straightening his loins, and wiping his face with the back of his hand. Thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy brow. Is that the gay lively labor in which some people would have you believe? Yet it is there that for me you must seek true humanity and great [420] poetry. They say that I deny the charm of the country; I find in it far more than charms, I find infinite splendors. I see in it, just as they do, the little flowers of which Christ said that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them. I see clearly enough the sun as he spreads his splendor amid the clouds. None the less do I see on the plain, all smoking, the horses at the plough. I see in some [430] stony corner a man all worn out, whose han han have been heard ever since daybreak — trying to straighten himself a moment to get breath.” The hardness, the weariness, the sadness, the ugliness, out of which Millet’s consummate skill made pictures that affect us like strange music, were to Wordsworth not the real part of the thing. They were all absorbed in the thought of Nature as a whole, wonderful, mighty, harmonious, and benign.

We are not called upon to place great men of his stamp as if they were collegians in a class-list. It is best to take with thankfulness and admiration from each man what he has to give. What Wordsworth does is to assuage, to reconcile, to fortify. He has not Shakespeare’s richness and vast compass, nor Milton’s sublime and unflagging strength, nor [450] Dante’s severe, vivid, ardent force of vision. Probably he is too deficient in clear beauty of form and in concentrated power to be classed by the ages among these great giants. We cannot be sure. We may leave it to the ages to decide. But Wordsworth, at any rate, by his secret of bringing the infinite into common life, as he evokes it out of common life, has the skill to lead us, so long as we yield [460] ourselves to his influence, into inner moods of settled peace, to touch “the depth and not the tumult of the soul,” to give us quietness, strength, steadfastness, and purpose, whether to do or to endure. All art or poetry that has the effect of breathing into men’s hearts, even if it be only for a space, these moods of settled peace, and strongly confirming their judgment and their will for good, — whatever limitations may [470] be found besides, however prosaic may be some or much of the detail, — is great art and noble poetry, and the creator of it will always hold, as Wordsworth holds, a sovereign title to the reverence and gratitude of mankind.

BYRON

Poetry, and not only poetry, but every other channel of emotional expression and æsthetic culture, confessedly moves with the general march of the human mind, and art is only the transformation into ideal and imaginative shapes of a predominant system and philosophy of life. Minor verse-writers may fairly be consigned, without disrespect, to the region of the literature of taste; and criticism of [10 their work takes the shape of a discussion of stray graces, of new turns, of little variations of shade and color, of their conformity to the accepted rules that constitute the technique of poetry. The loftier masters, though their technical power and originality, their beauty of form, strength of flight, music and variousness of rhythm, are all full of interest and instruction, yet, besides these precious [20 gifts, come to us with the size and quality of great historic forces, for they represent the hope and energies, the dreams and the consummation, of the human intelligence in its most enormous movements. To appreciate one of these, we need to survey it on every side. For these we need synthetic criticism, which, after analysis has done its work, and disclosed to us the peculiar qualities of form, conception, [30 and treatment, shall collect the products of this first process, construct for us the poet's mental figure in its integrity and just coherence, and then finally, as the sum of its work, shall trace the relations of the poet's ideas, either direct or indirect, through the central currents of thought, to the visible tendencies of an existing age.

The greatest poets reflect beside all else the broad-bosomed haven of a perfect [40 and positive faith, in which mankind has for some space found shelter, unsuspecting of the new and distant wayfarings that are ever in store. To this band of sacred bards few are called, while perhaps not more than four high names would fill the list of the chosen: Dante, the poet of Catholicism; Shakespeare, of Feudalism;

Milton, of Protestantism; Goethe, of that new faith which is as yet without any [50 universally recognized label, but whose heaven is an ever closer harmony between the consciousness of man and all the natural forces of the universe; whose liturgy is culture, and whose deity is a certain high composure of the human heart.

The far-shining pre-eminence of Shakespeare, apart from the incomparable fertility and depth of his natural gifts, [60 arises secondarily from the larger extent to which he transcended the special forming influences, and refreshed his fancy and widened his range of sympathy, by recourse to what was then the nearest possible approach to a historic or political method. To the poet, vision reveals a certain form of the truth, which the rest of men laboriously discover and prove by the tardier methods of meditation and [70 science. Shakespeare did not walk in imagination with the great warriors, monarchs, churchmen, and rulers of history, nor conceive their conduct, ideas, schemes, and throw himself into their words and actions, without strengthening that original taste which must have first drawn him to historical subjects, and without deepening both his feeling for the great progression of human affairs, and [80 his sympathy for those relative moods of surveying and dealing with them, which are not more positive, scientific, and political, than they may be made truly poetic.

Again, while in Dante the inspiring force was spiritual, and in Goethe it was intellectual, we may say that both in Shakespeare and Milton it was political and social. In other words, with these two, [90 the drama of the one and the epic of the other were each of them connected with ideas of government and the other external movements of men in society, and with the play of the sentiments which spring from them. We assuredly do not mean that in either of them, least of all in Shakespeare, there is an absence of the spiritual element. This would be at once to thrust them down into a lower place; for the spiritual is [100 of the very essence of poetry. But with the spiritual there mixes in our Englishmen a most abundant leaven of recognition of the impressions and impulses of the outer forms of life, as well as of active sympathy with the everyday debate of the world. They are neither of them inferior to the highest in sense of the wide and unutterable things of the spirit; yet with both of them, more than with other poets of [110 the same rank, the man with whose soul and circumstance they have to deal is the πολιτικὸν ζῶον, no high abstraction of the race, but the creature with concrete relations and a full objective life. In Shakespeare the dramatic form helps partly to make this more prominent, though the poet's spirit shines forth thus, independently of the mould which it imposes on itself. Of Milton we may say, [120 too, that in spite of the supernatural machinery of his greatest poem, it bears strongly impressed on it the political mark, and that in those minor pieces, where he is avowedly in the political sphere, he still rises to the full height of his majestic harmony and noblest dignity.

Byron was touched by the same fire. The contemporary and friend of the most truly spiritual of all English poets, Shelley, [130 he was himself among the most essentially political. Or perhaps one will be better understood, describing his quality as a quality of poetical worldliness, in its enlarged and generous sense of energetic interest in real transactions, and a capacity of being moved and raised by them into those lofty moods of emotion which in more spiritual natures are only kindled by contemplation of the vast [140 infinitudes that compass the human soul round about. That Shelley was immeasurably superior to Byron in all the rarer qualities of the specially poetic mind appears to us so unmistakably assured a fact, that difference of opinion upon it can only spring from a more fundamental difference of opinion as to what it is that constitutes this specially poetic quality. If more than anything else it consists [150 in the power of transfiguring action, character, and thought, in the serene radiance of the purest imaginative intelligence, and the gift of expressing these transformed products in the finest articulate vibrations of emotional speech, then must we not confess that Byron has composed no piece which from this point may compare with Prometheus or the Cenci, any more than Rubens may take his place with Raphael? [160 We feel that Shelley transports the spirit to the highest bound and limit of the intelligible; and that with him thought passes through one superadded and more rarefying process than the other poet is master of. If it be true, as has been written, that "Poetry is the breath and finer spirit of all knowledge," we may say that Shelley teaches us to apprehend that further something, the breath and finer [170 spirit of poetry itself. Contrasting, for example, Shelley's Ode to the West Wind with the famous and truly noble stanzas on the eternal sea which close the fourth canto of Childe Harold, who does not feel that there is in the first a volatile and unseizable element that is quite distinct from the imagination and force and high impressiveness, or from any indefinable product of all of these united, which form the [180 glory and power of the second? We may ask in the same way whether Manfred, where the spiritual element is as predominant as it ever is in Byron, is worth half a page of Prometheus?

To perceive and admit this is not to disparage Byron's achievements. To be most deeply penetrated with the differentiating quality of the poet is not, after all, to contain the whole of that admixture [190 of varying and moderating elements which goes to the composition of the broadest and most effective work. Of these elements, Shelley, with all his rare gifts of spiritual imagination and winged melodiousness of verse, was markedly wanting in a keen and omnipresent feeling for the great course of human events. All nature stirred him, except the consummating crown of natural growth. [200

We do not mean anything so untrue as that Shelley was wanting either in deep humanity or in active benevolence, or that social injustice was a thing indifferent to him. We do not forget the energetic political propagandism of his youth in Ireland and elsewhere. Many a furious stanza remains to show how deeply and bitterly the spectacle of this injustice burnt into his soul. But these pieces [210

are accidents. They do not belong to the immortal part of his work. An American original, unconsciously bringing the revolutionary mind to the climax of all utterances possible to it, has said that "men are degraded when considered as the members of a political organization." Shelley's position was on a yet more remote pinnacle than this. Of mankind he was barely conscious, in his loftiest and [220] divinest flights. His muse seeks the vague translucent spaces where the care of man melts away in vision of the eternal forces, of which man may be but the fortuitous manifestation of an hour.

Byron, on the other hand, is never moved by the strength of his passion or the depth of his contemplation quite away from the round earth and the civil animal who dwells upon it. Even his misanthropy is only an inverted form of social solicitude. His practical zeal for good and noble causes might teach us this. He never grudged either money or time or personal peril for the cause of Italian freedom, and his life was the measure and the cost of his interest in the liberty of Greece. Then again he was full not merely of wit, which is sometimes only an affair of the tongue, but of humor also, [240] which goes much deeper; and it is of the essence of the humoristic nature, that whether sunny or saturnine, it binds the thoughts of him who possesses it to the wide medley of expressly human things. Byron did not mis-know himself, nor mis-apprehend the most marked turn of his own character, when he wrote the lines —

I love not Man the less, but Nature more,
From these our interviews, in which I
steal [250]

From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle with the universe and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all
conceal.

It was this which made Byron a social force, a far greater force than Shelley either has been or can be. Men read in each page that he was one of like passions with themselves; that he had their own feet of clay, if he had other members of brass and gold and fine silver which they [260] had none of; and that a vehement sensibility, tenacious energy of imagination, a bounding swell of poetic fancy, had not obliterated, but had rather quickened, the sense of the highest kind of man of the world, which did not decay but waxed stronger in him with years. His openness to beauty and care for it were always inferior in keenness and in hold upon him to his sense of human interest, and the [270] superiority in certain respects of Marino Faliero, for example, where he handles a social theme in a worthy spirit, over Manfred, where he seeks a something tumultuously beautiful, is due to that subordination in his mind of æsthetic to social intention, which is one of the most strongly distinctive marks of the truly modern spirit. The admirable wit both of his letters, and of pieces like the Vision [280] of Judgment and Don Juan, where wit reaches as high as any English writer has ever carried it, shows in another way the same vividness and reality of attraction which every side of human affairs possessed for this glowing and incessantly animated spirit.

RECENT AND CONTEMPORARY POETRY

RUDYARD KIPLING (1865-)

A BALLAD OF EAST AND WEST

*Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet,
Till Earth and Sky stand presently at God's
great Judgment Seat;
But there is neither East nor West, Border,
nor Breed, nor Birth,
When two strong men stand face to face, tho' they come from the ends of the
earth!*

Kamal is out with twenty men to raise the Border side, 5
And he has lifted the Colonel's mare that is the Colonel's pride:
He has lifted her out of the stable-door between the dawn and the day,
And turned the calkins upon her feet, and ridden her far away.
Then up and spoke the Colonel's son that led a troop of the Guides:
"Is there never a man of all my men can say where Kamal hides?" 10 Then up and spoke Mohammed Khan, the son of the Ressaldar,
"If ye know the track of the morning-mist,
ye know where his pickets are.
At dusk he harries the Abazai — at dawn
he is into Bonair,
But he must go by Fort Bukloh to his own place to fare,
So if ye gallop to Fort Bukloh as fast as a bird can fly, 15
By the favor of God ye may cut him off ere he win to the Tongue of Jagai.
But if he be passed the Tongue of Jagai, right swiftly turn ye then,
For the length and the breadth of that grisly plain is sown with Kamal's
men.
There is rock to the left, and rock to the right, and low lean thorn between,
And ye may hear a breech-bolt snick where never a man is seen." 20

The Colonel's son has taken a horse, and a raw rough dun was he,
With a mouth of a bell and the heart of Hell, and the head of the gallows-tree.
The Colonel's son to the Fort has won,
they bid him stay to eat —
Who rides at the tail of a Border thief, he sits not long at his meat.
He's up and away from Fort Bukloh as fast as he can fly, 25 Till he was aware of his father's mare in the gut of the Tongue of Jagai, Till he was aware of his father's mare with Kamal upon her back,
And when he could spy the white of her eye, he made the pistol crack.
He has fired once, he has fired twice, but the whistling ball went wide.
"Ye shoot like a soldier," Kamal said,
"Show now if ye can ride." 30 It's up and over the Tongue of Jagai, as blown dust-devils go;
The dun he fled like a stag of ten, but the mare like a barren doe.
The dun he leaned against the bit and slugged his head above,
But the red mare played with the snafflebars, as a maiden plays with a glove.
There was rock to the left and rock to the right, and low lean thorn between, 35
And thrice he heard a breech-bolt snick tho' never a man was seen.
They have ridden the low moon out of the sky, their hoofs drum up the dawn;
The dun he went like a wounded bull, but the mare like a new-roused fawn.
The dun he fell at a water-course — in a woeful heap fell he,
And Kamal has turned the red mare back,
and pulled the rider free. 40
He has knocked the pistol out of his hand
— small room was there to strive,
" 'Twas only by favor of mine," quoth he,
"ye rode so long alive:
There was not a rock for twenty mile,
there was not a clump of tree,

But covered a man of my own men with his rifle cocked on his knee.
If I had raised my bridle-hand, as I have held it low, 45
The little jackals that flee so fast, were feasting all in a row:
If I had bowed my head on my breast, as I have held it high,
The kite that whistles above us now were gorged till she could not fly."
Lightly answered the Colonel's son:—
"Do good to bird and beast, But count who come for the broken meats
before thou makest a feast. 50
If there should follow a thousand swords
to carry my bones away, Belike the price of a jackal's meal were more than a thief could pay.
They will feed their horse on the standing crop, their men on the garnered
grain,
The thatch of the byres will serve their fires when all the cattle are slain.
But if thou thinkest the price be fair, —
thy brethren wait to sup, 55
The hound is kin to the jackal-spawn, — howl, dog, and call them up!
And if thou thinkest the price be high, in steer and gear and stack, Give me my father's mare again, and I'll fight my own way back!"
Kamal has gripped him by the hand and set him upon his feet.
"No talk shall be of dogs," said he, "when wolf and gray wolf meet. 60
May I eat dirt if thou hast hurt of me in deed or breath,
What dam of lances brought thee forth to jest at the dawn with Death?" Lightly answered the Colonel's son, "I hold by the blood of my clan:
Take up the mare for my father's gift —
by God, she has carried a man!"
The red mare ran to the Colonel's son, and nuzzled against his breast, 65
"We be two strong men," said Kamal then, "but she loveth the younger
best.
So she shall go with a lifter's dower, my turquoise-studded rein,
My broidered saddle and saddle-cloth, and silver stirrups twain."
The Colonel's son a pistol drew, and held
it muzzle-end;

"Ye have taken the one from a foe," said he; "will ye take the mate from a
friend?" 70
"A gift for a gift," said Kamal straight;
"a limb for the risk of a limb.
Thy father has sent his son to me; I'll send my son to him!"
With that he whistled his only son, that dropped from a mountain-crest —
He trod the ling like a buck in spring, and he looked like a lance in rest.
"Now here is thy master," Kamal said,
"who leads a troop of the Guides, 75
And thou must ride at his left side as shield on shoulder rides.
Till Death or I cut loose the tie, at camp and board and bed
Thy life is his — thy fate it is to guard him with thy head.
So thou must eat the White Queen's meat, and all her foes are thine,*
And thou must harry thy father's hold for the peace of the Border-line, 80
And thou must make a trooper tough and hack thy way to power — Belike they will raise thee to Ressaldar when I am hanged in Peshawur."

They have looked each other between the eyes, and there they have found no
fault;
They have taken the Oath of the Brother-in-Blood on leavened bread and salt:
They have taken the Oath of the Brother-in-Blood on fire and fresh-cut sod, 85
On the hilt and haft of the Khyber knife, and the wondrous names of God.
The Colonel's son he rides the mare and Kamal's boy the dun,
And two have come to Fort Bukloh where there went forth but one.
And when they drew to the Quarter-guard, full twenty swords flew clear —
There was not a man but carried his feud with the blood of the mountaineer. 90
"Ha' done, ha' done!" said the Colonel's son. "Put up the steel at your sides!
Last night ye had struck at a Border thief — tonight 'tis a man of the Guides!"

Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the two shall meet,

*Till Earth and Sky stand presently at God's
great Judgment Seat;
But there is neither East nor West, Border,
nor Breed, nor Birth, 95
When two strong men stand face to face, tho'
they come from the ends of the earth.*

DANNY DEEVER

"What are the bugles blowin' for?" said
Files-on-Parade.

"To turn you out, to turn you out," the Color-Sergeant said.

"What makes you look so white, so white?" said Files-on-Parade.

"I'm dreadin' what I've got to watch," the Color-Sergeant said.

For they're hangin' Danny Deever, you can 'ear the Dead March
play, 5

The regiment's in 'ollow square —
they're hangin' him today;

They've taken of his buttons off an'
cut his stripes away,

An' they're hangin' Danny Deever in the mornin'.

"What makes the rear-rank breathe so
'ard?" said Files-on-Parade.

"It's bitter cold, it's bitter cold," the
Color-Sergeant said. 10

"What makes that front-rank man fall down?" said Files-on-Parade.

"A touch of sun, a touch of sun," the Color-Sergeant said.

They are hangin' Danny Deever, they are marchin' of 'im round,

They 'ave 'alted Danny Deever by
'is coffin on the ground;

An' 'e'll swing in 'arf a minute for a sneakin', shootin' hound — 15

O they're hangin' Danny Deever in
the mornin'!

" 'Is cot was right-'and cot to mine," said
Files-on-Parade.

" 'E's sleepin' out an' far to-night," the Color-Sergeant said.

"I've drunk 'is beer a score o' times," said
Files-on-Parade.

" 'E's drinkin' bitter beer alone," the
Color-Sergeant said. 20

They are hangin' Danny Deever, you must mark 'im to 'is place,
For 'e shot a comrade sleepin' — you must look 'im in the face; Nine 'undred of 'is county an' the regiment's disgrace,
While they're hangin' Danny Deever
in the mornin'.

"What's that so black agin the sun?"
said Files-on-Parade. 25

"It's Danny fightin' 'ard for life," the Color-Sergeant said.

"What's that that whimpers over'eard?"
said Files-on-Parade.

"It's Danny's soul that's passin' now,"
the Color-Sergeant said.

For they're done with Danny Deever,
you can 'ear the quick-step play,

The regiment's in column, an' they're marchin' us away; 30

Ho! the young recruits are shakin',
an' they'll want their beer today,

After hangin' Danny Deever in the mornin'.

FUZZY-WUZZY

We've fought with many men acrost the seas,

An' some of 'em was brave an' some was
not:

The Paythan an' the Zulu an' Burmese;
But the Fuzzy was the finest o' the lot.

We never got a ha'porth's change of 'im:
'E squatted in the scrub an' 'ocked our

'orses, 6

'E cut our sentries up at Suakim,

An' 'e played the cat an' banjo with our forces.

So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, at
your 'ome in the Sowdan;

You're a pore benighted 'eathen but
a first-class fightin' man; 10

We gives you your certifikit, an' if you want it signed

We'll come an' 'ave a romp with you whenever you're inclined.

We took our chanst among the Kyber 'ills,
The Boers knocked us silly at a mile;

The Burman guv us Irriwaddy chills, 15
An' a Zulu impi dished us up in style:

But all we ever got from such as they
 Was pop to what the Fuzzy made us
 swaller;
 We 'eld our bloomin' own, the papers say,
 But man for man the Fuzzy knocked us
 'oller. 20
 Then 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, an'
 the missis and the kid;
 Our orders was to break you, an' of course we went an' did.
 We sloshed you with Martinis, an' it wasn't 'ardly fair;
 But for all the odds agin you, Fuzzy-
 Wuz, you bruk the square.

'E 'asn't got no papers of 'is own, 25
 'E 'asn't got no medals nor rewards,
 So we must certify the skill 'e's shown
 In usin' of 'is long two-anded swords:
 When 'e's 'oppin in an' out among the bush
 With 'is coffin-'eaded shield an' shovel-
 spear, 30
 A 'appy day with Fuzzy on the rush
 Will last a 'ealthy Tommy for a year.
 So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, an'
 your friends which is no more;
 If we 'adn't lost some messmates we would 'elp you to deplore;
 But give an' take's the gospel, an'
 we'll call the bargain fair, 35
 For if you 'ave lost more than us, you crumpled up the square!

'E rushes at the smoke when we let drive,
 An' before we know, 'e's 'ackin' at our
 'ead;
 'E's all 'ot sand an' ginger when alive,
 An' 'e's generally shammin' when 'e's
 dead. 40
 'E's a daisy, 'e's a ducky, 'e's a lamb!
 'E's a injia-rubber idiot on a spree;
 'E's the only thing that doesn't care a damn
 For a Regiment o' British Infantee.
 So 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, at
 your 'ome in the Sowdan; 45
 You're a pore benighted 'eathen but
 a first-class fightin' man;
 An' 'ere's to you, Fuzzy-Wuzzy, with your 'ayrick 'ead of 'air —
 You big black boundin' beggar — for you bruk a British square.

GUNGA DIN

You may talk o' gin an' beer
 When you're quartered safe out 'ere,
 An' you're sent to penny-fights an' Aldershot it;
 But if it comes to slaughter,
 You will do your work on water, 5
 An' you'll lick the bloomin' boots of 'im that's got it.
 Now in Injia's sunny clime,
 Where I used to spend my time
 A-servin' of 'Er Majesty the Queen,
 Of all them black-faced crew 10
 The finest man I knew
 Was our regimental bhisti,¹ Gunga Din.
 He was "Din! Din! Din!"
 You limping lump o' brick-dust, Gunga
 Din!
 Hi! slippy hitherao! 15
 Water! get it! Panee lao!
 You squidgy-nosed old idol, Gunga
 Din!"

The uniform 'e wore
 Was nothin' much before,
 An' rather less than 'arf o' that be'ind; 20
 For a twisty piece o' rag
 An' a goatskin water-bag
 Was all the field-equipment 'e could find.
 When the sweatin' troop-train lay
 In a sidin' through the day, 25
 Where the 'eat would make your bloomin' eyebrows crawl,
 We shouted "Harry By!"
 Till our throats were bricky-dry,
 Then we wopped 'im cause 'e couldn't serve us all.
 It was "Din! Din! Din!" 30
 You 'eathen, where the mischief 'ave
 you been?
 You put some juldee in it,
 Or I'll marrow you this minute
 If you don't fill up my helmet, Gunga
 Din!"

'E would dot an' carry one 35
 Till the longest day was done,
 An' 'e didn't seem to know the use o'
 fear.
 If we charged or broke or cut,
 You could bet your bloomin' nut,

¹ water-carrier

'E'd be waitin' fifty paces right flank
rear. 40

With 'is mussick on 'is back,
'E would skip with our attack,
An' watch us till the bugles made "Retire,"
An' for all 'is dirty 'ide
'E was white, clear white, inside, 45
When 'e went to tend the wounded under
fire!

It was "Din! Din! Din!"
With the bullets kickin' dust-spots on the green.

When the cartridges ran out,
You could 'ear the front-files shout: 50
"Hi! ammunition mules an' Gunga
Din!"

I sha'n't forgit the night
When I dropped be'ind the fight
With a bullet where my belt-plate should a' been.

I was chokin' mad with thirst, 55
An' the man that spied me first
Was our good old grinnin', gruntin'
Gunga Din.

'E lifted up my 'ead,
An' 'e plunged me where I bled,
An' 'e guv me 'arf a pint o' water —
green: 60

It was crawlin', and it stunk,
But of all the drinks I've drunk,
I'm gratefullest to one from Gunga Din.

It was "Din! Din! Din!"
'Ere's a beggar with a bullet through 'is spleen; 65

'E's chawin' up the ground an' 'e's
kickin' all around:

For Gawd's sake git the water, Gunga
Din!"

'E carried me away
To where a dooli lay,
An' a bullet come an' drilled the beggar
clean. 70

'E put me safe inside,
An' just before 'e died:
"I 'ope you liked your drink," sez
Gunga Din.

So I'll meet 'im later on
In the place where 'e is gone — 75
Where it's always double drill and no canteen;

'E'll be squattin' on the coals
Givin' drink to pore damned souls,

An' I'll get a swig in Hell from Gunga
Din!

Din! Din! Din! 80
You Lazarushian-leather Gunga Din!
Tho' I've belted you an' flayed you,
By the livin' God that made you,
You're a better man than I am, Gunga
Din!

MANDALAY

By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' eastward to the sea,
There's a Burma girl a-settin', an' I know
she thinks o' me;

For the wind is in the palm-trees, an' the temple-bells they say:

"Come you back, you British soldier;
come you back to Mandalay!"

Come you back to Mandalay, 5
Where the old Flotilla lay:

Can't you 'ear their paddles chunkin'
from Rangoon to Mandalay?

On the road to Mandalay,
Where the flyin'-fishes play,

An' the dawn comes up like thunder
outer China 'crost the Bay! 10

'Er petticut was yaller an' 'er little cap was
green,

An' 'er name was Supi-yaw-lat — jes' the same as Theebaw's Queen;

An' I seed her fust a-smokin' of a whackin'
white cheroot,

An' a-wastin' Christian kisses on an
'eathen idol's foot:

Bloomin' idol made o' mud — 15
Wot they called the Great Gawd
Budd —

Plucky lot she cared for idols when I kissed 'er where she stud!

On the road to Mandalay —

When the mist was on the rice-fields an'
the sun was droppin' slow,
She'd git 'er little banjo an' she'd sing
"Kulla-lo-lo!" 20

With 'er arm upon my shoulder an' her cheek agin my cheek

We useter watch the steamers an' the hathis pilin' teak.

Elephints a-pilin' teak
In the sludgy, squidgy creek,

Where the silence 'ung that 'eavy you was 'arf afraid to speak! 25
On the road to Mandalay —

But that's all shove be'ind me — long ago
an' fur away,
An' there ain't no 'buses runnin' from the Benk to Mandalay;
An' I'm learnin' 'ere in London what the ten-year sodger tells:
"If you've 'eard the East a-callin', why,
you won't 'eed nothin' else." 30
No! you won't 'eed nothin' else
But them spicy garlic smells
An' the sunshine an' the palm-trees an' the tinkly temple bells!
On the road to Mandalay —

I am sick o' wastin' leather on these gutty
pavin'-stones, 35
An' the blasted Henglish drizzle wakes the fever in my bones;
Tho' I walks with fifty 'ousemaids outer Chelsea to the Strand,
An' they talks a lot o' lovin', but wot do they understand?
Beefy face an' grubby 'and —
Law! wot do they understand? 40
I've a neater, sweeter maiden in a cleaner, greener land!
On the road to Mandalay —

Ship me somewheres east of Suez where the best is like the worst,
Where there aren't no Ten Commandments, an' a man can raise a thirst;
For the temple-bells are callin', an' it's there that I would be — 45
By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' lazy at the sea —
On the road to Mandalay,
Where the old Flotilla lay,
With our sick beneath the awnings
when we went to Mandalay!
Oh, the road to Mandalay, 50
Where the flying-fishes play,
An' the dawn comes up like thunder outer China 'crost the Bay!

THE GALLEY-SLAVE

Oh, gallant was our galley from her carven steering-wheel

To her figurehead of silver and her beak of hammered steel;
The leg-bar chafed the ankle, and we gasped for cooler air,
But no galley on the water with our galley could compare!

Our bulkheads bulged with cotton and our masts were stepped in gold — 5
We ran a mighty merchandise of niggers in the hold,
The white foam spun behind us, and the black shark swam below,
As we gripped the kicking sweep-head and we made that galley go.

It was merry in the galley, for we reveled now and then —
If they wore us down like cattle, faith, we fought and loved like men! 10
As we snatched her through the water, so we snatched a minute's bliss,
And the mutter of the dying never spoiled
the lovers' kiss.

Our women and our children toiled beside us in the dark —
They died, we filed their fetters, and we heaved them to the shark —
We heaved them to the fishes, but so fast
the galley sped, 15
We had only time to envy, for we could not mourn our dead.

Bear witness, once my comrades, what a hard-bit gang were we —
The servants of the sweep-head, but the masters of the sea!
By the hands that drove her forward as she plunged and yawed and sheered —
Woman, Man, or God or Devil, was there anything we feared? 20

Was it storm? Our fathers faced it, and a wilder never blew;
Earth that waited for the wreckage watched the galley struggle through.
Burning noon or choking midnight, sickness, sorrow, parting, death — Nay, our very babes would mock you, had they time for idle breath.

But today I leave the galley, and another takes my place; ²⁵
There's my name upon the deck-beam —
let it stand a little space.
I am free — to watch my messmates beating out to open main,
Free of all that Life can offer — save to handle sweep again.

By the brand upon my shoulder, by the gall of clinging steel,
By the welt the whips have left me, by the scars that never heal, ³⁰
By eyes grown old with staring through the sunwash on the brine,
I am paid in full for service — would that service still were mine!

Yet they talk of times and seasons and of woes the years bring forth,
Of our galley swamped and shattered in the rollers of the North,
When the niggers break the hatches, and the decks are gay with gore, ³⁵
And a craven-hearted pilot crams her crashing on the shore.

She will need no half-mast signal, minute-gun, or rocket-flare,
When the cry for help goes seaward, she will find her servants there.
Battered chain-gangs of the orlop, grizzled drafts of years gone by, ³⁹
To the bench that broke their manhood,
they shall lash themselves and die.

Hale and crippled, young and aged, paid,
deserted, shipped away —
Palace, cot, and lazaretto shall make up the tale that day,
When the skies are black above them, and the decks ablaze beneath,
And the top-men clear the raffle with their claspknives in their teeth.

It may be that Fate will give me life and leave to row once more — ⁴⁵ Set some strong man free for fighting as I take awhile his oar.
But today I leave the galley. Shall I curse her service then?
God be thanked — whate'er comes after,
I have lived and toiled with Men!

RECESSIONAL

God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle-line —
Beneath whose awful hand we hold Dominion over palm and pine —
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, ⁵
Lest we forget — lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies —
The captains and the kings depart —
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart. ¹⁰
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget — lest we forget!

Far-called our navies melt away —
On dune and headland sinks the fire —
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday ¹⁵
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget — lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe — ²⁰

Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law —
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget — lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust ²⁵
In reeking tube and iron shard,
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And, guarding, calls not thee to guard,
For frantic boast and foolish word —
Thy mercy on Thy People, Lord! ³⁰

ALFRED EDWARD HOUSMAN
(1859-)

LOVELIEST OF TREES

Loveliest of trees, the cherry now
Is hung with bloom along the bough,
And stands about the woodland ride
Wearing white for Eastertide.

Now, of my threescore years and ten, ⁵
Twenty will not come again,
And take from seventy springs a score,
It only leaves me fifty more.

And since to look at things in bloom
Fifty springs are little room,
About the woodlands I will go
To see the cherry hung with snow.

10

REVEILLE

Wake: the silver dusk returning
Up the beach of darkness brims,
And the ship of sunrise burning Strands upon the eastern rims.

Wake: the vaulted shadow shatters,
Trampled to the floor it spanned,
And the tent of night in tatters
Straws the sky-pavilioned land.

5

Up, lad, up, 'tis late for lying:
Hear the drums of morning play;
Hark, the empty highways crying
"Who'll beyond the hills away?"

10

Towns and countries woo together,
Forelands beacon, belfries call;
Never lad that trod on leather
Lived to feast his heart with all.

15

Up, lad: thews that lie and cumber
Sunlit pallets never thrive;
Morns abed and daylight slumber
Were not meant for man alive.

20

Clay lies still, but blood's a rover;
Breath's a ware that will not keep.
Up, lad: when the journey's over
There'll be time enough to sleep.

TO AN ATHLETE DYING YOUNG

The time you won your town the race
We chaired you through the market-place;
Man and boy stood cheering by,
And home we brought you shoulder-high.

Today, the road all runners come,
Shoulder-high we bring you home,
And set you at your threshold down,
Townsmen of a stiller town.

5

Smart lad, to slip betimes away
From fields where glory does not stay,
And early though the laurel grows
It withers quicker than the rose.

10

Eyes the shady night has shut
Cannot see the record cut,
And silence sounds no worse than cheers
After earth has stopped the ears.

15

Now you will not swell the rout
Of lads that wore their honors out,
Runners whom renown outran
And the name died before the man.

20

So set, before its echoes fade,
The fleet foot on the sill of shade,
And hold to the low lintel up
The still-defended challenge cup.

And round that early-laurelled head
Will flock to gaze the strengthless dead,
And find unwithered on its curls
The garland briefer than a girl's.

25

BREDON HILL

In summertime on Bredon
The bells they sound so clear;
Round both the shires they ring them
In steeples far and near,
A happy noise to hear.

5

Here of a Sunday morning
My love and I would lie,
And see the colored counties,
And hear the larks so high
About us in the sky.

10

The bells would ring to call her
In valleys miles away:
"Come all to church, good people;
Good people, come and pray."
But here my love would stay.

15

And I would turn and answer
Among the springing thyme,
"Oh, peal upon our wedding,
And we will hear the chime,
And come to church in time."

20

But when the snows at Christmas
On Bredon top were strown,
My love rose up so early
And stole out unbeknown
And went to church alone.

25

They tolled the one bell only,
 Groom there was none to see,
 The mourners followed after,
 And so to church went she,
 And would not wait for me. 30

The bells they sound on Bredon,
 And still the steeples hum.
 "Come all to church, good people," —
 Oh, noisy bells, be dumb;
 I hear you, I will come. 35

WHITE IN THE MOON

White in the moon the long road lies,
 The moon stands blank above;
 White in the moon the long road lies
 That leads me from my love.

Still hangs the hedge without a gust, 5
 Still, still the shadows stay:
 My feet upon the moonlight dust
 Pursue the ceaseless way.

The world is round, so travellers tell,
 And straight though reach the 10
 track,
 Trudge on, trudge on, 'twill all be well,
 The way will guide one back.

But ere the circle homeward hies Far, far it must remove:
 White in the moon the long road lies 15
 That leads me from my love.

FAR IN A WESTERN BROOKLAND

Far in a western brookland
 That bred me long ago
 The poplars stand and tremble
 By pools I used to know.

There, in the windless night-time, 5
 The wanderer, marvelling why,
 Halts on the bridge to hearken
 How soft the poplars sigh.

He hears: long since forgotten
 In fields where I was known, 10
 Here I lie down in London
 And turn to rest alone.

There, by the starlit fences,
 The wanderer halts and hears
 My soul that lingers sighing 15
 About the glimmering weirs.

WITH RUE MY HEART IS LADEN

With rue my heart is laden
 For golden friends I had,
 For many a rose-lipt maiden
 And many a lightfoot lad.

By brooks too broad for leaping 5
 The lightfoot boys are laid;
 The rose-lipt girls are sleeping
 In fields where roses fade.

WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS

(1865—)

THE STOLEN CHILD

Where dips the rocky highland
 Of Sleuth Wood in the lake,
 There lies a leafy island
 Where flapping herons wake
 The drowsy water rats; 5
 There we've hid our faery vats,
 Full of berries
 And of reddest stolen cherries.
Come away, O human child!
To the waters and the wild 10
With a faery, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping than
you can understand.

Where the wave of moonlight glosses
 The dim gray sands with light,
 Far off by furthest Rosses 15
 We foot it all the night,
 Weaving olden dances,
 Mingling hands and mingling glances
 Till the moon has taken flight;
 To and fro we leap 20
 And chase the frothy bubbles,
 While the world is full of troubles
 And is anxious in its sleep.
Come away, O human child!
To the waters and the wild 25
With a faery, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping than
you can understand.

Where the wandering water gushes
 From the hills above Glen-Car,
 In pools among the rushes 30
 That scarce could bathe a star,
 We seek for slumbering trout,
 And whispering in their ears
 Give them unquiet dreams;
 Leaning softly out 35
 From ferns that drop their tears
 Over the young streams.
Come away, O human child!
To the waters and the wild
With a faery, hand in hand, 40
For the world's more full of weeping than
you can understand.

Away with us he's going,
 The solemn-eyed:
 He'll hear no more the lowing
 Of the calves on the warm hillside; 45
 Or the kettle on the hob
 Sing peace into his breast,
 Or see the brown mice bob
 Round and round the oatmeal-chest.
For he comes, the human child, 50
To the waters and the wild
With a faery, hand in hand,
From a world more full of weeping than he can understand.

THE FIDDLER OF DOONEY

When I play on my fiddle in Dooney,
 Folk dance like a wave of the sea;
 My cousin is priest in Kilvarnet,
 My brother in Moharabuiee.

I passed my brother and cousin: 5
 They read in their books of prayer;
 I read in my book of songs
 I bought at the Sligo fair.

When we come at the end of time,
 To Peter sitting in state, 10
 He will smile on the three old spirits,
 But call me first through the gate;

For the good are always the merry,
 Save by an evil chance,
 And the merry love the fiddle 15
 And the merry love to dance:

And when the folk there spy me,
 They will all come up to me,
 With "Here is the fiddler of Dooney!"
 And dance like a wave of the sea. 20

THE LAKE ISLE OF INNISFREE

I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree,
 And a small cabin build there, of clay and wattles made;
 Nine bean rows will I have there, a hive
 for the honey bee,
 And live alone in the bee-loud glade.

And I shall have some peace there, for peace comes dropping slow, 5 Dropping from the veils of the morning to where the cricket sings;
 There midnight's all a glimmer, and noon
 a purple glow,
 And evening full of the linnet's wings.

I will arise and go now, for always night and day
 I hear lake water lapping with low sounds
 by the shore; 10
 While I stand on the roadway, or on the pavements gray,
 I hear it in the deep heart's core.

THE SONG OF THE OLD MOTHER

I rise in the dawn, and I kneel and blow
 Till the seed of the fire flicker and glow;
 And then I must scrub and bake and sweep Till the stars are beginning to blink and peep;
 And the young lie long and dream in their
 bed 5
 Of the matching of ribbons for bosom and
 head,
 And their day goes over in idleness,
 And they sigh if the wind but lift a tress:
 While I must work because I am old,
 And the seed of the fire gets feeble and
 cold. 10

SONG FROM THE LAND OF HEART'S DESIRE

The wind blows out of the gates of the
day,
The wind blows over the lonely of heart,
And the lonely of heart is withered away,
While the faeries dance in a place apart,
Shaking their milk-white feet in a ring, 5
Tossing their milk-white arms in the air;
For they hear the wind laugh and murmur
and sing
Of a land where even the old are fair,
And even the wise are merry of tongue;
But I heard a reed of Coolaney say, 10
"When the wind has laughed and murmured and sung,
The lonely of heart is withered away."

INTO THE TWILIGHT

Out-worn heart, in a time out-worn,
Come clear of the nets of wrong and right;
Laugh, heart, again in the gray twilight,
Sigh, heart, again in the dew of the morn.

Your mother Eire is always young, 5
Dew ever shining and twilight gray;
Though hope fall from you and love decay,
Burning in fires of a slanderous tongue.

Come, heart, where hill is heaped upon
hill:
For there the mystical brotherhood 10
Of sun and moon and hollow and wood
And river and stream work out their will;

And God stands winding His lonely horn,
And time and the world are ever in flight;
And love is less kind than the gray
twilight, 15
And hope is less dear than the dew of the morn.

RED HANRAHAN'S SONG ABOUT IRELAND

The old brown thorn trees break in two high over Cummen Strand, Under a bitter black wind that blows from the left hand;

Our courage breaks like an old tree in a black wind and dies,
But we have hidden in our hearts the flame out of the eyes
Of Cathleen, the daughter of Houlihan. 5

The wind has bundled up the clouds high over Knocknarea,
And thrown the thunder on the stones for all that Maeve can say.
Angers that are like noisy clouds have set
our hearts abeat;
But we have all bent low and low and kissed the quiet feet
Of Cathleen, the daughter of Houlihan. 10

The yellow pool has overflowed high up on Clooth-na-Bare,
For the wet winds are blowing out of the clinging air;
Like heavy flooded waters our bodies and our blood;
But purer than a tall candle before the Holy Rood
Is Cathleen, the daughter of Houlihan. 15

"A. E." (GEORGE WILLIAM RUSSELL) (1867-)

THE HERMIT

Now the quietude of earth
Nestles deep my heart within;
Friendships new and strange have birth
Since I left the city's din.

Here the tempest stays its guile, 5
Like a big kind brother plays,
Romps and pauses here awhile
From its immemorial ways.

Now the silver light of dawn,
Slipping through the leaves that fleck 10
My one window, hurries on,
Throws its arms around my neck.

Darkness to my doorway hies,
Lays her chin upon the roof,
And her burning seraph eyes 15
Now no longer keep aloof.

And the ancient mystery
Holds its hands out day by day,
Takes a chair and croons with me
By my cabin built of clay. 20

When the dusky shadow flits,
By the chimney nook I see
Where the old enchanter sits,
Smiles and waves and beckons me.

DAWN

Still as the holy of holies breathes the vast ;
Within its crystal depths the stars grow
dim ;
Fire on the altar of the hills at last
Burns on the shadowy rim.

Moment that holds all moments ; white
upon 5
The verge it trembles ; then like mists of flowers
Break from the fairy fountain of the dawn
The hues of many hours.

* * * * *
Thrown downward from that high companionship
Of dreaming inmost heart with inmost
heart, 10
Into the common daily ways I slip,
My fire from theirs apart.

THE EARTH BREATH

From the cool and dark-lipped furrows
Breathes a dim delight
Through the woodland's purple plumage
To the diamond night.
Aureoles of joy encircle 5
Every blade of grass
Where the dew-fed creatures silent
And enraptured pass.
And the restless ploughman pauses,
Turns and, wondering, 10
Deep beneath his rustic habit Finds himself a king ;
For a fiery moment looking
With the eyes of God
Over fields a slave at morning 15
Bowed him to the sod.

Blind and dense with revelation
Every moment flies,
And unto the Mighty Mother,
Gay, eternal, rise 20
All the hopes we hold, the gladness,
Dreams of things to be.
One of all thy generations,
Mother, hails to thee.
Hail, and hail, and hail for ever, 25
Though I turn again
From thy joy unto the human Vestiture of pain.
I, thy child who went forth radiant
In the golden prime, 30
Find thee still the mother-hearted
Through my night in time ;
Find in thee the old enchantment
There behind the veil
Where the gods, my brothers, linger. 35
Hail, forever, hail !

NATURAL MAGIC

We are tired who follow after Phantasy and truth that flies ;
You with only look and laughter
Stain our hearts with richest dyes.

When you break upon our study 5
Vanish all our frosty cares ;
As the diamond deep grows ruddy,
Filled with morning unawares.

With the stuff that dreams are made of
But an empty house we build : 10
Glooms we are ourselves afraid of,
By the ancient starlight chilled.

All unwise in thought or duty —
Still our wisdom envies you :
We who lack the living beauty 15
Half our secret knowledge rue.

Thought nor fear in you nor dreaming
Veil the light with mist about ;
Joy, as through a crystal gleaming,
Flashes from the gay heart out. 20

Pain and penitence forsaking,
Hearts like cloisters dim and grey,
By your laughter lured, awaking
Join with you the dance of day.

CARROWMORE

It's a lonely road through bogland to the lake at Carrowmore,
And a sleeper lies there dreaming where
the water laps the shore;
Though the moth-wings of the twilight in their purples are unfurled, Yet his sleep is filled with music by the masters of the world.

There's a hand is white as silver that is fondling with his hair: 5
There are glimmering feet of sunshine that are dancing by him there:
And half-open lips of faery that were dyed
a faery red
In their revels where the Hazel Tree its holy clusters shed.

"Come away," the red lips whisper, "all the world is weary now;
'Tis the twilight of the ages and it's time to quit the plough. 10
Oh, the very sunlight 's weary ere it lightens up the dew,
And its gold is changed and faded before it falls to you.

"Though your colleen's heart be tender,
a tenderer heart is near.
What's the starlight in her glances when the stars are shining clear?
Who would kiss the fading shadow when the flower-face glows above? 15
'Tis the beauty of all Beauty that is calling for your love."

Oh, the great gates of the mountain have opened once again,
And the sound of song and dancing falls
upon the ears of men,
And the Land of Youth lies gleaming, flushed with rainbow light and mirth,
And the old enchantment lingers in the honey-heart of earth. 20

GODS OF WAR

1914

Fate wafts us from the pygmies' shore:
We swim beneath the epic skies:

A Rome and Carthage war once more,
And wider empires are the prize;
Where the beaked galleys clashed, lo,
these 5
Our iron dragons of the seas!

High o'er the cloudy battle sweep
The winged chariots in their flight:
The steely creatures of the deep Cleave the dark waters' ancient night: 10
Below, above, in wave, in air,
New worlds for conquest everywhere.

More terrible than spear or sword
Those stars that burst with fiery breath:
More loud the battle cries are poured 15
Along a hundred leagues of death.
So do they fight. How have ye warred, Defeated Armies of the Lord?

This is the Dark Immortal's hour,
His victory, whoever fail; 20
His prophets have not lost their power:
Cæsar and Attila prevail.
These are your legions still, proud ghosts,
These myriad embattled hosts.

How wanes Thine empire, Prince of Peace! 25
With the fleet circling of the suns
The ancient gods their power increase;
Lo, how Thine own anointed ones
Make holy all Thy soul abhorred,
The hate on which Thy love had warred. 30

Who dreamed a dream mid outcasts born
Could overbrow the pride of kings?
They pour on Christ the ancient scorn.
His Dove its gold and silver wings
Has spread. Perhaps it nests in flame 35
In outcasts who abjure His name.

Choose ye your rightful gods, nor pay
Lip reverence that the heart denies.
O Nations, is not Zeus to-day,
The thunderer from the epic skies, 40
More than the Prince of Peace? Is Thor
Not nobler for a world at war?

They fit the dreams of power we hold,
Those gods whose names are with us still,
Men in their image made of old 45
The high companions of their will.

Who build in air an empire's pride —
Would they pray to the Crucified?

O outcast Christ, it was too soon
For flags of battle to be furled 50
While life was yet at the hot noon.
Come in the twilight of the world:
Its kings may greet Thee without scorn
And crown Thee then without a thorn.

WHEN

When mine hour is come
Let no teardrop fall
And no darkness hover Round me where I lie.
Let the vastness call 5
One who was its lover,
Let me breathe the sky.

Where the lordly light
Walks along the world,
And its silent tread 10
Leaves the grasses bright,
Leaves the flowers uncurled,
Let me to the dead
Breathe a gay goodnight.

GILBERT KEITH CHESTERTON
(1874-)

LEPANTO

White founts falling in the Courts of the
sun,
And the Soldan of Byzantium is smiling
as they run;
There is laughter like the fountains in that face of all men feared,
It stirs the forest darkness, the darkness of his beard,
It curls the blood-red crescent, the cres- 5
cent of his lips,
For the inmost sea of all the earth is shaken with his ships.
They have dared the white republics up
the capes of Italy,
They have dashed the Adriatic round the Lion of the Sea,
And the Pope has cast his arms abroad for agony and loss,

And called the kings of Christendom for swords about the Cross. 10
The cold queen of England is looking in the glass;
The shadow of the Valois is yawning at the Mass;
From evening isles fantastical rings faint
the Spanish gun,
And the Lord upon the Golden Horn is laughing in the sun.

Dim drums throbbing, in the hills half
heard, 15
Where only on a nameless throne a crown-less prince has stirred, Where, risen from a doubtful seat and half attained stall,
The last knight of Europe takes weapons
from the wall,
The last and lingering troubadour to whom the bird has sung, That once went singing southward when all the world was young. 20
In that enormous silence, tiny and unafraid,
Comes up along a winding road the noise
of the Crusade.
Strong gongs groaning as the guns boom
far,
Don John of Austria is going to the war,
Stiff flags straining in the night-blasts
cold, 25
In the gloom black-purple, in the glint old-gold,
Torchlight crimson on the copper kettle-
drums,
Then the tuckets, then the trumpets, then the cannon, and he comes.
Don John laughing in the brave beard curled;
Spurning of his stirrups like the thrones of all the world, 30
Holding his head up for a flag of all the
free.
Love-light of Spain — hurrah!
Death-light of Africa!
Don John of Austria
Is riding to the sea. 35

Mahound is in his paradise above the
evening star,
(Don John of Austria is going to the war.)
He moves a mighty turban on the timeless
houri's knees,

His turban that is woven of the sunsets
and the seas.
He shakes the peacock gardens as he rises from his ease, 40
And he strides among the tree-tops and is taller than the trees;
And his voice through all the garden is a thunder sent to bring Black Azrael and Ariel and Ammon on the wing.

Giants and the Genii,
Multiplex of wing and eye, 45
Whose strong obedience broke the sky
When Solomon was king.

They rush in red and purple from the red clouds of the morn,
From the temples where the yellow gods
shut up their eyes in scorn;
They rise in green robes roaring from the green hells of the sea 50
Where fallen skies and evil hues and eye-less creatures be,
On them the sea-valves cluster and the grey sea-forests curl, Splashed with a splendid sickness, the sickness of the pearl;
They swell in sapphire smoke out of the blue cracks of the ground, —
They gather and they wonder and give worship to Mahound. 55
And he saith, "Break up the mountains
where the hermit-folk can hide,
And sift the red and silver sands lest bone
of saint abide,
And chase the Giaours flying night and day, not giving rest,
For that which was our trouble comes again out of the west.
We have set the seal of Solomon on all things under sun, 60
Of knowledge and of sorrow and endurance of things done.

But a noise is in the mountains, in the mountains, and I know
The voice that shook our palaces — four hundred years ago:
It is he that saith not 'Kismet'; it is he that knows not Fate;
It is Richard, it is Raymond, it is Godfrey at the gate! 65
It is he whose loss is laughter when he counts the wager worth,

Put down your feet upon him, that our peace be on the earth."
For he heard drums groaning and he heard guns jar,
(Don John of Austria is going to the war.)
Sudden and still — hurrah! 70
Bolt from Iberia!
Don John of Austria
Is gone by Alcalar.

St. Michael's on his Mountain in the sea-roads of the north (*Don John of Austria is girt and going
forth.*) 75
Where the grey seas glitter and the sharp tides shift
And the sea-folk labor and the red sails
lift.
He shakes his lance of iron and he claps
his wings of stone;
The noise is gone through Normandy;
the noise is gone alone;
The North is full of tangled things and texts and aching eyes, 80
And dead is all the innocence of anger and
surprise,
And Christian killeth Christian in a narrow dusty room,
And Christian dreadeth Christ that hath a newer face of doom,
And Christian hateth Mary that God kissed in Galilee, —
But Don John of Austria is riding to the
sea. 85
Don John calling through the blast and the eclipse,
Crying with the trumpet, with the trumpet of his lips,
Trumpet that sayeth ha!
Domino gloria!
Don John of Austria 90
Is shouting to the ships.

King Philip's in his closet with the Fleece about his neck (Don John of Austria is armed upon the deck.)
The walls are hung with velvet that is black and soft as sin,
And little dwarfs creep out of it and little dwarfs creep in. 95
He holds a crystal phial that has colors
like the moon,

He touches, and it tingles, and he trembles
 very soon,
 And his face is as a fungus of a leprous
 white and grey Like plants in the high houses, that are shuttered from the day,
 And death is in the phial and the end of noble work, 100
 But Don John of Austria has fired upon the Turk.
 Don John's hunting, and his hounds have bayed —
 Booms away past Italy the rumor of his raid.
 Gun upon gun, ha! ha!
 Gun upon gun, hurrah! 105
 Don John of Austria
 Has loosed the cannonade.

The Pope was in his chapel before day or battle broke, (Don John of Austria is hidden in the smoke.)
 The hidden room in man's house where God sits all the year, 110
 The secret window whence the world looks small and very dear.
 He sees as in a mirror on the monstrous
 twilight sea
 The crescent of his cruel ships whose name is mystery;
 They fling great shadows foe-wards,
 making Cross and Castle dark,
 They veil the plumed lions on the galleys of St. Mark; 115
 And above the ships are palaces of brown,
 black-bearded chiefs,
 And below the ships are prisons, where
 with multitudinous griefs, Christian captives sick and sunless, all a laboring race repines
 Like a race in sunken cities, like a nation
 in the mines.
 They are lost like slaves that sweat, and in the skies of morning hung 120
 The stair-ways of the tallest gods when tyranny was young.
 They are countless, voiceless, hopeless as those fallen or fleeing on Before the high Kings' horses in the granite of Babylon.
 And many a one grows witless in his quiet room in hell

Where a yellow face looks inward through the lattice of his cell, 125
 And he finds his God forgotten, and he seeks no more a sign — (But Don John of Austria has burst the battle-line!)
 Don John pounding from the slaughter-painted poop, Purpling all the ocean like a bloody pirate's sloop,
 Scarlet running over on the silvers and the golds, 130
 Breaking of the hatches up and bursting of the holds,
 Thronging of the thousands up that labor
 under sea,
 White for bliss and blind for sun and stunned for liberty.

Vivat Hispania!
Domino Gloria! 135
 Don John of Austria
 Has set his people free!

Cervantes on his galley sets the sword back in the sheath (Don John of Austria rides homeward with a wreath.)
 And he sees across a weary land a straggling road in Spain, 140
 Up which a lean and foolish knight for ever rides in vain,
 And he smiles, but not as Sultans smile,
 and settles back the blade. . . .
 (But Don John of Austria rides home from the Crusade.)

JOHN MASEFIELD (1874-)

A CONSECRATION

Not of the princes and prelates with peri-wigged charioteers Riding triumphantly laurelled to lap the fat of the years, — Rather the scorned — the rejected — the men hemmed in with the spears;
 The men of the tattered battalion which fights till it dies,
 Dazed with the dust of the battle, the din,
 and the cries, 5
 The men with the broken heads and the blood running into their eyes.

Not the be-medalled Commander, beloved of the throne,
Riding cock-horse to parade when the bugles are blown,
But the lads who carried the koppie and cannot be known.

Not the ruler for me, but the ranker, the tramp of the road, 10
The slave with the sack on his shoulders
pricked on with the goad,
The man with too weighty a burden, too
weary a load;

The sailor, the stoker of steamers, the man with the clout,
The chantyman bent at the halliards
putting a tune to the shout,
The drowsy man at the wheel and the tired lookout. 15

Others may sing of the wine and the wealth and the mirth,
The portly presence of potentates goodly in girth; —
Mine be the dirt and the dross, the dust and scum of the earth!

Theirs be the music, the color, the glory,
the gold;
Mine be a handful of ashes, a mouthful of mould. 20
Of the maimed, of the halt and the blind
in the rain and the cold —
Of these shall my songs be fashioned, my tales be told.

AMEN

CARGOES

Quinquireme of Nineveh from distant Ophir,
Rowing home to haven in sunny Palestine,
With a cargo of ivory,
And apes and peacocks,
Sandalwood, cedarwood, and sweet white
wine. 5

Stately Spanish galleon coming from the Isthmus,
Dipping through the Tropics by the palm-green shores,
With a cargo of diamonds,

Emeralds, amethysts,
Topazes, and cinnamon, and gold
moidores. 10

Dirty British coaster with a salt-caked smoke stack,
Butting through the Channel in the mad
March days,
With a cargo of Tyne coal,
Road-rails, pig-lead, Firewood, iron-ware, and cheap tin trays. 15

THE WEST WIND

It's a warm wind, the west wind, full of birds' cries;
I never hear the west wind but tears are in my eyes.
For it comes from the west lands, the old
brown hills;
And April's in the west wind, and daffodils.

It's a fine land, the west land, for hearts
as tired as mine; 5 Apple orchards blossom there, and the air's like wine.

There is cool green grass there, where men
may lie at rest;
And the thrushes are in song there, fluting from the nest.

"Will you not come home, brother? You have been long away.

It's April, and blossom time, and white is the spray: 10

And bright is the sun, brother, and warm
is the rain;

Will you not come home, brother, home
to us again?

"The young corn is green, brother, where the rabbits run;

It's blue sky, and white clouds, and warm rain and sun.

It's song to a man's soul, brother, fire to a man's brain, 15

To hear the wild bees and see the merry spring again.

"Larks are singing in the west, brother,
above the green wheat,

So will you not come home, brother, and rest your tired feet?

I've a balm for bruised hearts, brother,
sleep for aching eyes," Says the warm wind, the west wind, full of birds' cries. 20

It's the white road westwards is the road that I must tread
To the green grass, the cool grass, and rest for heart and head,
To the violets and the brown brooks and the thrushes' song
In the fine land, the west land, the land where I belong.

ROADWAYS

One road leads to London,
One road runs to Wales;
My road leads me seawards
To the white dipping sails.

One road leads to the river, 5
As it goes swinging slow;
My road leads to shipping,
Where the bronzed sailors go —

Leads me, lures me, calls me
To salt green tossing sea; 10
A road without earth's road-dust
Is the right road for me:

A wet road, heaving, shining,
And wild with seagull's cries;
A mad salt sea-wind blowing 15
The salt spray in my eyes.

My road calls me, lures me,
West, east, south, and north;
Most roads lead men homewards;
My road leads me forth 20

To add more miles to the tally
Of grey miles left behind
In quest of that one beauty
God put me here to find,

IGNORANCE

Since I have learned Love's shining alphabet,
And spelled in ink what's writ in me
in flame,

And borne her sacred image richly set Here in my heart to keep me quit of shame;

Since I have learned how wise and passing wise 5
Is the dear friend whose beauty I extol,
And know how sweet a soul looks through the eyes
That are so pure a window to her
soul;

Since I have learned how rare a woman shows
As much in all she does as in her looks, 10
And seen the beauty of her shame the rose,
And dim the beauty writ about in books;

All I have learned, and can learn, shows me this —
How scant, how slight, my knowledge of her is.

BEAUTY

I have seen dawn and sunset on moors and windy hills
Coming in solemn beauty like slow old tunes of Spain;
I have seen the lady April bringing the daffodils,
Bringing the springing grass, and the soft warm April rain.

I have heard the song of the blossoms and the old chant of the sea, 5
And seen strange lands from under the arched white sails of ships;
But the loveliest things of beauty God ever has showed to me
Are her voice, and her hair, and eyes, and the dear red curve of her lips.

THE WILD DUCK

Twilight. Red in the West.
Dimness. A glow on the wood.
The teams plod home to rest.
The wild duck come to glean.

O souls not understood,
What a wild cry in the pool;
What things have the farm ducks seen
That they cry so — huddle and cry?

5

Only the soul that goes.
Eager. Eager. Flying.
Over the globe of the moon,
Over the wood that glows.
Wings linked. Necks a-strain,
A rush and a wild crying.

10

* * * * *

A cry of the long pain
In the reeds of a steel lagoon,
In a land that no man knows.

15

SEA-FEVER

I must go down to the seas again, to the lonely sea and the sky,
And all I ask is a tall ship and a star to steer her by;
And the wheel's kick and the wind's song
and the white sail's shaking,
And a gray mist on the sea's face, and a gray dawn breaking.

I must go down to the seas again, for the call of the running tide
Is a wild call and a clear call that may not be denied;
And all I ask is a windy day with the white clouds flying,
And the flung spray and the blown spume,
and the sea-gulls crying.

5

I must go down to the seas again, to the
vagrant gipsy life,
To the gull's way and the whale's way,
where the wind's like a whetted
knife;
And all I ask is a merry yarn from a laughing fellow-rover,
And quiet sleep and a sweet dream when the long trick's over.

10

ON GROWING OLD

Be with me, Beauty, for the fire is dying;
My dog and I are old, too old for roving.

Man, whose young passion sets the spin-drift flying,
Is soon too lame to march, too cold for loving.

I take the book and gather to the fire,
Turning old yellow leaves; minute by minute
The clock ticks to my heart; a withered wire
Moves a thin ghost of music in the spinet.

I cannot sail your seas, I cannot wander
Your cornland nor your hill-land nor your valleys
Ever again, nor share the battle yonder
Where the young knight the broken squadron rallies;

10

Only stay quiet, while my mind remembers
The beauty of fire from the beauty of embers.

Beauty, have pity, for the strong have
power,
The rich their wealth, the beautiful their
grace,
Summer of man its sunlight and its flower,
Springtime of man all April in a face.

15

Only, as in the jostling in the Strand, Where the mob thrusts or loiters or is
loud,
The beggar with the saucer in his hand
Asks only a penny from the passing crowd,

20

So, from this glittering world with all its fashion,
Its fire and play of men, its stir, its march,
Let me have wisdom, Beauty, wisdom and passion,
Bread to the soul, rain where the summers
parch.

25

Give me but these, and though the darkness close
Even the night will blossom as the rose.

WILFRID WILSON GIBSON

(1880-)

THE SHOP

Tin-tinkle-tinkle-tinkle, went the bell
 As I pushed in; and, once again, the smell Of groceries, and news-sheets freshly printed,
 That always greeted me when I looked in
 To buy my evening paper: but, to-night, 5
 I wondered not to see the well-known face,
 With kind, brown eyes, and ever-friendly
 smile,
 Behind the counter; and to find the place
 Deserted at this hour, and not a light
 In either window. Waiting there a
 while, 10
 Though wondering at what change these changes hinted,
 I yet was grateful for the quiet gloom —
 Lit only by a gleam from the back-room,
 And, here and there, a glint of glass and tin —
 So pleasant, after all the flare and din 15
 And hubbub of the foundry: and my eyes,
 Still tingling from the smoke, were glad
 to rest
 Upon the bordered shelves, so neatly dressed
 That, even in the dusk, they seemed to tell
 No little of the hand that kept them
 clean, 20
 And of the head that sorted things so well
 That naught of waste or worry could be
 seen,
 And kept all sweet with ever-fresh supplies.
 And as I thought upon her quiet way, Wondering what could have got her, that she'd left 25
 The shop, unlit, untended, and bereft
 Of her kind presence, overhead I heard A tiptoe creak, as though somebody stirred,
 With careful step, across the upper floor:
 Then all was silent, till the back-room
 door 30
 Swung open; and her husband hurried in.
 He feared he'd kept me waiting in the
 dark;
 And he was sorry: but his wife who served
 The customers at night-time usually —
 While he made up the ledger after tea, 35

Was busy, when I . . . Well, to tell the truth,
 They were in trouble, for their little son
 Had come in ill from school . . . the doctor said
 Pneumonia . . . they'd been putting him to bed:
 Perhaps I'd heard them, moving over-
 head, 40
 For boards would creak, and creak, for all your care.
 They hoped the best; for he was young;
 and youth
 Could come through much; and all that could be done
 Would be . . . then he stood, listening,
 quite unnerved,
 As though he heard a footstep on the stair, 45
 Though I heard nothing: but at my remark
 About the fog and sleet, he turned,
 And answered quickly, as there burned
 In his brown eyes an eager flame:
 The raw and damp were much to blame: 50
 If but his son might breathe West-country
 air!
 A certain Cornish village he could name
 Was just the place, if they could send him there,
 And only for a week, he'd come back stronger . . .
 And then, again, he listened: and I took 55
 My paper, and went, afraid to keep him longer;
 And left him standing with that haggard
 look.
 Next night, as I pushed in, there was no tinkle:
 And, glancing up, I saw the bell was gone;
 Although, in either window, the gas
 shone; 60
 And I was greeted by a cheery twinkle Of burnished tins and bottles from the shelves:
 And now, I saw the father busy there
 Behind the counter, cutting with a string
 A bar of soap up for a customer, 65
 With weary eyes, and jerky, harassed
 air,
 As if his mind were hardly on the task:
 And when 'twas done, and parcelled up
 for her,

And she had gone, he turned to me, and
said:
He thought that folks might cut their soap themselves . . . 70
'Twas nothing much . . . but any little
thing,
At such a time . . . And, having little doubt
The boy was worse, I did not like to ask;
So picked my paper up, and hurried out.

And, all next day, amid the glare and clang 75
And clatter of the workshop, his words
rang;
And kept on ringing, in my head a-ring;
But any little thing . . . at such a
time . . .
And kept on chiming to the anvils' chime:
But any little thing . . . at such a
time . . . 80
And they were hissed and sputtered in the sizzle
Of water on hot iron: little thing . . .
At such a time: and, when I left, at last,
The smoke and steam, and walked through the cold drizzle,
The lumbering of the 'buses as they
passed 85
Seemed full of it; and to the passing feet,
The words kept patter, patter, with dull
beat.

I almost feared to turn into their street,
Lest I should find the blinds down in
the shop:
And, more than once, I'd half-a-mind to stop, 90
And buy my paper from the yelling boys,
Who darted all about with such a noise
That I half-wondered in a foolish way, How they could shriek so, knowing that
the sound
Must worry children, lying ill in bed . . . 95
Then, thinking even they must earn their
bread,
As I earned mine, and scarce as noisily!
I wandered on; and very soon I found I'd followed where my thoughts had been
all day,
And stood before the shop, relieved to
see 100
The gases burning, and no window-blind

Of blank foreboding. With an easier
mind,
I entered slowly; and was glad to find
The father by the counter, waiting me,
With paper ready and a cheery face. 105
Yes! yes! the boy was better . . . took the turn
Last night, just after I had left the place.
He feared that he'd been short and cross
last night . . .
But when a little child was suffering,
It worried you . . . and any little thing, 110
At such a moment, made you cut up rough:
Though, now that he was going on all
right . . .
Well, he'd have patience, now, to be polite!
And, soon as ever he was well enough,
The boy should go to Cornwall for a
change — 115
Should go to his own home; for he, himself,
Was Cornish, born and bred, his wife
as well:
And still his parents lived in the old
place —
A little place, as snug as snug could
be . . .
Where apple-blossom dipped into the
sea . . . 120
Perhaps, to strangers' ears, that sounded
strange —
But not to any Cornishman who knew
How sea and land ran up into each other;
And how, all round each wide, blue estuary,
The flowers were blooming to the waters'
edge: 125
You'd come on blue-bells like a sea of
blue . . .
But they would not be out for some while
yet . . .
'Twould be primroses, blowing every-
where,
Primroses, and primroses, and prim-
roses . . .
You'd never half-know what primroses
were, 130
Unless you'd seen them growing in the West;
But, having seen, would never more forget.

Why, every bank and every lane and hedge

Was just one blaze of yellow; and the smell,

When the sun shone upon them, after wet . . . ¹³⁵

And his eyes sparkled, as he turned to sell
A penny loaf and half-an-ounce of tea
To a poor child, who waited patiently,
With hacking cough that tore her hollow
chest:

And, as she went out, clutching tight the change, ¹⁴⁰

He muttered to himself: "It's strange,
it's strange

That little ones should suffer so." . . .
The light

Had left his eyes: but when he turned
to me,

I saw a flame leap in them, hot and bright.
"I'd like to take them all," he said,
"to-night!" ¹⁴⁵

And, in the workshop, all through the next day,

The anvils had another tune to play . . .
Primroses, and primroses, and primroses:

The bellows puffing out: It's strange,
it's strange

That little ones should suffer so . . . ¹⁵⁰
And now, my hammer, at a blow:

I'd like to take them all, to-night!
And in the clouds of steam and white-hot glow

I seemed to see primroses everywhere, Primroses, and primroses, and prim-
roses. ¹⁵⁵

And each night after that I heard the boy
Was mending quickly; and would soon
be well:

Till one night I was startled by the bell —
Tin-tinkle-tinkle-tinkle, loud and clear;

And tried to hush it, lest the lad should hear, ¹⁶⁰

But, when the father saw me clutch the
thing,

He said the boy had missed it yesterday;
And wondered why he could not hear it
ring;

And wanted it; and had to have his way.
And then, with brown eyes burning with deep joy, ¹⁶⁵

He told me, that his son was going West —

Was going home . . . the doctor thought,
next week,

He'd be quite well enough: the way
was long;

But trains were quick; and he would soon be there:

And on the journey he'd have every care, ¹⁷⁰

His mother being with him . . . it was
best,

That she should go: for he would find it strange,

The little chap, at first . . . she needed
change . . .

And, when they'd had a whiff of Western
air!

'Twould cost a deal; and there was naught to spare: ¹⁷⁵

But, what was money, if you hadn't
health:

And, what more could you buy, if you'd the wealth . . .

Yes! 'twould be lonely for himself, and rough;

Though, on the whole, he'd manage well
enough:

He'd have a lot to do: and there was naught ¹⁸⁰

Like work to keep folk cheerful: when the hand

Was busy, you had little time for
thought;

And thinking was the mischief . . . and
'twas grand

To know that they'd be happy. Then the bell

Went tinkle-tinkle; and he turned to sell. ¹⁸⁵

One night he greeted me with face that
shone,

Although the eyes were wistful; they were gone —

Had gone this morning, he was glad to
say:

And, though 'twas sore work, setting
them away,

Still, 'twas the best for them . . . and they would be ¹⁹⁰

Already in the cottage by the sea . . .
He spoke no more of them; but turned
his head;

And said he wondered if the price of bread . . .

And, as I went again into the night,
I saw his eyes were glistening in the
light. 195

And, two nights after that, he'd got a letter:

And all was well: the boy was keeping
better;

And was as happy as a child could be,
All day with the primroses and the sea,
And pigs! Of all the wonders of the West, 200

His mother wrote, he liked the pigs the
best.

And now the father laughed until the tears
Were in his eyes, and chuckled: Ay!
he knew!

Had he not been a boy there once, himself?

He'd liked pigs, too, when he was his son's years. 205

And then, he reached a half-loaf from the shelf;

And twisted up a farthing's worth of tea,
And farthing's worth of sugar, for the child,

The same poor child who waited patiently,
Still shaken by a hacking, racking
cough. 210

And all next day the anvils rang with jigs:
The bellows roared and rumbled with loud laughter,

Until it seemed the workshop had gone
wild,

And it would echo, echo, ever after The tune the hammers tinkled on and off, 215

A silly tune of primroses and pigs . . .
Of all the wonders of the West
He liked the pigs, he liked the pigs the
best!

Next night, as I went in, I caught A strange, fresh smell. The postman had just brought 220

A precious box from Cornwall, and the shop

Was lit with primroses, that lay atop
A Cornish pasty, and a pot of cream:

And as, with gentle hands, the father lifted

The flowers his little son had plucked for him, 225

He stood a moment in a far-off dream,

As though in glad remembrances he drifted
On Western seas: and, as his eyes grew
dim,

He stooped, and buried them in deep,
sweet bloom:

Till, hearing once again the poor child's cough, 230

He served her hurriedly, and sent her off, Quite happily, with thin hands filled with flowers.

And as I followed to the street, the gloom
Was starred with primroses; and many hours

The strange, shy flickering surprise 235
Of that child's keen, enchanted eyes

Lit up my heart, and brightened my dull
room.

Then, many nights the foundry kept me
late

With overtime; and I was much too tired
To go round by the shop; but made for bed 240

As straight as I could go: until one night We'd left off earlier, though 'twas after eight,

I thought I'd like some news about the
boy.

I found the shop untended; and the bell
Tin-tinkle-tinkle-tinkled all in vain. 245

And then I saw, through the half-curtained pane,

The back-room was a very blaze of joy:
And knew the mother and son had come safe back.

And as I slipped away, now all was well,
I heard the boy shriek out, in shrill de-
light: 250

"And, father, all the little pigs were black!"

THE SNOW

Just as the school came out,
The first white flakes were drifting round
about:

And all the children shouted with delight
To see such flakes, so big, so white,

Tumbling from a cloud so black,
And whirling helter-skelter

Across the windy moor:

And as they saw the light flakes race,
Started off in headlong chase,

Swooping on them with a shout, 10
When they seemed to drop for shelter
Underneath the dry-stone wall.

And then the master, at the schoolhouse
door,
Called out to them to hurry home, before
The storm should come on worse: and watched till all 15
Had started off by road or moorland
track:

When, turning to his wife, he said
It looked like dirty weather overhead:
He thought 'twould be a heavy fall,
And threatened for a roughish night; 20
But they would all reach home in broad daylight.

'Twas early yet; he'd let the school out
soon,
As it had looked so lowering since forenoon,

And many had a goodish step to go:
And it was but ill-travelling in the snow. 25
Then by the fire he settled down to read;
And to the weather paid no further heed.

And on their road home, full three miles
away,

John, and his little sister, Janey, started;
And at the setting-out were happy-hearted 30

To be let loose into a world so gay,
With jolly winds and frisking flakes at
play

That flicked your cheek, and whistled
in your teeth:

And now hard on each other's heels they darted

To catch a flake that floated like a feather, 35

Then dropt to nestle in a clump of heather;
And often tumbled both together

Into a deep delicious bed
Of brown and springy heath.

But when the sky grew blacker over-
head, 40

As if it were the coming on of night,
And every little hill, well-known to sight,
Looked big and strange in its new fleece
of white;

And as yet faster and more thickly
The big flakes fell, 45
To John the thought came that it might be well

To hurry home; so, striding on before,
He set a steady face across the moor;
And called to Janey she must come more quickly.

The wind soon dropped: and fine and dry
the snow 50

Came whispering down about them, as they trudged:

And when they'd travelled for a mile or so,
They found it ankle-deep: for here the storm

Had started long before it reached the school:

And as he felt the dry flakes tingling
warm 55

Upon his cheek, and set him all aglow,
John in his manly pride, a little grudged
That now and then he had to wait a while
For Janey, lagging like a little fool:

But when they'd covered near another
mile 60

Through that bewildering white without
a sound,

Save rustling, rustling, rustling all around,
And all his well-known world, so queer
and dim,

He waited until she caught up to him;
And felt quite glad that he was not
alone. 65

And when they reached the low, half-buried stone

That marked where some old shepherd had been found,

Lost in the snow in seeking his lost sheep,
One wild March night, full forty years ago,

He wished, and wished, that they were safe and sound 70

In their own house: and as the snow got deeper,

And every little bank seemed strangely
steeper,

He thought, and thought of that lost
sleeper,

And saw him lying in the snow;
Till every fleecy clump of heath 75

Seemed to shroud a man beneath;
And now his blood went hot and cold

Through very fear of that dread sight;
And then he felt that, in sheer fright,

He must take to his heels in flight, 80
He cared not whither, so that it might be

Where there were no more bundles, cold and white,
Like sheeted bodies, plain to see.
And, all on edge, he turned to chide
His sister, dragging at his side: 85
But when he found that she was crying,
Because her feet and hands were cold,
He quite forgot to scold:
And spoke kind words of cheer to her:
And saw no more dead shepherds lying 90
In any snowy clump of heather.
So, hand in hand, they trudged together,
Through that strange world of drifting
gloom,
Sharp-set and longing sore for home.

And John remembered how that morning 95
When they set out, the sky was blue —
Clean, cloudless blue; and gave no warn-
ing;
And how through air as clear as glass,
The far-off hills he knew Looked strangely near, and glittered brightly; 100
Each sprig of heath and blade of grass
In the cold wind blowing lightly,
Each clump of green and crimson moss
Sparkling in the wintry sun.

But now as they toiled home, across 105
These unfamiliar fells, nigh done,
The wind again began to blow;
And thicker, thicker fell the snow:
Till Janey sank, too numb to stir:
When John stooped down, and lifted
her, 110
To carry her upon his back.
And then his head began to tire:
And soon he seemed to lose the track . . .
And now the world was all afire . . .
Now dazzling white, now dazzling
black . . . 115
And then, through some strange land of
light,
Where clouds of butterflies all white,
Fluttered and flickered all about,
Dancing ever in and out,
He wandered, blinded by white wings, 120
That rustled, rustled in his ears
With cold, uncanny whisperings . . .
And then it seemed his bones must crack
With that dead weight upon his back . . .
When, on his cheek, he felt warm tears, 125

And a cold tangle of wet hair;
And knew 'twas Janey weeping there:
And, taking heart, he stumbled on,
While in his breast the hearthlight shone:
And it was all of his desire 130
To sit once more before the fire;
And feel the friendly glowing heat.
But as he strove with fumbling feet,
It seemed that he would never find
Again that cheery hearth and kind; 135
But wander ever, bent and blind,
Beneath his burden through the night
Of dreadful, spangly, whispering white.

The wind rose; and the dry snow drifted
In little eddies round the track: 140
And when, at last, the dark cloud rifted,
He saw a strange lough, lying cold and
black,
'Mid unknown, ghostly hills; and knew
That they were lost: and once again,
The snow closed in: and swept from view 145
The dead black water and strange fells.
But still he struggled on: and then,
When he seemed climbing up an endless
steep,
And ever slipping, sliding back,
With ankles aching like to crack, 150
And only longed for sleep;
He heard a tinkling sound of bells,
That kept on ringing, ringing, ringing,
Until his dizzy head was singing;
And he could think of nothing else: 155
And then it seemed the weight was lifted
From off his back; and on the ground
His sister stood, while, all around
Were giants clad in coats of wool,
With big, curled horns, and queer black
faces, 160
Who bobbed and curtsied in their places,
With blazing eyes and strange grimaces;
But never made a sound;
Then nearly shook themselves to pieces,
Shedding round a smell of warm, wet
fleeces: 165
Then one it seemed as if he knew,
Looking like the old lame ewe,
Began to bite his coat, and pull
Till he could hardly stand: its eyes
Glowing to a monstrous size,
Till they were like a lantern light
Burning brightly through the night .

When some one stooped from out the sky,
To rescue him; and set him high:
And he was riding, snug and warm, 175
In some king's chariot through the storm,
Without a sound of wheel or hoof —
In some king's chariot, filled with straw,
And he would nevermore be cold . . .

And then with wondering eyes he saw 180
Deep caverns of pure burning gold;
And knew himself in fairyland:
But when he stretched an eager hand
To touch the glowing walls, he felt A queer warm puff, as though of
fire . . . 185
And suddenly he smelt
The reek of peat; and looking higher,
He saw the old, black porridge-kettle
Hanging from the cavern roof,
Hanging on its own black crook: 190
And he was lying on the settle,
While by his side,
With tender look,
His mother knelt;
And he had only one desire 195
In all the world; and 'twas to fling
His arms about her neck, and hide
His happy tears upon her breast.
And as to her he closely pressed,
He heard his merry father sing: 200
"There was a silly sleepyhead
Who thought he'd like to go to bed:
So in a stell he went to sleep,
And snored among the other sheep."
And then his mother gently said: 205
"Nay, father: do not tease him now:
He's quite worn out: and needs a deal
Of quiet sleep: and, after all,
He brought his sister safe from school."
And now he felt her warm tears fall 210
Upon his cheek: and thrilled to feel
His father's hand on his hot brow,
And hear him say: "The lad's no fool."

BEFORE ACTION

I sit beside the brazier's glow,
And, drowsing in the heat,
I dream of daffodils that blow
And lambs that frisk and bleat —

Black lambs that frolic in the snow 5
Among the daffodils,

In a far orchard that I know
Beneath the Malvern hills.

Next year the daffodils will blow,
And lambs will frisk and bleat;
But I'll not feel the brazier's glow,
Nor any cold or heat.

THE QUESTION

I wonder if the old cow died or not.
Gey¹ bad she was the night I left, and sick.
Dick reckoned she would mend. He knows a lot —
At least he fancies so himself, does Dick.

Dick knows a lot. But maybe I did
wrong 5
To leave the cow to him, and come away.
Over and over like a silly song
These words keep bumming in my head
all day.

And all I think of, as I face the foe
And take my lucky chance of being shot, 10
Is this — that if I'm hit, I'll never know Till Doomsday if the old cow died or not.

THE FEAR

I do not fear to die
'Neath the open sky,
To meet death in the fight
Face to face, upright.

But when at last we creep
Into a hole to sleep,
I tremble, cold with dread,
Lest I wake up dead.

COMRADES

As I was marching in Flanders
A ghost kept step with me —
Kept step with me and chuckled
And muttered ceaselessly:

¹ very

"Once I too marched in Flanders, 5
The very spit of you,
And just a hundred years since,
To fall at Waterloo.

"They buried me in Flanders
Upon the field of blood, 10
And long I've lain forgotten Deep in the Flemish mud.

"But now you march in Flanders,
The very spit of me;
To the ending of the day's march 15
I'll bear you company."

THE QUIET

I could not understand the sudden quiet —
The sudden darkness — in the crash of
fight,
The din and glare of day quenched in a twinkling
In utter starless night.

I lay an age and idly gazed at nothing, 5
Half-puzzled that I could not lift my head;
And then I knew somehow that I was lying Among the other dead.

OBLIVION

Near the great pyramid, unshadowed,
white,
With apex piercing the white noon-day
blaze,
Swathed in white robes beneath the blinding rays
Lie sleeping Bedouins drenched in white-hot light.

About them, searing to the tingling sight, 5
Swims the white dazzle of the desert ways
Where the sense shudders, witless and adaze,
In a white void with neither depth nor height.

Within the black core of the pyramid
Beneath the weight of sunless centuries 10
Lapped in dead night King Cheops lies
asleep:

Yet in the darkness of his chamber hid
He knows no black oblivion more deep Than that blind white oblivion of noon
skies.

ALFRED NOYES (1880-)

FORTY SINGING SEAMEN

Across the seas of Wonderland to Moga-dore we plodded,
Forty singing seamen in an old black barque,
And we landed in the twilight where a Polyphemus nodded
With his battered moon-eye winking
red and yellow through the dark!
For his eye was growing mellow, 5
Rich and ripe and red and yellow,
As was time, since old Ulysses made him bellow in the dark!
Cho. — Since Ulysses bunged his eye up with a pine-torch in the dark!

Were they mountains in the gloaming or the giant's ugly shoulders
Just beneath the rolling eyeball, with its bleared and vinous glow, 10
Red and yellow o'er the purple of the pines
among the boulders
And the shaggy horror brooding on the sullen slopes below,
Were they pines among the boulders
Or the hair upon his shoulders?
We were only simple seamen, so of course we didn't know. 15
Cho. — We were simple singing seamen, so of course we couldn't know.

But we crossed a plain of poppies, and we came upon a fountain
Not of water, but of jewels, like a spray of leaping fire;
And behind it, in an emerald glade, beneath a golden mountain
There stood a crystal palace, for a sailor to admire; 20
For a troop of ghosts came round
us,
Which with leaves of bay they crowned us,

Then with grog they well nigh drowned us, to the depth of our desire!
Cho. — And 'twas very friendly of them,
as a sailor can admire!

There was music all about us, we were growing quite forgetful 25
We were only singing seamen from the dirt of London-town, Though the nectar that we swallowed seemed to vanish half regretful
As if we wasn't good enough to take such vittles down,
When we saw a sudden figure,
Tall and black as any nigger, 30
Like the devil — only bigger — drawing near us with a frown!
Cho. — Like the devil — but much bigger
— and he wore a golden crown!

And "What's all this?" he growls at us!
With dignity we chaunted,
"Forty singing seamen, sir, as won't be put upon!"
"What? Englishmen?" he cries, "Well, if ye don't mind being haunted, 35
Faith you're welcome to my palace;
I'm the famous Prester John!
Will ye walk into my palace?
I don't bear 'ee any malice!
One and all ye shall be welcome in the halls of Prester John!"
Cho. — So we walked into the palace and the halls of Prester John! 40

Now the door was one great diamond and the hall a hollow ruby — Big as Beachy Head, my lads, nay bigger by a half!
And I sees the mate wi' mouth agape,
a-staring like a booby,
And the skipper close behind him, with his tongue out like a calf!
Now the way to take it rightly 45
Was to walk along politely
Just as if you didn't notice — so I couldn't help but laugh!
Cho. — For they both forgot their manners and the crew was bound to laugh!

But he took us through his palace and, my lads, as I'm a sinner,
We walked into an opal like a sunset-colored cloud — 50

"My dining-room," he says, and, quick as light, we saw a dinner Spread before us by the fingers of a hidden fairy crowd;
And the skipper, swaying gently
After dinner, murmurs faintly,
"I looks to-wards you, Prester John,
you've done us very proud!" 55
Cho. — And we drank his health with honors, for he done us very proud!

Then he walks us to his garden where we sees a feathered demon
Very splendid and important on a sort of spicy tree!
"That's the Phoenix," whispers Prester,
"which all eddicated seamen Knows the only one existent, and he's waiting for to flee! 60
When his hundred years expire
Then he'll set hisself a-fire
And another from his ashes rise most beautiful to see!"
Cho. — With wings of rose and emerald most beautiful to see!

Then he says, "In yonder forest there's a little silver river, 65
And whosoever drinks of it, his youth shall never die!
The centuries go by, but Prester John endures for ever
With his music in the mountains and his magic on the sky!
While your hearts are growing colder,
While your world is growing older, 70
There's a magic in the distance, where the sea-line meets the sky."
Cho. — It shall call to singing seamen till the fount o' song is dry!

So we thought we'd up and seek it, but that forest fair defied us, —
First a crimson leopard laughs at us
most horrible to see,
Then a sea-green lion came and sniffed and licked his chops and eyed
us, 75
While a red and yellow unicorn was dancing round a tree!
We was trying to look thinner,
Which was hard, because our dinner

Must ha' made us very tempting to a cat o' high degree!
Cho. — Must ha' made us very tempting to the whole menarjeree! 80

So we scuttled from that forest and across the poppy meadows
Where the awful shaggy horror brooded o'er us in the dark!

And we pushes out from shore again
a-jumping at our shadows,
And pulls away most joyful to the old black barque!

And home again we plodded 85
While the Polyphemus nodded

With his battered moon-eye winking
red and yellow through the dark.
Cho. — Oh, the moon above the mountains, red and yellow through the dark!

Across the seas of Wonderland to London-town we blundered,

Forty singing seamen as was puzzled for to know 90

If the visions that we saw was caused by
— here again we pondered —

A tippie in a vision forty thousand years ago.

Could the grog we dreamt we swallowed

Make us dream of all that followed?

We were only simple seamen, so of
course we didn't know! 95

Cho. — We were simple singing seamen,
so of course we could not know!

THE HIGHWAYMAN

PART ONE

I

The wind was a torrent of darkness among the gusty trees,

The moon was a ghostly galleon tossed
upon cloudy seas,

The road was a ribbon of moonlight over the purple moor,

And the highwayman came riding —
Riding — riding — 5

The highwayman came riding, up to the old inn-door.

II

He'd a French cocked-hat on his forehead,
a bunch of lace at his chin,
A coat of the claret velvet, and breeches
of brown doe-skin;
They fitted with never a wrinkle: his boots were up to the thigh!
And he rode with a jewelled twinkle, 10
His pistol butts a-twinkle,
His rapier hilt a-twinkle, under the jewelled sky.

III

Over the cobbles he clattered and clashed
in the dark inn-yard,
And he tapped with his whip on the shutters, but all was locked and barred;
He whistled a tune to the window, and who should be waiting there 15
But the landlord's black-eyed daughter,
Bess, the landlord's daughter,
Plaiting a dark red love-knot into her long black hair.

IV

And dark in the dark old inn-yard a stable-wicket creaked
Where Tom the ostler listened; his face was white and peaked; 20
His eyes were hollows of madness, his hair like mouldy hay,
But he loved the landlord's daughter,
The landlord's red-lipped daughter,
Dumb as a dog he listened, and he heard the robber say —

V

"One kiss, my bonny sweetheart, I'm after a prize to-night, 25
But I shall be back with the yellow gold before the morning light;
Yet, if they press me sharply, and harry me through the day,
Then look for me by moonlight,
Watch for me by moonlight,
I'll come to thee by moonlight, though hell should bar the way." 30

VI

He rose upright in the stirrups; he scarce could reach her hand,
 But she loosened her hair i' the casement!
 His face burnt like a brand
 As the black cascade of perfume came tumbling over his breast;
 And he kissed its waves in the moonlight, (Oh, sweet black waves in the moonlight!) 35
 Then he tugged at his rein in the moonlight, and galloped away to the West.

PART TWO

I

He did not come in the dawning; he did not come at noon;
 And out o' the tawny sunset, before the rise o' the moon,
 When the road was a gipsy's ribbon, loop-ing the purple moor,
 A red-coat troop came marching — 40
 Marching — marching — King George's men came marching, up to the old inn-door.

II

They said no word to the landlord, they drank his ale instead,
 But they gagged his daughter and bound her to the foot of her narrow bed;
 Two of them knelt at her casement, with muskets at their side! 45
 There was death at every window,
 And hell at one dark window;
 For Bess could see, through her casement,
 the road that he would ride.

III

They had tied her up to attention, with many a sniggering jest;
 They had bound a musket beside her, with the barrel beneath her breast! 50
 "Now keep good watch!" and they kissed her.
 She heard the dead man say —
Look for me by the moonlight;
Watch for me by the moonlight;
I'll come to thee by moonlight, though hell should bar the way! 55

IV

She twisted her hands behind her; but all the knots held good!
 She writhed her hands till her fingers were wet with sweat or blood!
 They stretched and strained in the darkness, and the hours crawled by like
 years,
 Till, now, on the stroke of midnight,
 Cold, on the stroke of midnight, 60
 The tip of one finger touched it! The trigger at least was hers!

V

The tip of one finger touched it; she strove no more for the rest!
 Up, she stood up to attention, with the barrel beneath her breast,
 She would not risk their hearing; she would not strive again;
 For the road lay bare in the moonlight; 65
 Blank and bare in the moonlight;
 And the blood of her veins in the moonlight throbbed to her love's refrain.

VI

Tlot-tilot; tlot-tilot! Had they heard it?
 The horse-hoofs ringing clear?
Tlot-tilot, tlot-tolt, in the distance? Were they deaf that they did not hear?
 Down the ribbon of moonlight, over the brow of the hill, 70
 The highwayman came riding,
 Riding, riding!
 The red-coats looked to their priming!
 She stood up, straight and still!

VI

Tlot-tilot, in the frosty silence! Tlot-tilot,
 in the echoing night!
 Nearer he came and nearer! Her face was like a light! 75
 Her eyes grew wide for a moment; she drew one last deep breath,
 Then her finger moved in the moonlight,
 Her musket shattered the moonlight,
 Shattered her breast in the moonlight and warned him — with her death.

VIII

He turned; he spurred to the West; he did not know who stood 80 Bowed, with her head o'er the musket, drenched with her own red blood!
 Not till the dawn he heard it; his face grew grey to hear
 How Bess, the landlord's daughter,
 The landlord's black-eyed daughter,
 Had watched for her love in the moonlight,
 and died in the darkness there. 85

IX

Back he spurred like a madman, shrieking a curse to the sky,
 With the white road smoking behind him and his rapier brandished high!
 Blood-red were his spurs i' the golden noon; wine red was his velvet coat,
 When they shot him down on the high-
 way,
 Down like a dog on the highway, 90
 And he lay in his blood on the highway, with the bunch of lace at his throat.

* * * * *

X

*And still of a winter's night, they say, when the wind is in the trees,
 When the moon is a ghostly galleon tossed
 upon cloudy seas,
 When the road is a ribbon of moonlight
 over the purple moor,
 A highwayman comes riding — 95
 Riding — riding,
 A highwayman comes riding up to the old inn-door.*

XI

*Over the cobbles he clatters and clangs in the dark inn-yard;
 He taps with his whip on the shutters, but all is locked and barred;
 He whistles a tune to the window, and who should be waiting there 100
 But the landlord's black-eyed daughter,
 Bess, the landlord's daughter,
 Plaiting a dark red love-knot into her long black hair.*

VICTORY

(Written after the British Service at Trinity Church, New York, held to celebrate the conclusion of the War.)

Before those golden altar-lights we stood,
 Each one of us remembering his own
 dead.
 A more than earthly beauty seemed to brood
 On that hushed throng, and bless each bending head.

Beautiful on that gold, the deep-sea blue 5
 Of those young seamen, ranked on either side,
 Blent with the khaki, while the silence
 grew Deep, as for wings — Oh, deep as England's pride.

Beautiful on that gold, two banners rose —
 Two flags that told how Freedom's realm was made, 10
 One fair with stars of hope, and one that shows
 The glorious cross of England's long crusade;

Two flags, now joined, till that high will be done
 Which sent them forth to make the whole world one.

RUPERT BROOKE (1887-1915)

DAY THAT I HAVE LOVED

Tenderly, day that I have loved, I close your eyes,
 And smooth your quiet brow, and fold your thin dead hands.
 The grey veils of the half-light deepen;
 color dies.
 I bear you, a light burden, to the shrouded sands,

Where lies your waiting boat, by wreaths of the sea's making 5 Mist-garlanded, with all grey weeds of the water crowned.

There you'll be laid, past fear of sleep or hope of waking;
And over the unmoving sea, without
a sound,

Faint hands will row you outward, out beyond our sight,
Us with stretched arms and empty eyes on the far-gleaming ¹⁰
And marble sand . . .

Beyond the shifting cold twilight,
Further than laughter goes, or tears,
further than dreaming,

There'll be no port, no dawn-lit islands!
But the drear

Waste darkening, and, at length, flame ultimate on the deep.

Oh, the last fire — and you, unloved,
unloved there! ¹⁵

Oh, the lone way's red ending, and we not there to weep!

(We found you pale and quiet, and strangely crowned with flowers, Lovely and secret as a child. You came with us,

Came happily, hand in hand with the young dancing hours, High on the downs at dawn!) Void now and tenebrous, ²⁰

The grey sands curve before me. . . .

From the inland meadows,
Fragrant of June and clover, floats
the dark, and fills

The hollow sea's dead face with little creeping shadows,
And the white silence brims the hollow of the hills.

Close in the nest is folded every weary wing, ²⁵

Hushed all the joyful voices; and
we, who held you dear,

Eastward we turn and homeward, alone,
remembering . . .

Day that I loved, day that I loved,
the Night is here!

THE GREAT LOVER

I have been so great a lover: filled my days

So proudly with the splendor of Love's
praise,

The pain, the calm, and the astonishment,
Desire illimitable, and still content,
And all dear names men use, to cheat despair, ⁵

For the perplexed and viewless streams that bear

Our hearts at random down the dark of
life.

Now, ere the unthinking silence on that strife

Steals down, I would cheat drowsy Death
so far,

My night shall be remembered for a star ¹⁰
That outshone all the suns of all men's days.

Shall I not crown them with immortal
praise

Whom I have loved, who have given me, dared with me

High secrets, and in darkness knelt to see
The inenarrable godhead of delight? ¹⁵
Love is a flame; — we have beaconed
the world's night.

A city: — and we have built it, these and I.

An emperor: — we have taught the world
to die.

So, for their sakes I loved, ere I go hence,
And the high cause of Love's magnificence, ²⁰

And to keep loyalties young, I'll write those names

Golden for ever, eagles, crying flames,
And set them as a banner, that men may
know,

To dare the generations, burn, and blow Out on the wind of Time, shining and streaming. . . . ²⁵

These I have loved:

White plates and cups, cleangleaming,

Ringed with blue lines; and feathery,
faery dust;

Wet roofs, beneath the lamp-light; the strong crust

Of friendly bread; and many-tasting food;
Rainbows; and the blue bitter smoke of wood; ³⁰

And radiant raindrops couching in cool
flowers;

And flowers themselves, that sway
through sunny hours,

Dreaming of moths that drink them under
the moon;

Then, the cool kindliness of sheets, that soon Smooth away trouble; and the rough male kiss 35
Of blankets; grainy wood; live hair that is Shining and free; blue-massing clouds;
the keen
Unpassioned beauty of a great machine;
The benison of hot water; furs to touch;
The good smell of old clothes; and other
such — 40
The comfortable smell of friendly fingers,
Hair's fragrance, and the musty reek that lingers
About dead leaves and last year's ferns. . . .

Dear names,
And thousand others throng to me!
Royal flames;
Sweet water's dimpling laugh from tap or spring; 45
Holes in the ground; and voices that do sing;
Voices in laughter, too; and body's pain,
Soon turned to peace; and the deeppanting train;
Firm sands; the little dulling edge of foam
That browns and dwindles as the wave goes home; 50
And washen stones, gay for an hour;
the cold
Graveness of iron; moist black earthen
mould;
Sleep; and high places; footprints in
the dew;
And oaks; and brown horse-chestnuts,
glossy-new;
And new-peeled sticks; and shining pools on grass; — 55
All these have been my loves. And these shall pass,
Whatever passes not, in the great hour,
Nor all my passion, all my prayers, have
power
To hold them with me through the gate
of Death.
They'll play deserter, turn with the traitor
breath, 60
Break the high bond we made, and sell
Love's trust
And sacramented covenant to the dust.

— Oh, never a doubt but, somewhere, I shall wake,
And give what's left of love again, and
make
New friends, now strangers. . . .
But the best I've known, 65
Stays here, and changes, breaks, grows old, is blown
About the winds of the world, and fades from brains
Of living men and dies.
Nothing remains.
O dear my loves, O faithless, once again
This one last gift I give: that after men 70
Shall know, and later lovers, far-removed,
Praise you, "All these were lovely";
say, "He loved."

THE DEAD

Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!
There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But, dying, has made us rarer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away; poured out the red
Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years
to be 5
Of work and joy, and that unhoped serene,
That men call age; and those who would have been,
Their sons, they gave, their immortality.

Blow, bugles, blow! They brought us,
for our dearth,
Holiness, lacked so long, and Love,
and Pain. 10
Honor has come back, as a king, to earth,
And paid his subjects with a royal wage;
And Nobleness walks in our ways again;
And we have come into our heritage.

THE SOLDIER

If I should die, think only this of me:
That there's some corner of a foreign
field
That is for ever England. There shall be In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;

A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware, 5
 Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,
 A body of England's, breathing English
 air,
 Washed by the rivers, blest by suns
 of home.

And think, this heart, all evil shed away,
 A pulse in the eternal mind, no less 10 Gives somewhere back the thoughts
 by England given;
 Her sights and sounds; dreams happy
 as her day;
 And laughter, learnt of friends; and gentleness,
 In hearts at peace, under an English
 heaven.

POEMS OF THE WORLD WAR

(See also selections from Hardy, "A. E.," Gibson, Noyes, and Brooke.)

THE VOLUNTEER

Here lies a clerk who half his life had spent Toiling at ledgers in a city grey,
 Thinking that so his days would drift
 away
 With no lance broken in life's tournament:
 Yet ever 'twixt the books and his bright
 eyes 5
 The gleaming eagles of the legions came,
 And horsemen, charging under phantom
 skies,
 Went thundering past beneath the ori-flamme.

And now those waiting dreams are satisfied;
 From twilight to the halls of dawn he
 went; 10
 His lance is broken; but he lies content
 With that high hour in which he lived and died.
 And falling thus he wants no recompense,
 Who found his battle in the last resort;

Nor needs he any hearse to bear him
 hence, 15
 Who goes to join the men of Agincourt.

— Herbert Asquith

GUNS OF VERDUN

Guns of Verdun point to Metz
 From the plated parapets;
 Guns of Metz grin back again
 O'er the fields of fair Lorraine.

Guns of Metz are long and grey, 5
 Growling through a summer day;
 Guns of Verdun, grey and long,
 Boom an echo of their song.

Guns of Metz to Verdun roar,
 "Sisters, you shall foot the score"; 10
 Guns of Verdun say to Metz,
 "Fear not, for we pay our debts."

Guns of Metz they grumble, "When?"
 Guns of Verdun answer then,
 "Sisters, when to guard Lorraine 15 Gunners lay you East again!"

— Patrick R. Chalmers

IT'S A QUEER TIME

It's hard to know if you're alive or dead
 When steel and fire go roaring through your head.

One moment you'll be crouching at your gun

Traversing, mowing heaps down half in fun:

The next, you choke and clutch at your right breast — 5

No time to think — leave all — and off
 you go . . .

To Treasure Island where the Spice winds
 blow,

To lovely groves of mango, quince and
 lime —

Breathe no good-bye, but ho, for the Red West!

It's a queer time. 10

You're charging madly at them yelling
 "Fag!"
 When somehow something gives, and your feet drag.
 You fall and strike your head; yet feel no pain
 And find . . . you're digging tunnels through the hay
 In the Big Barn, 'cause it's a rainy day. 15
 Oh, springy hay, and lovely beams to climb!
 You're back in the old sailor suit again.
 It's a queer time.

Or you'll be dozing safe in your dug-out —
 A great roar — the trench shakes and falls about — 20
 You're struggling, gasping, struggling,
 then . . . hullo!
 Elsie comes tripping gaily down the trench, Hanky to nose — that lyddite makes a stench —
 Getting her pinafore all over grime.
 Funny! because she died ten years ago!
 It's a queer time. 26

The trouble is, things happen much too quick;
 Up jump the Boches, rifles thump and click,
 You stagger, and the whole scene fades
 away:
 Even good Christians don't like passing straight 30
 From Tipperary or their Hymn of Hate
 To Alleluiah-chanting, and the chime
 Of golden harps . . . and . . . I'm not well to-day . . .
 It's a queer time.

— Robert Graves

INTO BATTLE

The naked earth is warm with Spring,
 And with green grass and bursting
 trees
 Leans to the sun's gaze glorying,
 And quivers in the sunny breeze;
 And Life is Color and Warmth and
 Light, 5
 And a striving evermore for these;
 And he is dead who will not fight;
 And who dies fighting has increase.

The fighting man shall from the sun
 Take warmth, and life from the glowing earth; 10
 Speed with the light-foot winds to run,
 And with the trees to newer birth;
 And find, when fighting shall be done,
 Great rest, and fullness after dearth.

All the bright company of Heaven 15
 Hold him in their high comradeship,
 The Dog-Star, and the Sisters Seven,
 Orion's Belt and sworded hip.

The woodland trees that stand together,
 They stand to him each one a
 friend; 20
 They gently speak in the windy weather;
 They guide to valley and ridges' end.

The kestrel hovering by day,
 And the little owls that call by night,
 Bid him be swift and keen as they, 25
 As keen of ear, as swift of sight.

The blackbird sings to him, "Brother,
 brother,
 If this be the last song you shall sing,
 Sing well, for you may not sing another;
 Brother, sing." 30

In dreary, doubtful, waiting hours,
 Before the brazen frenzy starts,
 The horses show him nobler powers;
 O patient eyes, courageous hearts!

And when the burning moment breaks, 35
 And all things else are out of mind,
 And only Joy-of-Battle takes Him by the throat, and makes him
 blind,

Through joy and blindness he shall know,
 Not caring much to know, that still 40
 Nor lead nor steel shall reach him, so That it be not the Destined Will,

The thundering line of battle stands, 45
 And in the air Death moans and sings;
 But Day shall clasp him with strong
 hands, 45
 And Night shall fold him in soft
 wings.

— Julian Grenfell

THE SPIRES OF OXFORD

I saw the spires of Oxford
 As I was passing by,
 The gray spires of Oxford
 Against the pearl-gray sky.
 My heart was with the Oxford men 5
 Who went abroad to die.

The years go fast in Oxford,
 The golden years and gay;
 The hoary Colleges look down
 On careless boys at play. 10
 But when the bugles sounded war
 They put their games away.

They left the peaceful river,
 The cricket-field, the quad,
 The shaven lawns of Oxford, 15
 To seek a bloody sod —
 They gave their merry youth away
 For country and for God.

God rest you, happy gentlemen,
 Who laid your good lives down, 20
 Who took the khaki and the gun
 Instead of cap and gown.
 God bring you to a fairer place
 Than even Oxford town.

— Winifred M. Lettis

IN FLANDERS FIELDS

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
 Between the crosses, row on row,
 That mark our place; and in the sky
 The larks, still bravely singing, fly
 Scarce heard amid the guns below. 5

We are the Dead. Short days ago
 We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
 Loved and were loved, and now we lie
 In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe: 10
 To you from failing hands we throw
 The torch; be yours to hold it high.
 If ye break faith with us who die
 We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
 In Flanders fields. 15

— John McRae

THE DAY'S MARCH

The battery grides and jingles,
 Mile succeeds to mile;
 Shaking the noonday sunshine,
 The guns lunge out awhile,
 And then are still awhile. 5

We amble along the highway;
 The reeking, powdery dust
 Ascends and cakes our faces
 With a striped, sweaty crust.

Under the still sky's violet 10
 The heat throbs on the air . . .
 The white road's dusty radiance
 Assumes a dark glare.

With a head hot and heavy,
 And eyes that cannot rest, 15
 And a black heart burning
 In a stifled breast,

I sit in the saddle,
 I feel the road unroll,
 And keep my senses straightened 20
 Toward to-morrow's goal.

There, over unknown meadows
 Which we must reach at last,
 Day and night thunders
 A black and chilly blast. 25

Heads forget heaviness,
 Hearts forget spleen,
 For by that mighty winnowing
 Being is blown clean.

Light in the eyes again, 30
 Strength in the hand,
 A spirit dares, dies, forgives,
 And can understand!

And, best! Love comes back again
 After grief and shame, 35
 And along the wind of death
 Throws a clean flame.

* * * * *

The battery grides and jingles,
 Mile succeeds to mile;
 Suddenly battering the silence 40
 The guns burst out awhile.

* * * * *

I lift my head and smile.

— Robert Nichols

THE ASSAULT

The beating of the guns grows louder.
"Not long, boys, now."
 My heart burns whiter, fearfuller, prouder.
 Hurricanes grow
 As guns redouble their fire. 5
 Through the shaken periscope peeping,
 I glimpse their wire:
 Black earth, fountains of earth rise,
 leaping,
 Spouting like shocks of meeting waves.
 Death's fountains are playing. 10
 Shells like shrieking birds rush over;
 Crash and din rises higher.
 A stream of lead raves
 Over us from the left . . . (we safe under cover!)
 Crash! Reverberation! Crash! 15
 Acrid smoke billowing. Flash upon flash.
 Black smoke drifting. The German line Vanishes in confusion, smoke. Cries, and cry
 Of our men, "Gah, yer swine!"
Ye're for it," die 20
 In a hurricane of shell.

One cry:
"We're comin' soon! look out!"
 There is opened hell
 Over there; fragments fly, 25
 Rifles and bits of men whirled at the sky:
 Dust, smoke, thunder! A sudden bout
 Of machine guns chattering . . .
 And redoubled battering,
 As if in fury at their daring! . . . 30

No good staring.

Time soon now . . . home . . . house
 on a sunny hill . . .
 Gone like a flickered page:
 Time soon now . . . zero . . . will engage. . . .

A sudden thrill — 35
"Fix bayonets!"
 Gods! we have our fill
 Of fear, hysteria, exultation, rage,
 Rage to kill.

My heart burns hot, whiter and whiter, 40
 Contracts tighter and tighter,
 Until I stifle with the will Long forged, now used (Though utterly strained) —
 O pounding heart, 45
 Baffled, confused,
 Heart panged, head singing, dizzily
 pained —
 To do my part.

Blindness a moment. Sick.
 There the men are! 50
 Bayonets ready: click!
 Time goes quick;
 A stumbled prayer . . . somehow a blazing star
 In a blue night . . . where?
 Again prayer. 55
 The tongue trips. Start:
 How's time? Soon now. Two minutes or less.
 The guns' fury mounting higher . . .
 Their utmost. I lift a silent hand. Unseen I bless
 Those hearts will follow me. 60
 And beautifully,
 Now beautifully my will grips.
 Soul calm and round and filmed and
 white!

A shout; "Men, no such order as retire";
 I nod.

The whistle's 'twixt my lips . . . 65
 I catch
 A wan, worn smile at me.
 Dear men!
 The pale wrist-watch . . .
 The quiet hand ticks on amid the din. 70
 The guns again
 Rise to a last fury, to a rage, a lust:
 Kill! Pound! Kill! Pound! Pound!
 Now comes the thrust!
 My part . . . dizziness . . . will . . .
 but trust 75
 These men. The great runs rise;
 Their fury seems to burst the earth and skies!

They lift.

Gather, heart, all thoughts that drift;
Be steel, soul, 80
Compress thyself
Into a round, bright whole.
I cannot speak.

Time. Time!
I hear my whistle shriek, 85
Between teeth set;
I fling an arm up,
Scramble up the grime
Over the parapet!
I'm up. Go on. 90
Something meets us.
Head down into the storm that greets us.
A wail.
Lights. Blurr.
Gone. 95
On, on. Lead. Lead. Hail.
Spatter. Whirr! Whirr!
"Toward that patch of brown;
Direction left." Bullets a stream.
Devouring thoughts crying in a dream. 100
Men, crumpled, going down. . . .
Go on. Go.

Deafness. Numbness. The loudening tornado.
Bullets. Mud. Stumbling and skating.
My voice's strangled shout: 105
"Steady pace, boys!"
The still light: gladness.
"Look, sir. Look out!"
Ha! ha! Bunched figures waiting.
Revolver levelled quick! 110
Flick! Flick!
Red as blood.
Germans. Germans.
Good! O good!
Cool madness. 115

— Robert Nichols

TO VICTORY

Return to greet me, colors that were my
joy,
Not in the woeful crimson of men slain,
But shining as a garden; come with the streaming
Banners of dawn and sundown after rain.

I want to fill my gaze with blue and silver, Radiance through living roses, spires of
green 6
Rising in young-limbed copse and lovely
wood
Where the hueless wind passes and cries
unseen.

I am not sad; only I hope for lustre, — Tired of the greys and browns and the leafless ash. 10
I would have hours that move like a glitter of dancers
Far from the angry guns that boom and flash.
Return, musical, gay with blossom and fleetness,
Days when my sight shall be clear and
my heart rejoice;
Come from the sea with breadth of approaching brightness, 15
When the blithe wind laughs on the hills with uplifted voice.

— Siegfried Sassoon

THE KISS

To these I turn, in these I trust;
Brother Lead and Sister Steel.
To his blind power I make appeal;
I guard her beauty clean from rust.
He spins and burns and loves the air, 5
And splits a skull to win my praise;
But up the nobly marching days
She glitters naked, cold and fair.

Sweet Sister, grant your soldier this:
That in good fury he may feel 10
The body when he sets his heel
Quail from your downward darting kiss.

— Siegfried Sassoon

A WORKING PARTY

Three hours ago he blundered up the trench,
Sliding and poising, groping with his boots;
Sometimes he tripped and lurched against the walls
With hands that pawed the sodden bags of chalk.

He couldn't see the man who walked in
front; 5
Only he heard the drum and rattle of feet
Stepping along the trench-boards, — often splashing
Wretchedly where the sludge was ankle-
deep.

Voices would grunt, "Keep to the right, — make way!"
When squeezing past the men from the front line: 10
White faces peered, puffing a point of red;
Candles and braziers glinted through the chinks
And curtain-flaps of dug-outs; then the gloom
Swallowed his sense of sight; he stooped and swore Because a sagging wire had caught his neck. 15
A flare went up; the shining whiteness
spread
And flickered upward, showing nimble
rats,
And mounds of glimmering sand-bags,
bleached with rain;
Then the slow, silver moment died in dark.
The wind came posting by with chilly gusts 20
And buffeting at corners, piping thin
And dreary through the crannies; rifle-shots
Would split and crack and sing along the night,
And shells came calmly through the drizzling air
To burst with hollow bang below the
hill. 25

Three hours ago he stumbled up the trench;
Now he will never walk that road again:
He must be carried back, a jolting lump
Beyond all need of tenderness and care;
A nine-stone corpse with nothing more
to do. 30

He was a young man with a meagre wife
And two pale children in a Midland town;
He showed the photograph to all his
mates;

And they considered him a decent chap
Who did his work and hadn't much to
say, 35
And always laughed at other people's jokes
Because he hadn't any of his own.

That night, when he was busy at his job
Of piling bags along the parapet,
He thought how slow time went, stamping his feet, 40
And blowing on his fingers, pinched with cold.
He thought of getting back by half-past twelve,
And tot of rum to send him warm to sleep
In draughty dug-out frowsty with the fumes
Of coke, and full of snoring, weary men. 45

He pushed another bag along the top,
Craning his body outward; then a flare Gave one white glimpse of No Man's Land and wire;
And as he dropped his head, the instant split
His startled life with lead, and all went
out. 50

— Siegfried Sassoon

ALL THE HILLS AND VALES ALONG

All the hills and vales along
Earth is bursting into song,
And the singers are the chaps
Who are going to die perhaps. 5
O sing, marching men,
Till the valleys ring again.
Give your gladness to earth's keeping,
So be glad, when you are sleeping.

Cast away regret and rue,
Think what you are marching to. 10
Little live, great pass.
Jesus Christ and Barabbas
Were found the same day.
This died, that went his way.
So sing with joyful breath. 15
For why, you are going to death.
Teeming earth will surely store
All the gladness that you pour.

Earth that never doubts nor fears,
 Earth that knows of death, not tears, 20
 Earth that bore with joyful ease
 Hemlock for Socrates, Earth that blossomed and was glad
 'Neath the cross that Christ had,
 Shall rejoice and blossom too 25
 When the bullet reaches you.
 Wherefore, men marching
 On the road to death, sing!
 Pour your gladness on earth's head,
 So be merry, so be dead. 30

From the hills and valleys earth
 Shouts back the sound of mirth,
 Tramp of feet and lilt of song
 Ringing all the road along.
 All the music of their going, 35
 Ringing, swinging, glad song-throwing,
 Earth will echo still, when foot
 Lies numb and voice mute.
 On, marching men, on
 To the gates of death with song. 40
 Sow your gladness for earth's reaping,
 So you may be glad, though sleeping.
 Strew your gladness on earth's bed,
 So be merry, so be dead.

— Charles Hamilton Sorley

THE OLD WAY

[I deeply regret to report the loss of H. M. ships . . . —
 Sir John Jellicoe's dispatch. (The Times, July 7th, 1916.)]

There's a sea that lies uncharted far beyond the setting sun,
 And a gallant Fleet was sailing there whose fighting days are done, Sloop and Galleon, Brig and Pinnace, all the rigs you never met, Fighting Frigate, grave Three-decker,
 with their snowy canvas set,
 Dozed and dreamed, when, on a sudden,
 ev'ry sail began to swell, 5
 For the breeze has spoken strangers, with a stirring tale to tell,
 And a thousand eager voices flung the challenge out to sea :
 "Come they hither in the old way, in the only way that's free?"

And the flying Breeze called softly: "In
 the old way,

Through the winters and the waters of the North, 10
 They have waited, ah the waiting, in the
 old way,
 Strong and patient, from the Pentlands
 to the Forth.
 There was fog to blind and baffle off the headlands,
 There were gales to beat the worst that ever blew,
 But they took it, as they found it, in the
 old way, 15
 And I know it often helped to think of
 you."

'Twas a Frigate, under stun-sails, as she gently gathered way Spoke in jerks, like all the Frigates, who have little time to stay :
 "We'd to hurry, under Nelson ; thank my timbers I was tough,
 For he worked us as he loved us, and he never had enough — 20
 Are the English mad as ever? were the Frigates just as few?
 (Will their sheets be always stranding, ere the rigging's rove anew?)
 Just as Saxon-slow at starting, just as weirdly wont to win?
 Had they Frigates out and watching?
 Did they pass the signals in?"

And the laughing Breeze made answer :
 "In the old way ; 25
 You should see the little cruisers spread and fly,
 Peering over the horizon, in the old way,
 And a seaplane up and wheeling in the
 sky.
 When the wireless snapped 'The enemy is sighted,'
 If his accents were comparatively new, 30
 Why, the sailor men were cheering, in
 the old way,
 So I naturally smiled, and thought of
 you."

Then a courtly voice and stately from a tall Three-decker came — She'd the manners of a monarch and a story in her name :
 "We'd a winter gale at even, and my shrouds are aching yet, 35

It was more than time for reefing when the upper sails were set.
So we chased in woeful weather, till we closed in failing light,
Then we fought them, as we caught them,
just as Hawke had bid us fight;
And we swept the sea by sunrise, clear and free beyond a doubt.
Was it thus the matter ended when the enemy was out?" 40

Cried the Breeze: "They fought and followed in the old way,
For they raced to make a record all the while,
With a knot to veer and haul on, in the
old way,
That had never even met the measured mile —
And the guns were making merry in the twilight. 45
That the enemy was victor may be true, Still — he hurried into harbor — in the
old way —
And I wondered if he'd ever heard of
you."

Came a gruff and choking chuckle, and a craft as black as doom Lumbered laughing down to leeward, as the bravest gave her room. 50
"Set 'um blazin', good your Lordship, for the tide be makin' strong, Proper breeze to fan a fireship, set 'um drivin' out along!
'Tis the Torch, wi' humble duty, from Lord Howard 'board the Ark.
We'm¹ a laughin'-stock to Brixham, but a terror after dark,
Hold an' bilge anigh to burstin', pitch
an' sulphur, tar an' all, 55
Was it so, my dear, they 'm fashioned for my Lord High Admiral?"

Cried the Breeze: "You'd hardly know
it from the old way (Gloriana,² did you waken at the fight?), Stricken shadows, scared and flying, in
the old way,
From the swift destroying spectres of the
night, 60
There were some that steamed and scattered south for safety,

¹ We are.² Queen Elizabeth.

From the mocking western echo 'Where be tu?'
There were some that — got the message — in the old way,
And the flashes in the darkness spoke of
you."

There's a wondrous Golden Harbor, far beyond the setting sun, 65 Where a gallant ship may anchor when her fighting days are done, Free from tempest, rock and battle, toil
and tumult safely o'er,
Where the breezes murmur softly and there's peace for evermore.
They have climbed the last horizon, they are standing in from sea,
And the Pilot makes the Haven where a ship is glad to be: 70 Comes at last the glorious greeting,
strangely new and ages old;
See the silver gray is shining like the Tudor green and gold!

And the waiting jibs are hoisted, in the
old way,
As the guns begin to thunder down the
line;
Hear the silver trumpets calling, in the
old way! 75
Over all the silken pennants float and shine.
"Did you voyage all unspoken, small and
lonely?
Or with fame, the happy fortune of the few?
So you win the Golden Harbor, in the
old way,
There's the old sea welcome waiting there for you." 80

— Ronald A. Hopwood

THE FIRST BATTLE OF YPRES¹

Grey field of Flanders, grim old battle-
plain,
What armies held the iron line round
Ypres in the rain,
From Bixschoote to Baecelaere and down
to the Lys river?

¹ AUTHOR'S NOTE. — In the first battle of Ypres, which was fought in October–November, 1914, a thin line of British supported on each wing by small bodies of French, stopped

Merry men of England,
 Men of the green shires, 5
 From the winding waters,
 The elm-trees and the spires,
 And the lone village dreaming in the downland yonder.
 Half a million Huns broke over them in thunder,
 Roaring seas of Huns swept on and sunk
 again, 10
 Where fought the men of England round
 Ypres in the rain,
 On the grim plain of Flanders, whose earth is fed with slaughter.
 North-country fighting men from the mine and the loom, Highlander and Lowlander stood up to death and doom,
 From Bixschoote to Baecelaere and down
 to the Lys river. 15

London men and Irish,
 Indian men and French,
 Charging with the bayonet,
 Firing in the trench, Fought in that furious fight, shoulder to shoulder. 20
 Leapt from their saddles to charge in fierce disorder,
 The Life Guards, mud and blood for the scarlet and the plume,
 And they hurled back the foemen as the wind the sea spume,
 From Bixschoote to Baecelaere and down
 to the Lys river.

But the huge Hun masses yet mounted more and more, 25
 Like a giant wave gathering to overwhelm the sweet shore,
 While swift the exultant foam runs on before and over.

Where the foam was leaping,
 With bayonets or with none,

the push of an immense German army on Calais. The allusion in the latter part of the poem is not to "the angels of Mons," but to a story received from a very competent witness. On three occasions the Germans broke through our line, then paused and retired, for no apparent reason. On each of these occasions prisoners, when asked the cause of their retirement, replied: "We saw your enormous Reserves." We had no Reserves. This story was incidentally confirmed by the remark of another officer on the curious conduct of the Germans in violently shelling certain empty fields behind our lines.

The cooks and the service men 30
 Ran upon the Hun.
 The cooks and the service men charged and charged together Moussy's cuirassiers, on foot, with spur and saber;
 Helmed and shining fought they as warriors fought of yore — Till calm fell sinister as the hush at the whirlwind's core, 35
 From Bixschoote to Baecelaere and down
 to the Lys river.

Lo! the Emperor launched on us his guard of old renown,
 Stepping in parade-march, as they step through Berlin town,
 On the chill road to Gheluveltdt, in the dark before the dawning.

Heavily tolled on them 40
 Mortal mouths of guns Gallantly, gallantly
 Came the flower of the Huns.
 Proud men they marched, like an avalanche on us falling, Prouder men they met, in the dark before the dawning. 45
 Seven to one they came against us to shatter us and drown,
 One to seven in the woodland we fought them up and down.
 In the sad November woodland, when all the skies were mourning.

The long battle thundered till a waxing
 moon might wane,
 Thrice they broke the exhausted line that held them on the plain, 50
 And thrice like billows they went back,
 from viewless bounds retiring.

Why paused they and went backward,
 With never a foe before,
 Like a long wave dragging Down a level shore 55
 Its fierce reluctant surges, that came triumphant storming
 The land, and powers invisible drive to its deep returning?
 On the gray field of Flanders again and yet again
 The Huns beheld the Great Reserves on the old battle-plain,

The blood-red field of Flanders where all the skies were mourning. 60

The fury of their marshalled guns might plow no dreadful lane Through those Reserves that waited in the ambush of the rain
On the riven plain of Flanders where hills of men lay moaning.

They hurled upon an army
The bellowing heart of Hell, 65
We saw but the meadows
Torn with their shot and shell.
We heard not the march of the succors that were coming,
Their old forgotten bugle-calls, the fifes
and the drumming,
But they gathered and they gathered from the graves where they had lain 70
A hundred years, hundreds of years, on
the old battle-plain,
And the young graves of Flanders, all fresh with dew of mourning.

Marlborough's men and Wellington's,
the burghers of Courtrai,
The warriors of Plantagenet, King Louis'
Gants glacés —
And the young, young dead from Mons and the Marne river. 75

Old heroic fighting men,
Who fought for chivalry,
Men who died for England,
Mother of Liberty.
In the world's dim heart, where the waiting spirits slumber, 80
Sounded a roar when the walls were rent asunder
That parted Earth from Hell, and summoning them away,
Tremendous trumpets blew, as at the Judgment Day —
And the dead came forth, each to his former banner.

On the grim field of Flanders, the old battle-plain, 85
Their armies held the iron line round
Ypres in the rain,
From Bixschoote to Baecelaere and down
to the Lys river.

— Margaret L. Woods

A HARROW¹ GRAVE IN FLANDERS

Here in the marshland, past the battered bridge,
One of a hundred grains untimely sown,
Here, with his comrades of the hard-won ridge
He rests, unknown.

His horoscope had seemed so plainly drawn: 5
School triumphs, earned apace in work
and play;
Friendships at will; then love's delightful dawn
And mellowing day.

Home fostering hope; some service to
the State;
Benignant age; then the last tryst to keep 10
Where in the yew-tree shadow congregate
His fathers sleep.

Was here the one thing needful to distil
From life's alembic, through this holier
fate,
The man's essential soul, the hero-will? 15
We ask; and wait.

— Crewe

"FORM FOURS"²

A VOLUNTEER'S NIGHTMARE

If you're Volunteer Artist or Athlete, or if you defend the Home,
You sacrifice "Ease" for "Attention," and march like a metronome;
But of all elementary movements you learn in your Volunteer Corps
The one that is really perplexing is known as the Forming of Fours.

Imagine us numbered off from the right:
the Sergeant faces the squad, 5
And says that the odd files do not move —
I never seem to be odd!

¹ Harrow is one of England's most distinguished public schools.

² Equivalent to the American command: "Squads right."

And then his instructions like this (very simple in black and white) — “A pace to the rear with the left foot, and one to the right with the right.”

Of course if you don't think deeply, you do it without a hitch;
You have only to know your right and left,
and remember which is which; ¹⁰
But as soon as you try to be careful, you get in the deuce of a plight,
With “a pace to the right with the left foot,
and one to the rear with the right!”

Besides, when you're thoroughly muddled
the Sergeant doubles your doubt

By saying that rules reverse themselves, as soon as you're “turned about”;
So round you go on your right heel, and practise until you are deft ¹⁵
At “pace to the front with the right foot, and one to the left with the left.”

In my dreams the Sergeant, the Kaiser,
and Kipling mix my feet, Saying “East is left, and Right is Might,
and never the twain shall meet!”

In my nightmare squad all files are odd,
and their Fours are horribly queer,
With “a pace to the left with the front foot, and one to the right with the rear!” ²⁰

— Frank Sidgwick

RECENT AND CONTEMPORARY PROSE

GILBERT KEITH CHESTERTON
(1874-)

POPE AND THE ART OF SATIRE

The general critical theory common in this and the last century is that it was very easy for the imitators of Pope to write English poetry. The classical couplet was a thing that anyone could do. So far as that goes, one may justifiably answer by asking anyone to try. It may be easier really to have wit, than really, in the boldest and most enduring sense, to have imagination. But it is immeasur- [10] ably easier to pretend to have imagination than to pretend to have wit. A man may indulge in a sham rhapsody, because it may be the triumph of a rhapsody to be unintelligible. But a man cannot indulge in a sham joke, because it is the ruin of a joke to be unintelligible. A man may pretend to be a poet: he can no more pretend to be a wit than he can pretend to bring rabbits out of a hat without [20] having learnt to be a conjuror. Therefore, it may be submitted, there was a certain discipline in the old antithetical couplet of Pope and his followers. If it did not permit of the great liberty of wisdom used by the minority of great geniuses, neither did it permit of the great liberty of folly which is used by the majority of small writers. A prophet could not be a poet in those days, perhaps, [30] but at least a fool could not be a poet. If we take, for the sake of example, such a line as Pope's:

"Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,"

the test is comparatively simple. A great poet would not have written such a line, perhaps. But a minor poet could not.

Supposing that a lyric poet of the new school really had to deal with such an idea as that expressed in Pope's line [40] about Man:

"A being darkly wise and rudely great."

Is it really so certain that he would go deeper into the matter than that old antithetical jingle goes? I venture to doubt whether he would really be any wiser or weirder or more imaginative or more profound. The one thing that he would really be would be longer. Instead of writing,

"A being darkly wise and rudely great," [50]

the contemporary poet, in his elaborately ornamented book of verses, would produce something like the following:

A creature

Of feature

More dark, more dark, more dark than
skies,

Yea, darkly wise, yea, darkly wise;

Darkly wise as a formless fate.

And if he be great,

If he be great, then rudely great, 60

Rudely great as a plough that plies,

And darkly wise, and darkly wise.

Have we really learnt to think more broadly? Or have we only learnt to spread our thoughts thinner? I have a dark suspicion that a modern poet might manufacture an admirable lyric out of almost every line of Pope.

There is, of course, an idea in our time that the very antithesis of the typical line [70] of Pope is a mark of artificiality. I shall have occasion more than once to point out that nothing in the world has ever been artificial. But certainly antithesis is not artificial. An element of paradox runs through the whole of existence itself. It begins in the realm of ultimate physics and metaphysics, in the two facts that we cannot imagine a space that is infinite, and that we cannot imagine a space that [80] is finite. It runs through the inmost complications of divinity, in that we cannot conceive that Christ in the wilderness was truly pure, unless we also conceive that he desired to sin. It runs, in the same manner, through all the minor matters of morals, so that we cannot imagine courage existing except in conjunction with fear, or magnanimity existing except in conjunction with some temptation to [90] meanness. If Pope and his followers caught this echo of natural irrationality, they were not any the more artificial. Their antitheses were fully in harmony with existence, which is itself a contradiction in terms.

Pope was really a great poet; he was the last great poet of civilization. Immediately after the fall of him and his school came Burns and Byron, and the [100] reaction towards the savage and the elemental. But to Pope civilization was still an exciting experiment. Its perruques and ruffles were to him what feathers and bangles are to a South Sea Islander — the real romance of civilization. And in all the forms of art which peculiarly belong to civilization, he was supreme. In one especially he was supreme — the great and civilized art of satire. And in [110] this we have fallen away utterly.

We have had a great revival in our time of the cult of violence and hostility. Mr. Henley and his young men have an infinite number of furious epithets with which to overwhelm anyone who differs from them. It is not a placid or untroubled position to be Mr. Henley's enemy, though we know that it is certainly safer than to be his friend. And [120] yet, despite all this, these people produce no satire. Political and social satire is a lost art, like pottery and stained glass. It may be worth while to make some attempt to point out a reason for this.

It may seem a singular observation to say that we are not generous enough to write great satire. This, however, is approximately a very accurate way of describing the case. To write great [130] satire, to attack a man so that he feels the attack and half acknowledges its justice, it is necessary to have a certain intellectual magnanimity which realizes the merits of the opponent as well as his defects. This is, indeed, only another way of putting the simple truth that in order to attack an army we must know not only its weak points, but also its strong points. England in the present season and spirit [140] fails in satire for the same simple reason that it fails in war: it despises the enemy. In matters of battle and conquest we have got firmly rooted in our minds the idea (an idea fit for the philosophers of Bedlam) that we can best trample on a people by ignoring all the particular merits which give them a chance of trampling upon us. It has become a breach of etiquette to praise the enemy; whereas, when the [150] enemy is strong, every honest scout ought to praise the enemy. It is impossible to vanquish an army without having a full account of its strength. It is impossible to satirize a man without having a full account of his virtues. It is too much the custom in politics to describe a political opponent as utterly inhuman, as utterly careless of his country, as utterly cynical, which no man ever was since the begin- [160] ning of the world. This kind of invective may often have a great superficial success: it may hit the mood of the moment; it may raise excitement and applause; it may impress millions. But there is one man among all those millions whom it does not impress, whom it hardly ever touches; that is the man against whom it is directed. The one person for whom the whole satire has been written in [170] vain is the man whom it is the whole object of the institution of satire to reach. He knows that such a description of him is not true. He knows that he is not utterly unpatriotic, or utterly self-seeking, or utterly barbarous and revengeful. He knows that he is an ordinary man, and that he can count as many kindly memories, as many humane instincts, as many hours of decent work and responsibility [180 as any other ordinary man. But behind all this he has his real weaknesses, the real ironies of his soul: behind all these ordinary merits lie the mean compromises, the craven silences, the sullen vanities, the secret brutalities, the unmanly visions of revenge. It is to these that satire should reach if it is to touch the man at whom it is aimed. And to reach these it must pass and salute a [190 whole army of virtues.

If we turn to the great English satirists of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, for example, we find that they had this rough, but firm, grasp of the size and strength, the value and the best points of their adversary. Dryden, before hewing Achitophel in pieces, gives a splendid and spirited account of the insane valor and inspired cunning of the [200

“daring pilot in extremity,”

who was more untrustworthy in calm than in storm, and

“Steered too near the rocks to boast his wit.”

The whole is, so far as it goes, a sound and picturesque version of the great Shaftesbury. It would, in many ways, serve as a very sound and picturesque account of Lord Randolph Churchill. But here comes in very pointedly the [210 difference between our modern attempts at satire and the ancient achievement of it. The opponents of Lord Randolph Churchill, both Liberal and Conservative, did not satirize him nobly and honestly, as one of those great wits to madness near allied. They represented him as a mere puppy, a silly and irreverent upstart whose impudence supplied the lack of policy and character. Churchill [220 had grave and even gross faults, a certain coarseness, a certain hard boyish assertiveness, a certain lack of magnanimity, a certain peculiar patrician vulgarity. But he was a much larger man than satire depicted him, and therefore the satire could not and did not overwhelm him. And here we have the cause of the failure of contemporary satire, that it has no magnanimity, that is to [230 say, no patience. It cannot endure to be told that its opponent has his strong points, just as Mr. Chamberlain could not endure to be told that the Boers had a regular army. It can be content with nothing except persuading itself that its opponent is utterly bad or utterly stupid — that is, that he is what he is not and what nobody else is. If we take any prominent politician of the day — such, for example, [240 as Sir William Harcourt — we shall find that this is the point in which all party invective fails. The Tory satire at the expense of Sir William Harcourt is always desperately endeavoring to represent that he is inept, that he makes a fool of himself, that he is disagreeable and disgraceful and untrustworthy. The defect of all that is that we all know that it is untrue. Everyone knows that Sir William Har- [250 court is not inept, but is almost the ablest Parliamentary man now alive. Everyone knows that he is not disagreeable or disgraceful, but a gentleman of the old school who is on excellent social terms with his antagonists. Everyone knows that he is not untrustworthy, but a man of unimpeachable honor who is much trusted. Above all, he knows it himself, and is therefore affected by the satire exactly [260 as any one of us would be if he were accused of being black, or of keeping a shop for the receiving of stolen goods. We might be angry at the libel, but not at the satire: for a man is angry at a libel because it is false, but at a satire because it is true.

Mr. Henley and his young men are very fond of invective and satire; if they wish to know the reason of their failure in these [270 things, they need only turn to the opening of Pope's superb attack upon Addison. The Henleyite's idea of satirizing a man is to express a violent contempt for him, and by the heat of this to persuade others and himself that the man is contemptible. I remember reading a satiric attack on Mr. Gladstone by one of the young anarchic Tories, which began by asserting that Mr. Gladstone was a bad public [280 speaker. If these people would, as I have said, go quietly and read Pope's "Attila cus," they would see how a great satirist approaches a great enemy:

"Peace to all such! But were there one whose fires
True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires,
Blest with each talent, and each art to please,
And born to write, converse, and live
with ease;
Should such a man . . ."

And then follows the torrent of that [290 terrible criticism. Pope was not such a fool as to try to make out that Addison was a fool. He knew that Addison was not a fool, and he knew that Addison knew it. But hatred, in Pope's case, had become so great and, I was almost going to say, so pure, that it illuminated all things, as love illuminates all things.
He said what was really wrong with Addison; and in calm and clear and [300 everlasting colors he painted the picture of the evil of the literary temperament:

"Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the
throne,
View him with scornful, yet with jealous
eyes,
And hate for arts that caused himself to rise.

* * * * *

Like Cato give his little Senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause,
While wits and templars every sentence
raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise."

This is the kind of thing which really [310 goes to the mark at which it aims. It is penetrated with sorrow and a kind of reverence, and it is addressed directly to a man. This is no mock-tournament to gain the applause of the crowd. It is a deadly duel by the lonely seashore.

In current political materialism there is everywhere the assumption that, without understanding anything of his case or his merits, we can benefit a man prac- [320 tically. Without understanding his case and his merits, we cannot even hurt him.

ARNOLD BENNETT (1867-)

From LITERARY TASTE: HOW TO FORM IT

THE AIM

At the beginning a misconception must be removed from the path. Many people, if not most, look on literary taste as an elegant accomplishment, by acquiring which they will complete themselves, and make themselves finally fit as members of a correct society. They are secretly ashamed of their ignorance of literature, in the same way as they would be ashamed of their ignorance of etiquette at a high [10 entertainment, or of their inability to ride
a horse if suddenly called upon to do so.
There are certain things that a man ought to know, or to know about, and literature is one of them: such is their idea. They have learnt to dress themselves with propriety, and to behave with propriety on all occasions; they are fairly
"up" in the questions of the day; by industry and enterprise they are succeed- [20
ing in their vocations; it behooves them, then, not to forget that an acquaintance with literature is an indispensable part of a self-respecting man's personal baggage. Painting doesn't matter; music doesn't matter very much. But "every one is supposed to know" about literature.
Then, literature is such a charming distraction! Literary taste thus serves two purposes: as a certificate of correct [30 culture and as a private pastime. A young professor of mathematics, immense at mathematics and games, dangerous at chess, capable of Haydn on the violin, once said to me, after listening to some chat on books, "Yes, I must take up literature." As though saying: "I was rather forgetting literature. However,
I've polished off all these other things.
I'll have a shy at literature now." [40

This attitude, or any attitude which resembles it, is wrong. To him who really comprehends what literature is, and what the function of literature is, this attitude is simply ludicrous. It is also fatal to the formation of literary taste. People who regard literary taste simply as an accomplishment, and literature simply as a distraction, will never truly succeed either in acquiring the accomplishment [50 or in using it half-acquired as a distraction; though the one is the most perfect of distractions, and though the other is unsurpassed by any other accomplishment in elegance or in power to impress the universal snobbery of civilized mankind. I am extremely anxious to avoid rhetorical exaggerations. I do not think I am guilty of one in asserting that he who has not been "presented to the [60 freedom" of literature has not wakened up out of his prenatal sleep. He is merely not born. He can't see; he can't hear; he can't feel, in any full sense. He can only eat his dinner. What more than anything else annoys people who know the true function of literature, and have profited thereby, is the spectacle of so many thousands of individuals going about under the delusion that they are [70 alive, when, as a fact, they are no nearer being alive than a bear in winter.

I will tell you what literature is! No — I only wish I could. But I can't. No one can. Gleams can be thrown on the secret, inklings given, but no more. I will try to give you an inkling. And, to do so, I will take you back into your own history, or forward into it. That evening when you went for a walk with [80 your faithful friend, the friend from whom you hid nothing — or almost nothing...! You were, in truth, somewhat inclined to hide from him the particular matter which monopolized your mind that evening, but somehow you contrived to get on to it, drawn by an overpowering fascination. And as your faithful friend was sympathetic and discreet, and flattered you by a respectful [90 curiosity, you proceeded further and further into the said matter, growing more and more confidential, until at last you cried out, in a terrific whisper: "My boy, she is simply miraculous!" At that moment you were in the domain of literature.

Let me explain. Of course, in the ordinary acceptation of the word, she was not miraculous. Your faithful friend had [100 never noticed that she was miraculous, nor had about forty thousand other fairly keen observers. She was just a girl. Troy had not been burnt for her. A girl cannot be called a miracle. If a girl is to be called a miracle, then you might call pretty nearly anything a miracle. . . . That is just it: you might. You can. You ought. Amid all the miracles of the universe you had just wakened up to [110 one. You were full of your discovery. You were under a divine impulsion to impart that discovery. You had a strong sense of the marvellous beauty of something, and you had to share it. You were in a passion about something, and you had to vent yourself on somebody. You were drawn towards the whole of the rest of the human race. Mark the effect of your mood and utterance on your faithful friend. He knew that she was not a miracle. No other person could have made him believe that she was a miracle. But you, by the force and sincerity of your own vision of her, and by the fervor of your desire to make him participate in your vision, did for quite a long time cause him to feel that he had been blind to the miracle of that girl.

You were producing literature. You [130 were alive. Your eyes were unlidged, your ears were unstopped, to some part of the beauty and the strangeness of the world; and a strong instinct within you forced you to tell someone. It was not enough for you that you saw and heard. Others had to see and hear. Others had to be wakened up. And they were! It is quite possible — I am not quite sure — that your faithful friend the very [140 next day, or the next month, looked at some other girl, and suddenly saw that she, too, was miraculous! The influence of literature!

The makers of literature are those who have seen and felt the miraculous interestingness of the universe. And the greatest makers of literature are those whose vision has been the widest, and whose feeling has been the most intense. Your own fragment of insight was accidental, and perhaps temporary. Their lives are one long ecstasy of denying that the world is a dull place. Is it nothing to you to learn to understand that the world is not a dull place? Is it nothing to you to be led out of the tunnel on to the hillside, to have all your senses quickened, to be invigorated by the true savor of life, to feel your heart beating under that [160 correct necktie of yours? These makers of literature render you their equals.

The aim of literary study is not to amuse the hours of leisure; it is to awake oneself, it is to be alive, to intensify one's capacity for pleasure, for sympathy, and for comprehension. It is not to affect one hour, but twenty-four hours. It is to change utterly one's relations with the [170 world. An understanding appreciation of literature means an understanding appreciation of the world, and it means nothing else. Not isolated and unconnected parts of life, but all of life, brought together and correlated in a synthetic map! The spirit of literature is unifying; it joins the candle and the star, and by the magic of an image shows that the beauty of the greater is in the less. And, [180 not content with the disclosure of beauty and the bringing together of all things whatever within its focus, it enforces a moral wisdom by the tracing everywhere of cause and effect. It consoles doubly — by the revelation of unsuspected loveliness, and by the proof that our lot is the common lot. It is the supreme cry of the discoverer, offering sympathy and asking for it in a single gesture. In [190 attending a University Extension Lecture on the sources of Shakespeare's plots, or in studying the researches of George Saintsbury into the origins of English prosody, or in weighing the evidence for and against the assertion that Rousseau was a scoundrel, one is apt to forget what literature really is and is for. It is well to remind ourselves that literature is first and last a means of life, and the enter- [200 prise of forming one's literary taste is an enterprise of learning how best to use this means of life. People who don't want to live, people who would sooner hibernate than feel intensely, will be wise to eschew literature. They had better, to quote from the finest passage in a fine poem, "sit around and eat blackberries." The sight of a "common bush afire with God" might upset their nerves. [210

WHY A CLASSIC IS A CLASSIC

The large majority of our fellow-citizens care as much about literature as they care about aëroplanes or the programme of the Legislature. They do not ignore it; they are not quite indifferent to it. But their interest in it is faint and perfunctory; or, if their interest happens to be violent, it is spasmodic. Ask the two hundred thousand persons whose enthusiasm made the vogue of a popular [10 novel ten years ago what they think of that novel now, and you will gather that they have utterly forgotten it, and that they would no more dream of reading it again than of reading Bishop Stubbs's Select Charters. Probably if they did read it again they would not enjoy it — not because the said novel is a whit worse now than it was ten years ago; not because their taste has improved — but [20 because they have not had sufficient practice to be able to rely on their taste as a means of permanent pleasure. They simply don't know from one day to the next what will please them.

In the face of this one may ask: Why does the great and universal fame of classical authors continue? The answer is that the fame of classical authors is entirely independent of the majority. [30 Do you suppose that if the fame of Shakespeare depended on the man in the street it would survive a fortnight? The fame of classical authors is originally made, and it is maintained, by a passionate few. Even when a first-class author has enjoyed immense success during his lifetime, the majority have never appreciated him so sincerely as they have appreciated second-rate men. He has always been [40 reinforced by the ardor of the passionate few. And in the case of an author who has emerged into glory after his death the happy sequel has been due solely to the obstinate perseverance of the few. They could not leave him alone; they would not. They kept on savoring him, and talking about him, and buying him, and they generally behaved with such eager zeal, and they were so authoritative [50 and sure of themselves, that at last the majority grew accustomed to the sound of his name and placidly agreed to the proposition that he was a genius; the majority really did not care very much either way.

And it is by the passionate few that the renown of genius is kept alive from one generation to another. These few are always at work. They are always re- [65] discovering genius. Their curiosity and enthusiasm are exhaustless, so that there is little chance of genius' being ignored. And, moreover, they are always working either for or against the verdicts of the majority. The majority can make a reputation, but it is too careless to maintain it. If, by accident, the passionate few agree with the majority in a particular instance, they will frequently remind the [70] majority that such and such a reputation has been made, and the majority will idly concur: "Ah, yes. By the way, we must not forget that such and such a reputation exists." Without that persistent memory-jogging the reputation would quickly fall into the oblivion which is death. The passionate few only have their way by reason of the fact that they are genuinely interested in literature, that literature [80] matters to them. They conquer by their obstinacy alone, by their eternal repetition of the same statements. Do you suppose they could prove to the man in the street that Shakespeare was a great artist? The said man would not even understand the terms they employed. But when he is told ten thousand times, and generation after generation, that Shakespeare was a great artist, the said man believes — [90] not by reason, but by faith. And he too repeats that Shakespeare was a great artist, and he buys the complete works of Shakespeare and puts them on his shelves, and he goes to see the marvellous stage-effects which accompany King Lear or Hamlet, and comes back religiously convinced that Shakespeare was a great artist. All because the passionate few could not keep their admiration of Shakespeare to [100] themselves. This is not cynicism, but truth. And it is important that those who wish to form their literary taste should grasp it.

What causes the passionate few to make such a fuss about literature? There can be only one reply. They find a keen and lasting pleasure in literature. They enjoy literature as some men enjoy beer. The recurrence of this pleasure naturally keeps their interest in literature very much alive. They are forever making new researches, forever practising on themselves. They learn to understand themselves. They learn to know what they want. Their taste becomes surer and surer as their experience lengthens. They do not enjoy to-day what will seem tedious to them to-morrow. When they find a book tedious, no amount of [120] popular clatter will persuade them that it is pleasurable; and when they find it pleasurable no chill silence of the street-crowds will affect their conviction that the book is good and permanent. They have faith in themselves. What are the qualities in a book which give keen and lasting pleasure to the passionate few? This is a question so difficult that it has never yet been completely answered. You may talk [130] lightly about truth, insight, knowledge, wisdom, humor, and beauty. But these comfortable words do not really carry you very far, for each of them has to be defined, especially the first and last. It is all very well for Keats in his airy manner to assert that beauty is truth, truth beauty, and that is all he knows or needs to know. I, for one, need to know a lot more. And I never shall know. Nobody, not even Hazlitt, [140] not Sainte Beuve, has ever finally explained why he thought a book beautiful. I take the first fine lines that come to hand —

"The woods of Arcady are dead,
And over is their antique joy —"

and I say that those lines are beautiful because they give me pleasure. But why? No answer! I only know that the passionate few will, broadly, agree with me in deriving this mysterious [150] pleasure from those lines. I am only convinced that the liveliness of our pleasure in those and many other lines by the same author will ultimately cause the majority to believe, by faith, that W. B. Yeats is a genius. The one reassuring aspect of the literary affair is that the passionate few are passionate about the same things. A continuance of interest does, in actual practice, lead [160]

ultimately to the same judgments. There is only the difference in width of interest. Some of the passionate few lack catholicity, or, rather, the whole of their interest is confined to one narrow channel; they have none left over. These men help specially to vitalize the reputations of the narrower geniuses: such as Crashaw. But their active predilections never contradict the general verdict of the passionate few; rather they reinforce it.

A classic is a work which gives pleasure to the minority which is intensely and permanently interested in literature. It lives on because the minority, eager to renew the sensation of pleasure, is eternally curious and is therefore engaged in an eternal process of rediscovery. A classic does not survive for any ethical reason. It does not survive because [180 it conforms to certain canons, or because neglect would not kill it. It survives because it is a source of pleasure, and because the passionate few can no more neglect it than a bee can neglect a flower. The passionate few do not read "the right things" because they are right. That is to put the cart before the horse. "The right things" are the right things solely because the passionate few like [190 reading them. Hence — and I now arrive at my point — the one primary essential to literary taste is a hot interest in literature. If you have that, all the rest will come. It matters nothing that at present you fail to find pleasure in certain classics. The driving impulse of your interest will force you to acquire experience, and experience will teach you the use of the means of pleasure. You [200 do not know the secret ways of yourself: that is all. A continuance of interest must inevitably bring you to the keenest joys. But, of course, experience may be acquired judiciously or injudiciously, just as Putney may be reached via Walham Green or via St. Petersburg.

JOSEPH CONRAD (1857—)

RULERS OF EAST AND WEST

There is no part of the world of coasts, continents, oceans, seas, straits, capes, and islands which is not under the sway of a reigning wind, the sovereign of its typical weather. The wind rules the aspects of the sky and the action of the sea. But no wind rules unchallenged his realm of land and water. As with the kingdoms of the earth, there are regions more turbulent than others. In the [10 middle belt of the earth the Trade Winds reign supreme, undisputed, like monarchs of long-settled kingdoms, whose traditional power, checking all undue ambitions, is not so much an exercise of personal might as the working of long-established institutions. The inter-tropical kingdoms of the Trade Winds are favorable to the ordinary life of a merchantman. The trumpet-call of strife [20 is seldom borne on their wings to the watchful ears of men on the decks of ships. The regions ruled by the northeast and southeast Trade Winds are serene. In a southern-going ship, bound out for a long voyage, the passage through their dominions is characterized by a relaxation of strain and vigilance on the part of the seamen. Those citizens of the ocean feel sheltered under the ægis [30 of an uncontested law, of an undisputed dynasty. There, indeed, if anywhere on earth, the weather may be trusted.

Yet not too implicitly. Even in the constitutional realm of Trade Winds, north and south of the equator, ships are overtaken by strange disturbances. Still, the easterly winds, and, generally speaking, the easterly weather all the world over, is characterized by regularity and persistence. [40

As a ruler, the East Wind has a remarkable stability; as an invader of the high latitudes lying under the tumultuous sway of his great brother, the Wind of the West, he is extremely difficult to dislodge, by the reason of his cold craftiness and profound duplicity.

The narrow seas around these isles, where British admirals keep watch and [50 ward upon the marches of the Atlantic Ocean, are subject to the turbulent sway of the West Wind. Call it northwest or southwest, it is all one — a different phase of the same character, a changed expression on the same face. In the orientation of the winds that rule the seas, the north and south directions are of no importance. There are no North and South Winds of any account upon [60 this earth. The North and South Winds are but small princes in the dynasties that make peace and war upon the sea. They never assert themselves upon a vast stage. They depend upon local causes — the configuration of coasts, the shapes of straits, the accidents of bold promontories round which they play their little part. In the polity of winds, as among the tribes of the earth, the real struggle lies between East and West.

The West Wind reigns over the seas surrounding the coasts of these kingdoms; and from the gateways of the channels, from promontories as if from watch-towers, from estuaries of rivers as if from postern-gates, from passageways, inlets, straits, firths, the garrison of the isle and the crews of the ships going and returning look to the westward to judge by the [80 varied splendors of his sunset mantle the mood of that arbitrary ruler. The end of the day is the time to gaze at the kingly face of the Westerly Weather, who is the arbiter of ships' destinies. Benignant and splendid, or splendid and sinister, the western sky reflects the hidden purposes of the royal mind. Clothed in a mantle of dazzling gold or draped in rags of black clouds like a beggar, the [90 might of the Westerly Wind sits enthroned upon the western horizon with the whole North Atlantic as a footstool for his feet and the first twinkling stars making a diadem for his brow. Then the seamen, attentive courtiers of the weather, think of regulating the conduct of their ships by the mood of the master. The West Wind is too great a king to be a dissembler: he is no calculator plotting [100 deep schemes in a sombre heart; he is too strong for small artifices; there is passion in all his moods, even in the soft mood of his serene days, in the grace of his blue sky whose immense and unfathomable tenderness reflected in the mirror of the sea embraces, possesses, lulls to sleep the ships with white sails. He is all things to all oceans; he is like a poet seated upon a throne — magnificent, simple, [110 barbarous, pensive, generous, impulsive, changeable, unfathomable — but, when you understand him, always the same. Some of his sunsets are like pageants devised for the delight of the multitude, when all the gems of the royal treasure-house are displayed above the sea. Others are like the opening of his royal confidence, tinged with thoughts of sadness and compassion in a melancholy [120 splendor meditating upon the short-lived peace of the sea. And I have seen him put the pent-up anger of his heart into the aspect of the inaccessible sun, and cause it to glare fiercely like the eye of an implacable autocrat out of a pale and frightened sky.

He is the war-lord who sends his battalions of Atlantic rollers to the assault of our shores. The compelling voice of the [130 West Wind musters up to his service all the might of the sea. At the bidding of the West Wind there arises a great commotion in the sky above these islands, and a great rush of waters falls upon our shores. The sky of the Westerly Weather is full of flying clouds, of great big white clouds coming thicker and thicker till they seem to stand welded into a solid canopy, upon whose gray face the lower [140 wrack of the gale, thin, black, and angry-looking, flies past with vertiginous speed. Denser and denser grows this dome of vapors, descending lower and lower upon the sea, narrowing the horizon around the ship. And the characteristic aspect of westerly weather, the thick, gray, smoky and sinister tone sets in, circumscribing the view of the men, drenching their bodies, oppressing their souls, taking [150 ing their breath away with booming gusts, deafening, blinding, driving, rushing them onward in a swaying ship towards our coasts lost in mists and rain.

The caprice of the winds, like the wilfulness of men, is fraught with the disastrous consequences of self-indulgence. Long anger, the sense of his uncontrolled power, spoils the frank and generous nature of the West Wind. It is as if [160 his heart were corrupted by a malevolent and brooding rancor. He devastates his own kingdom in the wantonness of his force. Southwest is the quarter of the heavens where he presents his darkened brow. He breathes his rage in terrific squalls, and overwhelms his realm with an inexhaustible welter of clouds. He strews the seeds of anxiety upon the decks of scudding ships, makes the foam- [170 stripped ocean look old, and sprinkles with gray hairs the heads of ship-masters in the homeward-bound ships running for the Channel. The Westerly Wind asserting his sway from the southwest quarter is often like a monarch gone mad, driving forth with wild imprecations the most faithful of his courtiers to shipwreck, disaster, and death.

The southwesterly weather is the [180 thick weather par excellence. It is not the thickness of the fog, it is rather a contraction of the horizon, a mysterious veiling of the shores with clouds that seem to make a low-vaulted dungeon around the running ship. It is not blindness; it is a shortening of the sight. The West Wind does not say to the seaman, "You shall be blind"; it restricts merely the range of his vision and [190 raises the dread of land within his breast. It makes of him a man robbed of half his force, of half his efficiency. Many times in my life, standing in long sea-boots and streaming oilskins at the elbow of my commander on the poop of a homeward-bound ship making for the Channel, and gazing ahead into the gray and tormented waste, I have heard a weary sigh shape itself into a studiously casual [200 comment:

"Can't see very far in this weather."

And have made answer in the same low, perfunctory tone:

"No, sir."

It would be merely the instinctive voicing of an ever-present thought associated closely with the consciousness of the land somewhere ahead, and of the great speed of the ship. Fair wind, [210 fair wind! 'Who would dare to grumble at a fair wind? It was a favor of the Western King, who rules masterfully the North Atlantic from the latitude of the Azores to the latitude of Cape Farewell. A famous shove this to end a good passage with; and yet, somehow, one could not muster upon one's lips the smile of a courtier's gratitude. This favor was dispensed to you from under an over- [220 bearing scowl, which is the true expression of the great autocrat when he has made up his mind to give a battering to some ships and to hunt certain others home in one breath of cruelty and benevolence, equally distracting.

"No, sir. Can't see very far."

Thus would the mate's voice repeat the thought of the master, both gazing ahead, while under their feet the ship [230 rushes at some twelve knots in the direction of the lee shore; and only a couple of miles in front of her swinging and dripping jib-boom, carried naked with an upward slant like a spear, a gray horizon closes the view with a multitude of waves surging upward violently as if to strike at the stooping clouds.

Awful and threatening scowls darken the face of the West Wind in his clouded, [240 southwest mood; and from the King's throne-hall in the western board stronger gusts reach you, like the fierce shouts of raving fury to which only the gloomy grandeur of the scene imparts a saving dignity. A shower pelts the deck and the sails of the ship as if flung with a scream by an angry hand; and when the night closes in, the night of a southwesterly gale, it seems more hopeless [250 than the shade of Hades. The southwesterly mood of the great West Wind is a lightless mood, without sun, moon, or stars, with no gleam of light but the phosphorescent flashes of the great sheets of foam that, boiling up on each side of the ship, fling bluish gleams upon her dark and narrow hull, rolling as she runs, chased by enormous seas, distracted in the tumult. [260

There are some bad nights in the kingdom of the West Wind for homeward-bound ships making for the Channel; and the days of wrath dawn upon them colorless and vague like the timid turning up of invisible lights upon the scene of a tyrannical and passionate outbreak, awful in the monotony of its method and the increasing strength of its violence. It is the same wind, the same clouds, [270 the same wildly racing seas, the same thick horizon around the ship. Only the wind is stronger, the clouds seem denser and more overwhelming, the waves appear to have grown bigger and more threatening during the night. The hours, whose minutes are marked by the crash of the breaking seas, slip by with the screaming, pelting squalls overtaking the ship as she runs on and on with darkened [280] canvas, with streaming spars and dripping ropes. The downpours thicken. Preceding each shower a mysterious gloom, like the passage of a shadow above the firmament of gray clouds, filters down upon the ship. Now and then the rain pours upon your head in streams as if from spouts. It seems as if your ship were going to be drowned before she sank, as if all atmosphere had turned to water. [290] You gasp, you splutter, you are blinded and deafened, you are submerged, obliterated, dissolved, annihilated, streaming all over as if your limbs, too, had turned to water. And every nerve on the alert you watch for the clearing-up mood of the Western King, that shall come with a shift of wind as likely as not to whip all the three masts out of your ship in the twinkling of an eye. [300]

Heralded by the increasing fierceness of the squalls, sometimes by a faint flash of lightning like the signal of a lighted torch waved far away behind the clouds, the shift of wind comes at last, the crucial moment of the change from the brooding and veiled violence of the southwest gale to the sparkling, flashing, cutting, clear-eyed anger of the King's northwesterly mood. You behold another phase of [310] his passion, a fury bejewelled with stars, mayhap bearing the crescent of the moon on its brow, shaking the last vestiges of its torn cloud-mantle in inky-black squalls, with hail and sleet descending like showers of crystals and pearls, bounding off the spars, drumming on the sails, pattering on the oilskin coats, whitening the decks of homeward-bound ships. Faint, ruddy flashes of lightning flicker [320] in the starlight upon her mast-heads. A chilly blast hums in the taut rigging, causing the ship to tremble to her very keel, and the soaked men on her decks to shiver in their wet clothes to the very marrow of their bones. Before one squall has flown over to sink in the eastern board, the edge of another peeps up already above the western horizon, racing up swift, shapeless, like a black bag full [330] of frozen water ready to burst over your devoted head. The temper of the ruler of the ocean has changed. Each gust of the clouded mood that seemed warmed by the heat of a heart flaming with anger has its counterpart in the chilly blasts that seem blown from a breast turned to ice with a sudden revulsion of feeling. Instead of blinding your eyes and crushing your soul with a terrible apparatus [340] of cloud and mists and seas and rain, the King of the West turns his power to contemptuous pelting of your back with icicles, to making your weary eyes water as if in grief, and your worn-out carcass quake pitifully. But each mood of the great autocrat has its own greatness, and each is hard to bear. Only the northwest phase of that mighty display is not demoralizing to the same extent, [350] because between the hail and sleet squalls of a northwesterly gale one can see a long way ahead.

To see! to see! — this is the craving of the sailor, as of the rest of blind humanity. To have his path made clear for him is the aspiration of every human being in our beclouded and tempestuous existence. I have heard a reserved, silent man, with no nerves to speak of, [360] after three days of hard running in thick southwesterly weather, burst out, passionately: "I wish to God we could get sight of something!"

We had just gone down below for a moment to commune in a battened-down cabin, with a large white chart lying limp and damp upon a cold and clammy table under the light of a smoky lamp. Sprawling over that seaman's silent and [370] trusted adviser, with one elbow upon the coast of Africa and the other planted in the neighborhood of Cape Hatteras (it was a general track-chart of the North Atlantic), my skipper lifted his rugged, hairy face, and glared at me in a half-exasperated, half-appealing way. We had seen no sun, moon, or stars for something like seven days. By the effect of the West Wind's wrath the celestial bodies had [380] gone into hiding for a week or more, and the last three days had seen the force of a southwest gale grow from fresh, through strong, to heavy, as the entries in my log-book could testify. Then we separated, he to go on deck again, in obedience to that mysterious call that seems to sound forever in a ship-master's ears, I to stagger into my cabin with some vague notion of putting down the words [400 "Very heavy weather" in a log-book not quite written up to date. But I gave it up, and crawled into my bunk instead, boots and hat on, all standing (it did not matter; everything was soaking wet, a heavy sea having burst the poop skylights the night before), to remain in a nightmarish state between waking and sleeping for a couple of hours of so-called rest. [410

The southwesterly mood of the West Wind is an enemy of sleep, and even of a recumbent position, in the responsible officers of a ship. After two hours of futile, light-headed, inconsequent thinking upon all things under heaven in that dark, dank, wet, and devastated cabin, I arose suddenly and staggered up on deck. The autocrat of the North Atlantic was still oppressing his kingdom [420 and its outlying dependencies, even as far as the Bay of Biscay, in the dismal secrecy of thick, very thick, weather. The force of the wind, though we were running before it at the rate of some ten knots an hour, was so great that it drove me with a steady push to the front of the poop, where my commander was holding on.

"What do you think of it?" he [430 addressed me in an interrogative yell.

What I really thought was that we both had had just about enough of it. The manner in which the great West Wind chooses at times to administer his possessions does not commend itself to a person of peaceful and law-abiding disposition, inclined to draw distinctions between right and wrong in the face of every force, whose standard, naturally, [440 is that of might alone. But, of course, I said nothing. For a man caught, as it were, between his skipper and the great West Wind, silence is the safest sort of diplomacy. Moreover, I knew my skipper. He did not want to know what I thought. Ship-masters hanging on a breath before the thrones of the winds ruling the seas have their psychology, whose workings are as important to [450 the ship and those on board of her as the changing moods of the weather. The man, as a matter of fact, under no circumstances, ever cared a brass farthing for what I or anybody else in his ship thought. He had had just about enough of it, I guessed, and what he was at really was a process of fishing for a suggestion. It was the pride of his life that he had never wasted a chance, no matter how [460 boisterous, threatening, and dangerous, of a fair wind. Like men racing blindfold for a gap in a hedge, we were finishing a splendidly quick passage from the antipodes, with a tremendous rush for the Channel in as thick a weather as any I can remember, but his psychology did not permit him to bring the ship to with a fair wind blowing — at least not on his own initiative. And yet he felt that [470 very soon indeed something would have to be done. He wanted the suggestion to come from me, so that later on, when the trouble was over, he could argue this point with his own uncompromising spirit, laying the blame upon my shoulders. I must render him the justice that this sort of pride was his only weakness.

But he got no suggestion from me. [480 I understood his psychology. Besides, I had my own stock of weaknesses at the time (it is a different one now), and among them was the conceit of being remarkably well up in the psychology of the Westerly Weather. I believed — not to mince matters — that I had a genius for reading the mind of the great ruler of high latitudes. I fancied I could discern already the coming of a change [490 in his royal mood. And all I said was:

"The weather shall clear up with the shift of wind."

"Anybody knows that much," he snapped at me, at the highest pitch of his voice.

"I mean before dark," I cried.

This was all the opening he ever got from me. The eagerness with which he seized upon it gave me the measure [500 of the anxiety he had been laboring under.

"Very well," he shouted, with an affectation of impatience, as if giving way to long entreaties. "All right. If we don't get a shift by then we'll take that foresail off her and put her head under the wing for the night."

I was struck by the picturesque character of the phrase as applied to a ship brought-to in order to ride out a gale [510 with wave after wave passing under her breast. I could see her resting in the tumult of the elements like a sea-bird sleeping in wild weather upon the raging waters with its head tucked under its wing. In imaginative force, in true feeling, this is one of the most expressive sentences I have ever heard on human lips. But as to taking the foresail off that ship before we put her head under [520 her wing, I had my grave doubts. They were justified. That long-enduring piece of canvas was confiscated by the arbitrary decree of the West Wind, to whom belong the lives of men and the contrivances of their hands with in the limits of his kingdom. With the sound of a faint explosion it vanished into the thick weather bodily, leaving behind of its stout substance not so much as one solitary [530 strip big enough to be picked into a handful of lint for, say, a wounded elephant. Torn out of its boltropes, it faded like a whiff of smoke in the smoky drift of clouds shattered and torn by the shift of wind. For the shift of wind had come. The unveiled, low sun glared angrily from a chaotic sky upon a confused and tremendous sea dashing itself upon a coast. We recognized the headland, [540 and looked at each other in the silence of dumb wonder. Without knowing it in the least, we had run up alongside the Isle of Wight, and that tower, tinged a faint evening red in the salt wind-haze, was the lighthouse on St. Catherine's Point.

My skipper recovered first from his astonishment. His bulging eyes sank back gradually into their orbits. His [550 psychology, taking it all round, was really very creditable for an average sailor. He had been spared the humiliation of laying his ship to with a fair wind; and at once that man, of an open and truthful nature, spoke up in perfect good faith, rubbing together his brown, hairy hands — the hands of a master craftsman upon the sea:

"Humph! that's just about where [560 I reckoned we had got to."

The transparency and ingenuousness, in a way, of that delusion, the airy tone, the hint of already growing pride, were perfectly delicious. But, in truth, this was one of the greatest surprises ever sprung by the clearing up mood of the West Wind upon one of the most accomplished of his courtiers.

The winds of North and South are, [570 as I have said, but small princes among the powers of the sea. They have no territory of their own; they are not reigning winds anywhere. Yet it is from their houses that the reigning dynasties which have shared between them the waters of the earth are sprung. All the weather of the world is based upon the contest of the polar and equatorial strains of that tyrannous race. The [580 West Wind is the greatest king. The East rules between the tropics. They have shared each ocean between them. Each has his genius of supreme rule. The King of the West never intrudes upon the recognized dominion of his kingly brother. He is a barbarian, of a northern type. Violent without craftiness and furious without malice, one may imagine him seated masterfully, with a [590 double-edged sword on his knees, upon the painted and gilt clouds of the sunset, bowing his shock head of golden locks, a flaming beard over his breast, imposing, colossal, mighty limbed, with a thundering voice, distended cheeks, and fierce blue eyes, urging the speed of his gales. The other, the East King, the king of blood-red sunrises, I represent to myself as a spare Southerner with clear-cut [600 features, black-browed and dark-eyed, gray-robed, upright in sunshine, resting a smooth-shaven cheek in the palm of his hand, impenetrable, secret, full of wiles, fine drawn, keen — meditating aggressions.

The West Wind keeps faith with his brother, the King of the Easterly Weather. "What we have divided we have divided," he seems to say in his gruff [610 voice, this ruler without guile, who hurls as if in sport enormous masses of cloud across the sky, and flings the great waves of the Atlantic clear across from the shores of the New World upon the hoary headlands of Old Europe, which harbors more kings and rulers upon its seamed and furrowed body than all the oceans of the world together. "What we have divided we have divided; and if no rest [620 and peace in this world have fallen to my share, leave me alone. Let me play at quoits with cyclonic gales, flinging the disks of spinning cloud and whirling air from one end of my dismal kingdom to the other: over the Great Banks, along the edges of pack-ice—this one with true aim right into the bight of the Bay of Biscay, that other upon the fiords of Norway, across the North Sea where [630 the fishermen of many nations look watchfully into my angry eye. This is the time of kingly sport."

And the royal master of high latitudes sighs mightily, with the sinking sun upon his breast and the double-edged sword upon his knees, as if wearied by the innumerable centuries of a strenuous rule and saddened by the unchangeable aspect of the ocean under his feet—by [640 the endless vista of future ages where the work of sowing the wind and reaping the whirlwind shall go on and on till his realm of living waters becomes a frozen and motionless ocean. But the other, crafty and unmoved, nursing his shaven chin between the thumb and forefinger of his slim and treacherous hand, thinks deep within his heart full of guile: "Aha! our brother of the West has fallen into the [650 mood of kingly melancholy. He is tired of playing with circular gales, and blowing great guns, and unrolling thick streamers of fog in childish sport at the cost of his own poor, miserable subjects. Their fate is most pitiful. Let us make a foray upon the dominions of that noisy barbarian, a great raid from Finisterre to Hatteras, catching his fishermen unawares, baffling the fleets that trust to [660 his power, and shooting sly arrows into the livers of men who court his good graces. He is, indeed, a worthless fellow." And forthwith, while the West Wind meditates upon the vanity of his irresistible might, the thing is done, and the Easterly Weather sets in upon the North Atlantic.

The prevailing weather of the North Atlantic is typical of the way in which [670 the West Wind rules his realm on which the sun never sets. North Atlantic is the heart of a great empire. It is the part of the West Wind's dominions most thickly populated with generations of fine ships and hardy men. Heroic deeds and adventurous exploits have been performed there, within the very stronghold of his sway. The best sailors in the world have been born and bred under the [680 shadow of his sceptre, learning to manage their ships with skill and audacity before the steps of his stormy throne. Reckless adventurers, toiling fishermen, admirals as wise and brave as the world has ever known, have waited upon the signs of his westerly sky. Fleets of victorious ships have hung upon his breath. He has tossed in his hand squadrons of war-scarred three-deckers, and shredded [690 out in mere sport the bunting of flags hallowed in the traditions of honor and glory. He is a good friend and a dangerous enemy, without mercy to unseaworthy ships and faint-hearted seamen. In his kingly way he has taken but little account of lives sacrificed to his impulsive policy; he is a king with a double-edged sword bared in his right hand. The East Wind, an interloper in the dominions of Westerly [700 Weather, is an impassive-faced tyrant with a sharp poniard held behind his back for a treacherous stab.

In his forays into the North Atlantic the East Wind behaves like a subtle and cruel adventurer without a notion of honor or fair play. Veiling his clear-cut, lean face in a thin layer of a hard, high cloud, I have seen him, like a wizened robber sheik of the sea, hold up large [710 caravans of ships to the number of three hundred or more at the very gates of the English Channel. And the worst of it was that there was no ransom that we could pay to satisfy his avidity; for whatever evil is wrought by the raiding East Wind, it is done only to spite his kingly brother of the West. We gazed helplessly at the systematic, cold, gray-eyed obstinacy of the Easterly Weather, [720 while short rations became the order of the day, and the pinch of hunger under the breast-bone grew familiar to every sailor in that held-up fleet. Every day added to our numbers. In knots and groups and straggling parties we flung to and fro before the closed gate. And meantime the eastward-bound ships passed, running through our humiliated ranks under all the canvas they could show. It is [730 my idea that the Easterly Wind helps the ships away from home in the wicked hope that they shall all come to an untimely end and be heard of no more. For six weeks did the robber sheik hold the trade route of the earth, while our liege lord, the West Wind, slept profoundly like a tired Titan, or else remained lost in a mood of idle sadness known only to frank natures. All was still to the [740 westward; we looked in vain towards his stronghold: the King slumbered on so deeply that he let his foraging brother steal the very mantle of gold-lined purple clouds from his bowed shoulders. What had become of the dazzling hoard of royal jewels exhibited at every close of day? Gone, disappeared, extinguished, carried off without leaving a single gold band or the flash of a single sunbeam in the [750 evening sky! Day after day, through a cold streak of heavens as bare and poor as the inside of a rifled safe, a rayless and despoiled sun would slink shamefacedly, without pomp or show, to hide in haste under the waters. And still the King slept on, or mourned the vanity of his might and his power, while the thin-lipped intruder put the impress of his cold implacable spirit upon the sky and [760 sea. With every daybreak the rising sun had to wade through a crimson stream, luminous and sinister, like the spilled blood of celestial bodies murdered during the night.

In this particular instance the mean interloper held the road for some six weeks on end, establishing his particular administrative methods over the best part of the North Atlantic. It looked [770 as if the Easterly Weather had come to stay forever, or, at least, till we had all starved to death in the held-up fleet — starved within sight, as it were, of plenty, within touch, almost, of the bountiful heart of the Empire. There we were, a growing company of ships, each with her burden of grain, of timber, of wool, of hides, and even of oranges, for we had one or two belated fruit schooners in [780 company. There we were, in that memorable spring of a certain year in the late seventies, dodging to and fro, baffled on every tack, and with our stores running down to sweepings of break-lockers and scrapings of sugar-casks. It was just like the East Wind's nature to inflict starvation upon the bodies of unoffending sailors, while he corrupted their simple souls by an exasperation [790 leading to outbursts of profanity as lurid as his blood-red sunrises. They were followed by gray days under the cover of high, motionless clouds that looked as if carved in a slab of ash-colored marble. And each mean, starved sunset left us calling with imprecations upon the West Wind even in its most veiled, misty mood to wake up and give us our liberty, if only to rush on and dash [800 the heads of our ships against the very walls of our unapproachable home.

In the atmosphere of the Easterly Weather, as pellucid as a piece of crystal and refracting like a prism, we could see the appalling numbers of our helpless company, even to those who in more normal conditions would have remained invisible, sails down under the horizon. It is the malicious pleasure of the East [810 Wind to augment the power of your eyesight, in order, perhaps, that you should see better the perfect humiliation, the hopeless character, of your captivity. Easterly Weather is generally clear, and that is all that can be said for it — almost supernaturally clear when it likes; but whatever its mood, there is something uncanny in its nature. Its duplicity is such that it will deceive [820 a scientific instrument. No barometer will give warning of an Easterly Gale, were it ever so wet. It would be an unjust and ungrateful thing to say that a barometer is a stupid contrivance. It is simply that the wiles of the East Wind are too much for its fundamental honesty. After years and years of experience the most trusty instrument of the sort that ever went to sea screwed on to a ship's [830 cabin bulkhead will, almost invariably, be induced to rise by the diabolic ingenuity of the Easterly Weather, just at the moment when the Easterly Weather, discarding its methods of hard, dry, impassive cruelty, contemplates drowning what is left of your spirit in torrents of a peculiarly cold and horrid rain. The sleet-and-hail squalls following the lightning at the end of a Westerly Gale are [840 cold and benumbing and stinging and cruel enough. But the dry, Easterly Weather, when it turns to wet, seems to rain poisoned showers upon your head. It is a sort of steady, persistent, overwhelming, endlessly driving downpour, which makes your heart sick and opens it to dismal forebodings. And the stormy mood of the Easterly Weather looms black upon the sky with a peculiar and [850 amazing blackness. The West Wind hangs heavy gray curtains of mist and spray before your gaze, but the Eastern interloper of the narrow seas, when he has mustered his courage and cruelty to the point of a gale, puts your eyes out, puts them out completely, makes you feel blind for life upon a lee-shore. It is the wind, also, that brings snow.

Out of his black and merciless heart [860 he flings a white, blinding sheet upon the ships of the sea. He has more manners of villany and no more conscience than an Italian prince of the seventeenth century. His weapon is a dagger carried under a black cloak when he goes out on his unlawful enterprises. The mere hint of his approach fills with dread every craft that swims the sea, from fishing-smacks to four-masted ships that recognize the [870 sway of the West Wind. Even in his most accommodating mood he inspires a dread of treachery. I have heard upward of ten score of windlasses spring like one into clanking life in the dead of night, filling the Downs with a panic-struck sound of anchors being torn hurriedly out of the ground at the first breath of his approach. Fortunately, his heart often fails him: he does not [880 always blow home upon our exposed coast; he has not the fearless temper of his Westerly brother.

The natures of those two winds that share the dominions of the great oceans are fundamentally different. It is strange that the winds which men are prone to style capricious remain true to their character in all the various regions of the earth. To us here (in England), for [890 instance, the East Wind comes across a great continent, sweeping over the greatest body of solid land upon this earth. For the Australian east coast the East Wind is the wind of the ocean, coming across the greatest body of water upon the globe; and yet here and there its characteristics remain the same with a strange consistency in everything that is vile and base. The members of the [900 West Wind's dynasty are modified in a way by the regions they rule, as a Hohenzollern, without ceasing to be himself, becomes a Roumanian by virtue of his throne, or a Saxe-Coburg learns to put the dress of Bulgarian phrases upon his particular thoughts, whatever they are.

The autocratic sway of the West Wind, whether forty north or forty south of the equator, is characterized by an open, [910 generous, frank, barbarous recklessness. For he is a great autocrat, and to be a great autocrat you must be a great barbarian. I have been too much moulded in his sway to nurse now any idea of rebellion in my heart. Moreover, what is a rebellion within the four walls of a room against the tempestuous rule of the West Wind? I remain faithful to the memory of the mighty king with a double- [920 edged sword in one hand, and in the other holding out rewards of great daily runs and famously quick passages to those of his courtiers who know how to wait watchfully for every sign of his secret mood. As we deep-water men always reckoned, he made one year in three fairly lively for anybody having business upon the Atlantic or down there along the "forties" of the Southern Ocean. [930

You had to take the bitter with the sweet; and it cannot be denied he played carelessly with our lives and fortunes. But, then, he was always a great king, fit to rule over the great waters where, strictly speaking, a man would have no business whatever but for his audacity.

The audacious should not complain. A mere trader ought not to grumble at the tolls levied by a mighty king. [940 His mightiness was sometimes very overwhelming; but even when you had to defy him openly, as on the banks of the Agulhas homeward-bound from the East Indies, or on the outward passage round the Horn, he struck at you fairly his stinging blows (full in the face, too), and it was your business not to get too much staggered. And, after all, if you showed anything of a countenance, the good- [950 natured barbarian would let you fight your way past the very steps of his throne. It was only now and then that the sword descended and a head fell; but if you fell you were sure of impressive obsequies and of a roomy, generous grave.

Such is the king to whom Viking chieftains bowed their heads, and whom the modern and palatial steamship defies with impunity seven times a week. And [960 yet it is but defiance, not victory. The magnificent barbarian sits enthroned in a mantle of gold-lined clouds looking from on high on great ships gliding like mechanical toys upon his sea, and on men who, armed with fire and iron, no longer need to watch anxiously for the slightest sign of his royal mood. He is disregarded; but he has kept all his strength, all his splendor, and a great [970 part of his power. Time itself, that shakes all the thrones, is on the side of that king. The sword in his hand remains as sharp as ever upon both its edges; and he may well go on playing his royal game of quoits with hurricanes, tossing them over the continent of republics to the continent of kingdoms, in the assurance that both the new republics and the old kingdoms, the heat [980 of fire and the strength of iron, with the untold generations of audacious men, shall crumble to dust at the steps of his throne, and pass away and be forgotten before his own rule comes to an end.

H. G. WELLS (1866-)

From THE OUTLINE OF HISTORY

CHAPTER XLI

Our Outline of History has been ill written if it has failed to convey our conviction of the character of the state towards which the world is moving. Let us summarize here, very briefly, the main lines to which the developments of history seem to point as the necessary lines of that world organization. The attainment of this world state may be impeded and may be opposed today by many [10 apparently vast forces; but it has, urging it on, a much more powerful force, that of the free and growing common intelligence of mankind. Today there is in the world a small but increasing number of men, historians, archæologists, ethnologists, economists, sociologists, psychologists, educationists, and the like, who are doing for human institutions that same task of creative analysis which [20 the scientific men of the seventeenth and eighteenth century did for the materials and mechanism of human life; and just as these latter, almost unaware of what they were doing, made telegraphy, swift transit on sea and land, flying, and a thousand hitherto impossible things possible, so the former may be doing more than the world suspects, or than they themselves suspect, to clear up and make plain the [30 thing to do and the way to do it, in the greater and more urgent human affairs.

Let us ape Roger Bacon in his prophetic mood, and set down what we believe will be the broad fundamentals of the coming world state.

(i) It will be based upon a common world religion, very much simplified and universalized, and better understood. This will not be Christianity nor Islam [40 nor Buddhism nor any such specialized form of religion, but religion itself pure and undefiled; the Eightfold Way, the Kingdom of Heaven, brotherhood, creative service, and self-forgetfulness.

Throughout the world men's thoughts and motives will be turned by education, example, and the circle of ideas about them, from the obsession of self to the cheerful service of human knowledge, [50 human power, and human unity.

(ii) And this world state will be sustained by a universal education, organized upon a scale and of a penetration and quality beyond all present experience. The whole race, and not simply classes and peoples, will be educated. Most parents will have a technical knowledge of teaching. Quite apart from the duties of parentage, perhaps ten per [60 cent or more of the adult population will, at some time or other in their lives, be workers in the world's educational organization. And education as the new age will conceive it, will go on throughout life; it will not cease at any particular age. Men and women will simply become self-educators and individual students and student teachers as they grow older. [70

(iii) There will be no armies, no navies, and no classes of unemployed people, wealthy or poor.

(iv) The world-state's organization of scientific research and record compared to that of today will be like an ocean liner beside the dug-out canoe of some early heliolithic wanderer.

(v) There will be a vast free literature of criticism and discussion. [80

(vi) The world's political organization will be democratic; that is to say, the government and direction of affairs will be in immediate touch with and responsive to the general thought of the educated whole population.

(vii) Its economic organization will be an exploitation of all natural wealth and every fresh possibility science reveals, by the agents and servants of the common government for the common good. Private enterprise will be the servant — a useful, valued, and well-rewarded servant — and no longer the robber master of the commonweal.

(viii) And this implies two achievements that seem very difficult to us today. They are matters of mechanism, but they are as essential to the world's well-being, as it is to the soldier's, no [100 matter how brave he may be, that his machine gun should not jam, and to an aeronaut's that his steering-gear should not fail him in mid-air. Political well-being demands that electoral methods shall be used, and economic well-being requires that a currency shall be used, safeguarded or proof against the contrivances and manipulations of clever, dishonest men. [110

There can be little question that the attainment of a federation of all humanity, together with a sufficient measure of social justice to insure health, education, and a rough equality of opportunity to most of the children born into the world, would mean such a release and increase of human energy as to open a new phase in human history. The enormous waste caused by military preparation and [120 the mutual annoyance of competing great powers, and the still more enormous waste due to the under-productiveness of great masses of people, either because they are too wealthy for stimulus or too poor for efficiency, would cease. There would be a vast increase in the supply of human necessities, a rise in the standard of life and in what is considered a necessity, a development of transport [130 and every kind of convenience; and a multitude of people would be transferred from low-grade production to such higher work as art of all kinds, teaching, scientific research, and the like. All over the world there would be a setting free of human capacity, such as has occurred hitherto only in small places and through precious limited phases of prosperity and security. Unless we are to suppose [140 that spontaneous outbreaks of super-men have occurred in the past, it is reasonable to conclude that the Athens of Pericles, the Florence of the Medici, Elizabethan England, the great deeds of Asoka, the Tang and Ming periods in art, are but samples of what a whole world of sustained security would yield continuously and cumulatively. Without supposing any change in human quality, but [150 merely its release from the present system of inordinate waste, history justifies this expectation.

We have seen how, since the liberation of human thought in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, a comparatively few curious and intelligent men, chiefly in western Europe, have produced a vision of the world and a body of science that is now, on the material side, revolutionizing life. [160] Mostly these men have worked against great discouragement, with insufficient funds, and small help or support from the mass of mankind. It is impossible to believe that these men were the maximum intellectual harvest of their generations. England alone in the last three centuries must have produced scores of Newtons who never learnt to read, hundreds of Daltons, Darwins, [170] Bacons, and Huxleys, who died stunted in hovels, or never got a chance of proving their quality. All the world over, there must have been myriads of potential first-class investigators, splendid artists, creative minds, who never caught a gleam of inspiration or opportunity, for every one of that kind who has left his mark upon the world. In the trenches of the Western front alone during the [180] late war thousands of potential great men died unfulfilled. But a world with something like a secure international peace and something like social justice, will fish for capacity with the fine net of universal education, and may expect a yield beyond comparison greater than any yield of able and brilliant men that the world has known hitherto.

It is such considerations as this indeed which justify the concentration of effort in the near future upon the making of a new world state of righteousness out of our present confusions. War is a horrible thing, and constantly more horrible and dreadful, so that unless it is ended it will certainly end human society; social injustice, and the sight of the limited and cramped human beings it produces, torment the soul; but the strongest incentive to constructive political and social work for an imaginative spirit lies not so much in the mere hope of escaping evils as in the opportunity for great adventures that their suppression will open to our race. We want to get rid of the militarist not simply because he hurts and kills, but because he is an intolerable thick-voiced blockhead who stands hectoring and blustering in our way to achievement. [210] We want to abolish many extravagances of private ownership just as we should want to abolish some idiot guardian who refused us admission to a studio in which there were many finer things to do.

There are people who seem to imagine that a world order and one universal law of justice would end human adventure. It would but begin it. But instead of the adventure of the past, the "romance" [220] of the cinematograph world, the perpetual reiterated harping upon the trite reactions of sex and combat and the hunt for gold, it would be an unending exploration upon the edge of experience. Hitherto man has been living in a slum, amidst quarrels, revenges, vanities, shames and taints, hot desires, and urgent appetites. He has scarcely tasted sweet air yet and the great freedoms of the world that [230] science has enlarged for him.

To picture to ourselves something of the wider life that world unity would open to men is a very attractive speculation. Life will certainly go with a stronger pulse, it will breathe a deeper breath, because it will have dispelled and conquered a hundred infections of body and mind that now reduce it to invalidism and squalor. We have already laid [240] stress on the vast elimination of drudgery from human life through the creation of a new race of slaves, the machines. This — and the disappearance of war and the smoothing out of endless restraints and contentions by juster social and economic arrangements — will lift the burden of toilsome work and routine work, that has been the price of human security since the dawn of the first [250] civilizations, from the shoulders of our children. Which does not mean that they will cease to work, but that they will cease to do irksome work under pressure, and will work freely, planning, making, creating, according to their gifts and instincts. They will fight nature no longer as the dull conscripts of the pick and plough, but for a splendid conquest. Only the spiritlessness of our [260] present depression blinds us to the clear intimations of our reason that in the course of a few generations every little country town should become an Athens, every human being could be gentle in breeding and healthy in body and mind, the whole solid earth man's mine and its uttermost regions his playground.

In this Outline we have sought to show two great systems of development [270 interacting in the story of human society. We have seen, growing out of that later special neolithic culture, the heliolithic culture, and arising out of this in the warmer alluvial parts of the world, the great primordial civilizations, fecund systems of subjugation and obedience, vast multiplications of industrious and subservient men. We have shown the necessary relationship of the early civil- [280 izations to the early temples and to king-gods and god-kings. At the same time we have traced the development from a simpler neolithic level of the wanderer peoples, who became the nomadic peoples, in those great groups, the Aryans and the Hun-Mongol peoples of the north-west and the north-east and (from a heliolithic phase) the Semites of the Arabian deserts. Our history has told of a repeated [290 overrunning and refreshment of the originally brunet civilizations by these hardier, bolder, free-spirited peoples of the steppes and desert. We have pointed out how these constantly recurring nomadic injections have steadily altered the primordial civilizations both in blood and in spirit; and how the world-religions of today, and what we now call democracy, the boldness of modern scientific [300 inquiry and a universal restlessness, are due to this "nomadization" of civilization. The old civilizations created tradition, and lived by tradition. Today the power of tradition is destroyed. The body of our state is civilization still, but its spirit is the spirit of the nomadic world. It is the spirit of the great plains and the high seas.

So that it is difficult to resist the [310 persuasion that so soon as one law runs in the earth and the fierceness of frontiers ceases to distress us, that urgency in our natures that stirs us in spring and autumn to be up and travelling, will have its way with us. We shall obey the call of the summer pastures and the winter pastures in our blood, the call of the mountains, the desert, and the sea. For some of us also, who may be of a different [320 lineage, there is the call of the forest, and there are those who would hunt in the summer and return to the fields for the harvest and the plough. But this does not mean that men will have become homeless and all adrift. The normal nomadic life is not a homeless one, but a movement between homes. The Kal-mucks today, like the swallows, go yearly a thousand miles from one home to [330 another. The beautiful and convenient cities of the coming age, we conclude, will have their seasons when they will be full of life, and seasons when they will seem asleep. Life will ebb and flow to and from every region seasonally as the interest of that region rises or declines.

There will be little drudgery in this better-ordered world. Natural power harnessed in machines will be the drudge. [340 What drudgery is inevitable will be done as a service or duty for a few years or months out of each life; it will not consume nor degrade the whole life of anyone. And not only drudges, but many other sorts of men and ways of living which loom large in the current social scheme will necessarily have dwindled in importance or passed away. There will be few professional fighting men [350 or none at all, no custom-house officers; the increased multitude of teachers will have abolished large police forces and large jail staffs, mad-houses will be rare or non-existent; a world-wide sanitation will have diminished the proportion of hospitals, nurses, sick-room attendants, and the like; a world-wide economic justice, the floating population of cheats, sharpers, gamblers, forestallers, para- [360 sites, and speculators generally. But there will be no diminution of adventure or romance in this world of the days to come. Sea fisheries and the incessant insurrection of the sea, for example, will call for their own stalwart types of men; the high air will clamor for manhood, the deep and dangerous secret places of nature. Men will turn again with renewed interest to the animal world. [370 In these disordered days a stupid, uncontrollable massacre of animal species goes on — from certain angles of vision it is a thing almost more tragic than human miseries; in the nineteenth century dozens of animal species, and some of them very interesting species, were exterminated; but one of the first fruits of an effective world state would be the better protection of what are now [380 wild beasts. It is a strange thing in human history to note how little has been done since the Bronze Age in taming, using, befriending, and appreciating the animal life about us. But that mere witless killing which is called sport today, would inevitably give place in a better educated world community to a modification of the primitive instincts that find expression in this way, changing them [390 into an interest not in the deaths, but in the lives of beasts, and leading to fresh and perhaps very strange and beautiful attempts to befriend these pathetic, kindred lower creatures we no longer fear as enemies, hate as rivals, or need as slaves. And a world state and universal justice does not mean the imprisonment of our race in any bleak institutional orderliness. There will still [400 be mountains and the sea, there will be jungles and great forests, cared for indeed and treasured and protected; the great plains will still spread before us and the wild winds blow. But men will not hate so much, fear so much, nor cheat so desperately — and they will keep their minds and bodies cleaner.

There are unhelpful prophets who see in the gathering together of men into [410 one community the possibility of violent race conflicts, conflicts for "ascendancy," but that is to suppose that civilization is incapable of adjustments by which men of different qualities and temperaments and appearances will live side by side, following different rôles and contributing diverse gifts. The weaving of mankind into one community does not imply the creation of a homogeneous community, [420 but rather the reverse; the welcome and the adequate utilization of distinctive quality in an atmosphere of understanding. It is the almost universal bad manners of the present age which make race intolerable to race. The community to which we may be moving will be more mixed — which does not necessarily mean more interbred — more various and more interesting than any [430 existing community. Communities all to one pattern, like boxes of toy soldiers, are things of the past rather than the future.

But one of the hardest, most impossible tasks a writer can set himself, is to picture the life of a people better educated, happier in their circumstances, more free and more healthy than he is himself. We know enough today to know that [440 there is infinite room for betterment in every human concern. Nothing is needed but collective effort. Our poverty, our restraints, our infections and indigestions, our quarrels and misunderstandings, are all things controllable and removable by concerted human action, but we know as little how life would feel without them as some poor dirty, ill-treated, fierce-souled creature born and bred amidst [450 the cruel and dingy surroundings of a European back street can know what it is to bathe every day, always to be clad beautifully, to climb mountains for pleasure, to fly, to meet none but agreeable, well-mannered people, to conduct researches or make delightful things. Yet a time when all such good things will be for all men may be coming more nearly than we think. Each one [460 who believes that brings the good time nearer; each heart that fails delays it.

One cannot foretell the surprises or disappointments the future has in store. Before this chapter of the World State can begin fairly in our histories, other chapters as yet unsuspected may still need to be written, as long and as full of conflict as our account of the growth and rivalries of the Great Powers. There [470 may be tragic economic struggles, grim grapplings of race with race and class with class. We do not know; we cannot tell. These are unnecessary disasters, but they may be unavoidable disasters. Human history becomes more and more a race between education and catastrophe. Against the unifying effort of Christendom and against the unifying influence of the mechanical [480] revolution, catastrophe won. New falsities may arise and hold men in some unrighteous and fated scheme of order, for a time, before they collapse amidst the misery and slaughter of generations. Yet, clumsily or smoothly, the world, it seems, progresses and will progress. In this Outline, in our account of Palæolithic men, we have borrowed a description from Mr. Worthington Smith of the [490] very highest life in the world some fifty thousand years ago. It was a bestial life. We have sketched too the gathering for a human sacrifice, some fifteen thousand years ago. That scene again is almost incredibly cruel to a modern civilized reader. Yet it is not more than five hundred years since the great empire of the Aztecs still believed that it could live only by the shedding of blood. [500] Every year in Mexico hundreds of human victims died in this fashion: the body was bent like a bow over the curved stone of sacrifice, the breast was slashed open with a knife of obsidian, and the priest tore out the beating heart of the still living victim. The day may be close at hand when we shall no longer tear out the hearts of men, even for the sake of our national gods. . . . [510]

History is and must always be no more than an account of beginnings. We can venture to prophesy that the next chapters to be written will tell, though perhaps with long interludes of setback and disaster, of the final achievement of worldwide political and social unity. But when that is attained, it will mean no resting stage, nor even a breathing stage, before the development of a new struggle [520] and of new and vaster efforts. Men will unify only to intensify the search for knowledge and power, and live as ever for new occasions. Animal and vegetable life, the obscure processes of psychology, the intimate structure of matter and the interior of our Earth, will yield their secrets and endow their conqueror. Life begins perpetually. Gathered together at last under the leadership of [530] man, the student-teacher of the universe, unified, disciplined, armed with the secret powers of the atom and with knowledge as yet beyond dreaming, Life, forever dying to be born afresh, forever young and eager, will presently stand upon this earth as upon a footstool, and stretch out its realm amidst the stars.

MAX BEERBOHM (1872-)

"A CLERGYMAN"

Fragmentary, pale, momentary; almost nothing; glimpsed and gone; as it were, a faint human hand thrust up, never to reappear, from beneath the rolling waters of Time, he forever haunts my memory and solicits my weak imagination. Nothing is told of him but that once, abruptly, he asked a question, and received an answer.

This was on the afternoon of April [10] 7th, 1778, at Streatham, in the well-appointed house of Mr. Thrale. Johnson, on the morning of that day, had entertained Boswell at breakfast in Bolt Court and invited him to dine at Thrale Hall. The two took coach and arrived early. It seems that Sir John Pringle had asked Boswell to ask Johnson "what were the best English sermons for style." In the interval before dinner, accordingly, Bos- [20] well reeled off the names of several divines whose prose might or might not win commendation. "Atterbury?" he suggested. "JOHNSON: Yes, Sir, one of the best. BOSWELL: Tillotson? JOHNSON: Why, not now. I should not advise any one to imitate Tillotson's style; though I don't know; I should be cautious of censuring anything that has been applauded by so many suffrages. — South [30] is one of the best, if you except his peculiarities, and his violence, and sometimes coarseness of language. — Seed has a very fine style; but he is not very theological — Jortin's sermons are very elegant. — Sherlock's style, too, is very elegant, though he has not made it his principal study. — And you may add Smalridge. BOSWELL: I like Ogden's Sermons on Prayer very much, both for neatness of [40] style and subtilty of reasoning. JOHN-SON: I should like to read all that Ogden has written. BOSWELL: What I want to know is, what sermons afford the best specimen of English pulpit eloquence. JOHNSON: We have no sermons addressed to the passions, that are good for anything; if you mean that kind of eloquence. A CLERGYMAN, whose name I do not recollect: Were not Dodd's ser- [50] mons addressed to the passions? JOHNSON: They were nothing, Sir, be they addressed to what they may."

The suddenness of it! Bang! — and the rabbit that had popped from its burrow was no more.

I know not which is the more startling — the début of the unfortunate clergyman, or the instantaneousness of his end. Why hadn't Boswell told us there was [60] a clergyman present? Well, we may be sure that so careful and acute an artist had some good reason. And I suppose the clergyman was left to take us un-awares because just so did he take the company. Had we been told he was there, we might have expected that sooner or later he would join in the conversation. He would have had a place in our minds. We may assume that in [70] the minds of the company around Johnson he had no place. He sat forgotten, overlooked; so that his self-assertion startled every one just as on Boswell's page it startles us. In Johnson's massive and magnetic presence only some very remarkable man, such as Mr. Burke, was sharply distinguishable from the rest. Others might, if they had something in them, stand out slightly. This [80] unfortunate clergyman may have had something in him, but I judge that he lacked the gift of seeming as if he had. That deficiency, however, does not account for the horrid fate that befell him. One of Johnson's strongest and most inveterate feelings was his veneration for the Cloth. To any one in Holy Orders he habitually listened with a grave and charming deference. Today more- [90] over, he was in excellent good humor. He was at the Thrales', where he loved to be; the day was fine; a fine dinner was in close prospect; and he had had what he always declared to be the sum of human felicity — a ride in a coach. Nor was there in the question put by the clergyman anything likely to enrage him. Dodd was one whom Johnson had befriended in adversity; and it had al- [100] ways been agreed that Dodd in his pulpit was very emotional. What drew the blasting flash must have been not the question itself, but the manner in which it was asked. And I think we can guess what that manner was.

Say the words aloud: "Were not Dodd's sermons addressed to the passions?" They are words which, if you have any dramatic and histrionic [110] sense, cannot be said except in a high, thin voice.

You may, from sheer perversity, utter them in a rich and sonorous baritone or bass. But if you do so, they sound utterly unnatural. To make them carry the conviction of human utterance, you have no choice: you must pipe them.

Remember, now, Johnson was very deaf. Even the people whom he knew [120] well, the people to whose voices he was accustomed, had to address him very loudly. It is probable that this unregarded, young, shy clergyman, when at length he suddenly mustered courage to "cut in," let his high, thin voice soar too high, insomuch that it was a kind of scream. On no other hypothesis can we account for the ferocity with which Johnson turned and rended him. John- [130] son didn't, we may be sure, mean to be cruel. The old lion, startled, just struck out blindly. But the force of paw and claws was not the less lethal. We have endless testimony to the strength of Johnson's voice; and the very cadence of those words, "They were nothing, Sir, be they addressed to what they may," convinces me that the old lion's jaws never gave forth a louder roar. Boswell [140] does not record that there was any further conversation before the announcement of dinner. Perhaps the whole company had been temporarily deafened. But I am not bothering about them. My heart goes out to the poor dear clergyman exclusively.

I said a moment ago that he was young and shy; and I admit that I slipped those epithets in without having justified [150 them to you by due process of induction. Your quick mind will have already supplied what I omitted. A man with a high, thin voice, and without power to impress any one with a sense of his importance, a man so null in effect that even the retentive mind of Boswell did not retain his very name, would assuredly not be a self-confident man. Even if he were not naturally shy, social courage [160 would soon have been sapped in him, and would in time have been destroyed, by experience. That he had not yet given himself up as a bad job, that he still had faint wild hopes, is proved by the fact that he did snatch the opportunity for asking that question. He must, accordingly, have been young. Was he the curate of the neighboring church? I think so. It would account for his [170 having been invited. I see him as he sits there listening to the great Doctor's pronouncement on Atterbury and those others. He sits on the edge of a chair in the background. He has colorless eyes, fixed earnestly, and a face almost as pale as the clerical bands beneath his somewhat receding chin. His forehead is high and narrow, his hair mouse-colored. His hands are clasped tight be- [180 fore him, the knuckles standing out sharply. This constriction does not mean that he is steeling himself to speak. He has no positive intention of speaking. Very much, nevertheless, is he wishing in the back of his mind that he could say something — something whereat the great Doctor would turn on him and say, after a pause for thought, "Why yes, Sir. That is most justly observed," or "Sir, [190 this has never occurred to me. I thank you" — thereby fixing the observer forever high in the esteem of all. And now in a flash the chance presents itself. "We have," shouts Johnson, "no sermons addressed to the passions, that are good for anything." I see the curate's frame quiver with sudden impulse, and his mouth fly open, and — no, I can't bear it, I shut my eyes and ears. But audible, [200 even so, is something shrill, followed by something thunderous.

Presently I re-open my eyes. The crimson has not yet faded from that young face yonder, and slowly down either cheek falls a glistening tear. Shades of Atterbury and Tillotson! Such weakness shames the Established Church. What would Jortin and Smalridge have said? — what Seed and South? And, [210 by the way, who were they, these worthies? It is a solemn thought that so little is conveyed to us by names which to the paleo-Georgians conveyed so much. We discern a dim, composite picture of a big man in a big wig and a billowing black gown, with a big congregation beneath him. But we are not anxious to hear what he is saying. We know it is all very elegant. We know it will be [220 printed and be bound in finely tooled full calf, and no paleo-Georgian gentleman's library will be complete without it. Literate people in those days were comparatively few; but, bating that, one may say that sermons were as much in request as novels are today. I wonder, will mankind continue to be capricious? It is a very solemn thought indeed that no more than a hundred-and-fifty years [230 hence the novelists of our time, with all their moral and political and sociological outlook and influence, will perhaps shine as indistinctly as do those old preachers, with all their elegance, now. "Yes, Sir," some great pundit may be telling a disciple at this moment, "Wells is one of the best. Galsworthy is one of the best, if you except his concern for delicacy of style. Mrs. Ward has very firm grasp [240 of problems, but is not very creational. — Caine's books are very edifying. I should like to read all that Caine has written. Miss Corelli, too, is very edifying. — And you may add Upton Sinclair." "What I want to know," says the disciple, "is, what English novels may be selected as specially enthralling." The pundit answers: "We have no novels addressed to the passions that are [250 good for anything, if you mean that kind of enthrallment." And here some poor wretch (whose name the disciple will not remember) inquires: "Are not Mrs. Glyn's novels addressed to the passions?" and is in due form annihilated. Can it be that a time will come when readers of this passage in our pundit's life will take more interest in the poor nameless wretch than in all the bearers of those great [260 names put together, being no more able or anxious to discriminate between (say) Mrs. Ward and Mr. Sinclair than we are to set Ogden above Sherlock, or Sherlock above Ogden? It seems impossible. But we must remember that things are not always what they seem.

Every man illustrious in his day, however much he may be gratified by his fame, looks with an eager eye to posterity [270 for a continuance of past favors, and would even live the remainder of his life in obscurity if by so doing he could insure that future generations would preserve a correct attitude towards him forever. This is very natural and human, but, like so many very natural and human things, very silly. Tillotson and the rest need not, after all, be pitied for our neglect of them. They either know noth- [280 ing about it, or are above such terrene trifles. Let us keep our pity for the great seething mass of divines who were not elegantly verbose, and had no fun or glory while they lasted. And let us keep a specially large portion for one whose lot was so much worse than merely undistinguished. If that nameless curate had not been at the Thrales' that day, or, being there, had kept the silence that [290 so well became him, his life would not have been nipped in the bud. And that is what in fact happened, I'm sure of it. A robust man might have rallied under the blow. Not so our friend. Those who knew him in infancy had not expected that he would be reared. Better for him had they been right. It is well to grow up and be ordained, but not if you are delicate and very sensitive, and shall [300 happen to annoy the greatest, the most stentorian and roughest of contemporary personages. "A Clergyman" never held up his head or smiled again after the brief encounter recorded for us by Boswell. He sank into a rapid decline. Before the next blossoming of Thrale Hall's almond trees he was no more. I like to think that he died forgiving Dr.

JOHN GALSWORTHY (1867-)

AMERICAN AND BRITON

On the mutual understanding of each other by Americans and Britons, the future happiness of nations depends more than on any other world cause. Ignorance in Central Europe of the nature of American and Englishman tipped the balance in favor of war; and the course of the future will surely be improved by right comprehension of their characters.

Well, I know something at least of [10 the Englishman, who represents four-fifths of the population of the British Isles.

And, first, there exists no more unconsciously deceptive person on the face of the globe. The Englishman does not know himself; outside England he is only guessed at.

Racially the Englishman is so complex and so old a blend that no one can say precisely what he is. In character he is [20 just as complex. Physically, there are two main types: the one inclining to length of limb, bony jaws, and narrowness of face and head (you will nowhere see such long and narrow heads as in our island); the other approximating more to the legendary John Bull. The first type is gaining on the second. There is little or no difference in the main mental character behind these two. [30

In attempting to understand the real nature of the Englishman, certain salient facts must be borne in mind.

THE SEA. To be surrounded generation after generation by the sea has developed in him a suppressed idealism, a peculiar impermeability, a turn for adventure, a faculty for wandering, and for being sufficient unto himself in far and awkward surroundings. [40

THE CLIMATE. Whoso weathers for centuries a climate that, though healthy and never extreme, is, perhaps, the least reliable and one of the wettest in the world, must needs grow in himself a counterbalance of dry philosophy, a defiant humor, an enforced medium temperature of soul. The Englishman is no more given to extremes than his climate; and against its damp and per- [50

petual changes he has become coated with a sort of protective bluntness.

THE POLITICAL AGE OF HIS COUNTRY. This is by far the oldest settled Western power politically speaking. For 850 years England has known no serious military incursion from without; for nearly 200 years she has known no serious political turmoil within. This is partly the outcome of her isolation, partly the [60 happy accident of her political constitution, partly the result of the Englishman's habit of looking before he leaps, which comes, no doubt, from the climate and the mixture of his blood. This political stability has been a tremendous factor in the formation of English character, has given the Englishman of all ranks a certain deep, quiet sense of form and order, an ingrained culture which makes [70 no show, being in the bones of the man as it were.

THE GREAT PREPONDERANCE FOR SEVERAL GENERATIONS OF TOWN OVER COUNTRY LIFE. Taken in conjunction with generations of political stability, this is the main cause of a growing, inarticulate humaneness, of which, however, the Englishman appears to be rather ashamed. [80

The other chief factors have been:

THE ENGLISH PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE ESSENTIAL DEMOCRACY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND THE PRESS (at present rather under a cloud).

THE OLD-TIME FREEDOM FROM COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE.

All these, the outcome of the quiet and stable home life of an island people, [90 have helped to make the Englishman a deceptive personality to the outside eye. He has for centuries been licensed to grumble. There is no such confirmed grumbler — until he really has something to grumble at; and then, no one perhaps who grumbles less. An English soldier was sitting in a trench, in the act of lighting his pipe, when a shell burst close by, and lifted him bodily some yards [100 away. He picked himself up, bruised and shaken, and went on lighting his pipe, with the words: "These French matches aren't 'alf rotten."

Confirmed carper though the Englishman is at the condition of his country, no one perhaps is so profoundly convinced that it is the best in the world. A stranger might well think from his utterances that he was spoiled by the [110 freedom of his life, unprepared to sacrifice anything for a land in such a condition. If that country be threatened, and with it his liberty, you find that his grumbles have meant less than nothing. You find, too, that behind the apparent slackness of every arrangement and every individual, are powers of adaptability to facts, elasticity, practical genius, a spirit of competition amounting almost [120 to disease, and great determination. Before this war began, it was the fashion among a number of English to lament the decadence of their race. Such lamentations, which plentifully deceived the outside ear, were just English grumbles. All this democratic grumbling, and habit of "going as you please," serve a deep purpose. Autocracy, censorship, compulsion, destroy the salt in a nation's [130 blood, and elasticity in its fibre; they cut at the very mainsprings of a nation's vitality. Only if reasonably free from control can a man really arrive at what is or is not national necessity, and truly identify himself with a national ideal, by simple conviction from within.

Two words of caution to strangers trying to form an estimate of the Englishman: He must not be judged from [140 his Press, which, manned (with certain exceptions) by those who are not typically English, is too hectic to illustrate the true English spirit; nor can he be judged entirely from his literature. The Englishman is essentially inexpressive, unexpressed; and his literary men have been for the most part sports — Nature's attempt to redress the balance. Further, he must not be judged by the evi- [150 dence of his wealth. England may be the richest country in the world in proportion to its population, but not ten per cent of that population have any wealth to speak of, certainly not enough to have affected their hardihood; and, with few exceptions, those who have enough wealth are brought up to worship hardihood.

I have never held a whole-hearted [160] brief for the British character. There is a lot of good in it, but much which is repellent. It has a kind of deliberate unattractiveness, setting out on its journey with the words: "Take me or leave me." One may respect a person of this sort, but it's difficult either to know or to like him. An American officer said recently to a British Staff Officer in a friendly voice: "So we're going to [170] clean up Brother Boche together!" and the British Staff Officer replied: "Really!" No wonder Americans sometimes say: "I've got no use for those fellows!"

The world is consecrated to strangeness and discovery, and the attitude of mind concreted in that: "Really!" seems unforgivable till one remembers that it is manner rather than matter which divides the hearts of American and Briton. [180]

In your huge, still half-developed country, where every kind of national type and habit comes to run a new thread into the rich tapestry of American life and thought, people must find it almost impossible to conceive the life of a little old island where traditions persist generation after generation without anything to break them up; where blood remains unadorned by new strains; [190] demeanor becomes crystallised for lack of contrasts; and manner gets set like a plaster mask. Nevertheless the English manner of today, of what are called the classes, is the growth of only a century or so. There was probably nothing at all like it in the days of Elizabeth or even of Charles II. The English manner was still racy, not to say rude, when the inhabitants of Virginia, as we are told, [200] sent over to ask that there might be despatched to them some hierarchical assistance for the good of their souls, and were answered: "D—n your souls; grow tobacco!" The English manner of today could not even have come into its own when that epitaph of a Lady, quoted somewhere by Gilbert Murray, was written: "Bland, passionate, and deeply religious, she was second cousin to the [210] Earl of Leitrim; of such are the Kingdom of Heaven." About that gravestone motto ~~the~~ will admit there was a certain lack of self-consciousness; that element which is now the foremost characteristic of the English manner.

But this English self-consciousness is no mere fluffy gaucherie; it is our special form of what Germans would call "Kultur." Behind every manifestation of [220] thought or emotion, the Briton retains control of self, and is thinking: "That's all I'll let myself feel; at all events all I'll let myself show." This stoicism is good in its refusal to be founded; bad in that it fosters a narrow outlook; starves emotion, spontaneity, and frank sympathy; destroys grace and what one may describe roughly as the lovable side of personality. The English hardly [230] ever say just what comes into their heads. What we call "good form," the unwritten law which governs certain classes of the Briton, savors of the dull and glacial; but there lurks within it a core of virtue. It has grown up like callous shell round two fine ideals — suppression of the ego lest it trample on the corns of other people; and exaltation of the maxim: "Deeds before words." Good form, like [240] any other religion, starts well with some ethical truth, but in due time gets commonised, twisted, and petrified till at last we can hardly trace its origin, and watch with surprise its denial and contradiction of the root idea.

Without doubt, before the war, good form had become a kind of disease in England. A French friend told me how he witnessed in a Swiss Hotel the meet- [250] ing between an Englishwoman and her son, whom she had not seen for two years; she was greatly affected — by the fact that he had not brought a dinner-jacket. The best manners are no "manners," or at all events no mannerisms; but many Britons who have even attained to this perfect purity are yet not free from the paralytic effects of "good form"; are still self-conscious in the depths of their [260] souls, and never do or say a thing without trying not to show how much they are feeling. All this guarantees perhaps a certain decency in life; but in intimate intercourse with people of other nations who have not this particular cult of suppression, we English disappoint, and jar, and often irritate. Nations have their differing forms of snobbery. At one time, if we are to believe Thackeray, [270 the English all wanted to be second cousins to the Earl of Leitrim, like that lady bland and passionate. Now-a-days it is not so simple. The Earl of Leitrim has become etherialized. We no longer care how a fellow is born, so long as he behaves as the Earl of Leitrim would have; never makes himself conspicuous or ridiculous, never shows too much what he's really feeling, never talks of what [280 he's going to do, and always "plays the game." The cult is centered in our Public Schools and Universities.

At a very typical and honored old Public School, he to whom you are listening passed on the whole a happy time; but what an odd life educationally speaking! We lived rather like young Spartans; and were not encouraged to think, imagine, or see anything we learned, [290 in relation to life at large. It's very difficult to teach boys, because their chief object is not to be taught anything; but I should say we were crammed, not taught. Living as we did the herd-life of boys with little or no intrusion from our elders, and they men who had been brought up in the same way as ourselves, we were debarred from any real interest in philosophy, history, art, [300 literature, and music, or any advancing notions in social life or politics. We were reactionaries almost to a boy. I remember one summer term Gladstone came down to speak to us, and we repaired to the Speech Room with white collars and dark hearts, muttering what we would do to that Grand Old Man if we could have our way. But, after all, he contrived to charm us. Boys are not [310 difficult to charm. In that queer life we had all sorts of unwritten rules of suppression. You must turn up your trousers; must not go out with your umbrella rolled. Your hat must be worn tilted forward; you must not walk more than two abreast till you reached a certain form; nor be enthusiastic about anything, except such a supreme matter as a drive over the pavilion at cricket, [320 or a run the whole length of the ground at football. You must not talk about yourself or your home people; and for any punishment you must assume complete indifference.

I dwell on these trivialities, because every year thousands of British boys enter these mills which grind exceeding small; and because these boys constitute in after life the great majority of the [330 official, military, academic, professional, and a considerable proportion of the business classes of Great Britain. They become the Englishmen who say: "Really!" and they are for the most part the Englishmen who travel and reach America. The great defence I have always heard put up for our Public Schools is that they form character. As oatmeal is supposed to form bone in the bodies [340 of Scotsmen, so our Public Schools are supposed to form good sound moral fibre in British boys. And there is much in this plea. The life does make boys enduring, self-reliant, good-tempered, and honorable, but it most carefully endeavors to destroy all original sin of individuality, spontaneity, and engaging freakishness. It implants, moreover, in the great majority of those who have lived it the [350 mental attitude of that swell, who when asked where he went for his hats, replied: "Blank's; is there another fellow's?"

To know all is to excuse all — to know all about the bringing-up of English Public School boys makes one excuse much. The atmosphere and tradition of those places is extraordinarily strong, and persists through all modern changes. Thirty-eight years have gone since I [360 was a new boy, but cross-examining a young nephew who left not long ago, I found almost precisely the same features and conditions. The War, which has changed so much of our social life, will have some, but no very great, effect on this particular institution. The boys still go there from the same kind of homes and preparatory schools and come under the same kind of masters. [370 And the traditional unemotionalism, the cult of a dry and narrow stoicism, is rather fortified than diminished by the times we live in.

Our Universities, on the other hand, have lately been but the ghosts of their old selves. At my old College in Oxford last year they had only two English students. In the Chapel under the Joshua Reynolds window, through which the [380] sun was shining, hung a long "roll of honor," a hundred names and more. In the College garden an open-air hospital was ranged under the old City wall, where we used to climb and go wandering in the early summer mornings after some all-night spree. Down on the river the empty College barges lay stripped and stark. From the top of one of them an aged custodian broke into words: [390] "Ah! Oxford 'll never be the same again in my time. Why, who's to teach 'em row-in'? When we do get undergrads again, who's to teach 'em? All the old ones gone, killed, wounded and that. No! Rowin 'll never be the same again — not in my time." That was the tragedy of the War for him. Our Universities will recover faster than he thinks, and resume the care of our particular "Kultur," [400] and cap the products of our Public Schools with the Oxford accent and the Oxford manner.

An acute critic tells me that Americans hearing such deprecatory words as these from an Englishman about his country's institutions would say that this is precisely an instance of what an American means by the Oxford manner. Americans whose attitude towards their own [410] country seems to be that of a lover to his lady or a child to its mother, cannot — he says — understand how Englishmen can be critical of their own country, and yet love her. Well, the Englishman's attitude to his country is that of a man to himself; and the way he runs her down is rather a part of that special English bone-deep self-consciousness of which I have been speaking. Englishmen (the [420] speaker amongst them) love their Country as much as the French love France, and the Americans America; but she is so much a part of us that to speak well of her is like speaking well of ourselves, which we have been brought up to regard as impossible. When Americans hear Englishmen speaking critically of their own country I think they should note it for a sign of complete identification [430] with their country rather than of detachment from it. But to return to English Universities: They have, on the whole, a broadening influence on the material which comes to them so set and narrow. They do a little to discover for their children that there are many points of view, and much which needs an open mind in this world. They have not precisely a democratic influence, but taken by [440] themselves they would not be inimical to democracy. And when the War is over they will surely be still broader in philosophy and teaching. Heaven forefend that we should see vanish all that is old, all that has as it were the Virginia-creeper, the wistaria bloom of age upon it; there is a beauty in age and a health in tradition, ill dispensed with. But what is hateful in age is its lack of understanding [450] and of sympathy; in a word — its intolerance. Let us hope this wind of change may sweep out and sweeten the old places of my country, sweep away the cobwebs and the dust, our narrow ways of thought, our mannikinisms. But those who hate intolerance dare not be intolerant with the foibles of age; they should rather see them as comic, and gently laugh them out. [460]

The educated Briton may be self-sufficient, but he has grit; and at bottom grit is, I fancy, what Americans at any rate appreciate more than anything. If the motto of my old Oxford College: "Manners makyth man," were true, I should often be sorry for the Briton. But his manners don't make him, they mar him. His goods are all absent from the shop window; he is not a man of [470] the world in the wider meaning of that expression. And there is, of course, a particularly noxious type of travelling Briton, who does his best, unconsciously, to take the bloom off his country wherever he goes. Selfish, coarse-fibred, loud-voiced — the sort which thanks God he is a Briton — I suppose because nobody else will do it for him!

We live in times when patriotism [480] is exalted above all other virtues, because there have happened to lie before the patriotic tremendous chances for the display of courage and self-sacrifice. Patriotism ever has that advantage as the world is now constituted; but patriotism and provincialism of course are pretty close relations, and they who can only see beauty in the plumage of their own kind, who prefer the bad points [490 of their countrymen to the good points of foreigners, merely write themselves down blind of an eye, and panderers to herd feeling. America is advantaged in this matter. She lives so far away from other nations that she might well be excused for thinking herself the only country in the world; but in the many strains of blood which go to make up America, there is as yet a natural corrective [500 to the narrower kind of patriotism. America has vast spaces and many varieties of type and climate, and life to her is still a great adventure.

I pretend to no proper knowledge of the American people. It takes more than two visits of two months each to know the American people; there is just one thing, however, I can tell you: You seem easy, but are difficult to know. Americans [510 have their own form of self-absorption; but they appear to be free as yet from the special competitive self-centrement which has been forced on Britons through long centuries by countless continental rivalries and wars. Insularity was driven into the very bones of our people by the generation-long wars of Napoleon. A Frenchman, André Chevrillon, whose book: England and the War I com- [520 mend to anyone who wishes to understand British peculiarities, justly, subtly studied by a Frenchman, used these words in a recent letter to me: "You English are so strange to us French; you are so utterly different from any other people in the world." It is true; we are a lonely race. Deep in our hearts, I think, we feel that only the American people could ever really understand us. And [530 being extraordinarily self-conscious, perverse, and proud, we do our best to hide from Americans that we have any such feeling. It would distress the average Briton to confess that he wanted to be understood, had anything so natural as a craving for fellowship or for being liked.

We are a weird people, though we look so commonplace. In looking at photographs of British types among photo- [540 graphs of other European nationalities, one is struck at once by something which is in no other of those races — exactly as if we had an extra skin; as if the British animal had been tamed longer than the rest. And so he has. His political, social, legal life was fixed long before that of any other Western country. He was old before the Mayflower touched American shores and brought there [550 avatars, grave and civilized as ever founded nation. There is something touching and terrifying about our character, about the depth at which it keeps its real yearnings, about the perversity with which it disguises them, and its inability to show its feelings. We are, deep down, under all our lazy mentality, the most combative and competitive race in the world, with the exception perhaps of the Amer- [560 ican. This is at once a spiritual link with America, and yet one of the great barriers to friendship between the two peoples. Whether we are better than Frenchmen, Germans, Russians, Italians, Chinese, or any other race, is of course more than a question; but those peoples are all so different from us that we are bound, I suppose, secretly to consider ourselves superior. But between Americans and [570 ourselves under all differences there is some mysterious deep kinship which causes us to doubt, and makes us irritable, as if we were continually being tickled by that question: "Now am I really a better man than he?" Exactly what proportion of American blood at this time of day is British, I know not; but enough to make us definitely cousins — always an awkward relationship. We [580 see in Americans a sort of image of ourselves; feel near enough, yet far enough, to criticise and carp at the points of difference. It is as though a man went out and encountered, in the street, what he thought for the moment was himself; and, decidedly disturbed in his self-love, instantly began to disparage the appearance of that fellow. Probably community of language rather than of blood [590 accounts for our sense of kinship, for a common means of expression cannot but mould thought and feeling into some kind of unity. Certainly one can hardly overrate the intimacy which a common literature brings. The lives of great Americans, Washington and Franklin, Lincoln and Lee and Grant, are unsealed for us, just as to Americans are the lives of Marlborough and Nelson, Pitt and Gladstone and Gordon. Longfellow and Whittier and Whitman can be read by the British child as simply as Burns and Shelley and Keats. Emerson and William James are no more difficult to us than Darwin and Spencer to Americans. Without an effort we rejoice in Hawthorne and Mark Twain, Henry James and Howells, as Americans can in Dickens and Thackeray, Meredith and Thomas Hardy. And, more than all, Americans own with ourselves all literature in the English tongue before the Mayflower sailed; Chaucer and Spenser and Shakespeare, Raleigh, Ben Jonson, and the authors of the English Bible Version are their spiritual ancestors as much as ever they are ours. The tie of language is all-powerful — for language is the food formative of minds. Why! a volume could be written on the formation of character by literary humor alone. It has, I am sure, had a say in planting in American and Briton, especially the British townsman, a kind of bone-deep defiance of Fate, a readiness for anything which may turn up, a dry, wry smile under the blackest sky, an individual way of looking at things, which nothing can shake. Americans and Britons both, we must and will think for ourselves, and know why we do a thing before we do it. We have that ingrained respect for the individual conscience, which is at the bottom of all free institutions. Some years before the War, an intelligent and cultivated Austrian who had lived long in England, was asked for his opinion of the British. "In many ways," he said, "I think you are inferior to us; but one great thing I have noticed about you which we have not. You think and act and speak for yourselves." If he had passed those years in America instead of in England he must needs have pronounced the very same judgment of Americans. Free speech, of course, like every form of freedom, goes in danger of its life in war time. In 1917 an Englishman in Russia came on a street meeting shortly after the first revolution had begun. An Extremist was addressing the gathering and telling them that they were fools to go on fighting, that they ought to refuse and go home, and so forth. The crowd grew angry, and some soldiers were for making a rush at him; but the Chairman, a big burly peasant, stopped them with these words: "Brothers, you know that our country is now a country of free speech. We must listen to this man, we must let him say anything he will. But, brothers, when he's finished, we'll bash his head in!"

I cannot assert that either Britons or Americans are incapable in times like these of a similar interpretation of "free speech." Things have been done in my country, and perhaps in America, which should make us blush. But so strong is the free instinct in both countries, that it will survive even this War. Democracy, in fact, is a sham unless it means the preservation and development of this instinct of thinking for oneself throughout a people. "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people" means nothing unless the individuals of a people keep their consciences unfettered, and think freely. Accustom the individual to be nose-led and spoon-fed, and democracy is a mere pretence. The measure of democracy is the measure of the freedom and sense of individual responsibility in its humblest citizens. And democracy is still in the evolutionary stage.

An English scientist, Dr. Spurrell, in a recent book, Man and his Forerunners, thus diagnoses the growth of civilizations: A civilization begins with the enslavement by some hardy race of a tame race living a tame life in more congenial natural surroundings. It is built up on slavery, and attains its maximum vitality in conditions little removed therefrom. Then, as individual freedom gradually grows, disorganization sets in and the civilization slowly dissolves away in anarchy. Dr. Spurrell does not dog- [700 matise about our present civilization, but suggests that it will probably follow the civilizations of the past into dissolution.

I am not convinced of that, because of certain factors new to the history of man.
Recent discoveries have so unified the world, that such old isolated successful swoops of race on race are not now possible. In our great Industrial States, it is true, a new form of slavery has [710 arisen (the enslavement of men by their machines), but it is hardly of the nature on which the civilizations of the past are reared. Moreover, all past civilizations have been more or less Southern, and subject to the sapping influence of the sun. Modern civilization is essentially Northern. The individualism, however, which according to Dr. Spurrell, dissolved the Empires of the past, exists [720 already, in a marked degree, in every modern State; and the problem before us is to discover how democracy and liberty of the subject can be made into enduring props rather than dissolvents. It is, in fact, the problem of making democracy genuine. If that cannot be achieved and perpetuated, then I agree there is nothing to prevent democracy drifting into an anarchism which will dissolve mod- [730
ern States, till they are the prey of pounc-ing Dictators, or of other States not so far gone in dissolution—the same process in kind though different in degree from the old descents of savage races on their tamer neighbors.

Ever since the substantial introduction of democracy, nearly a century and a half ago with the American War of Independence, I would point out that West- [740 ern Civilization has been living on two planes or levels—the autocratic plane with which is bound up the idea of nationalism, and the democratic, to which has become conjoined in some sort the idea of internationalism. Not only little wars, but great wars such as this, come because of inequality in growth, dissimilarity of political institutions between States;
because this State or that is basing [750 its life on different principles from its neighbors.

We fall into glib usage of words like democracy, and make fetiches of them without due understanding. Democracy is certainly inferior to autocracy from the aggressively national point of view; it is not necessarily superior to autocracy as a guarantee of general well-being; it might even turn out to be inferior [760 unless we can improve it. But democracy is the rising tide; it may be dammed or delayed but cannot be stopped. It seems to be a law in human nature that where,

in any corporate society, the idea of self-government sets foot it refuses ever to take that foot up again. State after State, copying the American example, has adopted the democratic principle;
and the world's face is that way set. [770 Autocracy has, practically speaking, vanished from the Western world. It is my belief that only in a world thus uniform in its principles of government, and freed from the danger of pounce by autocracies, have States any chance to develop the individual conscience to a point which shall make democracy proof against anarchy, and themselves proof against dissolution; and only in such a world [780 can a League of Nations to enforce peace succeed.

But though we have now secured a single plane for Western civilization and ultimately, I hope, for the world, there will be but slow and difficult progress in the lot of mankind. And for this progress the solidarity of the English-speaking races is vital; for without that there is but sand on which to build. [790

The ancestors of the American people sought a new country, because they had in them a reverence for the individual conscience; they came from Britain, the first large State in the Christian era to build up the idea of political freedom.
The instincts and ideals of our two races have ever been the same. That great and lovable people the French, with their clear thought and expression, and [800 their quick blood, have expressed those ideals more vividly than either of us. But the phlegmatic tenacity of the English and the dry tenacity of the American temperament have ever made our countries the most settled and safe homes of the individual conscience. And we must look to our two countries to guarantee its strength and activity. If we English-speaking races quarrel and become [810] disunited, civilization will split up again and go its way to ruin. The individual conscience is the heart of democracy. Democracy is the new order; of the new order the English-speaking nations are the ballast.

I don't believe in formal alliances, or in grouping nations to exclude and keep down other nations. Friendships between countries should have the only [820] true reality of common sentiment, and be animated by desire for the general welfare of mankind. We need no formal bonds, but we have a sacred charge in common, to let no petty matters, differences of manner, divergencies of material interest, destroy our spiritual agreement. Our pasts, our geographical positions, our temperaments make us, beyond all other races, the hope and trustees of man- [830] kind's advance along the only line now open—democratic internationalism. It is childish to claim for Americans or Britons virtues beyond those of other nations, or to believe in the superiority of one national culture to another; they are different, that is all. It is by accident that we find ourselves in this position of guardianship to the main line of human development; no need to pat ourselves [840] on the back about it. But we are at a great and critical moment in the world's history—how critical, none of us alive will ever realise to the full. The civilization slowly built since the fall of Rome has either to break up and dissolve into jagged and isolated fragments through a century of revolutions and wars; or, unified and reanimated by a single idea, to move forward on one plane and [850] attain greater height and breadth.

Under the pressure of this War there has often been, beneath the lip-service we pay to democracy, a disposition to lose faith in it, because of its undoubted weakness and inconvenience in a struggle with States autocratically governed; there has even been a sort of secret reaction towards autocracy. On those lines there is no way out of a future of bit- [860] ter rivalries, chicanery, and wars, and the probable total failure of our civilization. The only cure which I can see, lies in democratising the whole world, and removing the present weaknesses and shams of democracy by education of the individual conscience in every country. Good-bye to that chance, if Americans and Britons fall foul of each other, refuse to make common cause of their thoughts [870] and hopes, and to keep the general welfare of mankind in view. They have got to stand together, not in aggressive and jealous policies, but in defence and championship of the self-helpful, self-governing, "live and let live" philosophy of life.

Who would not desire, rushing through the thick dark of the future, to stand on the cliffs of vision—two hundred years, say, hence—and view this world? [880]

Will there then be this League for War, this caldron where, beneath the thin crust, a boiling lava bubbles, and at any minute may break through and leap up, as of late, jet high? Will there still be reek and desolation, and man at the mercy of the machines he has made; still be narrow national policies and rancors, and such mutual fear that no country dare be generous? Or will there be [890] over the whole world something of the glamor that each one of us now sees hovering over his own country; and men and women—all—feel they are natives of one land? Who dare say?

The guns have ceased fire and all is still; from the woods and fields and seas, from the skeleton towns of ravaged countries the wistful dead rise, and with their eyes question us. In this hour we [900] have for answer only this: We fought for a better Future for Mankind!

Did we? Do we? That is the great question. Is our gaze really fixed on the far horizon? Or do we only dream it; and have the slain no comfort in their untimely darkness; the maimed, the ruined, the bereaved, no shred of consolation? Is it all to be for nothing but the salving of national prides? [910] And shall the Irony Spirit fill the whole world with his laughter?

The House of the Future is always dark. There are few cornerstones to be discerned in the Temple of our Fate. But, of these few, one is the brotherhood and bond of the English-speaking races; not for narrow purposes, but that mankind may yet see Faith and Good Will enshrined, yet breathe a sweeter air, [920 and know a life where Beauty passes, with the sun on her wings.

We want in the lives of men a "Song of Honor," as in Ralph Hodgson's poem:

"The song of men all sorts and kinds,
As many tempers, moods and minds
As leaves are on a tree,
As many faiths and castes and creeds
As many human bloods and breeds
As in the world may be." [930

In the making of that song the English-speaking races will assuredly unite. What set this world in motion we know not; the Principle of Life is inscrutable and will for ever be; but we do know, that Earth is yet on the upgrade of existence, the mountain top of man's life not reached, that many centuries of growth are yet in front of us before Time begins to chill this planet, till it swims, [940 at last, another moon, in space. In the climb to that mountain top, of a happy life for mankind, our two great nations are as guides who go before, roped together in perilous ascent. On their nerve, loyalty, and wisdom, the adventure now hangs. What American or British knife would sever the rope?

He who ever gives a thought to the life of man at large, to his miseries, and [950 disappointments, to the waste and cruelty of existence, will remember that if American or Briton fail in this climb, there can but be for us both, and for all other peoples, a hideous slip, a swift and fearful fall into an abyss, whence all shall be to begin over again.

We shall not fail — neither ourselves, nor each other. Our comradeship will endure.

APPENDIX

THE NEW TESTAMENT

The four selections here given, from four of the great English Bibles, represent the state of the language at the times indicated.

John i. 1-14

IN LATE ANGLO-SAXON (Circa 1050)

1. On frymðe wæs Word, and þæt Word wæs mid Gode, and God wæs þæt Word.
2. Þæt wæs on fruman mid Gode.
3. Ealle þing wæron geworhte ðurh hyne; and nan þing næs geworht butan him.
4. Þæt wæs lif þe on him geworht wæs; and þæt lif wæs manna leoht.
5. And þæt leoht lyht on ðystrum; and þystro þæt ne genamon.
6. Mann wæs from Gode asend, þæs nama wæs Iohannes.
7. Ðes com to gewitnesse, þæt he gewitnesse cyððe be ðam leohte, þæt ealle menn þurh hyne gelyfdon.
8. Næs he leoht, ac þæt he gewitnesse forð bære be þam leohte.
9. Soð leoht wæs þæt onlyht ælcne cumendne man on þisne middaneard.
10. He wæs on middanearde, and middaneard wæs geworht þurh hine, and middaneard hine ne gecneow.
11. To his agenum he com, and hig hyne ne underfengon.
12. Soðlice swa hwylce swa hyne underfengon, he sealde him anweald þæt hi wæron Godes bearn, þam ðe gelyfaþ on his naman:
13. þa ne synt acennede of blodum, ne of flæsces willan, ne of weres willan, ac hig synt of Gode acennede.
14. And þæt Word wæs flæsc geworden, and eardode on us, and we gesawon hys wuldor, swylce acennedes wuldor of Fæder, þæt wæs ful mid gyfe and soðfastnysse.

IN WYCLIF'S BIBLE (Circa 1385)

1. In the bygynnyng was the worde, that is, Goddis sone, and the worde was at God, and God was the worde.
2. This was in the bigynnyng at God.
3. Alle thingis ben made by hym, and withouten hym is made nouȝt, that thing that is made.
4. In hym was lijf, and the lijf was the lijte of men.
5. And the lijte schyneth in dirkenessis, and dirkenessis comprehenden, or taken, not it.
6. A man was sente fro God, to whom the name was Ioon.
7. This man came into witnessyng, that he schulde bere witnessyng of the lijte, that alle men schulde bileue by hym.
8. He was not the lijte, but that he schulde bere witnessyng of the lijte.
9. It was verrey lijte the whiche lijteneth eche man comyng into this worlde.
10. He was in the worlde, and the worlde was made by hym, and the worlde knew hym not.
11. He came into his owne thingis, and his receyueden hym not.
12. Forsothe how many euer receyueden hym, he ȝauc to hem power for to be made the sones of God, to hem that bileueden in his name;
13. The whiche not of bloodis, nether of wille of fleysche, nether of wille of man, but ben borne of God.
14. And the worde, that is Goddis sone, is made fleysche, or man, and hath dwellide in vs, and we haue seen the glorie of hym, the glorie as of the one bigoten of the fadir, the sone ful of grace and treuthe.

IN TYNDALE'S BIBLE (1534)

1. In the begynnyng was the worde, and the worde was with God: and the worde was God.
2. The same was in the begynnyng with God.
3. All thinges were made by it, and without it was made nothing that was made.
4. In it was lyfe, and the lyfe was the lyght of men,
5. And the lyght shyneth in the darcknes, but the darcknes comprehended it not.
6. There was a man sent from God, whose name was Iohn.
7. The same cam as a witness of the lyght, that all men through him myght beleve.

IN THE AUTHORIZED VERSION (1611)

1. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.
2. The same was in the beginning with God.
3. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made.
4. In him was life; and the life was the light of men.
5. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.
6. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John.
7. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

8. He was not that lyght: but to beare witness of the lyght.

9. That was a true lyght, which lyghteth all men that come into the worlde.

10. He was in the worlde, and the worlde was made by him: and yet the worlde knewe him not.

11. He cam amonge his (awne) and his awne receaved him not.

12. But as meny as receaved him, to them he gave power to be the sonnes of God in that they beleved on his name:

13. which were borne, not of bloude nor of the will of the flesshe, nor yet of the will of man: but of God.

14. And the worde was made flesshe and dwelt amonge us, and we sawe the glory of it, as the glory of the only begotten sonne of the father, which worde was full of grace and verite.

8. He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9. That was the true Light, which lighteth every man, that cometh into the world.

10. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

11. He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

12. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name:

13. Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God

14. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.

ANGLO-SAXON PROSE AND VERSE

BEOWULF

[The selections from Beowulf, Deor's Lament, and the accompanying notes, except those in square brackets, have been taken from Professor Francis B. Gummere's The Oldest English Epic.]

Hwæt! we Gar-Dēna in gear-dagum þeod cyninga brym gefrunon, hu þa æþelingas ellen fremedon.
 Oft Scyld Scefing sceaþena þreatum, monegum mægþum meodo-setla ofteah.
 Egsode eorl[as], syððan ærest wearð fea-scaft funden; he þæs frofre gebad, weox under wolcnum, weorð-myndum þah,
 oð þæt him æghwylc þara ymb-sittendra
 ofer hron-rade hyran scolde, gomban gyldan; þæt wæs god cyning.

* * * * *

Forth he fared at the fated moment, sturdy Scyld to the shelter of God.
 Then they bore him over to ocean's billow,
 loving clansmen, as late he charged them,
 while wielded words the winsome Scyld,
 the leader beloved who long had ruled. . . .
 In the roadstead rocked a ring-dight vessel,
 ice-flecked, outbound, atheling's barge:
 there laid they down their darling lord on the breast of the boat, the breaker-of-rings,¹ by the mast the mighty one. Many a treasure fetched from far was freighted with him.
 No ship have I known so nobly dight with weapons of war and weeds of battle, with breastplate and blade: on his bosom lay a heap'd hoard that hence should go far o'er the flood with him floating away.
 No less² these loaded the lordly gifts, thanes' huge treasure, than those had done
 who in former time forth had sent him sole on the seas, a suckling child.

¹ King or chieftain of a comitatus: he breaks off gold from the spiral rings—often worn on the arm—and so rewards his followers.

² The poet's favorite figure of litotes or understatement. He means that the treasure which they sent out with the dead king far exceeded what came with him in the boat that brought him, a helpless child, to their shores.

Lo, praise of the prowess of people-kings of spear-armed Danes, in days long sped,
 we have heard, and what honor the athelings
 won!

Oft Scyld the Scefing from squadroned foes,
 from many a tribe, the mead-bench tore, awing the earls.³ Since erst he lay friendless, a foundling, fate repaid him:
 for he waxed under welkin, in wealth he throve,
 till before him the folk, both far and near,
 who house by the whale-path,⁴ heard his mandate,
 gave him gifts: a good king he!

High o'er his head they hoist the standard,
 a gold-wove banner; let billows take him,
 gave him to ocean. Grave were their spirits, mournful their mood. No man is able to say in sooth, no son of the halls, no hero 'neath heaven,—who harbored that freight!

* * * * *

To Hrothgar⁵ was given such glory of war, such honor of combat, that all his kin obeyed him gladly till great grew his band of youthful comrades. It came in his mind to bid his henchmen a hall uprear, a master mead-house, mightier far than ever was seen by the sons of earth, and within it, then, to old and young
 he would all allot that the Lord had sent him,
 save only the land and the lives of his men.
 Wide, I heard, was the work commanded,
 for many a tribe this mid-earth round,
 to fashion the folkstead. It fell, as he ordered,

³ An "earl" was the freeman, the warrior in a chosen band; though not yet indicating specific rank, the word carried a general idea of nobility.

⁴ Sea.

⁵ [Hrothgar, as appears from the omitted lines, is Scyld's great-grandson.]

in rapid achievement that ready it stood there, of halls the noblest: Heorot ¹ he named it whose message had might in many a land.
Not reckless of promise, the rings he dealt, 80
treasure at banquet: there towered the hall, high, gabled wide, the hot surge waiting of furious flame.² * * * * *

With envy and anger an evil spirit endured the dole in his dark abode, that he heard each day the din of revel
high in the hall there harps rang out, clear song of the singer. He sang who knew ³ 90 tales of the early time of man,
how the Almighty made the earth,
fairest fields enfolded by water,
set, triumphant, sun and moon
for a light to lighten the land-dwellers, and braided bright the breast of earth with limbs and leaves, made life for all of mortal beings that breathe and move.

So lived the clansmen in cheer and revel
a winsome life, till one began to fashion evils, that fiend of hell.
Grendel this monster grim was called,
march-riever ⁴ mighty, in moorland living,
in fen and fastness, fief of the giants the hapless wight a while had kept since the Creator his exile doomed.
On kin of Cain was the killing avenged
by sovran God for slaughtered Abel.
Ill fared his feud,⁵ and far was he driven,
for the slaughter's sake, from sight of men.
Of Cain awoke all that woful breed,
Etins ⁶ and elves and evil-spirits,
as well as the giants that warred with God weary while: but their wage was paid them!

II

Went he forth to find at fall of night 115 that haughty house, and heed wherever the Ring-Danes, outrevelled, to rest had gone.
Found within it the atheling band asleep after feasting and fearless of sorrow, of human hardship. Unhallowed wight, 120 grim and greedy, he grasped betimes, wrathful, reckless, from resting-places,
thirty of the thanes, and thence he rushed fain of his fell spoil, faring homeward, laden with slaughter, his lair to seek. 125
Then at the dawning, as day was breaking,
the might of Grendel to men was known;
then after wassail was wail uplifted, loud moan in the morn. The mighty chief, atheling excellent, unblithe sat, 130
labored in woe for the loss of his thanes,
when once had been traced the trail of the fiend,
spirit accurst: too cruel that sorrow,
too long, too loathsome. Not late the respite;
with night returning, anew began 135
ruthless murder; he recked no whit, firm in his guilt, of the feud and crime.
They were easy to find who elsewhere sought

¹ That is, "The Hart," or "The Stag," so called from decorations in the gables that resembled the antlers of a deer.

² Fire was the usual end of these halls

³ A skilled minstrel. The Danes are heathens, as one is told presently; but this lay of beginnings is taken from Genesis.

⁴ [Border-raider.]

⁵ Cain's

⁶ [Giants]

in room remote their rest at night, bed in the bowers,⁷ when that bale was shown, 140 was seen in sooth, with surest token,— the hall-thane's hate. Such held themselves far and fast who the fiend outran!
Thus ruled unrighteous and raged his fill one against all, until empty stood 145 that lordly building, and long it bode so.
Twelve years' tide the trouble he bore, sovran of Scyldings, sorrows in plenty,
boundless cares. There came unhidden tidings true to the tribes of men, 150 in sorrowful songs, how ceaselessly Grendel harassed Hrothgar, what hate he bore him, what murder and massacre, many a year,
feud unfading,—refused consent to deal with any of Daneland's earls, 155 make pact of peace, or compound for gold:
still less did the wise men ween to get great fee for the feud from his fiendish hands.
But the evil one ambushed old and young,
death-shadow dark, and dogged them still, 160
lured, and lurked in the livelong night of misty moorlands: men may say not where the haunts of these Hell-Runes ⁸ be.
Such heaping of horrors the hater of men, lonely roamer, wrought unceasing, 165
harassings heavy. O'er Heorot he lorded, gold-bright hall, in gloomy nights;
and ne'er could the prince ⁹ approach his throne,
—'twas judgment of God,—or have joy in his hall.
Sore was the sorrow to Scyldings'-friend, 170 heart-rending misery. Many nobles sat assembled, and searched out counsel how it were best for bold-hearted men against harassing terror to try their hand.
Whiles they vowed in their heathen fanes 175 altar-offerings, asked with words ¹⁰ that the slayer-of-souls would succor give them for the pain of their people. Their practice this, their heathen hope; 'twas Hell they thought of in mood of their mind. Almighty they knew not, 180 Doomsman of Deeds and dreadful Lord, nor Heaven's-Helmet heeded they ever, Wielder-of-Wonder.—Woe for that man who in harm and hatred hales his soul to fiery embraces,—nor favor nor change 185 awaits he ever. But well for him that after death-day may draw to his Lord,
and friendship find in the Father's arms!

III

Thus seethed unceasing the son of Healfdene with the woe of these days; not wisest men 190 assuaged his sorrow, too sore the anguish, loathly and long, that lay on his folk,
most baneful of burdens and bales of the night.

This heard in his home Hygelac's thane, great among Geats, of Grendel's doings. 195
He was the mightiest man of valor
in that same day of this our life,
stalwart and stately. A stout wave-walker

⁷ The smaller buildings within the main enclosure but separate from the hall.

⁸ "Sorcerers-of-hell."

⁹ Hrothgar.

¹⁰ That is, in formal or prescribed phrase.

he bade make ready. Yon battle-king, said he,
far o'er the swan-road he fain would seek, 200
the noble monarch who needed men!
The prince's journey by prudent folk was little blamed, though they loved him dear;
they whetted the hero, and hailed good omens.
and now the bold one from bands of Geats 205 comrades chose, the keenest of warriors e'er he could find; with fourteen men
the sea-wood ¹ he sought, and, sailor proved, led them on to the land's confines.

Time had now flown, afloat was the ship, 210 boat under bluff. On board they climbed, warriors ready; waves were churning sea with sand; the sailors bore on the breast of the bark their bright array, their mail and weapons: the men pushed off, 215
on its willing way, the well-braced craft.
Then moved o'er the waters by might of the wind that bark like a bird with breast of foam, till in season due, on the second day,
the curv'd prow such course had run 220 that sailors now could see the land, sea-cliffs shining, steep high hills, headlands broad. Their haven was found, their journey ended. Up then quickly the Weders' ² clansmen climbed ashore, 225 anchored their sea-wood, with armor clashing and gear of battle: God they thanked for passing in peace o'er the paths of the sea.

Now saw from the cliff a Scylding clansman,
a warden that watched the water-side, 230
how they bore o'er the gangway glittering shields, war-gear in readiness; wonder seized him to know what manner of men they were.
Straight to the strand his steed he rode,
Hrothgar's henchman, with hand of might 235
he shook his spear and spake in parley.
"Who are ye, then, ye arméd men, mailed folk, that yon mighty vessel have urged thus over the ocean ways, here o'er the waters? A warden I, 240 sentinel set o'er the sea-march here, lest any foe to the folk of Danes with harrying fleet should harm the land.
No aliens ever at ease thus bore them,
linden-wielders: yet word-of-leave 245
clearly ye lack from clansmen here, my folk's agreement.—A greater ne'er saw I of warriors in world than is one of you,— yon hero in harness! No henchman he worthied by weapons, if witness his features, 250 his peerless presence! I pray you, though, tell your folk and home, lest hence ye fare suspect to wander your way as spies in Danish land. Now, dwellers afar, ocean-travellers, take from me 255 simple advice: the sooner the better
I hear of the country whence ye came."

IV

To him the stateliest spake in answer;
the warriors' leader his word-board unlocked:—
"We are by kin of the clan of Geats, 260 and Hygelac's own hearth-fellows we.

¹ Ship.² [Geats'.]

To folk afar was my father known, noble atheling, Ecgtheow named.
Full of winters, he fared away aged from earth; he is honored still 265 through width of the world by wise men all.
To thy lord and liege in loyal mood
we hasten hither, to Healfdene's son, people-protector: be pleased to advise us!
To that mighty-one come we on mickle errand, 270
to the lord of the Danes; nor deem I right that aught be hidden. We hear—thou knowest if sooth it is—the saying of men,
that amid the Scyldings a scathing monster, dark ill-doer, in dusky nights 275 shows terrific his rage unmatched, hatred and murder. To Hrothgar I in greatness of soul would succor bring,
so the Wise-and-Brave may worst his foes,— if ever the end of ills is fated, 280 of cruel contest, if cure shall follow,
and the boiling care-waves cooler grow;
else ever afterward anguish-days
he shall suffer in sorrow while stands in place high on its hill that house unpeered!" 285
Astride his steed, the strand-ward answered, clansman unquailing: "The keen-souled thane must be skilled to sever and sunder duly words and works, if he well intends.
I gather, this band is graciously bent 290 to the Scyldings' master. March, then, bearing weapons and weeds the way I show you.
I will bid my men your boat meanwhile to guard for fear lest foemen come,— your new-tarred ship by shore of ocean 295 faithfully watching till once again
it waft o'er the waters those well-loved thanes,
—winding-neck'd wood,—to Weders' bounds, heroes such as the best of fate shall succor and save from the shock of war." 300
They bent them to march,—the boat lay still, fettered by cable and fast at anchor,
broad-bosomed ship.—Then shone the boars
over the cheek-guard; chased with gold, keen and gleaming, guard it kept 305 o'er the man of war, as marched along heroes in haste, till the hall they saw,
broad of gable and bright with gold:
that was the fairest, 'mid folk of earth,
of houses 'neath heaven, where Hrothgar lived, 310
and the gleam of it lightened o'er lands afar.
The sturdy shieldsman showed that bright burg-of-the-boldest; bade them go straightway thither; his steed then turned, hardy hero, and hailed them thus:— 315
"Tis time that I fare from you. Father Almighty in grace and mercy guard you well, safe in your seekings. Seaward I go,
'gainst hostile warriors hold my watch."

V

Stone-bright the street: it showed the way 320 to the crowd of clansmen. Corselets glistened hand-forged, hard; on their harness bright the steel ring sang, as they strode along in mail of battle, and marched to the hall.
There, weary of ocean, the wall along 325

they set their bucklers, their broad shields, down,
and bowed them to bench: the breastplates clanged,
war-gear of men; their weapons stacked,
spears of the seafarers stood togeth'er,
gray-tipped ash: that iron band 330 was worthily weaponed!—A warrior proud asked of the heroes their home and kin.
“Whence, now, bear ye burnished shields, harness gray and helmets grim, spears in multitude? Messenger, I, 335 Hrothgar’s herald! Heroes so many ne’er met I as strangers of mood so strong.
’Tis plain that for prowess, not plunged into exile, for high-hearted valor, Hrothgar ye seek!”
Him the sturdy-in-war bespake with words, 340 proud earl of the Weders answer made, hardy ’neath helmet:—“Hygelac’s, we,
fellows at board; I am Beowulf named.
I am seeking to say to the son of Healfdene
this mission of mine, to thy master-lord, 345 the doughty prince, if he deign at all grace that we greet him, the good one, now.”
Wulfgar spake, the Wendles’ chieftain, whose might of mind to many was known,
his courage and counsel: “The king of Danes, 350
the Scyldings’ friend, I fain will tell,
the Breaker-of-Rings, as the boon thou askest,
the famed prince, of thy faring hither,
and, swiftly after, such answer bring as the doughty monarch may deign to give.” 355 Hied then in haste to where Hrothgar sat
white-haired and old, his earls about him, till the stoutthane stood at the shoulder there of the Danish king: good courtier he!
Wulfgar spake to his winsome lord.— 360
“Hither have fared to thee far-come men
o’er the paths of ocean, people of Geatland;
and the stateliest there by his sturdy band is Beowulf named. This boon they seek, that they, my master, may with thee 365 have speech at will: nor spurn their prayer to give them hearing, gracious Hrothgar!
In weeds of the warrior worthy they,
methinks, of our liking; their leader most surely,
a hero that hither his henchmen has led.” 370

VI

Hrothgar answered, helmet of Scyldings:—
“I knew him of yore in his youthful days;
his aged father was Ecgtheow named,
to whom, at home, gave Hrethel the Geat his only daughter. Their offspring bold 375 fares hither to seek the steadfast friend.
And seamen, too, have said me this,— who carried my gifts to the Geatish court, thither for thanks,—he has thirty men’s heft of grasp in the gripe of his hand, 380
the bold-in-battle. Blessed God out of his mercy this man hath sent to Danes of the West, as I ween indeed, against horror of Grendel. I hope to give the good youth gold for his gallant thought. 385
Be thou in haste, and bid them hither, clan of kinsmen, to come before me;
and add this word,—they are welcome guests to folk of the Danes.”

[To the door of the hall

Wulfgar went] and the word declared:— 390
“To you this message my master sends,
East-Danes’ king, that your kin he knows, hardy heroes, and hails you all welcome hither o’er waves of the sea!
Ye may wend your way in war-attire, 395 and under helmets Hrothgar greet;
but let here the battle-shields bide your parley,
and wooden war-shafts wait its end.”
Uprose the mighty one, ringed with his men, brave band of thanes: some bode without, 400
battle-gear guarding, as bade the chief.
Then hied that troop where the herald led them,
under Heorot’s roof: [the hero strode.]
hardy ’neath helm, till the hearth he neared.
Beowulf spake,—his breastplate gleamed, 405 war-net woven by wit of the smith:— “Thou Hrothgar, hail! Hygelac’s I, kinsman and follower. Fame a plenty have I gained in youth! These Grendel-deeds
I heard in my home-land heralded clear. 410
Seafarers say how stands this hall,
of buildings best, for your band of thanes empty and idle, when evening sun
in the harbor of heaven is hidden away.
So my vassals advised me well,— 415 brave and wise, the best of men,—
O sovran Hrothgar, to seek thee here,
for my nerve and my might they knew full well.
Themselves had seen me from slaughter come blood-flecked from foes, where five I bound, 420 and that wild brood worsted. I’ the waves I slew nicors¹ by night, in need and peril avenging the Weders, whose woe they sought,— crushing the grim ones. Grendel now, monster cruel, be mine to quell 425
in single battle! So, from thee, thou sovran of the Shining-Danes, Scyldings’-bulwark, a boon I seek,— and, Friend-of-the-folk, refuse it not,
O Warriors’-shield, now I’ve wandered far,— 430 that I alone with my liegemen here,
this hardy band, may Heorot purge!
More I hear, that the monster dire,
in his wanton mood, of weapons reckes not;
hence shall I scorn—so Hygelac stay, 435
king of my kindred, kind to me!—
brand or buckler to bear in the fight, gold-colored targe: but with gripe alone
must I front the fiend and fight for life, foe against foe. Then faith be his 440
in the doom of the Lord whom death shall take.
Fain, I ween, if the fight he win,
in this hall of gold my Geatish band will he fearless eat,—as oft before,— my noblest thanes. Nor need’st thou then 445 to hide my head;² for his shall I be, dyed in gore, if death must take me;
and my blood-covered body he’ll bear as prey,
ruthless devour it, the roamer-lonely, with my life-blood redden his lair in the fen: 45
no further for me need’st food prepare!
To Hygelac send, if Hild³ should take me,
best of war-weeds, warding my breast,

¹ [Sea monsters]

² That is, cover it as with a face-cloth. “There will be no need of funeral rites.”

³ Personification of Battle.

armor excellent, heirloom of Hrethel and work of Wayland. Fares Wyrd¹ as she must." 455

VII

Hrothgar spake, the Scyldings'-helmet:—

* * * * *

"Sore is my soul to say to any of the race of man what ruth for me in Heorot Grendel with hate hath wrought, 475 what sudden harryings. Hall-folk fail me, my warriors wane; for Wyrd hath swept them into Grendel's grasp. But God is able this deadly foe from his deeds to turn!
Boasted full oft, as my beer they drank, 480
earls o'er the ale-cup, arméd men, that they would bide in the beer-hall here,
Grendel's attack with terror of blades.
Then was this mead-house at morning tide dyed with gore, when the daylight broke, 485
all the boards of the benches blood-besprinkled, gory the hall. I had heroes the less,
doughty dear-ones that death had reft.
—But sit to the banquet, unbind thy words,
hardy hero, as heart shall prompt thee." 490

Gathered together, the Geatish men in the banquet-hall on bench assigned, sturdy-spirited, sat them down,
hardy-hearted. A henchman attended, carried the carven cup in hand, 495 served the clear mead. Oft minstrels sang blithe in Heorot. Heroes revelled, no dearth of warriors, Weder and Dane.

VIII

Unferth spake, the son of Ecglaf, who sat at the feet of the Scyldings' lord, 500
unbound the battle-runes.²—Beowulf's quest, sturdy seafarer's, sorely galled him;
ever he envied that other men should more achieve in middle-earth of fame under heaven than he-himself.— 505
"Art thou that Beowulf, Breca's rival, who emulous swam on the open sea,
when for pride the pair of you proved the floods,
and wantonly dared in waters deep to risk your lives? No living man, 510 or lief or loath, from your labor dire could you dissuade, from swimming the main.
Ocean-tides with your arms ye covered,
with strenuous hands the sea-streets measured,
swam o'er the waters. Winter's storm 515 rolled the rough waves. In realm of sea
a sennight strove ye. In swimming he topped thee, had more of main! Him at morning-tide billows bore to the Battling Reamas, whence he hied to his home so dear, 520
beloved of his liegemen, to land of Brondings, fastness fair, where his folk he ruled,
town and treasure. In triumph o'er thee
Beanstan's bairn³ his boast achieved.

¹This mighty power, whom the Christian poet can still revere, has here the general force of "Destiny."

²Began the battle. This argument between Beowulf and Unferth is an example of the "flying," or word-combat, popular among primitive peoples.

³Breca.

So ween I for thee a worse adventure 525
—though in buffet of battle thou brave hast been,
in struggle grim,—if Grendel's approach thou darst await through the watch of night!"

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—
"What a deal hast uttered, dear my Unferth, 530 drunken with beer, of Breca now, told of his triumph! Truth I claim it, that I had more of might in the sea
than any man else, more ocean-endurance.
We twain had talked, in time of youth, 535
and made our boast,—we were merely boys, striplings still,—to stake our lives
far at sea: and so we performed it.
Naked swords, as we swam along,
we held in hand, with hope to guard us 540 against the whales. Not a whit from me could he float afar o'er the flood of waves,
haste o'er the billows; nor him I abandoned.
Together we twain on the tides abode five nights full till the flood divided us, 545
churning waves and chillest weather, darkling night, and the northern wind
ruthless rushed on us: rough was the surge.
Now the wrath of the sea-fish rose apace;
yet me 'gainst the monsters my mailéd coat, 550 hard and hand-linked, help afforded,— battle-sark braided my breast to ward, garnished with gold. There grasped me firm and haled me to bottom the hated foe, with grimpest gripe. 'Twas granted me, though, 555
to pierce the monster with point of sword, with blade of battle: huge beast of the sea was whelmed by the hurly through hand of mine.

IX

Me thus often the evil monsters thronging threatened With thrust of my sword,
the darling, I dealt them due return! 561 Nowise had they bliss from their booty then to devour their victim, vengeful creatures, seated to banquet at bottom of sea;
but at break of day, by my brand sore hurt, 565
on the edge of ocean up they lay, put to sleep by the sword. And since, by them on the fathomless sea-ways sailor-folk are never molested.—Light from east, came bright God's beacon; the billows sank, 570
so that I saw the sea-cliffs high, windy walls. For Wyrd oft saveth earl undoomed if he doughty be!
And so it came that I killed with my sword nine of the nicors. Of night-fought battles 575 ne'er heard I a harder 'neath heaven's dome,
nor adrift on the deep a more desolate man!
Yet I came unharmed from that hostile clutch, though spent with swimming. The sea upbore me, flood of the tide, on Finnish land, 580
the welling waters. No wise of thee have I heard men tell such terror of falchions, bitter battle. Breca ne'er yet, not one of you pair, in the play of war such daring deed has done at all 585 with bloody brand,—I boast not of it!— though thou wast the bane⁴ of thy brethren dear.

⁴Murderer.

thy closest kin, whence curse of hell awaits thee, well as thy wit may serve!
For I say in sooth, thou son of Ecglaf,
never had Grendel these grim deeds wrought,
monster dire, on thy master dear,
in Heorot such havoc, if heart of thine were as battle-bold as thy boast is loud!
But he has found no feud will happen;
from sword-clash dread of your Danish clan
he vaunts him safe, from the Victor-Scyldings.
He forces pledges, favors none of the land of Danes, but lustily murders, fights and feasts, nor feud he dreads from Spear-Dane men. But speedily now shall I prove him the prowess and pride of the Geats,
shall bid him battle. Blithe to mead go he that listeth, when light of dawn
this morrow morning o'er men of earth, ether-robed sun from the south shall beam!"
Joyous then was the Jewel-giver, hoar-haired, war-brave; help awaited
the Bright-Danes' prince, from Beowulf hearing, folk's good shepherd, such firm resolve.
Then was laughter of liegemen loud resounding with winsome words. Came Wealhtheow forth, queen of Hrothgar, heedful of courtesy,
gold-decked, greeting the guests in hall,
and the high-born lady handed the cup
first to the East-Danes' heir and warden, bade him be blithe at the beer-carouse, the land's beloved one. Lustily took he banquet and beaker, battle-famed king.
Through the hall then went the Helmings' Lady, to younger and older everywhere carried the cup, till came the moment when the ring-graced queen, the royal-hearted, to Beowulf bore the beaker of mead.
She greeted the Geats' lord, God she thanked,
in wisdom's words, that her will was granted, that at last on a hero her hope could lean for comfort in terrors. The cup he took, hardy-in-war, from Wealhtheow's hand,
and answer uttered the eager-for-combat.
Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow.—
"This was my thought, when my thanes and I bent to the ocean and entered our boat, that I would work the will of your people fully, or fighting fall in death, in fiend's gripe fast. I am firm to do an earl's brave deed, or end the days of this life of mine in the mead-hall here."
Well these words to the woman seemed,
Beowulf's battle-boast.—Bright with gold
the stately dame by her spouse sat down.
Again, as erst, began in hall
warriors' wassail and words of power, the proud-band's revel, till presently the son of Healfdene hastened to seek rest for the night; he knew there waited fight for the fiend in that festal hall, when the sheen of the sun they saw no more,
and dusk of night sank darkling nigh,
and shadowy shapes came striding on,
wan under welkin. The warriors rose.
Man to man, he made harangue, Hrothgar to Beowulf, bade him hail,

let him wield the wine hall: a word he added:—
"Never to any man erst I trusted,
since I could heave up hand and shield,
this noble Dane-Hall, till now to thee.
Have now and hold this house unpeered;
remember thy glory; thy might declare;
watch for the foe! No wish shall fail thee
if thou bidest the battle with bold-won life."

X

Then Hrothgar went with his hero-train, defence-of-Scyldings, forth from hall;
fain would the war-lord Wealhtheow seek, couch of his queen. The King-of-Glory against this Grendel a guard had set,
so heroes heard, a hall-defender, who warded the monarch and watched for the monster.
In truth, the Geats' prince gladly trusted his mettle, his might, the mercy of God!
Cast off then his corselet of iron, helmet from head; to his henchman gave,— choicest of weapons,—the well-chased sword, bidding him guard the gear of battle.
Spake then his Vaunt the valiant man,
Beowulf Geat, ere the bed he sought.—
"Of force in fight no feeblér I count me,
in grim war-deeds, than Grendel deems him.
Not with the sword, then, to sleep of death
his life will I give, though it lie in my power.
No skill is his to strike against me,
my shield to hew though he hardy be,
bold in battle, we both, this night,
shall spurn the sword, if he seek me here,
unweaponed, for war. Let wisest God, sacred Lord, on which side soever doom decree as he deemeth right."
Reclined then the chieftain, and cheek-pillows held the head of the earl, while all about him scamen hardy on hall-beds sank.
None of them thought that thence their steps to the folk and fastness that fostered them, to the land they loved, would lead them back!
Full well they wist that on warriors many battle-death seized, in the banquet-hall, of Danish clan. But comfort and help, war-weal weaving, to Weder folk the Master gave, that, by might of one,
over their enemy all prevailed, by single strength. In sooth 'tis told that highest God o'er human kind hath wielded ever!—Thro' wan night striding, came the walker-in-shadow. Warriors slept whose hest was to guard the gabled hall,— all save one. 'Twas widely known that against God's will the ghostly ravager him ' could not hurl to haunts of darkness;
wakeful, ready, with warrior's wrath,
bold he bided the battle's issue.

XI

Then from the moorland, by misty crags, with God's wrath laden, Grendel came.
The monster was minded of mankind now sundry to seize in the stately house.

Under welkin he walked, till the wine-palace there,
gold-hall of men, he gladly discerned, 715 flashing with fretwork. Not first time, this, that he the home of Hrothgar sought,— yet ne'er in his life-day, late or early,
such hardy heroes, such hall-thanes, found!
To the house the warrior walked apace, 720 parted from peace;¹ the portal opened, though with forged bolts fast, when his fists had struck it,
and baleful he burst in his blatant rage,
the house's mouth. All hastily, then, o'er fair-paved floor the fiend trod on, 725
ireful he strode; there streamed from his eyes fearful flashes, like flame to see.
He spied in hall the hero-band,
kin and clansmen clustered asleep, hardy liegemen. Then laughed his heart; 730 for the monster was minded, ere morn should dawn, savage, to sever the soul of each,
life from body, since lusty banquet waited his will! But Wyrd forbade him to seize any more of men on earth 735 after that evening. Eagerly watched Hygelac's kinsman his cursed foe,
how he would fare in fell attack
Not that the monster was minded to pause!
Straightway he seized a sleeping warrior 740
for the first, and tore him fiercely asunder,
the bone-frame bit, drank blood in streams, swallowed him piecemeal: swiftly thus the lifeless corse was clear devoured, e'en feet and hands. Then farther he hied; 745 for the hardy hero with hand he grasped, felt for the foe with fiendish claw,
for the hero reclining,—who clutched it boldly,
prompt to answer, propped on his arm.
Soon then saw that shepherd-of-evils 750
that never he met in this middle-world, in the ways of earth, another wight with heavier hand-gripe; at heart he feared, sorrowed in soul,—none the sooner escaped!
Fain would he flee, his fastness seek, 755
the den of devils: no doings now such as oft he had done in days of old!
Then bethought him the hardy Hygelac-thane of his boast at evening: up he bounded, grasped firm his foe, whose fingers cracked. 760
The fiend made off, but the earl close followed.
The monster meant—if he might at all—to fling himself free, and far away fly to the fens,—knew his fingers' power in the gripe of the grim one. Gruesome march 765 to Heorot this monster of harm had made!
Din filled the room; the Danes were bereft, castle-dwellers and clansmen all, earls, of their ale. Angry were both those savage hall-guards: the house resounded. 770 Wonder it was the wine-hall firm in the strain of their struggle stood, to earth the fair house fell not; too fast it was within and without by its iron bands craftily clamped; though there crashed from sill 775 many a mead-bench—men have told me—
gay with gold, where the grim foes wrestled.
So well had weened the wisest Scyldings

¹ That is, he was a "lost soul," doomed to hell.

that not ever at all might any man that bone-decked, brave house break asunder, 780 crush by craft,—unless clasp of fire in smoke engulfed it.—Again uprose din redoubled. Danes of the North with fear and frenzy were filled, each one,
who from the wall that wailing heard, 785
God's foe sounding his grisly song, cry of the conquered, clamorous pain from captive of hell. Too closely held him he who of men in might was strongest in that same day of this our life. 790

XII

Not in any wise would the earls' defence² suffer that slaughterous stranger to live, useless deeming his days and years to men on earth. Now many an earl of Beowulf brandished blade ancestral, 795 fain the life of their lord to shield,
their praised prince, if power were theirs;
never they knew,—as they neared the foe,
hardy-hearted heroes of war,
aiming their swords on every side 800
the accursed to kill,—no keenest blade,
no fairest of falchions fashioned on earth,
could harm or hurt that hideous fiend!
He was safe, by his spells, from sword of battle, from edge of iron. Yet his end and parting 805 on that same day of this our life woful should be, and his wandering soul far off flit to the fiends' domain.
Soon he found, who in former days, harmful in heart and hated of God, 810
on many a man such murder wrought, that the frame of his body failed him now.
For him the keen-souled kinsman of Hygelac held in hand; hateful alive 815 was each to other. The outlaw dire took mortal hurt, a mighty wound showed on his shoulder, and sinews cracked, and the bone-frame burst. To Beowulf now the glory was given, and Grendel thence death-sick his den in the dark moor sought, 820 noisome abode: he knew too well that here was the last of life, an end of his days on earth.—To all the Danes by that bloody battle the boon had come.
From ravage had rescued the roving stranger 825 Hrothgar's hall; the hardy and wise one had purged it anew. His night-work pleased him, his deed and its honor. To Eastern Danes had the valiant Geat his vaunt made good, all their sorrow and ills assuaged, 830
their bale of battle borne so long,
and all the dole they erst endured,
pain a-plenty.—'Twas proof of this,
when the hardy-in-fight a hand laid down,
arm and shoulder,—all, indeed, 835
of Grendel's gripe,—'neath the gabled roof.

XIII

Many at morning, as men have told me, warriors gathered the gift-hall round,
folk-leaders faring from far and near,
o'er wide-stretched ways, the wonder to view, 840 o'er Beowulf.

² Beowulf.

trace of the traitor. Not troublous seemed the enemy's end to any man who saw by the gait of the graceless foe how the weary-hearted, away from thence, baffled in battle and banned, his steps 845 death-marked dragged to the devils' mere.
Bloody the billows were boiling there, turbid the tide of tumbling waves horribly seething, with sword-blood hot, by that doomed one dyed, who in den of the moor laid forlorn his life adown, 851
his heathen soul,—and hell received it.

Home then rode the hoary clansmen from that merry journey, and many a youth, on horses white, the hardy warriors, 855 back from the mere. Then Beowulf's glory eager they echoed, and all averred that from sea to sea, or south or north,
there was no other in earth's domain,
under vault of heaven, more valiant found, 860
of warriors none more worthy to rule!
(On their lord beloved they laid no slight, gracious Hrothgar: a good king he!)

* * * * *

The morning sun was climbing higher. Clansmen hastened to the high-built hall, those hardy-minded, the wonder to witness. Warden of treasure, 920 crowned with glory, the king himself, with stately band from the bride-bower strode;
and with him the queen and her crowd of maidens measured the path to the mead-house fair.

XIV

Hrothgar spake,—to the hall he went, 925 stood by the steps, the steep roof saw, garished with gold, and Grendel's hand:— “For the sight I see to the Sovran Ruler be speedy thanks! A throng of sorrows
I have borne from Grendel; but God still works 930 wonder on wonder, the Warden-of-Glory.
It was but now that I never more for woes that weighed on me waited help
long as I lived, when, laved in blood, stood sword-gore-stained this stateliest house,—935 widespread woe for wise men all,
who had no hope to hinder ever foes infernal and fiendish sprites from havoc in hall. This hero now, by the Wielder's might, a work has done 940 that not all of us erst could ever do by wile and wisdom. Lo, well can she say whoso of women this warrior bore among sons of men, if still she liveth, that the God of the ages was good to her 945
in the birth of her bairn. Now, Beowulf, thee, of heroes best, I shall heartily love as mine own, my son; preserve thou ever this kinship new: thou shalt never lack wealth of the world that I wield as mine! 950 Full oft for less have I largess showered, my precious hoard, on a punier man, less stout in struggle. Thyself hast now fulfilled such deeds, that thy fame shall endure through all the ages. As ever he did, 955 well may the Wielder reward thee still!”

* * * * *
More silent seemed the son of Ecglaf ¹ 980
in boastful speech of his battle-deeds, since athelings all, through the earl's great prowess,
beheld that hand, on the high roof gazing, foeman's fingers,—the forepart of each of the sturdy nails to steel was likest,— 985 heathen's “hand-spear,” hostile warrior's claw uncanny. 'Twas clear, they said, that him no blade of the brave could touch,
how keen soever, or cut away that battle-hand bloody from baneful foe. 990

XV

There was hurry and hest in Heorot now for hands to bedeck it, and dense was the throng of men and women the wine-hall to cleanse, the guest-room to garnish. Gold-gay shone the hangings

that were wove on the wall, and wonders many 995
to delight each mortal that looks upon them.
Though braced within by iron bands,
that building bright was broken sorely;
rent were its hinges; the roof alone held safe and sound, when, seared with crime, 1000
the fiendish foe his flight essayed, of life despairing.—No light thing that,
the flight for safety,—essay it who will!

* * * Arrived was the hour
when to hall proceeded Healfdene's son:
the king himself would sit to banquet. 1010
Ne'er heard I of host in haughtier throng more graciously gathered round giver-of-rings!
Bowed then to bench those bearers-of-glory, fain of the feasting. Featly received many a mead-cup the mighty-in-spirit, 1015
kinsmen who sat in the sumptuous hall, Hrothgar and Hrothulf.² Heorot now was filled with friends; the folk of Scyldings ne'er yet had tried the traitor's deed.

To Beowulf gave the bairn of Healfdene 1020
a gold-wove banner, guerdon of triumph,
brodered battle-flag, breastplate and helmet;
and a splendid sword was seen of many borne to the brave one. Beowulf took cup in hall: for such costly gifts 1025
he suffered no shame in that soldier throng.
For I heard of few heroes, in heartier mood,
with four such gifts, so fashioned with gold,
on the ale-bench honoring others thus!
O'er the roof of the helmet high, a ridge, 1030 wound with wires, kept ward o'er the head, lest the relict-of-files³ should fierce invade, sharp in the strife, when that shielded hero should go to grapple against his foes.
Then the earls'-defence⁴ on the floor bade lead 1035
coursers eight, with carven head-gear, adown the hall: one horse was decked with a saddle all shining and set in jewels;
'twas the battle-seat of the best of kings,
when to play of swords the son of Healfdene 1040 was fain to fare. Ne'er failed his valor in the crush of combat when corpses fell.
To Beowulf over them both then gave

¹ Unferth, Beowulf's opponent in the flying.

² Uncle and nephew.

³ Sword.

⁴ Hrothgar.

the refuge-of-Ingwines right and power, o'er war-steeds and weapons: wished him joy of
them. 1045

Manfully thus the mighty prince,
hoard-guard for heroes, that hard fight repaid with steeds and treasures contemned by none who is willing to say the sooth aright.

* * * * *

That was proudest of feasts;
flowed wine for the warriors. Wyrd they knew not destiny dire, and the doom to be seen by many an earl when eve should come, 1235 and Hrothgar homeward hasten away, royal, to rest. The room was guarded by an army of earls, as erst was done.
They bared the bench-boards; abroad they spread beds and bolsters.—One beer-carouser 1240 in danger of doom lay down in the hall.—
At their heads they set their shields of war, bucklers bright; on the bench were there over each atheling, easy to see,
the high battle-helmet, the haughty spear, 1245
the corselet of rings. 'Twas their custom so ever to be for battle prepared, at home, or harrying, which it were,
even as oft as evil threatened their sovran king.—They were clansmen good. 1250

XIX

Then sank they to sleep. With sorrow one bought his rest of the evening,—as oftime had happened when Grendel guarded that golden hall, evil wrought, till his end drew nigh, slaughter for sins. 'Twas seen and told 1255
how an avenger survived the fiend, as was learned afar. The livelong time after that grim fight, Grendel's mother, monster of women, mourned her woe.
She was doomed to dwell in the dreary waters, 1260 cold sea-courses, since Cain cut down with edge of the sword his only brother, his father's offspring: outlawed he fled,
marked with murder, from men's delights,
warded the wilds.—There woke from him 1265 such fate-sent ghosts as Grendel, who, war-wolf horrid, at Heorot found a warrior watching and waiting the fray,
with whom the grisly one grappled amain.
But the man remembered his mighty power, 1270
the glorious gift that God had sent him, in his Maker's mercy put his trust for comfort and help: so he conquered the foe, felled the fiend, who fled abject,
reft of joy, to the realms of death, 1275 mankind's foe. And his mother now, gloomy and grim, would go that quest of sorrow, the death of her son to avenge.
To Heorot came she, where helmeted Danes slept in the hall. Too soon came back 1280 old ills of the earls, when in she burst, the mother of Grendel. Less grim, though, that terror,
e'en as terror of woman in war is less,
might of maid, than of men in arms

when, hammer-forgéd, the falchion hard, 1285 sword gore-stained, through swine of the helm, crested, with keen blade carves amain.
Then was in hall the hard-edge drawn,
the swords on the settles,¹ and shields a-many firm held in hand: nor helmet minded 1290 nor harness of mail, whom that horror seized.

Haste was hers; she would hie afar
and save her life when the liegemen saw her.
Yet a single atheling up she seized fast and firm, as she fled to the moor. 1295
He was for Hrothgar of heroes the dearest, of trusty vassals betwixt the seas,
whom she killed on his couch, a clansman famous,
in battle brave.—Nor was Beowulf there;
another house had been held apart, 1300
after giving of gold, for the Geat renowned.— Uproar filled Heorot, the hand all had viewed, blood-flecked, she bore with her; bale was returned,
dole in the dwellings: 'twas dire exchange where Dane and Geat were doomed to give 1305
the lives of loved ones. Long-tried king, the hoary hero, at heart was sad
when he knew his noble no more lived, and dead indeed was his dearest thane.
To his bower was Beowulf brought in haste, 1310 dauntless victor. As daylight broke,
along with his earls the atheling lord,
with his clansmen, came, where the king abode waiting to see if the Wielder-of-All would turn this tale of trouble and woe. 1315 Strode o'er floor the famed-in-strife, with his hand-companions,—the hall resounded,— wishing to greet the wise old king, Ingwines' lord, he asked if the night had passed in peace to the prince's mind. 1320

XX

Hrothgar spake, helmet-of-Scyldings:—
"Ask not of pleasure! Pain is renewed to Danish folk. Dead is Æschere, of Yrmenlaf the elder brother,
my sage adviser and stay in council, 1325 shoulder-comrade in stress of fight when warriors clashed and we warded our heads, hewed the helm-boars: hero famed should be every earl as Æschere was!
But here in Heorot a hand hath slain him 1330 of wandering death-sprite. I wot not whither, proud of the prey, her path she took,
fain of her fill. The feud she avenged that yesternight, unyieldingly, Grendel in grimmost grasp thou killedst,— 1335 seeing how long these liegemen mine
he ruined and ravaged. Reft of life, in arms he fell. Now another comes,
keen and cruel, her kin to avenge, faring far in feud of blood: 1340
so that many a thane shall think, who e'er sorrows in soul for that sharer of rings, this is hardest of heart-bales. The hand lies low that once was willing each wish to please.
Land-dwellers here and liegemen mine, 1345 who house by those parts, I have heard relate

¹ They had laid their arms on the benches near where they slept.

that such a pair they have sometimes seen,
 march-stalkers mighty the moorland haunting, wandering spirits: one of them seemed, 1350
 so far as my folk could fairly judge,
 of womankind; and one, accursed,
 in man's guise trod the misery-track of exile, though huger than human bulk.
 Grendel in days long gone they named him,
 folk of the land; his father they knew not, 1355
 nor any brood that was born to him of treacherous spirits. Untrod is their home;
 by wolf-cliffs haunt they and windy headlands,
 fenways fearful, where flows the stream from mountains gliding to gloom of the rocks, 1360 underground flood. Not far is it hence in measure of miles that the mere expands, and o'er it the frost-bound forest hanging,
 sturdily rooted, shadows the wave.
 By night is a wonder weird to see, 1365 fire on the waters. So wise lived none of the sons of men, to search those depths!
 Nay, though the heath-rover, harried by dogs,
 the horn-proud hart, this holt should seek,
 long distance driven, his dear life first 1370
 on the brink he yields ere he brave the plunge to hide his head: 'tis no happy place!
 Thence the welter of waters washes up wan to welkin when winds bestir evil storms, and air grows dusk, 1375 and the heavens weep. Now is help once more with thee alone! The land thou knowst not, place of fear, where thou findest out that sin-flecked being. Seek if thou dare!
 I will reward thee, for waging this fight, 1380
 with ancient treasure, as erst I did,
 with winding gold, if thou winnest back."

XXI

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:
 "Sorrow not, sage! It beseems us better friends to avenge than fruitlessly mourn them. 1385
 Each of us all must his end abide in the ways of the world; so win who may glory ere death! When his days are told, that is the warrior's worthiest doom.
 Rise, O realm-warder! Ride we anon, 1390 and mark the trail of the mother of Grendel.
 No harbor shall hide her—heed my promise!—
 enfolding of field or forested mountain or floor of the flood, let her flee where she will!
 But thou this day endure in patience, 1395
 as I ween thou wilt, thy woes each one."
 Leaped up the graybeard: God he thanked,
 mighty Lord, for the man's brave words.
 For Hrothgar soon a horse was saddled, wave-maned steed. The sovran wise 1400 stately rode on; his shield-armed men followed in force. The footprints led along the woodland, widely seen, a path o'er the plain, where she passed, and trod
 the murky moor; of men-at-arms 1405
 she bore the bravest and best one, dead,
 him who with Hrothgar the homestead ruled.
 On then went the atheling-born o'er stone-cliffs steep and strait defiles, narrow passes and unknown ways, 1410

headlands sheer, and the haunts of the Nicors.
 Foremost he¹ fared, a few at his side of the wiser men, the ways to scan, till he found in a flash the forested hill hanging over the hoary rock, 1415
 a woful wood: the waves below were dyed in blood. The Danish men had sorrow of soul, and for Scyldings all,
 for many a hero, 'twas hard to bear,
 ill for earls, when Æschere's head 1420
 they found by the flood on the foreland there.
 Waves were welling, the warriors saw,
 hot with blood; but the horn sang oft battle-song bold. The band sat down, and watched on the water worm-like things, 1425 sea-dragons strange that sounded the deep,
 and nicors that lay on the ledge of the ness²—
 such as oft essay at hour of morn on the road-of-sails their ruthless quest,— and sea-snakes and monsters. These started away swollen and savage that song to hear, 1431 that war-horn's blast. The warden of Geats, with bolt from bow, then balked of life,
 of wave-work, one monster; amid its heart went the keen war-shaft; in water it seemed 1435 less doughty in swimming whom death had seized.
 Swift on the billows, with boar-spears well hooked and barbed, it was hard beset,
 done to death and dragged on the headland,
 wave-roamer wondrous. Warriors viewed 1440
 the grisly guest.

Then girt him Beowulf
 in martial mail, nor mourned for his life.
 His breastplate broad and bright of hues, woven by hand, should the waters try;
 well could it ward the warrior's body 1445 that battle should break on his breast in vain
 nor harm his heart by the hand of a foe.
 And the helmet white that his head protected was destined to dare the deeps of the flood, through wave-whirl win: 'twas wound with chains decked with gold, as in days of yore 1451
 the weapon-smith worked it wondrously, with swine-forms set it, that swords nowise,
 brandished in battle, could bite that helm.
 Nor was that the meanest of mighty helps 1455 which Hrothgar's orator³ offered at need:
 "Hrunting" they named the hilted sword,
 of old-time heirlooms easily first;
 iron was its edge, all etched with poison, with battle-blood hardened, nor blenched it at
 fight
 in hero's hand who held it ever, 1461 on paths of peril prepared to go to folkstead of foes. Not first time this it was destined to do a daring task.
 For he bore not in mind, the bairn of Ecglaf 1465 sturdy and strong, that speech he had made,
 drunk with wine, now this weapon he lent to a stouter swordsman. Himself, though, durst
 not under welter of waters wager his life as loyal liegeman. So lost he his glory, 1470 honor of earls. With the other not so, who girded him now for the grim encounter.

¹ Hrothgar is probably meant.² [Cliff.] ³ Unferth.

XXII

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—
 "Have mind, thou honored offspring of Healfdene gold-friend of men, now I go on this quest, 1475
 sovran wise, what once was said:
 if in thy cause it came that I should lose my life, thou wouldst loyal bide to me, though fallen, in father's place!
 Be guardian, thou, to this group of my thanes, 1480
 my warrior-friends, if War should seize me;
 and the goodly gifts thou gavest me,
 Hrothgar beloved, to Hygelac send!
 Geatland's king may ken by the gold,
 Hrethel's son see, when he stares at the treasure, that I got me a friend for goodness famed, 1486
 and joyed while I could in my jewel-bestower.
 And let Unferth wield this wondrous sword, earl far-honored, this heirloom precious, hard of edge with Hrunting I 1490 seek doom of glory, or Death shall take me."

After these words the Weder-Geat lord boldly hastened, biding never answer at all: and ocean floods closed o'er the hero. Long while of the day 1495 fled ere he felt the floor of the sea.
 Soon found the fiend who the flood-domain sword-hungry held these hundred winters, greedy and grim, that some guest from above,
 some man, was raiding her monster-realm. 1500
 She grasped out for him with grisly claws, and the warrior seized; yet scathed she not his body hale; the breastplate hindered,
 as she strove to shatter the sark of war,
 the linked harness with loathsome hand, 1505
 Then bore this brine-wolf, when bottom she touched,
 the lord of rings to the lair she haunted,
 whiles vainly he strove, though his valor held,
 weapon to wield against wondrous monsters that sore beset him; sea-beasts many 1510 tried with fierce tusks to tear his mail, and swarmed on the stranger. But soon he marked he was now in some hall, he knew not which,
 where water never could work him harm,
 nor through the roof could reach him ever 1515 fangs of the flood. Firelight he saw, beams of a blaze that brightly shone.
 Then the warrior was ware of that wolf-of-the-
 deep,
 mere-wife monstrous. For mighty stroke
 he swung his blade, and the blow withheld not. 1520
 Then sang on her head that seemly blade its war-song wild. But the warrior found the light-of-battle¹ was loath to bite, to harm the heart. its hard edge failed
 the noble at need, yet had known of old 1525 strife hand to hand, and had helmets cloven, doomed men's fighting-gear First time, this,
 for the gleaming blade that its glory fell.
 Firm still stood, nor failed in valor,
 heedful of high deeds, Hygelac's kinsman; 1530 flung away fretted sword, featly jewelled, the angry earl; on earth it lay steel-edged and stiff. His strength he trusted,

¹ Sword. Hrunting is bewitched, laid under a spell of uselessness, along with all other swords.

hand-gripe of might. So man shall do whenever in war he weens to earn him 1535 lasting fame, nor fears for his life!
 Seized then by shoulder, shrank not from combat,
 the Geatish war-prince Grendel's mother.
 Flung then the fierce one, filled with wrath,
 his deadly foe, that she fell to ground. 1540
 Swift on her part she paid him back with grisly grasp, and grappled with him.
 Spent with struggle, stumbled the warrior,
 fiercest of fighting-men, fell adown.
 On the hall-guest she hurled herself, hent her short
 sword, 1545
 broad and brown-edged, the bairn to avenge, the sole-born son.—On his shoulder lay braided breast-mail, barring death, withstanding entrance of edge or blade.
 Life would have ended for Ecgtheow's son, 1550
 under wide earth for that earl of Geats, had his armor of war not aided him, battle-net hard, and holy God
 wielded the victory, wisest Maker.
 The Lord of Heaven allowed his cause; 1555 and easily rose the earl erect.

XXIII

'Mid the battle-gear saw he a blade triumphant,
 old-sword of Eotens,² with edge of proof,
 warriors' heirloom, weapon unmatched,
 —save only 'twas more than other men 1560 to bandy-of-battle could bear at all—as the giants had wrought it, ready and keen.
 Seized then its chain-hilt the Scyldings' chieftain,
 bold and battle-grim, brandished the sword,
 reckless of life, and so wrathfully smote 1565 that it gripped her neck and grasped her hard,
 her bone-rings breaking: the blade pierced through that fated-one's flesh: to floor she sank.
 Bloody the blade: he was blithe of his deed.
 Then blazed forth light. 'Twas bright within 1570
 as when from the sky there shines unclouded heaven's candle. The hall he scanned.
 By the wall then went he; his weapon raised high by its hilts the Hygelac-thane, angry and eager. That edge was not useless 1575 to the warrior now. He wished with speed Grendel to guerdon for grim raids many,
 for the war he waged on Western-Danes oftener far than an only time, when of Hrothgar's hearth-companions 1580
 he slew in slumber, in sleep devoured, fifteen men of the folk of Danes,
 and as many others outward bore, his horrible prey. Well paid for that the wrathful prince! For now prone he saw 1585 Grendel stretched there, spent with war, spoiled of life, so scathed had left him Heorot's battle. The body sprang far when after death it endured the blow, sword-stroke savage, that severed its head. 1590
 Soon,³ then, saw the sage companions who waited with Hrothgar, watching the flood,
 that the tossing waters turbid grew,
 blood-stained the mere. Old men together, hoary-haired, of the hero spake; 1595

² [Giants.]

³ After the killing of the monster and Grendel's decapitation.

the warrior would not, they weened, again, proud of conquest, come to seek their mighty master. To many it seemed the wolf-of-the-waves had won his life.
The ninth hour came. The noble Scyldings 1600 left the headland; homeward went the gold-friend of men.¹ But the guests sat on, stared at the surges, sick in heart,
and wished, yet weened not, their winsome lord
again to see.

Now that sword began, 1605
from blood of the fight, in battle-droppings,² war-blade, to wane: 'twas a wondrous thing that all of it melted as ice is wont
when frosty fetters the Father loosens, unwinds the wave-bonds, wielding all 1610 seasons and times: the true God he!

Nor took from that dwelling the duke of the Geats

precious things, though a plenty he saw, save only the head and that hilt withal blazoned with jewels: the blade had melted, 1615 burned was the bright sword, her blood was so hot, so poisoned the hell-sprite who perished within
there.

Soon he was swimming who safe saw in combat downfall of demons; up-dove through the flood.
The clashing waters were cleansed now, 1620 waste of waves, where the wandering fiend her life-days left and this lapsing world.
Swam then to strand the sailors' refuge, sturdy-in-spirit, of sea-booty glad,
of burden brave he bore with him. 1625 Went then to greet him, and God they thanked,
the thane-band choice of their chieftain blithe,
that safe and sound they could see him again.
Soon from the hardy one helmet and armor deftly they doffed: now drowsed the mere, 1630 water 'neath welkin, with war-blood stained.

Forth they fared by the footpaths thence,
merry at heart the highways measured,
well-known roads. Courageous men carried the head from the cliff by the sea, 1635 an arduous task for all the band,
the firm in fight, since four were needed on the shaft-of-slaughter³ strenuously to bear to the gold-hall Grendel's head.
So presently to the palace there 1640
foemen fearless, fourteen Geats, marching came. Their master-of-clan mighty amid them the meadow-ways trod.
Strode then within the sovran thane fearless in fight, of fame renowned, 1645 hardy hero, Hrothgar to greet.
And next by the hair into hall was borne Grendel's head, where the henchmen were drinking,
an awe to clan and queen alike,
a monster of marvel: the men looked on. 1650

* * * * *

The wise-one spake,
son of Healfdene; silent were all:—
"Lo, so may he say who sooth and right 1700 follows 'mid folk, of far times mindful,
a land-warden old, that this earl belongs

¹ Hrothgar.

² The blade slowly dissolves in blood-stained drops like icicles.

³ Spear.

to the better breed! So, borne aloft,
thy fame must fly, O friend my Beowulf, far and wide o'er folksteads many. Firmly thou shalt all maintain, 1705 mighty strength with mood of wisdom. Love of mine will I assure thee,
as, awhile ago, I promised; thou shalt prove a stay in future,
in far-off years, to folk of thine,
to the heroes a help. * * * * *

—Go to the bench now! Be glad at banquet, warrior worthy! A wealth of treasure at dawn of day, be dealt between us!"
Glad was the Geats' lord, going betimes 1785
to seek his seat, as the Sage commanded.
Afresh, as before, for the famed-in-battle, for the band of the hall, was a banquet dight nobly anew. The Night-Helm darkened dusk o'er the drinkers.

The doughty ones rose: 1790
for the hoary-headed would hasten to rest, aged Scylding; and eager the Geat,
shield-fighter sturdy, for sleeping yearned.
Him wander-weary, warrior-guest from far, a hall-thane heralded forth, 1795 who by custom courtly cared for all needs of a thane as in those old days warrior-wanderers wont to have.

So slumbered the stout-heart. Stately the hall rose gabled and gilt where the guest slept on 1800 till a raven black the rapture-of-heaven⁴ blithe-heart boded. Bright came flying shine after shadow. The swordsmen hastened, athelings all were eager homeward forth to fare; and far from thence 1805
the great-hearted guest would guide his keel.

Bade then the hardy-one Hrunting be brought to the son of Ecglaf, the sword bade him take, excellent iron, and uttered his thanks for it,
quoth that he counted it keen in battle, 1810
"war-friend" winsome: with words he slandered not edge of the blade: 'twas a big-hearted man!
Now eager for parting and armed at point warriors waited, while went to his host that Darling of Danes. The doughty atheling 1815 to high-seat hastened and Hrothgar greeted.

XXVI

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—
"Lo, we seafarers say our will, far-come men, that we fain would seek Hygelac now. We here have found 1820 hosts to our heart: thou hast harbored us well.
If ever on earth I am able to win me more of thy love, O lord of men, aught anew, than I now have done,
for work of war I am willing still! 1825
If it come to me ever across the seas that neighbor foemen annoy and fright thee,— as they that hate thee erewhile have used,— thousands then of thanes I shall bring, heroes to help thee." * * * 1830

To him in the hall, then, Healfdene's son gave treasures twelve, and the trust-of-earls

⁴ The sun.—This is a strange rôle for the raven. He is the warrior's bird of battle, exults in slaughter and carnage;
his joy here is a compliment to the sunrise.

bade him fare with the gifts to his folk beloved,
hale to his home, and in haste return.
Then kissed the king of kin renowned, 1870
Scyldings' chieftain, that choicest thane, and fell on his neck. Fast flowed the tears of the hoary-headed. Heavy with winters, he had chances twain, but he clung to this,¹ that each should look on the other again, 1875 and hear him in hall. Was this hero so dear to him, his breast's wild billows he banned in vain;
safe in his soul a secret longing, locked in his mind, for that loved man burned in his blood. Then Beowulf strode, 1880 glad of his gold-gifts, the grass-plot o'er, warrior blithe. The wave-roamer bode riding at anchor, its owner awaiting.
As they hastened onward, Hrothgar's gift
they lauded at length.—'Twas a lord unpeered, 1885
every way blameless, till age had broken
—it spareth no mortal—his splendid might.

XXVII

Came now to ocean the ever-courageous hardy henchmen, their harness bearing, woven war-sarks. The warden marked, 1890 trusty as ever, the earl's return.
From the height of the hill no hostile words reached the guests as he rode to greet them;
but "Welcome!" he called to that Weder clan
as the sheen-mailed spoilers to ship marched on.
Then on the strand, with steeds and treasure 1896 and armor their roomy and ring-dight ship was heavily laden: high its mast
rose over Hrothgar's hoarded gems.
A sword to the boat-guard Beowulf gave, 1900 mounted with gold; on the mead-bench since he was better esteemed, that blade possessing, heirloom old.—Their ocean-keel boarding,
they drove through the deep, and Daneland left.
A sea-cloth was set, a sail with ropes, 1905 firm to the mast; the flood-timbers moaned;
nor did wind over billows that wave-swimmer blow across from her course. The craft sped on, foam-necked it floated forth o'er the waves,
keel firm-bound over briny currents, 1910
till they got them sight of the Geatish cliffs, home-known headlands. High the boat, stirred by winds, on the strand updrove.
Helpful at haven the harbor-guard stood,
who long already for loved companions 1915
by the water had waited and watched afar.
He bound to the beach the broad-bosomed ship with anchor-bands, lest ocean-billows that trusty timber should tear away.
Then Beowulf bade them bear the treasure, 1920 gold and jewels; no journey far was it thence to go to the giver of rings, Hygelac Hrethling: at home he dwelt by the sea-wall close, himself and clan.

* * * * *

XXVIII

Hastened the hardy one, henchmen with him, sandy strand of the sea to tread

¹ That is, he might or might not see Beowulf again. Old as he was, the latter chance was likely; but he clung to the former, hoping to see his young friend again "and exchange brave words in the hall."

and widespread ways. The world's great candle, sun shone from south. They strode along 1966 with sturdy steps to the spot they knew where the battle-king young, his burg within,
slayer of Ongentheow, shared the rings, shelter-of-heroes. To Hygelac 1970 Beowulf's coming was quickly told,— that there in the court the clansmen's refuge,
the shield-companion sound and alive,
hale from the hero-play homeward strode.
With haste in the hall, by highest order, 1975
room for the rovers was readily made.
By his sovran he sat, come safe from battle, kinsman by kinsman. His kindly lord
he first had greeted in gracious form, with manly words. The mead dispensing, 1980 came through the high hall Hæreth's daughter, winsome to warriors, wine-cup bore to the hands of the heroes. Hygelac then his comrade fairly with question plied in the lofty hall, sore longing to know 1985
what manner of sojourn the Sea-Geats made.
"What came of thy quest, my kinsman Beowulf, when thy yearnings suddenly swept thee yonder battle to seek o'er the briny sea, combat in Heorot? Hrothgar couldst thou 1990 aid at all, the honored chief, in his wide-known woes? With waves of care my sad heart seethed, I sore mistrusted my loved one's venture: long I begged thee by no means to seek that slaughtering monster, 1995
but suffer the South-Danes to settle their feud themselves with Grendel. Now God be thanked that safe and sound I can see thee now!"

XXXI

* * * * *

Now further it fell with the flight of years, 2200
with harryings horrid, that Hygelac perished, and Heardred, too, by hewing of swords
under the shield-wall slaughtered lay, when him at the van of his victor-folk sought hardy heroes, Heatho-Scilfings, 2205
in arms o'erwhelming Hereric's nephew.
Then Beowulf came as king this broad realm to wield; and he ruled it well fifty winters,² a wise old prince, warding his land, until One began 2210
in the dark of night, a Dragon, to rage.
In the grave on the hill a hoard it guarded,
in the stone-barrow steep. A strait path reached it, unknown to mortals. Some man, however, came by chance that cave within 2215 to the heathen hoard.³ In hand he took a golden goblet, nor gave he it back, stole with it away, while the watcher slept,
by thievish wiles: for the warden's wrath prince and people must pay betimes! 2220

XXXII

* * * * *

When the dragon awoke, new woe was kindled.
O'er the stone he snuffed. The stark-heart found

² The chronology of the epic, as scholars have worked it out, would make Beowulf well over ninety years of age when he fights the dragon. But the fifty years of his reign need not be taken as historical fact.

³ The text is here hopelessly illegible, and only the general drift of the meaning can be rescued, footprint of foe who so far had gone in his hidden craft by the creature's head.— 2290

So may the undoomed easily flee evils and exile, if only he gain the grace of The Wielder!—That warden of gold o'er the ground went seeking, greedy to find the man who wrought him such wrong in sleep. 2295 Savage and burning, the barrow he circled all without; nor was any there, none in the waste. . . . Yet war he desired, was eager for battle. The barrow he entered, sought the cup, and discovered soon 2300
that some one of mortals had searched his treasure, his lordly gold. The guardian waited ill-enduring till evening came;
boiling with wrath was the barrow's keeper,
and fain with flame the foe to pay 2305
for the dear cup's loss.—Now day was fled as the worm had wished. By its wall no more was it glad to bide, but burning flew folded in flame: a fearful beginning for sons of the soil; and soon it came, 2310 in the doom of their lord, to a dreadful end.

XXXIII

Then the baleful fiend its fire belched out, and bright homes burned. The blaze stood high all landsfolk frightening. No living thing would that loathly one leave as aloft it flew. 2315 Wide was the dragon's warring seen, its fiendish fury far and near,
as the grim destroyer those Geatish people hated and hounded. To hidden lair, to its hoard it hastened at hint of dawn. 2320
Folk of the land it had lapped in flame, with bale and brand. In its barrow it trusted, its battling and bulwarks: that boast was vain!

To Beowulf then the bale was told quickly and truly: the king's own home, 2325 of buildings the best, in brand-waves melted, that gift-throne of Geats. To the good old man sad in heart, 'twas heaviest sorrow.
The sage assumed that his sovran God
he had angered, breaking ancient law, 2330 and embittered the Lord. His breast within with black thoughts welled, as his wont was never.
The folk's own fastness that fiery dragon with flame had destroyed, and the stronghold all washed by waves; but the warlike king, 2335
prince of the Weders, plotted vengeance.
Warriors'-bulwark, he bade them work
all of iron—the earl's commander—a war-shield wondrous: well he knew that forest-wood against fire were worthless, 2340 linden could aid not.—Atheing brave,
he was fated to finish this fleeting life,
his days on earth, and the dragon with him, though long it had watched o'er the wealth of the hoard!—
Shame he reckoned it, sharer-of-rings, 2345 to follow the flyer-afar with a host,
a broad-flung band; nor the battle feared he,
nor deemed he dreadful the dragon's warring,
its vigor and valor: ventures desperate he had passed a-plenty, and perils of war, 2350 contest-crash, since, conqueror proud, Hrothgar's hall he had wholly purged,

and in grapple had killed the kin of Grendel, loathsome breed.

* * * * *

With comrades eleven the lord of Geats swollen in rage went seeking the dragon.
He had heard whence all the harm arose and the killing of clansmen; that cup of price on the lap of the lord had been laid by the finder.
In the throng was this one thirteenth man, 2400 starter of all the strife and ill, care-laden captive; cringing thence forced and reluctant, he led them on till he came in ken of that cavern-hall, 2410
the barrow delved near billowy surges, flood of ocean. Within 'twas full of wire-gold and jewels; a jealous warden, warrior trusty, the treasures held, lurked in his lair. Not light the task 2415 of entrance for any of earth-born men!

Sat on the headland the hero king,
spake words of hail to his hearth-companions,
gold-friend of Geats. All gloomy his soul, wavering, death-bound. Wyrd full nigh 2420 stood ready to greet the gray-haired man, to seize his soul-hoard, sunder apart life and body. Not long would be the warrior's spirit enwound with flesh.

* * * * *

Beowulf spake, and a battle-vow made, 2510 his last of all: "I have lived through many wars in my youth; now once again, old folk-defender, feud will I seek,
do doughty deeds, if the dark destroyer forth from his cavern come to fight me!" 2515
Then hailed he the helmeted heroes all,
for the last time greeting his liegemen dear,
comrades of war: "I should carry no weapon,
no sword to the serpent, if sure I knew how, with such enemy, else my vows 2520
I could gain as I did in Grendel's day.
But fire in this fight I must fear me now,
and poisonous breath; so I bring with me
breastplate and board.¹ From the barrow's keeper no footbreadth flee I. One fight shall end 2525 our war by the wall, as Wyrd allots, all mankind's master. My mood is bold but forbears to boast o'er this battling-flyer.
—Now abide by the barrow, ye breastplate-mailed.
ye heroes in harness, which of us twain 2530
better from battle-rush bear his wounds.
Wait ye the finish. The fight is not yours, nor meet for any but me alone to measure might with this monster here and play the hero. Hardily I 2535 shall win that wealth, or war shall seize, cruel killing, your king and lord!"

Up stood then with shield the sturdy champion stayed by the strength of his single manhood, and hardy 'neath helmet his harness bore 2540
under cleft of the cliffs: no coward's path!
Soon spied by the wall that warrior chief,
survivor of many a victory-field
where foemen fought with furious clashings, an arch of stone; and within, a stream 2545 that broke from the barrow. The brooklet's wave was hot with fire. The hoard that way

¹ Shield.

he never could hope unharmed to near,
 or endure those deeps,¹ for the dragon's flame.
 Then let from his breast, for he burst with rage, 2550
 the Weder-Geat prince a word outgo;
 stormed the stark-heart; stern went ringing and clear his cry 'neath the cliff-rocks gray.
 The hoard-guard heard a human voice,
 his rage was enkindled. No respite now 2555 for pact of peace! The poison-breath of that foul worm first came forth from the cave,
 hot reek-of-fight: the rocks resounded.
 Stout by the stone-way his shield he raised,
 lord of the Geats, against the loathed-one; 2560
 while with courage keen that coiled foe came seeking strife. The sturdy king had drawn his sword, not dull of edge, heirloom old; and each of the two felt fear of his foe, though fierce their mood. 2565 Stoutly stood with his shield high-raised the warrior king, as the worm now coiled together amain: the mailed-one waited.
 Now, spire by spire, fast sped and glided that blazing serpent. The shield protected 2570 soul and body a shorter while for the hero-king than his heart desired, could his will have wielded the welcome respite but once in his life! But Wyrd denied it, and victory's honors.—His arm he lifted, 2575
 lord of the Geats, the grim foe smote with atheling's heirloom. Its edge was turned, brown blade, on the bone, and bit more feebly than its noble master had need of then in his baleful stress.—Then the barrow's keeper waxed full wild for that weighty blow, 2581 cast deadly flames; wide drove and far those vicious fires. No victor's glory
 the Geats' lord boasted; his brand had failed, naked in battle, as never it should, 2585
 excellent iron!—"I was no easy path that Ecgtheow's honored heir must tread over the plain to the place of the foe;
 for against his will he must win a home elsewhere far, as must all men leaving 2590 this lapsing life!—Not long it was ere those champions grimly closed again.
 The hoard-guard was heartened; high heaved his
 breast
 once more; and by peril was pressed again, enfolded in flames, the folk-commander! 2595
 Nor yet about him his band of comrades, sons of athelings, armed stood with warlike front: to the woods they bent them, their lives to save. But the soul of one with care was cumbered. Kinship true 2600 can never be marred in a noble mind!

XXXVI

Wiglaf his name was, Weohstan's son,
 linden-thane loved, the lord of Scylfings, Ælfhere's kinsman. His king he now saw with heat under helmet hard oppressed. 2605
 He minded the prizes his prince had given him, wealthy seat of the Wægmunding line,
 and folk-rights that his father owned.
 Not long he lingered. The linden yellow, his shield, he seized; the old sword he drew: 2610

¹ The hollow passage.

* * * * *

Wiglaf spake,—and his words were sage;
 sad in spirit, he said to his comrades:—
 "I remember the time, when mead we took, what promise we made to this prince of ours
 in the banquet-hall, to our breaker-of-rings, 2635 for gear of combat to give him requital, for hard-sword and helmet, if hap should bring stress of this sort! Himself who chose us from all his army to aid him now, urged us to glory, and gave these treasures, 2640 because he counted us keen with the spear and hardy 'neath helm, though this hero-work our leader hoped unhelped and alone to finish for us,—folk-defender who hath got him glory greater than all men 2645 for daring deeds! Now the day is come that our noble master has need of the might of warriors stout. Let us stride along the hero to help while the heat is about him glowing and grim! For God is my witness 2650
 I am far more fain the fire should seize along with my lord these limbs of mine!
 Unsuiting it seems our shields to bear homeward hence, save here we essay to fell the foe and defend the life 2655 of the Weders' lord. I wot 'twere shame on the law of our land if alone the king out of Geatish warriors woe endured and sank in the struggle! My sword and helmet, breastplate and board, for us both shall serve!"
 Through slaughter-reek strode he to succor his chieftain, 2661
 his battle-helm bore, and brief words spake:—
 "Beowulf dearest, do all bravely, as in youthful days of yore thou vowedst that while life should last thou wouldst let no wise thy glory droop! Now, great in deeds, 2666
 atheling steadfast, with all thy strength shield thy life! I will stand to help thee."
 At the words the worm came once again, murderous monster mad with rage, 2670 with fire-billows flaming, its foes to seek, the hated men. In heat-waves burned that board² to the boss, and the breastplate failed to shelter at all the spear-thane young.
 Yet quickly under his kinsman's shield 2675 went eager the earl, since his own was now all burned by the blaze. The bold king again had mind of his glory: with might his glaive was driven into the dragon's head,— blow nerved by hate. But Nægling was shivered, broken in battle was Beowulf's sword, 2681 old and gray. 'Twas granted him not that ever the edge of iron at all could help him at strife: too strong was his hand, so the tale is told, and he tried too far 2685
 with strength of stroke all swords he wielded, though sturdy their steel: they steeled him nought.
 Then for the third time thought on its feud that folk-destroyer, fire-dread dragon, and rushed on the hero, where room allowed, 2690 battle-grim, burning; its bitter teeth closed on his neck, and covered him with waves of blood from his breast that welled.

² Wiglaf's wooden shield.

XXXVII

"Twas now, men say, in his sovran's need that the earl made known his noble strain, 2695
 craft and keenness and courage enduring.
 Heedless of harm, though his hand was burned,
 hardy-hearted, he helped his kinsman.
 A little lower the loathsome beast
 he smote with sword, his steel drove in 2700 bright and burnished, that blaze began to lose and lessen. At last the king wielded his wits again, war-knife drew,
 a biting blade by his breastplate hanging,
 and the Weders'-helm smote that worm asunder,
 felled the foe, flung forth its life. 2706
 So had they killed it, kinsmen both, athelings twain: thus an earl should be in danger's day!—Of deeds of valor this conqueror's-hour of the king was last, 2710 of his work in the world. The wound began, which that dragon-of-earth had erst inflicted,
 to swell and smart; and soon he found in his breast was boiling, baleful and deep, pain of poison. The prince walked on, 2715 wise in his thought, to the wall of rock;
 then sat, and stared at the structure of giants,
 where arch of stone and steadfast column upheld forever that hall in earth.
 Yet here must the hand of the henchman peerless lave with water his winsome lord, 2721
 the king and conqueror covered with blood,
 with struggle spent, and unspan his helmet.
 Beowulf spake in spite of his hurt,
 his mortal wound; full well he knew 2725 his portion now was past and gone of earthly bliss, and all had fled of his file of days, and death was near:
 "I would fain bestow on son of mine
 this gear of war, were given me now 2730
 that any heir should after me come of my proper blood. This people I ruled fifty winters. No folk-king was there, none at all, of the neighboring clans who war would wage me with 'warriors'-friends' 1 and threat me with horrors. At home I bided 2736 what fate might come, and I cared for mine own;
 feuds I sought not, nor falsely swore ever on oath. For all these things, though fatally wounded, fain am I! 2740
 From the Ruler-of-Man no wrath shall seize me, when life from my frame must flee away,
 for killing of kinsmen! Now quickly go and gaze on that hoard 'neath the hoary rock, Wiglaf loved, now the worm lies low, 2745
 sleeps, heart-sore, of his spoil bereaved.
 And fare in haste. I would fain behold
 the gorgeous heirlooms, golden store, have joy in the jewels and gems, lay down softlier for sight of this splendid hoard 2750
 my life and the lordship I long have held."

XXXVIII

* * * * *
 Then, I heard, the hill of its hoard was reft,
 old work of giants, by one alone;
 he burdened his bosom with beakers and plate 2775
 at his own good will, and the ensign took,

¹ That is, swords

brightest of beacons.—The blade of his lord
 —its edge was iron—had injured deep one that guarded the golden hoard many a year and its murder-fire 2780 spread hot round the barrow in horror-billows at midnight hour, till it met its doom.
 Hasted the herald, the hoard so spurred him his track to retrace, he was troubled by doubt, high-souled hero, if haply he'd find 2785 alive, where he left him, the lord of Weders, weakening fast by the wall of the cave
 So he carried the load. His lord and king he found all bleeding, famous chief, at the lapse of life. The liegeman again 2790 plashed him with water, till point of word broke through the breast-hoard. Beowulf spake, sage and sad, as he stared at the gold:—
 "For the gold and treasure, to God my thanks, to the Wielder-of-Wonders, with words I say, 2795
 for what I behold, to Heaven's Lord, for the grace that I give such gifts to my folk or ever the day of my death be run!
 Now I've bartered here for booty of treasure
 the last of my life, so look ye well 2800 to the needs of my land! No longer I tarry.
 A barrow bid ye the battle-famed raise for my ashes 'Twill shine by the shore of the flood to folk of mine memorial fair on Hrones Headland high uplifted, 2805 that ocean-wanderers oft may hail Beowulf's Barrow, as back from far they drive their keels o'er the darkling wave."
 From his neck he unclasped the collar of gold, valourous king, to his vassal gave it 2810
 with bright-gold helmet, breastplate, and ring,
 to the youthful thane: bade him use them in joy.
 "Thou art end and remnant of all our race,
 the Wægmunding name. For Wyrð hath swept
 them,
 all my line, to the land of doom, 2815
 earls in their glory: I after them go."
 This word was the last which the wise old man harbored in heart ere hot death-waves of balefire he chose From his bosom fled his soul to seek the saints' reward. 2820
 * * * * *

XLIII

Then fashioned for him the folk of Geats firm on the earth a funeral-pile, and hung it with helmets and harness of war and breastplates bright, as the boon he asked; 3140 and they laid anud it the mighty chieftain, heroes mourning their master dear.
 Then on the hill that hugest of balefires the warriors wakened. Wood-smoke rose black over blaze, and blent was the roar 3145 of flame with weeping (the wind was still),
 till the fire had broken the frames of bones,
 hot at the heart. In heavy mood their misery moaned they, their master's death.
 Wailing her woe, the widow old, 3150
 her hair upbound, for Beowulf's death sung in her sorrow, and said full oft she dreaded the doleful days to come,
 deaths enow, and doom of battle,
 and shame.—The smoke by the sky was devoured.

The folk of the Weders fashioned there 3156 on the headland a barrow broad and high,
by ocean-farers far descried.
in ten days' time their toil had raised it,
the battle-brave's beacon. Round brands of the pyre 3160
a wall they built, the worthiest ever that wit could prompt in their wisest men.
They placed in the barrow that precious booty,
the rounds and the rings they had reft erewhile,
hardy heroes, from hoard in cave, 3165
trusting the ground with treasure of earls, gold in the earth, where ever it lies useless to men as of yore it was.
Then about that barrow the battle-keen rode,
atheling-born, a band of twelve, 3170
lament to make, to mourn their king, chant their dirge, and their chieftain honor.
They praised his earlship, his acts of prowess worthily witnessed: and well it is that men their master-friend mightily laud, 3175 heartily love, when hence he goes from life in the body forlorn away.

Thus made their mourning the men of Geatland,
for their hero's passing his hearth-companions:
quoth that of all the kings of earth, 3180
of men he was mildest and most beloved,
to his kin the kindest, keenest for praise.

DEOR'S LAMENT

I

Wayland learned bitterly banishment's ways,
earl right resolute; ill endured;
had for comrades Care and Longing, winter-cold wanderings; woe oft suffered when Nithhad forged the fetters on him, 5 bending bonds on a better man.

That he surmounted: so this may I!

II

Beaduhild mourned her brother's death less sore in soul than herself dismayed when her plight was plainly placed before her,— 10 birth of a bairn. No brave resolve might she ever make, what the end should be.

That she surmounted: so this may I!

III

We have heard from many of Hild's disgrace, how heroes of Geat were homeless made 15
till sorrow stole their sleep away.

That they surmounted: so this may I!

IV

Theodric waited for thirty winters
in Merings' burg: to many 'twas known.

That he surmounted: so this may I! 20

V

We have often heard of Eormanric, his wolfish mind; wide was his rule o'er realm of Goths: a grim king he!
Sat many a subject sorrow-bound,
waiting but woe, and wished full sore 25
that the time of the king might come to end.

That they surmounted: so this may I!

VI

—Sitteth one¹ sorrowful, severed from joys;
all's dark in his soul; he deems for him endless ever the anguish-time! 30
Yet let him think that through this world
the wise God all awards with difference, on many an earl great honor lays,
wealth at will, but woe on others.
—To say of myself the story now, 35
I was singer erewhile to sons-of-Heoden,
dear to my master, Deor my name.
Long were the winters my lord was kind;
I was happy with clansmen; till Heorrenda now by grace of his lays has gained the land 40 which the haven-of-heroes² erewhile gave me.
That he³ surmounted: so this may I!

From the ANGLO-SAXON TRANSLATION OF BEDE'S ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY

[Bede finished his Latin history in 731. The Anglo-Saxon translation, ascribed in MSS. and by tradition to King Alfred, has been edited for the E. E. T. S. by Thos. Miller (Vol. 95, 1898), whose modern English rendering is here reproduced.]

THE PARABLE OF THE SWALLOW

When the King heard these words, he answered and said that it was both his desire and duty to receive the faith which the bishop taught. Yet he said he would speak and take counsel with his friends and counsellors, and if they agreed with him all together would be consecrated to Christ in the fount of life. Then did the King as he said and the bishop assented. Then he conferred and took counsel with his advisers, and asked all of them separately their opinion about this new [10 doctrine and worship of the Deity which was taught therein. Then his chief bishop, called Caen, answered: "Consider for your part, O king, what this doctrine is, that is now preached to us. I truly confess to you what I have learnt for certain, that the religion we have held and maintained hitherto is absolutely without use or excellence. For none of your followers devoted himself more closely or cheerfully to the worship of our gods than I did; but nevertheless many have re- [20 ceived more gifts and promotion from you than I, and in all things have prospered more. Well, I am sure if our gods had any power they would help me more, for I more zealously served and obeyed them. Therefore if you consider the religion to be fairer and stronger which is newly preached to us, it seems wise to me that we should receive it."

Another of the King's counsellors, one of his chief men, assented to his words, and taking [30 up the discussion, thus spoke: "O king, the present life of man on earth, in comparison with the time unknown to us, seems to me as if you sat at

¹ That is, any person who has lost his situation and has fallen on evil times. If the strict dramatic-lyric scheme be assumed, this could pass as interpolation.

² The king

³ Who? Is the refrain here a kind of echo? Is this Deor who surmounted his troubles, as also may the hearer or reader who repeats the poem? Was the whole a general poem of consolation?

table with your chief men and followers in winter time, and a fire was kindled and your hall warmed, while it rained, snowed, and stormed without; and there came a swallow and swiftly flew through the house, entering at one door and passing out through the other. Now as long as he is inside he is not pelted with the winter's storm; but [40 that is the twinkling of an eye and a moment of time, and at once he passes back from winter into winter. So then this life of man appears for but a little while; what goes before, or what comes after, we know not. So, if this new doctrine reports anything more certain or apt, it deserves to be followed."

The other elders and the King's counsellors expressed themselves in similar terms. (Book ii, ch. 10.) [50

THE POET CAEDMON

In the monastery of this abbess there was a brother specially remarkable and distinguished by the divine grace. For he was wont to compose suitable songs tending to religion and piety, so that whatever he had learnt through scholars of the divine writings he presently embellished in poetic compositions of the greatest sweetness and fervor, well expressed in the English language. And by his songs many men's minds were often fired to disregard the world and attach them- [10 selves to the heavenly life. And also many others after him in England began to compose pious songs; none, however, could do that like him. For he had not been taught of men or through man to acquire the art of song, but he had divine aid and received the art of song through God's grace. And for this reason he never could compose anything frivolous, nor any idle poetry, but just that only which tended to piety, and which it became his pious tongue to sing. [20

The man had lived in the world till the time that he was of advanced age, and never had learnt any poetry. And as he was often at a beer-drinking when it was arranged, to promote mirth, that they should all in turn sing to the harp, whenever he saw the harp come near him he arose out of shame from the feast and went home to his house. Having done so on one occasion, he left the house of entertainment and went out to the fold of the cattle, the charge of which had [30 been committed to him for that night. When in due time he stretched his limbs on the bed there and fell asleep, there stood by him in a dream a man who saluted and greeted him, calling on him by name: "Caedmon, sing me something." Then he answered and said: "I cannot sing anything, and therefore I came out from this entertainment and retired here, as I know not how to sing." Again he who spoke to him said: "Yet you could sing." Then said he: "What shall I sing?" [40 He said: "Sing to me the beginning of all things."

On receiving this answer, he at once began to sing in praise of the Creator verses and words which he had never heard, the order of which is as follows: "Now should we praise the guardian of the heavenly kingdom, the power of the Creator and the counsel of his mind, the works of the Father of glory, how he, the eternal Lord, originated every marvel. He the holy Creator first created the heaven as a roof for the chil- [50 dren of the earth; then the eternal Lord, guardian of the human race, the almighty ruler, afterwards fashioned the world as a soil for men."

Then he arose from his sleep, and he had firmly in his memory all that he sang while asleep. And to the words he soon added on many others in the same style of song worthy of God. Then he came in the morning to the steward of the manor, who was his superior, and told him what gift he had received; and he at once brought him to [60 the abbess and made the matter known to her. Then she ordered all the best scholars and the students to be assembled, and in their presence bade him relate the dream and sing the song, that by the judgment of all it might be determined what or whence this gift was. Then it seemed to all, as indeed it was, that a heavenly grace had been vouchsafed him by the Lord himself. Then they set forth and stated to him a holy narrative and some word of divine doctrine, and directed [70 him, if he could, to turn it into the harmony of verse. Having undertaken the task, he went home to his house, and returning in the morning, recited and presented to them what had been delivered to him composed in excellent verse.

Then the abbess began to welcome and find a pleasure in God's grace in the man, and she admonished and enjoined him to leave the world and become a monk, and he readily assented. And she admitted him with his property into [80 the monastery, and attached him to the congregation of God's servants, and she directed that he should be taught the whole round of sacred history and narrative. And he retained in his memory whatever he learnt by hearing; and like a clean animal, he ruminated and converted all into the sweetest music. And his song and his music were so delightful to hear that even his teachers wrote down the words from his lips and learnt them. He sang first of the earth's crea- [90 tion and the beginning of man and all the story of Genesis, which is the first book of Moses; and afterwards about the departure of the people of Israel from the land of Egypt and their entry into the land of promise; and about many other narratives in the books of the canon of Scripture, and about Christ's incarnation, and about his passion, and about his ascension into heaven; and about the coming of the Holy Ghost, and the teaching of the apostles, and again about the [100 day of judgment to come, and about the terror of hell torment, and about the sweetness of the kingdom of heaven, he composed many a song. And he also composed many others about the divine blessings and judgments. In all these he earnestly strove to draw men from the love of sin and transgression, and to rouse them to love and zeal for good deeds. For the man was very pious and humbly submissive to regular discipline. And towards those who would act otherwise, he [110 was inflamed with a zeal of great fervor. And he accordingly concluded and ended his life by a fair close.

For when it grew near the time of his departure and decease, fourteen days previously he was oppressed and afflicted with bodily infirmity, yet to such a moderate extent that he could all the time speak and move about. There was there close at hand a house for the sick, into which it was their custom to bring those who were more [120] infirm and those who were at the point of death, and tend them there together. Then he directed his attendant on the evening of the night on which he was to depart from the world to prepare a place for him in the house, that he might rest. Then the attendant wondered why he asked for this, for it seemed to him his death was not so near; however he did as he said and directed. And when he went to bed there, and cheerfully spoke and jested along with those in the house, [130] then after midnight he asked them whether they had the Eucharist in the house. Then they answered and said: "What need have you of the Eucharist? It is not so near your death, seeing that you are speaking so cheerfully and brightly to us." He repeated, "Bring me the Eucharist." When he had it in his hand, he asked whether they all felt peaceably and cheerfully disposed towards him, without any rancor. Then all answered and said they had no rancorous feeling [140] towards him, but all were most friendly disposed to him; and they in turn prayed him to feel kindly to them. Then he answered and said: "Dear brethren, I feel very friendly towards you and all God's servants." And so he fortified himself with the heavenly viaticum, and prepared his entry into another life. Then once more he asked how near it was to the hour that the brothers should get up, and raise the song of praise to God and chant lauds. Then they answered: "It is [150] not far to that." He said, "Good; let us indeed await the hour." And he prayed and signed himself with the token of God's cross, and laid down his head on the pillow and fell asleep for a while, and so in quiet ended his life. And so it came to pass, that as with pure and simple heart and with tranquil devotion he served the Lord, so he also by a tranquil death left the earth, and appeared before God's face. And the tongue which composed so many saving words in praise of the [160] Creator concluded its last words to his glory, as he crossed himself and commended his spirit into his hands. We see also that he was conscious of his own decease, from what we have just now heard related. (Bk. iv, ch. 25.)

EARLY MIDDLE ENGLISH PROSE AND VERSE

From THE PETERBOROUGH CHRONICLE

1137. þa þe King Stephne to Engaland com, þa makod he his gadering at Oxeneford and þar he nam þe biscop Roger of Sereberi, and Alexander Biscop of Lincol and te Canceled Roger, hise neves, and dide ælle in prisun til hi iafen up here castles. þa the swikes undergæton ðat he milde man was and softe and god, and na justice ne dide, þa diden hi alle wunder. Hi hadden him manred maked and athes sworn, oc hi nan treuthe ne heolden; alle hi wæron forsworen [10] and here treotthes forloren, for æoric rice man his castles makede, and agænes him heolden, and fyliden þe land ful of castles. Hi swencten swyðe þe wrecce men of þe land mid castelweorces. þa þe castles waren maked, þa fyliden hi mid deovles and yvele men. þa namen hi þa men þe hi wenden ðat ani god hefden, bathe be nihtes and be dæies, carlmen and wimmen, and diden heom in prisun æfter gold and sylver, and pined heom untellendlice pining. For ne wæren nævre [20] nan martyrs swa pined also hi wæron; me henged up bi the fet and smoked heom mid ful smoke; me henged bi the pumbes other bi the hefed, and hengen bryniges on her fet; me dide cnotted strenges abuton here hæved and wrythen to ðat it gæde to þe hærnas. Hi diden heom in quarterne þar nadres and snakes and pades wæron inne, and drapen heom swa. Sume hi diden in crucet-hus, ðat is in an cæste þat was scort and nareu and undep, and dide scærpe stanes þerinne and [30] þrengde þe men þærinne ðat him bræcon alle þe limes. In mani of þe castles wæron lof and grin, ðat wæron rachenteges ðat twa oþer thre men hadden onoh to bæron onne, þat was swa maced, ðat is festned to an beom, and diden an scærp iren abuton þe mannes throte and his hals, ðat

1137. When King Stephen came to England, he made his assembly at Oxford; and there he took Roger the bishop of Salisbury, and Alexander, bishop of Lincoln, and the Chancellor Roger, his nephews, and put them all in prison till they gave up their castles. When the traitors understood that he was a mild man, and soft and good, and did no justice, then they all did wonders. They had done him homage, and sworn oaths, but they kept no troth; they were all forsworn and their [10] troths broken, for every rich man built his castles, and they held them against him, and filled the land full of castles. They sorely afflicted the wretched men of the land with castle-building. When the castles were built, then they filled them with devils and evil men. Then they took the men who they thought had any property, both by night and by day, men and women, and put them in prison in order to get their gold and silver, and tortured them with unspeakable tortures. [20] For never were any martyrs so tortured as these were. They hanged them up by the feet and smoked them with foul smoke; they hanged them by the thumbs or by the head, and hung coats of mail on their feet; they put knotted cords about their heads and twisted till they cut to the brains. They put them in dungeons wherein were adders and snakes and toads, and killed them thus. Some they put in the torture-house, that is, in a chest that was short and narrow and shallow, [30] and they put sharp stones therein and pressed the men therein so that they broke all their limbs. In many of the castles were "lof" and "grin," which were fetters that two or three men had work enough to carry. They were thus made; that is, fastened to a beam, and they held a sharp

he ne myhte nowiderwardes, ne sitten ne lien ne slepen, oc bæron al ðat iren. Mani þusend hi drapen mid hunger.

I ne can ne I ne mai tellen alle þe wunder, ne [40 alle þe pines ðat hi diden wrece men on þis land; and ðat lastede þa nigentene wintre wile Stephne was king, and ævre it was werse and werse.

iron about the man's throat and his neck, so that he could not move in any direction, neither to sit nor to lie nor to sleep, but he had to bear all that iron. Many thousand they killed with hunger. [40

I cannot and I may not tell all the wonders, nor all the tortures that they did to wretched men in this land; and that lasted the nineteen winters while Stephen was king, and ever it was worse and worse.

LAYAMON'S BRUT

ARTHUR'S LAST BATTLE

Arður ðat iherde, wraðest kinge, þat Modred wes i Cornwale mid muchele
monweorede,

And þer wolde abiden þat Arður come riden.

Arður sende sonde 3eond al his kinelonde,

And to cumen alle hehte þat quic wes on londe,

þa to vihte oht weoren, wepnen to beren; 6

And whaswa hit forsete þat þe king hete,

þe king hine wolde a folden quic al forbernen.

Hit læc toward hirede folc unimete,

Ridinde and ganninde swa þe rein falleð adune.

Arður for to Cornwale mid unimete ferde. 11

Modred þat iherde, and him to3eines heolde

Mid unimete folke,— þer weore monie væje.

Uppen þere Tambre heo tuhten togadere;

þa stude hatte Camelford, evermare ilast þat

ilke weorde; 15

And at Camelforde wes isomned sixti þusend,

And ma þusend perto; Modred wes heore ælder.

þa þiderward gon ride Arður þe riche,

Mid unimete folke, væje þah hit weore.

Uppen þere Tambre heo tuhte tosomne; 20

Heven heremarken, halden togadere;

Luken sword longe, leiden o þe helmen;

Fur ut sprenge; speren brastlien;

Sceldes gonne scanen; scaftes tobreken;

þer faht al tosomne folc unimete, 25

Tambre wes on flode mid unimete blode;

Mon i þan fihte non þer ne mihte ikennen

nenne kempe,

No hwa dude wurse no hwa bet, swa þat wiðe

was imenged;

For ælc sloh adun riht, weore he swein, weore

he cniht.

þer wes Modred ofslage and idon of lifdæge, 30

And alle his cnihtes islæge in þan fihte.

þer weoren ofslæge alle þa snelle,

Arðures hiredmen, hege and lowe,

And þa Bruttes alle of Arðures borde,

And alle his fosterlinges of feole kineriches. 35

And Arður forwunded mid walspere brade;

Fiftene he hafde feondliche wunden;

Mon mihte i þare lasten twa gloven ipraste.

þa nas þer na mare i þan fihte to lave,

Of twa hundred þusend monnen þa þer leien

tohawwen, 40

Buten Arður þe king ane, and of his cnihtes tweien.

Arður wes forwunded wunder ane swiðe.

þer to him com a cnaue þe wes of his cunne;

He wes Cadores sune, þe eorles of Cornwaile;

Constantin hehte þe cnaue, he wes þan kinge

deore. 45

Arður him lokede on þer he lai on folden,

And þas word seide mid sorhfulle heorte:

Arthur, king most wroth, heard that Modred was in Cornwall with a great force, and there would abide till Arthur came riding. Arthur sent messengers through all his kingdom, and bade all to come that was alive in the land, and that were good at fighting, at bearing weapons; and whoso neglected that which the king bade, the king would burn him all alive in the land. It came toward the host, folk innumerable, riding and marching, as the rain falleth down. Arthur proceeded to [10 Cornwall with an innumerable host. Modred that heard, and advanced against him with innumerable folk,—there were many fated to die. Upon the Tambre they came together; the place was called Camelford,—evermore shall last that same word. And at Camelford was gathered sixty thousand, and more thousands thereto; Modred was their chief.

Then thitherward went riding Arthur the mighty with a numberless folk, fated though it [20 were. Upon the Tambre they came together, raised their standards, advanced together. They drew long swords, laid on the helmets; fire outsprang; spears splintered, shields began to shiver, shafts to break in pieces. There they fought all together, folk innumerable. Tambre was in flood with blood beyond measure. There in the fight no man might know any champion, nor who did worse nor who better, so confused was that conflict; for each slew downright, were he swain, [30 were he knight. There was Modred slain and done out of his life days, and all his knights slain in the fight. There were slain all the brave, Arthur's followers, high and low, and all the Britons of Arthur's board, and all his vassals of many kingdoms. And Arthur was wounded with a broad war-spear: he had fifteen dreadful wounds; one might in the least thrust two gloves. There was none left in the fight of two hundred thousand men that lay there hewed to pieces but only [40 Arthur the king and two of his knights.

Arthur was sorely wounded, wonderfully much. There came to him a lad that was of his kin; he was son of Cador, Earl of Cornwall; the lad was named Constantine, he was dear to the king. Arthur looked at him where he lay on the ground, and said these words with sorrowful heart: "Constantine, thou art welcome, thou wert

"Constantin, þu art wilcume, þu weore Cadores sone;
 Ich þe bitache here mine kineriche,
 And wite mine Bruttes a to þine lifes ende, 50
 And hald heom alle þa laȝen þa habbeoð
 istonden a mine dāȝen,
 And alle þa laȝen gode þa bi Uðeres dāȝen stode.
 And ich wulle varen to Avalun, to vairest
 alre maidene,
 To Argante þere quene, alven swiðe scone, 54
 And heo scal mine wunden makien alle isunde,
 Al hal me makien mid haleweize drenchen;
 And seoðe ich cumen wulle to mine kineriche,
 And wunien mid Brutten mid muchelere wunne."
 Aefne þan worden þer com of se wenden 59
 þat wes an sceort bat liðen, sceoven mid uðen,
 And twa wimmen þerinne wunderliche idihte;
 And heo nomen Arður anan, and a neouste
 hine vereden,
 And soft hine adun leiden, and forð gunnen
 liðen.
 þa wes hit iwurðen þat Merlin seide whilen, 64
 þat weore unimete care of Arðures forðfare;
 Bruttes ileveð ȝete þat he beo on live,
 And wunnie in Avalun mid fairest alre alven;
 And lokieð evere Bruttes ȝete whan Arður
 cume liðen.
 Nis naver þe mon iboren, of naver nane burde icoren, 69
 þe cunne of þan soðe of Arður suggen mare;
 But while wes an witeȝe, Merlin ihate;
 He bodede mid worde— his quides weoren soðe—
 þat an Arður sculde ȝete cum Anglen to fulste.

Cador's son. I here give thee my kingdom, and guard my Britons ever at cost of thy life, and [50] uphold for them all the laws that have stood in my life-days, and all the good laws that stood in Uther's days. And I will fare to Avalon, to the fairest of all maidens, to Argante their queen, elf most fair, and she shall make my wounds all sound, make me all whole with healing draughts. And afterwards I will come to my kingdom, and dwell with the Britons with much joy."

Even with the words there came from the sea a little boat moving with the waves, and two [60] women therein, wonderfully arrayed; and they took Arthur forthwith, and bore him quickly, and softly laid him down, and forth they began to depart. Then was it fulfilled what Merlin had once said, that there should be measureless grief at Arthur's departure. The Britons yet believe that he is alive, and dwelling in Avalon with the fairest of all elves; and the Britons ever yet look when Arthur shall come. There was never the man born, or chosen of any lady, who knows of [70] the truth to say more of Arthur; but once there was a sage named Merlin; he proclaimed with words—his sayings were true—that an Arthur should yet come to help the English.

THE ENGLISH PROCLAMATION OF HENRY III¹

(1258)

Henri, þurȝ Godes fultume King on Englene-loande, Lhoaverd on Yrloande, Duk on Normandi, on Aquitaine, and Eorl on Anjow, send igreteinge to alle hise holde, ilærde and ileawede, on Hontendonschire. þæt witen ȝe wel alle þæt we willen and unnen þæt þæt ure rædesmen alle, oþer þe moare dæl of heom þæt beoþ ichosen þurȝ us and þurȝ þæt loandes folk on ure kuneriche, habbeþ idon and shullen don in þe worþnesse of Gode and on ure treowþe, for þe fremen of þe loande [10] þurȝ þe besigte of þan toforeniseide redesmen, beo stedefæst and ilestinde in alle þinge abuten ænde. And we hoaten alle ure treowe in þe treowþe þæt heo us oȝen, þæt heo stedefæstliche healden and swerien to healden and to werien þo isetnesses þæt beon imakede and beon to makien, þurȝ þan toforeniseide rædesmen, oþer þurȝ þe moare dæl of heom alswo also hit is bi foren iseid; and þæt æch oþer helpe þæt for to done bi þan ilche oþe aȝenes alle men riȝt for to done and to foangen. [20] And noan ne nime of loande ne of eȝte wherþurȝ þis besigte muge beon ilet oþer iwersed on onie wise. And ȝif oni oþer onie cumen her onȝenes, we willen and hoaten þæt alle ure treowe heom healden deadliche ifoan. And for þæt we willen

¹ The first royal proclamation issued in English.

Henry, by God's grace King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy, of Aquitaine, and Earl of Anjou, sends greeting to all his faithful, clerks and laymen, in Huntingdonshire. This know ye all well, that we will and grant that what all our counsellors, or the greater part of them, that are chosen by the land's folk in our kingdom, have done and shall do in the honor of God and in our faith, for the profit of the land through the provision of the aforesaid counsellors, shall [10] be stedfast and lasting in all ways without end. And we command all our true subjects by the troth that they owe us, that they stedfastly hold and swear to hold and to defend the statutes that are made and shall be made by the aforesaid counsellors, or by the greater part of them, just as it is aforesaid; and that each help the other to do this by the like oath to do right towards all men and to seize upon it. And let no one seize land or property whereby this statute may be [20] opposed or injured in any wise. And if any one or ones come here against, we will and command that all our faithful hold them deadly foes. And because we wish that this be stedfast and lasting, we send you this writ open, signed with our seal, to be kept by you in the treasury. Witness ourpæt þis beo stedefæst and lestinde, we senden 3ew þis writ open, iseined wip ure seel, to halden amanges 3ew ine hord. Witnesse us selven æt Lundene þane e3tetenþe day on þe monþe of Octobre, in þe two and fowertizþe 3eare of ure [30 cruninge.

LYRICS

"SUMER IS ICUMEN IN"

Sumer is icumen ¹ in,
Lhude ² singuccu;
Groweth sed ³ and bloweth ⁴ med ⁵
And springth the wude ⁶ nu.
Singuccu;
Awe ⁷ bleteth after lomb,
Lhouth ⁸ after calve cu; ⁹
Bulluc sterteth, ¹⁰ bucke verteth; ¹¹
Murie ¹² singuccu.
Cuccu, cuccu,
Wel singes thu, cuccu,
Ne swik ¹³ thu naver nu.

"OF ON THAT IS SO FAYR AND BRIGHT"

Of on ¹⁴ that is so fayr and bright
Velud maris stella,
Brighter than the day is light,
Parens et puella;
Ic ¹⁵ crie to the, thou se ¹⁶ to me,
Levedy, ¹⁷ preye thi sone for me,
Tam pia,
That ic mote ¹⁸ come to the,
Maria!
Of kare ¹⁹ conseil ²⁰ thou ert best,
Felix fecundata;
Of alle wery thou ert rest,
Mater honorata.
Bisek ²¹ him wiz ²² milde mod, ²³
That for ous alle sad ²⁴ is blod
In cruce,
That we moten ²⁵ comen til him
In luce.
Al this world was forlore, ²⁶
Eva peccatrice,
Tyl our lord was ibore ²⁷
De te genetrice.
With Ave it went away
Thuster ²⁸ nyth ²⁹ and comet ³⁰ the day
Salutis;
The welle springet hut ³¹ of the Virtutis.
Levedi, flour of alle thing,
Rosa sine spina,
Thu bere ³² Jhesu, hevene king,
Gratia divina;

¹ come. ² loud. ³ seed. ⁴ blossometh. ⁵ meadow.
⁶ wood. ⁷ ewe. ⁸ loweth. ⁹ cow. ¹⁰ leapeth.
¹¹ snorteth. ¹² I. ¹³ merrily. ¹⁴ cease.
¹⁵ one. ¹⁶ I. ¹⁷ look. ¹⁸ Lady. ¹⁹ may.
²⁰ care. ²¹ counsel. ²² beseech. ²³ with. ²⁴ heart.
²⁵ shed. ²⁶ may. ²⁷ lost. ²⁸ born. ²⁹ dark.
³⁰ night. ³¹ cometh. ³² out. ³³ bore.

selves at London, the eighteenth day of the month of October, in the two and fortieth year of our reign.

Of alle thu berst ³³ the pris, ³⁴
Levedi, quene of Parays ³⁵
Electa,
Mayde milde, moder ³⁶ es Effecta.

Wel he wot ³⁷ he is thi sone,
Ventre quem portasti;
He wyl nout werne ³⁸ the thi bone, ³⁹
Parvum quem lactasti.
So hende ⁴⁰ and so god he his, ⁴¹
He havet ⁴² brout ous to blis
Superni,
That havez ⁴³ hidut ⁴⁴ the foule put ⁴⁵
Inferni.

ALYSOUN

Bytuene Mersh ant Averil
When spray biginneth to springe,
The lutel foul hath hire wyl
On hyre lud ⁴⁶ to synge.
Ic libbe ⁴⁷ in love-longinge
For semlokest ⁴⁸ of alle thinge;
He ⁴⁹ may me blisse bringe;
Icham ⁵⁰ in hire baundoun, ⁵¹
An hendy ⁵² hap ⁵³ ichabbe ⁵⁴ yhent; ⁵⁵
Ichot ⁵⁶ from hevne it is me sent;
From alle wymmen mi love is lent ⁵⁷
Ant lyht on Alysoun.

On heu ⁵⁸ hire her ⁵⁹ is fayr ynuh, ⁶⁰
Hire browe broune, hire eye blake;
With lossum ⁶¹ chere he ⁶² on me loh, ⁶³
With middel ⁶⁴ smal ant wel ymake.
Bote he ⁶⁵ me wolle to hire take,
Forte ⁶⁶ buen ⁶⁷ hire owen make, ⁶⁸
Longe to lyven ichulle ⁶⁹ forsake,
Ant feye ⁷⁰ fallen adoun.

Nihtes when I wende ⁷¹ ant wake,
Forthi ⁷² myn wonges ⁷³ waxeth won.
Levedi, ⁷⁴ al for thine sake
Longinge is ylent ⁷⁵ me on, ⁷⁶
In world nis non so wytermon, ⁷⁷
That al hire bounte telle con.
Hire swyre ⁷⁸ is whittore then the swon
Any feyrest may ⁷⁹ in toune.

Icham ⁸⁰ for wowing ⁸¹ al forswake, ⁸²
Wery so water in wore. ⁸³

³³ art the chief. ³⁴ Paradise. ³⁵ mother. ³⁶ knows, ³⁷ refuse. ³⁸ boon. ³⁹ courteous. ⁴⁰ is.
⁴¹ has. ⁴² has. ⁴³ concealed. ⁴⁴ pit
⁴⁵ voice. ⁴⁶ live. ⁴⁷ most beautiful ⁴⁸ she ⁴⁹ I am. ⁵⁰ power. ⁵¹ gentle. ⁵² fortune.
⁵³ I have. ⁵⁴ seized. ⁵⁵ I know. ⁵⁶ turned.
⁵⁷ color. ⁵⁸ hair. ⁵⁹ enough. ⁶⁰ lovely. ⁶¹ she ⁶² laughed. ⁶³ waist. ⁶⁴ for to be. ⁶⁵ mate.
⁶⁶ I shall. ⁶⁷ doomed. ⁶⁸ turn. ⁶⁹ for this ⁷⁰ cheeks. ⁷¹ lady. ⁷² come upon me. ⁷³ wise man
⁷⁴ neck. ⁷⁵ maid. ⁷⁶ I am. ⁷⁷ wooing. ⁷⁸ worn out. ⁷⁹ wery

Lest eny reve¹ me my make,
 Ichabbe y-yerned yore.
 Beter is tholien² whyle sore,
 Then mournen evermore.
 Geynest³ under gore,⁴ 35
 Herkne to my roun.⁵
 An hendy hap ichabbe yhent;
 Ichot from hevene it is me sent;
 From alle wymmen mi love is lent
 Ant lyht on Alysoun. 40

A SONG OF LAWRENCE MINOT

[In 1333 Edward III defeated the Scots in the battle of Halidon Hill. Minot rejoices that the defeat of 1315, at Bannockburn, has thus been avenged.]

Skottes out of Berwik and of Aberdene,
 At the Bannok burn war ye to kene;
 Thare slogh ye many sakles,⁶ als it was sene,
 And now King Edward has wroken⁷ it, I wene.
 It es wroken, I wene, wele wurth the while; 5
 War⁸ yit with⁹ the Skottes, for thai er ful of gile.

Whare er ye, Skottes of Saint Johnes toun? 9
 The boste of yowre baner es betin all doune;
 When ye hosting will bede,¹⁰ Sir Edward is boune 11
 For to kindel yow care and crak yowre crowne. 10
 He has crakked yowre croune, wele worth the while;
 Shame bityde the Skottes, for thai er full of gile.

Skottes of Striflin¹² war stern and stout,
 Of God ne of gude men had thai no doubt;
 Now have thai, the pelers,¹³ priked¹⁴ about, 15
 Bot at the last Sir Edward rifild thaire rout;
 He has rifild thaire rout, wele wurth the while;
 Bot ever er thai under bot¹⁵ gaudes¹⁶ and gile.

Rughfute¹⁷ rivingl,¹⁸ now kindles thi care,
 Berebag¹⁹ with thi hoste, thi biging²⁰ is bare; 20
 Fals wretch and forsworn, whider wilt ou fare?
 Busk the²¹ unto Brughes and abide thare;
 Thare, wretche, salt ou won²² and wery²³ the while,
 Thi dwelling in Dundee²⁴ es done for thi gile.

The Skotte gase in Burghes and betes²⁵ the stretes,
 All thise Inglis men harmes he hetes; 26
 Fast makes he his mone to men that he metes,
 Bot fone²⁷ frendes he findes that his bale²⁸ betes;²⁹
 Fune betes his bale, wele wurth the while;
 He uses all threting with gaudes³⁰ and gile. 30

Bot many man thretes and spekes full ill
 That sumtyme war better to be stanestill;
 The Skot in his wordes has wind for to spill,
 For at the last Edward sall have al his will:
 He had his will at Berwik, wele wurth the while;
 Skottes broght him the kayes,³⁰ bot get³¹ for thaire gile. 36

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT

FYTTE THE FIRST

[Copyright, 1916 and 1917, by K. G. T. Webster and W. A. Neilson. Used by special permission of, and arrangement with, the holders of the copyright, and Houghton Mifflin Company.]

III

Bis kyng lay at Camylot vpon kryst-masse,
 Wit¹ mony luflych lorde, lede; of þe best,
 Rekenly of þe rounde table alle þo rich breþer, Wit² ryche reuel oryzt, & rechles merþes; 5
 þer tourneyed fulkes bi-tyme; ful mony,
 Justed ful Jolilé þyse gyntyle kniȝtes,
 Syþen kayred to þe court, caroles to make.
 For þer þe fest wat; ilyche ful fifteen dayes
 With alle þe mete & þe mirpe þat men couþe
 a-vyse;
 Such glaumande gle glorious to here, 10
 Dere dyn vp-on day, daunsyng on nyȝtes,
 Al wat; hap upon heȝe in halle; & chambrez,
 With lorde; & ladies, as leuest him þoȝt;
 With all þe wele of þe worlde þat woned þer samen, þe most kyd knyȝtes vnder kryȝtes seluen, 15
 & þe louelokkest ladies þat cur lif haden,
 & he þe comlokest kyng þat þe court haldes;
 For al wat; þis fayre folk in her first age,
 on sille;
 Ie hapnest vnder heuen, 20
 Kyng hyȝest mon of wyllle,
 Hit were now gret nye to neuen
 So hardy a here on hille.

3. This King³² lay royally at Camelot at Christ-mas tide with many fine lords, the best of men, all the rich brethren of the Round Table, with right rich revel and careless mirth. There full many heroes tourneyed betimes, jousted full gaily; then returned these gentle knights to the court to make carols. For there the feast was held full fifteen days alike with all the meat and the mirth that men could devise. Such a merry tumult, glorious to hear; joyful din by day, dancing at [10] night. All was high joy in halls and chambers with lords and ladies as pleased them best. With all the weal in the world they dwelt there together, the most famous knights save only Christ, the loveliest ladies that ever had life, and he, the comeliest of kings, who holds the court. For all this fair company were in their prime in the hall the happiest troop under heaven with the proudest of kings. Truly it would be hard to name anywhere so brave a band. [20]

¹ deprive of. ² endure. ³ most graceful. ⁴ skirt.
⁵ song. ⁶ guiltless. ⁷ avenged. ⁸ beware of.
⁹ Perth. ¹⁰ proffer. ¹¹ ready.

¹² Stirling. ¹³ pillagers. ¹⁴ spurred. ¹⁵ except for.
¹⁶ tricks. ¹⁷ rough foot. ¹⁸ rawhide. ¹⁹ bag-carrier.
²⁰ dwelling. ²¹ betake thee. ²² live. ²³ curse.
²⁴ Dundee. ²⁵ trudges. ²⁶ threatens. ²⁷ few.
²⁸ sorrow. ²⁹ lighten. ³⁰ keys. ³¹ beware.
³² Arthur.

IV

Wyle nw 3er wat3 so 3ep þat hit wat nwe cummen,
 þat day double on þe dece wat3 þe douth serued, Fro þe kyng wat3 cummen with knyȝtes in to þe halle, 26
 þe chauntre of þe chapel cheued to an ende;
 Loude crye wat3 þer kest of clerkeȝ & oþer,
 Nowel nayted o-newe, neuened ful ofte;
 & syþen riche forth runnen to reche honde-selle,
 3eȝed ȝeres ȝiftes on hiȝ, ȝelde hem bi hond, 31
 Debated busyly aboute þo ȝiftes;
 Ladies laȝed ful loude, þo þay lost haden,
 & he þat wan wat3 not worth, þat may ȝe wel trawe.
 Alle þis mirþe þay maden to þe mete tyme; 35
 When þay had waschen, worþyly þay wenten to sete,
 þe best burne ay abof, as hit best semed;
 Whene Guenore ful gay, grayped in þe myddes,
 Dressed on þe dere des, dubbed al aboute,
 Smal sendal bisides, a selure hir ouer 40
 Of tryed Tolouse, of Tars tapites in-noghe, þat were enbrawd & beten wyth þe best gemmes,
 þat myȝt be preued of prys wyth penyes to buy,
 in daye;
 þe comlokest to discrye, 45
 þer glent with yȝen gray;
 A semloker þat euer he syȝe,
 Soth moȝt no mon say.

5. But Arthur would not eat till all were served. He was so merry in his mirth, and somewhat childlike in his manner; his life pleased him well; he loved little either to lie long or to sit long, so busied him his young blood and his wild brain. And another custom moved him also, that he through chivalry had taken up; he would never eat upon such a dear day before he was told an [50] uncouth tale of some adventurous thing, of some great marvel that he could believe, of ancient heroes, of arms, or of other adventures; or unless some person demanded of him a sure knight to join with him in jousting, to incur peril, to risk life against life, trusting each in the other, leaving the victory to fortune. This was the king's custom whenever he held court at each goodly feast among his free company in the hall. And so with undaunted face he strides stoutly to his seat on [60] that New Year, making great mirth with every-body.

6. Thus the great king stands waiting before the high table, talking of trifles full courteously. The good Gawain was placed there beside Guinevere, and Agravain of the Hard Hand sat on the other side, both of them the king's sister's sons and full sure knights. Bishop Baldwin at the top begins the table, and Ywain, Urien's son, ate by himself. These were placed on the dais and [70] honorably served, and after them many a good man at the side tables. Then the first course came in with blare of trumpets, which were hung with many a bright banner. A new noise of kettle-drums with the noble pipes, wild and stirring melodies wakened the echoes; that many a heart heaved full high at their tones. Dainties of precious meats followed, foison of fresh viands, and on so many dishes that it was difficult to find place

4. When New Year was fresh and but newly come, the court was served double on the dais. As soon as the king with his knights was come into the hall, the chanting in the chapel came to an end; loud was the cry there of clerks and others. Noel was celebrated anew, shouted full often; and afterwards the great ones ran about to take hand-sel; called aloud for New Year's gifts, paid them out briskly, busily discussed the gifts; ladies laughed full loud, though they had lost; and he [30] that won was not wroth, that may ye well throw. All this mirth they made till the meat time. When they had washed, worthily they went to their seats, the best man ever above, as it best behoved. Queen Guinevere full beauteous was set in the midst, placed on the rich dais adorned all about. Fine silk at the sides, a canopy over her of precious cloth of Toulouse, and tapestries of Tars, that were embroidered and set with the best gems that money could buy. Truly no man could say [40] that he ever beheld a comelier lady than she, with her dancing gray eyes.

before the people to set on the cloth the silver [80] that held the several courses. Each man as he himself preferred partook without hesitation. Every two had twelve dishes between them, good beer and bright wine both.

7. Now will I tell you no more of their service, for everybody must well understand that there was no lack of opportunity for the people to take their food. Another noise full new suddenly drew nigh, for scarcely had the music ceased a moment, and the first course been properly served in the [90] court, than there burst in at the hall door an awesome being, in height one of the tallest men in the world; from the neck to the waist so square and so thick was he, and his loins and his limbs so long and so great, that half giant I believed him to have been, or, at any rate, the largest of men, and withal the handsomest in spite of his bulk, that ever rode; for though his back and breast were so vast, yet his belly and waist were properly slim; and all his form according, full fairly [100] shaped. At the hue of his noble face men wondered; he carried himself in hostile fashion and was entirely green.

8. All green was this man and his clothing; a straight coat sat tight to his sides; a fair mantle above, adorned within; the lining showed, with costly trimming of shining white fur, and such his hood also, that was caught back from his locks and lay on his shoulders, the hem well stretched; hose of the same green, that clung to his calf, [110] and clean spurs under, of bright gold upon silk bands richly barred, and shoes on his shanks as the hero rides. And all his vesture verily was clean verdure, both the bars of his belt, and the other beauteous stones that were set in fine array about himself and his saddle, worked on silk. It would be too difficult to tell the half of the trifles that were embroidered there, with birds and flies, with gay gauds of green,—the gold ever in the middle; the pendants of the poitrel, the proud crupper, [120 the bits,—and all the metal was enamelled; the stirrups that he stood on were coloured the same, and his saddle bow likewise, and his fine reins that glimmered and glinted all of green stones. The horse that he rode on was of the same colour too, a green horse, great and thick, a steed full stiff to guide, in gay embroidered bridle, and one right dear to his master.

9. This hero was splendidly dressed in green; and the hair of his head matched that of his [130 horse; fair flowing locks enfolded his shoulders; a beard as big as a bush hung over his breast; and it, together with his splendid hair that reached from his head, was trimmed evenly all round above his elbows, so that half his arms were caught thereunder in the manner of a king's hood, that covers his neck. The mane of that great horse was much like it, very curly and combed, with knots full many folded in with gold wire about the fair green,—always one knot of the hair, [140 another of gold. The tail and the forelock were twined in the same way, and both bound with a band of bright green, set with full precious stones the whole length of the dock, and then tied up with a thong in a tight knot; where rang many bells full bright of burnished gold. Such a steed in the world, such a hero as rides him, was never beheld in that hall before that time. His glances were like bright lightning, so said all that saw him. It seemed as if no man could endure [150 under his blows.

10. He had neither helm nor hauberk, nor gorget, armour nor breastplate, nor shaft nor shield to guard or to smite; but in his one hand he had a holly twig, that is greenest when groves are bare, and an axe in his other, a huge and prodigious one, a weapon merciless almost beyond description; the head had the vast length of an ell-yard, the blade all of green steel and of beaten gold; the bit brightly burnished, with a broad edge, as [160 well shaped for cutting as sharp razors. The stern warrior gripped it by the steel of its stout staff, which was wound with iron to the end of the wood and all engraven with green in beauteous work. A lace was lapped about it, that was fastened at the head, and tied up often along the helve, with many precious tassels attached on rich embroidered buttons of the bright green. This hero turns him in and enters the hall, riding straight to the high dais, fearless of mischief. [170 He greeted never a one, but looked loftily about, and the first word that he uttered was: "Where is the governor of this company? Gladly I would see that hero and speak with him."

He cast his eye on the knights and rode fiercely up and down, stopped and gan ponder who was there the most renowned.

* * * * *

12. Then Arthur before the high dais beheld that adventure, and saluted the stranger properly, for never was he afraid, and said, "Sir, wel- [180 come indeed to this place. I am called Arthur, the head of this hostel. Light courteously down and tarry, I pray thee; and whatso thy will is we shall wit after."

"Nay, so help me he that sits on high," quoth the hero. "To dwell any time in this house was not my errand; but because the fame of this people is lifted up so high, and thy town and thy men are held the best, the stoutest in steel gear on steeds to ride, the wightest and the worthiest [190 of the world's kind, and proved opponents in other proper sports; and here courtesy is known, as I have heard tell,—it is this that has enticed me hither certainly at this time. You may be sure by this branch that I bear here that I pass in peace and seek no quarrel; for if I had set out with a company in fighting fashion, I have a hauberk at home and a helm both, a shield and a sharp spear shining bright, and other weapons to wield, I ween well also, but since I wished no war, my [200 weeds are softer. Now if thou be as bold as all men tell, thou wilt grant me graciously the game that I ask."

Arthur knew how to answer, and said: "Sir courteous knight, if it is battle that thou cravest, thou shalt not fail of a fight here."

13. "Nay, I demand no fight; in faith I tell thee there are but beardless children about on this bench. If I were hasped in arms on a high steed there is no man here to match me, their [210 might is so weak. Therefore I crave in this court a Christmas game, for it is Yule and New Year, and here are many gallants. If there be a man in this house who holds himself so hardy, is so bold in his blood, so rash in his head, that he dares stiffly strike one stroke for another, I shall give him as my gift this rich gisarm, this axe, that is heavy enough, to handle as he likes; and I shall abide the first blow as bare as I sit. If any warrior be wight enough to try what I propose, let him [220 leap lightly to me and take this weapon—I quit-claim it forever, let him keep it as his own—and I shall stand him a stroke firmly on this floor. At another time, by our Lady, thou wilt grant me the boon of dealing him another blow; I will give him respite of a twelvemonth and a day. Now hie, and let us see quickly if any herein dare say aught."

14. If he had astonished them at first, stiller were then all the retainers in hall, the high [230 and the low. The warrior on his steed settled himself in his saddle, and fiercely his red eyes he reeled about; bent his thick brows, shining green; and waved his beard, awaiting whoso would rise. When none would answer him he coughed aloud, stretched himself haughtily and began to speak: "What! Is this Arthur's house," said the hero then, "that is famous through so many realms? Where is now your pride and your conquests, your fierceness, and your wrath and your great [240 words? Now is the revel and the renown of the Round Table overcome by the word of a single man; for all tremble for dread without a blow shown."

With this he laughed so loud that the lord grieved; the blood shot for shame into his fair face. He waxed as wroth as the wind; and so did all that were there. The king so keen of mood then stood near that proud man.

15. "Sir," said he, "by heaven thy asking is [250

foolish; and as thou hast demanded folly, it behooves thee to find it. I know no man that is aghast of thy great words. Give me now thy gisarm, for God's sake, and I will grant thy boon that thou hast bidden."

Quickly he leaped to him and caught at his hand; and the other alights fiercely on foot. Now Arthur has his axe, and grips the helve; he whirls it sternly about as if he meant to strike with it. The bold stranger stood upright before him, [260 higher than any in the house by a head and more; with stern cheer he stood there, stroked his beard, and with cool countenance drew down his coat, no more afraid or dismayed for Arthur's great strokes than if some one had brought him a drink of wine upon the bench.

Gawain, that sat by the queen, turned to the king: "I beseech now with all courtesy that this affair might be mine."

16. "Would ye, worthy lord," quoth [270 Gawain to the king, "bid me step from this bench and stand by you there,—that I without rudeness might leave this table, and that my liege lady liked it not ill—I would come to your help before your rich court; for methinks it is obviously unseemly that such an asking is made so much of in your hall, even though ye yourself be willing to take it upon you, while so many bold ones sit about you on the bench; than whom, I ween, none under heaven are higher of spirit, [280 nor more mighty on the field where strife is reared. I am the weakest, I know, and feeblest of wit; and to tell the truth there would be the least loss in my life. I am only to praise forasmuch as ye are my uncle; no other nobility than your blood know I in my body. And since this adventure is so foolish, it belongs not to you; I have asked it of you first; give it to me. Let this great court decide if I have not spoken well."

The heroes took counsel together and they [290 all gave the same advice,—to free the crowned king and give the game to Gawain.

17. Then the king commanded Gawain to rise from the table; and he right quickly stood up and made himself ready, kneeled down before the king and took the weapon; and Arthur lovingly left it to him, lifted up his hand and gave him God's blessing, and gladly bade him be hardy both of heart and of hand. "Take care, cousin," quoth the king, "that thou give him a cut, and [300 if thou handle him properly, I readily believe that thou shalt endure the blow which he shall give after."

Gawain goes to the man with gisarm in hand; and he boldly awaits him, shrinking never a whit. Then speaks to Sir Gawain the knight in the green; "Rehearse we our agreement before we go farther. First I conjure thee, hero, how thou art called, that thou tell me it truly, so that I may believe it." [310

"In good faith," quoth the knight, "Gawain am I called, who give you this buffet, whatever befalls after; and at this time twelvemonth I am to take from thee another with whatever weapon thou wilt, and from no wight else alive."

The other answers again, "Sir Gawain, so thrive I, as I am heartily glad that thou shalt give this blow."

18. "By Gog," quoth the green knight, "Sir Gawain, it delights me that I am to get at thy [320 fist what I have requested here; and thou hast readily and truly rehearsed the whole of the covenant that I asked of the king, save that thou shalt assure me, sir, by thy troth, that thou wilt seek me thyself wheresoever thou thinkest I may be found upon the earth, and fetch for thyself such wages as thou dealest me today before this rich company."

"Where should I seek thee?" quoth Gawain. "Where is thy place? I know never where [330 thou livest, by him that wrought me; nor do I know thee, knight, thy court, nor thy name. But tell me truly the way and how thou art called, and I will use all my wit to win my way thither,—and that I swear thee, for a sooth, and by my sure troth."

"New Year will suffice for that; no more is needed now," quoth the man in green to Gawain the courteous. "To tell the truth, after I have received thy tap, and thou hast smitten me [340 well, I shall promptly inform thee of my house and my home and mine own name. Then thou mayest inquire about my journey and hold promise; and if I speak no speech, then thou speedest the better, for thou mayest linger at ease in thy land and seek no further. Take now thy grim tool to thee and let us see how thou knockest."

"Gladly, sir, forsooth," quoth Gawain as he strokes his axe. [350

19. The green knight on the ground prepared himself properly. With the head a little bowed he disclosed the flesh. His long, lovely locks he laid over his crown, and let the naked nape of his neck show for the blow. Gawain gripped his axe and gathered it on high; the left foot he set before on the ground, and let the axe light smartly down on the naked flesh, so that the sharp edge severed the giant's bones, and shrank through the clear flesh and sheared it in twain, till the edge [360 of the brown steel bit into the ground. The fair head fell from the neck to the earth, and many pushed it with their feet where it rolled forth. The blood burst from the body and glistened on the green. Yet never faltered nor fell the hero for all that; but stoutly he started up with firm steps, and fiercely he rushed forth where the heroes stood, caught his lovely head, and lifted it up straightway. Then he turned to his steed, seized the bridle, stepped into the steel bow [370 and strode aloft, holding the head in his hand by the hair; and as soberly the man sat in his saddle as if no mishap had ailed him, though he was headless on the spot. He turned his trunk about—that ugly body that bled. Many a one of them thought that he had lost his reason.

20. For he held the head straight up in his hand; turned the face toward the highest on the dais; and it lifted up the eyelids and looked straight out, and spoke thus much with its [380 mouth, as ye may now hear:—"Look, Gawain, that thou be ready to go as thou hast promised, and seek loyally, hero, till thou find me; as thou hast promised in this hall in the hearing of these knights. To the green chapel go thou, I charge thee, to receive such a blow as thou hast dealt.

'Thou deservest to be promptly paid on New Year's morn. As the knight of the green chapel many men know me; therefore, if thou strivest to find me, thou shalt never fail. And so come, [390 or it behooves thee to be called recreant.]

With a wild rush he turned the reins, and flew out at the hall door—his head in his hand—so that the fire of the flint flew from the foal's hoofs. To what country he vanished knew none there; no more than they wist whence he was come. The king and Gawain roared with laughter at that green man; but this adventure was reckoned a marvel among men.

21. Though the courteous king wondered [400 in his heart, he let no semblance be seen, but said aloud to the comely queen with courteous speech, "Dear dame, today be never dismayed; well becoming are such tricks at Christmas, in lack of entertainment, to laugh and sing about among these pleasant carols of knights and ladies. Nevertheless I may well go to my meat, for I can not deny that I have seen a marvel." He glanced at Sir Gawain and said cheerfully, "Now, sir, hang up thine axe; it has hewn enough." And it [410 was put above the dais to hang on the tapestry where all men might marvel at it, and by it avouch the wonderful happening. Then they turned to the board, these heroes together—the king and the good knight—and the keen men served them double of all dainties, as was most fitting; with all manner of meat, and minstrelsy both. They spent that day in joy until it came to an end. Now take care, Sir Gawain, that thou blench not for the pain to prosecute this adventure that [420 thou hast taken on hand.

FYTTE THE SECOND

[Gawain rides away from Arthur's hall in the autumn of the year, and after many perilous adventures comes at Christmas time to a fair castle, where he is courteously entertained. The lord of the castle tells him that if he will be their guest till New Year's, he will show him the green chapel, which is not far distant. After three days of feasting Gawain wishes to depart, lest he be late for his tryst, but the lord urges him to remain, promising to dismiss him in time for his meeting with the Green Knight on the appointed day. To this request Gawain assents. The lord of the castle then announces a hunt for the next day, but urges Gawain to remain at home, that he may rest after his wearisome journey, and promises to give him whatever he may win on the hunt, provided Gawain in turn will give him whatever he may get during his day in the castle. The bargain is sealed, and the fyfte ends.]

FYTTE THE THIRD

[The third fyfte concerns itself with the hunting, and with Gawain's temptation by the lady of the castle. Enamored of her knightly guest, she visits him in his bed chamber, and offers herself to him, but is courteously repulsed, and leaves after giving him a kiss. That evening when the hunters return the lord presents Gawain with the venison he has brought in, and Gawain gives him a kiss. The next evening Gawain receives a huge boar, and presents the lord with two kisses, the winnings of his second day indoors. The third day the lady exerts all her charms, but Gawain still resists her, though he accepts three kisses and a magic girdle which makes its wearer invulnerable. When evening brings the lord home once more from the hunt, Gawain gives him the three kisses, but says nought of the girdle. Gawain then makes his farewell, and prepares to ride out to the green chapel on the next morning.]

FYTTE THE FOURTH

[The last fyfte first describes Gawain's arming on New Year's morn, and then continues as in the text.]

4. The bridge was let down, and the broad gates unbarred and borne open on both sides. The hero crossed himself quickly and passed the boards, praised the porter, who knelt before him giving good day and praying God that he save Gawain. And so he went on his way with his one man that should teach him how to find that dismal place where he should receive the rueful blow. They rode by banks where boughs are bare; they climbed by cliffs where the cold clings; the sky was up- [10 held, but it was ugly beneath; mist hung on the moor and melted on the mount; each hill had a hat, a huge mist-cloak. Brooks boiled and broke from the banks about, shattering sheer on their shores where they showered down. Dreary was the way, where they should travel by the wood, till soon came the season when the sun rises at that time. They were on a hill full high, the white snow about them, when the man that rode beside him bade his master abide. [20

5. "I have brought you hither, sir, at this time; and now ye are not far from that famous spot that ye have asked and inquired so specially after. But I shall say to you forsooth, since I know you, and ye are a man that I love well, if ye would work by my wit ye should be the better for it. The place that ye press to is held full perilous. There dwells in that waste a wight the worst upon earth; for he is stiff and stern and loves to strike; and greater he is than any man in the [30 world, and his body bigger than the four best that are in Arthur's house, and bigger than Hector or any other. He maintains that adventure at the green chapel. There passes by that place none so proud in arms but he dins him to death with dint of his hand. For he is a man without measure and uses no mercy; for be it churl or chaplain that rides by the chapel, monk or mass-priest, or any man else, he likes as well to kill him as to go alive himself. Therefore I tell ye [40 as truly as ye sit in the saddle, come ye there ye shall be killed—trust me well—though ye had twenty lives to spend. He has dwelt here full long and caused much strife in the land. Against his sore dints ye cannot defend yourself.

6. "Therefore, good Sir Gawain, let the fellow alone, and go away some other road, for God's sake. Repair to some other country, where Christ may speed you; and I shall hie me home again, and promise you further—which I will swear by [50 God and all his good saints, so help me God and the halidom and oaths enough—that I will loyally conceal you, and never tell tale that ever ye fled for any man that I know of.”

“Gramercy,” quoth Gawain. And sternly he added, “Well worth thee, man, who wishes my good; and I well believe thou wouldst loyally conceal me. But if thou kept promise never so faithfully, and I gave up here, sought for fear to fly as you advise, I were a knight coward; I could [60 not be excused. But I will go to the chapel whatever chance may fall, and talk with that same man the tale that I like, be it good or evil, as it pleases fate to have it. Though he be a stern champion to cope with, and armed with a club, full well can God manage to save his servants.”

7. “Mary!” quoth that other man, “now thou sayest as much as that thou wilt take upon thyself thine own destruction; if it pleases thee to lose thy life, I shall not let nor hinder thee. Have [70 here thy helm on thy head, thy spear in thy hand; and ride down this same lane by yon rock-side till thou be brought to the bottom of the rugged valley; then look a little up the grassy slope on thy left hand, and thou shalt see in that ravine the chapel itself, and the burly man on the field who keeps it. Now farewell in God’s name, Gawain the noble, for all the gold in the world I would not go with thee nor bear thee fellowship through this wood a foot further.” [80

At that the man turned his bridle in the wood, hit the horse with the heels as hard as he could; leaped over the land, and left the knight there all alone.

“By God’s self,” quoth Gawain, “I will neither grieve nor groan. To God’s will I am full obedient, and to him I have entrusted myself.”

8. Then he spurs Gringolet and follows the path; pushes in by a hollow beside a thicket; rides through the rough slope right to the [90 dale; and then he looked about him, and wild it seemed to him. He saw no sign of dwelling anywhere around, but on both sides high steep banks, and rough hunched crags with projecting stones; the shadows of the cliffs seemed to him terrible. Then he paused and held back his horse, and oft changed his cheer while seeking the chapel. He saw none such on any side, and strange it seemed to him. But soon, a little distance off on a grassy spot he descried a mound as it were, a smooth [100 hill by the bank of the stream near a ford of the flood that ran there. The burn bubbled there as if it were boiling. The knight urges his steed, and comes to the hill; lights nimbly down, and ties the rein and his rich bridle to a tree by a rough branch; then he turns to the hill and walks about it, debating with himself what it might be. It had a hole at the end and on either side, and was overgrown with grass in clumps everywhere, and was all hollow within—nothing but an old [110 cave or a crevice of an old crag. He could not understand it at all. “Alas, Lord,” quoth the gentle knight, “can this be the green chapel? Here about midnight the devil might tell his matins.”

9. “Now,” quoth Gawain, “it certainly is mysterious here; this oratory is ugly, overgrown with herbs. Well it beseems the wight clad in green here to do his devotions in the devil’s wise. Now

I feel in my five wits it is the fiend that has [120 made this bargain with me, to destroy me here. This is a chapel of mischance; may ill fortune bethide it! It is the cursedest kirk that ever I came in!”

With high helm on his head, his lance in his hand, he strides up to the rock of the rude dwelling. Then he heard from that high hill, in a rough cave, on a bank beyond the brook, a marvellously savage noise. Lo, the cliff clattered as though it would split, as if one were grinding a scythe on [130 a grindstone. It whirled and screeched like water at a mill, it rushed and rang that it was ruth to hear.

“By God,” quoth Gawain then, “that gear, I fancy, is being prepared to give me a good reception. Yet though I must lose my life, fear shall never make me change colour.”

10. Then the knight called full high: “Who dwells in this place to keep covenant with me? For now the good Gawain is passing right here [140 If any wight wishes ought, let him come hither fast, now or never, to fulfill his need!”

“Abide!” quoth one on the bank over his head. “Thou shalt have in all haste that which I promised thee once.”

Yet he kept on with that noise sharply for a while, turning and whetting, ere he would come down. And then he crossed by a crag and came from a hole, whirling out of a dark place with a fell weapon—a Danish axe new dight, to give [150 the blow with. It had fast to the helve a great head, sharpened on the stone. Four feet long was the weapon—no less, by that lace that gleamed full bright. And the man in the green was arrayed as before—both his skin and his limbs, locks, and beard; save that on foot he strides fairly on the earth. He set the steel shaft to the stone and stalked beside it. When he came to the water, where he did not wish to wade, he hopped over on his axe, and fiercely advanced, with savage [160 ferocity pacing the broad snow-covered glade. Sir Gawain met the knight and bowed to him, not at all low. The other said, “Now, sweet sir, in a covenant a man can trust thee.”

11. “Gawain,” quoth the green warrior, “may God preserve thee. Indeed thou art welcome, hero, to my place; and thou hast timed thy travel as a true man should. And thou knowest the covenants made between us; at this time twelve month, thou tookest what fell to thee,—and I [170 at this New Year was to repay you handsomely. And now we are in this valley entirely alone; here are no men to part us, however we may behave. Have thy helm off thy head, and have here thy pay. Make no more debate than I offered thee then, when thou whipped off my head at one blow.”

“Nay,” quoth Gawain, “by God that lent me life, I shall grudge thee not a whit whatever misfortune falls. But arrange thee for thy one [180 stroke, and I shall stand still and hinder thee not the least from doing the work as you like.”

He bent the neck and bowed down, showing the flesh all bare; and behaved as if he cared not. For no dread would he flinch.

12. Then the man in the green got ready quickly, gathered up his grim tool to smite Gawain. With all the might in his body he bare it aloft, and aimed a savage blow as though he wished to kill him. Had it driven down as earnestly as he feinted, the ever doughty one would have been dead of his dint. But Gawain glanced to one side on the gisarm as it came gliding down to slay him there in the glade, and shrank a little with the shoulders from the sharp iron. The other warrior with a quick motion withheld the bright weapon, and then he reproved the prince with many proud words. "Thou art not Gawain," said the man, "who is held so good, who never finched for any army by hill nor by vale; and [200] now thou fleest for fear before thou feelest any harm. Such cowardice I never heard of that knight. I neither winced nor fled, sir, when thou didst strike, nor tried any tricks in King Arthur's house. My head flew to my foot, and yet I never budged; and thou, ere any harm taken, art fearful in heart. Wherefore the better man I ought to be called for it."

"I finched once," quoth Gawain, "and will do so no more. Yet if my head should fall on the [210] stones, I cannot restore it."

13. "But make ready, sir, by thy faith, and bring me to the point. Deal to me my destiny, and do it promptly; for I shall stand thee a stroke, and not start again till thine axe has hit me—have here my troth."

"Have at thee then!" quoth the other, and heaves it aloft, and aims as savagely as if he were mad. He strikes at him mightily, but touches the man not; for he withheld his hand cleverly [220] ere it could hurt. Gawain awaits it properly and finches with no member, but stands still as a stone, or a stump that is twisted into the rocky ground with a hundred roots.

Then merrily spoke the man in the green: "So, now thou hast thy heart whole it behoves me to hit. Now keep back the fine hood that Arthur gave thee, and see if thou canst keep thy neck whole from this stroke."

Said Gawain in great anger: "Why, thrash [230] on, thou wild man! Thou threatenest too long. I guess that thine own heart is timid!"

"Forsooth," quoth the other warrior, "thou speakest so fiercely that I will not delay thine errand a bit longer." Then he takes his stride to strike and knits both brow and lip. No wonder Gawain mislikes it and gives up all thought of escape.

14. Lightly he lifts his axe and lets the edge come down fairly on the bare neck. Yet [240] though he smote rudely, it hurt him but little; only cut him on one side so that it severed the skin. The sharp bit reached the flesh through the fair fat, so that the bright blood shot over his shoulders to the earth. And when the hero saw the blood glint on the snow, he leaped forth more than a spear's length, eagerly seized his helm, cast it on his head, threw his shoulders under his fair shield, pulled out a bright sword and fiercely spoke. Never in this world since he was born of his [250] mother was he half so blithe.

"Cease, sir, of thy blow! Offer me no more. I have without strife taken a stroke in this place; and if thou givest me more, I shall promptly repay and yield quickly again, trust thou that! Only one stroke falls to me here. The covenant which we made in Arthur's halls provided just that; and therefore, courteous sir, now hold!"

15. The warrior turned from him and rested on his axe. He set the shaft on the ground, leaned [260] on the head, and beheld how the doughty hero stood his ground grimly, fully armed and devoid of fear. In his heart it pleased him. Then with a great voice, and a huge laugh, he spoke merrily to the hero: "Bold sir, in this place be not so savage. Nobody has here unmannerly mishandled thee, nor done but according to covenant made at the king's court. I promised thee a stroke and thou hast it, hold thee well paid. I release thee of the remnant, of all other rights. If I had [270] been skilful peradventure I could have given you a worse buffet. First I menaced you merrily with a pure feint, and gave thee no blow; which was but justice, considering the covenant which we made on the first night, and which thou held with me trustily; for truly all the gain thou gave me as a good man should. The second feint this morning, sir, I proffered thee, because thou didst kiss my fair wife and didst hand the kisses over to me; for these two occasions I gave thee here [280] but two bare feints without harm. A true man truly restores; such an one need dread no harm. At the third time thou didst fail; and so take thee that tap."

16. "For it is my weed that thou wearest, that same woven girdle. Mine own wife gave it thee, I know well, forsooth. Now know I well thy kisses, and thy virtues also. And as for the wooing of my wife, I managed it myself. I sent her to try thee, and truly it seems to me thou art the [290] most faultless hero that ever went on foot. As a pearl is of greater price than white peas, so is Gawain, in good faith, compared with other gay knights. But in this case, sir, you lacked a little, and loyalty failed you. But that was for no amorous work, nor wooing either, but because ye loved your life,—the less I blame you."

That other brave man stood a great while in a study; so stricken was he for grief that he groaned within. All the blood of his breast rushed to [300] his face; and he shrank for shame when the warrior talked. This was the first word that the man spoke—"Cursed be cowardice and covetousness both! In you is villainy and vice, that destroy virtue." Then he caught at the knot and loosed the fastening; fiercely reached the belt to the warrior himself. "Lo! there is the deception, foul may it fall! For fear of thy knock cowardice taught me to make a truce with covetousness, to forsake my nature, which is generosity and [310] loyalty, that belong to knights. Now am I faulty and false, and a coward have ever been. From treachery and untruth ever come sorrow and care. Here I confess to you, knight, that my conduct is all faulty. Let me but please you now, and after I shall beware."

17. Then the other laughed and said courteously: "I hold it quite remedied, the harm that I had. Thou hast made a clean confession, acknowledging all thy misdeeds, and hast received the penance openly from the point of my edge. I hold thee quit of that plight, and purified as clean as if thou hadst never forfeited since thou was first born. And I give thee, sir, the girdle that is gold hemmed. Since it is green, as is my gown, Sir Gawain, ye may think upon this same adventure where thou goest forth among great princes; and this shall be a genuine token among chivalrous knights of the adventure of the green chapel, and ye shall come again this New Year [330 to my dwelling, and we shall revel the remnant of this rich feast full well." The lord pressed the invitation and said, "With my wife, who was your great enemy, I think we shall reconcile you."

18. "Nay, forsooth," quoth the hero; and seizing his helm, he took it off quickly and thanked the warrior. "I have had a good visit, bliss betide you, and may He pay you well who directs all mercies. Commend me to that courteous one, your comely mate; both the one and the other, [340 my honoured ladies, who have thus with their craft quaintly beguiled their knight. But it is no wonder that a fool should rave, and through wiles of women be won to sorrow. For so was Adam beguiled by one, and Solomon by many, indeed; and Samson also, Delilah dealt him the weird, and David thereafter was deceived by Bethsheba, who suffered much sorrow. Since these men were plagued by their wiles, it were a huge gain to love them well and believe them not—if a person [350 but could, for these men were of old the best, and the most fortunate, excellent above all others under the heavens, and all they were beguiled by women whom they had to do with. If I be now deceived, meseems I might be excused."

19. "But your girdle," quoth Gawain, "God reward you for it! That will I keep with good will; not for the precious gold, nor the samite nor the silk, nor the wide pendants, for its wealth nor for its beauty nor for its fine work; but in sign of [360 my fault I shall behold it oft; when I ride in renown I shall lament to myself the fault and the deceit of the crabbed flesh, how tender it is to catch stains of filth; and thus when pride shall prick me for prowess of arms, a look on this love-lace shall moderate my heart. But one thing I would pray you—may it displease you not—since ye are lord of the land yonder where I have stayed worshipfully with you—may the Being who upholds the heaven and sits on high repay you [370 for it!—how name ye your right name? and then no more."

"That shall I tell thee truly," quoth the other then. "Bernlak de Hautdesert I am called in this land through the might of Morgen la Fay, who dwells in my house. She has acquired deep learning, hard-won skill, many of the masteries of Merlin;—for she has at times dealt in rare magic with that renowned clerk, who knows all your knights at home. Morgan the Goddess is [380 therefore her name; no person is so haughty but she can tame him."

20. "She sent me in this wise to your rich hall to assay its pride and try if it were true that circulates about the great renown of the Round Table. She prepared for me this wonder to take away your wits, to have grieved Guinevere and caused her to die through fright of that same man, that ghostly speaker with his head in his hand before the high table. That is she, the an- [390

cient lady at home. She is even thine aunt, Arthur's half-sister, the daughter of that Duchess of Tintagel upon whom dear Uther afterwards begot Arthur, that is now king. Therefore, I beg you, sir, to come to thine aunt; make merry in my house; my people love thee, and I like thee as well, sir, by my faith as I do any man under God for thy great truth."

But he answered him nay, he would in no wise. They embraced and kissed, each entrusted [400 other to the Prince of Paradise, and they parted right there in the cold. Gawain on horse full fair rides boldly to the king's court, and the knight all in green whithersoever he would.

21. Wild ways in the world Gawain now rides on Gringolet, he who had got the boon of his life. Oft he harboured in houses, and oft without; and many an adventure in vale he had, and won oft, but that I care not at this time to mention in my tale. The hurt was whole that he had got in [410 his neck; and he bare the glistening belt about him, crossed obliquely like a baldric, the lace fastened under his left arm with a knot, in token that he was taken in a fault. And thus he comes to the court, the knight all sound. There awakened joy in that dwelling when the great ones knew that good Gawain had come; joyous it seemed to them. The king kisses the knight, and the queen also; and afterwards many a sure knight, who sought to embrace him and asked him of his [420 journey. And wondrously he tells it, confessing all the trials that he had, the adventure of the chapel, the behavior of the knight, the love of the lady—and, at the last, the lace. He showed them the nick in his neck that he caught at the lord's hands for his unloyalty. He grieved when he had to tell it; he groaned for sorrow, and the blood rushed to his face for shame when he declared it.

22. "Lo! lord," quoth the hero, as he handed the lace, "this that I bear in my neck is the badge of this blame. This is the evil and the loss that I have got from the cowardice and covetousness that I showed there. This is the token of untruth that I am taken in, and I must needs wear it while I may last; for none may hide his shame without mishap, for where it once is incurred, depart will it never."

The king and all the court comfort the knight. They laugh loud at his tale, and lovingly [440 agree that the lords and ladies that belong to the Table, each knight of the brotherhood, should have a baldric, an oblique band about him of a bright green, and wear that for the sake of the hero. And that emblem was accorded the renown of the Round Table, and he was ever after honoured that had it.

As it is told in the best book of romance, thus in Arthur's day this adventure betid, which the Brutus books bear witness of. After Brutus [450 the bold hero first came hither, when the siege and the assault had ceased at Troy, many adventures of this sort happened. Now may He that bore the crown of thorns bring us to his bliss. AMEN.

HONY SOIT QUI MAL PENCE.

BIOGRAPHICAL APPENDIX

CHAUCEER (1340?-1400)

Geoffrey Chaucer was born probably in 1340, the son of a London vintner. By April, 1357, he had taken service at the court, perhaps as a page. In 1359 he was a member of the army that was fighting the French in the Hundred Years' War, and was already of sufficient importance to be ransomed from his captors by the king. In 1370 he made the first of several diplomatic journeys to the continent, and in 1372 first went to Italy. In 1374 he was appointed controller of customs for the port of London, and in 1386 sat in Parliament for Kent. In 1389 Richard II appointed him clerk of the king's works, and in 1394 granted him a pension. In 1399 Henry IV succeeded Richard, and at the poet's petition largely increased his pension, and enabled him to spend the last year of his life in comparative affluence. He died in 1400, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Since the court in which Chaucer grew up was in many respects French, it was inevitable that when the young poet began to write his work should show strong traces of foreign literary influence. He early translated part or all of the Romance of the Rose, a famous French allegory, and in the Book of the Duchess (1369), composed at the death of Blanche, wife of John of Gaunt, wrote a poem which is saturated with French influence. When in 1372 he first visited Italy, he came under the spell of the Italian Renaissance, and in the works of Dante (d. 1321), Petrarch (d. 1374), and Boccaccio (d. 1375), found much that was new and inspiring. The effect of Renaissance art and literature on Chaucer's imagination is evident in the work of his second, the so-called Italian period. Here came the House of Fame (?1379), and Troilus and Cressida (?1383), the latter one of his most important works, a character-novel in verse, concerned with the love of Troilus and Diomedes for the Trojan girl Cressida. The poem is founded directly on Boccaccio, as is the Legend of Good Women (ca. 1385). Following these came Chaucer's greatest work, the unfinished Canterbury Tales (1385 and after). Here, although French and Italian influences still persist, the inspiration is predominantly English. Chaucer's busy life had brought him in contact with men and women of all sorts, and in the Canterbury Tales he gives us the most brilliant picture ever painted of fourteenth century English life. As the poem is Chaucer's largest work, so until the days of Spenser and Shakespeare it remained the chief glory of English literature.

The best editions of Chaucer for general reading are the Globe (Macmillan), and the Student's (Clarendon Press), although the serious student will have to consult Skeat's monumental Oxford Edition (Clarendon Press). No adequate life of Chaucer has been written. There is much of value in Lounsbury's Studies in Chaucer (Harper), Root's The Poetry of Chaucer (Houghton Mifflin), and Kittredge's Chaucer and His Poetry (Harvard Univ. Press). Miss Hammond's Chaucer: A Bibliographical Manual (Macmillan) is invaluable to the serious student. Lowell's essay in My Study Windows (Houghton Mifflin) is suggestive and sympathetic, although slightly inaccurate as to details.

THE ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH POPULAR BALLADS

The great edition of the ballads is that of Francis James Child, in five volumes (Houghton Mifflin). This gives every text of every ballad that Child and his many assistants were able to discover, and is the starting point for all serious study of English balladry. A condensation of this edition in one volume (Cambridge edition, Houghton Mifflin), contains representative texts of practically all the ballads in the larger work, and is prefaced by Kittredge's valuable essay. Gummere's Old English Ballads (Ginn and Co.) is an inexpensive collection with valuable notes. The same author's The Popular Ballad (Houghton Mifflin) discusses the problems of ballad origins and related questions.

SPENSER (1552-1599)

Up to the age of Elizabeth England had produced but one great poet—Chaucer. Edmund Spenser was the second. He was born in London and received his early education in the famous school of the Merchant Tailors, to whose guild his father probably belonged. The family purse must have been lean, for the boy obtained help from a charitable foundation. At Cambridge University, too, he was entered in 1569 as a sizar, or needy student, who rendered certain services in return for food and tuition. At Cambridge Spenser formed the chief of his friendships, with Gabriel Harvey, who had some influence upon Spenser's poetical theory, and figures as one of the characters of The Shepherd's Calendar. After taking his master's degree in 1576 Spenser lived for a time with relatives in Lancashire, and later held two secretarial positions. By 1579 he had entered the service of the great Earl of Leicester, and in that year published The Shepherd's Calendar, a series of pastoral eclogues, one for each of the twelve months. In 1580 he became secretary to Lord Grey of Wilton, Lord Deputy of Ireland, and spent the remainder of his life, apart from two visits to London, in Ireland. For some years he held office in Dublin, as a clerk of the Court of Chancery, but resigned in 1588 to become clerk of the Council of Munster; he had previously bought the estate of Kilcolman, in the county of Munster, where he took up his residence. Sir Walter Raleigh was then living some thirty miles away. While on a visit to Kilcolman in 1589 he saw the manuscript of the first three books of The Faerie Queene. Enthusiastic about their merits, he took the poet with him to London, where the three books were published in 1590. The work confirmed the reputation earned by The Shepherd's Calendar, and won for Spenser the patronage of the Queen and many people of high rank. Its favorable reception encouraged Spenser to hope for political preferment in England, but the only tangible reward was a pension of fifty pounds. Disappointed in his political ambitions, he returned to Ireland early in 1591. In 1594 he married an Irish lady, Elizabeth Boyle; a poetical record of his courtship may be found in the Amoretti and the Epithalamion, published together in 1595. The following year saw him again in London, superintending the printing of the second three books of The Faerie Queene, and once more seeking advancement—in vain. In 1598 a rebellion broke out in Munster. Kilcolman Castle was sacked and burned, and Spenser, with his wife and four children, fled to Cork. From there he was sent with despatches to London, where he died Jan. 16, 1599. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, near Chaucer.

The record of Spenser's life is one of unsatisfied ambition. Although he enjoyed the friendship of Sidney and Raleigh and the favor of the Queen, he was, like Swift, compelled to live most of his life in a country he detested, balked of the honors he hoped for. As a poet, however, he won immediate recognition, and on the appearance of The Faerie Queene was at once acclaimed as heir to the mantle of Chaucer. Spenser is the most truly representative of Elizabethan poets, because his work, especially The Faerie Queene, shows to perfection the blending of the spirit of the Renaissance with that of the Reformation. It is of the Renaissance in its sensuous beauty, its intimate connection with the literatures of Greece, Rome, and Italy, and the depth and sweep of its imagination, its profound moral earnestness it owes to the Reformation.

Much the best single volume edition of Spenser is that by R. E. N. Dodge in the Cambridge Poets (Houghton Mifflin). There are fine critical essays by Lowell (in Among My Books) and by Edward Dowden (in Transcripts and Studies).

into English poetry, and Surrey, who gave it its characteristic Elizabethan form of three alternating quatrains followed by a couplet, were both avowed Petrarchists.

In the last decade of the sixteenth century the sonnet was cultivated by English poets with an assiduity which for a time amounted almost to mania. Sir Sidney Lee estimates that the number of sonnets printed in the years 1591-1597 "far exceeds two thousand." Both subject-matter and style were largely dependent upon French and Italian models. There are, for instance, a large number of sonnets addressed to friends or patrons, and as many on philosophy and religion. But love is the favorite theme, and the poet protests his devotion and bewails his mistress's coldness in a hundred pretty hyperboles passed from pen to pen. Such sonnets were usually published in the form of a sequence, including from twenty to a hundred or more sonnets, and frequently entitled by the name assigned by the poet to the real or imaginary mistress of his affections. Thus we have Daniel's Delia (1592), Constable's Diana (1592), Lodge's Phyllis (1593). In these only occasional sonnets rise to the first rank of excellence.

From such sonnet sequences three stand out preeminent by reason of their superior beauty of phrasing and apparently greater sincerity of emotion. Sidney's Astrophel and Stella (written early in the eighties, printed 1591) purports to reflect the love of Sidney (Astrophel) for Penelope Devereux (Stella), who married Lord Rich. While Sidney employs all the familiar tricks of the Petrarchists, his sonnets are marked by a fervor thoroughly in accord with his ardent and chivalrous temper. Spenser's Amoretti (1595) are addressed to Elizabeth Boyle, who became his wife. In general they are distinguished by a greater sense of fact and a deeper seriousness than Sidney's. Into the maze of conjecture raised by Shakespeare's Sonnets (printed 1609, though written considerably earlier) it would be profitless to plunge. Suffice it to say that they are divided into two series, one addressed to a youthful male friend, the other to a "dark lady," who has played the poet false. The question of whether or not the sonnets are biographically true is not essential to an appreciation of their quality. The fact remains that "the best, for depth and fulness of thought, for mastery of poetical phrase, at times for the white heat of passion and perfection of literary finish, rise above the erotic poetry of their own age as they serve yet for the goal and ultimate exemplar of their kind" (Schelling).

Sidney Lee's Elizabethan Sonnets (2 vols., Constable and Co.) contains most of the important sonnet sequences and a valuable introduction. Lee's chapter on the sonnet in vol. iii of the Cambridge History of English Literature puts the whole matter in brief compass, and is equipped with a useful bibliography.

ELIZABETHAN LYRICS

Samuel Johnson's description of Pembroke College, Oxford, as "a nest of singing birds," may aptly be applied to all England in the fifty years centering at 1600. Not only did this half-century produce the greatest drama the world has ever seen, but it also gave voice to an amazing outburst of lyric verse. In contrast with that of the Romantic period, whose history is that of a few great names, Elizabethan verse is the product of a very large number of men. Even writers of the veriest jog-trot doggerel now and then caught a spark of the divine fire and rescued their names from oblivion through an exquisitely turned song or two. The Renaissance came to full flower in the reign of Elizabeth, and the immense enjoyment of life, the youthful buoyancy, the delight in sensuous beauty, and the sheer pleasure of artistic workmanship characteristic of the Renaissance spirit, all find perfect expression in these lyrics. Here is found too the influence of the classical learning and of Italian and French models, but the material has been assimilated and made thoroughly and unmistakably English. The fondness for the use of "conceit," elaborately wrought metaphor or simile, frequently characterized by ingenuity rather than appropriateness, and sometimes degenerating into mere delight in cleverness for its own sake, is apparent in such a lyric as Southwell's The Burning Babe, though here, as in many another poem, the intensity of the imagination and personal emotion raises to the plane of high poetry what would otherwise be a rhetorical curiosity.

The history of the Elizabethan lyric starts with the publication in 1557 of Tottel's Miscellany. Wyatt and Surrey are the most important of the poets represented, and these courtiers of Henry VIII are the "birds of dawning" whose song

"Preluded those melodious bursts which fill
The spacious times of great Elizabeth."

Miscellanies such as Tottel's were very popular, the best of them being The Paradise of Dainty Devices (1576), The Phoenix Nest (1593), England's Helicon (1600), and Davison's Poetical Rhapsody (1602). After 1600 the characteristic form in which lyrics were collected was the song-book, where songs were accompanied by their musical settings. John Dowland's First Book of Songs or Aires (1597, followed by others in 1600 and 1603) and Campion's Book of Aires (1601, others 1613, 1617) are good examples. Nor must the lyrics scattered through the drama be forgotten: "Back and side, go bare, go bare" is an early example. Lyly emphasized the fashion of enlivening plays with musical moments, and Shakespeare, Jonson, and Fletcher merely did supremely well what practically all their contemporaries were doing.

Two men may be singled out for special mention. Thomas Campion (1567?-1620), a Cambridge graduate, was a lawyer by training, a doctor by profession, and a poet by instinct. One of the few men who have composed both words and music, he is also unrivalled, save by Ben Jonson, for skillful use of classical suggestions. His work is notable for its good taste, its limpid diction and freedom from affectation, and for an exquisitely light gracefulness of touch.

John Donne (b. 1573), after a youth checkered by adventure, changes of occupation, and dire poverty, at last took holy orders in 1615, and rose rapidly in the church. He soon became the most famous preacher in London, with an extraordinary reputation for piety and fervor, was made Dean of St. Paul's in 1621, and only his death in 1631 kept him out of a bishopric. It has been customary to class Donne with the Jacobean, or even with Caroline poets. This is surely uncritical, since practically all his love poetry was written by 1600. Donne is one of the most strikingly original and independent poets in the language. In contrast with other lyrists of the time he follows no fashions, uses no models, borrows no material. The "strangely intellectual" fire of Donne's verse, its combination of pulsating passion and keen intellectual power, also sets it apart. Donne's extravagance of conceit, wherein he outdoes the Petrarchists, led Dr. Johnson to entitle him (however wrongly) the founder of the "metaphysical school" of poetry. Finally, his verse, always masculine in vigor, and sometimes rough to the point of uncouthness, is capable of the most subtle harmony, and at its best, as in "Sweetest love, I do not go," is as melodious as that of the smoothest of the Cavalier poets.

A fine anthology is Arthur Symonds's A Pageant of Elizabethan Poetry (Blackie); A. H. Bullen's Lyrics from the Song-Books of the Elizabethan Age and Lyrics from the Dramatists of the Elizabethan Age are delightful collections. F. E. Schelling's A Book of Elizabethan Lyrics (Ginn) has a valuable introduction, a good brief selection, and useful notes. A helpful book of general criticism is Schelling's The English Lyric (Houghton Mifflin).

LYLY (1554?-1606)

The first of a group of clever young college men who, in the decade 1580-90, did much to put English drama on its feet and to pave the way for Shakespeare, John Lyly took a bachelor's degree at Oxford in 1573, a master's in 1575. He first sought public favor in 1579 with a didactic romance, Euphues: the Anatomy of Wit, the success of which led to a sequel, Euphues and his England, in 1581. The same year saw the production of Lyly's first comedy, Alexander and Campaspe. During the next ten or twelve years Lyly produced several other comedies, influenced by classical models, of a light and fantastic nature, well adapted for court presentation. He held a minor position at court, but his efforts to obtain the important post of Master of the Revels were in vain. He was a member of four Parliaments between 1589 and 1601.

Lyly gave vogue to the prose style called from the title of his first book, Euphuism. It is a thoroughly artificial style, employing a balanced sentence structure, wherein antithesis is emphasized by alliteration, and a free use of ornament, largely in the way of classical allusion and of illustration drawn from pseudo-scientific sources. Euphuism for a time furnished the model for polite conversation, and though its affectations were soon abandoned it did a useful service to English prose by aiding the development of a firmer and greater sentence structure.

SIDNEY (1554-1586)

The story is well known of how Sir Philip Sidney, as he lay dying on the battlefield of Zutphen, refused the water that was put to his lips, and had it given to a wounded soldier, saying, "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine." The deed was thoroughly typical of the chivalrous nobility of Sidney's life. Born of one of the best families of England, educated at Shrewsbury and Oxford, he rounded off his formal education by travel on the continent, and returned to England in 1575 an accomplished courtier, to become one of the brightest ornaments of the brilliant circle about the Queen. Not only a man of affairs—courtier, soldier, member of Parliament, diplomat—but also a man of letters—scholar, critic, novelist, poet—Sidney because of his astonishing versatility was a living embodiment of Renaissance culture. "The courtier's, scholar's, soldier's eye, tongue, sword" were all his. When to the list of his achievements we add the nobility of his nature—high-spirited, generous, and loyal—it is no wonder that he made a profound impression on his time, and that his name is coupled with that of Bayard, the knight "sans peur et sans reproche."

Though Sidney was greater as a man than as a writer, his personality ennobles his work. The Defense of Poesy, written about 1583, printed 1595, was a reply to Stephen Gosson's School of Abuse, a Puritan attack upon poetry and the stage. It is a representative piece of sixteenth century criticism, deriving its theories from the classics and previous critical treatises, but animated by a true love of poetry, and written in a fresh and vivid style. Its most interesting section is that in which Sidney criticises the verse and drama of his own day. The Arcadia, written about 1580, printed 1590, is a pastoral romance, excessively loose and rambling in structure, told in a florid and affected manner which never says a thing simply if it can say it elaborately. In ornateness of style, in the care lavished upon the idealized beauty of the setting, and in the shadowy portrayal of the characters, it is not unlike the Faerie Queene. Like Lyly's Euphues, it became extremely popular and inspired many imitations. Sidney's best poetic work was done in his sonnets (see section on the Sonnets).

The standard life of Sidney is that by J. A. Symonds (E. M. L.). There is a guarded short estimate of the man and his work in Sidney Lee's Great Englishmen of the Sixteenth Century (Scribners).

SHAKESPEARE (1564-1616)

William Shakespeare was born in Stratford-on-Avon in April, 1564, his christening being recorded in the register of Holy Trinity Church on April 26. His father, John Shakespeare, was a prosperous business man of some prominence in the town, for, after holding various minor offices, he became in 1568 bailiff or mayor. Shakespeare's mother, Mary Arden, came of an old Warwickshire family, and brought John Shakespeare some little property when she married him in 1557. The boy William in all probability attended the free grammar school of Stratford, where he obtained the "small Latin" and perhaps the "less Greek" which Ben Jonson ascribed to him. But after the date of his christening the first certain information that we have of him comes in 1582, when he married Anne Hathaway, of the neighboring village of Shottery. A daughter Susanna was born the following year, and twins, Hamnet and Judith, in 1585. Family responsibilities, coupled with the fact that John Shakespeare had fallen into financial straits, apparently led Shakespeare to abandon Stratford for London, with its greater possibilities of employment; 1586 is usually given as the year in which he made the change, and tradition has it that a deer-stealing escapade hastened the departure.

It is probable that Shakespeare soon became connected with one of the two theaters then in existence in London. At any rate we first hear of him as a playwright in 1592, when his rival Robert Greene left a sneering death-bed reference. Shakespeare's name first appeared on the title-page of a book when Venus and Adonis, an erotic poem in the highly ornate manner then fashionable, was printed in 1593; Lucrece, a work of the same sort, followed in the next year. That he had in these early years of his career become established as an actor we learn from a partial list of members of the Lord Chamberlain's Company made in 1594, and we have records of his membership in this company as late as 1604. The income from his acting and his authorship was so considerable that in 1597 Shakespeare was able to buy New Place, one of the best pieces of property in Stratford, this was but the first of a series of real estate investments in Stratford and London, so that by the time of his death he owned a large amount of property. He had furthermore by 1599 become a shareholder in the Globe, the most important of the London playhouses, and in 1610 in the Blackfriars Theater as well. When, therefore, he was ready to give over active work he was tolerably well-to-do, as wealth ran in those days; this worldly prosperity is as good proof as is needed of Shakespeare's success in his twin professions of actor and playwright. It seems to have been about 1611 that he retired to Stratford to pass the remainder of his life as a country gentleman. There he died April 23 (O. S.), 1616. His only son Hamnet had died at the age of eleven. His two daughters had both married, and survived their father, but Shakespeare's line died out in the third generation with the death of his only granddaughter in 1670.

On the basis of the different kinds of work that Shakespeare did at various times in his career as playwright, it is customary to make a classification of his plays by periods, as follows. (Dates are, of course, approximate.)

I. Apprenticeship. 1590-1595.

Here the young playwright was learning his profession, either collaborating with older and more experienced men, as in Henry VI, or writing plays modelled on the work of the best masters of the time. The method of chronicle history he learned from Marlowe, whose influence is plainly seen in Richard III and Richard II. Titus An- dronicus is a crude attempt at the tragedy of blood, popularized by Kyd's Spanish Tragedy. Love's Labors Lost is an obvious imitation of the type of comedy written in the eighties by John Lyly, while The Comedy of Errors is dependent upon two plays of Plautus.

II. Best Chronicle History and High Comedy. 1596-1601.

Here Shakespeare brings the writing of chronicle history to its highest perfection in the two parts of Henry IV and in Henry V. In addition to the merry farce comedies The Taming of the Shrew and The Merry Wives of Windsor, he writes the three great comedies As You Like It, Much Ado About Nothing, and Twelfth Night.

III. Tragedy and Ironic Comedy. 1602-1609.

For whatever reason, a change seems to have come over the spirit of Shakespeare's work about 1601, and in the years following we get the series of great tragedies dealing with profoundly serious problems: Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra; in these a surpassingly beautiful style accompanies complex action and subtle characterization. Tragic in all but a technical sense are the three plays well called ironic comedies: Troilus and Cressida, All's Well That Ends Well, and Measure for Measure, where the sordid subject-matter and sardonic spirit baffle interpretation. In this period too (1609), though written earlier, were printed the Sonnets, whose story of friendship disappointed and love disillusioned has been thought by some students to furnish the clew to the motive animating the work of these years.

IV. Tragicomedy, or Romance. 1610-1612

In this period Shakespeare enables happiness to triumph over tragic circumstance after a series of improbable and surprising events. He seems to be trying experiments in technique, as in The Winter's Tale, with its break between acts three and four, or in characterization, as in The Tempest, with brutish Caliban and ethereal Ariel.

The best single volume edition of Shakespeare is the Cambridge, edited by W. A. Neilson (Houghton Mifflin). No serious student can afford to ignore the Variorum, edited by H. H. Furness and H. H. Furness, Jr. A good library edition, a play to a volume, is the Tudor (Macmillan). The standard biography is that by Sidney Lee (revised edition 1909, Macmillan). The best general handbook, containing information on biography, chronology of the plays, history of the text, and accounts of the London and the theaters of Shakespeare's time, is The Facts about Shakespeare by Neilson and Thorndike (Macmillan).

RALEIGH (1552-1618)

Raleigh's name is always coupled with Sidney's when the brilliance and versatility of Elizabeth's courtiers are mentioned. Born in Devon, home of sea-dogs, he came naturally by his adventurous disposition, and, his Oxford course over, he engaged in many a daring exploit on land and sea, including the fight with the Armada and the Cadiz voyage of 1596. His attempts in the eighties to colonize the region named by him Virginia were failures. The royal favor shown him by Elizabeth gave him no standing with James, who threw him into the Tower on a charge of treason, and kept him there thirteen years. Released in 1616 to command an expedition to Guiana in search of El Dorado, he returned in failure and disgrace to be rearrested and beheaded.

Raleigh's earlier prose belongs to the literature of exploration and adventure: here fall the stirring Last Fight of the Revenge, and a highly interesting account of his first trip to the Orinoco, The Discovery of Guiana (1596). The unfinished History of the World was the work of the years in prison; it displays enormous learning and philosophical insight, but is chiefly notable for its bits of terse and vivid characterization and occasional comments on the history of Raleigh's own time. The verse which can with certainty be assigned to Raleigh is small in body, seems intimately connected with his personal history, and reflects his proud and passionate temper.

A good short estimate of Raleigh is that in Sidney Lee's Great Englishmen of the Sixteenth Century.

SIR THOMAS NORTH (1535?-1601?)

Of North's life little is known, and that is of no importance for his work. This consists of translation, for North was one of that band of Englishmen of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries who took upon themselves the useful mission of making the classics of Greece and Rome, of Italy and France and Spain, accessible to their countrymen in their own language. Their success may be judged by the fact that many of the so-called Tudor translations have become established as English classics. Thus North turned a French translation of the Libro Aureo by the Spaniard Antonio Guevara into English as The Dial of Princes in 1557, a book which had some influence on Lyly and Euphuism. Then he took from the Italian a collection of fables, calling it The Moral Philosophy of Doni (1570). But the work which has kept North's name alive is his translation of Plutarch's Lives, printed in 1579. Not that North knew Plutarch in the original; he only translated the French version of Jacques Amyot. The Lives of the Noble Grecians and Romans can lay no claim to being a scholarly rendering of Plutarch's grave and lucid Greek. But it is a fine specimen of early Elizabethan prose, full of vigor and color, and free from the affectation which mars the prose of the generation immediately following it. Despite the looseness of its sentence structure it is the best prose written up to its time. Shakespeare made it the basis of Julius Caesar, Antony and Cleopatra, and Coriolanus, and had recourse to it in A Midsummer Night's Dream and Timon of Athens; the closeness with which Shakespeare frequently follows his source is the best proof of its quality.

BACON (1561-1626)

Francis Bacon, Baron Verulam and Viscount St. Albans, was born 22 January, 1561, in London. He was the son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, Lord Keeper.

of the Great Seal, and nephew of Lord Burleigh, Elizabeth's great Prime Minister. The opportunity was thus open for him to follow a public career; and though under Elizabeth his progress was slow, under James I he rose through one legal office after another until in 1617 he became Lord Keeper, and in 1619 Lord High Chancellor. In 1621, when accused of taking bribes, and impeached, he pleaded guilty and threw himself upon the mercy of the House of Lords, although maintaining to the last that he never "had bribe or reward in his eye or thought when he pronounced any sentence or order." The heavy sentence pronounced by the Lords was in large part remitted by the King, but Bacon never again sat in Parliament. He died in 1626, having spent the last five years of his life studying and writing.

With characteristic Elizabethan versatility Bacon combined in one person the statesman, philosophical scientist, and man of letters. As a philosopher he did much to establish and popularize inductive reasoning, the basis of all modern scientific progress. As a man of letters he is significant for both Latin and English work. Believing Latin to be the permanent language of scholarship, he wrote comparatively little in English. The Advancement of Learning (1605) was intended to be a summary of existing knowledge and an introduction to his projected but unfinished Instauratio Magna. But it is chiefly as the author of the Essays that Bacon is remembered by students of English literature. Published first in 1597, again in larger number in 1612, and finally, fifty-eight in all, in 1625, the Essays show Bacon to be the master of terse, concise English, and a thinker whose ideas are always stimulating.

Editions of the Essays are numerous and accessible. Good brief biographies are Church's (E. M. L.), and Abbott's Francis Bacon, an Account of his Life and Works (Macmillan). Lee's essay in his Great Englishmen of the Sixteenth Century (Scribners') is noteworthy.

CAROLINE SONG WRITERS

Between the lyrics of the Jacobean and Caroline poets and those of the Elizabethans there are certain general differences in spirit and manner. Where the temper of the earlier age was adventurous and enthusiastic that of the later was intellectual and critical. In the drama Ben Jonson led a revolt against romanticism in favor of a new realism based upon classical dicta and involving more of an insistence on form. So in the lyric his influence was exerted along the same line, and we notice an undoubted gain in art. To offset this gain, however, there took place a divorce between art and morals, where in the Elizabethan age the two had been happily wedded. The court had degenerated steadily in character. Elizabeth's court was not only brilliant, it was morally sound, and enjoyed the confidence of the people. James I, as a Scotchman, did not evoke the national loyalty as had Elizabeth, nor was his personality such as to endear him to his subjects. The gap between court and people widened steadily; and while the people remained sound at heart, the court under the Stuarts became more shameless, until the steadily growing antagonism took shape in the definite division between the Cavalier and Puritan parties.

The lyrics composed by the group of men called the Cavalier Poets accurately reflect court conditions. Suckling, Lovelace, and Carew were courtiers, and the cynicism, the nonchalance, and the sophistication of their verses contrast with the artlessness and sincerity of the Elizabethan poetry. Occasionally, of course, even these elegant triflers have their serious moments, and then they give us such perfect things as To Lucasta, On Going to the Wars. But the mood of Why so Pale and Wan, Fond Lover? is much more typical. In the elegance, the attention to form, and the greater metrical regularity and simplicity of these Cavalier lyrics, is felt the influence of Jonson, whom all these men followed as their master.

The best of the Cavalier poets, however, was no courtier, but a country clergyman, Robert Herrick (1591-1634). He was born before the death of Marlowe and died in the same year as Milton, but his poetical work belongs to the reign of Charles I. After graduating from Cambridge he entered the church, and was given the parish of Dean Prior in South Devonshire; dispossessed by the Puritans in 1647, he returned in 1662, and there died. His single volume, Hesperides and Noble Numbers, was printed in 1634. Though Herrick protested that his life in Devon, far from the gay world of London, was that of an exile, his delight in his country surroundings is unfeigned and altogether delightful, and The Argument of his Book gives a very fair indication of the book's contents. Clergyman though he was, there was nothing of the ascetic in Herrick. His devotional poetry in Noble Numbers, while probably sincere enough, is certainly not notable for fervor. He is really a hedonist, an Epicurean, enjoying the good things of life while they last, and the true gods of his devotion are pagan deities—Pan and Bacchus and Venus. It is next to impossible to overpraise Herrick as a lyric artist. The simplicity and purity of diction, the freedom from affectation, the dainty perfection of form, and the exquisite lightness and sureness of touch of these poems make Herrick's book one of the most charming collections of lyric verse in the whole range of English poetry.

A spiritual reaction against the license of the times is seen in the group of devotional poets represented by Herbert, Vaughan, and Crashaw. They were Church of England men, not Puritans (Crashaw was a Catholic), living retired and pious lives, and singing their hymns of praise and prayer with a sweet fervor, uncorrupted by the world. The chief literary influence upon their verse is that of Donne, and the elaborate ingenuity characteristic of their work caused Dr. Johnson to dub them "the metaphysical poets," although the fondness for "conceit" which prompted the appellation was common enough in English poetry before Donne ever set pen to paper.

General references on the Caroline lyric are the same as for the Elizabethan. A good anthology, with an excellent introduction, is Schelling's Seventeenth Century Lyrics (Ginn). There is a delightful essay on Herrick in E. Gosse's Seventeenth Century Studies (Dodd, Mead, and Co.)

SIR THOMAS BROWNE (1605-1682)

Browne was born in London, and after going through Winchester and Oxford, studied at the most famous medical schools of Europe,—Montpelier, Padua, and Leyden,—obtaining an M. D. at the last. He returned to England, settled in Norwich, and there passed the rest of his life as a practicing physician, apparently quite undisturbed by the turmoil of the Civil War. He was knighted in 1671.

Browne's prose is the leisure product of a man who is both a scientist and a mystic. Religio Medici (1643, written some years earlier), a confession of his personal beliefs, shows the duality of his nature in its separation of science and religion, and its acceptance of revealed religion as a mystery to be taken on faith. Herein occurs Browne's perfect self-characterization: "Methinks there be not impossibilities enough in religion for an active faith . . . I love to lose myself in a mystery; to pursue my reason to an O Altitudo!" The Vulgar Errors (1646), an examination of popular superstitions, confutes many by an application of scientific principles, and accepts as possible others equally preposterous simply by failure to apply the same principles. Urn-Burial (1658) is Browne's best known and most splendid work. It may not be quite fair to say of Browne that the style makes the man, for a most agreeable personality appears in his pages. But certainly it is their unique style rather than their intellectual qualities which has kept Browne's books alive. His sentences are involved, and his vocabulary staggers under its load of polysyllabic latinisms. But these same ponderous vocables confer a sonorous majesty and a subtle harmony of rhythm which make this prose as impressive in its way as Milton's verse. Shot through and through with imaginative beauty by a mind that loved to linger over the inscrutability and brevity of human life, these long periods sweep on with the subdued pomp and somber glory of a funeral cortege.

FULLER (1608-1661)

After eight years of study at Cambridge Fuller entered the church, and finally became preacher at the Savoy Chapel in London, being famous for his witty and sensible sermons. In the Civil War he was in active service as chaplain to one of the Royalist regiments. During the Commonwealth he supported himself by his writing, and by the aid of patrons who secured him preaching appointments and private chaplaincies. After the Restoration he returned to the Savoy, and was made chaplain-in-extraordinary to Charles II, but died shortly after of typhoid fever.

Fuller's chief works are the History of the Holy War (1639), an account of the Crusades; The Holy State and the Profane State (1642), a series of "characters," each illustrated by a brief biography of an appropriate person in history; A Church History of Britain (1655), from the birth of Christ to 1648; and The History of the Worthies of England (1662), in which Fuller takes up the counties of England one by one, lists for each its most notable products and curiosities, and gives short accounts of its notable men. Fuller's writing lacks the eloquence of Browne's or Taylor's, but it is clear, straightforward, sensible, and witty. He is fond of antithesis, pun, quip, anecdote, and even his most serious work is enlivened by unexpected sallies.

WALTON (1593-1683)

Izaak Walton was born at Stafford, in 1593. In 1614 he was engaged in trade in London. Thirty years later he left the city, and spent the remaining forty years of life in quiet retirement, visiting his many clerical friends, writing biographies of Herbert, Hooker, and others, and always practicing his art of angling and gathering information for the book by which he is best known.

Walton's memory lives because of The Complete Angler. This he published first in 1653; the fifth edition, which appeared in 1676, contained much new material that Walton had accumulated during twenty-odd years of leisure. The book became at once the locus classicus of information concerning angling; it remains to this day the most delightful treatise on the pleasures of a sport concerning which much has been written.

TAYLOR (1613-1667)

Jeremy Taylor was born under the shadow of Cambridge University, and spent his youth in a little round of home, school, and college, taking his first degree at seventeen, a fellowship and holy orders at twenty, and the master's degree at twenty-one. Though Milton and other famous literary lights were at Cambridge in his time, Taylor seems to have had no contact with them. In 1634 he went to London to preach as a substitute at St. Paul's, and made so striking a success in the pulpit lately vacated by that great preacher John Donne, that he attracted the attention of Archbishop Laud, who made him a fellow of All-Souls, Oxford; later he was given a living at Uppingham, near Cambridge. The placid course of his life was interrupted by the Civil War, in which he followed the Royalist cause and was made one of the King's chaplains. He somehow drifted to South Wales, taught in a private school, and became chaplain to the Earl of Carbery, at whose residence, Golden Grove, he did his best literary work—Holy Living (1650), Holy Dying (1651), and some fine sermons. Between 1654 and 1658 he was three times imprisoned by the Puritans, then obtained a small position in Ireland, and after the Restoration was made Bishop of one of the Irish sees, and Vice-Chancellor of Dublin University. His last years were harassed and embittered by controversy, and were productive of no first-rate literary work.

Taylor enjoyed a great reputation as a pulpit orator, and his sermons are notable for fervor and brilliant rhetoric. It is, however, upon Holy Living, practical directions for the conduct of life, and the more beautiful Holy Dying, that his fame chiefly rests. In comparison with that of his great contemporaries Browne and Milton, Taylor's prose has a decidedly modern effect, being simpler in vocabulary and sentence structure. It has not the sustained grandeur of Browne's, but is distinguished by its wealth of illustration—figure, anecdote, and quotation—happily employed, and lending a rich poetic quality.

Holy Living and Holy Dying are reprinted in Bohn's Library. The best short life is by E. Gosse (E. M. L.).

MILTON (1608-1674)

John Milton, the voice of Puritan England, was born in a London home which, Puritan though it was, yet did not have to banish the refining graces of culture to make room for piety. From its atmosphere of learning and music he had not far to go to reach St. Paul's School; school days over, he went up to Christ's College, Cambridge, where his fair beauty of complexion and hair and fineness of spirit gained for him the name—surely implying no effeminacy of temper—of "the Lady of Christ's." After seven years of residence he took his master's degree in 1632, and retired to his father's new home in Horton, a quiet village on the Thames, where he spent six years in study and deliberate cultivation of his literary faculty. In 1638 he started on the grand tour, but the news of troublous times in England cut short his travels; "I thought it shame," he says, "to be travelling for amusement abroad while my fellow citizens were fighting for liberty at home." So home he came to play a man's part in the civil strife of the next twenty years. With his pen he fought on the Puritan side, and on the establishment of the Commonwealth in 1649 was appointed Latin Secretary to conduct the foreign correspondence of Cromwell's government. Zealous performance of his duties brought him the reward of total blindness, but with the aid of an amanuensis he labored on, until the Restoration in 1660 drove him into retirement. In poverty, obscurity, and loneliness he spent the remaining fourteen years of life, doubtless reflecting in bitterness of spirit on the license of those Restoration days, but sustained by the writing of his greatest poetry.

Milton's work falls naturally into three divisions: 1, the minor poems; 2, political prose; 3, the major poems.

1. While still at Cambridge Milton had given earnest of his powers by the beautiful Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, the fine sonnet On Being Arrived at the Age of Twenty-three, and the lines of Shakespeare prefixed to the 1632 folio of Shakespeare's plays. The six years at Horton brought forth the companion pieces L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, fresh with the beauty of country scenery and yet filled with the enthusiasm of the scholar; his books, the masque Comus, composed for the unusual festivity of 1634, wherein this favorite form of courtly diversion is made to serve as handmaid to the expression of a serious theme, the praise of virtue; and Lycidas, flower of English elegiac poetry. The first two of these so-called "minor" poems are done in the full spirit of the Renaissance; Comus, with its moral earnestness, and Lycidas, notably in the passage on the corruption of the church, show the Puritan in Milton.

2. The prose writings consist mainly of controversial pamphlets on political and religious matters. They include pamphlets against episcopacy, four on divorce, the wise and liberal Tractate on Education, and many arguments in defense of the Puritan party, the best of them being Eikonoklastes (The Image Smasher, in reply to Eikon Basilike, The Royal Image, an idealization of Charles I) and the Latin Defense of the English People. The greatest of Milton's prose works, however, is the Areopagitica (1644), a plea for freedom of the press, eloquent and impassioned. Milton said of prose that he had in it but the use of his left hand. But although his is in some points of style inferior to Bacon's, it has a grandeur and loftiness that were far beyond Bacon; the tremendous conviction of a righteous cause surges through it, and lifts it at times to magnificent heights of eloquence.

3. The works of the last period are three: Paradise Lost (1667), Paradise Regained (1671), and Samson Agonistes (1671). The last is the story of Samson, cast in the mould of Greek tragedy; its austere beauty gains in impressiveness from the likeness between the situation of Milton, old and blind and forlorn in a hostile age, and that of the Israelite champion, a blind captive among the Philistines. Paradise Regained shows the redemption of mankind through Christ's temptation in the wilderness; in interest and beauty it is inferior to its predecessor. Paradise Lost, "the life history of the universe," written to "assert eternal Providence,

And justify the ways of God to men,"

is the great epic of the modern world, equalled only by Dante's Divine Comedy in loftiness of conception and grandeur of execution. It would be idle to deny that the execution is unequal; there are dreary wastes of theological dialectic which all readers shun. But these are spots on the face of the sun. Milton calls to the service of his celestial muse all the resources of his vast learning and all the splendors of an imagination of unbounded sweep and daring, and the greater part of the epic is not only morally sublime, it is superbly beautiful poetry. In particular, it is written in blank verse unsurpassed for harmony and majesty, the perfect example of what Arnold calls "the grand style."

The Life of Milton by D. Masson (6 vols., Macmillan) is the standard source of information; good shorter biographies are by M. Pattison (E. M. L.) and Walter Raleigh (Putnam). Single volume editions are by A. W. Verity (Cambridge Univ. Press), Masson (Macmillan), W. V. Moody (Houghton Mifflin). The prose is published in Bohn's Library.

PEPYS (1633-1703)

Samuel Pepys, who quite unconsciously made himself one of the most interesting if not most significant figures of English literature, was born in 1633. From St. Paul's School, London, he went up in 1651 to Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he remained three or four years. On leaving the University he married, and soon attached himself to his cousin Sir Edward Montagu, later the Earl of Sandwich, to whom he owed much of his subsequent advancement. In 1660 he went with the expedition that brought Charles II back to England, acting as secretary to Montagu, the commander-in-chief. The same year he was appointed "Clerk of the Acts" in the Navy Office, and began the keeping of his diary. Until 1688 he was actively engaged in governmental affairs, part of the time as member of Parliament, but chiefly in the Admiralty, where his record was brilliant. Because of his intimate friendship with the Duke of York he was at times attacked by political enemies; charges of peculation were brought against him, but none were proved. With the exile of James II in 1688 Pepys's official career ended. He was dismissed from the Admiralty in March, 1689; the remaining years of his life he spent in retirement, and died in 1703.

The manuscript of the Diary, by which Pepys is known to the world, was among the books he willed to Magdalene College. It was written in short-hand, for no eye but his own, and was at once an honest record of fact, and a complete revelation of Pepys's character. Attention was first drawn to it by an article of Sir Walter Scott's (1826), reviewing a fragmentary edition of the year preceding. Since that time many editions have appeared, the last and best being that edited by Henry Wheatley, and published by George Bell and Sons in eight volumes.

DRYDEN (1631-1700)

John Dryden was born in 1631, in Northamptonshire. Educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, he published in 1638 his Sianzas to the memory of Oliver Cromwell. At the time of the Restoration he wrote the most distinguished of the many welcomes to Charles II, Astræa Redux. In 1663 he began writing for the stage, and by 1670 had attained such eminence that he was appointed Poet Laureate and Historiographer Royal, with a stipend of two hundred pounds. A pension of one hundred pounds was later added to this, and in 1683 he became Collector of the Port of London. The revolution of 1688 deprived him of all his public honors, and forced him to spend the last twelve years of his life writing for a living. He died in 1700, generally acknowledged England's leading man of letters.

Of Dryden may be said what Dr. Johnson said of Goldsmith: "There is almost no form of writing which he did not attempt, and no form that he attempted did he fail to adorn." His dramas were many and popular; his religious poems, Religio

Laici (1682) and The Hind and the Panther (1687), the first a poem in support of the Church of England, and the second Dryden's poetical confession of faith in Roman Catholicism, illustrate his command of the heroic couplet and his ability to reason in verse, at the same time that they exhibit the least pleasing phase of Dryden's character, his willingness to abandon an unprofitable for a profitable cause. For caustic wit his greatest satires, Absalom and Achitophel (1681) and MacFlecknoe (1682) have never been surpassed in English. At least two lyrics, the Song for St. Cecilia's Day and Alexander's Feast, witness his ability to move easily in forms other than the heroic couplet which he virtually established. As a translator of Virgil, Homer, and other classical poets, he did much to familiarize English readers with the literatures of Greece and Rome. In prose works such as the Essay on Dramatic Poesy (1668) and the Preface to the Fables (1699) he showed keen critical ability and the power to write clear and readable prose. During the last ten years of his life Dryden was a frequenter of Will's Coffee House, where in his easy chair he presided over the English literary world much as Dr. Johnson was to do seventy-five years later in The Club. Although generally neglected to-day, Dryden was a man of great power, and both by example and precept did much to establish the literary fashions that were to prevail in England until the time of Wordsworth.

The best one volume edition of Dryden is the Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin), although this does not contain the plays. The Scott-Saintsbury (Paterson, Edinburgh) is complete, although too cumbersome for general use. The best brief biography is Saintsbury's (E. M. L.). Lowell's essay in Among My Books, and William Hazlitt's in Lectures on the English Poets, are suggestive and valuable.

DEFOE (1660?-1731)

Over Daniel Defoe's life and character there hangs a veil of mystery which baffles accurate biography. He was the son of a London butcher, a Dissenter, and went for a few years to a Dissenters' school. Then he dropped out of sight, to reappear in 1684 as a London merchant getting married. By 1688 he was sufficiently interested in politics to join actively in supporting William of Orange. Whatever his business, his affairs were in so bad a state in 1691 that he went bankrupt to the tune of £17,000; a managership of a tile factory set him on his feet again. His literary activity dates apparently from about 1697, though he had done some writing before that; but it was in 1701, with The True-born Englishman, that Defoe made his first great hit, for it brought not only popular but royal favor, and perhaps secret employment by the King. Defoe was now launched upon a career of pamphlet writing which lasted throughout the rest of his life, and produced an almost unbelievable number of articles on all sorts of subjects. The best known of these, The Shortest Way with the Dissenters (1702), led to the author's imprisonment and exhibition in the pillory. After his release from Newgate he started The Review, a tri-weekly political periodical, which ran 1704-13, of first-rate importance in the history of the newspaper. For many years Defoe added to his pamphleteering and journalistic activities the business of a government agent, ostensibly on behalf of the Tory ministry, but certainly with bad breaches of faith to his employers. As Trent says: "For more than twenty years he practised every sort of subterfuge to preserve his anonymity, and he soon grew sufficiently callous to write, presumably for pay, on all sides of any given subject. Within the arena of journalism he was a treacherous mercenary who fought all comers with any weapon and stratagem he could command." In 1719 Defoe displayed in the large the combination of journalistic and narrative skill he had shown on a small scale as far back as 1706 in The Apparition of Mrs. Veal by getting an account of the solitary life of Alexander Selkirk on the island of Juan Fernandez and expanding it into Robinson Crusoe. The immediate popularity of the book Defoe turned to account by publishing in the next few years the series of prose fictions which constitute his real title to fame: Memoirs of a Cavalier (1720), Captain Singleton (1720), Moll Flanders (1722), Journal of the Plague Year (1722), Colonel Jack (1722), Roxana (1724). The last six years of his life were employed in writing books of no moment and pamphlets on a great variety of matters.

Defoe's importance in the history of English literature comes (1) through The Review, which initiated certain ideas, such as the editorial and the special article, still employed in journalism, and but for which The Tatler and The Spectator might never have been conceived; (2) through his fictions, which are perhaps not novels in the modern sense of the word, since plot and characterization are only rudimentary, but which by their verisimilitude, effectiveness of single situations, and general popularity, paved the way for the work of Richardson and Fielding. At all events Defoe's "genius for lying like the truth" has rarely been equalled in English fiction.

Defoe's chief works are reprinted in the Bohn Library; there is a good edition of the novels, with introduction by G. A. Aitken (Dent & Co.). The most up-to-date biography is the brief chapter in the Cambridge History of English Literature (vol. ix) by W. P. Trent.

SWIFT (1667-1745)

Jonathan Swift's involuntary and reluctant connection with Ireland, which he always resented as a trick of adverse fate, began with his birth there, though his parents were English. His father died before he was born, leaving his mother poor, and it was only through the assistance of relatives that Swift was able to go to Trinity College, Dublin. There he made no brilliant record, obtaining his degree only by special favor. In 1689 place was made for him in the household of Sir William Temple, a well known figure in English politics and letters; though his secretarial duties were light, and though Temple seems to have treated the young man with consideration, Swift's proud temper made him intolerant of patronage, and to secure independence he entered the church. During the years of residence with Temple at Moor Park, Swift wrote his first satires, The Battle of the Books, a jeu d'esprit on a squabble over the comparative merits of ancient and modern literature, and The Tale of a Tub, a powerful attack on the Catholics and Dissenters in particular, and, in general, on the folly of creed insistence on non-essentials. At Moor Park, too, Swift met and came to love Esther Johnson, a ward of Temple's, some years younger than Swift, but his greatest friend through life.

On Temple's death in 1699 Swift was given a living at Laracor, near Dublin. The publication of the two early satires in 1704 made his reputation, and he continued to use his pen in political and religious controversy. At first a Whig, he joined the Tories in 1710, and for several years was a dominant figure in public life. Of the writings of these years The Conduct of the Allies (1711), a pamphlet written in opposition to Whig support of the war with France, is the best example. Swift hoped for an English bishopric, but The Tale of a Tub had ruined his chances and he was forced to be content with being made Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin. On the downfall of the Tory ministry in 1714 Swift returned to Dublin, and there spent the rest of his life, exiled from the society where he had cut so brilliant a figure, and nursing a grudge against all the world. Of Swift's London days The Journal to Stella, a sort of diary which Swift kept for the entertainment of Esther Johnson, gives an accurate and pleasing account. For Stella Swift cherished a devoted affection, and though the rumor that the two were secretly married has never been proved true, it was Stella who made life tolerable for the lonely Dean until her death in 1728. Despite his dislike for Ireland Swift's heart burned at the wretchedness and oppression of the Irish people, and he endeared himself to them by such writings as the Drapier's Letters (1724), defeating an English scheme to debase the Irish coinage, and the mordant Modest Proposal (1729). In 1726 was published Gulliver's Travels, most delightful of fictions and most terrible of satires. Swift's last years were embittered by loneliness and physical agony and clouded by madness.

By virtue of his sheer intellectual power and his passionate feeling Swift is preeminent among English satirists, particularly in the use of irony. Under the childish squabbles of the brothers in The Tale of a Tub concerning their coats, under the marvels of Gulliver's adventures, under the coldly logical brutality of the Modest Proposal, seethes passionate scorn for the pettiness, the hypocrisy, and the inhumanity of the human race. Swift, unlike Dryden and Pope, does not satirize the individual; rather he expresses his savage contempt for man himself, and in the depiction of the Yahoos he has presented the most terrible indictment of human frailty that the mind of man has ever conceived. The contrast between the utter misanthropy of his writings and the facts of his private life—his love for Stella, his service of the Irish people, and his secret benefactions among the poor of Dublin—but serves to emphasize the sadness of a life which, under happier circumstances, might have grandly benefited the world.

Swift's works are all published in the Bohn Library. There is a good two-volume edition of selections by H. Craik (Clarendon Press). Leslie Stephen writes the Life in the E. M. L. The essays by Johnson and by Thackeray (English Humorists) are famous.

ADDISON (1672-1719)

Joseph Addison was born in May, 1672, the son of a Wiltshire clergyman. After leaving the Charterhouse School, where he met Richard Steele, he went up to Oxford and won a considerable reputation by his scholarship and literary ability, finally being elected fellow of Magdalen. During the troubled years between the revolution of 1688 and the accession of George I in 1714, the man who could write was sure to be sought out by one of the two contending parties. Addison was no exception. His Latin poem on the Peace of Ryswick, Pax Gulielmi (1697), marked him as one of the most promising Whig men of letters, and secured him a pension of three hundred pounds. Later, when the Duke of Marlborough won his great victory at Blenheim, Addison's The Campaign (1704) brought him new honors and started him on a political career which culminated in his appointment in 1717 to one of the two Secretaryships of State. He died in 1719, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

As a man of letters Addison is remembered chiefly for his mastery of the familiar essay, a type which, though introduced into English literature by other persons, has never been handled with greater ease or more certain effectiveness than by Addison. A friend of Sir Richard Steele, he contributed some forty papers to The Tatler (1709), a tri-weekly periodical devoted to politics, literature, and miscellaneous topics. The Tatler was succeeded in 1711 by The Spectator, which appeared six times a week, and for which Addison and Steele furnished most of the papers. The Spectator was non-political; in it Addison had a free hand to write the comments on the gentle art of living which form the basis of his literary fame. Here too Addison developed the character of Sir Roger de Coverley, whose portrait is one of the most finished in all the gallery of English fiction. The clearness, ease, and urbanity of Addison's prose, and the genial serenity of his outlook on life, have long caused him to be singled out for praise and emulation. Johnson's famous sentence, reflecting the judgment both of Addison's contemporaries and of subsequent generations, remains the best of all comments: "Whoever wishes to attain an English style, familiar but not coarse, and elegant but not ostentatious, must give his days and nights to the volumes of Addison."

The Everyman edition of The Spectator (E. P. Dutton) is an excellent reprint of the entire publication; Addison's other works may be found in the Bohn Library. Courthope's Life in the E. M. L. is the best brief biography; Dr. Johnson's, in his Lives of the Poets (Standard English Classics, Oxford Univ. Press), is invaluable as giving the verdict of the eighteenth century on Addison. Macaulay's essay is easily accessible; Thackeray's in the English Humorists is sympathetic and enlightening.

STEELE (1672-1729)

Richard Steele was born in March, 1672, in Dublin, and never outgrew a certain extravagance and prodigality, which, with his winning good nature, may be attributed in part to his Irish ancestry. He attended the Charterhouse School, and afterwards at Oxford continued the friendship with Addison begun at the Charterhouse. Unlike Addison, however, he left Oxford without a degree to enter the army, where his career was somewhat eccentric, though his talents and friendliness won him a captaincy. Before making a name for himself as an essayist, Steele had written plays, and in The Conscious Lovers (1722) wrote one of the best sentimental comedies. In 1707 he began his career as a journalist by editing The Gazette, and in 1709 established The Tatler. With The Tatler began his literary association with Addison, in The Spectator (1711-12) Steele wrote about half of the papers, and drew the first sketch for Sir Roger de Coverley, whose character Addison elaborated. In 1713 The Spectator was followed by The Guardian, the work of the two friends, subsequently Steele alone produced various periodicals, no one of which became fairly established. With the accession of George I in 1714 Steele's long devotion to the Whig cause was rewarded. Knighted in 1715, he was appointed to various lucrative offices, but was unable to practice economy, and in 1724 he retired to Wales in financial embarrassment. Here, in 1729, he died.

Steele's fame as a man of letters is closely bound up with that of his greater if somewhat less winning friend, Addison. Steele was the first to acknowledge his debt to Addison, and as the result of his generous disclaimer, posterity has done scant justice to Steele himself. Lacking Addison's poise, he had an enthusiasm and initiative which contributed much to the success of the literary partnership, and in his dramas showed a vivacity of humor entirely foreign to the author of Cato. Moreover, it was Steele, not Addison, who first realized the possibilities of the periodical essay, established The Tatler, and literally prepared the way for The Spectator.

Austin Dobson's Life in the E. M. L., is an excellent brief biography. As in the case of Addison, Thackeray's comment in the English Humorists is sympathetic and suggestive. Steele's plays may be found in the Mermaid edition (Scribner's), The Tatler, The Spectator, and other periodicals have been reprinted in various editions.

POPE (1688-1744)

Alexander Pope was born in London of Catholic parents, and by reason of his religion and of a bodily weakness which left him deformed and

supersensitive, he was barred from that active participation in public affairs in which so many eighteenth century men of letters engaged. His education he obtained at home, largely through wide if random reading. The first public exhibition of his skill in numbers was given in the Pastorals, printed in 1709, but written, he said, when he was sixteen. The Essay on Criticism (1711) was praised by Addison in The Spectator, and won for the young poet a reputation which became fame on the appearance of The Rape of the Lock (1712, 1714.) His literary position secure, Pope undertook a verse translation of Homer: the Iliad was finished in 1720, the Odyssey in 1725, and the income made Pope independent. He bought a villa at Twickenham, and took an almost childish pleasure in developing the grounds according to the sham classic taste of the day. An edition of Shakespeare which Pope issued in 1725 was speedily shown to be full of errors. The adverse criticism added to an already long list of literary enemies whom Pope had made, he took revenge on his critics and heaped scorn on a large number of insignificant writers in the famous satire The Dunciad. The history of the composition of this poem, and of the changes made in it during successive editions from 1728 to 1743, is one of the most curious in the whole range of literature. The later years of his life were divided between lampooning his enemies in polished attacks, often harsh and false, such as the Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot (1735), and writing pseudo-philosophical poems like the Essay on Man (1732-35), which sets forth the deistic theories of Pope's friend Bolingbroke.

There is little in Pope's character to admire except a firm devotion to literature and an iron resolution which compelled success despite the physical weakness. He was treacherous, malicious, his word was unreliable, his vanity and resentment of criticism were excessive. His poetry, once lauded as all that verse should be, is now generally relegated to the second class, though admittedly at the head of that class. It is the complete epitome of the failings and excellences of the classical school. It has no moral elevation, no loftiness of thought, no feeling for humanity or nature, no passion except the passion of personal animosity. But it is marvellously finished, clear as crystal, neat and pointed as no other English poetry has been. Pope is the absolute and ultimate master of the heroic couplet; for metrical perfection and epigrammatic brilliance his couplets are without rival.

"True wit is nature to advantage dressed,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed":

this couplet is at once a definition and an illustration of Pope's theory and practice. As a satirist Pope ranks with the greatest. He does not compete with Dryden in the field of political satire; he does not attack mankind in general like Swift. Against the foibles of society he directs the wonderfully clever Rape of the Lock; but he is at his best and is most merciless in personal satire, when he launches a polished dart, keen and poisoned, against some real or fancied enemy.

The standard edition is that by Elwin and Courthope (10 vols., John Murray). The best single volume edition is the Globe (Macmillan). The best biography is Leslie Stephen's (E. M. L.).

GOLDSMITH (1728-1774)

Oliver Goldsmith was born in Ireland, in 1728, the son of a poor parson. In the University of Dublin he failed to distinguish himself, and when after graduation he undertook to enter one of the professions, he was for some time unsuccessful. A brief experience in Edinburgh, where he was studying medicine, was followed by three years of wandering about on the continent. Just what he did during these years it is hard to tell; when he returned to England in 1756 he claimed to have graduated in medicine at the University of Leyden; probably part of George Primrose's story, in the Vicar, is a retelling of Goldsmith's own experiences. Unsuccessful as a physician, Goldsmith soon was doing literary hack work for any bookseller who would employ him. The first thing to bring him any real reputation was his series of essays The Citizen of the World (1762). In 1763 he became one of the original nine members of The Club, and was thus a personal friend of Johnson, Burke, and Reynolds. In 1764 appeared The Traveller, a poem reminiscent in part of his own experiences, and hailed as the best work since Pope. Two years later came The Vicar of Wakefield, and in 1768 the first of his two plays, The Good-Natured Man. In 1770 The Deserted Village enhanced his reputation as a poet; in 1773 She Stoops to Conquer had a deserved success on the stage. The next year Goldsmith died. His warm good nature, his prodigality, his petty vanities and his large unselfishness, his fine independence and his helplessness, are all brought out in Boswell's Life of Johnson. He was a man whom everybody loved; when he died Johnson said: "Let not his frailties be remembered; he was a very great man."

As a man of letters Goldsmith was great in part at least because of his versatility, for he was essayist, poet, novelist, and dramatist. But his versatility was not that of the mediocre hack. Between Addison and Lamb it is hard to find better essays than Goldsmith's. His verse, especially The Deserted Village, though written in Popeian couplets, has a freshness and sweetness that are still delightful. His dramas were clean and pure, and "fulfilled the great end of comedy, making an audience laugh." And The Vicar, despite the poor plot, is a novel which many generations have loved for its superb characterization of the central figure, and its genial portrayal of domestic manners.

The best contemporary source of information about Goldsmith is Boswell's Life of Johnson. Black's life, in the E. M. L., and Dobson's in the Great Writers series, are good brief biographies. The plays, poems, and the Vicar, have been many times reprinted; a good reprint of the Essays is that edited by Aikin and Tuckerman (Crowell). Macaulay's Essay is reprinted in this volume.

JOHNSON (1709-1784)

Samuel Johnson was born in Lichfield, the son of a poor bookseller. As a child he was sickly; the scrofula, for which he was "touched" by Queen Anne, left permanent traces upon his body and his habits. With some financial assistance Johnson managed to get to Pembroke College, Oxford, but poverty compelled him to leave in 1731 before he had obtained a degree. Oxford later honored herself by making him a Master of Arts and finally a Doctor of Laws. After struggling along for some time at teaching and hack writing Johnson married, and with the money brought him by his wife tried to start a private school. The venture failed. Johnson then abandoned Lichfield, and in 1737 tramped up to London with a companion as impoverished as himself, young David Garrick, destined to become the greatest actor of his time. Arrived in London, Johnson was speedily submerged in the wretched life of a hack writer. He attracted a little attention with a satirical poem London (1738), more with the more deserving Vanity of Human Wishes (1749). He tried twice to launch a periodical of the Spectator type; The Rambler (1750-52) and The Idler (1758-60) were too heavy to be more than moderately successful. The greatest work of these treadmill years was the famous Dictionary, published in 1755, which made Johnson's reputation and won for him his title of "the Great Lexicographer." It is the least impersonal of all such books, and bristles with definitions illustrating Johnson's eccentricities and prejudices. In 1759 Johnson was still so poor that when his mother died he defrayed the expenses of her funeral by writing in the evenings of a single week his moral prose romance Rasselas; 1762 brought relief, however, when Johnson was granted a pension of three hundred pounds, and thenceforth he was never again in want. The Club, one of the most famous of all literary fellowships, was organized in 1764; it had as members the most brilliant men of their day—Reynolds, Garrick, Goldsmith, Burke, Gibbon, and others—but Johnson outshone them all, and over the Club, as over the world of letters, ruled as dictator. The chief work of Johnson's later years was done in his edition of Shakespeare (1765), still valuable for the sound common sense of its notes, and the Lives of the English Poets (1779-81), a series of short biographies prepared to accompany a standard edition of the poets from Cowley to Gray. In 1773 he made a trip with Boswell through Scotland and the Hebrides, an odd expedition for an inactive man of sixty-four, who loved London and despised Scotland with almost equal fervor; A Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland records his impressions. He died in his house in Fleet Street in 1784, and was buried in the Abbey.

Johnson was the last great representative of the classical school, and by his influence doubtless held off for some time the impending literary revolution. As a writer he is seen at his best in The Lives of the Poets. The taste of his time and his personal limitations kept him from a due appreciation of the work of certain men, notably Milton and Gray, but in general his judgments are fair and his comparisons enlightening; his estimates of Dryden, Addison, and Pope are classics. As a talker Johnson was supreme: his conversation, so faithfully set down by Boswell, was simpler and more brilliant than his writing, not so laden with the ponderous Latinisms which we think of as characteristically "Johnsonese," though it should be added that his later writings are not so pompous in style as the earlier. The man Johnson was greater than his works. No famous man had more or odder peculiarities, but these were mere externals. His massive common sense, his real tenderness of heart, his generosity, his sincere piety, his transparent honesty, endear his memory. Macaulay, writing in 1856, concludes thus: "The old philosopher is still among us in the brown coat with the metal buttons, and the shirt which ought to be at wash, blinking, puffing, rolling his head, drumming with his fingers, tearing his meat like a tiger, and swallowing his tea in oceans. No human being who has been more than seventy years in the grave is so well known to us. And it is but just to say that our intimate acquaintance with what he would himself have called the anfractuosities of his intellect and his temper, serves only to strengthen our conviction that he was both a great and a good man."

There is a good volume of selections from Johnson's writings in the Little Masterpieces, edited by Bliss Perry (Doubleday Page and Co.). The best edition of the Lives of the Poets is that by Birkbeck Hill (Clarendon Press). The essays by Macaulay and Carlyle, inspired by Croker's edition of Boswell's Life, should be known to all students of Johnson.

BOSWELL (1740-1795)

James Boswell made himself famous by spreading Johnson's fame. He was the son of a Scotch lawyer of high standing, and went to the University of Edinburgh, afterward studying law, and practicing in Edinburgh and London. The year 1763 made Boswell's fortune, for then he visited London and made the acquaintance of Johnson. For twenty years he enjoyed the intimate friendship of the great man, who secured his admission to The Club. Though he was vain to excess, a snob imperturbably impudent on occasion, Boswell was not the fool he has sometimes been made out to be. He had wit enough to recognize a great man when he saw one, and sense enough to make the most of his opportunities. The accuracy of observation, the liveliness, the veracity, the thorough humanness of his Life of Johnson, published in 1791, make it the best biography ever written.

The definitive edition of Boswell's Life is by Birkbeck Hill (6 vols., Clarendon Press). The Everyman Library contains a complete edition in two volumes.

BURKE (1729-1797)

Edmund Burke was born in 1729, at Dublin. He graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, in 1748, and soon took up the study of law in the Middle Temple, London. His interest in literature developed early in life; in 1756 the Inquiry concerning the Sublime and the Beautiful marked his appearance on the stage of letters. Five years later he was appointed secretary to the Lord Deputy of Ireland; from this time until his death he was actively engaged in governmental work. His political career was of the noblest; although never holding a high office, he was recognized as the unofficial leader of the Whig party, and virtually shaped the policies of the nation during the latter part of his life. From 1790 to 1797 he was concerned with France; his first great interests, however, had been America and India. He had entered Parliament in 1766, and had at once taken up the question of England's attitude towards her American colonies. Burke understood America better than anyone else in Parliament; he was passionately devoted to the cause of human justice; and he pleaded for conciliation with America not only because he foresaw that it alone would save the empire, but because it was the only righteous course to pursue. Burke failed; England went her way under George III and Lord North, and the colonies were lost. He then turned his attention to India, studying it as carefully as he had America, visualizing with the imagination of a poet the results of English oppression, and finally denouncing the English system in a series of attacks that culminated in the impeachment (1787-95) of Warren Hastings, the first Governor General. The publication in 1790 of the Reflections on the Revolution in France marks the beginning of his hostility towards French republicanism. The Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs (1791), and the Letters on a Regicide Peace (1796-97), continued in the same vein, and established Burke as the great champion of conservatism, the upholder of the established order of things against the forces that were making for destruction.

Matthew Arnold speaks of Burke as a man who "saturated politics with thought." It is well known that as an orator he was ineffective, and that the qualities which make his essays so powerful detracted from his success on the floor of the House. But he could afford to give up the success of the moment for the more lasting triumphs he has won. His was the noblest prose of the century in England; massive, pregnant with ideas, yet always clear; logically concise, yet vibrant with an emotion that colors his paragraphs as a kindred emotion colors the great utterances of Lincoln.

Lord Morley's Life, in the E. M. L., is a good biography of Burke. Various editions of his speeches are readily accessible; the Select Works, edited by E. J. Payne (Clarendon Press, 3 vols.), is excellent.

THE PRECURSORS OF ROMANTICISM

The poets thus roughly and somewhat inaccurately classed together are more important to the student of English literary history as a group than as individuals. They wrote during the years when the ideals established by Dryden and Pope and maintained by Johnson were dominant in England, and they mark the gradual turning of the tide towards Romanticism. At no time before Wordsworth was the dominance of the Pseudo-Classicists seriously challenged; but that a new spirit was abroad even during the hey-day of the old order, the work of these men, and of Gray and Cowper, is ample testimony. In freedom from literary rule and precept, in choice of forms and material which if not actually new were at least comparatively new to the eighteenth century, in their unusual attitude towards nature and man, and in their instinct for self-expression, these men unmistakably foreshadowed the age of Wordsworth and Byron.

Allan Ramsay (1686-1758), a Scotchman, did much to continue the old tradition of Scottish song and ballad, and furnished Burns with models for some of his best work. James Thomson (1700-48), was also born in Scotland, but went up to London in 1725. Here he attained renown as the author of The Seasons (1730), a descriptive poem portraying country life during the changing year. Both the material and the form—blank verse—were new to the eighteenth century; still more unusual was The Castle of Indolence (1748), which remains to this day one of the best imitations of both the form and mood of Spenser's Faerie Queene. Robert Blair (1699-1746), is remembered as the author of one poem, The Grave (1743), in blank verse, a gloomy if at times effective monologue that attained a considerable vogue at the time and had some influence on later poets. Edward Young (1681-1765), although the author of much besides the Night Thoughts (1742), owes his fame to this one poem. In blank verse which at times rises to a genuine eloquence, Young discourses on "Life, Death, and Immortality," in much the mood of Blair's Grave. James Macpherson (1736-96) was the author of the so-called poems of Ossian. It is probable that Macpherson built up his forgeries around some genuine fragments of old Celtic verse; but for the mood of the poems, the "delight in sorrow," and the striking portrayal of mountain scenery, he alone was responsible. During his lifetime the cheat was suspected; Dr. Johnson, for instance, refused to be taken in; but despite this uncertainty these "mountain monotones" attained a tremendous popularity in England and on the continent. William Collins (1721-59) brought to the mid-eighteenth century a lyric instinct and a finished technique that mark him as one of the most distinguished poets of the period. During a life that was short and clouded by insanity Collins wrote a series of odes and a few lyrics which, however little they may have appealed to the mass of his contemporaries, have found admirers in every succeeding generation. Thomas Chatterton (1752-70) is like Macpherson famous for his literary forgeries. At the age of fifteen he planned and in large part executed a cycle of romantic tales, cast in an imitation middle-English dialect, and represented as the work of a fifteenth century poet named Rowley. Disappointed in his hope to make a living as a man of letters, Chatterton poisoned himself in his London garret, and the world has not ceased to wonder at the largeness and splendor of the boy's poetic accomplishment and promise. William Blake (1757-1827), poet, artist, engraver, and mystic, was one of the most eccentric of English men of letters, and as such has had little influence on the main current of English verse. But the simple perfection and daring imagery of Blake's lyrics, especially the Songs of Innocence (1789), and Songs of Experience (1794), are untouched by the obscurity of his longer works, and mark him as one of the masters of English song. George Crabbe (1754-1832), though he did most of his work after the Lyrical Ballads had been published, clung to the eighteenth century couplet that connects him with Pope. But his determination to picture with unvarnished truthfulness the life of a small English town makes The Village (1783) and The Borough (1810) unlike the conventional description of the eighteenth century, and Crabbe is on the whole a herald of the new age.

GRAY (1716-1771)

Thomas Gray's life was uneventful. He was born in London, December, 1716. At Eton he met Horace Walpole, whose name is connected with the publication of some of Gray's most famous poems. He went to Pembroke College, Cambridge, but left in 1738 without a degree. In 1739 Gray and Walpole together made the "grand tour," the records of which are preserved in some of Gray's most memorable letters. From 1742 until his death in 1771 he lived as an academic recluse at Cambridge. In 1757 he declined the laureateship; though appointed Professor of Modern History in 1768 he delivered no lectures. One of the most scholarly of English poets, he shrank instinctively from the notoriety attendant upon publication; he printed but few verses, and the most famous, the Elegy, he published only because of the fear that a mangled and pirated copy was to appear in a magazine. But despite his sensitive and shrinking nature, the range of Gray's intellectual life was very wide; his letters and miscellaneous writings witness the fact that he was interested both in the worlds of art and letters and in the political and social development of his time.

His verse would be important in whatever age it had been written; but coming as it did during the years of transition from Pseudo-Classicism to Romanticism, it is unusually significant. Gray himself illustrates the change that was gradually to take place in all English literature. Beginning as a classicist, he wrote the Ode to Spring (1742), and the Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College (1742), in conventional eighteenth century "poetic diction," and indulged in a good deal of conventional moralizing. The Elegy, published 1751, although begun many years before, was written in an approved classical form, but is distinctly different in mood from the earlier work, and is the most finished example of the "grave-yard school" which, including Blair's Grave and Young's Night Thoughts, looks back to Il Penseroso for much of its inspiration. The Progress of Poesy and The Bard, printed by Walpole in 1757, are still farther from eighteenth century ideals. But it was not till 1761, when Gray wrote The Fatal Sisters and The Descent of Odin, that his work became thoroughly romantic.

Dr. Johnson's criticism, in his Life of Gray, is unsympathetic, but valuable as showing the attitude of the eighteenth century towards a poet of the new order. Gosse's Life, in the E. M. L., is a good biography. Phelps's Selections, in the Athenaeum Press Series (Ginn), is an inexpensive edition of Gray's best work, both prose and poetry, and contains much valuable editorial matter. Gosse's edition of the complete works (4 vols., Macmillan) is the standard. Arnold's essay on Gray (Essays in Criticism, Macmillan) is appreciative, and in most respects accurate.

COWPER (1731-1800)

William Cowper, one of the pathetic figures in English literature, lived a life that was clouded by periodic attacks of religious melancholia and insanity, and was otherwise uneventful. Born in 1731, in Hertfordshire, he spent seven years at the Westminster School. In 1754 he was called to the bar; the dread of a public examination before assuming a clerkship in the House of Lords precipitated his first attack of insanity in 1763. From this he did not recover for eighteen months; never again was he free from the spectre. The rest of his life is memorable for his friendship with Morley Unwin and his wife Mary Unwin. Mr. Unwin, a clergyman, died in 1765; in 1767 Cowper and Mrs. Unwin began their life together at Olney. It is probable that Cowper would have married Mrs. Unwin had he not suffered a second attack of insanity in 1773. After recovering, Cowper, in need of some regular employment, began to write verses, and amused himself by carpentry, gardening, and caring for tame hares and other household pets. His first great work, The Task, appeared in 1785. In this long poem Cowper allowed his fancy to play over things in general; as a result The Task is a composite of verse descriptive of the English landscape that he knew and loved, of satire and comment on conditions in Europe, and of accounts of Cowper's life. It is written in blank verse; the fact that it became generally popular is indicative that the tyranny of the couplet was already being broken. John Gilpin, Cowper's most famous piece of humorous verse, also appeared in 1785; in 1791 he completed his translation of Homer. The remaining years were darkened by sorrow and melancholia. In 1794 he was again insane; in 1796 Mrs. Unwin died. The Castaway and To Mary picture with poignant force the pathetic blackness of this period.

Aside from the interest attaching to Cowper's poetry because of its inherent worth, there is a significance in his work which students of literary history have not failed to mark. In a real sense Cowper was the spiritual predecessor of the great Romanticists. He had a sympathy for outcast humanity as sincere as Shelley's, if less passionate; his love of nature was as deep-seated as Wordsworth's, though his musings on nature never led him to the heights which Wordsworth attained through his "impassioned contemplation."

The best one volume edition of Cowper is the Globe (Macmillan); the volume of selections in the Athenæum Press series (Ginn) is representative and inexpensive. Southey's Life, though written long ago, is still valuable; more recent is Goldwin Smith's in the E. M. L. Leslie Stephen's essay, in his Hours in a Library, and Bagehot's, in his Literary Studies, are suggestive.

BURNS (1759-1796)

Robert Burns lived a life of hard work, interrupted by periods of reckless and enthusiastic relaxation; a life which from some points of view was a tragic failure, involving many besides Burns himself in the wreck. Yet it is noteworthy that such stern moralists as Wordsworth and Whittier should have been willing to forgive Burns's many weaknesses, and to point only to the largeness of his accomplishment.

He was born in Ayrshire, near the west coast of Scotland, in 1759. His father, William Burnes, was a hard-working man of the peasant class, but mentally superior to the average small farmer, and the equal of any one in ambition for his children. By the time Burns was fifteen he was doing much of the work of his father's farm; in 1784, when his father died, he and his brother Gilbert undertook farming for themselves, but with poor financial results. It was about this time that he met Jean Armour, later his wife. During 1785 and 1786 he wrote much of the verse on which his fame depends; had he never published anything but the 1786 volume of Poems, Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect, he would have been sure of ultimate recognition. Here, in the little volume printed at Kilmarnock, the proceeds of which were to defray the cost of Burns's intended emigration to America, were The Two Dogs, The Holy Fair, The Cotter's Saturday Night, To a Mouse, To a Daisy, and the Epistle to Davie. The success of this venture prompted Burns to change his plans, and in the same year he went up to Edinburgh, where he became the lion of the season. A second volume, published in Edinburgh in 1787, brought him more renown and a considerable sum of money. In 1788 he married Jean Armour, and took up farming at Ellisland. But his venture proved unsuccessful, and in 1789 he was glad to fall back on an appointment to the excise service that brought him fifty pounds per year. In 1791 he moved to Dumfries, and there, after five years of hard labor as exciseman, he died.

Burns's poetry has at times been overpraised, especially by Scottish critics; but after all allowances have been made for national or personal prejudices, much remains of permanent value. His best songs, written in most part during the last six years of his life, his simple pictures of Scottish domesticity, his satires on cant and make-believe in Church and State, and his two unique contributions to English poetry, Tam O' Shanter and The Jolly Beggars,—these have passed out of the narrow circle of Scottish and local verse, and have become part of the world's literature.

The best edition of Burns's poetry is the Centenary (four volumes, T. C. and E. C. Jack). The one volume Cambridge edition (Houghton Mifflin) contains the Centenary text and some of the notes. Shairp's Life, in the E. M. L., is the best brief biography. Carlyle's well known essay, Stevenson's, in his Familiar Studies of Men and Books, and Henley's, in the Centenary and Cambridge editions, are all valuable.

WORDSWORTH (1770-1850)

William Wordsworth was born at Cockermouth, Cumberland, in 1770. After spending his school years among the lakes and hills he went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, where in 1791 he graduated. Twice during the Revolution he visited France; the first time on a walking tour during one of his long vacations from Cambridge, the second in 1791, after his graduation. The first experience was uneventful, the second time he had a liaison with Annette Vallon, mother of his natural daughter Carolyn, and after a few months of hesitation and uncertainty became an enthusiastic supporter of the Revolution. At the close of 1792 he returned to England: why, is not absolutely certain. The years from 1792 to 1795 were darkened by doubt and spiritual distress. The excesses of the Terror, which he had at first tried to justify as the necessary preliminary to a social regeneration, became more and more appalling; gradually his faith in the French cause was shaken, and at the same time he began to lose faith in humanity. From this state of despairing uncertainty he was recalled by the sympathetic friendship of his sister Dorothy. On a precariously small income the two began housekeeping, and under the influence of Dorothy, and freed from the necessity of earning his daily bread, Wordsworth devoted himself as seriously as Milton had done to preparation for the writing of poetry. From 1795 to 1797 the brother and sister lived at Racedown, Dorsetshire; here they were visited by Coleridge, at whose suggestion the Wordsworths moved to Alfoxden, Somersetshire, within a mile and a half of Coleridge's home at Nether Stowey. Here was formed one of the most notable of literary friendships. Coleridge encouraged Wordsworth by his sympathetic praise; Wordsworth in turn stimulated Coleridge. Together the two men tramped over the Quantock hills, and planned the volume that appeared in 1798 as the Lyrical Ballads. The importance of the work was two-fold. Historically it is significant in the development of Romanticism as the first example of conscious protest against the ideals of Pseudo-Classicism. And here the two friends published some of their noblest work—the Lines on Tintern Abbey, and The Rime of the Ancient Mariner,—poems which would have brought distinction to any volume.

When the Lyrical Ballads appeared the two poets, with Dorothy Wordsworth, were already on their way to Germany, where Wordsworth wrote some of his brief lyrics and began The Prelude. Returning to England in 1799, he took a house at Grasmere, in the lake country where he had grown up, and where he was to make his home for the rest of his life. In 1802 he married Mary Hutchinson; in 1813 he moved to Rydal Mount, a few miles from Grasmere. The same year he was pensioned by the government by being appointed Distributor of Stamps for Westmoreland. The remainder of his life was uneventful. Like others of his circle, he grew more and more conservative as time passed; occasionally he made a trip to Scotland or the continent, but there is little to record until 1843. In this year the laureateship fell vacant through the death of Southey; the appointment of Wordsworth was a tribute to his genius and a mark of the esteem in which he was held by the nation. Seven years later he died, and was buried in the churchyard at Grasmere.

Wordsworth wrote his finest verse comparatively early in his life. Tintern Abbey appeared in 1798; the best sonnets soon after the turn of the century; The Prelude, though not published until 1850, was completed in 1805; the Intimations of Immortality was published in 1807. During his last forty years he added much to the bulk of his poetry, but wrote few of his greatest poems. And yet fame came to Wordsworth late in life. In 1800 he was an innovator, whose theories appeared heretical, and whose great work was curiously intermingled with poems that the critics quickly singled out for ridicule. By 1840, however, the theories propounded in the preface to the second edition of the Lyrical Ballads had in part been accepted by the public, and in part modified by Wordsworth himself; his poor work was being forgotten; and his great contribution to the world's literature had been recognized.

The precise nature of this contribution cannot be explained in the present limits, but two suggestions can be made: no poet had ever written so nobly of the beauties of nature; few poets had done more than Wordsworth to point out the essential dignity of mankind. And in one respect Wordsworth was unique. Always keenly sensitive to the beauty of nature, and aware that from association with nature came peace and consolation to mankind, Wordsworth cast about for a reason for a phenomenon difficult to explain by any theory that regarded nature as inanimate or unconscious. In Tintern Abbey he suggests his solution of the problem. In moments of mystic contemplation it had been vouchsafed to him to see the divine unity of all creation; a spiritual unity, in which nature and man were but different manifestations of the same creative Power, and capable of influencing one another because each was conscious of the other's sympathy and understanding, and both were animated by the same Divinity

"Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man:
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things."

Other men had held such a philosophy; it remained for Wordsworth to give expression to it in the noblest verse of the nineteenth century.

The best one-volume editions of Wordsworth are the Oxford (Oxford Univ. Press), the Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin), and the Globe (Macmillan). The standard biography is that of George McLean Harper. Legouis's La Jeunesse de Guillaume Wordsworth (translated by Matthews, Dent and Co.), is an exhaustive study of the years covered by The Prelude. Arnold's essay in the Essays in Criticism, Pater's in Appreciations, and Sir Walter Raleigh's Wordsworth are all authoritative. For contemporary criticism nothing is better than Coleridge's in the Biographia Literaria.

COLERIDGE (1772-1834)

Samuel Taylor Coleridge was born in Devonshire, in 1772. He received his preparatory education at Christ's Hospital, London, where his precocity gained for him the title of "the inspired charity boy." Here he met Lamb, whose essays picture the life of these early years, and who remained one of his few constant friends. From Christ's Hospital Coleridge went up to Cambridge University just as Wordsworth was leaving. His career was erratic, and in 1794 he left without a degree. He had already met Robert Southey, with whom he planned the ideal commonwealth on the banks of the Susquehanna which the dreamers named "Pantisocracy." In 1795 he married; in 1796 he brought out his first volume of verse. In 1797 he visited the Wordsworths at Racedown; the next year, in company with Wordsworth, he was planning the Lyrical Ballads. To this volume Coleridge contributed four poems, most important of which was The Rime of the Ancient Mariner. In 1798, the year of the Lyrical Ballads, Coleridge went with Wordsworth to Germany, and plunged into the study of German philosophy and literature. In 1800 he settled at Keswick, a few miles from Grasmere, where he had the companionship of Wordsworth and Southey. The remainder of his life was in many ways unfortunate. His poetical powers were stunted by his addiction to laudanum; he planned much, but accomplished little. Occasional lectures on literature, much brilliant but rather formless conversation on philosophy, and very little actual writing, occupied his last twenty years. Like Wordsworth and Southey, he became more and more conservative as he grew older, and looked back with horror on the youthful enthusiasms of his republican days.

Much of Coleridge's prose work is significant and interesting, but it is as the author of the Ancient Mariner, Kubla Khan, and Christabel, that he is remembered. In these poems he was using material the most unusual, often frankly supernatural; but by the witchery of his art was able to induce in the reader what he himself in a fine phrase calls the "momentary suspension of disbelief which constitutes poetic faith." He was one of the great geniuses of English literature, and one of the pathetic group the promise of whose early years was never completely fulfilled. But in the case of Coleridge the actual accomplishment, fragmentary though it is, is sufficient to merit all the praise that time has brought him.

The best edition of Coleridge's poetry is the two volume publication of the Oxford University Press; the Globe (Macmillan) is convenient, and contains an admirable biographical sketch by J. D. Campbell, which is not surpassed in value by Traill's Life in the E. M. L. William Hazlitt's My First Acquaintance With Poets is a classic portrait of Coleridge as he appeared to a gifted contemporary; Carlyle's portrait in his Life of John Sterling (chap. "Coleridge") is brilliant if somewhat unsympathetic.

SCOTT (1771-1832)

Sir Walter Scott was born in Edinburgh, in 1771, the son of an attorney, and a member of the Clan Buccleuch. After a boyhood spent in reading, and assimilating Scottish legend, he entered the University of Edinburgh, but did not take a degree. When he was twenty-one he was called to the bar, and though his practice was never extensive, he was always in more or less intimate contact with the law. His first literary work of importance was a group of translations from the German, Bürger's Lenore appearing as Scott's William and Helen. In 1802-03 he published The Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, the best collection of Scottish ballads until Child's great work began to appear in 1882. Between 1805 and 1810 Scott won an international reputation as a narrative poet through The Lay of the Last Minstrel, Marmion, and The Lady of the Lake. In 1813 he bought Abbotsford, where he established himself as a country gentleman. About this time Byron's poetry began winning the popularity which Scott's had formerly enjoyed. Realizing that he could not compete with Byron, Scott took up a manuscript untouched since 1805, wrote the last two-thirds of it in six weeks, and in 1814 published Waverley, the first of his historical novels. Between 1814 and 1832 he wrote in all thirty-two novels, and did a good deal of other literary work besides. At the accession of George IV Scott was knighted and created a baronet; at this time—1821—he was probably the largest figure in the English literary world. But in 1826 the wheel of Fortune turned. In this year two publishing houses in which Scott was interested failed with large liabilities. Refusing to take advantage of the bankruptcy laws, though he knew that he was legally entitled to worked at the task, writing novels and receiving compensation at a rate unheard of, and turning over the proceeds to the creditors. But his life was not long enough. In 1831 a paralytic stroke enfeebled his powers, if not his will; in 1832 he died, leaving a part of the debt to be cleared off by royalties received after his death.

Scott's contribution to English literature was great and many-sided. His work as editor and collector of Scottish ballads was more valuable than that of any of his contemporaries; his poetical romances are among the best examples of English narrative verse. But his chief glory is the magnificent series of novels: the studies of Scottish life and manners, such as The Heart of Midlothian, and the tales of past history, such as Ivanhoe and Quentin Durward. Through these novels Scott made the largest single contribution to the great stock of English fiction.

The best source of information about Scott is the Life by his son-in-law, J. G. Lockhart (7 vols., Black). Briefer biographies are Hutton's, in the E. M. L., and Saintsbury's (Scribner's). Sir Walter's own Journal (David Douglas) gives interesting first-hand information concerning the later years of his life.

BYRON (1788-1824)

George Gordon Byron was born in London, January, 1788, but lived for some years of his youth in Scotland. In 1798, through the death of a great-uncle, he became the sixth Baron Byron, and the inheritor of the ruined family seat, Newstead Abbey. As a boy he was hot-tempered, proud, and unnecessarily sensitive on account of a lameness that never left him. In 1805 he began at Trinity College, Cambridge, a career which was boisterously irregular, and only slightly distinguished by the appearance in 1807 of a volume of poems called Hours of Idleness. In 1809, when he had come of age, he took his seat in the House of Lords, and in the same year began the wanderings over Europe which were later to be described in Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, of which the first two cantos appeared in 1812. The result of this publication Byron has recorded in his statement that he awoke one morning and found himself famous. The next year, 1813, The Giaour began the series of oriental tales that outdid even Childe Harold in popularity. In January, 1815, he married Miss Anna Milbanke; a year later the two had separated, Lady Byron returning to her father's home, and the poet, ostracized by society, going to Switzerland, where for some time he was in the company of the Shelleys. From 1816 to 1819 he was much of the time in Venice, living a life that was currently reported to be a riot of debauchery, and in which, when all allowances have been made for the exaggerations of scandalous gossip, there were many black passages. The third and fourth cantos of Harold appeared in 1818; the same year he began Don Juan, publishing it at intervals from 1819 till his death. His dramas, of which Cain and Manfred are the greatest, appeared between 1821 and 1824; in 1822 he published the Vision of Judgment, a reply to Southey's eulogy of George III, and one of the most successful of all parodies. In 1823 the Greek revolutionists appealed to Byron for help against Turkey; to their call he responded enthusiastically and unselfishly. In January, 1824, he reached Greece; three months he spent at Missolonghi, drilling troops and combating fever; and then he died.

Byron has to his credit four distinct accomplishments, any one of which, unless it be the first, would have made him a poet of rank. He expressed in his verse, and in his personality, the melancholy pride and despair, and the revolt against society, which were general in Europe during the years following the collapse of the French Revolution, but which have come to be considered characteristically "Byronic." He was a brilliant teller of tales, which, though lacking many of the finer poetic qualities, are yet masterly narratives. He was a descriptive poet whose pictures of the grander manifestations of Nature's power were painted with a sweep and magnificence unequalled in English verse. And in Don Juan, his masterpiece, he showed himself a daring and trenchant critic of contemporary society, and of the foibles of human nature at large. It is to his carelessness of form, and his lack of intellectual power, that Byron owes the refusal of the world to grant him a place in the small circle of the greatest poets.

The best one volume edition of Byron is the Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin); the standard library edition is that of G. E. Prothero and E. H. Coleridge (John Murray). Essays and biographical memoirs have been numerous; Nichol's Life, in the E. M. L., and Noel's, in the Great Writers series, are both good. Matthew Arnold's volume of selections in the Golden Treasury series is prefaced by a valuable essay.

SHELLEY (1792-1822)

Percy Bysshe Shelley was born in Field Place, Sussex, in 1792. After some years at Eton, where the yoke of educational tradition galled him, he went up to Oxford in October, 1810. In March, 1811, he was expelled for having written a pamphlet entitled On the Necessity of Atheism, and left college determined to give his life to the cause of intellectual freedom. During the summer of the same year he eloped with Harriet Westbrook, a London school-girl, whom he married in Edinburgh. His life with her came to an end in the summer of 1814 when he left England with Mary Godwin, the brilliant daughter of William Godwin, whose philosophical liberalism strengthened Shelley in his defiance of law and tradition. In 1816 Harriet Westbrook Shelley drowned herself; shortly thereafter Shelley married Mary Godwin. By 1818 he was living in Italy, virtually as an exile, deprived by law of the custody of Harriet's children, and fearing to return to England lest further legal action be taken against him. But here in Italy he did his greatest work, Prometheus Unbound, The Cenci, Adonais, and Hellas, besides a large number of magnificent lyrics, all appearing between 1818 and 1822. In July of 1822 Shelley was drowned while sailing in the Gulf of Spezzia.

To understand Shelley one must think of him as both poet and philosopher. His poetical reputation rests primarily upon his lyric power. Even in Prometheus it is the lyrical and not the dramatic elements that make the work successful, in the better known and briefer works, such as The Cloud, To a Skylark, To Night, and the Ode to the West Wind, the imagery is daringly magnificent, and the technique virtually perfect. But Shelley was at least as much interested in his message as in the form which this message assumed. Living in the years when the conservative reaction after the failure of the French Revolution was most pronounced, he never allowed his faith in humanity to be shaken, but constantly urged the perfectibility of mankind, and the power of love to regenerate the world. When once custom had been abolished, warfare ended, and the tyranny of church and state forever broken, then, Shelley believed, the golden age of freedom and love shadowed forth in the last act of Prometheus Unbound would be realized on the earth. There was, of course, much of the dreamer in Shelley; but to call him with Arnold "a beautiful and ineffectual angel, beating in the void his luminous wings in vain," is to do him scant justice. For in some respects—as witness his sympathy for animals, his hatred of war, and his passionate longing for intellectual and religious freedom,—Shelley's weakness was only that of the man "ahead of his times." And the very essence of his philosophy, self-sacrifice for the good of the world, was nearer the essence of Christianity than the Churchmen who condemned him for atheism were willing to admit.

Good one volume editions of Shelley's poetry are the Globe (Macmillan), Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin), and Oxford (Oxford Univ Press). The Life by Dowden (two vols., Lippincott), is exhaustive, but is somewhat injured by a good deal of special pleading. Symonds's Life, in the E. M. L., is an excellent brief biography. Trelawney's Recollections of the Last Days of Byron and Shelley is a vivid contemporary account of the close of Shelley's life.

KEATS (1795-1821)

John Keats was born in London, in 1795. He was the son of Thomas Keats, at first chief hostler and later manager of the "Swan and Hoop" inn, and of Frances Jennings, whose father was the proprietor of the inn. When Keats was eight years old his parents, eager for his advancement, sent him to school at Enfield. Here he won the literary prizes "as a matter of course." His father died in 1804, and at the death of his mother in 1810 Keats found himself under the guardianship of two successful but somewhat narrow-minded merchants. They at once withdrew him from school and apprenticed him to a surgeon at Edmonton. In 1814, when his indenture was cancelled by mutual agreement, he was sufficiently interested in medicine to continue his studies in the London hospitals. But already his chief concern was with poetry, and in 1815 he wrote at least one of his great sonnets, On First Looking Into Chapman's Homer. By the latter part of 1816 he had definitely made up his mind to give his life to poetry; in 1817 appeared his first volume, Poems by John Keats, containing the sonnet on Homer and Sleep and Poetry, besides some less noteworthy verse. In the spring of 1818 came Endymion, which at first passed unnoticed, but later was savagely attacked by Blackwood's and the Quarterly for its formlessness and lack of restraint. Towards the end of 1818 Keats met Fanny Brawne, with whom he was soon in love, but whom he could not marry on account of his poor health. In February of 1820 he was definitely threatened with consumption; when in July his third volume, containing the great odes and The Eve of St. Agnes, appeared, Keats was so ill that a voyage to Italy was proposed as the only means of saving his life. In the middle of September he sailed with his friend Severn, and reached Rome in December. Here, in February, 1821, he died, and was buried in the Protestant cemetery.

Keats was first and last an artist, keenly sensitive to beauty, and comparatively unaffected by the changes that came over Europe during his lifetime. Yearning for an ideal beauty as his own hero Endymion longed for his moon-goddess, Keats gratified this desire through the creation of beauty in his verse. In the 1817 volume, and in Endymion, it was largely beauty of detail that occupied him, beauty of lines and passages rich with "a fine excess" of sensuous imagery. But the poems of 1820, especially St. Agnes and the odes, have all the imaginative richness of the earlier work, and are strengthened by a sense of form that had hitherto been lacking.

Good editions of Keats's poems are the Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin), the Globe (Macmillan), and the Oxford (Oxford Univ. Press). The best is H. Buxton Forman's (Gowans and Gray, Glasgow; 4 vols.). Sir Sidney Colvin's Life in the E. M. L. is a good brief biography.

LAMB (1775-1834)

Charles Lamb was born in London in 1775, the son of a lawyer's clerk. From 1782 to 1789 he was a student at Christ's Hospital, where he formed with Coleridge a friendship that was to be life-long. After leaving school he went to work as a clerk in the South Sea House; in April of 1792 he moved to the East India House and began the service that was to be ended thirty-three years later when Lamb was pensioned by the Company. The year 1796 brought tragedy into the household of his father, with whom Lamb was still living. A taint of insanity ran in the family; in this year Mary Lamb became violently insane and killed her mother. The rest of his life Lamb spent in caring for his sister—the Bridget Elia of the essays—who was subject to the recurrence of her malady, but who in her rational periods was a sympathetic and stimulating companion. Lamb's first literary work of importance was written in actual collaboration with his sister the Tales from Shakespeare (1807). But although Lamb had written some verse and a good deal of prose before the Tales appeared, and had published his collected Works in 1818, it was not till 1820 that he began the series of essays by which he is best known. In this year the London Magazine was established; to it Lamb contributed the Essays of Elia. The latter years of his life were uneventful. His sister demanded an increasing amount of care, and though his pension brought him leisure, he did little after its bestowal to add to his reputation as a man of letters.

The charm of Lamb's essays is due in part to the humor and pathos which pervade them, and in part to the intimate relationship which Lamb at once establishes between himself and the reader. Writing as if for a circle of friends, Lamb has put his own personality into his essays so completely that he has become one of the best known of English writers, while by his simple unpretentiousness he has concealed an art as great as Addison's, albeit of a very different sort.

The best edition of Lamb's works is that of E. V. Lucas (Methuen), who is also the author of the best biography.

HAZLITT (1778-1830)

William Hazlitt, the son of a Unitarian minister, was educated for the ministry, studied art for a time, was encouraged by Coleridge to pursue an interest in metaphysics, and first came before the public as a writer on philosophical subjects. The maturing of his tastes finally led him to literature and journalism. He wrote for several of the dailies and periodicals, doing most work for Leigh Hunt's Examiner. He was acquainted with the Lake poets, Lamb, and the London literary set, and though he sooner or later quarrelled with almost all his friends the estrangement was not usually permanent. His work of greatest general interest was done in Characters of Shakespeare's Plays (1817), Lectures on the English Poets (1818), English Comic Writers (1819), Dramatic Literature of the Age of Elizabeth (1821), and two collections of miscellaneous essays, Table Talk and The Plain Speaker. His interest in the French Revolution and Napoleon led him to write a life of Napoleon, not very much esteemed. Personally Hazlitt was shy, irascible, and curiously susceptible to feminine attraction. As a critic he is at once independent and dogmatic, of fine taste, and on the whole sympathetic in his attitude toward the newer spirit in literature. With Lamb and Coleridge he did valuable service to the cause of literature by helping to establish a proper appreciation of Shakespeare and his fellow dramatists. His style, not so intimate or charming as Lamb's, has a rich personal flavor and vivacity, and is superior to Lamb's in point and vigor.

The standard edition of Hazlitt is edited by Waller and Glover (Dent). Augustine Birrell's Life (E. M. L.) is good; more extensive are the Memoirs (2 vols., 1867) by W. C. Hazlitt.

DE QUINCEY (1785-1859)

Thomas De Quincey was born at Manchester in 1785. He was a precocious boy, and when in 1803 he went up to Oxford University he took with him not only the ability to converse with ease in Greek and Latin, but a considerable experience with modern life as well,—experience gained during a runaway sojourn in Wales and a year's existence in the slums of London. He left Oxford in 1808 to begin the study of law; in 1809, however, he leased Wordsworth's old home at Grasmere, and began his career as a man of letters. Here he remained till 1820, when he went up to London to write for the London Magazine, to which during 1821 he contributed the Confessions of an English Opium Eater. In 1828 he moved again, this time to Edinburgh, where he wrote for Blackwood's and the Edinburgh Literary Gazette. He died in Edinburgh towards the close of 1859, after half a century of arduous and persistent journalistic work.

De Quincey's fame would be greater had he done less discursive and trivial work; the Confessions, however, have placed him among the masters of English prose. This, his most characteristic production, is in part a record of his experiences with opium, and in part a chronicle of his early years. He first tasted opium during his residence at Oxford; by 1819 he was in complete bondage to the drug. The Suspiria de Profundis, in which the eloquent prose of the Confessions becomes even richer and more exotic in its splendor, is also associated with opium, for it is here that De Quincey pictures with poetic magnificence the phantasmagoric creations of his dreams. It is in large part this stylistic richness that makes De Quincey's work memorable; his is thoroughly romantic prose; prose that could have been written only during the early years of the nineteenth century, or, with some differences of language, in the seventeenth. To the writers of Elizabethan England De Quincey undoubtedly owed much; the rarest qualities of his style, however, he imitated from nobody.

De Quincey's chief works are accessible in many editions; an excellent collected edition is that by David Masson (A. and C. Black). Lord Morley's Life (E. M. L.) is a good biography.

LANDOR (1775-1864)

Walter Savage Landor was born at Warwick, in January, 1775. After studying at Rugby he entered Trinity College, Oxford, in 1793, only to leave one year later under discipline because of the exuberance of his republican principles. His early verses were published in 1795; in 1798 came Gebir, his first work of great importance. His enthusiasm for liberty prompted him in 1808 to raise and equip a regiment in the Spanish army that was fighting Napoleon; his military career, however, was short. In 1811 he published, anonymously, his drama Count Julian. In 1821 he removed to Italy, three years later appeared the first series of Imaginary Conversations. These, with the Hellenics (1847), are the works on which Landor's fame rests most securely; though his later years were unusually productive, he never wrote more nobly than in these two collections. From 1835 to 1858 he lived in England, somewhat embittered by domestic disturbances, in 1858 he returned to Italy, where he lived until his death in 1864.

To one who reads chiefly the Hellenics and Imaginary Conversations, Landor appears restrained and austere, and very unlike the enthusiastic Romanticists who were his contemporaries. But it is largely because of his lofty dignity and restraint that Landor is significant. These qualities he found in the classical literature from which came his inspiration; no English poet save Milton has done more to bring over into English literature the temper and ideals of the genuine Classicism that had been so misrepresented by the poets of the eighteenth century. That Landor, writing from 1798 to 1840, should have been able to do this, indicates at once how far removed he was from the majority of his contemporaries, and how great were his own powers.

Landor's Complete Works have been edited by C. G. Crump (Dent and Co.); selections from the Conversations are in the Camelot Series, from the poetry, in the Canterbury Poets (Parker P. Simmons). The best Life is by Sir Sidney Colvin, in the E. M. L.

TENNYSON (1809-1892)

The year 1809 was good to England, for it gave her Gladstone, Darwin, Edward Fitzgerald, and Alfred Tennyson. The last was born in the little village of Somersby, in Lincolnshire, where his father was rector. The family was a large one, consisting of eight brothers (of whom Alfred was the fourth) and four sisters, and poetry ran in it, for they nearly all wrote verse, and Charles and Frederick gained some reputation as poets. The Tennysons used to spend their summers at Mablethorpe, where the "league-long rollers" of the North Sea thunder in upon flat beaches; Tennyson's many and varied descriptions of waves are to be traced back to this early acquaintance with the ocean, just as his landscapes frequently recall the rolling wolds of the Lincolnshire country. Charles and Alfred went together to Louth Grammar School, but after 1820 were taught at home by their father.

In 1827 a Louth bookseller printed a little volume entitled Poems by Two Brothers, the authors being Charles and Alfred Tennyson. These juvenilia make a somewhat amusing parade of schoolboy learning, and are pervaded by an assumed melancholy, in which the great contemporary influence of Byron is evident. Alfred was an ardent admirer of Byron. He has told us how he was affected by the news of Byron's death in 1824: "I thought the whole world was at an end; I thought everything was over and finished for everyone—that nothing else mattered. I remember I walked out alone and carved 'Byron is dead' into the sandstone." In 1828 the two brothers went up to Trinity College, Cambridge, where they formed friendships with several men later well known; in particular, the intimacy of Alfred with Arthur Hallam, son of the historian, was to bear the noblest poetic fruit. He continued writing verse, and in 1829 gained the Chancellor's medal with his poem Timbuctoo, in which now and then we catch the first faint echoes of the sonorous roll and melody of the Tennysonian blank verse. He left Cambridge in February, 1831, without taking a degree, recalled to Somersby by the illness of his father, who died in March. While yet at Cambridge he had published the first volume bearing his own name, Poems, Chiefly Lyrical, containing among much that was merely pretty and too sugary some really good things like Mariana and The Poet. Late in 1832 appeared another volume of Poems, wherein the presence of such things as The Lady of Shalott, Oenone, The Palace of Art, and A Dream of Fair Women foreshadowed the coming greatness.

In 1833 Arthur Hallam died in Vienna. The blow fell heavily on Tennyson, and for ten years he published no more poetry. The years were far from wasted, however, for he was busy constantly revising old verse and writing new. The result of this steady labor of self-criticism was seen in the two volumes of Poems of 1842. The more varied interest, the broader human sympathy, and the perfect artistry of this work made Tennyson's fame secure. Many of the poems of 1832 were reprinted in their present form, and Tennyson never wrote finer poetry than in Ulysses and Morte d'Arthur. One result of the public recognition accorded to these volumes was the granting to the poet in 1845 of an annual pension of two hundred pounds. The Princess appeared in 1847, though the lyrics which constitute one of its chief beauties were not added till a third edition. The year 1850 was, as Hallam Tennyson says, the "golden year" of Tennyson's life. He published In Memoriam, upon which he had been working for sixteen years, he married Emily Sellwood, with whom he had been in love for years, but whom he had been unable to marry because of comparative poverty; and on the death of Wordsworth he was made Laureate. Three years later the Tennysons moved to the house in Farringford, in the Isle of Wight, which was their home for the rest of their lives. Maud came out in 1855, and four years later the first four of the Idylls of the King; four more were added in 1869, one in 1871, one in 1872, and the series was completed in 1885. In 1864 were printed Enoch Arden and many of the English idylls. Late in life Tennyson turned to the writing of poetic drama, writing a trilogy on English history, Queen Mary (1875), Harold (1877), and Becket (1884), of which the last was acted with great popular favor by Henry Irving. Two or three other plays also made acting successes. The last years of Tennyson's life were full of travel, of work, and of honor. He was raised to the peerage in 1884, an honor which he accepted as a tribute to literature rather than to himself. He died in 1892, and was buried in Westminster Abbey beside his friend Browning.

Tennyson has been called the representative poet, and In Memoriam the representative poem of the Victorian era, because it expresses the compromise between religion and science which the era worked out. Tennyson accepts the nebular hypothesis, the theory of evolution, and other teachings of modern science, but succeeds in reconciling them with his faith in a benevolent and loving Power which makes all things work together for good. Along other lines, too, Tennyson best represents the thought of England during his period. He is thoroughly and typically English in his political ideas, standing conservatively for sobriety in freedom against what he considered the tendency to rash excess across the channel. As poet laureate he wrote a good deal of patriotic verse glorifying England and her great men. Although the English idylls contain many pictures and figures from common life, Tennyson was by temper aristocratic, never, for instance, speaking for humanity as do Burns and Wordsworth.

Tennyson is a good, if not a great, story teller, but the idyll is the form he manages most successfully, a form in which he can use ornament freely, and upon which he can bestow his remarkable power of detailed description. The Idylls of the King and The Princess are full of superb descriptive passages, and no poet has been more successful in providing a suitable setting and creating a proper atmosphere for his narrative. In sheer artistry Tennyson is perhaps the first of English poets. In majesty and harmony his blank verse rivals that of Milton, and has a flexibility and variety surpassing Milton's. In lyric verse, too, Tennyson is one of the supreme artists, exhibiting a felicity of phrase and a command of poetic device which at times, as in The Bugle Song, rise to pure magic.

The new Works of Tennyson (Macmillan 1913), with a memoir by the poet's son and Tennyson's own notes, is the best single-volume edition. The authoritative life is the two-volume Memoir by Hallam, the present Lord Tennyson (Macmillan). Tennyson, His Art and Relation to Modern Life, by Stopford Brooke (G. P. Putnam's Sons) is a good commentary.

BROWNING (1812-1889)

Robert Browning was born in Camberwell, on the outskirts of London, three years after Tennyson. Of formal schooling the boy had not much. A few years in a private school near home, some private tutoring, a few months in the University of London—this sums it up. His real education was gained in the family circle. Robert Browning, Senior, a clerk in the Bank of England, was scholarly and artistic by temperament, a good linguist, and the possessor of a large and curiously varied library. Young Browning was an omnivorous reader, and in his father's library he made the acquaintance of many of the odd, obscure people who figure so largely in his poetry. His mother, moreover, was something of an artist, and a good musician, and the boy inherited her love of art and music. An understanding of Browning's family life, of the manner of his training, and of the nature of his reading, makes more intelligible the curious character of his knowledge and his subject matter. A fact of first rate importance in Browning's life was his chance introduction to Shelley's poetry. Shelley's influence, to which Memorabilia bears strong witness, is seen in Browning's first published poem, Pauline (1833); this first effort evinces that interest in soul-development and personality which the poet exhibited all through his life. Pauline was followed in 1835 by Paracelsus, a study of the mediæval philosopher; though not widely read, it made for Browning friends in literary circles. It was through the encouragement of one of these friends, Macready the actor-manager, that Browning wrote his first play, Strafford, produced without much success in 1837. A visit to Italy in the next year opened to Browning's eyes the fascination of that country, which from that time on he loved almost as devotedly as he did England. The journey bore fruit in Sordello (1840), a long study of an obscure Italian poet, so difficult in style that it put a blight upon Browning's reputation which took years to remove. From 1841 to 1846 appeared, in cheap pamphlet form, a series of plays and poems called Bells and Pomegranates; in two of the numbers, Dramatic Lyrics (1843) and Dramatic Romances (1845), are some of Browning's finest short poems. Of the plays only A Blot in the 'Scutcheon was performed at the time, and that failed, partly on account of a quarrel between Browning and Macready.

In 1845 Browning became acquainted with Elizabeth Barrett, who had already proved herself to be the most gifted of all English woman poets. In spite of the fact that she had been for years an almost hopeless invalid, and without the consent of her savagely selfish father, Browning persuaded her to marry him in 1846, and the two went at once to Italy, which was their home for the fifteen years of their married life. History has recorded no marriage more ideal, and the perfect union of heart and mind and soul is revealed in several fine poems of Browning's, and with superlative beauty in Mrs. Browning's sequence of Sonnets from the Portuguese. After Mrs. Browning's death in 1861 her husband returned to England. His life thenceforth was uneventful, marked only by annual visits abroad, and the publication of a very large number of volumes. He died in Italy, but his body was brought back to England and laid in Westminster Abbey.

Browning's work falls naturally into three periods, the first ending in 1840 and containing the poems already mentioned. The publication of Pippa Passes in 1841 as the first number of Bells and Pomegranates marks the beginning of his finest work, which includes the two series of dramatic monologues entitled Men and Women (1855) and Dramatis Personæ (1864), and his masterpiece, The Ring and the Book (1868-69). The work of the last period from 1870 on, large in extent, and showing no diminution in vigor, is mainly philosophical and analytical, is inferior in beauty, and exhibits the poet's eccentricities in their worst form.

Browning's most characteristic contribution to literature is the dramatic monologue, a form which he practically invented and perfected. It gives him abundant opportunity for the display of his marvellous power of dramatic characterization, and for the use of the grotesque in material and method which distinguishes him from all other poets. At the same time he has won by a large number of fine lyrics a place as one of the great lyric poets of his country. All Browning's work bears the impress of a tremendously virile personality. His very difficulties are stimulating to a thoughtful reader. His robust optimism, based on a profound faith in the power of love, human and divine, and a profound belief in God and immortality, and summed up in the lines

"God's in his heaven, All's right with the world,"

must always be a tonic force upon his readers.

The Life by G. K. Chesterton (E. M. L.) is entertaining and suggestive. Longer and more detailed biographies are those by Mrs. Sutherland Orr (new ed., Houghton Mifflin), and W. H. Griffin and H. C. Minchin (Macmillan). Useful aids to study are Mrs. Orr's Handbook to the Works of Robert Browning (Bell) and Berdoe's Browning Cyclopaedia (Macmillan). Complete single volume editions are the Globe (new ed. 1915, with some material not readily accessible elsewhere, Macmillan) and the Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin).

FITZGERALD (1809-1883)

Fitzgerald was beyond cavil a genius, and there must have been attraction of personality in a man who could win and keep such friends as Tennyson, Thackeray, and Carlyle. But he drifted through life like a derelict, aimless, irresolute, and obscure. After graduating from Cambridge in 1830 he lived the life of a secluded country gentleman, publishing from time to time books which attracted little attention. The best of his work is translation: Six Dramas of Calderon, the Spanish playwright, and translations from Æschylus and Sophocles. The translation, or rather, paraphrase of Omar Khayyâm's Rubâiyyât was first printed in 1859; so few of the first edition of two hundred copies were sold that the remainder were marked down to a penny and placed in a second-hand book stall. Here the book was discovered by Rossetti and Swinburne, who spread the knowledge of its beauty through their set. The circle of readers gradually widened, and Fitzgerald made changes through three subsequent editions; it is the fourth edition, of 1879, which is now generally read. There have been other translations of the Rubâiyyât more faithful to the letter, but no other has so perfectly rendered the spirit, or has, like this, made a profound impression on English literature. In Fitzgerald old Omar found an ideal interpreter; for his philosophy, epicurean, agnostic, and fatalistic, yet tinged with a wistful longing that will not down, was perfectly attested to the key of the modern poet's temperament.

The definitive edition of Fitzgerald's works is edited by F. Bentham and E. Gosse (7 vols., Macmillan). His interesting letters are edited by W. A. Wright (Macmillan). The best life is that by A. C. Benson (E. M. L.)

CARLYLE (1795-1881)

Thomas Carlyle was born in the Scottish village of Ecclefechan in 1795. After graduating from the University of Edinburgh, where he spent four rather unsatisfactory years, he had some difficulty in getting started in life. The ministry, law, and teaching he rejected one after another; finally he settled down to be a man of letters, and began writing for reviews and encyclopædias. From 1828 to 1834 he lived with his bride, Jane Welsh Carlyle, at Craigenputtoch, where, in a "solitude almost Druidical" Carlyle wrote various critical essays, and his most original work, Sartor Resartus. At Craigenputtoch Carlyle and Emerson first met, and began their life-long and intimate friendship. Sartor appeared in Fraser's Magazine, London, during 1833 and 1834. After 1834 Carlyle was a resident of London. In 1837 he published The French Revolution, and in 1841 Heroes and Hero-Worship, a series of essays that had been delivered as lectures before London audiences. In 1843 came Past and Present, and in 1845 the Letters and Speeches of Oliver Cromwell, all of them books that won many readers in England, and, thanks to Emerson's services, found even larger audiences across the Atlantic. By 1845, however, Carlyle's health was badly shaken, and his next great work, the History of Frederick II, did not begin to appear till 1858. Carlyle had suffered from dyspepsia during his college course; he was a sick man much of his life. When in 1866 his wife died, the shock, added to his chronic suffering from disease, "broke his life in two." Never again did he do anything which added to his fame; some of his later writings, harsh protests against the times in which he lived, might better have been left unpublished. In 1881 he died.

It was Carlyle's fortune to be out of sympathy with his age. He wasted much energy railing against science and democracy, the two most characteristic developments of the nineteenth century. To him science appeared only as the destroyer of wonder and worship; democracy, "government by the worst," was the doom of hero and king. But despite this hostility to the contemporary world, Carlyle accomplished much. His History of the French Revolution, though criticized for its lack of understanding of the French temper, is a brilliant picture of a nation-wide upheaval; the Frederick II is epic in its scope, and of astonishing accuracy. In the Cromwell he painted a full-length portrait of the Protector, and did much to convince England of his sincerity. And in Heroes, Past and Present, and Sartor, he urged the claims of the spirit and preached the gospels of labor and self-sacrifice with superb eloquence. If in some of his work Carlyle's voice was too strident and his recriminations too general, in these, his noblest utterances, he spoke with all the fervor and solemn passion of a Hebrew prophet.

The best brief biography of Carlyle is by Garnett, in the Great Writers series. Editions of his better known works are numerous; MacMechan's editions of Sartor and Heroes, in the Athenæum Press series (Ginn), are inexpensive and complete in every desirable feature.

RUSKIN (1819-1900)

John Ruskin, the son of a wealthy London wine-merchant, was born in February, 1819. His formal education did not begin till he was fifteen; by that time, however, he had gained for himself a knowledge of literature and art so great as to make the teaching of an English school seem elementary. His university course at Christ's Church, Oxford, was distinguished by his winning the Newdigate Prize for poetry; it was also during his undergraduate days that his boyish love for Turner's landscapes developed into the enthusiasm which prompted Modern Painters (1843-60). This, the first of Ruskin's great books on art, is ostensibly a defence of Turner against the charge of painting unnaturally; in fact, however, it is a survey of many schools and types for the purpose of determining the bases of artistic effects. In 1849 appeared the Seven Lamps of Architecture; in 1851-53, The Stones of Venice. In these three, his most important books on art, Ruskin propounded and defended his thesis that a nation's art, particularly its architecture, is a sure index of its moral and social condition, and that great art is impossible unless it rests back upon national greatness. Interested in the improvement of art, and considering it the result of social conditions, it was natural for Ruskin to turn his attention away from the result to the cause; after 1860 he was no longer primarily an art critic, but a social reformer. He heralded his appearance in this new field by publishing in 1860 Unto This Last, a collection of papers on political economy; Fors Clavigera (1871), written in the form of letters to working men, indicates how radical were the changes proposed by Ruskin, and how impractical many of his views. Ruskin believed himself to have failed in his attempts to better the condition of the English working classes; certainly his influence in this field was much slighter than it had been in the domain of criticism. He died in 1900, leaving as his last work a delightful volume of reminiscences, Præterita, written at the suggestion of his American friend, Charles Eliot Norton.

To the student of to-day Ruskin is significant chiefly on account of his style. That he did much to establish the criticism of art on a substantial philosophical basis is indisputable, as is the fact that in his sociological writings he was moved by the noblest aspirations and ideals. But it is after all for his magic power over words that Ruskin is remembered, for his brilliant descriptions, his full, rich, and almost lyrical rhythms, and for a power of organization that is not always a concomitant of the romantic temperament.

The great edition of Ruskin is that of Cook and Wedderburn (George Allen & Co.); less expensive editions of such of his works as are out of copyright are numerous. The best biography is W. G. Collingwood's (2 vols., Houghton Mifflin);

Harrison's, in the E. M. L., is briefer, and trustworthy.

MACAULAY (1800-1859)

Thomas Babington Macaulay, Baron Macaulay, was born in October, 1800. His precocity as a youth has been the subject of many an anecdote; his memory was of the sort which enabled him to learn by heart, and without undue exertion, all of Pilgrim's Progress and Paradise Lost. In 1818 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was later elected Fellow. When he was twenty-five years old he began his career as journalistic critic by publishing in the Edinburgh Review his essay on Milton. Immature in judgment, it was nevertheless, startlingly readable, and made its author known and popular at once. Five years later Macaulay found himself virtually destitute, his family fortune exhausted, and his fellowship expiring. At this juncture he was sent to the House of Commons by Lord Lansdowne, who under the old system controlled the seat for Calne. Macaulay found the House perplexed by the problems of Parliamentary reform, and although the passage of the Reform Bill might have deprived him of his seat, he gave himself enthusiastically to the support of the measure, and won a marked success by his speeches. From 1834 to 1838 he was in India as a member of the Supreme Council. On his return to England he once more entered Parliament, and in 1839 was appointed Secretary for War. His tenure of office ended in 1841 with the fall of the ministry; the next year he published the Lays of Ancient Rome, and in 1843 the collected Essays. From this time to the end of his life Macaulay's interests were chiefly in literature. In 1848 he published the first two volumes of his History of England; nine years later his elevation to the peerage as Baron Macaulay of Rothley was symbolic of the esteem his literary accomplishment had won him from the nation at large. He died in December, 1859, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

The great source of information about Macaulay is Trevelyan's Life and Letters (Harper's); Morison's Life in the E. M. L. is briefer. Numerous editions of his works are accessible; the Albany (Longmans, Green, and Co.), is complete in twelve volumes.

CLOUGH (1819-1861)

The son of a cotton merchant who lived for a time in Charleston, S. C., Clough spent part of his boyhood in this country. He was sent to school at Rugby, where he fell strongly under the influence of Thomas Arnold, Rugby's great headmaster. On going from Rugby to Oxford he passed from an atmosphere of strong religious faith to one of great uncertainty, for in 1836, when Clough entered Balliol, the Tractarian movement was shaking Oxford to its foundations. From the unsettling of his religious views Clough never recovered. He made a good scholarship record at Oxford, and held a fellowship at Oriel from 1842 to 1848. After some desultory tutoring and travelling he came to the United States, settled at Cambridge, where he made the acquaintance of the Cambridge literary circle, and attempted to gain a living by tutoring and writing. He returned to England in 1853 to take a position in the Education Office, and passed the rest of his life in filling its duties. He died in Florence while travelling in search of health. His memory is preserved in Matthew Arnold's fine elegy Thyrsis.

Clough's life, interesting to Americans because of his friendships with Emerson, Lowell, and Charles Eliot Norton, was not a happy or a successful one because of his spiritual unrest. His poetry reflects his sceptical, questioning attitude, and is typical of an age when many men did not succeed, as Tennyson did, in keeping a spiritual equilibrium amid the disturbance caused by scientific progress and theory.

Clough's works are published in two volumes, one of poems, one of prose, the latter with a memoir by Mrs. Clough (Macmillan.) There are good essays by Bagehot in Literary Studies, and Stopford Brooke in Four Victorian Poets.

ARNOLD (1822-1888)

Matthew Arnold was the son of Thomas Arnold, the famous headmaster of Rugby, and the father's intense moral earnestness makes readily intelligible the son's lifelong interest in problems of conduct and culture. From Rugby he went to Oxford, and in 1845 won the distinguished honor of a fellowship in Oriel. After a few months of teaching at Rugby, and a short term of service as secretary to the Liberal leader, Lord Lansdowne, he was in 1851 made an Inspector of Schools, and for thirty-five years faithfully performed the duties of his office to the great profit of popular education.

Most of Arnold's poetry was written in the years between 1849 and 1867. It is small in amount and narrow in scope, largely meditative, tinged by the spiritual unrest of the time with a decided pessimism. This should not, however, be taken to imply any lack of lyrical fervor. Indeed, in the utterance of his melancholy reflections he is genuinely impassioned, as in Dover Beach, that beautiful and sad confession of loss of faith. The bent of Arnold's genius was well suited to the elegy, and he has given to English poetry some of the finest expressions of the elegiac mood, The Scholar Gipsy and Thyrsis being outstanding examples. In the field of narrative verse Sohrab and Rustum is too well known to need comment; Balder Dead, likewise an epic fragment, and Tristram and Iseult, a picturesque but perhaps over-moralized version of Malory's story, are less successful, though excellent. All Arnold's poetry is marked by its undertone of sadness, a melancholy ground-swell, as well as by a fine restraint which makes impossible anything like sentimentality. The prevailing influences upon it are classical, and in its stoic philosophy, its restraint and lucidity, it is the best modern expression of the classical spirit.

In 1857 Arnold became Professor of Poetry at Oxford, and ceased to write poetry to talk about it. During the years of his professorship he issued several notable volumes of critical essays, of which the best known is the first series of Essays in Criticism (1865). During the following decade, from 1867 to 1877, Arnold was the critic of society and religion. Culture and Anarchy (1869) expounds his views on the nature and function of culture, its mission in spreading "sweetness and light" to combat the prevailing "Philistinism" of modern society. In Literature and Dogma (1873) he gives fullest expression to his unorthodox views on religion, rejecting creeds and preaching a rather vague doctrine of general morality. In the last ten years of his life Arnold returned to literature for the subject-matter of his essays; he also lectured much, making two American tours. Notable volumes of these years are the Discourses in America (1885) and Essays in Criticism, Second Series (1888), of which the first essay on "The Study of Poetry" contains the famous definition of poetry as "a criticism of life under the conditions laid down for such criticism by the laws of poetic truth and poetic beauty."

As a literary critic Arnold stands in the first class. He is an ethical critic and his predilection for the ethical and moral value of poetry involves a certain narrowness of judgment, but his criticism is always distinguished by fine taste, an insistence on the best, and a sane conservatism. He had a knack for picking up or coining phrases such as "sweetness and light," "a criticism of life," "the grand style," which by reiterating he impressed on the thought of his time until many of them passed into common speech.

Arnold's works are published by the Macmillan Co., the poetry in the Globe edition. There is a good life by H. W. Paul (E. M. L.); a fine essay on Arnold's prose is that by L. E. Gates in Three Studies in Literature; good estimates of the poetry are those by R. H. Hutton in Literary Essays, and G. E. Woodberry in Makers of Literature.

HUXLEY (1825-1895)

Thomas Henry Huxley considered himself primarily a biologist; by virtue of his masterly prose style he has come to be ranked among the great English essayists of the nineteenth century. Born in 1825, he virtually educated himself, studying science, German, French, and at the age of seventeen beginning a medical course at Charing Cross Hospital. On the completion of his work here he entered the navy; in 1846 he started on a four years' cruise as surgeon of the biological survey ship Rattlesnake. His duties were light; he gave himself enthusiastically to the study of tropical marine life, and for the rest of his life he found his chief interest to lie not in medicine, but in the new biology to which he was one of the chief contributors. When Darwin, in 1859, published The Origin of Species, Huxley accepted and soon championed with belligerent enthusiasm the idea of evolution, and did much of his finest work as an essayist in the capacity of apologist for the Darwinian theories. His attainments in science were widely and generously recognized, and though his name was anathema to religious orthodoxy, his fellow laborers in the cause of intellectual liberty accorded him all the honors in their power. From 1870 to 1880 he was secretary of the Royal Society, and president from 1881 to 1885. In 1892 he was appointed Privy Councillor; three years later he died.

It is particularly in his Lay Sermons that Huxley appears both as the scientist and man of letters. His purpose was to explain new and sometimes distasteful truths to English readers, the clearness and logical convincingness with which he set forth his views are due in no small measure to his scientific training; the richness of allusion and illustration and the quietly emotional quality of the best passages attest the unusual breadth of his culture, and the richness of his imagination.

The best edition of the Essays is that published by Appleton in nine volumes; the standard biography, the Life and Letters, is by his son, Leonard Huxley (Macmillan).

NEWMAN (1801-1890)

John Henry, Cardinal Newman, was born in 1801, the son of a London banker. As a boy he was a serious student of theology and the Bible, and when in 1817 he went up to Trinity College, Oxford, his interests lay almost entirely in the same field. After graduating and taking orders he was elected Fellow of Oriel, and in 1828 he came vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford. As University Preacher Newman exerted a profound influence upon the religious life of Oxford, and, as his fame spread, upon that of all England. In 1832 he visited Rome; when he returned it was to begin a long, and to his mind a losing, fight, for the reform of the English Church, and for its restoration to its earlier position of honor and independence. Newman and his associates, who fought their battle by means of a series of pamphlets called Tracts for the Times, felt that the liberalizing tendencies of the age were affecting the church unfortunately, and that it was losing the dignity and mystic beauty which belonged to it by inheritance. They hoped that the English church would be a real "Via Media" between Protestantism and Romanism, and that without giving up its independence, or adopting all the dogmas of Rome, it might stand once more as the direct descendant of the primitive Apostolic Church. It soon became evident that the tendency of Newman's arguments was towards Romanism; he himself resigned his living at St. Mary's in 1843, after the Tract No. 90 had been disavowed by the University. The next two years he spent in quiet study; in 1845 he was received into the Roman communion. The rest of his life Newman labored as a Catholic priest and teacher. Ordained in 1846, and in 1854 appointed Rector of the Catholic University of Dublin, he served the church so effectively that in 1879 he was elevated to the Cardinalate. He died in 1890.

Newman's work as a man of letters was incidental to his service in the cause of religion, and yet his literary gifts were so great that his prose has come to be considered almost the ideal of expository writing. He is at his best in the Apologia Pro Vita Sua (1864), written to convince England of the sincerity of his motives in becoming a Catholic, and in The Idea of a University (1852), a series of addresses delivered to the Catholics of Dublin. It is not always possible for the twentieth century reader to take Newman's point of view, and his work loses part of its charm when it is read unsympathetically. But the supple clearness of his style, and the artistic precision with which he makes the expression conform exactly to the sense, can be appreciated even when the point of view is utterly foreign.

Newman's works are published in uniform style by Longmans, Green, and Co. The best Life is by Wilfrid Ward (2 vols., Longmans). Dean Church's The Oxford Movement (Macmillan) is the best discussion of the religious movement that resulted in Newman's leaving the English Church.

ROSSETTI (1828-1882)

The latter half of the nineteenth century produced a group of poets who stand apart from the intellectual movements of the time. The advance of science, with its effect on religious thought, acted upon poets like an electromagnet with positive and negative poles: it attracted Tennyson, Arnold, Clough, and, speaking broadly, Browning; it repelled Rossetti, Morris, and Swinburne. These last, dissatisfied with the materialism of their age, create for themselves a world of the imagination aesthetically more beautiful than the world of actuality, casting back to antiquity or to the middle ages for subject-matter and poetic forms.

The first of the group to attain prominence was Dante Gabriel Rossetti, born in London, son of an Italian political refugee, who was Professor of Italian in King's College, and author of a well known commentary on Dante. Of the three other children William Michael, the elder brother, won a reputation as a poet and critic, and Christina, the youngest of the family, is second only to Mrs. Browning among the woman poets of England. Dante Rossetti was so obviously an artist born that he received practically all his education in London art schools, and he is equally well known as painter and as poet. In painting he was one of the leading members of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, who first claimed public attention in 1849, and whose cause was championed by Ruskin in the face of early popular criticism. Rossetti's best known poem, The Blessed Damozel, was written when he was nineteen, and published in The Germ, a short-lived periodical intended to express in prose and verse the ideas of the Pre-Raphaelites. To The Germ Rossetti also contributed his symbolic tale of Hand and Soul, one of the most beautiful pieces of imaginative prose in English. Painting occupied most of Rossetti's attention for a number of years, but in 1861 he published a collection of fine translations called The Early Italian Poets. A volume of poems appeared in 1870, and a collected edition of Poems and Ballads in 1881. Toward the end of his life Rossetti became the victim of a drug habit, and led the life of a recluse until his death in 1882.

Rossetti's poetry, which owes much to Keats, exhibits some of the same characteristics which mark his work as a Pre-Raphaelite painter: a mediæval flavor, a tendency toward symbolism, and a lavish attention to picturesque detail. His ballads are done in the manner of the old folk ballad, and their abrupt and startling directness, their pictorial suggestiveness, and their skillful use of a refrain, make them highly effective. As a writer of sonnets Rossetti stands in the front rank: his collection called The House of Life vies with Mrs. Browning's as the finest sonnet sequence written in English since the days of Shakespeare.

The Collected Works of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, edited by W. M. Rossetti (2 vols., Ellis and Elvey, no longer in print) is the standard edition because it includes the prose as well as the poetry. A good brief account of his life is that by Theodore Watts-Dunton in the Encyclopædia Britannica, particularly illuminating as to Rossetti's use of the supernatural and his connection with the "Renaissance of Wonder." Fine appreciative essays are those by Pater in Appreciations and Swinburne in Essays and Studies.

MORRIS (1834-1896)

William Morris was fortunate in being born of a well-to-do family so that he had always plenty of money to follow his artistic and creative impulses. At Marlborough School he spent more time in the library poring over architectural books than on the prescribed studies. From 1853 to 1855 he was at Oxford, and on leaving the university studied for a time in an architect's office; then, under the influence of Rossetti, with whom his friend Burne-Jones was working, turned to painting. This in turn was abandoned for the designing and manufacture of house furnishings and decorations; the move resulted in the founding of the famous firm of Morris and Co. of which Rossetti and Burne-Jones were originally members, and which gave the impetus to the modern Arts and Crafts movement. A reorganization of the firm in 1875 made Morris sole proprietor, with headquarters at Hammersmith, London; his permanent abiding place, however, was, from 1871 on, beautiful Kelmscott Manor on the upper Thames.

Morris began to write early, contributing both prose and verse to a college magazine which he financed himself. His first volume of poetry, The Defence of Guenevere, published in 1858, showed Pre-Raphaelite influence. It passed almost unnoticed by the critics, but the epic Life and Death of Jason, followed in 1868-70 by the tremendous Earthly Paradise, established Morris among the major English poets. Meanwhile he had begun the study of Icelandic poetry, and in 1870 made a prose translation of the Volsunga Saga, following it with a verse rendering in 1876; parts of the Earthly Paradise and some prose romances likewise attest his love for the Scandinavian mythology and hero-tales. Late in the seventies Morris became interested in politics and joined the Socialist party; he devoted practically all his time in 1883-85 to this cause, lecturing and writing, and in the eighties produced much socialistic verse. The most interesting exposition of Morris's socialistic views is to be found in News from Nowhere.

(1891), a prose romance describing England as a Utopia organized on communistic principles. Toward the end of his life Morris became interested in bookmaking. He established the Kelmscott Press in 1891, where the whole process of the making of a book was under his personal supervision. The greatest triumph of modern bookmaking, the superb Kelmscott Chaucer, was completed just before his death in 1896.

A mere enumeration of Morris's interests is sufficiently astounding. They included architecture, painting, decorative arts of all kinds, printing, and literature. The man was an artist to his finger tips and his energy was enormous. He performed an invaluable service to the modern world by doing his best to banish the ugly commonplaceness of mid-Victorian life, and by insisting that honesty of craftsmanship and beauty of design should be the aims of all production from a cathedral down to the last humble utensil of household use.

Morris's contribution to English literature comprises translation—from the classics, Anglo-Saxon, and Scandinavian—prose fiction, socialistic prose and verse, and his major poetry. The latter may be divided into ballads in the mediæval manner and Arthurian romances such as The Defence of Guenevere, classical legend in The Life and Death of Jason, and a combination of the foregoing with Norse romance in The Earthly Paradise. This is Morris's masterpiece. He is a wonderful story-teller in verse, probably the best that England has had since Chaucer, whom he loved and followed as his master.

The separate volumes of Morris's works are published at cheap prices by Longmans, Green, and Co. The authoritative biography, delightfully written and with fine critical comment, is by J. W. Mackail (2 vols., Longmans).

(1893), and Greek Studies (1895), are interpretations of the Hellenic life and temperament in which Pater always found much inspiration. In all his work Pater was exactly scrupulous concerning the form in which he cast his ideas; he did all in his power to live up to the high ideals set forth in the Essay on Style. As a result of this constant striving after perfection of form, Pater's work appears to some readers unduly polished, and lacking in the warmth and apparent spontaneity of the best prose. But the beautiful precision of his language, and the fine proportion and structure of all his work, make amends for the loss of some of the more appealing qualities of style; while beneath the somewhat cold exterior there is a vein of thought which stimulates and enriches whoever approaches the study of Pater in a sympathetic mood.

The best brief biography of Pater is A. C. Benson's, in the E. M. L. Thomas Wright's Life (2 vols., Putnam), is much more detailed. His works are published in uniform style by the Macmillan Company.

STEVENSON (1850-1894)

Robert Louis Stevenson was born in Edinburgh, in November, 1850. After a somewhat irregular preparatory course he entered the University of Edinburgh in 1867, and remained as a student till 1873. Instead of adopting the family profession of engineering, and following his father and grandfather as a builder of lighthouses, he read law, and in 1875 was called to the bar. But he felt as little interest in legal as in engineering problems; even as an undergraduate he had formed the determination to be a writer. In 1878 he published his first book, An Inland Voyage, and in 1879 Travels With a Donkey, chronicles of two of the many trips he was forced to make in search of health. In 1879 he came to California, where in the following year he married Mrs. Osborne. It was this journey that gave him the experiences recorded in An Amateur Emigrant and Across the Plains. The year of his marriage he returned to Scotland, but found the climate so harsh that he spent much of the time for the next seven years in southern Europe. In 1883 appeared Treasure Island, and three years later Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, the first books to bring Stevenson his international popularity. In 1887, after the death of his father, he came once more to America, spending the winter of 1887-88 in the Adirondacks, writing for American magazines. In the summer of 1888 he went again to San Francisco, where he chartered a yacht and began a cruise of three years that carried him over much of the southern Pacific, and furnished the materials for many of his later works. In 1891 his wanderings ended at Samoa, where he built his home, "Vailima." Here he lived, writing much, and winning the friendship of the natives by his kindness, and his protests against the incompetent rule of their European governors, until his death in 1894.

The charm of Stevenson's personality has had much to do with the popularity of his books

Lovable, romantic, enthusiastic, glorying in life and its possibilities despite the fact that for many years he was face to face with death, he transfused much of himself into all that he wrote. His early work was chiefly cast in the form of essays,—literary criticism, and comment on life and its values. Later he became a teller of tales, and added more to the stock of English romantic fiction than any man since Scott. But the man was the same, whether as essayist or novelist,—scrupulously exact in his craftsmanship, always an artist, and conceiving highly of his art, and always putting into his books the same qualities that made the man himself so beloved.

The best moderately priced edition of Stevenson is the Biographical (Scribner's); his Letters in four volumes give interesting biographical information. The two volume Life by Balfour (Scribner's) is excellent.

SWINBURNE (1837-1909)

The life of the last of the great Victorian poets was one of almost pure devotion to literature. Born of a wealthy and aristocratic family, he was educated at Eton and Oxford, but left the university in 1860 without a degree. Almost immediately he published two poetic dramas on the Elizabethan model, The Queen Mother and Rosamond. Atalanta in Calydon (1865) is as distinctly Greek in inspiration. Poems and Ballads of the following year made Swinburne one of the most talked about men in England. Its eroticism, coupled with its metrical novelty, gave it a startling vogue, and when Buchanan, in his famous article "The Fleshly School of Poetry," in 1871, included Swinburne in his attack on Rossetti no better advertising could have been devised. The revolutionary ideas of Swinburne's time affected him as the French Revolution had affected the poets of the older romantic school, and The Song of Italy (1867) and Songs Before Sunrise (1871) gave full expression to his republicanism. The latter volume was composed under the influence of Victor Hugo, whom Swinburne came to regard as the greatest poet of modern Europe. Poetical drama continued to engage his attention, until his plays numbered eleven. His best dramatic work was done in the trilogy dealing with Mary, Queen of Scots—Chastelard (1865), Bothwell (1874), and Mary Stuart (1881). Romantic epic was represented by Tristram of Lyonesse (1882) and The Tale of Balen (1896); the former ranks with the best modern versions of Arthurian material, and the free handling of its heroic couplet gave an entirely new idea of what that conventionalized form was capable of in the way of richness and variety. Of pure lyrics Swinburne produced many volumes during the later years of his life. On the technical side English poetry has had no greater artist than he. There is no metrical form of which he is not master, and his use of new meters revealed possibilities hitherto undreamed.

In addition to this large and varied output of poetry Swinburne was a prolific writer of prose criticism. He is an impressionistic critic, so strongly swayed by enthusiasms and aversions that he is not a safe guide, but there is scarcely one of his essays which has not fine things in it. His prose style displays the same characteristics as does his poetry: it is diffuse and overwrought, but its torrential eloquence is impressive.

The standard edition of poetry and prose is in eleven volumes (Harpers). A good selection of lyrics is that by W. M. Payne (Belles Lettres Series, D. C. Heath and Co.) An authoritative biography is lacking, but G. E. Woodberry's Swinburne (Macmillan) is a good critical study. The chapter on Swinburne in Stedman's Victorian Poets is excellent.

MEREDITH (1828-1909)

George Meredith was born at Portsmouth in 1828. When he was twenty-one he contributed his first poem to an English magazine; in the years immediately following he did a good deal of journalistic writing. In 1851 appeared his first volume of verse, containing Love in the Valley. Five years later The Shaving of Shagpat marked his appearance in the world of fiction, although these romantic tales, suggested by the Arabian Nights, are very different from Meredith's later and better known work. His first novel to attract wide attention was The Ordeal of Richard Feverel (1859); here he struck into and developed the vein of realism and psychological analysis that was destined to prove so rich. In 1862 came a second volume of poems, and then through many years, a series of novels, of which Beauchamp's Career (1874-75), The Egoist (1879), and Diana of the Crossways (1885), are perhaps the most significant. Towards the end of his life Meredith turned again to poetry, and wrote much that won the enthusiastic praise of the few, although he never rivalled Tennyson or Browning in popularity.

Meredith was unquestionably one of the most gifted of all the Victorians. Whether writing in verse or prose he shows the same qualities—great intellectual power, a fine sense of form, a rich imagination, and a piercing analytical sense. And yet he never caught the ear of the great public. He was perhaps too subtle in his analysis; his diction at times is obscure if not willfully perverse. But in his simplest poems he is so obviously a master of his craft that even the casual reader can appreciate and enjoy the beauty that is sometimes elusive.

Meredith's novels are published by Scribner's; his poems (2 vols., 1912) are issued by the same firm.

THOMAS HARDY

Primarily known to fame as a novelist, Mr. Hardy has of recent years been writing verse rather than prose, and has thus paralleled the career of Meredith, with whose name his is often linked.

Born in 1840, in Dorsetshire, and privately educated, Mr. Hardy was apprenticed to an architect whose chief interest was in rebuilding and restoring country churches. The young man thus came in contact with that rural life which was afterwards to play so large a part in his novels, and also with Art, which to him, as to Arnold, was to prove an austere mistress. His technical accomplishments and ability were early recognized and rewarded; but even while he was mastering the intricacies of architectural mechanics he was finding himself drawn more and more to literature, and by 1865 was uncertain to which of the two professions to devote himself. Literature won; and before he was thirty he took the manuscript of his first novel to George Meredith for criticism. Meredith advised against printing the book; Hardy took the older man's advice. Then in 1871 he published Desperate Remedies—and the series of his novels had begun. In this series the following stand out as particularly notable, though none of the entire list is negligible: Far from the Madding Crowd (1874), The Return of the Native (1878), Tess of the D'Urbervilles (1891), and Jude the Obscure (1895). The Dynasts (1903-06) is Hardy's most pretentious poetical work, and takes the form of an "epic-drama" dealing with Napoleon.

In Hardy's fiction one sees a scrupulous attention to structure, to the brick-work of the piece; a consummate mastery of words, a love of nature in all her moods, an all-embracing and overwhelming sense of Fate as the chief actor in the drama of life; a gloomy pessimism that seems almost unrelieved. His poetry, austere but tender, is marked with the same sombre melancholy. Whatever one may think of Hardy's philosophy, one is bound to honor him as an artist. He is among the greatest of the novelists, well deserving of the Order of Merit bestowed on him in 1910, and his work almost justifies Stevenson's enthusiastic statement that he "would give his hand to write like Hardy." Hardy is still living (1924), though writing little. His novels are published by Harpers; the Collected Poems by The Macmillan Company.

WILLIAM E. HENLEY

Henley's poem "Invictus" has made him known wherever English can be read; nevertheless it was not as a poet but as a journalist that he did his chief work in the world.

Born in 1849, in Gloucester, he received his education in a local school, spent some years in semi-invalidism, and in 1877 went to London to begin his career as editor and critic. It was in these two capacities that he remained constantly busy till his death in 1903. Though never exerting a profound influence upon English journalism, for his standards were not those of the mass, Henley made himself felt by those concerned with quality rather than quantity, and had an editorial vision which prompted him to open his columns to men as yet relatively unknown, but destined to future fame. Mr. Kipling's "Barrack Room Ballads" were published in Henley's Scots Observer; Stevenson's "New Arabian Nights" in his London. Had he done nothing else, he would have deserved the gratitude of his countrymen.

ROBERT BRIDGES

The present Poet Laureate is one whose work has never won the great popularity attained by that of some of his predecessors in his honorable position. Nevertheless there is a quality of distinction in nearly everything he has done, and never has he written cheaply or sensationally.

Born in 1844, an Eton and Oxford man, he practised medicine till 1882, and then retired to find leisure for writing. A number of dramas, several critical essays, a group of translations, a somewhat numerous collection of brief lyrics: these are the literary fruits of forty years. His appointment as Poet Laureate, in 1913, was a recognition of the purity, restraint, and precision which all readers find in his work.

His American publishers are the Oxford University Press.

JOHN MORLEY, VISCOUNT BLACKBURN

So far as the general English public is concerned, Lord Morley has been more widely known as statesman than as man of letters. But it is probable that his biographies of Cromwell and of Gladstone, and such essays as those on Burke and Diderot, will be remembered when his services as Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Secretary of State for India, are all but forgotten.

Born in 1838, and living till 1923, his long life extended from the first full year of Victoria's reign till five years after the termination of the Great War. An Oxford man, trained in Lincoln College, he early found himself in sympathy with the liberal thought of his day, and as is the case with many English scholars, thought it eminently fitting to exert what influence he could upon his age by entering first the field of journalism and later that of politics. As member of Parliament, and in the Secretaryships already mentioned, Lord Morley aligned himself with that political liberalism best represented, perhaps, by Gladstone, whose biographer he was later to become.

The essays from which the selections in this volume are taken show him to have been a discriminating critic of literature. His work as historian, and political and philosophical essayist, is available in The Macmillan Company's collected edition of his writings. His services as statesman and man of letters were recognized in many ways, most conspicuously, perhaps, by the bestowal of the Order of Merit in 1902, and his elevation to the Peerage in 1908.

RUDYARD KIPLING

"Soldier and sailor too," said Kipling of the Marine—the man of all work on sea and on land. In the ranks of contemporary men of letters Kipling plays just such an all-embracing part, for there is almost nothing that he has not done and done well. He is one of the most versatile, most popular, and most able of England's writers of the last thirty-five years.

Born in Bombay, India, in 1865, Kipling's earliest experiences were with the land in which he was later to find material for his first publications; and although he was sent to England for his education, he soon returned to India and began his journalistic career on the staff of the Civil and Military Gazette. Before he was twenty-five he was an acknowledged master of the short story; by the same date he had enlarged the field of English poetry through his "Barrack Room Ballads": vigorous poems of Indian army life in which he showed a metrical skill no less remarkable than his sympathetic understanding of human nature.

Beginning thus as an interpreter of India, Mr. Kipling, in the course of a busy literary life, has widened his field to make it include much that at first seemed beyond his ken. Nevertheless it is probable that just as Bret Harte is always thought of in connection with the California he pictured in his early stories, and as "O. Henry's" name is persistently suggestive of New York, so Kipling will live primarily because of the many volumes that have sprung from his contact with British life in the Indian Empire. That he has seemed to be the particular spokesman for British Imperialism, as a national policy, will perhaps some day be forgotten.

His best work is probably represented by the two Jungle Books, the Barrack Room Ballads, Kim, The Seven Seas, The Day's Work, and The Five Nations. But there is little that he has done which is negligible; to know him one must read all of his many-sided prose and verse, and one will find all of it worth reading. In 1907 he received the Nobel Prize for literature.

His American publishers are Doubleday, Page & Company.

ALFRED EDWARD HOUSMAN

Born in 1859, matriculating at St. John's College, Oxford, later receiving both the bachelor's and master's degrees, Mr. Housman spent ten years of his life in the government service before re-entering the academic world as Professor of Latin in the University of London. In 1911 he was called to a similar chair in Cambridge University, where he is still in active service.

As a poet, his fame rests chiefly upon a slender booklet published in 1896, and entitled A Shropshire Lad. The quality of this work is well represented by the selections in the present volume, and the deserved fame won by this first publication has not been heightened by the little he has done since. Pensive, wistful, and at the same time vigorous with emotion held in restraint, Mr. Housman has achieved a measure of lyric beauty unequalled, in his somewhat limited field, by any of his contemporaries.

WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS

Mr. Yeats's name is always—and properly—associated with the renaissance of Irish letters that has been so marked a phenomenon of the last forty years. Born in Dublin in 1865, he received his education in Irish schools, and early found himself fascinated by the history and tradition of his native land. Though at first he seemed destined for the life of an artist, and spent some years in the study of painting, the lure of literature was too great to be withstood, and he abandoned his first choice for the sake of writing.

As a writer, most of his work—dramatic, lyric, narrative,—has centered around the history, legends, and aspirations of the Irish people whose literary prophet he has become. A dreamer and a mystic, at times unintelligible save to the initiated, he is none the less a poet of rare grace and charm, and well deserves the Nobel Prize which was awarded him in 1923.

His collected works are published in America by The Macmillan Company.

"A.E." (GEORGE WILLIAM RUSSELL)

Born in Lurgan, County Armagh, in 1867, Mr. Russell came to Dublin as a young lad. After an elementary education he entered the School of Art, where he met W. B. Yeats, with whom he at once formed a fast friendship, and with whom he has been associated ever since. Less of a campaigner than Mr. Yeats, he was as sincere in his devotion to the Irish cause, and in doing what he could, as poet and journalist, to bring about the day when Irish hopes might be realized. But his primary instinct has always been that of the poet rather than the reformer; "I hope to be remembered as a poet," he has said. It seems certain that his wish will be gratified.

GILBERT KEITH CHESTERTON

Mr. Chesterton, like Mr. Yeats, began his career as a student of art, but gradually worked into the field of journalism as critic and reviewer, and finally established himself as one of the most trenchant and stimulating of contemporary English essayists.

Born in 1874, in London, and educated at St. Paul's School, he first attracted attention as the writer of vigorous and somewhat combative articles in the Daily News and the Speaker. His special forte of stating his ideas in a paradoxical fashion that both amuses the reader and provokes him to thought was well marked even in this early work. Later, by the time he had published such volumes as Heretics (1905), Orthodoxy (1908), and What's Wrong with the World (1910), it had become the most obvious feature of the "Chestertonian" manner. In addition to his work as essayist Mr. Chesterton has written some characteristically vigorous poetry, the best known example of which is included in this volume.

His American publishers are Dodd, Mead and Company.

JOHN MASEFIELD

By common consent the most significant English poet of today—for Mr. Kipling seems to have ceased to write verse—Mr. Masefield has to his credit an accomplishment which no one, since the days of Tennyson, save Kipling, can equal. Several volumes of prose, not a few dramas, and a dozen volumes of verse which every lover of poetry can enjoy and praise—these are the work of the sailor-poet who has won the unofficial laureateship of the English world.

Born in 1874, sent to sea in 1888, Mr. Masfield might well have lost himself in the world of poverty and hard work which is the only world the average sailor before the mast ever knows. But neither the hardships of sea life, nor those of factory or farm, could blind Mr. Masfield to the compelling beauty of the world in which he lived, or hide from him the more significant fact of the beauty of soul to be found not seldom in the humblest of persons. Indeed, the word "beauty" runs through his poems almost like a refrain: he has seen beauty everywhere, and has made it his great task to recreate it in his verse, that others may see and enjoy.

In writing this verse, Mr. Masfield has identified himself with the great tradition of English poetry. There is no "free verse" here; most of his themes relate to the modern world, but there is no tinge of cheap "modernism" about his treatment. Indeed, his avowed master in narrative method is Chaucer, the supreme teller of tales, whose influence is apparent on every page of such poems as Reynard the Fox and Right Royal. His sonnets have a richness, a full-toned music, that witness his study of Shakespeare and the Elizabethans. But he is never merely an imitator. Like Chaucer, he sometimes borrows, but enriches what he borrows while making it his own. And one thing he does that neither Chaucer nor any one else in English poetry has accomplished: he interprets the power, the majesty, and the enduring beauty of the sea in a way that makes him unique in our literature.

The student who has not time to read all of Mr. Masfield should know at least three volumes: The Story of a Roundhouse, Reynard the Fox, and The Everlasting Mercy. These poems, though differing radically from one another as regards subject matter, have in common the qualities that justify one in calling Mr. Masfield the most important figure in English poetry today.

The authorized publishers in America are The Macmillan Company.

WILFRID WILSON GIBSON

One of the most original of contemporary poets, Mr. Gibson has not allowed his enthusiasm for what is new to lure him from the established tradition of an ordered, rhythmic verse, but has been content to use the iambic pattern that experience proves to be the rhythm most "natural" to the English language. Indeed, so simply and unaffectedly does he write, that in his best work one feels no consciousness of a striving after poetic effect, but merely a straightforward and unadorned expression of the facts and values of humble life.

The simplicity of his diction recalls Wordsworth; and if he never rises to the heights Wordsworth sometimes attained, it is as true that he is never guilty of the abject flatness of certain notorious Wordsworthian failures. The life of the shop, the mill, the mine, the beauty and tragedy and—rarely—the comedy of commonplace existence—these are Mr. Gibson's favorite themes. That he writes from a rich experience and with a heartfelt sympathy is obvious to every reader.

His Collected Poems, published by The Macmillan Company, contain the work done prior to 1917; since that date he has written nothing that is radically different from the work represented in that collection.

ALFRED NOYES

It is an interesting, though probably not in any real way a significant fact, that English literature is rich in pairs of notable writers: men whose names are inevitably associated in any discussion of their age. Addison and Steele, Richardson and Fielding, Goldsmith and Sheridan, Shelley and Keats, Dickens and Thackeray, Tennyson and Browning, Meredith and Hardy: here are a few that inevitably come to mind. And among the poets of today the names of John Masfield and Alfred Noyes are similarly linked in a bracket of deserved praise. Radically different from Mr. Masfield in education, training, and experience, Mr. Noyes is like him in having contributed nobly to English poetry.

Somewhat younger than Mr. Masfield—for he was born as recently as 1880—Mr. Noyes received his bachelor's degree from Oxford University, where he had attended Exeter College. By the time he was twenty-one his verses had attracted some attention, since 1903 hardly a year has passed without more evidence of the high nature of his ability.

His early tales, lyrics, and ballads were notable primarily for their musical and colorful values. As he grew older, he became no more sincere an artist, but perhaps a more serious thinker. His persistent idealism, simple faith, and stalwart patriotism strike a swift response from American as well as English readers, and account in part for the fact of his great popularity in the United States. Since 1914 part of his time has been given to serving as Professor of Modern English Literature in Princeton University.

The three-volume collection of his poems published by Frederick A. Stokes Company contains the best of his work.

RUPERT BROOKE

Brooke was perhaps the best-known and most talented of the many young poets who lost their lives in the Great War. Born in 1887 at Rugby, a graduate of Cambridge, where in 1913 he was elected Fellow of King's College, he was drawn into the whirlpool of war in September, 1914. After taking part in the Antwerp expedition he sailed for the Dardanelles, but died of blood-poisoning in April of 1915, and was buried in the island of Skyros. The London Times published a brief letter from Winston Spencer Churchill, commenting on the fact of Brooke's death, and concluding thus: "Joyous, fearless, versatile, deeply instructed, with classic symmetry of mind and body, ruled by high, undoubting purpose, he was all that one could wish England's noblest sons to be in days when no sacrifice but the most precious is acceptable, and the most precious is that which is most freely offered." Further comment seems unnecessary.

POEMS OF THE GREAT WAR

One of the few minor compensations for the tragedy of the war is the fact that out of it came a little sheaf of verses which will not soon die. "In Flanders Fields,"—written by a Canadian officer, to be sure, but very certainly a part of English literature—"The Spires of Oxford," "The Soldier"—here are three poems whose enduring appeal seems assured. And among the many collections of war verse are scores of others which show how widespread was the impulse to give poetic expression to the emotions aroused by the conflict, and how high was the average level of attainment. The selections in this volume are representative of the best of this war poetry, of which the most significant may be said to have come straight from the trenches.

ARNOLD BENNETT

Mr. Bennett's particular significance in contemporary fiction is this: he is a faithful transcriber of the minutiae of ordinary life, of those small things which do not provoke one to murder or treason, but which make life what the average man finds it to be—a round of petty, interesting, annoying, commonplace, and, in the aggregate, romantic details.

Born in Staffordshire in 1867, he had a good elementary education, entered a legal office as clerk, followed Dickens's example by mastering short-hand, gradually worked his way into journalism, and after some years of successful newspaper work definitely gave himself to literature. By 1910 he was known wherever English fiction is read; in the same year his characteristic booklet, The Truth about an Author, first published anonymously in 1903, gave the public an entertaining sketch of Mr. Bennett himself, and also revealed in humorous fashion some of the "secrets" of his craft.

Though Mr. Bennett's chief work has been done in the field of realistic fiction—as witness The Old Wives' Tale, Clayhanger, Hilda Lessways, These Twain—he has written a few clever dramas, and also a group of "pocket philosophies": booklets discussing in simple and popular fashion questions about which the average man needs advice. It is from one of these, Literary Taste, that the selections in this volume are taken.

Mr. Bennett's work is published in America by Doran.

JOSEPH CONRAD

Teodor Josef Konrad Korzeniowski—to give Mr. Conrad the name by which he was christened —was born in Russian Poland in 1857. The son of a man accused by the Czarist police of plotting against the government, as a mere child he followed his father into exile in Siberia, saw his parents die as a result of their treatment there, was educated—and well educated—by an uncle, and finally, before he was twenty, went to sea on a French ship and began his life as a sailor. At the age of twenty-one he had shipped before the mast on an English vessel, and thus had at last come under the protection of the Red Ensign. Rapidly mastering both the new language and the science of navigation, he received his mate's papers as soon as he could qualify for the examination, and in 1884 was naturalized a British subject and given his master's certificate, entitling him to command English vessels on all the salt waters of the globe. For ten years he sailed the sea, performing his duties as Master in a way that brought commendatory letters from owners and Board of Trade; then in 1894 he retired, with the manuscript of a half-finished novel in his sea-chest. With the publication of that novel, Almayer's Folly, Mr. Conrad's literary career had begun.

What he has done since this first book is so well known that extended comment would be superfluous. Youth, Lord Jim, Nostramo, The Nigger of the Narcissus, Victory: these books, and a dozen others, have already won their rating among the classics of English fiction. As well known as these novels is the larger fact that Mr. Conrad stands unrivalled as a teller of tales of the sea, as a describer of the silent, suffering, and heroic men who walk the decks and heave round at a capstan, or lounge about the wharves and warehouses. This is his world; in it he is supreme. And in picturing this world Mr. Conrad has done what only the great novelist can do: he has shown not only the bodies but the very souls of the men whom his experience taught him to know and love.

The selection in this volume is taken from The Mirror of the Sea, a collection of autobiographical sketches and essays. The American publishers of all of Mr. Conrad's work are Doubleday, Page and Company.

H. G. WELLS

Herbert George Wells was born in 1866, in Kent, the son of a professional cricketer. His early schooling was interrupted by two or three years of manual labor in factories; ultimately he graduated from the University of London, where it was his great fortune to be a student under Huxley. It was perhaps from him that Mr. Wells derived his interest in science, and his ideas concerning the importance of science in education. Although he never followed directly in Huxley's footsteps, his early writings, such as The Time Machine and The War of the Worlds, show how the romance of science had attracted him. When the Great War broke out he was widely known as the author of light and entertaining fiction, and as a man whose socialistic tendencies and impatience with tradition made him perhaps a trifle "dangerous." Since that time he has grown in power and depth, and is today (1924) one of the few living writers who have a definite message for humanity.

What that message is one may best understand by reading three dissimilar but closely related books: The Outline of History (1920), The Salvaging of Civilization (1921), and Men Like Gods (1923). The first, a "best-seller" of the year, is a thesis book, intended to prove that the world has been organized upon a totally wrong theory. The second is a somewhat loosely-knit attempt to show how the present luckless civilization may be saved; the third, in quasi-novel form, is a picture of what the world would be like if only Mr. Wells's ideas could be put into practice. In these works Mr. Wells appears as the opponent of old-fashioned nationalism and capitalism, and as the protagonist of a collectivistic world-state represented by the Utopia of the last book. In this ideal commonwealth there is little that resembles any feature of the world today; the chief, the only fundamental difference, however, is the fact that Utopian society is organized on the theory that making, and not getting, is the great end of life.

The selection printed in this volume is from the last chapter of the Outline of History, and suggests definitely the direction Mr. Wells's thought has been taking in recent years.

His American publishers are The Macmillan Company.

MAX BEERBOHM

Mr. Beerbohm was born in London, in 1872, educated at the Charterhouse School and Merton College, Oxford, and has since attained distinction in two fields. First, he has become widely known as artist and caricaturist; perhaps more people know him because of the skill with which his pencil hits off the great of the world than for any other reason. But the second source of his reputation is one which has a more immediate appeal to the student of English Literature. he has become a master of that difficult form usually known as the familiar essay. Graceful, sophisticated, witty, he writes for a public much smaller than that which admires his cartoons, but one which appreciates the fine qualities of his literary accomplishment.

His American publishers are E. P. Dutton and Company.

JOHN GALSWORTHY

Mr. Galsworthy's name is synonymous with the best in contemporary (1924) English fiction and drama. An astute observer of life, a critic whose opinions of English institutions are the more worthy of consideration because of his intense love of his native land, he has forced art to serve as a handmaiden of reform—and has done this without debasing his art.

Born in 1867, of an old and purely English family, he found himself privileged, soon after receiving his Oxford degree, to give himself absolutely to literature; with the leisure that was at his command, he wrote slowly and thoughtfully. A series of novels best represented, perhaps, by The Forsyte Saga, plays like Strife, Justice, Loyalties, a large group of essays on matters of contemporary importance: these are the means that Mr. Galsworthy has used in his attempt to convince England and America that "things as they are" are not things as they should be. In this attempt Mr. Galsworthy's chief purpose has been to paint the picture as he has seen it, feeling, as did George Meredith, that the greatest service an artist can perform is that of presenting truth in the form of beauty. And it is not one of his least claims to distinction that he has been able to effect, as did Thackeray, the rare combination of moralist, critic, and artist.

The essay in this volume, "~~American and Briton~~," is a lecture delivered in the United States shortly after the close of the War. It is interesting not only on account of the light it throws on British character and temperament, but also because it shows Mr. Galsworthy as an eloquent pleader for firmer international friendships based upon better international understandings.

His many volumes of novels, plays, and essays are published in America by Scribner's.

NOTES

NOTES

Figures in bold face refer to the page, others to the line.

CHAUCER

THE PROLOGUE

1. 1. Whan that Aprille, etc. When April with its sweet showers hath pierced the drought of March to the root, and bathed every vein in the moisture by means of which power the flower is grown.
8. The Ram. The expression means: "When the sun had completed the half-course in the zodiacal sign of the Ram." During the first half of April the sun is in Aries, the Ram; during the second, in Taurus, the Bull. The time is therefore about the middle of April.
- 53-65. Pruce—Palatye. The proper names are those of various countries and cities in the regions involved in the wars between the Christian nations of western Europe and their Moslem enemies. Pruce, Lettow, Ruce—Prussia, Lithuania, Russia. Gernade, Algezir—Granada, Algeciras, in Spain. Belmarye, Tramissene—Moorish kingdoms in Africa. Lyeys, Satalye, Palatye—in Asia Minor.
2. 125. The scole of Stratford atte Bowe. A Benedictine convent at Stratford-le-Bow, near London. There is no slur here on the Prioress's French; Chaucer merely tells us that her pronunciation was not Parisian.
3. 159. Gauded. Furnished with "gaudies," the five large beads in a rosary.
173. Seint Maure. St. Maur and St. Benedict. The latter founded the Benedictine order of monks; St. Maur was one of his disciples.
187. Austin. St. Augustine.
210. Ordres four. The Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustinians.
4. 258. Love-dayes. Certain days which were appointed for settling disputes out of court, through the mediation of an umpire, often a friar.
310. Parvyys. "The church-porch, or portico of St. Paul's, where the lawyers were wont to meet for consultation." (Skeat).
319. Al was fee simple. No matter how encumbered property might be, the Sergeant could handle it as if it were held in fee simple. His conveyancing could not be attacked.
5. 340. Seynt Iulian. Saint Julian was famed for his generous providing.
364. Fraternitee. They all belonged to one guild.

5. 377. Vigilyës. Ceremonies on the eve of a church or guild festival.
6. 417-420. Well coude he fortunen, etc. The doctor was an astrologer; in addition, he was familiar with the humors of the body, and knew the causes of all diseases.
In every person, according to the Galenic physiology, there were four humors, viz.: blood, phlegm, bile or choler, and black bile or melancholy. A person's health depended upon maintaining a proper proportion between the four. Thus if blood predominated, the person became too sanguine; if phlegm, he became too phlegmatic.
429. Esculapius, etc. These were the chief physicians and medical writers of the ancient and mediæval worlds.
460. Housbondes at church-door. It was customary for the wedding ceremony to be performed at the door of the church.
486. Full looth were him. He did not excommunicate persons in order to force them to pay their tithes.
7. 507. He sette nat his benefice. He did not sub-let his parish, that he might be appointed to a chantry in St. Paul's.
525. He wayted after. He did not look for, or expect, pomp and ceremony.
563. He hadde a thombe of gold. He was a prosperous fellow.
8. 624. Fyr-reed cherubinnes face. Cherubim, in mediæval art, were painted with red faces.
646. Questio quid iuris? What is the law?
652. A finch eek coude he pulle. In the idiom of Wall Street, he knew how to shear a lamb. (Skeat).
9. 662. War him of a significavit. The writ of excommunication, which usually began with the word Significavit.
667. For an ale-stake. Ale-houses were usually marked by a pole, ale-stake, on which was hung a garland.
685. A vernicle. A copy of the picture of Christ supposed to have been miraculously imprinted on the handkerchief of St. Veronica.
11. 826. The watering of seint Thomas. The watering place was at a brook a short distance out from Southwark.

THE NUN'S PRIEST'S TALE

24. She fond no lak. She found no fault.
35. By nature knew he ech ascensioun.

This is one of the many passages in which Chaucer uses the language of astronomy for telling time. The meaning is that the cock crew each hour, when the sun had risen fifteen degrees higher.

12. 59. My lief is faren in londe. My loved one has gone away.
103. Swevenes engendren, etc. See note on Prol., l. 417.
13. 120. Lo Catoun. Dionysius Cato, to whom was ascribed a collection of maxims, De Moribus, used in Chaucer's time as a text-book for beginners in Latin.
143. Lauriol, centaure, etc. For an explanation of these botanical names see the Oxford Chaucer, v. 252.
15. 303. Macrobeus. Latin writer of the fifth century, annotator of Cicero's Somnium Scipionis.
16. 367. The month in which the world began. There was an old notion that the creation took place on the eighteenth of March.
369. Y-passed were also, etc. When March was gone, and thirty-two days more, i. e., when it was the third of May.
374. The signe of Taurus. The sun was in the zodiacal sign, or constellation, of Taurus, and had passed the twenty-first degree.
407. Genilon. The traitor who caused the death of Roland, in the Chanson de Roland. Sinon persuaded the Trojans to admit the wooden horse.
421. Augustyn . . . Boece . . . Bradwardyn. Famous ecclesiastical writers, St. Augustine, Boethius, and Thomas Bradwardine, Archbishop of Canterbury in 1349.
17. 451. Phisiologus. A work on natural history, in Latin, well known to the Middle Ages.
473. Boece. Boethius (see l. 421) was also author of a treatise on music.
492. Daun Burnel the Asse. A satirical poem of the twelfth century, by Nigel Wireker.
18. 527. O Gaufred. Geoffrey de Vinsauf, who wrote verses lamenting the death of Richard I.
536. Iloun. The citadel of Troy.
574. Iakke Straw. One of the leaders in the Peasants' Rebellion of 1381.

THE PARDONER'S TALE

20. 211. Turnen substaunce into accident. The cooks knew how to prepare food so that its real nature, or substance, should be concealed, and only its accidental, or secondary characteristics, revealed. See the Oxford Chaucer, v. 279.
256. Lemuel. "King Lemuel, mentioned in Prov. xxxi: 1." (Skeat).
324. That it is in Hayles. The Abbey of Hayles, in Gloucestershire, was supposed to possess a few drops of the blood of

22. 406. Chaunge my cheste. "The old man is ready . . . to exchange his chest, containing all his worldly gear, for a single hair-cloth, to be used as his shroud." (Skeat).

24. 561. Avicen. Avicenna, an Arabian physician, wrote as his chief work a medical treatise known as the Canon. The subdivisions are in Arabic called fen.

BALADE DE BON CONSEYL

25. 2. Suffyce unto thy good. Let thy wealth be sufficient unto thee.
9. In trust of hir. Fortune.
22. Thou Vache. Sir Philip la Vache, to whom the poem is addressed. See an article by Miss Edith Rickert in Modern Philology, xi. 209 f.

THE COMPLAINT OF CHAUCER

26. 22. Conquerour of Brutes Albioun. King Henry IV, who came to the throne in 1399 through the deposition of Richard II. Brutes Albioun—the Albion, or England, of Brutus, a legendary descendant of Aeneas, who first reigned in the island.

PIERS THE PLOWMAN

26. Of this poem, which until lately has been accepted as the work of William Langland, there are several versions, the work of different men, and produced at different times during the last forty years of the fourteenth century. The earliest, or so-called A-text, was written about 1365, and was the basis of subsequent revisions. The question of authorship has been argued at great length by Professor John M. Manly, and others, in Modern Philology; and though uncertainties still exist, it is hardly to be questioned that several people had a share in the work, and that the traditional ascription to Langland is erroneous.
27. 39. Qui loquitur, etc. He who speaks evil.
55. Al the foure ordres. The mendicant friars were the Carmelites, or white friars; the Augustinians; the Dominicans, or black friars; and the Minorites, or grey friars.

NOAH'S FLOOD

The play is taken from the Chester miracle cycle. The text here followed is that of Harleian MS. 2124, edited by Dr. Hermann Deimling for the Early English Text Society (Extra Series, lxii). The text has been modernized, except that rhyme-words and the original word order have been preserved. Stage directions have been translated from the original Latin.

Waterleaders and Drawers of Dee. Members of the guild of water-carriers, who presented the play. The River Dee flows through Chester.

27. 5-7. Not . . . but. Only; my spirit shall remain . . . only till, etc.
28. 42. Art in such will. Hast such a purpose toward me.
100. Frankish fare. Foolish behavior; exact meaning of frankish is not known.
29. 114. In the ship, etc. Hasten to get into the ship.
149. Note the naïvely simple method of indicating the passage of time.
151. The sense requires the addition of some phrase like "To see" at the beginning of the line.
155. That. Would that.
172. Cowle. Forage.
30. 108. With evil hail. Bad luck to you.
236. For his love, etc. For the love of him who redeemed you. The anachronistic reference to Christ is quite characteristic of the miracle plays.
31. 269. Between 269 and 270 a line is missing.
301. Comes. Probably an imperative, addressed to the members of Noah's family. In all wise. By all means.

THE ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH POPULAR BALLADS

32. With one exception the texts here reprinted are from Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads. "Bonnie George Campbell" is given in Motherwell's version.

SIR PATRICK SPENS

34. On the question of the historical basis for the ballad, see Child, ii, 17-20.

THE HUNTING OF THE CHEVIOT

39. The ballad is an inaccurate account of the battle of Otterburn, which took place in August, 1388. For a detailed account, see Child, iii, 289-293.

MALORY

LE MORTE DARTHUR: PREFACE

44. William Caxton. Caxton (c. 1422-1491), the first English printer. The first book to be printed in English was issued at Bruges in 1474; two years later Caxton set up his press in Westminster. The Morte DARTHUR was published in 1485.
37. Stalled. Installed.
72. Aretted. Considered to be.
76. Polichronicon. A history of the world, and encyclopædia of universal knowledge, by Ranulph Higden (d. 1364).
82. Bochas. Boccaccio. De Casu, etc. Concerning the Fall of Great Men.
84. Galfridus. Geoffrey of Monmouth, author of the Historia Regum Britanniae, (c. 1136), the most famous of all Anglo-Latin chronicles.

45. 110. Camelot. The Arthurian capital city.
134. Enprised to imprint. Undertaken to print.

CHAPTER IV

- King Arthur has been on the continent; during his absence Mordred, his nephew, has treasonously seized the throne, and attempted to marry Guinevere. A first battle at Dover has been won by Arthur, returning to his kingdom; the two armies are now drawn up for the decisive conflict.
1. Condescended. Agreed.
9. And. If.
46. 44. Put him in devoir. Did his utmost.
94. Ran until him. Ran unto him.
97. Foin. Thrust.
101. The bur. The guard near the butt of the spear.
118. Do me to wit. Tell me.
123. Pillers. Pillagers.

CHAPTER VI

48. 17. Besants. Gold coins of Constantinople.

CHAPTER VII

10. Hic jacet, etc. Here lies Arthur, formerly king, and to be king in the future.

SPENSER

THE FAERIE QUEENE: LETTER TO RALEIGH

49. This letter was prefixed to the first edition, which appeared in 1590 and contained the first three books of the poem.
47. These first twelve books. Of the twelve books projected Spenser completed six, and three cantos of a seventh.
60. Accounted by their showes. Judged by their appearances.

BOOK I, CANTO I

- In reading Spenser's verse, a final -ed should always be given syllabic value. Book I narrates the adventures of the Knight of Holiness.
51. 20. Gloriana. Standing in the allegory for Queen Elizabeth.
28. Lovely ladie. Una, the personification of Truth.
52. 79. Warlike beech. Lances were frequently of beech wood.
53. 127-234. The passage omitted gives an account of the Knight's combat with the foul monster Error, and of his ultimate triumph.
54. 253. Aged sire. Archimago, the enchanter, represents hypocrisy or false religion.
55. 314. Saintes and popes. In accordance with the purpose of the allegory, Archimago is made a Catholic.

55. 318. Morpheus. God of sleep.
 328. Blacke Plutoes griesly dame. Proserpine, wife of Pluto, king of the lower regions.
 332. Gorgon. Demogorgon, one of the greatest of the infernal powers, whose name it was dangerous to utter.
 333. Cocytus, Styx. Rivers of Hades.
 348. Tethys. The ocean.
 349. Cynthia. The moon.
 352. Double gates. According to classical legend, true dreams, sent to men from the house of Sleep, issued forth through a door of horn; false dreams, through a door of ivory. Cf. l. 393. Spenser substitutes silver for horn.
 361ff. Note in this stanza the skilful suggestion of sense by sound.
 56. 376. Dryer braine. Brain too dry or feverish. It was supposed that lack of moisture in the brain was the cause of fitful, dream-broken sleep.
 Stanza XLVff. Archimago fashions one of his sprites into the likeness of Una, and by the aid of the false dream deceives the Red Cross Knight into believing Una false to him. In Canto II the Knight deserts Una and flees from Archimago's cabin. Meeting on his way a Saracen knight Sansfoy, with a beautiful lady, he kills the knight and takes the lady Duessa (Falsehood, though she is at present going under the name of Fidessa—Faith), as his companion. Una meanwhile has set forth in search of her knight, and has lost her way in a wood.

CANTO XI

57. In the interval between the third and eleventh cantos Una and the Red Cross Knight, who had been parted from each other by Archimago, and forced to undergo many hardships, are reunited by Arthur, who rescues the Knight from the castle of the giant Orgoglio. After this deliverance Una leads the Knight to the house of Holiness, where he is purged of his sin, learns his lineage, and his name, George:
 "Thou. . .
 Shalt be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
 And patrone: thou Saint George shalt called be,
 Saint George of mery England, the signe of victoree." (I. x. 66).
 Then follows the struggle between George and the dragon (the devil), occupying the entire eleventh canto, which is here reprinted without omission.
 58. 43. Faire ympe of Phœbus, etc. Clio, muse of History, daughter of Phœbus and Mnemosyne (Memory).
 56. Till I of warres, etc. "Spenser was apparently planning for his later books or for his second part, some celebration of the war with Philip II. 'Bryton fieldes

- with Sarazin blood bedyde' suggests imitation of the war of the Saracens in France, as narrated in the Orlando Furioso." (Dodge.)
 62. Thy second tenor. "Melody of lower pitch." (Dodge.)
 63. Man of God his . . . armes. Man-of-God's arms.
 59. 74. So couched neare. Placed so close together.
 60. 167. Hagard hauke. A wild hawk.
 168. Above his hable might. Beyond the limit of his strength.
 172. He so disseized, etc. He, the dragon, being thus relieved of his great burden.
 61. 186. His neighbour element. The earth.
 187. The blustering brethren. Sometimes explained as the winds; possibly refers to both winds and sea, combining against the land.
 189. Each other to avenge. Take vengeance on each other.
 230. Him. The Knight.
 62. 235. That great champion. Hercules, the occasion of whose death was the shirt poisoned by blood of the centaur Nessus.
 267. Silo. The pool of Siloam.
 269. Cephise (Cephissus) . . . Hebrus. Greek rivers.
 278. Above his wonted pitch. Higher than usual.
 63. 300. As eagle, fresh out of the ocean wave. "Every ten years the eagle mounts to the circle of fire and thence plunges into the ocean, from which it emerges with fresh plumage." (Dodge.)
 303. Eyas hauke. Newly fledged hawk.
 337. Ne living wight, etc. Nor would any living person have promised him life.
 64. 356. Engorged. This is the reading in editions of Spenser, but it makes no good sense; engorged means glutted with. May Spenser have intended engored—wounded, hence, aroused, infuriated (?) as in Faerie Queene, II. viii. 42:
 "As salvage bull, whom two fierce mastives bayt,
 When rancour doth with rage him once engore."
 381. The warlike pledge. The shield
 65. 414. The crime of our first father's fell. The occasion of the crime, etc.
 459. Her. Object of salutes.
 465. He. The dragon. Himself. The knight.

PROTHALAMION

66. The poem was written in honor of the approaching double marriage of the Ladies Elizabeth and Katherine Somerset, daughters of the Earl of Worcester, in 1596. It commemorates a visit made by the ladies, in barges on the river, to Essex House, residence of the Earl of Essex.
 6-9. Discontent . . . empty shaddowes. A reference to Spenser's vain effort for political preferment after the publication of the second three books of the Faerie Queene.

67. 67. Somers-heat. Pun on Somerset.
 68. 132. Bricky towres. The group of buildings by the Thames called The Temple, formerly headquarters of the Knights Templar, now given over to lawyers.
 137. A stately place. Essex House, formerly residence of the Earl of Leicester, an early patron of Spenser's, who had died in 1588.
 147. Dreadfull . . . thunder. Alluding to the sack of Cadiz in 1596 by the Earl of Essex.
 148. Hercules two pillors. Rocky eminences on either side of the Strait of Gibraltar.
 152-3. Thine owne name . . . same. Pun on the family name of the Earl of Essex—Devereux (Fr. heureux).
 69. 173. Twins of Jove. Castor and Pollux, the constellation Gemini.
 174. Bauldricke. The Zodiac.

ELIZABETHAN SONNETEERS

WYATT: THE LOVER COMPARETH HIS STATE

69. This is a translation of one of Petrarch's sonnets.

SHAKESPEARE: XCVIII

74. 4. Heavy Saturn. In astrology the planet Saturn is supposed to exert a melancholy influence, since the god Saturn was morose.

ELIZABETHAN SONG WRITERS

LYLY: SPRING'S WELCOME

77. 2. Ravished nightingale. A reference to the story of Philomela; see note on Arnold's Philomela, p. 687.
 5. Prick-song. "Harmony written or pricked down in opposition to plain-song." (Chappell's Popular Music of the Olden Time).
 7. At heaven's gates she claps her wings. Cf. Shakespeare's "Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings," p. 82.

GREENE: SWEET ARE THE THOUGHTS

78. 9. The mean. The middle part in three-part music. The philosophic ideal of "the golden mean," moderation, is also suggested.

RALEIGH: HIS PILGRIMAGE

79. Supposed to have been written while Raleigh was confined in the Tower on a charge of treason. "It would be difficult to find a poem more truly representative of the age of Elizabeth, with its poetical fervor, its beauty and vividness of expression, its juggling with words, and its daring mixture of things celestial with things mundane." (Schelling.)

79. 9. Palmer. Originally a pilgrim who had been to Jerusalem and had brought back a palm-branch as a token; later applied to professional pilgrims, who spent their whole time travelling from one shrine to another.
 80. 42. Angels. A pun on the use of the word as the name of a coin.

THE CONCLUSION

Found in Raleigh's Bible after his death; said to have been written the night before his execution.

SOUTHWELL: THE BURNING BABE

Drummond of Hawthornden in his notes records that Ben Jonson said that "so he had written that piece of his (Southwell's), The Burning Babe, he would have been content to destroy many of his."

SHAKESPEARE: HARK, HARK! THE LARK

82. Compare the second of Lyly's songs, p. 77.

FEAR NO MORE

Dirge sung over the body of the supposedly dead Imogen, disguised as a boy, Fidele.

CAMPION: WHEN THOU MUST HOME

83. Bullen (Lyrics from Elizabethan Song Books) remarks that for romantic beauty this can hardly be matched outside the sonnets of Shakespeare.

CHERRY-RIPE

84. "Cherry-ripe" was the cry of street venders of cherries.

DRAYTON: AGINCOURT

85. The full title runs To the Cambro-Britons and their Harp His Ballad of Agincourt. Cambro-Britons—Welsh, who fought valiantly in the battle. Henry V, invading France to make good his claim to the French throne, in 1415 won the battle of Agincourt from a French army four times as numerous as his own.
 41. Poitiers, Cressy. Like Agincourt, battles of the Hundred Years' War, fought in 1356 and 1346 respectively, and like Agincourt, English victories against great odds.
 45. Grandsire. John of Gaunt, son of Edward III.
 86. 82. Bilbows. Swords; the name comes from Bilboa, a Spanish town famous for the swords it made.
 113. St. Crispin's day. October 25.

BEN JONSON: TO THE MEMORY OF MY BE-LOVED MASTER, WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

87. Prefaced to the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's works, 1623.
20. Chaucer, Spenser, Beaumont. All buried in Westminster Abbey. Beaumont,—Sir Francis Beaumont, the dramatist, who died a few weeks before Shakespeare.
29, 30. Lyly, Kyd, Marlowe. Immediate predecessors of Shakespeare in the English drama.
32. Seek for names. Search critically for the names of dramatists with whom to compare Shakespeare; only the greatest names will do.
33, 34. Æschylus, Euripides, Sophocles. Greek writers of tragedy, of the fifth century B. C.
35. Pacuvius, Accius. Latin writers of tragedy of the second century, B. C.
Him of Cordova. Seneca, the Stoic philosopher and, supposedly, tragic writer.
36. Buskin. The colthurnus, or thick-soled boot, worn by actors in classical tragedy to secure the dignity lent by greater stature; hence, the word stands for tragedy itself.
37. Socks. Likewise representative of comedy, since the thin-soled soccus was worn in comedy.
88. 51. Tart Aristophanes. Most famous of Greek satirical dramatists, he wrote in the fifth century B. C.
52. Terence, Plautus. The best writers of Latin comedy, of the second century B. C.
71. Swan of Avon. Shakespeare was born at Stratford-on-Avon.
77, 78. Rage or influence. A reference to the astrological belief that each planet exerted either a good or an evil power over the lives of men.

EPITAPH ON SALATHIEL PAVY

It was the custom of the choir boys of the Chapel Royal, of whom this small boy was one, frequently to entertain the Queen and court by acting before them; such children's companies were serious competitors of the adult companies; cf. Hamlet, II. ii.

DONNE: SWEETEST LOVE, I DO NOT GO

89. This, one of the sweetest and most musical of Donne's poems, was probably addressed to his wife on the occasion of his leaving her for a trip to France.

BEAUMONT: ON THE TOMBS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY

90. 5. The relative is omitted.
9. Acre. I. e., God's acre; grave yard.
13. Of birth. Noble birth.

FLETCHER: SWEETEST MELANCHOLY

Milton is supposed to have obtained from this lyric suggestions for Il Penseroso.

CARE-CHARMING SLEEP

91. Cf. Daniel's sonnet, p. 72.
5. Sweet. So read the early editions; it should perhaps be light.

SONG TO BACCHUS

1. Lyæus. A name for Bacchus.

WEBSTER: A DIRGE

"I never saw anything like this funeral dirge except the ditty which reminds Ferdinand of his drowned father in The Tempest [cf. p. 83]. As that is of the water, watery; so this is of the earth, earthy. Both have that intenseness of feeling, which seems to resolve itself into the element which it contemplates." (Charles Lamb.)

HARK, NOW EVERYTHING IS STILL

From The Duchess of Malfi, where it is sung, with great dramatic effect, just before the heroine of the play is strangled.

17. Full tide. There may be a reference here to the popular belief that sick people usually died at the turning of the tide. So Falstaff "parted . . . even at the turning of the tide," Henry V, II. iii.

BROWNE: ON THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF PEMBROKE

3 Sidney's sister. It was to this lady, Mary Sidney, later Countess of Pembroke, that Sir Philip Sidney dedicated his Arcadia. Pembroke's mother. The third Earl of Pembroke, a minor poet, to whom, with his brother, the first folio of Shakespeare was dedicated, was the Countess's son.

This epitaph, delicate and chastely beautiful, has been erroneously ascribed to Ben Jonson. There is a second and inferior stanza, which may not be by the same hand.

NORTH

THE DEATH OF CÆSAR

92. 69. The first Brutus. Lucius Junius Brutus, who led the revolt expelling the Tarquins from Rome.
72. Marcus Cato. Cato Uticensis, the staunch republican who committed suicide at Utica on hearing of Pompey's defeat by Cæsar at Pharsalia.
93. 132. Element. Sky.
166. Preventing. Anticipating.
95. 436. Forms. Benches.
96. 499. Journey. Day.

LYLY

QUEEN ELIZABETH

97. The text is based on Bond's edition, vol. II., pp. 206 ff.; spelling and punctuation have been modernized.

97. 1. This queen. Mary, elder sister of Elizabeth.
 13. Praxiteles. A fondness for citing classical illustrations is one of Lyly's distinguishing characteristics.
 67. As she hath lived forty years. "Actually, 47. . . . The following words allude to the projected Anjou match, which in the autumn of 1579 she was known to favor; and reflect the general anxiety for an heir to the crown." (Bond, II 534.)
 78. Tickle. Uncertain.
 79. Twist. Small thread or piece of silk.
 88. Like the bird Ibis. Reference to the so-called "unnatural natural history," most of which goes back to Pliny, is characteristic of Lyly and his Euphuistic imitators.
 98. 117. Escapes. Mistakes.
 133. Twice directed her progress unto the Universities. "She spent four days at Cambridge in Aug. 1564, and five or six at Oxford in Aug. 1566. . . . At both she attended the disputations in the schools and made speeches in Greek and Latin." (Bond, II. 534.)
 157. Admiration. Wonder.
 99. 202. The curses of the Pope. "Pius V.'s bull of excommunication and deposition, issued Feb. 25, 1570, was found nailed on the Bishop of London's door, May 15." (Bond, II. 535.)
 251. Bound the crocodile to the palm tree. "A way of saying 'made Egypt a field for his victories.'" (Bond, II. 535.)

SIDNEY

THE DEFENCE OF POESY

100. 9. Mirror of Magistrates. A collection of tales published first in 1559, and with Sackville's famous Induction, in 1563.
 34. Gorboduc. A play by Sackville and Norton, acted 1561, the first English blank verse tragedy. It was modelled on the Latin tragedies of Seneca.
 101. 109. Pacolet's horse. An enchanted steed in the romance of Valentine and Orson.
 115. Ab ovo. From the egg; i. e., from the beginning.
 119. Polydorus. In Euripides' tragedy Hecuba.
 208. Pounded. Impounded, put in a pound, like a stray animal.
 103. 337. Libertino patre natus. Son of an ex-slave.
 338. Herculea proles. Descendant of Hercules.
 339. Si quid, etc. If my verse can do aught.
 343. Dull-making, etc. People living near the cataracts of the Nile were said by Cicero to be deafened by the sound.
 344. Planet-like music. The "music of the spheres."
 349. Mome. Blockhead.

RALEIGH

THE LAST FIGHT OF THE REVENGE

- The text is based on Arber's Reprint; spelling and punctuation are modernized.
 103. 3. This late encounter. The battle between the Revenge and the Spanish fleet began 10 September, 1591. The pamphlet describing it appeared the same year.
 29. The year 1588. The year when the great Armada was destroyed.
 41. The last of August. Old style; 10 September, new style.
 57. Recover. Obtain.
 58. All pestered and rummaging. The ships were encumbered with badly stowed gear.
 104. 88. Weigh their anchors. Hoist their anchors on board. Slip the cables means to cut loose from the mooring.
 94. Recovered the wind. Got to windward of the Spanish fleet; an advantageous position for either fighting or running away.
 97. Cut his mainsail and cast about. Spread his mainsail and "come about"; i. e., turn in an opposite direction.
 100. On his weather bow. Ahead of him, and to windward.
 110. Sprang their luff, etc. Allowed the Revenge to get to windward of them. This action on the part of some Spanish vessels put the Revenge in the middle of the hostile fleet.
 113. Answered. Justified.
 122. High carged. Towering.
 125. Laid the Revenge aboard. Took position alongside the Revenge, the two ships touching each other.
 127. Luffing up. Turning towards the wind.
 134. Out of her chase. The guns in the bows of a ship would be the first used in a pursuit; the noun chase here means the bows.
 105. 177. Admiral of the Hulks. Flagship of the transports.
 185. Ship of Lime. So the original text; possibly a misprint for "Ship of the line," a warship of the first class.
 191. A-dressing. Having his wounds dressed.
 211. Composition. Terms of agreement.
 245. But. Nothing but.
 106. 356. Approved. Experienced.
 372. Fly-boats. Small, swiftly sailing ships.
 107. 384. Road. Roadstead; harbor.

BACON

OF TRUTH

107. 1. See John, xviii: 38.
 3. There be that. There are those who.
 17. One of the later school, etc. Probably a reference to the "New Academy."

107. 42. Vinum dæmonum. Devils' wine.
57. Creature. Creation.
108. 65. The poet, etc. Lucretius and the Epicureans.

OF ADVERSITY

29. To speak in a mean. To speak prosaically, without using figurative language; contrasted with the transcendences of poetry, above.
109. 53. Incensed. Diffused as incense, by burning.

OF MARRIAGE AND SINGLE LIFE

44. Hortatives. Exhortations.
58. Vetulam suam, etc. He preferred his aged wife to immortality.
68. Have a quarrel. Have a reason, ground.

OF GREAT PLACE

15. A melancholy thing. This sentence is an apt commentary on Bacon's own fall from great place. Cum non sis, etc. Since you are not what you were, there is no reason why you should desire to live.
110. 39. Illi mors gravis, etc. Death lies heavy on the man who dies known to almost all, but unknown to himself.
53. Conscience of the same. Consciousness of the same.
56. Et conversus Deus, etc. When God had looked, to see the works which his own hands had made, he saw that all were good beyond measure.
86. De facto. As a matter of fact.
111. 131. Omnium consensu, etc. In the opinion of all, fit to rule,—if only he had not ruled.
134. Solus imperantium, etc. Of all rulers Vespasian alone changed for the better.

OF WISDOM FOR A MAN'S SELF

2. Shrewd. Mischievous.
9. Right earth. Simply earth.
37. Set a bias upon their bowl. It is possible to roll a bowling ball so that it will curve while travelling.
64. Sui amantes, etc. Lovers of themselves without any rival.

OF YOUTH AND AGE

112. 16. Juventutem egit, etc. His youth was full of errors, even of madness.
85. Idem manebat, etc. He remained the same, but did not appear the same, i. e., was not so pleasing.
90. Ultima primis cedebant. His last years were inferior to his first.

OF GARDENS

113. 22. If they be stoved. If they be artificially warmed.
23. Warm set. Set out where it will keep warm.

113. 68. Ver perpetuum. Perpetual spring.
76. Fast flowers of their smells. Yielding little perfume.

OF STUDIES

114. 41. Conference. Conversation.
51. Abeunt studia in mores. Studies turn into habits.
52. No stond or impediment. No defect.
65. Cymini sectores. Hair splitters; (lit., splitters of a cummin seed.)

CAROLINE SONG-WRITERS

WITHER: SHALL I, WASTING IN DESPAIR

115. 14. Pelican. Taken as a type of devoted self-sacrifice, because of the fable that the pelican fed her young with her own blood.

CAREW: ASK ME NO MORE

11. Dividing. The meaning is but little stronger than musical. "Division" was a musical term practically equivalent to a variation on a theme; "to run division" was to perform such variations.

LOVELACE: TO LUCASTA

116. The poet fought on the Cavalier side in the Civil War.

TO ALTHEA

- As a consequence of his devotion to the Royalist cause Lovelace was twice imprisoned.
10. With no allaying Thames. Undiluted with water.

HERRICK: ARGUMENT OF HIS BOOK

117. The poem serves as a sort of foreword to The Hesperides, as Herrick called his book, telling the sorts of things about which Herrick wrote.
3. Hock-carts. The hock-cart was the last cart in from the field at harvest time.
Wassails. Drinking-bouts. Wakes. Village festivities.

CORINNA'S GOING A-MAYING

2. God unshorn. The sun adorned in his rays.
4. Fresh-quilted. "Referable to the bright and variegated colors of sunrise." (Schelling, Seventeenth Century Lyrics.)
14. May. The term was loosely applied to all sorts of May blossoms, particularly those of the hawthorn.
118. 30 ff. For a good account of the May-day customs see Brand's Popular Antiquities.
51. Green-gown. Tumble on the grass.

AN ODE FOR BEN JONSON

119. 5, 6. Sun, Dog, Triple Tun. Famous London taverns of Jonson's day.

HERBERT: VIRTUE

120. 15. Coal. I. e., on the Day of Judgment.

THE COLLAR

6. In suit. Suing for the favor of a superior.
 8. Me. For me; an example of the so-called ethical dative.
 22. The attempt to weave a rope of sand was a typical example of folly.

CRASHAW: IN THE HOLY NATIVITY OF OUR LORD GOD

122. 91 ff. She sings Thy tears asleep, etc. The stanza offers a typical example of a "conceit." It is thus explained by Schelling (Seventeenth Century Lyrics): "The Virgin sings to her babe until, falling asleep, his tears cease to flow. 'And dips her kisses in Thy weeping eye,' she kisses lightly his eyes, suffused with tears. Here the lightness of the kiss and the over-brimming fullness of the eyes suggest the hyperbole and the implied metaphor, which likens the kiss to something lightly dipped into a stream. 'She spreads the red leaves of thy lips,' i. e., kisses the child's lips, which lie lightly apart in infantile sleep, and which are like rosebuds in their color and in their childish undevelopment. 'Mother-diamonds' are the eyes of the Virgin, bright as diamonds and resembling those of the child. 'Points' are the rays or beams of the eye, which, according to the old physics, passed, in vision, from one eye to another. Lastly, the eyes of the child are likened to those of a young eagle, and the Virgin tests them against her own as the mother eagle is supposed to test her nestling's eyes against the sun."

VAUGHAN: THE RETREAT

123. The idea of this poem suggests Wordsworth's
- Intimations of Immortality*
- , and it is probable that Wordsworth was influenced by Vaughan.

MARVELL: HORATIAN ODE

124. Written in 1650 after Cromwell had returned from putting down a rising in Ireland.
 125. 15. His own side. In 1647 the Puritan party was split between Independents and Presbyterians, the latter advocating the immediate disbanding of the army which was largely made up of Independents; Cromwell led the army to London, and forced the Presbyterians to yield.
 17-20. An ambitious man makes no distinction between enemies (of an opposing party) and rivals (in his own party), and in the case of such a man ("with such") it is more difficult to restrain him than to oppose him.

125. 23. Caesar's. Charles the First's.
 24. Through his laurels. In spite of his royal crown.
 29. His private gardens. Until the outbreak of the Civil War Cromwell had lived in retirement.
 41. Nature, that hateth emptiness. A variant of the well known phrase "Nature abhors a vacuum."
 42. Allows of penetration less. Two bodies cannot occupy the same space.
 47. Hampton. It was long believed that Cromwell connived at the flight of Charles from Hampton Court to Carisbrooke Castle in 1647.
 57. He. The King. This fine passage has done much to keep the poem alive.
 66. Assured the forced power. Made the Commonwealth secure.
 69. A bleeding head. Pliny tells, in his Natural History (xxviii. 4), an anecdote of the finding of a head while workmen were digging on the Tarpeian hill for the foundation of a temple to Jupiter; the omen was interpreted as indicating a prosperous future for Rome.
 82. In the republic's hand. Submissive to the Commonwealth's wishes.
 86. A Kingdom. Ireland.
 92. Heavy. I. e., with her prey.
 126. 101, 2. Cromwell shall be to France what Caesar was, to Italy what Hannibal was.
 104. Climacteric. The force that brings about the result at a critical time.
 106. Parti-colored. Variegated, i. e., fickle. There is a play on the word Pict, derived from "pictus," painted, applied to the ancient Celts who were accustomed to paint their bodies.
 111. Lay . . . in. To send dogs into cover.

DORSET: TO ALL YOU LADIES NOW AT LAND

127. "Written in 1665, when the author, at the age of twenty-eight, had volunteered under the Duke of York in the first Dutch war. It was composed at sea the night before the critical engagement in which the Dutch admiral Opdam was blown up, and thirty ships destroyed or taken. It may be considered as inaugurating the epoch of vers-de-société." (E. Gosse, in Ward's English Poets.)
 128. 27. Whitehall stairs. The royal palace of Whitehall was situated on the bank of the Thames.
 44. A merry main. To throw a main was to cast dice in a game of chance.

BROWNE

HYDRIOGRAPHIA

The Urn-Burial sets out to be an historical account of the methods of dealing with the dead, but turns into a meditation upon the brevity and vanity of the life

- of man. It was suggested by the digging up of some Roman burial urns in Norfolk.
128. 10. Sic ego, etc. Thus I should wish to be laid at rest when I am become bones.
20. Considerable. Worthy of consideration.
24. To retain a stronger propension unto them. I. e., such souls clung more strongly to the bodies.
129. 36. Archimedes. The famous Syracusan mathematician and physicist of the third century B. C.
37. The life of Moses his man. The life of man as described by Moses, in the so-called Prayer of Moses, the ninetyeth Psalm.
42. One little finger. "According to the ancient arithmetic of the hand, wherein the little finger of the right hand contracted, signified an hundred." (Browne's note).
54. Alcmena's nights. Jupiter, in love with Alcmena, mother of Hercules, made one night as long as three.
65. What name Achilles assumed. Thetis, mother of Achilles, to prevent him from going on the expedition against Troy, had him disguised as a girl; Ulysses penetrated the stratagem.
69. Ossuaries. Receptacles for bones.
77. Provincial guardians, or tutelary observers. Guardian spirits of the locality.
83. Pyramidally extant. Known by a tombstone.
93. Atropos. The one of the three Fates who cuts the thread of life.
99. Meridian. The noon, or middle point, of the world's existence.
106. Prophecy of Elias. "That the world may last but six thousand years." (Browne's note.)
107. Charles the Fifth . . . Hector. "Hector's fame lasting above two lives of Methusaleh, before that famous prince (i. e., Charles) was extant." (Browne's note.)
115. One face of Janus . . . the other. The past and the future.
126. Setting. Declining.
130. 136. The mortal right-lined circle. Θ , the character of death.
147. Gruter. Jan Gruter (1560-1627), a continental scholar; author of Inscriptiones Antiquæ (1603).
157. Cardan. Italian philosopher of the sixteenth century.
160. Hippocrates. Greek physician (460-377 B. C.).
164. Entelechia. A word coined by Aristotle to denote the actual being of a thing in distinction to its capacity for being.
167. Canaanitish woman. See Genesis, xvi: 10.
178. Adrian. Hadrian, Emperor of Rome.
182. Thersites. A foul-mouthed coward in the Iliad, where Agamemnon is leader of the Greek host.
130. 205. Lucina. Goddess of childbirth; here equivalent to midwife.
211. Our light in ashes. "According to the custom of the Jews, who place a lighted wax-candle in a pot of ashes by the corpse." (Browne's note.)
212. Brother of death. Sleep.
224. To weep into stones. A reference to the fable of Niobe.
131. 257. Mummy is become merchandise. A medicinal preparation made, or supposed to be made, from mummies, was highly regarded in the old medicine.
258. Mizraim. The Biblical name for Egypt; Browne seems to use it as symbolic of Egypt's great men.
268. Nimrod. The Hebrew equivalent of the Greek Orion.
269. The dog-star. Sirius.
274. Perspectives. Telescopes.
298. Scape. Oversight.
309. Sardanapalus. Last king of Assyria, who, when his besieged city of Nineveh was about to be captured, gathered together his household and treasure and burned all, with himself, in his palace.
316. Gordianus. An emperor of Rome in the third century. Man of God. Moses, buried by the hand of God; cf. Deuteronomy, xxxiv: 6.
321. Enoch. "And Enoch was not, for God took him." Genesis, v: 24. Elias. Elijah was taken up to heaven in a chariot of fire; 2 Kings, ii 1-12.
327. Decretory. Established by decree.
346. Alaricus. King of the Visigoths, who captured and sacked Rome in 410; he was buried, with vast treasure, in the bed of a river.
348. Sylla. Roman general and dictator (138-78 B. C.).
132. 357. That poetical taunt of Isaiah. See Isaiah, xiv: 16-17.
367. St. Innocent's churchyard. In Paris.
371. Moles of Adrianus. Hadrian's Mole, or tomb, now known as the Castle of St. Angelo.

FULLER

THE GOOD SCHOOLMASTER

133. III. Cocking. Coddling.
113. Peculiar. A parish exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishop within whose diocese it lies; here applied to a condition of exemption from the usual regulations.
132. De insolenti carnificina. Of the excessive torture. Conscindebatur . . . singulos. He was lashed with whips seven or eight times a day.
136. Tusser. Thomas Tusser, an English poetaster of the sixteenth century.
143. Udall. Nicholas Udall, headmaster of Eton 1534-1541; best known as author of the first regular English comedy, Ralph Roister Doister.

145. Orbilius. The schoolmaster of Horace, who called him plagosus, the flogger.

155. In forma pauperis. On the ground of poverty.

134. 196. Ascham. An English scholar and writer of the sixteenth century; tutor to Elizabeth, and author of Toxophilus, a treatise on archery, and The Schoolmaster, one on education.
199. Dr. Whitaker. William Whitaker (1548-1595), master of St. John's College, Cambridge; famous as a scholar.
200. Mulcaster. Headmaster of the Merchant Tailors' School, and later of St. Paul's School.

THE LIFE OF QUEEN ELIZABETH

32. Compurgator. A person who swore to his belief in the innocence of one on trial.
69. A fit of the mother. A pun on the old meaning of mother—hysteria.

135. 121. Ascham. See note on The Good Schoolmaster, above.
138. Et si . . . pudor. And if that womanly bashfulness of mine.
136. 188. Latter Lammas. This rendering of Græcas Calendas is explained by the fact that neither a Greek calends nor a later Lammas (a church festival on August first) exists; the latter term was used ironically for "never."
211. Semper eadem. Always the same.
231. This anagrammatist. Edmund Campion, an English Jesuit, executed for treason in 1581.
271. Cordial. Invigorating.

WALTON

THE COMPLETE ANGLER

137. 1. Piscator. The Complete Angler is written in the form of dialogue; the chief characters are Piscator, the Fisherman, and Venator, the Hunter, who is the pupil.
9. Gesner. Conrad Gesner (1516-1565), a Swiss naturalist.
36. Mercator. Gerard Mercator (1512-1594), famous for his contributions to geographical science.
138. 125. Albertus. Albertus Magnus (1206?-1280), a scholastic philosopher.
160. History of Life and Death. The Latin Historia Vitæ et Mortis, 1623.
139. 221. The Royal Society. The Royal Society of London for Improving Natural Knowledge was incorporated 15 July, 1662. See Huxley's essay "On the Necessity of Improving Natural Knowledge," p. 720.
275. Make a catch. Sing a "round."
140. 337. Kit Marlow. Christopher Marlowe. Marlowe's song and Raleigh's answer were both printed in England's Helicon (1600).
359. A syllabub of new verjuice. A sort of custard made of cream and fruit juice.

141. 433. Sir Thomas Overbury. Overbury (1581-1613) is famous in literary history for his Characters, one of which, "The Fair and Happy Milkmaid," concludes with the sentence here quoted.

TAYLOR

HOLY DYING

142. The selection is section 2 of Chapter i, with the omission of one paragraph.
143. 89. Escorial. The royal palace in Madrid.
94. Where . . . interred. Westminster Abbey.
141. Thyades. Women who celebrated the Bacchic orgies.
144. 165. Chrisom-child. Newly baptized child.
171. Squinancy. Quinsy.
185. Calends. The first day of the month.

MILTON

L'ALLEGRO

145. 2. Cerberus. A three-headed dog, guardian of the gateway of Hades.
10. Cimmerian. Cimmeria was a land in which, according to Homer, the sun never shone.
12. Euphrosyne. Mirth.
29. Hebe. The goddess of youth.
146. 45. Then to come in spite of sorrow. The passage has been much disputed about. The interpretation which seems most satisfactory is that L'Allegro finds pleasure in hearing the song of the lark in the early morning, and then in coming to the window to look out through sweet briar and eglantine, to bid good morrow to the new day.
67. Tells his tale. Counts his sheep.
83. Corydon, Thyrsis, etc. Conventional names in pastoral verse.
103. She . . . he. Persons who are telling the stories.
125. Hymen. The god of marriage.
132. Jonson's learned sock. Actors in classical comedy wore a low-heeled soccus, or slipper. Jonson's plays were famous for the scholarly learning they embodied.
147. 145. Orpheus. According to the Greek myths, Orpheus was the most wonderful of all human musicians. Pluto consented to let Eurydice return with her husband to the earth, but Orpheus, by looking back to be sure she was following, broke the terms of his agreement with Pluto, and Eurydice remained in Hades. Hence the phrase, "half-regained."

IL PENSEROSO

10. Morpheus. The god of sleep.
18. Prince Memnon's sister. Memnon was a handsome king of the Ethiopians, according to Homer. Milton here assumes that his sister must have been equally beautiful.

19. Starred Ethiop queen. Cassiopeia, transformed into the constellation.
23. Vesta. Goddess of the hearth.
53. Fiery-wheelèd throne. Cf. Ezekiel, x.
55. Hist. Probably an imperative, "bring silently"; by another interpretation it is a past participle, "hushed", agreeing with Silence.
59. Cynthia. Goddess of the moon.
148. 87. The Bear. The constellation Ursa Major, which, in northern latitudes, never sets.
88. Thrice-great Hermes. Hermes Trismegistus, a learned Egyptian.
99. Thebes . . . Pelops' line . . . Troy. All subjects of Greek tragic poetry.
101. The reference here may be to Shakespeare's tragedies.
102. Buskined. The buskin was the high-heeled boot worn by actors in classical tragedy; opposed to the sock of L'Allegro, l. 132.
104. Musæus. A mythical Greek poet, sometimes called the son of Orpheus.
109. Him that left half-told. The reference is to Chaucer, who left his Squire's Tale unfinished.
120. Where more is meant than meets the ear. Where there is an allegorical meaning. Milton probably had Spenser's Faerie Queene in mind.
122. Civil-suited. Soberly dressed, like a citizen.
124. Attic boy. Cephalus, whom Aurora loved.
134. Sylvan. Sylvanus, one of the woodland deities.
148. His wings. Sleep's wings.
158. Massy proof. Able to support the weight resting on them.
159. Storied. With Biblical stories in stained glass.

LYCIDAS

Lycidas. A pastoral name, taken from classical poetry. A learned friend. Edward King, a fellow student with Milton at Christ's College, Cambridge.

1. Yet once more. Milton is taking up the writing of poetry after a lapse of a few years since the time Comus was written.
149. 15. Sisters of the sacred well. The Muses; the Pierian spring, on Mount Helicon.
23. Nursed upon the self-same hill. Attended the same university. Milton adopts the poetical convention of representing his characters as shepherds.
36. Dametas. The reference is possibly to Milton's college tutor.
54. Mona. The island of Anglesey.
55. Deva. The river Dee.
58. The Muse. Calliope.
62. His gory visage. Orpheus was slain

by Thracian women, and his head cast into the river Hebrus.

149. 65. Shepherd's trade. The art of poetry.
68. Amaryllis . . . Neæra. Conventional pastoral names for women.
75. Blind Fury. Atropos, not one of the Furies, but the Fate who cuts the thread of life.
150. 77. Phœbus. The god of poetry.
79. Glistening foil. Glittering tinsel; gold leaf.
85. Arethuse. Arethusa, a Sicilian spring, symbolic of Greek pastoral poetry.
86. Mincius. A stream in Italy, near which Virgil was born. Local. Used for shepherds' pipes.
88. Oat. Oaten pipe; symbolic of pastoral verse.
89. The herald of the sea. Triton, son of Neptune, comes "in Neptune's plea"; that is, to defend his father.
96. Hippotades. Æolus, god of the winds.
99. Panope. One of the Nereids, or sea-nymphs.
103. Camus. The genius of the river Cam, beside which stands Cambridge University.
104. Sedge. Coarse grass and reeds along the river bank.
106. That sanguine flower. The hyacinth, whose petals the Greeks fancied to be marked with the word meaning alas.
109. The pilot. St. Peter.
115. The fold. The church.
119. Blind mouths. For an excellent exposition of the phrase cf. Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies.
126. Wind and rank mist. False teachings of the unprincipled clergy.
128. The grim wolf. The Roman Catholic Church, which was actively proselyting at the time.
130. Two-handed engine. Milton has in mind some instrument of retribution which will punish the corrupt clergy.
132. Alpheus. A river god, here symbolical of pastoral poetry. Milton here ends his digression on the state of the church.
151. 149. Amaranthus. The amaranth, symbolic of immortality.
151. Laureate. Crowned with laurel.
158. The monstrous world. The ocean, abode of monsters.
160. Bellerus. The Latin name for Land's End had been Bellerium, and Milton coins Bellerus as the name of an imaginary hero after whom the promontory was called.
161. The guarded mount. St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall, where the Archangel Michael was said to have appeared.
162. Namancos and Bayona. On the coast of Spain.
184. In thy large recompense. As a reward.
189. His Doric lay. His pastoral song.

ON SHAKESPEARE

152. This (so-called) sonnet was written for the second (1632) folio edition of Shakespeare's works.

TO THE LORD GENERAL CROMWELL

- 7, 8. Darwen stream, Dunbar field. Scenes of two of Cromwell's victories over the Scots.
9. Worcester's laureate wreath. Cromwell won the decisive victory over Charles II and his Scottish allies at Worcester, 3 September, 1651.

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIEDMONT

The Vaudois, or Waldenses, a Protestant people living in the northwestern part of Italy, were subjected in 1655 to a bloody persecution because they refused to accept Catholicism.

153. 12. The triple tyrant. The Pope, who wears a triple crown.
14. The Babylonian woe. The Puritans frequently applied the name Babylon to Rome, alluding to the scriptural account in Revelation, xvii-xviii.

ON HIS DECEASED WIFE

This was Milton's second wife, Catherine Woodcock, who died in childbirth in 1658.
2. Like Alcestis. Alcestis, the heroine of Euripides' drama, offered her life for her husband, but was rescued by Hercules.

PARADISE LOST: BOOK I

154. 6. Heavenly Muse. Milton is inventing a Muse of Hebrew poetry, and appealing to her for aid in accordance with the classical epic formula.
15. The Aonian mount. Mount Helicon, here symbolizing Greek poetry.
155. 74. As from the center thrice to the utmost pole. The distance between Heaven and Hell was three times the radius of the world. The diagram opposite represents approximately Milton's conception of the universe.
156. 129. Seraphim. Plural form; the seraphim were supposed to be the highest in rank of all the angels.
167. If I fail not. Unless I am mistaken.
197-201. The fables, etc. According to Greek mythology the Titans warred on Saturn, and the giants rebelled against Jove. Briareos, according to one legend, was a giant; Typhon, son of Tartarus and Gaea, was a Titan. Leviathan, the sea monster of the Bible, was identified with the whale.
157. 232. Pelorus. A Sicilian promontory near Mt. Ætna.
266. The oblivious pool. A transferred epithet; the pool which makes one oblivious.

158. 288. The Tuscan artist. Galileo, whom Milton met while travelling in Italy.
289. Fesole. Fiesole, a hill near Florence.
290. Valdarno. The valley of the Arno.
303. Vallombrosa. Near Florence, in Tuscany, the ancient Etruria.
305. Orion. The constellation Orion, or the Huntsman, supposed to bring foul weather.
307. Busiris. Here meaning the Pharaoh of the exodus. Memphian. Memphis was the ancient capital of Egypt.
309. Goshen. The portion of Egypt in which the Jews resided before the exodus.
159. 341. Warping. Usually explained as flying with a bending motion, twisting from side to side. Perhaps, however, it describes a progress by short stages, instead of continuous flight, as a ship is warped into harbor: the locusts advance a short distance, then settle down, and after devouring everything green, fly on to the next vegetation, and so on.
351. A multitude like which the populous north. Referring to the various invasions of the Roman Empire by the "barbarians" from the north.
392. Moloch. Human sacrifice, particularly of children, played an important part in the worship of Moloch.
397-9. Rabba. The capital of Ammon. Argob, Basan, Arnon. The first two, districts east of Palestine; the third, a river emptying into the Dead Sea from the east.

Before the fall of the Angels

After the fall of the Angels

After the creation of the World

159. 403. Opprobrious hill. The Mount of Olives, where Solomon built a temple to Moloch.
404, 5. Hinnom. A valley south of the Mount of Olives. Tophet, Gehenna. Synonyms for hell. Gehenna means, literally, "Valley of Hinnom."
406. Chemos. A god of the Moabites.
160. 411. The Asphaltic pool. The Dead Sea.
420. The brook that parts. The river Besor.
422. Baalim and Ashtaroth. Phœnician gods, here used in the plural form for deities of the sun and moon.
438. Ashtoreth. Goddess of love, corresponding to the Aphrodite of the Greeks.
444. That uxorious king. Solomon.
446. Thammuz. Corresponding to the Greek Adonis, slain by a wild boar.
450. Adonis. A river in Phœnicia whose water is reddened by the soil through which it flows.
455. Ezekiel. See Ezekiel, viii: 14.
462. Dagon. A Philistine deity; 1 Samuel, v.
464-6. Azotus . . . Gaza. Philistine cities.
471. A leper, etc. See 2 Kings, v.
478. Osiris, Isis, Orus. Egyptian gods.
484. The calf in Oreb. See Exodus, xii: 35-6, and xxxii: 4. The rebel King. Jeroboam; see 1 Kings, xii: 28-9.
488. Equalled with one stroke. See Exodus, xii: 29.
490. Belial. Milton's personification of wickedness.
495. As did Eli's sons. See 1 Samuel, ii: 12-17.
502, 3. Sodom, Gibeah. See Genesis, xix; Judges, xix.
508. Ionian. Greek. Of Javan's issue. By the descendants of Javan (Noah's grandson). The account of the supplanting of Titan by Saturn, who was in turn deposed by Jove, is the accepted classical myth.
519. Doric. Greek.
520. Adria. The Adriatic Sea. Hesperian. Western; i. e., of Italy.
550. Dorian mood. Martial music like that of the Spartans.
162. 573. Since created man. Since man was created.
575, 6. That small infantry Warred on by cranes. The battle between the pygmies and the cranes, to which Homer refers at the beginning of the third book of the Iliad.
577. Phiegra. On the west coast of Italy, where gods and giants fought a great battle.
580. Uther's son. King Arthur, hero of many romances.
583-7. Aspramont . . . Fontarabbia. The names are those of places mentioned in mediæval romances describing conflicts between Christians and Saracens.
- Charlemain and all his peerage. Charlemagne and his twelve knights are the heroes of the Chanson de Roland, which gives an account of their defeat in the pass of Roncesvalles, not far from Fontarabbia.
163. 674. The work of sulphur. It was formerly believed that ores could not exist independent of sulphur.
678. Mammon. God of riches.
164. 720. Belus, Serapis. The first an Assyrian god, the second an Egyptian.
728. Cressets. Hanging iron vessels, open at the top, containing a burning illuminant.
737. Orders. The nine ranks of angels in the celestial hierarchy.
738. His name. Hephæstus, the Greek god of fire; analogous to the Latin Vulcan.
739. Ausonian land. Italy.
165. 756. Pandemonium. "The hall of all the devils." Milton coined the word on the analogy of Pantheon, "the hall of all the gods."
769. The Sun with Taurus rides. The sun is in the sign of Taurus, or the Bull, from the middle of April till the middle of May. Cf. Chaucer's Prologue, l. 7.

BOOK II

2. Ormus. The island of Hormuz in the Persian Gulf.
167. 74. That forgetful lake. The lake of liquid fire into which the angels had fallen.
100. At worst on this side nothing. In as bad a condition as we can be and still exist.
168. 152. Let this be good. Granting that absolute annihilation be good.
169. 224. For happy. As regards happiness.
170. 336. To our power. To the extent of our power.
173. 531. The goal. The turning-post in a chariot race.
539. Typhœan rage. Rage like that of Typhon, who, according to the fables, was imprisoned beneath a volcano.
542. Alcides. Hercules.
174. 592. Serbonian bog. An Egyptian lake, near the city of Damietta and Mt. Casius.
638. Bengala. Bengal.
639. Ternate and Tidore. Two of the Molucca Islands.
641. Ethiopian. The Indian Ocean.
Cape. Cape of Good Hope.
175. 660. Vexed Scylla. Scylla, transformed into a monster like Sin, cast herself into the sea between Italy and Sicily, and became a menace to navigation.
709. Ophiucus. One of the northern constellations.
178. 904. Barca, Cyrene. Cities of northern Africa.
922. Bellona. The Roman goddess of war.
179. 945. Pursues the Arimasbian. The legendary Arimaspians, of Scythia, fought the gryphons for the gold which the monsters guarded.

180. 1029. The utmost orb. The outermost of the ten concentric spheres which, according to Ptolemaic astronomy, constituted the universe; at the center was the earth.

BOOK XII

604. He ended. The archangel Michael, who had been sent to drive Adam and Eve out of Paradise.

AREOPAGITICA

181. "I wrote my Areopagitica," said Milton in his Defensio Secunda, "in order to deliver the press from the restraints with which it was encumbered; that the power of determining what was true and what was false, what ought to be published and what to be suppressed, might no longer be entrusted to a few illiterate and illiberal individuals, who refused their sanction to any work which contained views or sentiments at all above the level of the vulgar superstition." The treatise appeared in November, 1644, four months after the defeat of Rupert at Marston Moor, and when Milton felt confident that the Parliamentary cause would prosper. The immediate occasion was the enactment, in June, 1643, of an order forbidding the printing or sale of any book that had not been properly licensed.
14. Those fabulous dragon's teeth. The dragon's teeth, sown by Jason, sprang up armed men.
46. The thing. The custom of requiring a license.
182. 58. Lullius. Raymond Lully, a scientist of the thirteenth century. Sublimate. extract.
67. That unapocryphal vision. See Acts, x: 9-16.
85. Mr. Selden. John Selden (1584-1654), a writer on law and constitutional history and member of Parliament for Oxford University.
107. Omer. A measure, mentioned in Exodus, xvi: 18. It was between half and four-fifths of a gallon.
128. Seeds which were imposed on Psyche. The story, told in Apuleius's Golden Ass, pictures Venus as punishing Psyche for winning the love of Cupid by forcing her to arrange in proper piles all the seeds of a vast heap of mixed grain. The ants, taking pity on Psyche, performed the labor for her.
164. Scotus; Aquinas. Duns Scotus, (1265?-1308), a famous mathematician; Thomas Aquinas (1224?-1274), the "angelic doctor" of the scholastic philosophers.
183. 166. Guyon. The knight of temperance, hero of Book II of the Faerie Queene.
181. It. The licensing act.

183. 187. Pluralities. The churchman who was the possessor of several benefices was said to hold a plurality.
219. Ferular. Rod. Fescu. Pointer.
220. Imprimatur. Let it be printed; the word signifying that the book had been licensed for publication.
247. Palladian. Pertaining to Pallas Athene, goddess of wisdom.
184. 359. Pyrrhus. After the battle of Heraclaea (280 B. C.) Pyrrhus declared that if he had Roman soldiers the control of the world would be easy.
185. 412. Janus. The two-faced god of the Romans, whose temple doors were opened only in war-time.
426. Beyond the discipline of Geneva. Beyond what seems proper to the Presbyterians.
459. The old Proteus. Proteus, the sea god, whose power of assuming many forms has given its significance to the adjective Protean, prophesied when bound in chains.
464. Micaiah before Ahab. See 1 Kings, xxii: 13-15.
186. 502. Many subdichotomies. Many minor subdivisions.
187. 613. She is now fallen from the stars. The Star-chamber court was abolished in 1641.
620. These sophisms and elenchs of merchandise. False arguments used by the bookselling trade.

PEPYS

THE DIARY

23. The Covenant. The Scottish Covenant, or agreement for the conduct of the church, was promulgated in 1638; in 1643 the "Solemn League and Covenant" between the Parliamentary forces and Scotland was signed, providing for the abolition in England of Popery and Prelacy. In 1662 Charles abrogated the covenants.
34. My Lord. Sir Edward Montagu, to whom Pepys was secretary, and who afterwards secured Pepys's appointment as Clerk of the Acts in the Navy Office.
39. The Long Reach. The part of the river between Erith and Gravesend.
188. 73. Trimmed in the morning. Thus Pepys records his visits to the barber.
108. His escape from Worcester. In 1651 Cromwell won what he called the "crowning mercy" at Worcester, when he defeated Charles II and his army of Scottish supporters.
143. Wide canons. Ornaments attached to the legs of a pair of breeches.
167. General Monk. Cromwell's old companion-in-arms, whose decision to welcome Charles II was largely influential in bringing about the Restoration.
190. 301. The Three Cranes. A tavern on upper Thames Street.

190. 379. The Custom of the Country. A tragi-comedy by Fletcher; printed in the 1647 edition of Beaumont and Fletcher.
191. 391. By link. By the light of a torch, or link.
407. Sir Martin Mar-all. A comedy adapted for the stage by Dryden, from a translation by the Duke of Newcastle.
445. The Indian Emperor. Dryden's heroic drama dealing with the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards. The play was a brilliant success. Nell. Nell Gwynn, the most popular actress of the day; a favorite of Charles II.
459. The Black Prince. Roger Boyle, Earl of Orrery (1621-1679), won a considerable success with Mustapha; The Black Prince was a comparative failure.

LOYALIST STALL-BALLADS

The long struggle to dispossess the House of Stuart, beginning in the first quarter of the seventeenth century, was not finally ended until Prince Charles Stuart, "the Young Pretender," grandson of James II, had been defeated at Culloden, in 1746, by the Duke of Cumberland. As the fortunes of the Stuarts waned, their attacks on their opponents—Parliamentarians, Whigs, Hanoverians—became more bitter. During the Civil War, and again at the time of the Revolution of 1688, the flood of satire of which these street songs are typical examples, was of almost unbelievable magnitude. The six ballads here printed are from the time of the Civil War and the Commonwealth.

THE PROTECTING BREWER

193. The legend that Cromwell was a brewer by trade appears in many of the songs and satires of the period.

THE LAWYERS' LAMENTATION

Charing Cross had been torn down by Parliament along with many other insignia of royalty and ecclesiasticism.

DRYDEN

ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL

195. The poem appeared in 1681, when the question of the successor to Charles II, in the event of the King's death, was agitating all England. The heir-apparent was the King's brother James, the Duke of York, who was generally unpopular on account of his Catholicism. James, Duke of Monmouth, the Absalom of the poem, an illegitimate son of Charles, was a Protestant, and in general favor with the Whig and anti-Catholic parties. Despite the stain on his birth his friends, led by Anthony Ashley Cooper, first earl of Shaftesbury (Achitophel) planned to set aside tradition and present Monmouth as a sort of people's candidate in opposition to the Duke of York. For many years Shaftesbury had been the virtual leader of the Whigs and Protestants. During the "Popish Plot" he had been Titus Oates's most prominent supporter; he championed the Exclusion Bill, and was accused of fomenting a rebellion in Scotland. In July, 1681, he was imprisoned in the Tower on charge of high treason; but when his case came before the grand jury at the end of November, he was released through an ignoramus verdict. In November, 1682, he fled to Holland, where in 1683 he died. The Duke of Monmouth made his ill-fated attempt to win the crown in 1685, but his followers were dispersed at the battle of Sedgemoor, and he himself was soon afterwards beheaded. Dryden undertook in Absalom and Achitophel to influence public opinion against Shaftesbury, and timed its publication so that it appeared only two weeks before the earl's trial was to begin. For the Biblical account of the revolt of Absalom see 2 Samuel, xiii-xviii.

7. Israel's monarch. Charles II, the David of the poem.

23. In foreign fields he won renown. Monmouth had won something of a reputation as a soldier during three campaigns on the continent.

34. The charming Annabel. Anne Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, whom Monmouth married in 1665.

39. Amnon's murder. It is uncertain just what Dryden had in mind; perhaps an assault on Sir John Coventry in which Monmouth had been involved in 1670; the Duke had also participated in a park riot in which a beadle was killed.

42. Sion. London.

45. The Jews. The English.

57. Saul. Oliver Cromwell.

58. Ishbosheth. Richard Cromwell.

59. Hebron. Scotland, where Charles II was first crowned.

196. 82. The good old cause. The cause of the Commonwealth; the phrase was generally used with this meaning, and usually with a tinge of sarcasm.

85. Old Jerusalem. London.

86. Jebusites. Roman Catholics. The chosen people (l. 88) were the Protestants.

108. That Plot, the nation's curse. The Popish Plot of 1678-79.

118. The Egyptian rites. French rites. "Where gods were recommended," etc., is an attack on the doctrine of transubstantiation.

197. 150. Achitophel. Shaftesbury.
175. The triple bond. An alliance formed in 1668 between England, Sweden, and the Dutch Republic.

197. 177. A foreign yoke. An alliance with France.
188. Abbethdin. The highest officer of the Jewish court of justice.
198. 264. Gath. Brussels.
270. Jordan's sand. Dover beach, where Charles II landed at the Restoration.
199. 352. The collateral line. James, Duke of York, brother of the king, stood at the head of this line of descent.
200. 529. A numerous host of dreaming saints. The non-conforming Protestants, sarcastically called "saints."
539. Born to be saved. A sarcastic reference to the doctrine of election.
544. Zimri. George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, who in The Rehearsal had satirized Dryden as "John Bayes." In his Discourse Concerning Satire Dryden afterwards wrote: "The character of Zimri in my Absalom is, in my opinion, worth the whole poem: 'tis not bloody, but 'tis ridiculous enough; and he for whom it was intended was too witty to resent it as an injury."
585. Shimei. Slingsby Bethel, whom the Whigs had elected one of the two Sheriffs in 1680.
201. 617. No Rechabite, etc. "The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none." Jeremiah, xxxv: 14.
202. 817. Barzillai. James Butler, Duke of Ormond, always a staunch loyalist.
899. Amiel. Edward Seymour, who from 1673 to 1679 was Speaker of the House of Commons.
902. The Sanhedrin. The House of Commons.
910. Unequal ruler of the day. Apollo's son Phaethon, who could not guide successfully his father's car of the sun.
203. 921. The true successor. James, Duke of York.
MAC FLECKNOE
204. After the release of Shaftesbury in 1681, his Whig friends caused a medal to be struck commemorating the event. Dryden at once published The Medal: A Satire Against Sedition. Among the replies was a violent one by Thomas Shadwell, The Medal of John Bayes. In October, 1682, Dryden answered with Mac Flecknoe, than which nothing illustrates more effectively the caustic nature of his satire.
3. Flecknoe. An inoffensive poet who had died in 1678, over whose shoulder Dryden strikes Shadwell.
29. Heywood and Shirley. Elizabethan dramatists, not deserving of such harsh criticism.
36. To King John of Portugal I sung. King John had entertained Flecknoe at Lisbon.
42. In Epsom blankets tossed. "Tossing in a blanket is the punishment visited upon Sir Samuel Hearty in The Virtuoso.
There is also a reference to the title of Shadwell's play Epsom Wells."—(Noyes; Camb. ed., p. 959).
204. 43. The new Arion. Arion was a Greek musician of the eighth century B. C.
53. St. André. A French dancing-master.
54. Thy own Psyche. One of Shadwell's plays.
205. 57. Singleton. A contemporary singer who had taken the rôle of Villerius in Davenant's The Siege of Rhodes.
64. Fair Augusta. London, which at the time was fearful of Popish plotters.
74. A Nursery. A theatre given over to training young actors.
78. Maximin. A defiant character in Dryden's Tyrannic Love.
79, 80. Buskins, socks. See notes on L'Allegro, l. 132, and Il Penseroso, l. 102.
81. Gentle Simkin. A clown.
84. Panton. "A celebrated punster, according to Derrick." (Scott.)
105. Herringman. A contemporary publisher.
122. Love's Kingdom. A play by Flecknoe.
206. 149. Let Virtuosos, etc. The Virtuoso was a play by Shadwell.
151. Gentle George. Sir George Etheredge, the contemporary dramatist.
152. Dorimant, Loveit, Cully, etc. All characters in plays by Shadwell.
163. Let no alien Sedley interpose. Sir Charles Sedley, who had assisted Shadwell in his play-writing.
168. Sir Formal. Sir Formal Trifle appears in Shadwell's The Virtuoso.
172. By arrogating Jonson's hostile name. Shadwell was fervid in his praise of Ben Jonson.
179. Prince Nicander. A character in Shadwell's Psyche.
185. Oil on water's flow. Flow is a noun.
207. 212. Bruce and Longville had a trap prepared. Thus the two gentlemen dispose of Sir Formal in The Virtuoso.

THE HIND AND THE PANTHER

James II, who came to the throne in 1685, was a Roman Catholic. In 1687 Dryden published this poem, an allegory in which the Hind, "immortal and unchanged," represents the Roman, and the Panther, the English Church. The various dissenting sects are satirized much more harshly than the English Church.
9. Her young. Roman Catholic priests.
27. The common hunt. The other beasts; i. e., the other sects.
35. The bloody Bear. The Independents, later the Congregationalists.
37. The quaking Hare. The Quakers, who would not take oaths in court.
39. The buffoon Ape. The Freethinkers.
41. The Lion. The King of England.

207. 43. The Boar. The Anabaptists.
49. In German forests. "The sect originated in Germany, where their early history is connected with a revolt of the peasantry." (Noyes.)
208. 53. False Reynard. The Unitarians. Athanasius (293-373) was instrumental in having the early church embody the Trinitarian conception of God in the Nicene creed. Socinus was opposed to this orthodox Trinitarian belief.
327. The Panther. The Church of England.
338. The Wolf. The Presbyterians.

SONG FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY

On this day, November 22, a London musical society annually held a festival in honor of St. Cecilia, patron saint of music. Pope and others wrote similar songs.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST

209. 29. Spires. Coils.

LINES UNDER THE PORTRAIT OF MILTON

211. The three poets referred to are Homer, Virgil, and Milton.

ESSAY OF DRAMATIC POESY

1. Neander. The essay is in dialogue form, Neander representing Dryden; Eugenius may be Charles Sackville, Lord Buckhurst, afterwards Earl of Dorset.
2. The Silent Woman. A play by Ben Jonson.
212. 36. Clenches. Puns.
43. Quantum lenta, etc. As the cypresses rise above the low shrubs.
45. Mr. Hales of Eton. John Hales (1584-1656), fellow of Eton, an English scholar and critic.
54. The last king. Charles I.
84. Humor. A man's particular bent, or ruling passion, was called his "humor."
213. 156. The greater wit. The greater genius.

PREFACE TO THE FABLES

The Fables, translations of Homer, Chaucer, and others, were published in 1700.

14. One of our late great poets. Abraham Cowley.
16. Forgive. Forego, leave alone.
41. Nimis poeta. Too much a poet.
46. Anribus istius, etc. Adapted to the ears of that time.
56. The last edition. In 1687 there appeared a reprint, with some additions, of Thomas Speght's 1602 blackletter edition of Chaucer.
65. Numbers. Metre.
214. 72. Dryden did not understand the pronunciation of Chaucer's final e.
88. Baptista Porta. An Italian quack and physiognomist.

DEFOE

THE TRUE-BORN ENGLISHMAN

In 1701 a satirist named Tutchin lampooned King William as a "Dutchman." Defoe, "filled with a kind of rage," replied in The True-Born Englishman.

215. 39. Shibboleth. See Judges, xii. 6.
45. The Norman bastard. William the Conqueror.
91. Blue-coat Hospitals. Charity schools. Christ's Hospital, the famous "Blue-Coat School" of which Lamb wrote so delightfully, was founded by Henry VI, and was originally intended to be a school for orphans. The scholars wore a blue gown and blue cap. The Bridewell, later a reformatory, was originally a school of the same nature.
95. The Counter. A London prison.

THE SHORTEST WAY WITH THE DISSENTERS

216. The Dissenters, or Nonconformists, were members of the various anti-episcopal sects which had flourished during the Civil War, had been suppressed, sometimes by the sword, under Charles II and his brother James, and had again revived under the sympathetic government of William III. In the spring of 1702 Anne, a Stuart, succeeded to the throne; in November of the same year a Tory ministry introduced a bill against "occasional conformity." The practice thus attacked was a means whereby Dissenters, through occasional attendance at the Church of England, made themselves eligible to office. Had the bill passed,—and the Queen was ardently in favor of it,—this avenue of escape would have been closed, and the pains and penalties of the old Stuart régime, with some modifications, would have been again in force. Defoe, a Nonconformist, at once attacked the government in this pamphlet. Writing with an ironic gravity hardly surpassed by Swift in his Modes of Proposal, he argued that at last the time had arrived for wiping the Dissenters out of existence, and proposed measures far more rigorous than Tory or High-church man had dreamed of. At first neither party saw through the veil of irony, and the pamphlet was accepted at its face value. But when the government discovered that it had been hoaxed, Defoe was arrested, fined, exhibited three times in the pillory, and imprisoned in Newgate, and his pamphlet was burned in public by the hangman.
1. Sir Roger L'Estrange. A seventeenth century pamphleteer, founder of The Gazette.
13. Some people. The Nonconformists.
23. Near fourteen years. William III took the throne, by invitation of Parliament, in 1688.

216. 56. Act of Toleration. Passed in 1689, abolishing the old penalties for non-conformity.
217. 72. A Dutch government. William III was Prince of Orange.
111. The Huguenots in France. The French Protestants had been persecuted more viciously than English Nonconformists; in 1685 they were expelled from the country.
143. A sordid impostor. Cromwell.
218. 213. Rye House Plot. A conspiracy, discovered in 1683, to murder Charles II and his brother James. Although certain men were executed for their complicity in the plot, many persons felt that there was little besides party jealousy at the bottom of the exposé.
232. The late king. James II.
219. 291. The common enemy. France.
351. The act "De heretico comburendo." For burning heretics.
374. Delenda est Carthago. Carthage must be destroyed.
220. 432. The Counter. A prison in London.
433. A Conventicle. Meeting of Nonconformists for worship.
221. 502. Religious houses. Monasteries and convents.

THE APPARITION OF MRS. VEAL

This narrative had always been considered an admirable example of Defoe's ability to write pure fiction so that it would seem simple truth, until Mr. George Aitken published in The Nineteenth Century, Jan., 1895, an article showing that Defoe in all probability was telling a story in which, as Aitken puts it, "nearly all the details are true, . . . the characters are real persons," and in which "Defoe invented nothing, or next to nothing, but . . . told, very skilfully, a ghost story which was attracting notice at the time."

224. 324. Escutcheons. Hatchments; funeral tablets bearing the arms of the deceased person.

SWIFT

A TALE OF A TUB

226. A Tale of a Tub was published anonymously in 1704; Swift had written it some time before, during the closing years of the seventeenth century. It consisted of eleven sections, and was introduced by four satirical prefaces. Of the eleven sections constituting the body of the work, five (II, IV, VI, VIII, XI) contain the story of the three brothers, in the course of which Swift pictures the development of Christian faith to the end of the seventeenth century. The other sections are more general in their import, and, like Gulliver's Travels, expose the vanity and absurdity of human nature in the large.

226. 35. Hobbes's Leviathan. The Leviathan of Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), which appeared in 1651, was an inquiry into the nature of the State, and the theory of government.
227. 25. My will. The New Testament.
52. Duchess D'Argent, etc. Duchess of Money, My Lady of Great Titles, and the Countess of Pride.
63. Locket's, Will's. The first was a London inn; the second, the coffee house which Dryden and the wits of the age frequented.
70. Sub dio. In the open air.
228. 96. A sort of idol. The tailor, god of the fashionable world.
112. Primum mobile. In the Ptolemaic astronomy, the outermost sphere, containing and imparting motion to the other smaller spheres.
117. Water-tabby. Tabby was a material, such as silk, that had been watered.
152. The coats their father had left them. The coats represent church organization, as appears in the remainder of the satire.
186. Totidem verbis. In so many words.
189. Totidem syllabis. In so many syllables.
229. 200. Tertio modo. By a third method. Totidem literis. In so many letters.
215. Q. V. C. Quibusdam veteribus codicibus. In some ancient manuscripts.
224. Jure paterno. In accord with the paternal law.
226. In the passage omitted Swift tells how as the fashions changed, and shoulder knots gave place to gold lace, and gold lace to satin linings, the brothers juggled with their father's will, and in each case gratified their desires.
232. A certain lord. This was Constantine the Great, from whom the popes pretended a donation of St. Peter's patrimony, which they have never been able to produce. (Swift's note.)
Section IV tells how Peter, representing the church of Rome, got the upper hand of his brothers after driving the legal heirs out and getting the "certain lord's" house for himself. His pride increased with his success; he claimed to be his father's sole heir, and assumed the titles of Father Peter, My Lord Peter, and finally Emperor Peter. When the two other brothers finally protested, Peter drove them from the house. The story is resumed in section VI.
230. 66, 68. Martin. Martin Luther; Jack. John Calvin. Martin stands for the moderate reform in the Church of England; Jack, for the more violent reform of the Dissenters.

A MODEST PROPOSAL

231. 2. This great town. Dublin.
232. 15. The Pretender. James Stuart, son of James II, who in 1715 and 1745 made armed attempts to recover the crown of England, and intrigued with the Spaniards for assistance.

JOURNAL TO STELLA

236. "The brightest part of Swift's story, the pure star in that dark and tempestuous life of Swift's, is his love for Hester Johnson. It has been my business, professionally of course, to go through a deal of sentimental reading in my time, and to acquaint myself with love making as it has been described in various languages and at various ages of the world; and I know of nothing more manly, more tender, more exquisitely touching, than some of these brief notes, written in what Swift calls 'his little language' in his journal to Stella." (Thackeray: Swift, in English Humorists.)

In the "little language" MD stands for my dears, Stella and her companion, Mrs. Dingley; or sometimes for Stella alone; Presto is Swift; so is Pdfr.

2. Premunire. A legal term frequently used for a penalty incurred.

20. Harley. Robert Harley, Chancellor of the Exchequer, afterwards Lord Treasurer and Earl of Oxford.

30. Lord Halifax. Statesman and writer, one of the leaders of the Whigs.

71. Will Penn the Quaker. The founder of Pennsylvania.

81. St. John. One of the ablest of the Tory ministry, created Viscount Bolingbroke in 1714.

86. Bring me over. I. e., to the Tory party.

98. Fatal. Fated.

237. 102. Tooke. A London bookseller, who had published Swift's Tale of a Tub.

109. Tatler, . . . late. The Tatler suspended publication in January, 1711.

115. The you know what. Sometimes interpreted as referring to The Tale of a Tub, never publicly acknowledged by Swift.

134. Steele. Steele had lost his office of Gazetteer, and Swift had been trying to save him his position as Commissioner of Stamps.

139. Harrison. A young fellow whom Swift befriended and established as editor of a new series of Tatlers, after the failure of Steele's Tatler.

155. Mr. Harley . . . yesterday. Harley had sent Swift a bank note for fifty pounds; this action Swift regarded as an insult.

186. Patrick. Swift's servant, whom he at length was obliged to discharge for drunkenness.

238. 251. Most of the "little language" becomes intelligible on the substitution of certain consonants in place of the ones used; Swift commonly, as in this letter, writes l for r, and r for l. Richar = little. FW is "farewell"; ME is Madame Elderly, Mrs. Dingley; and Lele apparently means "there."

238. 256. The Duke of Hamilton had fought with Lord Mohun. The reader of Henry Esmond will recall the use Thackeray makes of this incident.

305. Ben-box sent to Lord-Treasurer. A band-box containing a pair of loaded pistols had been sent to Lord Oxford; the Tories saw in the affair a Whig plot to assassinate him.

ADDISON

THE CAMPAIGN

239. Addison's poem was published in 1704, celebrating the victory of Marlborough at Blenheim.

ADDISON AND STEELE

THE TATLER: PROSPECTUS

240. 55. White's Chocolate-house. During Queen Anne's reign the chocolate and coffee-houses served as resorts for men of letters and of fashion much as the taverns had done in the time of Elizabeth. The distinguishing characteristics of the group that frequented the various houses are indicated in Steele's paragraph.

241. 67. Plain Spanish. Perhaps wine; perhaps a syrup made of licorice and wine, which was a favorite throat remedy.

70. Kidney. One of the waiters.

81. A figure. A horoscope.

The remaining portion of the essay, which is not here reprinted, consists of letters from the three coffee-houses and from Steele's "own apartment."

DUELLING

The section here reprinted is the first third of the essay.

10. From hence. From White's Coffee-house.

242. 88. Ingenuity. Ingenuousness.

NED SOFTLY

8. Mr. Bickerstaff. Steele chose this as his pseudonym in writing The Tatler.

243. 36. Little Gothic ornaments. Addison uses the term contemptuously, as equivalent to rude, barbaric.

FROZEN WORDS

244. 8. Sir John Mandeville. The name assumed by the author of The Travels of Sir John Mandeville, written c. 1360. The Travels are famous for their exaggerations and wonders.

12. Ferdinand Mendez Pinto. Portuguese adventurer (1509-1583), navigator, and missionary to Japan. His account of his travels, the Peregrination, was published in 1614.

244. 43. Nova Zembla. A Russian arctic possession, consisting of two large islands.
 45. The author of Hudibras. Samuel Butler (1612-1680), whose Hudibras, published 1663, is a brilliant satire on the Puritans.
 245. 132. The strappado. A brutal form of corporal punishment, formerly practiced in the English army and navy.
 137. Wapping. A portion of the London water-front.
 246. 200. A kit. A small violin.
 210. Tuer le temps. To kill time.

THE SPECTATOR: MR. SPECTATOR

247. 96. Will's, Child's, etc. All well known coffee or cocoa-houses.
 101. The Postman. A London weekly newspaper.
 114. Jonathan's. A coffee-house frequented especially by stock brokers.
 248. 202. Little Britain. A street in London.

THE CLUB

20. Soho Square. In Addison's day the most fashionable quarter of London.
 249. 26. Rochester. A notorious rake of Charles II's court. Etherege. The first of the Restoration dramatists.
 28. Bully Dawson. A notorious sharper.
 59. A justice of the quorum. The phrase means "a member of the Bench."
 67. The Inner Temple. One of the so-called Inns of Court, where lawyers and law-students had their offices and frequently their places of residence.
 75. Aristotle, etc. He knows the laws of rhetoric, etc., as laid down by literary critics, better than the principles of jurisprudence.
 86. Demosthenes and Tully. Demosthenes and Cicero, the leading orators of Greece and Rome, respectively.
 109. The Rose. A tavern near Drury Lane Theatre.
 250. 206. Humorists. Men with a particular bent or disposition.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY

252. 51. Prebendaries. Officers of a cathedral or collegiate church who held an ecclesiastical living or prebend.
 77. The present war. The war of the Spanish Succession.
 94. Sir Cloudesley Shovel. An English admiral (1650-1707), commander-in-chief of British fleets from 1704 to his death.
 122. The repository of our English kings. The eastern end of the Abbey contains a large number of royal tombs.

SIR ROGER AT THE ASSIZES

254. 35. He is just within the game-act. Until 1831 the right to kill game in England depended upon social standing or income.

254. 43. Shoots flying. "On the wing."

A COQUETTE'S HEART

260. 114. Rosamond's bower. The bower which Henry II is said to have built for his favorite.

POPE

WINDSOR FOREST

261. 42. A Stuart reigns. Queen Anne, last of the Stuarts to wear the English crown.
 147. Now Cancer glows, etc. The sun is in the sign of Cancer, or the Crab; i. e., it is the period of the summer solstice.

AN ESSAY ON CRITICISM

262. 129. The Mantuan Muse. Virgil; the Maro of l. 130.
 138. The Stagirite. Aristotle.
 263. 16. The Pierian spring. The sacred well of the Muses in Thessaly.
 89. Conceit. Fantastic expression.
 128. Fungoso. A character in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humor.
 264. 137. Numbers. Metrical correctness.
 145, 147. It will be noticed that in these two lines, as in lines 157, 167-9, Pope is illustrating in his own verses the exact characteristics which he blames or praises.
 161. Denham, Waller. Two of the first 17th century poets to popularize the heroic couplet which Dryden and Pope afterwards perfected.
 174. Timotheus' varied lays. The reference is to Dryden's Alexander's Feast.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK: CANTO I

The poem is founded on an actual occurrence. Lord Petre, the baron of the poem, clipped a lock of Miss Arabella Fermor's hair. John Caryll, a friend of both persons, suggested to Pope that a humorous poem on the subject might relieve the unpleasantness which the theft of the lock occasioned. Miss Fermor appears in the poem as Belinda. In form, the poem is a mock epic, or "heroic-comical poem," retaining many of the external characteristics of the epic, but enlivened throughout by Pope's mildly satirical view of the society he was representing.

265. 18. The pressed watch. A "repeater," or watch that would strike the nearest hour.
 32. The silver token. Fairies were supposed to put silver coins in the slippers of good house-maids.
 44. The Ring. A circular drive in Hyde Park.

265. 56. Ombre. A fashionable game of cards.
 266. 127. The inferior priestess. The waiting maid, Betty (l. 148).

CANTO II

267. 3. The rival of his beams. Belinda.

CANTO III

269. 3. A structure of majestic frame. The royal palace of Hampton Court.
 27. At ombre. The description of this game, which occupies ll. 30-100, may well be passed over in reading. Much of the terminology, perfectly familiar to Pope's audience, is to-day unintelligible unless accompanied by elaborate illustration and explanation.
 270. 106. The berries crackle, and the mill turns round. Coffee berries were ground on the table.
 271. 165. Atalantis. The New Atalantis, a romance of the day, by Mrs. Manley.

CANTO IV

20. The dreaded east. The east wind was supposed to cause spleen, or ill temper, "a fit of the blues."
 23. She. Spleen.
 272. 46. Angels in machines. An echo of the classical "deus ex machina," the god who appeared at the close of a play and brought affairs to an end.
 273. 117. Hyde Park Circus. See note on Canto I, l. 44.
 118. The sound of Bow. The least fashionable quarter of London lay within the sound of the bells of Bow church.
 121. Sir Plume. Sir George Brown, one of the members of the party.
 156. Bohea. A China tea much prized at the time.

CANTO V

274. 5, 6. The Trojan . . . Anna . . . Dido. Æneas was commanded by Jupiter to leave Carthage, where he had fallen in love with Queen Dido. Anna was Dido's sister. (Æneid, iv. 416).
 275. 53. Umbriel on a scone's height. "Minerva, in like manner, during the battle of Ulysses with the suitors, perches on a beam of the roof to behold it." (Pope.)
 276. 125. Rome's great founder. Romulus.
 129. Not Berenice's locks. Berenice was an Egyptian queen whose hair was transformed into a constellation.
 136. Rosamonda's lake. In St. James's Park, as was the Mall (l. 133).
 137. Partridge. "John Partridge was a ridiculous star-gazer, who in his almanacks every year never failed to predict the downfall of the Pope and the King of France, then at war with the English." (Pope.)

276. 138. Galileo's eyes. The telescope.

AN ESSAY ON MAN

1. St. John. Henry St. John, afterwards Lord Bolingbroke, was one of Pope's intimate friends.
 16. Vindicate the ways of God to man. An echo of Milton's line "Justify the ways of God to men." (Paradise Lost, i. 26.)
 277. 42. Satellites. Pronounced with four syllables, as in Latin.

EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT

278. This portrait of Addison (Atticus) represents, as well as anything that could be chosen, Pope's power of satire.
 279. 209. Like Cato, give his little senate laws. Addison's drama Cato, though to-day neglected, was remarkably successful when first produced.

GOLDSMITH

THE DESERTED VILLAGE

- 1 Sweet Auburn. Goldsmith is picturing English country life and scenery, not any one definite village.
 283. 210. Gauge. Estimate the capacity of barrels and hogsheads.
 248. Mantling bliss. Foamy cups of ale.
 285. 344. Altama. A river in Georgia.
 286. 418. Torno's cliffs. The cliffs of the Swedish Lake Tornea. Pambamarca. A mountain in Ecuador.
 427-30. The last four lines of the poem were written by Dr. Johnson.

THE RETALIATION

- The title is explained by the fact that Goldsmith wrote the poem as a reply to Garrick's famous epigram at Goldsmith's expense:
 "Here lies Nolly Goldsmith, for shortness called Noll,
 Who wrote like an angel, but talked like poor Poll."
 23. The good Dean. Thomas Barnard, Dean of Derry.
 29. Edmund. Edmund Burke.
 34. Tommy Townshend. A Whig member of Parliament.
 287. 93. David Garrick. The famous actor and wit.
 115. Kenrick, Kelly, Woodfall. The first two were playwrights; the third, the editor of the Morning Chronicle.
 118. Be-Rosciused. Charles Churchill's poem The Rosciad was a satirical criticism of English actors.
 124. Ben. Ben Jonson.
 137. Reynolds. Sir Joshua Reynolds, the portrait painter (1723-1792).
 145. Raphael, Correggio. Italian painters of the early sixteenth century.

THE CITIZEN OF THE WORLD

287. The essays in this collection appeared first in John Newberry's Public Ledger, between January 24, 1760, and August 14, 1761. They were published as "Letters from a Chinese Philosopher, Residing in London, to his Friends in the East"; whence the generally used name, "The Chinese Letters." Beau Tibbs at Home is supposed to be "From Lien Chi Altangi, to Fum Hoam, first President of the Ceremonial Academy at Pekin, in China"; the second of the two here reprinted bears the same superscription. The first collected edition appeared May 1, 1762.

JOHNSON

THE RAMBLER

292. 118. The great Mantuan poet. Virgil.
130. When Ulysses visited the infernal regions. Odyssey, XI. 543 f.
159. When Æneas is sent by Virgil to the shades. Æneid, VI. 450 f.
293. 249. The character of Hector. See Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida, II. ii. 163 f.

LETTER TO THE EARL OF CHESTERFIELD

Johnson, in 1747, addressed the Plan of his dictionary to Chesterfield, a noted patron of arts and letters. Chesterfield paid no attention to Johnson until the work was nearing completion, when he wrote the two papers referred to in Johnson's first sentence, hoping to have the dedication of the Dictionary.
15. Le vainqueur, etc. The conqueror of the conqueror of the world.
39. The shepherd in Virgil. See the Bucolics, viii. 42 ff. Love is to be found not in dalliance, but in hard work.
50. Till I am solitary. An allusion to the death of his wife.

LETTER TO JAMES MACPHERSON

294. Johnson had attacked Macpherson's Ossian as an imposture; Macpherson wrote a bitter and insulting letter in reply; Johnson's answer is here printed.
14. Your Homer. Macpherson published a translation of the Iliad in 1773.

MILTON

32. Lion, etc. "Sporting the lion ramped, and in his paw Dandled the kid." Par. Lost, iv. 343.
45. Rough satyrs, etc. Lycidas, l. 34.
62. We drove afield. Lycidas, l. 27 f.
296. 189. The Measure. See Milton's remarks, prefixed to Book i of Paradise Lost.

DRYDEN

297. 48. Tuned the numbers. Made the metre regular.
67. Every language. With the ideas in this and the two following paragraphs, should be compared Wordsworth's views, expressed in the Preface to the Lyrical Ballads, p. 389.

ADDISON

298. 30. Arbiter elegantiarum. Petronius, according to Tacitus, was "arbiter elegantiae" at the court of Nero.

GRAY

300. 24. O Diva, etc. O goddess, thou who rulest Antium pleasing in thy sight. The first line of Ode xxxv in Bk. I of Horrace's Odes.
32. Wonderful Wonder of Wonders. A stock phrase, taken from the showmen's bills, etc., of the time.
33. The Two Sister Odes. The Progress of Poesy and The Bard.
76. We are affected only as we believe. It would be difficult to find a single sentence more characteristic of the exaltation of reason above the imagination, for which Johnson and his contemporaries are notable, than this.

BOSWELL

THE LIFE OF JOHNSON

301. 22. Dictionary Johnson. "As great men of antiquity such as Scipio Africanus had an epithet added to their names, in consequence of some celebrated action, so my illustrious friend was often called DICTIONARY JOHNSON, from that wonderful achievement of genius and labor, his Dictionary of the English Language; the merit of which I contemplate with more and more admiration." (Boswell.)
37. Mr. Thomas Sheridan. (1719-1788) Father of Richard Brinsley Sheridan; himself an actor, manager, and playwright.
303. 224. Garrick. David Garrick (1717-1779), pupil and friend of Johnson; the most popular actor of the time.
306. 556. Colley Cibber (1671-1757). Actor, dramatist, and poet-laureate 1730-1757; attacked by Pope in the Dunciad as the prince of dunces.
577. Whitehead. Cibber's successor in the laureateship.
589. Gray. Compare these remarks with the opinions expressed in the selections from Johnson's Life of Gray.
308. 776. He studied physick. Studied medicine.
789. An usher to an academy. A subordinate teacher in a private school.

309. 810. Nihil quod tetegit, etc. Slightly misquoted from Johnson's epitaph on Goldsmith, in Westminster Abbey. "He touched nothing that he did not adorn." 817. The fragrant parterre. The fragrant garden. 828. Un étourdi. A fellow who talks explosively. 883. Mrs. Piozzi. Hester Lynch Piozzi (1741-1821). Mrs. Thrale, later Mrs. Piozzi, was one of the few women whom Johnson knew intimately. Sir John Hawkins (1719-1789). A close friend of Johnson's, and one of his executors. Boswell was jealous of him.
310. 975. Churchill. Charles Churchill (1731-1764); a satirist, and an ardent supporter of John Wilkes and his faction.
312. 1208. Bayle's Dictionary. The Dictionnaire Historique et Critique of Pierre Bayle (1647-1706), a French philosopher and man of letters.
313. 1233. Prospects. "Views," scenery. 1319. Canada is taken. Wolfe's victory over Montcalm, on the Plains of Abraham, had taken place in 1759.
314. 1369. His present Majesty. Johnson's pension came from George III, against whom the Pretender, James Stuart, son of the exiled James II, had in 1745 organized an armed rebellion of Highlanders and English Jacobites. Johnson had been for a time a favorer of the Stuarts, a sort of sentimental Jacobite, though he had always been loyal to the existing government. 1399. Victory at Culloden, etc. Charles Stuart, son of the pretender James, was his father's personal representative in England and Scotland during the second Jacobite rebellion, "The Forty-five," which ended in 1746 at Culloden, where the Duke of Cumberland overwhelmed the Stuart forces.
315. 1455. A negation of all principle. "He used to tell, with great humor, from my relation to him, the following little story of my early years, which was literally true: 'Boswell, in the year 1745, was a fine boy, wore a white cockade, and prayed for King James, till one of his uncles (General Cochran) gave him a shilling on condition that he should pray for King George, which he accordingly did. So you see (says Boswell) that Whigs of all ages are made the same way.'" (Boswell.) 1483. Hume. David Hume (1711-1776), philosopher, historian, and, according to the judgment of his contemporaries, a sceptic.
317. 1720. Those called Methodists. The name was first applied contemptuously to Wesley and his friends, when, as students at Oxford, they met together for prayer and worship. By 1763 the sect had become numerous.

317. 1755. Buchanan. George Buchanan (1506-1582), a Scotch scholar, historian, and poet, practically all of whose work was written in Latin.
318. 1759. Johnston. Arthur Johnston (1587-1641), a Scotch physician and author of a large amount of Latin verse, including a metrical version of the Psalms and the complimentary epigrams to which Boswell alludes. 1769. Formosam resonare, etc. Thou teachest the forest to resound (with the name of) lovely Amaryllis.
322. 2233. One of the most luminous minds. Burke. The quotation is from Goldsmith's Retaliation; see p. 286.

BURKE

TO THE ELECTORS OF BRISTOL

23. I was put in nomination after the poll was opened. The election lasted for nearly a month.
323. 40. The candidate. Four persons were candidates, the two Whigs, Burke and Cruger, being elected. The defeated Tory, Brickdale, is the person here referred to. Brickdale tried unsuccessfully to have Burke's election annulled by the courts.
98. I stood on the hustings. "Hustings" meant both the actual platform from which nominations were made, and the entire election proceedings. "On the hustings" is not very different from the American idiom "on the stump."
324. 184. The former part. Brickdale had formerly urged the qualifications of the electors whom, after his defeat, he sought to have disfranchised.
237. My colleague. Cruger had told the electors that he would at all times vote in accordance with their desires and instructions. Burke's statement of his position on this question makes this address to the electors one of the significant documents in his history.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF HASTINGS

326. Warren Hastings (1732-1818) was the first governor-general of India, being appointed in 1773 under the newly passed Regulating Act, and holding office till 1785. He was impeached by the House of Commons in 1786; his trial before the Lords began in 1788, and dragged on till 1795, when he was acquitted. Burke was charged with the prosecution, and although the verdict went against him, the ultimate result was a victory for Burke; for as a result of the disclosures made at the trial came a new and more equitable governmental policy for India.
15. Their Dewan. Financial agent.
328. 4. Our long, long labors. Burke concluded his charge on 19 February, 1788;

the peroration did not follow until 16 June, 1794. Burke had been interested in Indian affairs for fifteen years before the trial began.

328. 53. Moral earthquake. The French Revolution. At the time he was speaking, the Reign of Terror was at its height.
329. 106. The Parliament of Paris. The chief court of the old French monarchy, abolished by the Revolution.

REFLECTIONS ON THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE

The French Revolution, during the period 1789-1792, found many supporters in England. Wordsworth and Coleridge, Charles James Fox, and liberal clergymen among whom Priestly and Price were the most prominent, openly gloried in the deeds that were being done in the name of Liberty. From these enthusiasts Burke was separated by a wide gulf. He did not comprehend the need for change in the French social and economic systems; he saw only the overthrow of an established civilization by hungry peasants and doctrinaire philosophers, and with impassioned earnestness he protested. The Reflections appeared in November, 1790.

330. 43. The civil social man. As distinguished from man in his aboriginal "state of nature," before the existence of society.
332. 233. Liceat perire poetis. Poets have the right to die.
236. Ardentem frigidus, etc. In cold blood he leaped into glowing Ætna. Empedocles, a Sicilian philosopher, is said to have died thus. A slipper, cast out in an eruption, was proof of his act.

THOMSON

THE SEASONS

334. 311. In vain for him, etc. Gray seems to have had the following three lines in mind when he composed the stanza of the Elegy beginning
"For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn."

THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE

335. 35. A coil the grasshopper did keep. "To keep a coil" is an Elizabethan expression meaning to make a noise.

BLAIR

THE GRAVE

337. It was in part, at least, from this poem that Bryant drew the inspiration for his Thanatopsis.
338. 34. Night's foul bird. The owl.

COLLINS

SONG FROM CYMBELINE

339. See Cymbeline, IV. ii. Shakespeare's spelling of the proper name is Guiderius.

ODE WRITTEN . . . IN THE YEAR 1746

The year 1745 saw the death of many English soldiers in battle, both in the war of the Austrian Succession, and in Scotland, during the second Jacobite rising.

ODE TO EVENING

1. If aught of oaten stop. If anything played upon the shepherd's oat, or pipe.
340. 21. Folding-star. The star which marked the time for putting sheep into the fold.

THE PASSIONS

341. 75. Oak-crowned sisters. Wood nymphs. Chaste-eyed queen. Diana.
86. Tempe's vale. A beautiful valley in Greece.
114. Cecilia's mingled world of sound. St. Cecilia is always represented as the inventress of the organ. See Dryden's two odes.

GRAY

ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

342. The poem is characteristic of Gray's early work; conventional, and full of "poetic diction."
- 3, 4. Grateful Science still adores, etc. King Henry VI was the founder of Eton College.
5. And ye, etc. The towers of Windsor Castle.

ELEGY, WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCHYARD

344. 57. Some village Hampden, etc. Professor Phelps points out, in his Athenæum Press edition of Gray, p. xxv., that this stanza originally ran as follows:
"Some Village Cato with dauntless
Breast
The little Tyrant of his Fields withstood;
Some mute inglorious Tully here may rest;
Some Cæsar, guiltless of his Country's
Blood."

The changes are significant, in that they witness Gray's transition from the pseudo-classicism of his early poems, to the romanticism of the later.

93. For thee. For the poet, Gray himself.
345. 119. Fair Science frowned not. "The line means that Knowledge looked favorably upon him at his birth (a quasi-astrological figure)." (Phelps.)

THE PROGRESS OF POESY

- 345. A Pindaric Ode. Gray is adopting the ode form of the Greek poet Pindar. Professor Phelps's note explains the structure of the poem succinctly: "As Hales pointed out, this Ode is really divided into 3 stanzas, with 41 lines in each stanza. Again, each stanza is divided into 3 parts—strophe, antistrophe, and epode—the turn, counter-turn, and after-song, Greek theatrical names. The three strophes, antistrophes, and epodes are similar in construction; hence the architecture of the poem is curiously symmetrical, though one could easily read it without any perception of this fact." (Athenæum Press Edition, p. 149.)
1. Awake, Æolian lyre. Gray is invoking the Æolian harp of Pindar.
- 3, 4. From Helicon's harmonious springs, etc. The different streams of the world's poetry all have their source in the sacred fountain of the Muses on Mount Helicon.
9. Ceres' golden reign. Fields of grain, in the care of Ceres, goddess of the harvest.
15. Enchanting shell. The lyre, to which the first three sections of the poem are addressed. Hermes, according to the legend, made the first lyre from a tortoise shell.
17. On Thracia's hills the Lord of War. Mars was supposed to spend much of his time in Thrace.
21. The feathered king. Jove's eagle.
25. Thee. The lyre.
27. Idalia. A town in Cyprus, sacred to Venus, or Cytherea (l. 28).
- 346. 36. Their Queen. Venus.
47. Justify the ways of Jove. An obvious echo of Milton's "Justify the ways of God to men."
48. Has he given in vain the heavenly Muse? Has poetry been of no value to mankind?
53. Hyperion. The sun.
66. Delphi's steep. Delphi's mountain, location of the famous oracle.
68. Ilissus. A river of Attica.
69. Mæander. A river of Asia Minor.
77. The sad Nine. The Muses.
- 77-82. Poetry left Greece for Rome, and from Rome sought England.
84. Nature's Darling. Shakespeare.
95. Nor second he, that rode sublime. Milton.
105. Two coursers of ethereal race. Dryden's favorite verse form was the iambic pentameter couplet.
- 347. 107. His hands. Dryden's.
112. What daring spirit? Gray himself.
115. The Theban Eagle. Gray's own note reads: "Pindar compares himself to that bird, and his enemies to ravens that croak and clamour in vain below, while it pursues its flight, regardless of their noise."

- 347. 121-123. Gray is here giving us an idea of his own poetical aspirations.

THE BARD

- The poem as first printed was prefaced by this "ADVERTISEMENT. The following Ode is founded on a Tradition current in Wales, that EDWARD THE FIRST, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered all the Bards, that fell into his hands, to be put to death." When the poem opens, the last survivor of the Bards is speaking.
8. Cambria. Wales.
10. The first Edward. Edward I invaded Wales in 1282.
- 13, 14. Glo'ster, Mortimer. Chieftains in Edward's army.
27. Fatal day. The day on which the bards were executed.
28. Hoel, Llewellyn; 29, 31. Cadwallo, Urien. Welsh poets.
33. Modred. Gray uses the name of the Arthurian knight; no such Welsh poet is known.
34. Plinlimmon. A Welsh mountain.
35. Arvon's shore. "The shores of Caernarvonshire, opposite to the isle of Anglesey." (Gray.)
49. The whole band of murdered bards joins with the survivor in prophesying the future of Edward's race.
- 348. 54. Severn. A Welsh river.
56. An agonizing king. "Edward the Second, cruelly butchered in Berkley Castle." (Gray.)
59. Who o'er thy country hangs. "Triumphs of Edward the Third in France." (Gray.)
63. Mighty Victor. Edward III.
65. No pitying heart. "Death of that king, abandoned by his children, and even robbed in his last moments by his courtiers and his mistress." (Gray.)
67. The sable warrior. Edward III's son, the Black Prince, who died before his father.
70. The rising morn. "Magnificence of Richard the Second's reign." (Gray.)
- 77-82. "Richard the Second . . . was starved to death." (Gray.)
- 83-86. The wars of the Roses, between the houses of York and Lancaster, 1455-1485.
87. Towers of Julius. According to an old legend, Julius Cæsar is supposed to have begun the Tower of London.
89. His Consort's faith. "Margaret of Anjou (wife of Henry VI), a woman of heroic spirit, who struggled hard to save her husband and her crown." (Gray.)
- His father. Henry V.
90. The meek usurper. "Henry the Sixth very near being canonized. The line of Lancaster had no right of inheritance to the crown." (Gray.)
- 91, 2. The rose of snow, etc. "The white and red roses, devices of York and Lancaster." (Gray.)

348. 93. The bristled Boar. "The silver boar was the badge of Richard the Third." (Gray.) In infant gore. A reference to Richard's murder of the two young princes.
99. Half of thy heart. "Eleanor of Castile (wife of Edward I), died a few years after the conquest of Wales." (Gray.)
109. Long-lost Arthur. "It was the common belief of the Welsh nation, that King Arthur was still alive in Fairy-Land, and should return again to reign over Britain." (Gray.)
110. Ye genuine Kings. "Both Merlin and Taliessin had prophesied, that the Welsh should regain their sovereignty over this island; which seemed to be accomplished in the House of Tudor." (Gray.)
115. A form divine. Queen Elizabeth.
349. 127. Truth severe, by fairy Fiction drest. The allusion is to the allegorical nature of Spenser's Faerie Queene.
128. In buskined measures. Shakespeare's tragedies.
131. A voice. Milton.
133. Distant warblings. "The succession of Poets after Milton's time." (Gray.)
135. Impious man. Edward I.

THE FATAL SISTERS

One of Gray's notes, the Preface to the poem as it originally appeared, makes the situation clear: "In the Eleventh Century Sigurd, Earl of the Orkney Islands, went with a fleet of ships and a considerable body of troops into Ireland, to the assistance of Sictryg with the Silken Beard, who was then making war on his father-in-law, Brian, King of Dublin: the Earl and all his forces were cut to pieces, and Sictryg was in danger of a total defeat; but the enemy had a greater loss by the death of Brian, their King, who fell in action. On Christmas day, (the day of the battle), a Native of Caithness in Scotland saw at a distance a number of persons on horseback riding full speed towards a hill, and seeming to enter into it. Curiosity led him to follow them, till looking through an opening in the rocks he saw twelve gigantic figures resembling women: they were all employed about a loom; and as they wove, they sung the following dreadful Song; which when they had finished, they tore the web into twelve pieces, and (each taking her portion), galloped six to the North and as many to the South." The "Fatal Sisters" are here represented as the goddesses of fate, and as the Valkyrie, or "choosers of the slain," who select heroes destined to die in battle, and conduct them to Valhalla.
32. The youthful king. Sictryg.

349. 37. They, whom once. The Norsemen.
41. The Earl. Probably Sigurd.
44. A King. Brian.
350. 56. Younger King. See note on l. 32.

SKETCH OF HIS OWN CHARACTER

The poem was found in one of Gray's pocket-books, and was not printed till after his death.

6. Charles Townshend. Chancellor of the Exchequer, 1767 Squire. Dr. Samuel Squire, Bishop of St. David's.

LETTERS

350. 1. We set out. Gray was making "the grand tour" with his college friend, Horace Walpole. His impressions of Alpine scenery may interestingly be compared with those of Addison, who wrote from Geneva, December 6, 1701, to Wortley Montagu: "I am just now arrived at Geneva by a very troublesome journey over the Alps, where I have been for some days together shivering among the eternal snows. My head is still giddy with mountains and precipices, and you cannot imagine how much I am pleased with the sight of a plain, that is as agreeable to me at present as a shore was about a year ago after one tempest at Genoa."
351. 19. St. Bruno. The founder of the Carthusian order of monks. He located the home of the order in the mountains near Grenoble, 1084 A. D.
21. Dodsley. Robert Dodsley (1703-1764), English bookseller and publisher, best known for his Select Collection of Old Plays, which he edited and published in 1744.
352. 3. Sack and silver. The poet laureate was usually given a money stipend and an annual allowance of wine. Gray had been informally offered the post at the time he wrote this letter to Mason.
24. Rowe. Nicholas Rowe (1674-1718), a dramatist.
26. Settle. Elkanah Settle (1648-1723).
28. Eusden. Lawrence Eusden (1688-1730).

MACPHERSON

CATH-LODA

352. Macpherson's "Ossianic" poems are important because of the influence they exerted in the development of romanticism during the eighteenth century. Some ancient Celtic fragments are probably embedded in them, but for the form and tone Macpherson alone is responsible. The poems were published between 1760 and 1765. See Dr. Johnson's letter, page 294.

FERGUSON

353. Burns was so conscious of his literary debt to Ferguson that he erected a tombstone over Ferguson's grave.

THE DAFT DAYS

353. Certain of the Christmas holidays were so called.
 354. 48. Tullochgorum. A famous Scotch tune and song.

CHATTERTON

In reading Chatterton's poetry, one should pay as little attention as possible to the antiquated spelling. Pronounce the words as in modern English; Chatterton seems to have composed his verse in modern English, before translating it into the pseudo-Middle English dialect in which it appeared.

BRISTOWE TRAGEDIE

356. 141. Goddelyke Henrie. Henry VI, whom the Lancastrians held to have been illegally succeeded by Edward IV.
 358. 276. Bataunt. The word is a participle meaning hastening; Chatterton misuses it here, and thinks of it as some sort of a musical instrument.

COWPER

ON THE LOSS OF THE ROYAL GEORGE

360. The English man-of-war Royal George capsized and sank off Spithead, August 29, 1782, after having been heeled over intentionally in order to expose a leaky section of her bottom. Admiral Kempenfelt was at the time under orders to go to the relief of Gibraltar.

THE TASK

362. 390. To hear that ye were fallen at last. The Task was published in 1785, four years before the capture of the Bastille by the revolutionists.

MY MOTHER'S PICTURE

364. 97. An incorrect quotation from Garth's Dispensary, iii. 226.
 108. My boast is not that I deduce my birth. Cowper traced his descent from Henry III of England; the line means that although his descent is royal, he does not boast of it.

SONNET TO MRS. UNWIN

Cowper's most intimate friends were the Reverend Morley Unwin, and his wife Mary. Cowper began to live with them as a boarder in 1765; following Mr. Unwin's death in 1767 Cowper and Mrs. Unwin continued together till her death in December, 1796.

TO MARY

Written to Mrs. Mary Unwin.

THE CASTAWAY

365. 52. Anson's tear. Cowper based his poem on an account which he found in Anson's Voyage Around the World.

BURNS

LINES TO JOHN LAPRAIK

366. The selection is from the first of Burns's three poetical epistles to Lapraik, a Scottish poet whose work, in part at least, Burns admired.

THE HOLY FAIR

367. 66. Black Bonnet. "The elder who 'officiated' at the collecting-plate, which stood at the entrance, was accustomed to wear a black bonnet." (Centenary Burns, i. 331.)
 102 ff. Moodie, Smith, Peebles, Miller, and Russell, were all parish ministers of considerable local importance or notoriety.
 368. 226. Clinkumbell. The beadle, or bell-man.

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT

370. The editors of the Centenary Burns note (i. 362): "The piece as a whole is formed on English models. It is the most artificial and the most imitative of Burns's works. . . . 'These English songs,' he wrote long afterwards (1794) to Thomson, 'gravel me to death. I have not that command of the language that I have of my native tongue. In fact, I think my ideas are more barren in English than in Scottish.' . . . As it is, The Cotter's Saturday Night is supposed to paint an essentially Scottish phase of life; but the Scottish element in the diction,—to say nothing of the Scottish cast of the effect —is comparatively slight throughout, and in many stanzas is altogether wanting." Robert Aiken, to whom the poem is addressed, was an old friend of the Burns family who brought the poet some fame by reading his verses in public.
 372. 111-113. Dundee's, Martyr's, Elgin. The names of tunes in the Scottish Presbyterian hymnal.
 373. 138. Hope "springs exulting," etc. Slightly misquoted from Pope's Windsor Forest.
 166. "An honest man," etc. Slightly misquoted from Pope's Essay on Man, iv. 297.
 182. Wallace. William Wallace (c. 1270-1305), the Scottish patriot.

TAM O' SHANTER

375. 102. Kirk Alloway seemed in a bleeze. The editors of the Centenary Burns note (i. 433): "Alloway Kirk was originally the church of the quoad civilia parish of Alloway; but this parish having been annexed to that of Ayr in 1690, the church fell more or less to ruin, and when Burns wrote had been roofless for half a century. It stands some two hundred yards to the north of the picturesque Auld Brig of Doon Burns's birthplace is about three-fourths of a mile to the north; so that the ground and its legends were familiar to him from the first." A good many local traditions centered around the old church; some of them Burns has worked into the poem.

SCOTS WHA HAE

377. The poem is often called "Bruce's Address to his Army."

AULD LANG SYNE

378. A song of this name, of which various Scottish poets had written versions, was well known in Scotland before Burns composed his verses.

OF A' THE AIRTS THE WIND CAN BLOW

"The song I composed out of compliment to Mrs. Burns." (Burns's note, quoted in Centenary Burns, iii. 345.)

FLOW GENTLY, SWEET AFTON

380. 3. My Mary. If any definite person is referred to here,—and this is uncertain,—it is not Mary Campbell. See the Centenary Burns, iii. 395.

HIGHLAND MARY

381. The poem is reminiscent of Burns's devotion to Mary Campbell. The editors of the Centenary tell what is known of her (iii. 308).

BLAKE

CRADLE SONG

384. 20. While o'er thee thy mother weep. The line (like 11-12 and 15-16) is ungrammatical, but the reading thy seems to have the weight of authority on its side; certain editions emend thy to doth.

CRABBE

THE VILLAGE

386. 9. Smooth alternate verse. See Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, Eclogue second, for an example of "alternate verse," in which first Cuddie and then Thenot speaks.
18. Mantuan song. Virgil's poetry (here his pastorals).
27. Honest Duck. A minor poet of the first half of the 18th century.

387. 89. The lawless merchant of the main. The smuggler.

THE BOROUGH

The story of Peter Grimes forms Letter xxii of the poem.

WORDSWORTH

PREFACE TO THE LYRICAL BALLADS

389. The first edition of the Lyrical Ballads appeared in 1798; the second edition, in December, 1800, carried a lengthy Preface, from which two passages are here reprinted.

LINES WRITTEN IN EARLY SPRING

392. The poem is notable as an expression of Wordsworth's idea that Nature is a conscious, sentient spirit.

TINTERN ABBEY

393. 22-49. In this passage Wordsworth states the effect that the recollection of the landscape he has just been describing has had on him. First, it has brought him mental restoration in hours of weariness; second, "feelings of unremembered pleasure" which have prompted him to "acts of kindness and of love"; and lastly, it has brought him the mystic's power of seeing beyond the superficial, the apparent, into "the life of things."
394. 72-111. This passage, with which one should compare lines 175-203 of the Intimations of Immortality, is the best statement of Wordsworth's changing attitude towards Nature. The panpsychism, almost the pantheism, of lines 93-102, is noteworthy.
116. My dear, dear friend. Wordsworth's sister Dorothy was the poet's most intimate companion during the years from 1795 to 1802. On their life together one can consult no better work than Dorothy Wordsworth's Journals.

SHE DWELT AMONG THE UNTRODDEN WAYS

396. This and the two following poems are from a group of five which picture the poet's love for "Lucy." No one knows who Lucy was. It has been suggested that she is simply a creation of the poet's imagination, but this does not seem probable. It is significant that when Wordsworth commented on his own verses he remained silent concerning these five poems.

THE PRELUDE

This poem, one of Wordsworth's two long autobiographical pieces, was written between 1799 and 1805, but was not published till after the poet's death in 1850.

It was intended to be the first of three poems to constitute his magnum opus, The Recluse. Of the three only this first and the second, The Excursion, were completed.

BOOK IX

397. 35. Journeying toward the snow-clad Alps. Wordsworth had spent the summer of 1790 in a walking tour through France and Switzerland. This second journey to the continent began in the autumn of 1791.
40. A pleasant town. Orleans.
68. Bastille. The Bastille had been stormed and captured by the Revolutionists on the fourteenth of July, 1789.
398. 132. Save only one. Beaupuis, a revolutionary officer, whom Wordsworth came to know intimately during the winter of 1791-92, which he spent at Orleans.

BOOK X

48. To Paris I returned. He reached Paris in October, 1792.
53. The palace, lately stormed. The mob sacked the Tuileries on the tenth of August. Louis XVI was a prisoner from this time until his execution.
399. 73. September massacres. The massacres of the aristocrats in September, 1792, marked the beginning of the "Reign of Terror."

MICHAEL

Wordsworth notes of this poem: "Written at Town-end, Grasmere. . . . The Sheepfold, on which so much of the poem turns, remains, or rather the ruins of it. The character and circumstances of Luke were taken from a family to whom had belonged, many years before, the house we live in at Town-end, along with some fields and woodlands on the eastern shore of Grasmere. The name of the Evening Star was not in fact given to this house, but to another on the same side of the valley, more to the north." Wordsworth lived at Grasmere from 1799 to 1813.

MY HEART LEAPS UP

406. 9. Natural piety. Reverence, affection for Nature. Wordsworth chose the last three lines for the motto of his Ode: Intimations of Immortality.

RESOLUTION AND INDEPENDENCE

407. 43. I thought of Chatterton, the marvelous Boy. Thomas Chatterton (1752-1770), who poisoned himself, in a fit of despondency, before he was eighteen years old.
45. Him who walked in glory. Burns.
97. Grave Livers. Persons of solemn deportment.

AT THE GRAVE OF BURNS

409. 39, 40. Criffel, Skiddaw. Scottish mountains.
50. "Poor inhabitant below." A quotation from Burns's A Bard's Epitaph.

SHE WAS A PHANTOM OF DELIGHT

410. The poem characterizes Mrs. Wordsworth, whom, as Mary Hutchinson, Wordsworth had married in 1802.

I WANDERED LONELY AS A LOUD

411. 21-22. These lines, perhaps the most "Wordsworthian" in the entire poem were written by the poet's wife.

CHARACTER OF THE HAPPY WARRIOR

The portrait or character here sketched is not that of any single person, but is, as Wordsworth pointed out in his note, a sort of composite, based on Lord Nelson, and Wordsworth's brother John, master of the Abergavenny, East Indiaman. Nelson and John Wordsworth both died in 1805; the former at Trafalgar, the latter in the wreck of his vessel in the English Channel.

ODE: INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY

413. A part of Wordsworth's note on the poem runs as follows: "Nothing was more difficult for me in childhood than to admit the notion of death as a state applicable to my own being. . . . It was not so much from feelings of animal vivacity that my difficulty came as from a sense of the indomitableness of the Spirit within me. . . . To that dream-like vividness and splendor which invest objects of sight in childhood, everyone, I believe, if he would look back, could bear testimony, and I need not dwell upon it here: but having in the poem regarded it as presumptive evidence of a prior state of existence, I think it right to protest against a conclusion, which has given pain to some good and pious persons, that I meant to inculcate such a belief. It is far too shadowy a notion to be recommended to faith, as more than an element in our instincts of immortality."
- The argument of the poem proceeds from stanza to stanza as follows:
1. I can no longer see the celestial beauty which once enfolded every object in nature.
 2. Nature is the same, but the glory has passed away.
 3. The utterance of this thought brought relief from the sadness it occasioned: "No more shall grief of mine the season wrong."
 4. Despite the happiness of Nature on "this sweet May-morning," the "glory and the dream " have gone; " whither is fled the visionary gleam? "

413. 5. The child brings with him into this world recollections of Heaven; the older we become the farther we journey from the celestial vision of childhood, till at length

" the Man perceives it die away,
And fade into the light of common day."

6. The Earth, man's foster-mother, does all she can to make the child

" Forget the glories he hath known,
And that imperial palace whence he came."

7. The child in his play imitates all the businesses of life.

8. Why should he do this, and hurry himself into the yoke of manhood?

9. Let us give thanks for the " shadowy recollections " which persist from childhood into maturity to uphold and cherish us.

10. Even though the celestial radiance has now departed from the world, I can still be joyful, finding strength in human sympathy, and

" In the faith that looks through death,
In years that bring the philosophic mind."

11. And Nature still is beautiful, for the love I feel for her is strengthened and enriched by years of experience with the world, and by sympathetic association with men.

ON THE EXTINCTION OF THE VENETIAN REPUBLIC

415. Napoleon entered Venice on the 16th of May, 1797, and proclaimed the end of the republic.

ON THE SEA-SHORE NEAR CALAIS

416. 9. Dear Child! dear Girl! The poet's daughter Carolyn.

TO TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE

417. Wordsworth celebrates in this sonnet the achievement and character of the African liberator of San Domingo, who, after leading a successful rebellion against the French, and ridding the island of slavery, was captured in 1801 and taken a prisoner to France.

COLERIDGE

FRANCE: AN ODE

The ode is perhaps the most notable expression, within the compass of a single poem, of the effect which the French Revolution had on the English republicans, and of the reasons for their subsequent defection from the cause.

30. The Monarchs marched, etc. War was declared by France against Austria, April 20, 1792; against England, Holland, and Spain, February 1, 1793.

418. 43. Blasphemy's loud scream. On the tenth of November, 1793, the Goddess of Reason was enthroned in Notre Dame Cathedral.

418. 66. From bleak Helvetia's icy caverns. The ode was occasioned by the French invasion of Switzerland in 1798.

KUBLA KHAN

419. Coleridge writes, in his preface to the poem. " In consequence of a slight indisposition, an anodyne had been prescribed, from the effects of which he [Coleridge] fell asleep in his chair at the moment that he was reading the following sentence, or words of the same substance, in Purchas's Pilgrimage: ' Here the Khan Kubla commanded a palace to be built, and a stately garden thereunto. And thus ten miles of fertile ground were inclosed with a wall.' The author continued for about three hours in a profound sleep, at least of the external senses, during which time he has the most vivid confidence that he could not have composed less than from two to three hundred lines; if that indeed can be called composition in which all the images rose up before him as things, with a parallel production of the correspondent expressions, without any sensation or consciousness of effort. On awaking he appeared to himself to have a distinct recollection of the whole, and instantly and eagerly wrote down the lines that are here preserved. At this moment he was unfortunately called out by a person on business . . . and detained by him above an hour, and on his return to his room found . . . that . . . all the rest had passed away."

Professor William A. Neilson, in his recent Essentials of Poetry, writes: " In . . . Coleridge's Kubla Khan we have no wrestling with spiritual questions, no lofty solution of the problem of conduct found through brooding on the beauties of nature. Instead, a thousand impressions received from the senses, from records of Oriental travel, from numberless romantic tales, have been taken in by the author, dissolved as in a crucible by the fierce heat of his imagination, and are poured forth a molten stream of sensuous imagery, incalculable in its variety of suggestion, yet homogeneous, unified, and, despite its fragmentary character, the ultimate expression of a whole romantic world" (p. 43).

THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER

In Wordsworth's note on his own poem, We Are Seven, the following passage explains the origin of the Ancient Mariner: " In the spring of the year 1798 [Coleridge], my sister, and myself, started . . . to visit Linton. . . . In the course of this walk was planned the poem of the Ancient Mariner, founded on a dream, as Mr. Coleridge said, of his friend, Mr. Cruikshank. Much the greatest part of the story was Mr. Coleridge's invention; but certain parts I myself suggested—for example, some crime was to be committed which should bring upon the old Navigator, as Coleridge afterwards delighted to call him, the spectral persecution, as a consequence of that crime, and his own wanderings. I had been reading in Shelvocke's Voyages a day or two before that while doubling Cape Horn they frequently saw albatrosses. 'Suppose,' said I, 'you represent him as having killed one of these birds on entering the South Sea, and that the tutelary Spirits of those regions take upon them to avenge the crime!' The incident was thought fit for the purpose, and adopted accordingly. I also suggested the navigation of the ship by the dead men, but do not recollect that I had anything more to do with the scheme of the poem. . . . We began the composition together on that, to me, memorable evening. I furnished two or three lines at the beginning of the poem, in particular:—

'And listened like a three years' child;
The Mariner had his will.'

The poem was first printed in the 1798 edition of the Lyrical Ballads. Many archaisms, intended to make it resemble the popular ballads, and a few stanzas, were afterwards removed. The marginal gloss was added when the poem appeared in the Sybilline Leaves, 1817.

FROST AT MIDNIGHT

430. The poem was written in February, 1798, while Coleridge was living in his cottage at Nether-Stowey.

7. My cradled infant. His son Hartley.
431. 25. At school. Coleridge entered Christ's Hospital when he was ten years old, and remained there till he went up to Cambridge University in 1791. Cf. Lamb's Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago, p. 512.

27. That fluttering stranger. "A flake or film of soot hanging on the bar of a grate, supposed to foretell the advent of a stranger." (English Dialect Dictionary.)

38. The stern preceptor. Boyer, the famous "flogging master" of Christ's Hospital.

43. Sister more beloved. Between Coleridge and his sister Ann, who died in 1791, there was a strong attachment.

55. Thou, my babel shalt wander, etc. The prophecy in these lines was fulfilled when in 1800 Coleridge moved to Greta Hall, Keswick, in the lake district.

DEJECTION: AN ODE

433. The poem was first printed on the fourth of October, 1802,—the day of Wordsworth's marriage—in the Morning Post. Although Wordsworth's name did not appear in this version, it was in fact addressed to him. Later, after an estrangement between the two poets, Coleridge revised and enlarged the ode. The first form is printed in the Globe edition of Coleridge's works, p. 522.

433. 25. O Lady! In the earlier version, here and throughout the poem, O Edmund! under which pseudonym Coleridge addressed Wordsworth.

40. What can these avail. What can these beauties of nature avail?

435. 120. As Otway's self. Originally "as Edmund's self."

138. Friend devoutest of my choice. The poem originally closed with these lines: "O simple spirit, guided from above, O lofty Poet, full of life and love, Brother and friend of my devoutest choice, Thus may'st thou ever, evermore rejoice!"

WORK WITHOUT HOPE

436. The poem was composed in February, 1827, long after Coleridge's best work had been done.

7. Amaranths. Legendary flowers symbolic of immortality.

BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA

37. The Lyrical Ballads. The title given to the 1798 volume to which both Wordsworth and Coleridge contributed. It contained, among other poems, Tintern Abbey, and The Ancient Mariner.

437. 85. A preface. See the selections from this Preface, pp. 389 ff.

439. 297. Præcipitandus, etc. The free spirit must be urged forward.

354. Laxis effertur habenis. He is carried with loose reins.

371. Sir John Davies. Lawyer and poet (1569-1626), best known for his poems Orchestra, Or a Poeme of Dancing, and Nosce Teipsum, on the immortality of the soul; the quotation is from the latter.

SCOTT

BOAT SONG

442. 10. Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu. "Black Roderick, the descendant of Alpine." (Scott.)

12. Beltane. May-day.

CORONACH

443. "The Coronach of the Highlanders was a wild expression of lamentation, poured forth by the mourners over the body of a departed friend. When the words of it were articulate, they expressed the praises of the deceased, and the loss the clan would sustain by his death." (Scott.)

17. Correi. The side of a hill.

18. Cumber. Difficulty.

HARP OF THE NORTH

443. This is a sort of epilogue to The Lady of the Lake.

JOCK OF HAZELDEAN

444. The first stanza is traditional; see F. J. Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads, v. 159, for the older John of Hazelgreen on which Scott modelled his song.

BRIGNALL BANKS

From Rokeby.

COUNTY GUY

445. From Quentin Durward.

BONNY DUNDEE

From The Doom of Devorgoil.

1. Claver'se. John Graham of Claverhouse (1649?-1689), an ardent and successful partisan of Charles II, won the title "bloody Claver'se" by his persecution of the Scottish Dissenters during the last years of Charles's reign. In 1688 he was created first Viscount Dundee by James II. After James's flight, Claverhouse maintained a royal army in Scotland, and won the battle of Killiecrankie in July, 1689, but died of a wound the night of the victory. The incident referred to in the poem took place March 18, 1688, when Claverhouse rode out of Edinburgh at the head of some fifty dragoons, having bolted the Convention that was to determine Scotland's attitude towards James II.

13. The Bow. Bow Street, Edinburgh.

14. Ilk carline was flying and shaking her pow. Every old woman was scolding and wagging her head.

15. The young plants of grace they looked couthie and slee. The young men looked kindly and sly.

17. The Grassmarket. An open square in the center of the city, formerly used for public executions. See The Heart of Midlothian, Chapter ii.

21. Cows of Kilmarnock. The Presbyterian Whigs, who were all anti-Stuart.

22. Lang hafted gullies. Long handled knives.

23. Close-head. The entrance to a blind alley. (Engl. Dialect Dictionary.)

25. Castle rock. Edinburgh Castle stands on a high rock above the city.

27. Mons Meg and her marrows. "Mons Meg" was a famous cannon of unusual size.

30. Montrose. James Graham (1612-1650), fifth Earl and first Marquis of Montrose, was Charles I's most successful lieutenant during the Civil War. He was captured and executed by the Earl of Argyle in 1650.

446. 35. Duniewassals. Highland gentlemen of somewhat inferior rank.

BYRON

KNOW YE THE LAND

3. The turtle. The turtle dove.
8. Gül. The rose.

THE DESTRUCTION OF SENNACHERIB

447. See 2 Kings, xix: 35.

MY BOAT IS ON THE SHORE

448. Tom Moore and Byron were for many years intimate friends.

SONNET ON CHILLON; THE PRISONER OF CHILLON

François de Bonivard (1493-1570), a patriotic citizen of Geneva, undertook to defend the city against the Duke of Savoy. In this he was unsuccessful, and after various adventures, was imprisoned in the castle of Chillon from 1530 to 1536. The castle stands on the shore of the Lake of Geneva.

449. 107. Lake Lemman. The Lake of Geneva.

CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE: CANTO III

452. 182. Belgium's capital. Brussels. See Thackeray's description of Brussels during Waterloo, in Vanity Fair.

200. Brunswick's fated chieftain. The Duke of Brunswick. His father had been killed at Jena, in 1806.

453. 226. "Cameron's Gathering." The pi-broch, or martial rallying song, played on the bagpipe. The clan Cameron had been "out" under Prince Charles Stuart in 1745, but was enthusiastically loyal in 1815.

227. Albyn's. Scotland's.

235. Ardennes. Byron notes: "The wood of Soignies is supposed to be a remnant of the 'forest of Ardennes,' famous in Boiardo's Orlando, and immortal in Shakespeare's As You Like It."

455. 848. Cytherea's zone. Venus's girdle, which inspired the beholder with love for the wearer.

CANTO IV

456. 1. The Bridge of Sighs. The famous bridge leading from the Doge's Palace to the prison.

8. The winged Lion. The winged lion of St. Mark, the emblem of the Venetian republic.

10. Cybele. Daughter of Uranus, and mother of Zeus; sometimes known as Rhea, and represented as wearing a tiara of towers.

19. Tasso. Torquato Tasso (1544-1595), Italian poet, author of Jerusalem Delivered.

456. 703. The Niobe of nations. Niobe, all of whose children were slain by Apollo and Diana because of her pride, stands as a symbol of grief and suffering.
457. 732. When Brutus, etc. The reference is to the murder of Julius Cæsar by Brutus and the other conspirators. See North's translation of Plutarch, p. 91, this volume.
734. Tully. Marcus Tullius Cicero.
1252. I see before me the gladiator lie. Byron seems to have had in mind the statue of the "Dying Gaul," now known to have no connection with gladiatorial combats.
459. 1648. I have loved thee, Ocean. Byron was a swimmer of extraordinary ability.

DON JUAN: DEDICATION

460. 1. Bob Southey! You're a Poet. The satiric dedication to Robert Southey was only one shot in the war between the two men. See the Introduction to Byron's Vision of Judgment.
3. You turned out a Tory. Southey, like Coleridge, was an enthusiastic republican in his young manhood; later he became strongly conservative.
5. My Epic Renegade. Byron probably has in mind Southey's early work, Wat Tyler, which was strongly republican, and was published contrary to Southey's wishes after he had given up his republicanism.
13. Coleridge . . . explaining metaphysics to the nation. During the latter part of his life Coleridge all but abandoned poetry in favor of philosophy. The Biographia Literaria was published in 1817.
25. Wordsworth, in a rather long "Excursion." Wordsworth's philosophical poem, The Excursion, was published in 1814.
132. Buff and blue. Here used, as often, as symbolic of republicanism.

CANTO III

690. Sappho. The only woman among the world's great poets. She lived approximately 600 B. C.
692. Delos. A Greek island, the birth-place of Phœbus Apollo.
695. The Scian and the Teian muse. Homer and Anacreon, so called from their birthplaces, real or supposed, Scio and Teos, respectively.
701. Marathon. The battle of Marathon, fought in 490 B. C. between the Persians and the Greeks, resulted in an overwhelming victory for the latter. It took place on the plains of Marathon, overlooking the sea.
708. Salamis. In 480 B. C. the Greek fleet under Themistocles defeated the Persian fleet. The battle was fought in the strait between the island of Salamis and the mainland of Attica.

461. 730. Thermopylæ. The most famous battle at the pass of Thermopylæ was the contest in 480 B. C. between Leonidas and three hundred Spartans, and the Persian army of Xerxes.
743. Pyrrhic dance. A martial dance.
744. Pyrrhic phalanx. Pyrrhus (318?-272 B. C.), King of Epirus, achieved several military successes through his use of the closely massed phalanx.
747. You have the letters Cadmus gave. Cadmus, one of the world's "culture heroes," was supposed to have given the alphabet to men.
751. Anacreon's song . . . Polycrates. Anacreon, Greek eulogist of love and wine, lived at the court of Polycrates Tyrant of Samos.
755. Tyrant of the Chersonese. Miltiades, who, as leader of the Greeks at Marathon, was "freedom's best and bravest friend."
762. Suli's rock and Parga's shore. The first a mountain district, the second a seaport, in Albania. Both were famous for their warlike inhabitants.
764. Doric. Spartan.
766. Heracleidan. Of Hercules.
779. Sunium's marbled steep. A ruined temple at Sunium, or Cape Colonna, served as a landmark for vessels approaching the southern extremity of Attica.
462. 813. Troy owes to Homer what whist owes to Hoyle. Edmund Hoyle (1672-1769), whose Short Treatise on Whist was published in 1742, was long the unquestioned authority on the game.
815. The great Marlborough. . . Life by Archdeacon Coxe. William Coxe (1747-1828), archdeacon of Wiltshire, published his Memoirs of John, Duke of Marlborough in the years 1818 and 1819. Marlborough is, of course, Queen Anne's great general.
819. An independent being. Probably a pun; during the latter part of his life Milton was a member of the religious sect known as "Independents."
821. His life falling into Johnson's way. Dr. Johnson's life of Milton, in his Lives of the Poets, is unsympathetic.
826. Lord Bacon's bribes. These are facts; the stories concerning Cæsar, Shakespeare, etc., may be apocryphal.
828. Burns (whom Doctor Currie well describes). Dr. James Currie (1756-1805) published an edition of Burns's works, with a memoir, in 1800.
833. Southey . . . Pantisocracy. Southey and Coleridge were the two leaders in an attempt, which came to naught, to found an ideal commonwealth on the banks of the Susquehanna River.
835. Wordsworth unexcised, unhired. In the year 1812 Wordsworth was appointed Distributor of Stamps for the county of Westmoreland. The office was worth £400 per year.

462. 838. The Morning Post. Coleridge first became a regular contributor to the Post in December, 1799.
839. He and Southey . . . espoused two partners. Coleridge and Southey married Sarah and Edith Fricker, of Bristol.
842. Botany Bay. An English penal settlement was established in 1787 at Botany Bay, New South Wales.
847. The Excursion. See note on the dedication to Don Juan, line 25, above.
864. Ariosto. An Italian poet (1474-1533), author of the Orlando Furioso.
871. The épopée. The epic poem.
463. 876. His dear "Waggoners." Wordsworth's poem The Waggoner, written in 1805, was published in 1819. The poem is minutely descriptive of the lake country that Wordsworth knew so well.
877. He wishes for "a boat." See the Prelude to Wordsworth's Peter Bell.
883. Charles's Wain. Charles's Wagon; the constellation usually known as the Great Bear.
945. O Hesperus! thou bringest all good things. The stanza is an adaptation of one of the Sapphic fragments.
961. When Nero perished. Nero committed suicide in 68 A. D., to save himself from execution following the Senate's proclamation of Galba as emperor.
975. We Cantabs. Students or graduates of Cambridge University.
984. Aristotle. Aristotle's Poetics is one of the world's most famous discussions of the principles of poetry.

CANTO IV

This canto, of which the greater part is here reprinted, recounts the culmination of the romance between Juan, hero of the epic, and Haidée, daughter of a wealthy pirate and slavedealer on the shores of whose island the sea had cast Juan, sole survivor of a shipwreck. Haidée finds him, loves him, and nurses him back to health. The episode of Haidée and Juan occupies cantos ii, iii, and iv.

464. 43. Pulci was sire. Luigi Pulci (1432-1487), Italian poet, author of a burlesque epic entitled Il Morgante Maggiore.
469. 456. The Simoom. A hot wind from the desert.
- 484-6. Venus . . . Laocoön . . . Gladiator. It is impossible to decide what statue of Venus Byron had in mind. The Laocoön group is a well-known piece of Roman statuary; the so-called "Dying Gladiator," equally famous, is not a representation of a gladiator, but of a dying Gaul.

SHELLEY

OZYMANDIAS

472. 8. The hand that mocked them and the heart that fed. The passions survive the hand of the sculptor and the heart of the king.

ODE TO THE WEST WIND

473. 21. Mænad. A priestess of Bacchus.
32. Baiæ's bay. Baiæ, near Naples, was a famous watering place during the Roman empire.
43. If I were, etc. The first stanza of the poem has to do chiefly with the effect of the West Wind on the leaves; the second, with its effect on the clouds; and the third, with its effect on the waves. In the first three lines of this stanza these three ideas are woven together.

THE INDIAN SERENADE

474. 11. Champak. An Indian tree, somewhat like a magnolia.

THE CLOUD

475. 81. Cenotaph. A monument built in honor of a person who is buried in some other place.

PROMETHEUS UNBOUND: ACT IV

479. 1. This is the day, etc. Demogorgon's speech gives Shelley's idea of the reconstructed universe for which he was always longing.

ADONAIS

Shelley's elegy, reminiscent of Milton's Lycidas, was written in memory of John Keats, who died at Rome, February 22, 1821.

12. Urania. The heavenly Muse, properly the patroness of Astronomy.
480. 30. The Sire of an immortal strain. John Milton.
55. That high Capital. Keats was buried in the Protestant cemetery at Rome.
481. 133. She pined away. Narcissus disdained the love of the nymph Echo; Echo died of grief.
482. 140. To Phœbus was not Hyacinth so dear. The youth Hyacinth, greatly beloved by Apollo, was turned into the flower that bears his name.
141. Nor to himself Narcissus. Narcissus fell in love with his own reflection in a pool, and was turned into a flower.
- 151, 2. The curse of Cain Light on his head. On the head of the critic who, according to the belief of the times, killed Keats with his brutal reviews.
483. 238. The unpastured dragon. The world.
- 244 ff. The herded wolves, . . . ravens, . . . vultures. Critics "to the conqueror's banner true," i. e., subservient to the political party in power. Keats's friendship with Leigh Hunt, a very advanced Liberal, brought many attacks upon him.
250. The Pythian of the age one arrow

- sped. Byron, and his English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.
484. 364. The Pilgrim of Eternity. Byron. Shelley is thinking of Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.
- 268, 9. Ierne sent the sweetest lyrist, etc. Ireland sent Tom Moore. As a matter of fact, neither Byron nor Moore was particularly affected by the death of Keats.
271. One frail Form. Shelley himself
276. Actæon-like. Actæon, in punishment for having seen Diana in the bath, was turned into a stag and torn by his own dogs.
307. What softer voice. Leigh Hunt.
485. 325. Live thou! The author of an exceptionally brutal attack on Keats in the Quarterly Review. Compare Byron's two stanzas beginning "Who killed John Keats?"
343. Peace, peace! he is not dead. With the conception of immortality set forth in the remaining stanzas one should compare Lycidas, ll. 165-185.
486. 399. Chatterton. Cf. note to Wordsworth's Resolution and Independence, l. 43, p. 407.
401. Sidney. Died at the age of thirty-two.
404. Lucan. A Latin poet, forced by Nero to commit suicide at the age of twenty-six.
487. 439. Slope of green access. The Protestant cemetery.

KEATS

SLEEP AND POETRY

490. This poem appeared in Keats's 1817 volume. It is a somewhat formless collection of Keats's own ideas concerning poetry and its joys; the selection here reprinted shows Keats protesting against the formalism of the 18th century, and particularly against those critics who traced their ancestry back to Boileau.

ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE

492. 4. Lethe. One of the four rivers of Hades; whoever drank of its waters became oblivious of all the past.
7. Dryad. A tree nymph.
13. Flora. Goddess of the flowers.
14. Provençal song. The lyrics of Provence.
16. Hippocrene. The fountain of the Muses on Mt. Helicon.
32. Bacchus and his pards. Leopards are often represented as drawing the car of Bacchus.

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN

493. 7. Tempe, Arcady. Here used simply to indicate places of beauty and carefree life. Tempe was a valley in Thessaly.

LINES ON THE MERMAID TAVERN

495. A mermaid was a favorite device for the sign-board of an old English tavern. The "Mermaid Tavern" to which Keats refers was the gathering place of the most famous Elizabethan wits and dramatists.

ROBIN HOOD

33. Gone the merry morris din. A "morris dance"—probably from "Moorish dance"—was an outdoor revel in which the performers wore grotesque costumes and bells.
34. The song of Gamelyn. A pseudo-Chaucerian tale of outlawry is called "The Tale of Gamelyn." Keats uses the phrase as synonymous with the outdoor life of Robin Hood.
36. "Grenè shawe." Green wood.

THE EVE OF ST. AGNES

496. The twenty-first of January is St. Agnes's Day; the evening of the twentieth is "the Eve of St. Agnes." The superstition around which the poem centers is made sufficiently clear in the course of the story.
498. 115. The holy loom, etc. On St. Agnes's day, during the celebration of the mass, two lambs might be offered to the church (cf. l. 71). The nuns afterwards spun and wove the wool.
499. 171. Since Merlin paid his Demon, etc. Merlin, the famous wizard and prophet of Arthurian romance, was the son of a demon, and became himself the victim of magic. See Tennyson's Merlin and Vivien.
174. Tambour frame. An embroidery frame shaped like a tambour, or drum.
500. 241. Clasped like a missal, etc. Clasped probably modifies soul; in the two following lines her soul is likened to a rose that is shut. The line means, then, that her soul was clasped as tightly in sleep as a prayer-book would be by a Christian in a land of Pagans.

HYPERION

502. Keats planned to write an epic dealing with the overthrow of Saturn by Jupiter. When the poem was published in 1820, however, only two books and a fragment of a third had been written.
503. 23. There came one. Thea, sister of Hyperion.
30. Ixion's wheel. Ixion was chained for all eternity to a revolving wheel.
504. 147. The rebel three. Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto.
166. Hyperion. When the action of the poem commences, the victory of Jupiter is incomplete. Hyperion is still god of the sun.
506. 246. Tellus. Goddess of the earth.
307. Cælus. God of the heavens.

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER

507. George Chapman (1559?-1634) published his translation of Homer in 1598 and 1609. Keats first read it in 1816.
11. Stout Cortez. Historical accuracy would compel the substitution of Balboa for Cortez.

BRIGHT STAR

508. Usually known as Keats's "last sonnet," written while he was en route to Italy.

CAMPBELL

YE MARINERS OF ENGLAND

15. Blake. Oliver Cromwell's most successful admiral. He died at sea in 1657.
Nelson. The victor of Trafalgar.

MOORE

THE HARP THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S HALLS

509. Tara was formerly an Irish capital city.

OH, BREATHE NOT HIS NAME

The famous Irish rebel was executed in 1803 because of treasonable correspondence with Napoleon, and armed rebellion against the crown.

WOLFE

THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE

Sir John Moore, an English general in charge of an army in the Peninsular War, was shot at Corunna, Spain, in January, 1809. At his own request he was buried within the ramparts of the town.

LAMB

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL

512. The essay purports to be written by a student of Christ's Hospital who feels that Lamb's earlier essay, Recollections, etc., is too flattering an account of life at the institution.
37. Banyan . . . days. Days on which no meat was served.
39. Double-refined. Sugar.
44. Caro equina. Horseflesh.
513. 54. Griskin. Lean loin of pork.
62. The Tishbite. Elijah.
73. I was a poor friendless boy. True of Coleridge, for whom Lamb is speaking in the two paragraphs beginning here.
94. Sweet Calne in Wiltshire. Coleridge's house was really at Ottery St. Mary, Devonshire.
514. 187. Upon the leads. On the lead-covered roof.
191. Caligula's minion. A horse which Caligula named first consul.

514. 240. He ate strange flesh. See Antony and Cleopatra, I. iv. 67.
515. 316. A hypochondriac lad. True of Lamb himself.
353. Auto da fe. The name given to executions, usually by burning, under the Spanish Inquisition; literally, "act of faith."
355. "Watchet weeds." Blue uniform.
516. 378. Ultima Supplicia. Last punishments.
395. San Benito. A special robe worn by the condemned at the auto da fe.
419. An accidence. A primer containing the rudiments of grammar.
446. Insolent Greece, etc. From Ben Jonson's lines to Shakespeare.
461. Rousseau. Both Rousseau and Locke believed in letting a child follow his own natural impulses.
517. 487. Helot . . . Spartans. Spartan parents were accustomed to teach their children sobriety by calling their attention to drunken Helots, who were slaves.
496. The Samite. The Greek philosopher Pythagoras, whose pupils were obliged to listen in silence to his lectures for five years before they could ask questions.
497. Goshen. That rich and fertile part of Egypt inhabited by the Israelites before the captivity.
503. Gideon's miracle. The method by which Gideon tested God's promise to deliver the Midianites into his hand: a fleece left on the ground over night was drenched by the dew, while the ground about it was dry. See Judges, vi.
518. Ululantes. The howlers; e. g., in Tartarus, hell.
523. Scrannel pipes. Quoted from Lycidas, l. 124.
525. Flaccus's quibble. A pun in one of Horace's satires (I. vii) on rex as king, and as a surname.
526. Tristis severitas in vultu. Gloomy sternness in his face; applied to a rascal in Terence's Andria.
527. Inspecere in patinas. Look into your saucepans; the advice of a slave to scullions, parodying some serious counsel given by a father to his son, in Terence's Adelphi.
535. Caxon. Slang term for wig.
559. Rabidus furor. Rabid rage.
518. 585. Literary life. Coleridge's Biographia Literaria.
588. The Country Spectator. A magazine edited by T. F. Middleton in 1792-3; see below, l. 629.
600. Grecian. The two best scholars among the senior boys of Christ's Hospital were called Grecians, and received scholarships at Cambridge University.
617. Fasces. Bundles of rods, with axes in their centers, symbolic of the authority of Roman magistrates; here, the birch rod.

518. 636. Regni novitas. The newness of the kingdom.
 639. Jewel or Hooker. English bishops and writers of the sixteenth century; Hooker was author of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity.
 664. Mirandula. Pico della Mirandola, Italian philosopher of the fifteenth century, one of the leading scholars of the Renaissance.
 566. Jamblichus, Plotinus. Neo-Platonic philosophers of the fourth and third centuries A. D.
 674. Fuller. Thomas Fuller, author of The Worthies of England, 1662. Lamb adapts Fuller's description of the trials of wit between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, substituting Coleridge for Jonson, and C. V. LeG. for Shakespeare.
 519. 605. Nireus formosus. Handsome Nireus; Homer called Nireus the handsomest of all the Greek host before Troy.
 709. Sizars. University students who received free board; formerly they performed certain menial duties in return for the financial assistance.

DREAM CHILDREN

521. 221. John L. Lamb's brother John, who died shortly before this essay was written.

THE PRAISE OF CHIMNEY SWEEPERS

5. Nigritude. Blackness.
 9. Professional notes. Their call of "Sweep! Sweep!"
 19. Sport their cloth. Wear a garb of black, like a clergyman.
 28. Fauces Averni. The jaws of hell.
 522. 53. Kibed. Chilblained.
 56. Tester. Sixpence.
 59. Yclept. Called.
 71. The only Salopian house. The only shop devoted to the sale of saloop, or sassafras tea.
 88. Fuliginous. Sooty.
 137. Covent Garden. The fruit and vegetable market of London.
 523. 165. Westward. I. e., homeward from work, for Lamb lived in the Temple, west from Cheapside.
 181. Hogarth. William Hogarth (1697-1764), the famous eighteenth century painter of London life. The March to Finchley, one of his most animated pieces of work, depicts a company of soldiers marching through a crowd in the utmost confusion; one of the figures in the foreground is that of a sweep, with just such a grin as Lamb describes, except that he is grinning not at the pie-man, but at a soldier who is stealing milk from a milkmaid.
 208. A sable cloud, etc. Adapted from Comus, l. 221 f.
 229. The young Montagu. Edward Wortley Montagu (1713-1776), son of the famous Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, who twice ran away from school, once turning chimney sweep.

523. 232. Defiliations. Instances of parents being deprived of their children.
 242. Ascanius. Son of Æneas; in the first book of the Æneid (l. 695 ff.) we are told how on one occasion Venus lulled him to sleep.
 524. 283. Incunabula. Cradle.
 290. Jem White. A schoolfellow of Lamb's at Christ's Hospital.
 299. The fair of St. Bartholomew. Held in Smithfield, one of the poorer districts of London, originally on St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24; later, when the calendar was revised, on September 3. It became the occasion of great disorder and scandal, and was abolished in 1855. Ben Jonson wrote a comedy of this title, dealing with the humors of the Fair, and severely satirizing the Puritans.
 312. Quoited. Thrown, as a quoit would be.
 335. Rochester. The Earl of Rochester (1647-1680), one of the courtiers of Charles II, noted for his riotous excesses.
 341. Old dame Ursula. Lamb so names the woman after one of the characters in Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, mentioned above, a fat pig-woman,—i. e., woman who sold roast pig,—indescribably coarse of behavior.
 345. Whereat the universal host . . . brightness. A paraphrase of Paradise Lost, I. 541-543; see p. 161.
 360. Kissing-crust. The soft part of the crust of a loaf where it has touched another in baking.
 525. 388. Golden lads, etc. From Cymbeline, IV. ii.
 DISSERTATION UPON ROAST PIG
 The Chinese manuscript, and the volume ascribed to Confucius, are inventions of Lamb, who, however, obtained the suggestion for the essay from his friend Thomas Manning, who had travelled in China.
 527. 188. Locke. John Locke (1632-1704), author of the Essay concerning Human Understanding.
 209. Mundus edibilis. World of edibles.
 211. Princeps obsoniorum. Chief of tidbits.
 217. Amor immunditiæ. Love of filth.
 253. Radiant jellies . . . shooting stars. There was a popular superstition that if a shooting star could be found fallen on the ground it would turn out to be nothing but a mass of jelly.
 262. Conversation. Behavior.
 264. Ere sin, etc. One of Lamb's most exquisite touches of humor; the quotation is from Coleridge's Epitaph on an Infant.
 273. Sapors. Flavors.

528. 312. Villatic. Of the village; the quotation is from Samson Agonistes.
 378. Intenerating and dulcifying. Making tender and sweet. The use of such long, high-sounding words of Latin derivation, with reference to a subject so commonplace, has much to do with the flavor of the essay.
 387. St. Omer's. A French Jesuit college, where, of course, Lamb never attended school.
 529. 404. Shalot. A kind of onion.

THE SUPERANNUATED MAN

One of the most autobiographically exact of Lamb's essays. Lamb was a clerk in the service of the East India Company for thirty-three years, resigning his post in March, 1825, on a pension of two-thirds his regular salary.

Sera tamen, etc. Quoted from Virgil's first eclogue: Liberty, though late, yet looked upon, or visited, me.

530. 162. Boldero . . . Lacy. Fictitious names under which Lamb conceals the directors of the East India Company.
 164. Esto perpetua. Be thou eternal.
 531. 241. A Tragedy by Sir Robert Howard. The Vestal Virgin, or the Roman Ladies; Howard was brother-in-law of Dryden, and did some dramatic work in collaboration with him.
 286. Gresham. Sir Thomas Gresham (d. 1579), a wealthy London merchant who founded the Royal Exchange and became Lord Mayor. Whittington. Sir Richard, better known as Dick, Whittington, whose rise from poverty to the Lord Mayorship is familiar from nursery rhymes.
 298. Aquinas. St. Thomas Aquinas, Italian philosopher of the thirteenth century; his writings filled seventeen volumes.
 532. 310. Carthusian. The Carthusian order of monks was founded by St. Bruno c. 1084, at La Grande Chartreuse (Latin Carthusia); the Carthusian rule was strict.
 333. Elgin marbles. Parts of the pediments and frieze of the Parthenon, brought to England by Lord Elgin and placed in the British Museum.
 361. Cattle. Slice.
 392. Cum dignitate. From Cicero's phrase, otium cum dignitate—ease with dignity.
 397. Opus operatum est. The work has been done.
 On the sixth of April, 1825, Lamb wrote to his friend Wordsworth, "Here I am then, after thirty-three years' slavery, sitting in my own room at eleven o'clock this finest of all April mornings, a freed man, with 441£ a year for the remainder of my life. . . ."
 "I came home FOREVER on Tuesday in last week. The incomprehensibility of my condition overwhelmed me. It was like passing from life into eternity. Every year to be as long as three, i. e., to have three times as much real time—time that is my own, in it! I wandered about thinking I was happy, but feeling I was not. But that tumultuousness is passing off, and I begin to understand the nature of the gift. Holidays, even the annual month, were always uneasy joys; their conscious fugitiveness; the craving after making the most of them. Now, when all is holiday, there are no holidays. I can sit at home, in rain or shine, without a restless impulse for walkings. I am daily steadying, and shall soon find it as natural to me to be my own master, as it has been irksome to have had a master. . . .

"I eat, drink, and sleep sound as ever. I lay no anxious schemes for going hither and thither, but take things as they occur. Yesterday I excursed twenty miles; to-day I write a few letters. Pleasuring was for fugitive playdays; mine are fugitive only in the sense that life is fugitive. Freedom and life coexistent!"

HAZLITT

THE FIGHT

533. 24. The Fancy. Sportsmen, especially prize-fighters.
 78. Alter idem. A second self.
 89. Lines from Spenser. From Muioptolmos, l. 209 ff.
 534. 104. One of the mails. One of the mail coaches.
 180. The Brentford Jehu. See 2 Kings, ix: 20: "The driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously."
 535. 268. Follows so the ever-running sun.
 "Follows so the ever-running year, With profitable labor." Henry V, IV. i. 293.
 536. 348. The vein of Gilpin. See Cowper's John Gilpin's Ride.
 359. Frank us. Send us down on a pass.
 388. A lusty man. Canterbury Tales, Prologue, l. 167; p. 3.
 405. Standing like gray-hounds.
 "I see you stand like gray-hounds in the ships, Straining upon the start." Henry V, III. i. 31.
 411. Oaken towel. Staff or club.
 415. A firebrand like Bardolph's. Bardolph is one of the characters in Henry IV whom Falstaff is forever twitting about his red nose; e. g.: "O thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light. Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking in the night betwixt tavern and tavern." (III. iii.)

537. 437. Hogarth. See note on The Praise of Chimney Sweepers, p. 523, l. 181.
 443. Cobbett. William Cobbett (1766–1835), an English radical journalist, editor of Cobbett's Weekly Political Register, whose attacks on the government resulted from time to time in his being imprisoned and fined.
 520. Alas! the Bristol man, etc. See Cowper's The Task, II 322.
 "Alas, Leviathan is not so tamed."
 538. 551. The Game Chicken. The nom de guerre of Henry Pearce, a well-known English pugilist.
 585. Stone. An English weight, legally fourteen pounds.
 540. 826. Sir Fopling Flutter. A fashionable fop in Etherege's comedy, The Man of Mode, or Sir Fopling Flutter.
 541. 889. Procul este profani. Æneid, VI. 258. Stay far off, unholy ones
 906. New Eloise. La Nouvelle Héloïse, by Rousseau; a sentimental romance published in 1760.

ON GOING A JOURNEY

542. 30. May plume her feathers, etc. Comus, 378 ff.
 36. A Tilbury. A two wheeled gig without a cover.
 543. 97. Sterne. The Rev. Laurence Sterne (1713–1768), author of A Sentimental Journey and Tristram Shandy.
 544. 170. All-Foxden. Near Nether-Stowey, Somersetshire, where Hazlitt visited his "old friend C——" (Samuel Taylor Coleridge) in 1798. "L——," l. 204, is Charles Lamb, a friend of both Hazlitt and Coleridge.
 176. Here be woods as green, etc. Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess, I. iii.
 238. Sancho. Sancho Panza, Don Quixote's esquire and servant in Cervantes' burlesque romance Don Quixote.
 244. Procul este profani. See The Fight, note on l. 889.
 545. 312. Gribelin's engravings. Simon Gribelin (1661–1733), an engraver of some ability, published in 1707 seven plates of the cartoons of Raphael.
 325. Paul and Virginia, . . . Camilla. The former a pastoral novel by Bernadin de St. Pierre, published 1788; the latter, a novel by Madame D'Arblay (Fanny Burney), published 1796, much inferior to her masterpiece Evelina.
 331. New Eloise. See The Fight, note on l. 906.
 546. 381. Where is he now? In 1822, when this essay was first published, Coleridge's creative power was in eclipse, and his whole constitution broken by ill health and the use of laudanum.
 547. 472. Stonehenge. A prehistoric monument in the shape of a roughly circular group of huge monoliths, on Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire.

547. 400. The Bodleian. The University library at Oxford.

ON FAMILIAR STYLE

549. 112. Cum grano salis. With a grain of salt
 176. Mr. Cobbett. See note on The Fight, l. 443.
 550. 247. A well of native English undefiled. Adapted from Spenser's "Dan Chaucer, well of English undefyled," Faerie Queene, IV. ii. 32.
 251. Erasmus's Colloquies. The Colloquia of Erasmus (1466–1536), appeared in 1519.
 261. What do you read? etc. See Hamlet, II. ii.
 272. Florilegium. Anthology; here rather a collection of big words. Tulippomania. Craze for tulips
 289. Sermo humi obrepens. Talk that creeps on the ground.
 551. 314. Fantoccini beings. Puppets.
 315. That strut and fret, etc. Macbeth, V. v.
 320. And on their pens, etc. Adapted from Paradise Lost, IV. 988–9:
 "And on his crest Sat Horror plumed."
 395. Cowper's description. The Task, V. 173 ff.

DE QUINCEY

CONFESSIONS OF AN OPIUM-EATER

- The text here used is the briefer and better known version which appeared in the London Magazine in 1821, and was reprinted in the first edition of 1822; an expanded version was published in Selections from Grave and Gay, 1856.
 552. 108. Archididascalus. Head master.
 553. 180. I came to leave ——. The Manchester Grammar School.
 216. Towers of ——. Manchester Cathedral.
 554. 293. Lustrum. Period of five years.
 315. νυχθήμερον. A day of twenty-four hours.
 320. That moveth altogether, etc. From Wordsworth's Resolution and Independence, l. 77.
 555. 414. Anastasius. A novel, published 1819, the hero of which was an opium-eating Greek.
 416. Mithridates. The title of a dictionary of all languages, published by Johann Christoph Adelung in 1806. Mithridates was renowned as a linguist, hence the title.
 557. 582. The Scriptures speak of. Revelation, xx: 12.
 558. 646. A certain day in August. The Civil War may be said to have begun when Charles I raised the royal standard at Nottingham, August 22, 1642.

558. 649. Marston Moor, — Newbury, — Naseby. Battlefields of the war.
 661. Paludaments. Robes.
 662. Paulus or Marius. Both Roman Consuls.
 664. Tunic . . . on a spear. Carried thus as a signal for battle.
 665. Alalagmos. "A word expressing collectively the gathering of the Roman war-cries—Alála, Alála." (De Quincey.)
 729. Officina gentium. Workshop, or laboratory of the peoples.
 559. 764-7. Brahma . . . Osiris, etc. The first three Hindu deities, the last two Egyptian.

SUSPIRIA DE PROFUNDIS

561. DeQuincey planned a series of approximately twenty papers, "Sighs from the Depths," of which that here reprinted is one of the earliest. The series was never completed, only six being published. DeQuincey had himself experienced the sorrows he writes of,—the death of father and sisters, social ostracism, and a subjection to opium which might easily have driven him mad.
 562. 79. On the foundation. Holding a scholarship.
 98. The Parcae. The Fates.
 563. 159. Telegraphed. DeQuincey means simply "signalled," or "communicated by signs."
 195. Keys more than papal. The "papal keys" are the keys of St. Peter, symbolic of the Pope's power.
 564. 257. Pariah. An outcast.
 294. The tents of Shem. Shem, son of Noah, was supposed to be the ancestor of the Jews and wandering races.
 307. Cybele. See note on Childe Harold, iv., l. 10.
 339. Eumenides. The "benevolent" or "gracious ones," a euphemistic name for the Furies.
 565. 380. Accomplished. Made perfect.

LANDOR

THE DEATH OF ARTEMIDORA

566. 11. Iris. Messenger of the gods, who liberated the souls of the dying by loosening their hair.

IPHIGENEIA AND AGAMEMNON

567. Because Agamemnon had slain a stag sacred to Diana, the goddess held the Grecian fleet, gathered for the Trojan war, in port at Aulis. Calchas, the soothsayer, reported that according to the oracle the goddess's wrath would endure until Iphigeneia, daughter of Agamemnon, should be sacrificed to her. According to one form of the story, Diana did not allow the sacrifice to be consummated, but carried Iphigeneia to Tauris, where she became priestess. Compare with Landor's treatment, stanzas 26-29 of Tennyson's Dream of Fair Women.

TENNYSON

CENONE

570. Cenone was a nymph of Mt. Ida near Troy, beloved by Paris, but deserted by him after Venus, as a reward for his decision that she was most beautiful of the goddesses, had promised him the fairest woman in the world, Helen, for his wife.
 571. 39, 40. As yonder walls, etc. According to one form of the story Apollo raised the walls of Troy by playing on his lyre.
 79. Peleus. It was at the marriage feast of Peleus and Thetis that the golden apple was thrown which caused the strife among the goddesses.
 81. Iris. Messenger of the gods.
 572. 102. Peacock. Juno's bird.
 170, 171. Idalian, Paphian. At Idalia and Paphos, in Crete, were special shrines to Venus.
 573. 220. The Abominable. Eris, goddess of strife.
 574. 257. The Greek woman. Helen.
 259. Cassandra. Daughter of Priam, gifted with a power of prophecy, but doomed never to be believed. She foretold the fall of Troy.

THE LOTOS-EATERS

Based on Homer's account of how Ulysses and his mariners touched at the land of the lotos, the eating of whose flower produced forgetfulness of home.

A DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN

575. 5. Dan. Don, Master, from Latin dominus.
 27. Tortoise. Latin testudo; the name applied to the mode of defence used by the Roman legionaries in attacking a walled city, the holding and interlocking of their shields over their heads to form a solid protection against missiles hurled from the walls.
 576. 85. A lady. Helen of Troy.
 100. One that stood beside. Iphigeneia, daughter of Agamemnon, sacrificed to Artemis before the Greek fleet sailed for Troy. Cf. Landor's poem, p. 567.
 127. A queen. Cleopatra.
 577. 146. Canopus. One of the brightest stars of the southern sky.
 155. The other. Octavius Cæsar.
 578. 195. Her that died. Jephtha's daughter; cf. Judges, xi.
 251. Rosamond. Rosamond Clifford, called Fair Rosamond, paramour of Henry II.
 255. Eleanor. Wife of Henry II.
 579. 259. To Fulvia's waist. "Cleopatra puts the name of the wife of her paramour

Antony for that of Eleanor, wife of Rosamond's paramour." (Rolfe.)

579. 263. Captain of my dreams. Venus, the morning star.
266. Her who clasped. Margaret Roper, daughter of Sir Thomas More; after he was beheaded she took his head down from London Bridge where it was exposed, and when she died had it buried in her arms.
269. Her who knew. Eleanor, wife of Edward I, who accompanied her husband on the First Crusade, and when he was stabbed with a poisoned dagger, sucked out the poison with her lips.

MORTE D'ARTHUR

Written in 1835, first published in 1842; afterwards incorporated, with additions, in The Passing of Arthur in Idylls of the King. Cf. Malory's account, pp. 47 ff.

4. Lyonnesse. A legendary country, including part of Cornwall, now supposed to be submerged beneath the sea.
580. 21. Camelot. Arthur's capital.
23. Merlin. Arthur's magician and chief adviser.
31. Samite. A heavy silk, sometimes interwoven with gold thread.
581. 139. Northern morn. Aurora Borealis.
140. Moving isles. Icebergs.
147. Cf. the metrical effect of this line with that of l. 65 and l. 112.
582. 186-192. The contrast between the first five lines of this passage and the last two is one of the best examples in English verse of the fitting of sound to sense; for a similar effect cf. ll. 49-51.
583. 242. One good custom should corrupt the world. "E. g., chivalry, by formation of habit or by any other means." (Tennyson's note.)
259. Avilion. See Malory, p. 48.

ULYSSES

"The poem was written soon after Arthur Hallam's death, and it gives the feeling about the need of going forward and braving the struggle of life perhaps more simply than anything in In Memoriam." (Tennyson's note.)

10. Rainy Hyades. The constellation Hyades was associated by the ancients with stormy weather.
584. 26. Every hour is saved. Every hour that is saved is something more.

IN MEMORIAM

Composed in memory of Arthur Henry Hallam, whose acquaintance Tennyson made at Cambridge, and who was later engaged to Tennyson's sister. He died at Vienna in 1833, and the lyrics composing the poem were written at various times between then and 1850, the date of their final arrangement and publication.
5. Orbs of light and shade. Sun and moon, not eyes, as has sometimes been suggested.

591. 1. Wild bird. The nightingale, whose song has always been celebrated for passionate mingling of joy and pain.
2. Quicks. Quickset; slips, especially of hawthorn, set to form a hedge.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE

594. Written to commemorate a fatal charge at Balaclava in the Crimean War, 1854; the poem was based on a phrase in the London Times's account of the battle: "Some one had blundered."

NORTHERN FARMER

Written in the Lincolnshire dialect. "It is a vivid piece out of the great comedy of man, not of its mere mirth, but of that elemental humorousness of things which belongs to the lives of the brutes as well as to ourselves, that steady quaintness of the ancient earth and all who are born of her . . . continually met in the peasant and farmer class." (Stopford Brooke: Tennyson, His Art and Relation to Modern Life).

THE REVENGE

597. Tennyson found the story in Raleigh's spirited account; see p. 103.

RIZPAH

599. Based on an incident read by Tennyson in a magazine. For significance of title see 2 Samuel, xxi.
600. 73. Election and Reprobation. Calvinistic doctrines; all men were supposed to be damned for original sin, except a chosen few whom God elected for salvation.

MERLIN AND THE GLEAM

601. An allegory of Tennyson's literary life. For commentary see the preface to the present Lord Tennyson's Memoir of his father.

CROSSING THE BAR

603. Tennyson directed that this poem should be placed at the end of all collected editions of his works.

BROWNING

CAVALIER TUNES

In these three dashing lyrics Browning reflects the spirit of reckless loyalty to the King, and contempt for the Puritans, which animated the supporters of Charles I.

MARCHING ALONG

2. Crop-headed. The Puritans wore their hair cut short in contrast with the Cavaliers, whose long curls fell upon their shoulders. "Roundheads," the name frequently applied to the Puritans, has the same implication. Parliament. The Long Parliament, controlled by the Puritan party.

603. 7. Pym. One of the Puritan leaders in the Long Parliament, as were Hampden, Hazlrig, Fiennes, and Sir Henry Vane the Younger (ll. 13-14).
 15. Rupert. Prince Rupert, nephew of Charles I, and leader of the Royalist cavalry.
 22. Nottingham. Where Charles raised his standard at the opening of the Civil War in 1642.

THE LOST LEADER

604. Suggested by Wordsworth's change from Liberalism to Conservatism in politics, though Browning expressly denied that he was in any way attempting a portrait of Wordsworth.

HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS

605. Browning wrote: "There is no sort of historical foundation about 'Good News from Ghent.' I wrote it under the bulwark of a vessel off the African coast, after I had been at sea long enough to appreciate even the fancy of a gallop on the back of a certain good horse 'York,' then in my stable at home."

PARTING AT MORNING

606. Companion piece to Meeting at Night; the speaker is, in each case, a man.
 3. Him. The sun.
 4. Need of a world of men for me. This may mean either the need I have for the world, or, the need the world has for me, my duty in society.

SOLILOQUY OF THE SPANISH CLOISTER

606. 39. Arian. The Arian heresy held that Christ was created by God, and was inferior to God in nature and dignity.
 507. 56. Manichee. Manicheans were a sect in the early Christian centuries who combined Persian and Christian beliefs.

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM THE SEA

The speaker is on shipboard, off the north-west coast of Africa.

1. Cape St. Vincent. On the southwest coast of Spain, where Nelson defeated a Spanish fleet in 1797.
 3. Trafalgar. The scene of Nelson's victory in 1805.
 5. Say. Imperative; "let him say."

SAUL

For the situation see 1 Samuel, xvi: 14-23.

MEMORABILIA

615. The speaker, in contrast with the person he addresses, is so intense an admirer of Shelley that it seems to him that if he could once have seen and spoken with the poet the meeting would have dwarfed in importance all the other events of his life. Browning in his youth admired Shelley greatly.

MY LAST DUCHESS

The dramatic monologue, Browning's favorite poetic form, and one which he uses with the utmost skill, presents some difficulty to the reader on account of its directness and compression. It differs from the soliloquy, e. g., of Shakespeare, in that the presence of a second person, a listener, is to be inferred; oftentimes the speaker responds to a question or gesture, implied only in the answer, on the part of this silent listener. Cf. My Last Duchess, ll. 53-54. It is a good plan for the student to read the poem through once or twice in an effort to get the situation and some conception of the speaker's character before trying to discover the meaning of each line. The poem may then be studied in detail; it should be noted that no break in the thought, no interjection, is without its significance.

The speaker is Duke of Ferrara, one of the oldest and proudest of the Italian communes. There could be no greater contrast in character than that between the Duke—of impeccable manners and exquisite artistic taste, but selfish to the core and absolutely heartless—and the young Duchess—naïve, filled with the joy of life, whose graciousness springs from a heart pure and generous.

3. Frà. Brother. Pandolf, an imaginary character, is a monk, like so many of the painters of the Italian Renaissance.

616. 9. Since none puts by, etc. The parenthesis gives a hint of the Duke's esteem for the picture: he values it not at all as a reminder of his Duchess, but simply as a work of art, and as such, is careful to protect it from possible harm.

45. 6. I gave commands; Then all smiles stopped together. Generally interpreted to mean that the Duke gave orders for the lady's death. In reply to a question by Corson, Browning himself said, "Yes, I meant that the commands were that she be put to death," adding after a pause, "Or he might have had her shut up in a convent."

53. 4. Nay, we'll go Together down, sir. The envoy, in deference to the Duke's birth, has dropped back, but the Duke, with perfect condescension, calls him forward to a position of equality.

56. Claus of Innsbruck. Another imaginary artist.

IN A GONDOLA

617. 22. The Three. Enemies of the man, unidentified, one seems to be closely related to the woman: cf. l. 107.
618. 127. Giudecca. One of the canals of Venice.
619. 186-192. The pictures seem to be imaginary, though the artists are well known. Haste-thee-Luke. A nickname for Luca Giordano, a Neapolitan.

A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL

As My Last Duchess illustrates the artistic taste of the Renaissance period, and The Bishop Orders His Tomb the love of luxury, so this poem exemplifies the devotion to pure learning which characterized some of the Renaissance scholars. Grammarian should be taken in a rather wide sense; it is equivalent to philologist, one who loves learning. Certain of the Grammarian's disciples are carrying the body of their master for burial in one of the Italian hill towns.

26. 'Ware the beholders! An adjuration to the pall-bearers to make a good appearance before spectators: "There are people watching us—put your best foot forward!"
620. 33, 34. Apollo was god of song and poetry, and patron of manly beauty; the implication is, therefore, that the Grammarian was not only a handsome man in his youth, but that, if he had chosen, he might have written lyric poetry.
- 45, 46. The world Bent on escaping. The masterpieces of classical literature which had for centuries lain mouldering in libraries.
50. Gowned. Put on the scholar's gown.
621. 129-131. Hoti, Oun, De. Greek particles. Though to some these might have seemed subjects so minute as to be ridiculous, the Grammarian had said the last word on them.

THE BISHOP ORDERS HIS TOMB

"The Bishop embodies certain tendencies of the Renaissance. No one who studies that marvellous period, whether in its history, its literature, or its plastic art, can fail to be profoundly struck by the way in which Paganism and Christianity, philosophic scepticism and gross superstition, the antique and the modern, enthusiastic love of the beautiful and vile immorality, were all mingled together without much, if any, consciousness of incompatibility or inconsistency." (W. J. Alexander: Introduction to the Poetry of Robert Browning.) Ruskin says, in Modern Painters: "I know no other piece of modern English, prose or poetry, in which there is so much told, as in these lines, of the Renaissance spirit—its worldliness, inconsistency, pride, hypocrisy, ignorance of itself, love of art, of luxury, and of good Latin."

621. 5. Gandolf. A fellow churchman of the Bishop's, and a rival in matters ecclesiastic and secular.
8. And as she died so must we die ourselves. Here, as in lines 51 and 101, the dying Bishop assumes for an instant the manner of the professional preacher. Such lapses are, however, brief.
21. The epistle-side. The right-hand side, as one faces the altar, from which the epistle was read in the service.
26. Tabernacle. The Bishop's effigy was to recline upon a basalt slab covering the sarcophagus, and over it was to be a stone roof borne upon nine columns.
622. 29. Peach-blossom marble. Particularly fine marble of a pinkish hue.
31. Onion-stone. Italian cipollino (little onion), an inferior greenish marble, readily splitting into thin layers, like the coats of an onion.
45. Frascati. A wealthy summer resort near Rome.
49. Jesu Church. Il Gesu, the church of the Jesuits, in which is an image of God, bearing a representation of the earth, made of lapis lazuli.
- 51, 2. Job, vii: 6, 9. "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle. . . . So he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more."
55. My frieze. Running around the sarcophagus, beneath the slab of basalt.
58. Tripod, thyrsus. Both Pagan symbols: the former connected with the worship of Apollo, whose priestess at Delphi sat upon a tripod when receiving the divine inspiration; the latter the vine-wreathed staff carried by the followers of Bacchus.
74. Brown. I. e., with age.
77. Tully's. Cicero's, whose Latin style is the model of good use and elegance.
79. Ulpian. A Roman jurist of the second century A. D., whose Latin has not the classic perfection of Cicero's. His. Gandolf's.
82. God made and eaten. I. e., in the sacrament of the mass.
87. Crook. Symbol of the Bishop's authority as shepherd of his people.
623. 95. Saint Praxed at his sermon on the mount. The dying man's mind confuses the two elements of his bas-relief mentioned in 59-60. Praxed was a female saint.
99. Elucescebat. The correct form is elucebat; this is presumably an example of Gandolf's "gaudy ware," l. 78.
101. Cf. Genesis, xlvii: 9: "And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, The days of the years of my pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty years: few and evil have the days of the years of my life been."

623. 108. Visor. A mask, like those worn by ancient actors. Term. A bust terminating in a square pedestal, like the representations of Terminus, god of boundaries.
109. Lynx. An animal which figures largely in representations of the Bacchic orgies. All the objects mentioned in ll. 107-110 are commonly found on ancient sarcophagi.
116. Gritstone. A coarse sandstone.

ANDREA DEL SARTO

"This poem was suggested by a portrait of Andrea and his wife, painted by himself and now hanging in the Pitti Gallery at Florence. Andrea is a painter who ranks high among the contemporaries of Raphael and Michel Angelo, especially by reason of his technical execution, which was so perfect as to win for him the surname of 'The Faultless Painter.' Early in life he enjoyed the favor of Francis I, at whose court he for a time resided; but having received a large sum of money from Francis for the purchase of works of art in Italy, he, under the influence of his wife, a beautiful but unprincipled woman, embezzled it, applying it to the erection of a house for himself at Florence." (W. J. Alexander: Introduction to the Poetry of Robert Browning.)

15. Fiesole. A hill town near Florence.
26. Serpentining. Suggesting a certain sinuous, undulant type of beauty.
- 35-40. The key-note of the poem.
624. 57. Cartoon. A preliminary sketch, or working design.
82. Low-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand. Mechanically facile and accurate, but uninspired.
93. Morello. A spur of the Apennines, north of Florence.
105. The Urbinate. Raphael, born in Urbino, died 1520.
106. Vasari. Italian painter and writer of the 16th century, author of Lives of the Painters; he includes a life of Andrea, to which Browning is indebted for material in this poem.
625. 130. Agnolo. Michel Angelo.
146. The Paris lords. Courtiers of Francis I, who would have reproached Andrea for his embezzlement.
150. Fontainebleau. A royal palace near Paris.
153. Humane. Francis was a great patron of arts and letters, of the humanities.
155. Mouth's good mark that made the smile. Apparently means no more than smiling mouth.
626. 210. Cue-owls. So-called from the sound of their call; the Italian form is chiù.
220. Cousin. Lucrezia's gallant, who whistles for her to come to him.

626. 241. Scudi. Plural of scudo, a coin worth about a dollar; scudo means shield, and the coin bore on the obverse the shield of the prince who issued it.
627. 263. Leonard. Leonardo da Vinci.

PROSPICE

Written in the autumn following Mrs. Browning's death. The title means "Look forward."

ABT VOGLER

Abt (Abbé) Vogler (1740-1814), a German Catholic priest, and famous musician. He invented a new form of the organ, called the orchestrion, upon which he gave performances all over Europe, his improvisations being especially remarkable.

3. Solomon. According to Mohammedan legends, Solomon, thanks to a ring on which was engraved the name of God (l. 7), had control over the demons and genii of the underworld.

628. 23. Rome's dome. The dome of St. Peter's.
34. Protoplast. "The first-formed," the original, the model; the figures of those not yet born, to be born in a happier future, are lured by the power of the music to appear before their time.
- 43-52. A comparison of the process of composition in three arts—painting, poetry, music: in the first two the process is subject to certain well understood laws; with music, on the other hand, the result appears to be produced by no tangible means, to be in subjection to no natural law. Hence the composer, in the freedom of his creation, approaches God, who creates by merely willing.
629. 91. Common chord. The chord produced by the combination of any note with its third and fifth.
93. A ninth. An interval exceeding an octave by a tone (major), or by a semitone (minor).
96. C Major. The "natural" scale, having neither sharps nor flats. The last six lines of the poem give symbolic expression to the idea that from his supernal visions the musician descends gradually to the realities of every day.

RABBI BEN EZRA

Ben Ezra was a distinguished Jewish scholar of the twelfth century, noted especially for his commentaries on the Old Testament. The ideas expressed in the poem were to some extent suggested to the poet by Ben Ezra's writings, but Browning develops them in his own way, and makes the poem one of the best expressions of his philosophy of life.

17. Low kinds. The lower animals, living

- but for the day, untroubled by doubt, uninspired by hope.
629. 24. The awkward inversions are characteristic of Browning: does care irk, etc.? does doubt fret, etc.?
630. 48. Its lone way. In Ben Ezra's commentary on the Psalms we find this sentence "The soul of man is called lonely because it is separated, during its union with the body, from the Universal Soul into which it is again received when it departs from its earthly companion."
- 49-72. Browning here argues against the ascetic ideal, so popular during the Middle Ages, which proclaimed that spiritual advancement was to be gained through mortification of the flesh.
74. Youth's heritage. The heritage of experience given to age by youth.
87. Leave the fire. If the fire leave.
631. 124, 125. Supply whom after I and they.
151. Potter's wheel. Cf. Isaiah, lxiv: 8: "We are the clay, and Thou our potter; and we are all the work of Thy hand." The metaphor is effectively used by Fitzgerald in his translation of the Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám. See page 643, l. 325 ff.

EPILOGUE TO ASOLANDO

332. This is Browning's final cheery word on the problem of life and death; it is the epilogue to his last volume of poems, entitled Asolando, published in London on the day Browning died in Venice.
5. Pity me? Will you pity me, dead?
17. The unseen. The dead; the author himself.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING

SONNETS FROM THE PORTUGUESE

This title serves to veil the fact that the sonnets are addressed to Robert Browning, and express with perfect sincerity Mrs. Browning's feeling about the love and marriage of the two poets. For an account of their origin see the Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning (Smith, Elder & Co., 1898), vol. I., pp. 316-17.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN

Occasioned by an official report on the employment of children in mines and factories. Mrs. Browning said of the rhythm: "The first stanza came into my head in a hurricane, and I was obliged to make the other stanzas like it." Letters, I. 156.

his Rubáiyát (a plural form, the singular rubáiy means quatrain) in the twelfth century. Fitzgerald describes them, and his own verses, as follows:

"The original Rubáiyát are independent Stanzas, consisting each of four Lines of equal, though varied, Prosody; sometimes all rhyming, but oftener (as here imitated) the third line a blank, sometimes as in the Greek Alcaic, where the penultimate line seems to lift and suspend the Wave that falls over in the last. As usual with such kind of Oriental Verse, the Rubáiyát follow one another according to Alphabetic Rhyme—a strange succession of Grave and Gay. Those here selected are strung into something of an Eclogue, with perhaps a less than equal proportion of the "Drink and make-merry," which (genuine or not) occurs over frequently in the Original. Either way, the Result is sad enough: saddest perhaps when most ostentatiously merry: more apt to move Sorrow than Anger toward the old Tent-maker, who, after vainly endeavoring to unshackle his Steps from Destiny, and to catch some authentic Glimpse of Tomorrow, fell back upon Today (which has outlasted so many Tomorrows) as the only Ground he got to stand upon, however momentarily slipping from under his Feet."

Fitzgerald's method was not so much one of literal translation as of combination and paraphrase; the first edition of 1859 contained 75 quatrains, the second 110, the third and fourth (here reprinted) 101. Most of the changes were in the nature of improvement; it is generally felt, however, that the first stanza was finest in its original form, where it ran as follows: "Awake! for Morning in the Bowl of Night

Has flung the Stone that puts the Stars to Flight:

And Lo! the Hunter of the East has caught

The Sultan's Turret in a Noose of Light."

The wonderful success of the stanza form invented by Fitzgerald, the successive stanzas rolling on in subdued splendor one after another with the stateliness of a pageant, needs no comment.

In the text Fitzgerald's usage with regard to capitals and apostrophes has been preserved. The notes that follow are based upon Fitzgerald's own.

637. 5. The phantom of False morning. A transient light on the horizon about an hour before the true dawn.

15. White Hand of Moses. Moses brought his hand forth from his bosom "leprous as snow," Exodus, iv: 6; the metaphor is applied to the blooming of the flowers.

16. Jesus . . . suspires. "According to the Persians, the healing power of Jesus resided in his breath."

337. 17. Iram. An ancient Persian garden, now sunk in the sands of Arabia.
 18. Jamshyd's Seven-ring'd Cup. Jamshyd was a legendary King of Persia; his cup was symbolical of the seven heavens, seven planets, seven seas, etc.
 22. Pehlevi. The old literary language of Persia.
 36-40. Kaikobád . . . Hátim. The proper names are those of Persian heroes; for Zal and Rustum see Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum.
 44. Mahmúd. The Sultan.
 638. 99. Muezzin. The crier who calls the faithful to prayer in Mohammedan countries.
 639. 122. Saturn. Lord of the seventh heaven.
 127. Me and Thee. Some dividual existence or personality distinct from the whole.
 131. Signs. Signs of the zodiac.
 641. 225. My computations. Omar was a profound mathematician, and helped to reform the calendar.
 237. Allah-breathing. Allah-worshipping.
 642. 271. Lantern. Fitzgerald's note describes a "Magic-Lantern still used in India; the cylindrical Interior being painted with various Figures, and so lightly poised and ventilated as to revolve round the lighted Candle within."
 277. The ball, etc. The reference is to the game of polo, of ancient Persian origin.
 302. Dervish. A Mohammedan devotee.
 643. 326. Ramazán. The Mohammedan month of fasting, when no food is eaten between sunrise and sunset.
 327 ff. With this use of the metaphor of the potter and the clay compare Brown-ing's in Rabbi Ben Ezra, page 631, l. 150.
 346. Sufi. An adherent of a Persian sect whose belief was pantheistic.
 358. The little Moon . . . that all were seeking. The new moon marking the end of the fasting month.
 360. Shoulder-knot a-creaking. With the burden of the jars of wine.

CARLYLE

SARTOR RESARTUS

544. This, the most influential of Carlyle's works, appeared as a serial in Fraser's Magazine during the years 1833-4. It is an attack upon the materialistic self-satisfaction of England, an attempt to show that the only ultimate reality is spirit, is God, and that everything material is merely clothing for the Divine Idea, visible manifestation of God. In form the book is somewhat grotesque. It purports to be a long review of a work on clothing, the magnum opus of Diogenes Teufelsdröckh, a German philosopher. Carlyle speaks through the mouth of Teufelsdröckh; the views expressed in the chapter here printed are Carlyle's own. At the same time he comments, in his own person, on the ideas propounded by the German, forestalling criticism, and occasionally explaining oracular utterances. The chapter on Natural Supernaturalism is really the culmination of the whole work.

644. 6. The Clothes-Philosophy. The idea that all appearances are merely the clothing of the Divine Idea which alone has ultimate reality.
 645. 34. Miracles. Carlyle objected to science because it tended, so he thought, to remove wonder and worship from human life. It tried to "explain" the phenomena of life which Carlyle considered divinely miraculous.
 47. Schlagbaum. Carlyle sprinkles German words and phrases through Sartor Resartus as proof of the fact that he is merely reviewing Teufelsdröckh's book.
 646. 153. Fortunatus. The hero of Thomas Dekker's play Old Fortunatus, well known in popular legend, possessed such a hat.
 160. Wahngasse of Weissnichtwo. The city in which Teufelsdröckh is supposed to live Carlyle calls "Weissnichtwo"; "I know not where." Wahngasse; dream-lane.
 168. Groschen. Small German coin.
 647. 264. Thaumaturgy. The art of performing miracles.
 275. Stein-bruch. Stone-quarry.
 278. Ashlar houses. Houses of hewn or squared stone.
 321. Johnson . . . went to Cock Lane. See Boswell's Life of Johnson, p. 308.
 648. 397. Cimmerian Night. See note on L'Allegro, l. 10.
 429. "We are such stuff," etc. From The Tempest, IV. i. 156 ff.

PAST AND PRESENT: LABOR

649. 60. Ezekiel. There is no reference to a potter's wheel in Ezekiel. Carlyle has probably confused the "Vision of the Wheels," Ezekiel, i: 15-21, and the reference to the potter's wheel in Jeremiah, xviii: 1-6.
 121. Sir Christopher. Sir Christopher Wren (1632-1723), was the architect entrusted with the rebuilding of St. Paul's Cathedral, destroyed in the London fire of 1666. Nell Gwyn was a favorite of Charles II, whose title included the phrase "Defender of the Faith."

REWARD

651. 4. Brahmins, Antinomians, Spinning Dervishes. Brahmins are members of the highest social order, or caste, among the Hindoos; Antinomians, a sect of heretics originating in Germany about 1535. Spinning Dervishes, Mohammedan fanatics whose chief claim to sanctity is based

- on their ability to whirl round like human tops.
551. 37. Shovel-hat. A particular sort of hat worn by the English clergy. Talfourd-Mahon Copyrights. A bill passed in 1842 guaranteeing the author's copyright for forty-two years.
68. Kepler calculations, Newton meditations. Johann Kepler (1571-1630), was a famous German astronomer; Sir Isaac Newton (1642-1727), the author of the Principia, was one of the world's greatest mathematicians.
652. 106. Mayfair. A fashionable residence district in London.
124. The sad and true old Samuel. Perhaps Carlyle has in mind Samuel Johnson's statement: "I have been an idle fellow all my life." See line 1970, selections from Boswell's Life, this volume.
133. My Corn-Law friends. The "Corn-Laws" imposed high duties on grains imported into England. They were abolished in 1846.
140. St. Stephen's. The Parliament houses.
159. Owen's Labor-bank. Robert Owen (1771-1858), a British social reformer, undertook to improve the condition of English laborers, through the establishment of small "ideal communities," including co-operative banks and stores.
168. Downing Street. Many of the offices of the British government are in Downing street.
553. 261. Manes. The souls of the dead, considered as gods of the lower world.
268. Acheron. One of the four rivers of the classical Hades.
270. Dante. The greatest of all Italian poets (1265-1321). The quotations are from his Divine Comedy.
278. Se tu segui, etc. "If thou followest thy star."
287. Eccovi l'uom, etc. "Behold the man who has stood in Hell."
288. As poet Dryden says. See Absalom and Achitophel, ll. 79-80.
295. Eurydice from Tartarus. See note on L'Allegro, l. 150.
654. 313. Lath-and-plaster hats. A method of advertising then practiced in London.
318. Law-wards. Carlylese for Lords, etymologically incorrect. Anglo-Saxon hlafweard means guardian of the loaf, the bread, not of the law.
334. In a Great Taskmaster's eye. An adaptation from the last line of Milton's sonnet On His Having Arrived at the Age of Twenty-three. See p. 152.
341. Galvanism. Electricity.
344. Midas-eared. King Midas, whose touch converted any object into gold, had the ears of an ass.

One of William the Conqueror's minstrels, who is supposed to have struck the first blow at Hastings.

654. 366. Antæus. The giant whose strength was renewed whenever he came in contact with the earth.
397. No Civil-List or . . . Budget. No government funds.

CROMWELL'S LETTERS AND SPEECHES: THE BATTLE OF DUNBAR

655. The battle was fought September 3 (13), 1650. Cromwell's army was suffering from want of food; had Leslie and the Scots remained on Doon Hill, it is probable that Cromwell would have withdrawn by sea.
9. Lambert. John Lambert (1619-1683), Cromwell's second-in-command; one of the most successful of the Parliamentary major-generals.
11. Lesley. David Leslie, afterwards Lord Newark (d. 1682), commander of the Scottish forces. He had previously fought with Cromwell against Charles I.
27. Committee of Estates. The governing committee, in charge of the whole campaign.
31. Bishop Burnet. Gilbert Burnet (1643-1715), Bishop of Salisbury; best known for his History of His Own Time.
656. 79. Monk. George Monk, first Duke of Albemarle (1608-1670), Parliamentary commander during the Civil War, commander of a brigade at Dunbar; later influential in securing the restoration of Charles II.
123. Major Hodgson. John Hodgson (d. 1684), serving in Lambert's regiment. His Memoirs give the best contemporary account of the battle of Dunbar.
124. A Cornet. The lowest grade of commissioned officer in the British cavalry; the grade is now extinct.

RUSKIN

MODERN PAINTERS: SUNRISE AND SUNSET

From chapter 4, "Of Truth of Clouds," (Part II, section 3, of entire work) Ruskin is arguing that Turner has been more true in his representations of nature than others with whom he is compared; the omitted portions, indicated in the text, are repetitions of the question "Has Claude given this?"

657. 14. Atlantis. A mythical city lost beneath the waves of the Atlantic.
658. 126. Who has best delivered this His message? Ruskin's answer is, of course, Turner.

THE TWO BOYHOODS

Part IX, chapter 9; the entire chapter is reprinted.

5. Giorgione. Italian painter (1477-1510), born at Castel-franco.

659. 103. Bello ovile, etc. "Beautiful fold where, as a lamb, I slept."
121. Great ships go to pieces. The sentence refers to two of Turner's paintings: "The Garden of the Hesperides," and "The Meuse."
661. 255. Once . . . twice . . . thrice. Turner painted three pictures commemorative of Trafalgar: "The Death of Nelson"; "The Battle of Trafalgar"; "The Fighting Téméraire."
361. Our Lady of Safety. "Santa Maria della Salute"; a church on the Grand Canal.
662. 394. Chiaroscuro. Technically the disposition of lights and shadows in a picture; here used for picturesqueness.
456. Among the Yorkshire hills. "I do not mean that this is his first acquaintance with the country, but the first impressive and touching one, after his mind was formed. The earliest sketches I found in the National Collection are at Clifton and Bristol; the next, at Oxford." (Ruskin.)
663. 517. Whitby Hill . . . Bolton Brook. The ruins of Whitby and Bolton Abbeys are the "traces of other handiwork."
562. Her breathless first-born . . . her last sons slain. "The Tenth Plague of Egypt"; "Rizpah, the Daughter of Aiah"; two of Turner's paintings.
576. Salvator . . . Dürer. Salvator Rosa (1615-1673), an Italian painter; Albrecht Durer (1471-1528), a German painter and engraver.
664. 600. Between Arcola and Waterloo. At Arcola Napoleon gained his reputation as a general by defeating the Austrians, September, 1796; his final defeat at Waterloo, June, 1815, ended his military career.
664. Put ye in the sickle. Jcel, iii: 13.

STONES OF VENICE: ST. MARK'S

From the first part of chapter iv, vol. II. Following the paragraph with which this selection closes, comes Ruskin's description of the interior of the building.

665. 8. Unworthy thenceforth, etc. Acts, xiii: 13; xv: 38, 39. (Ruskin.)
40. Vite de Santi, etc. Lives of the patron saints of the Venetian Churches.
56. Una stupenda, etc. A wonderful city, never seen before.
73. Cloister-like and quiet. St. Mark's Place, "partly covered by turf, and planted with a few trees; and on account of its pleasant aspect called Brollo or Broglio, that is to say, Garden." The canal passed through it, over which is built the bridge of the Malpassi. (Ruskin.)
667. 283. Cortile. An enclosed court-yard in a large house.
320. Vendita Frittolo, etc. A fritter and liquor shop.

668. 408. Their bluest veins to kiss. Antony and Cleopatra, II. v. 29.
669. 462. Of them that sell doves. Matthew, xxi: 12.

TIME AND TIDE

Under this title appeared twenty-five letters written ostensibly to Thomas Dixon, of Sunderland, but in fact addressed to the workingmen of England who in 1867, the year the letters appeared, were agitating reform. In them Ruskin appears not as the critic of art, but as the sociologist.

THE RELATION OF ART TO MORALS

671. A selection from the third of Ruskin's Lectures on Art, delivered while he was Slade Professor at Oxford. The portion reprinted comprises paragraphs 71-81 of the Lectures.
672. 122. My three years. As Slade Professor of Art at Oxford.
673. 164. The contest of Apelles and Protogenes. The two men were rivals, and attempted to outdo one another in drawing lines of remarkable fineness.
167. The circle of Giotto. Giotto (1267?-1337) sent as a sample of his work, and proof of his powers, a perfect circle.
675. 382. Miranda . . . Caliban. Characters in Shakespeare's Tempest; Caliban is a creature more brute than man; Miranda is the most spotlessly pure of all Shakespeare's heroines.

MACAULAY

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

The life of Goldsmith illustrates the vigor and picturesqueness of Macaulay's style; it is not, however, a thoroughly accurate biography. In particular it should be noted that Macaulay inherited from Boswell the condescending attitude which appears in this essay; more recent critics feel less of this, and are inclined to treat Goldsmith more seriously, both as a man and a thinker.

676. 75. Glorious and Immortal Memory. The memory of William III.
79. The banished dynasty. The Stuarts.
679. 386. The Dunciad. Pope's greatest satire.
479. Bayes in the Rehearsal. The Rehearsal was a burlesque attack on heroic tragedy, written by the Duke of Buckingham and his friends. John Bayes was a satirical portrait of Dryden.
680. 553. Kelly and Cumberland. Hugh Kelly (1739-1777), whose sentimental comedy False Delicacy was brought out with great success at Drury Lane six days before the first performance of The Good-Natured Man at Covent Garden; Richard Cumberland (1732-1811), a dramatist whose sentimental comedies Goldsmith ridiculed.

681. 601. Maupertuis. Pierre Louis de Maupertuis (1698-1759), a French astronomer.
 683. 830. A little poem. The Retaliation. See p. 286.

CLOUGH

QUA CURSUM VENTUS

The title means "As the wind, so the course."

ITE DOMUM SATURÆ

684. The title is taken from a line in the tenth of Virgil's eclogues, where a goatherd is addressing his herd: "Go home, full-fed; evening comes." Clough makes the speaker a peasant girl, driving home her cows.
 2. Rose, Provence, La Palie. Names of the cows.

ARNOLD

PHILOMELA

687. Philomela, daughter of Pandion, King of Attica, was dishonored by her brother-in-law, Tereus, King of Daulis, in Phocis, a country in northern Greece. Tereus cut out Philomela's tongue that she might not bear witness against him, but she made her secret known to her sister Procne, wife of Tereus, by words woven into a robe. Procne killed her son Itys, served him up as food to his father, and fled with Philomela. On being pursued by Tereus, the sisters prayed for deliverance, and were changed into birds by the gods, Philomela becoming a nightingale. Arnold has reversed the positions of Philomela and Procne.
 688. 21. The too clear web. The woven robe which only too clearly revealed the story of the crime.
 27. Cephissian vale. The valley of the Cephissus, the chief river of Phocis.

THE SCHOLAR-GIPSY

The poem is based on the following passage from Glanvil's Vanity of Dogmatizing, 1661; cf. ll. 11, 31, 133, 159.

"There was very lately a lad in the University of Oxford, who was by his poverty forced to leave his studies there; and at last to join himself to a company of vagabond gipsies. Among these extravagant people, by the insinuating subtilty of his carriage, he quickly got so much of their love and esteem as that they discovered to him their mystery. After he had been a pretty while exercised in the trade, there chanced to ride by a couple of scholars, who had formerly been of his acquaintance. They quickly spied out their old friend among the gipsies; and he gave them an account of the necessity which drove him to that kind of life, and told them that the people he went with were not such impostors as they were taken for, but that they had a traditional kind of learning among them, and could do wonders by the power of imagination, their fancy binding that of others; that himself had learned much of their art, and when he had compassed the whole secret, he intended, he said, to leave their company, and give the world an account of what he had learned."

690. 95. Lasher. Originally the turbulent water running through an opening in a weir; then applied to the weir itself, or, as here, to the pool below the weir into which the lasher empties.
 129. Christ-Church hall. The dining-hall in Christ-Church College, Oxford.
 692. 208. Averse, as Dido. Æneas, on his journey through Hades, met the shade of Dido, queen of Carthage, who had slain herself when deserted by him; the shade turned away from Æneas with a gesture of aversion.
 245. The Syrtes. The ancient name for the modern Gulfs of Sidra and Cabes, on the northern coast of Africa.
 249. Iberians. Iberia was the ancient name for the Spanish peninsula.

SOHRAB AND RUSTUM

The incident was taken by Arnold from Persian legend

706. 861. Persepolis. Capital city of ancient Persia, of which Jemshid, or Jamschid, was a mythical king.

THE AUSTERITY OF POETRY

1. Son of Italy. Jacopone da Todi, an Italian poet of the thirteenth century.

RUGBY CHAPEL

In memory of Arnold's father, Dr. Thomas Arnold, Master of Rugby; "the Doctor" of Tom Brown's School Days.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE

709. One of Arnold's Discourses in America, written for his lecture trip of 1883-4.
 711. 185. To know the best, etc. Quoted from Arnold's essay The Function of Criticism at the Present Time.
 714. 511. The powers. The component parts.
 540. The desire to relate these pieces of knowledge to our sense for conduct. We acquire knowledge, and then try to answer the questions, "What difference does it make? What bearing has it upon my life? How does this new fact fit into my own schedule of facts and values?"
 715. 630. Professor Sylvester. James Sylvester (1814-1897), an English mathematician.

tician, who held chairs at Johns Hopkins and Oxford Universities.

715. 636. Cambridge. The study of mathematics has long been an important part of the curriculum at Cambridge University.
662. Mr. Darwin's famous proposition. The proposition occurs in Part IV, chapter 21, of The Descent of Man, and is really a summing up of the whole book.
716. 741. A Sandemanian. A member of the religious sect founded in Scotland by Robert Sandeman, about 1725.
718. 952. A school report. Arnold was for many years a government inspector of schools.
719. 1005. Letters will call out, etc. In this sentence Arnold sums up his entire argument.

HUXLEY

IMPROVING NATURAL KNOWLEDGE

720. This essay was delivered as a lecture in London, January 7, 1866, and is included in Volume I, Methods and Results, of Huxley's collected works.
721. 89. Laud. William Laud (1573-1645), Archbishop of Canterbury. He was the head of the established English Church, and a violent enemy of the anti-Stuart parties, who accomplished his execution in 1645. The Earl of Rochester and Sir Charles Sedley were court wits and poets in the time of Charles II.
722. 187. Principia. Sir Isaac Newton (1642-1727) published the Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica, setting forth his theories about gravitation, in 1689.
208. Inquisitorial cardinals. Galileo (1564-1642) was persecuted by the Inquisition because of his acceptance of Copernicus's theories concerning the solar system.
214. Vesalius and Harvey. Vesalius was a Belgian anatomist of the 16th century; William Harvey (1578-1657) was an English physician who published in 1628 a treatise De Motu Cordis et Sanguinis in which he set forth the theory of the circulation of the blood.
239. Writ in water. Keats suggested as his epitaph: "Here lies one whose name was writ in water."
723. 266. Revenant. Ghost.
309. Boyle, . . . Evelyn. Robert Boyle (1627-1691), an English chemist; and John Evelyn (1620-1706), the diarist.
726. 653. Count Rumford. Benjamin Thompson (1753-1814), a scientist of international reputation.

NEWMAN

THE IDEA OF A UNIVERSITY

728. 33. On an occasion like this. The Discourses on University Subjects were delivered in 1852 before the Catholics of Dublin.

731. 361. "The world is all before it." An adaptation of Paradise Lost, xii: 646-7: "The world was all before them, where to choose Their place of rest, and Providence their guide."
375. The judgment-stricken king. Pentheus, in Euripides's Bacchæ, in his madness sees two suns.
732. 446. St. Thomas. Thomas Aquinas (1227?-1274), canonized in 1323; one of the greatest of the scholastic philosophers.
733. 524. Pompey's Pillar. A column erected at Alexandria in honor of Diocletian.
734. 627 ff. τετραγῶνος. Four square. Nil admirari. To wonder at nothing. Felix qui, etc. Happy is he who has come to know the relationships of things, and has placed beneath his feet all fear, and inexorable fate, and the roar of greedy Acheron. Virgil's Georgics, ii. 490 ff.
735. 704. The learning of a Salmasius or a Burman. Claude Saumaise (1588-1653) was a French classical scholar. Pieter Burmann the Elder (1688-1741) and his nephew Pieter Burmann the younger (1714-1778) were both Dutch scholars.
706. Imperat aut servit. It is either master or servant.
710. Vis consili. etc. Brute force without intelligence falls by its own weight.
712. Tarpeia. A woman of Roman legend, crushed to death by the shields of Sabine warriors, when she asked for what they wore on their arms (bracelets) as a reward for betraying Rome.
738. 1031. Genius loci. Genius of the place.
739. 1153. The exiled prince. See As You Like It, II. i. 16.
1156. The poor boy in the poem. "Crabbe's Tales of the Hall. This poem, let me say, I read on its first publication, above thirty years ago, with extreme delight, and have never lost my love of it; and on taking it up lately, found I was even more touched by it than heretofore." (Newman's note.)

APOLOGIA PRO VITA SUA

Early editions of the Apologia contained the correspondence between Newman and Charles Kingsley, author of Westward Ho! The correspondence as a whole, and Newman's summary which is here reprinted, had been given to the public by Newman before the Apologia was published; they were omitted from later editions of the Apologia.

ROSSETTI

THE BLESSED DAMOZEL

740. The pictorial quality of this poem is characteristic of the work of Rossetti, famous as painter as well as poet; his painting of the same name corresponds exactly to the poem.

SISTER HELEN

741. Founded on the old superstition that a woman deserted by her lover, could obtain the power of life and death over his body by making a waxen image of him, and laying it in the heat of the fire, as the wax melted the man's life ebbed away. There are three speakers,—the wronged woman, her small brother, who does not understand what is going on, and a spectator, whose comments, slightly varied from verse to verse, keep pace with the progress of the story.

THE HOUSE OF LIFE

745. The name given by Rossetti to a sequence of one hundred and one sonnets; this and Mrs. Browning's Sonnets from the Portuguese are generally conceded to be the finest collections of sonnets since Shakespeare's.

THE SONNET

Similar sonnets on the sonnet-form are Wordsworth's Scorn not the Sonnet, and Richard Watson Gilder's Sonnet on the Sonnet: "What is a sonnet?"

13. Dark wharf's. Compare "the fat weed

That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf," Hamlet, I. v. 32-33.

14. Charon's palm. Charon ferried the souls of the dead over the river Styx to Hades; a piece of money was buried with the body to serve as fee for the passage.

MORRIS

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: AN APOLOGY

746. The Earthly Paradise is a collection of twenty-four tales in verse, commonly considered the best body of narrative verse that has been given to English poetry since Chaucer's time. In the Prologue Morris tells how "certain gentlemen and mariners of Norway, having considered all that they had heard of the Earthly Paradise, set sail to find it, and after many troubles and the lapse of many years came old men to some Western land, of which they had never before heard"; the inhabitants of this land are of Greek descent. For the entertainment of the wanderers, the dwellers in the western land give semi-monthly feasts, at each of which a story is told. The duty of telling a story alternates between the two peoples; half the tales are, accordingly, from the Greek mythology, half of Scandinavian or Romance origin.
25. The Ivory gate. The house of Morpheus, god of sleep, had two gates, through which dreams issued: if true, the dream passed through a gate of horn; if false, through one of ivory.

PROLOGUE

746. 7. Below bridge. Navigation stopped at London Bridge.
747. 15. Bills of lading. Chaucer was for a time a clerk of the customs.

ATALANTA'S RACE

748. 63. Fleet-foot One. Ordinarily the epithet would indicate Hermes; in this connection it may mean Artemis.
750. 177. Saffron gown. Saffron was the color used at marriages by the Greeks and Romans; cf. L'Allegro:
"There let Hymen oft appear In saffron robe, with taper clear."
184. Sea-born one. Venus.
751. 208. Adonis' bane. The wild boar.
752. 275. Three-formed goddess. Artemis, or Diana, so called because she was worshipped as Diana on earth, as Luna in heaven, as Hecate in hell.
279. Her. Diana.
282. Sea-born framer. See note on l. 184.
755. 516. Damascus. Astarte, the Phœnician goddess of love, was identified with Venus.
756. 535. Saturn's clime. Saturn ruled the world before his place was usurped by Zeus, or Jupiter; Saturn's reign was identified with the golden age, a time of peace, plenty, and happiness.
758. 663. Mighty Lord. Zeus.
664. Her. Venus.

PATER

STYLE

760. 22. Efforts to limit art a priori. By argument from hypotheses concerning material, etc.
92. Absence or presence of metrical beauty. Wordsworth's views are expressed in the Preface to the Lyrical Ballads.
761. 96. Dichotomy. A division into two classes.
109. I propose here to point out. Pater here states the purpose of the essay. He is to discuss not prose or poetry, but both, finding in both certain identical characteristics, the qualities of "literature as a fine art."
165. Livy, Tacitus, Michelet. Jules Michelet (1798-1874), like the two Romans, was a historian.
762. 253. At this point Pater notes: "Mr. Saintsbury, in his Specimens of English Prose, from Malory to Macaulay, has succeeded in tracing, through successive English prose-writers, the tradition of that severer beauty in them, of which this admirable scholar of our literature is known to be a lover." English Prose, from Mandeville to Thackeray more recently 'chosen and edited' by a younger scholar, Mr. Arthur Galton, of New College, Oxford, a lover of our literature at once enthusiastic and discreet, aims at a more various illustration of the eloquent powers of English prose, and is a delightful companion."

763. 338. Le cuistre. The academic pedant.
358. Well! Pater is fond of this interjectional use of well. It suggests the French eh bien!
364. Dictionary other than Johnson's. Johnson's Dictionary, though comparatively slight in extent, contains few words to which exception may be taken on the score of utility, and is equipped with illustrative quotations which make it still valuable.
764. 417. "Its" which ought to have been in Shakespeare. Shakespeare uses "his," in conformity with regular Elizabethan usage, for the neuter possessive.
453. Ascêsis. The Greek word from which the English ascetic and asceticism are derived.
765. 540. Michelangelo. For a discussion of one phase of the work of this great Italian artist, see Pater's essay in The Renaissance.
609. Dean Mansel. Henry L. Mansel (1820-1871), Dean of St. Paul's from 1868 to his death.
767. 769. Swedenborg. Emanuel Swedenborg (1688-1772), founder of the New Church, or Swedenborgians. The Tracts for the Times were written and published by John Henry Newman and his associates in the so-called "Oxford Movement," during the years 1833-1841. The last of the tracts, No. 90, was condemned by the University because of its Romanism.
768. 952. Blake's rapturous design. One of the illustrations made by Blake for Blair's Grave represents "Soul and Body Reunited."
769. 1057. Buffon. Le Comte de Buffon (1707-1788), a famous French naturalist.

WORDSWORTH

772. 36. Most serious critical efforts. See the selections from the Preface to the Lyrical Ballads.
38. The excesses of 1795. The culmination of the Reign of Terror.
773. 117. Disciplina arcani. Discipline, or learning, of the mystery.
158. Senancour. Obermann, by Etienne de Senancour (1770-1846), is characteristic of this interest in nature. Gautier (1811-1872) was an enthusiastic Romanticist, a dramatist, poet, and playwright.
161. Rousseau. The importance of Rousseau's La Nouvelle Héloïse in awakening people to the influence of nature upon the soul, and the influence of Rousseau's theories concerning the "state of nature," have been often pointed out. Chateaubriand (1768-1848) and Victor Hugo (1802-1885) were both significant in the development of French romanticism.

773. 173. Reynolds or Gainsborough. The two greatest English portrait painters: Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723-1792), and Thomas Gainsborough (1727-1788).
211 ff. The first three quotations are from The Prelude; the fourth is from The Pet Lamb.
775. 411. A selection of language really used by men. See the Preface to the Lyrical Ballads, p. 389.
776. 452. George Sand. Her most famous novel, La Petite Fadette, is known in English translation as Fanchon the Cricket. The author's real name was Mme. Amandine Dudevant.
457. Meinhold. Johannes Meinhold (1797-1851) was a little-known novelist whom Pater considered significant in the history of German romanticism.
777. 588. Anima mundi. Soul of the universe.
778. 703. The Ode . . . had its anticipator. See Henry Vaughan's The Retreat, p. 123.
779. 747. Grandet, Javert. Characters in Balzac's Eugenie Grandet and Victor Hugo's Les Misérables, respectively.
785. Antique Rachel. In Dante's Purgatorio, xxvii, Rachel is a type of the contemplative life.
797. One who had meditated. Lord Morley.

STEVENSON

ÆS TRIPLEX

780. 24. Dule tree. A tree used as a gallows.
781. 104. The blue-peter. A blue flag indicating that a ship was about to sail.
141. The valley at Balaclava. The scene of the famous charge of the "Light Brigade" in the Crimean War.
145. Curtius. A hero of Roman legend who leaped into a chasm in the Forum, and sacrificed his life that the gulf might be closed.
159. Caligula. The third emperor of Rome, who proclaimed himself a god.
782. 187. The sheet. The rope by which the position of a sail is controlled. If it be tied, or "made fast," a sudden gust of wind may upset a small boat before the sailor has an opportunity to loosen the sheet.
206. Omar Khayyâm . . . Walt Whitman. Omar Khayyâm was a Persian poet who died c. 1123. Walt Whitman, an American poet famous for his wholesale violations of the conventions of poetry, died in 1892.
214. The same stuff with dreams. See Shakespeare's Tempest, IV. i. 156:
"We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep."
783. 303. As the French say. A cul-de-sac.

783. 312. A Bath-chair. An invalid's chair, much used at Bath, the health resort.
 320. Our respected lexicographer. Samuel Johnson.
 327. Bound with triple brass. The title of the essay, "Æs Triplex," meaning "triple brass," is from Horace, Odes, I iii 394. Nelson. Before the battle of the Nile, Nelson made the remark to his officers. See Southey's Life of Nelson, chapter v.: "Before this time tomorrow, I shall have gained a peerage, or Westminster Abbey."
 784. 416. The last paragraph might almost have been written by Stevenson as prophetic of the close of his own life.

SWINBURNE

ATALANTA IN CALYDON

785. The poem is a drama in the Greek form 5-8. There is reference here to two stories of the nightingale, both accounting for the melancholy in its song. According to one, Ædon killed her son Itylus by error, and was changed by Zeus into a nightingale. The tongueless vigil refers to the better known story of Philomela, ravished by her brother-in-law, Tereus, who cut out her tongue that she might not bear witness against him, she was afterward changed to a nightingale. Cf. Arnold's poem Philomela, p. 687.
 785. 10. Maiden . . . lady. Artemis, the moon-goddess, patroness of chastity
 786. 38. The oat. The shepherd's pipe of oaten straw, contrasted with the lyre, symbolic of a more elaborate, sophisticated society.
 44. Mænad, Bassarid. Names equivalent to Bacchanal (l. 49), one of the Bacchantes, female followers of Bacchus, who engaged in wild orgies in the god's honor.

TO WALT WHITMAN IN AMERICA

787. Whitman seemed to Swinburne, as to many others, to be the prophet and poet of the new democracy which America was to offer to the Old World.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE

790. 9. If all the pens, etc. A quotation from Marlowe's Tamburlaine, Part I, V. i

HARDY

THE CHURCH-BUILDER

797. The poem is reminiscent of Hardy's experiences as an architect engaged in restoring country churches. The exact significance of the technical terms used in various parts of the poem can be ascertained by reference to a good dictionary.

MEN WHO MARCH AWAY

798. Written during the early months of the World War.

FRANCIS THOMPSON

THE HOUND OF HEAVEN

799. The poem is Thompson's best known and most characteristic work. A devout Catholic and a speculative mystic, he found in religious verse an outlet for emotions and ideas that to many persons must remain unintelligible, and to others seem both natural and full of significance.

HENLEY

BEFORE

- 802 From Hospital Verses, which record various experiences in an Edinburgh hospital at the time Henley suffered the amputation of a foot.

APPARITION

- The poem describes Robert Louis Stevenson, one of Henley's intimate friends 803. 12 Ariel. The ethereal fairy-spirit of The Tempest.
 Puck The tricksy sprite of Midsummer Night's Dream.
 14. Shorter catechist. The line means that Stevenson retained some of the characteristics of his Scottish Presbyterian ancestors, the cardinal points of whose faith found expression in the so-called "Shorter Catechism."

INVICTUS

This is the title by which the poem is popularly known. Henley's own designation was "I M. [in memoriam] R. T. Hamilton Bruce."

LORD MORLEY

WORDSWORTH

804. 6 Edinburgh Reviewers. Much of Wordsworth's early work was caustically criticized by writers in the Edinburgh Review and Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine.
 8 Author . . . Artevelde. Sir Henry Taylor (1800-1886), an English poet and dramatist.

BYRON

810. 159. Prometheus . . . Cenci Prometheus Unbound and The Cenci, two of Shelley's dramas.
 811. 212. An American original. Thoreau.

KIPLING

FUZZY WUZZY

- 814 Commemorating an expedition against the forces of the Mahdi, in the Soudan. The tribesmen, though defeated, broke an infantry square of British regular troops.

RECESSIONAL

818. Published in the London Times, at the close of the celebrations in honor of Queen Victoria's "diamond jubilee," or sixtieth anniversary on the throne.

YEATS

INTO THE TWILIGHT

822. 5. Eire. Erin, Ireland.

RED HANRAHAN'S SONG

5. Cathleen, the daughter of Houlihan. "Cathleen ni Houlihan," a name given to Ireland in Irish poetry and legend.
6. Knocknarea. In Sligo, where Queen Maeve is said to be buried beneath a cairn of stones.
7. Maeve. A queen of the Sidhe (pronounced "Shee"), or fairy people.
14. Holy Rood. The crucifix.

"A. E."

CARROWMORE

824. 8. Hazel Tree. "The Celtic tree of life. It grew over Connla's well, and the fruits which fell from it were the Nuts of Knowledge, which give wisdom and inspiration." (Author's note.)

GODS OF WAR

22. Attila. Leader of the Huns in their invasion of the Roman Empire in the fifth century.

CHESTERTON

LEPANTO

825. The poem commemorates the naval battle of Lepanto, fought in what is known as the Gulf of Lepanto, or Gulf of Corinth, off the Greek coast, in 1571. On one side were the forces of the Turkish Sultan Selim II; on the other the allied squadrons of Philip II of Spain, Pope Pius V, and the Venetian Republic. Don John of Austria, illegitimate son of the Emperor Charles V, was commander-in-chief of the Christian forces. The battle resulted in the annihilation of the Turks. So general was the participation in the expedition, among Christian nobles and rulers, that it is sometimes spoken of as the last Crusade.
6. Inmost sea. The Mediterranean.
8. Lion of the Sea. Venice, whose emblem was the Lion of St. Mark.
11. Cold Queen of England. Elizabeth, who did not participate in the expedition.
12. Shadow of the Valois. At the time of the battle Charles IX was nominally King of France. Actually, he was under the domination of Catherine de Medici, Duchess of Valois.

14. Lord upon the Golden Horn. The Sultan, whose palace in Constantinople overlooks the arm of the sea known as the "Golden Horn."

16. Crownless prince. Don John.

17. Half attainted stall. Don John was an illegitimate son.

36. Mahound. Mahomet.

38. Houri. The Mohammedan Paradise offered as reward to the Faithful the company, through eternity, of beautiful women called "Houris."

- 826 47. Solomon. See note on Browning's "Abt Vogler," l. 3, p. 627.

58. Giaours. Unbelievers; i.e., Christians.

63. Four hundred years ago. At the time of the early Crusades.

64. Kismet. Fate.

65. Richard, Raymond, Godfrey. Richard I of England, Raymond of Toulouse, and Godfrey of Bouillon, leaders of the early Crusades.

74. St Michael's on his Mountain. Mont St. Michel, a rocky islet off the coast of France, sacred to St. Michael. See Henry Adams's Mont St. Michel and Chartres.

92. King Philip. Philip II of Spain.

- 827 115. St Mark. See note on l. 8, above.

118. Christian captives. Galley slaves in the Turkish fleet.

138. Cervantes. The author of Don Quixote fought at Lepanto.

141. Lean and foolish knight. Don Quixote.

GIBSON

831. The punctuation is that of the Collected Poems (Macmillan). The war poems are from the volume entitled Battle.

NOYES

FORTY SINGING SEAMEN

838. 3. Polyphemus. The Polyphemus of classic legend was a one-eyed giant encountered by Ulysses in his wanderings after the fall of Troy; Ulysses blinded him with a fire-sharpened stake.

839. 36. Prester John. A legendary Christian sovereign, who, according to the belief of the Middle Ages, ruled over a more or less indefinite region in the interior of Asia.

POEMS OF THE WORLD WAR

GRAVES: IT'S A QUEER TIME

846. 31. Tipperary. A war song extremely popular in the British army, with the refrain "It's a long way to Tipperary." Hymn of Hate. A German war poem.

MCRAE: IN FLANDERS FIELDS

847. The metrical form is that of the rondeau, a French lyric pattern.

NICHOLS: THE ASSAULT

848. 34. Zero. "Zero is the hour agreed upon by the Staff when the infantry are to go over the parapet and advance to the assault." (Author's note.)
849. 78. They lift. "Guns are said to 'lift' when, after pounding the front line of the enemy, they lengthen their range and set up a barrier of fire behind his front line to prevent supports moving up." (Author's note.)

BENNETT

LITERARY TASTE

862. 140. Sainte-Beuve The most distinguished French critic of the nineteenth century.